He finds in the south a tendency to sweet painting—too little of the imaginative, too little of the interpretative. This painter considers that while nature must be meticulously, even slavishly followed up to a certain point the finesse and true art comes in knowing the precise moment at which she must be utterly abandoned—abandoned that the artist may concern himself only with the enlarged projection of self, of mood. He realizes that here in California the painter labors against something of a general lack of interest in painting.

PAINTINGS BY FRED G. GRAY, MONTEREY, CALIF., "BEFORE THE MIRROR" POSED BY MISS HILDRETH TAYLOR OF PASADENA.

CREATIVE DANCING RECOGNIZED AS A FINE ART

By ELLEN LEECH

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MARGARET CRAIG

WHEN quite a number of us went to dancing school we were concerned only with the "one, two, three, glide" commands, and all gyrations demanded of us were viewed merely in the light of a duty performed. We knew from oft repeated fireside homilies that all "little ladies and gentlemen" knew how to dance, how to enter and leave a room properly, how to accept an invitation to dance,—refusals were never taught, though if the eye of the teacher was elsewhere the hand of the detested fat one was crushingly ignored. These classes were endured usually just as was the music lesson by one never destined to be a musician, or a session with Mademoiselle or Fraulein in one lacking lingual tendencies.

We need now only visit a modern school of the dance to find what eons of time have elapsed. Now the dance studio has a large auditorium with a raised stage, bars and other paraphanelia around the walls, arrangements for all kinds of lighting effects, and a balcony for the accommodation of visiting mothers. All this in vivid contrast to the classes of the past held in the double parlors of the old Colonial home of the graceful little teacher.

A TALENTED DANCER FROM THE SCHOOL OF MISS SHIPP, WHERE THE ACCURACY OF COSTUMING ADDS TO THE BEAUTY OF THE POSE

Dancing now means so very much more and has so many different phases. To achieve a proper background on which to superimpose the creative dance of today a course in the classics is not only advisable but necessary. Without careful reading of good literature and an acquaintance with the best in art it is rather impossible to approach the interpretation of good music, or to attempt to create a symphony in movement, a correlation of the body to a rhythm which haunts the mind at a vision of tall trees singing in the wind, or to reproduce an emotion which swayed the senses.

We cannot say the dance has become an art, it always was an art, allied much more closely in the past with music, painting and sculpture, but was allowed to languish for awhile and is only now taking its proper place. As an art it should be fostered, the close relationship with the fine arts maintained, and its sincerity emphasized until a dancer would no more profane the art than would a great painter or a famous sculptor.

As in painting and sculpture there will probably be modernists and impressionists but if the dancer be really genuinely in earnest and works in his or her medium with intelligence and delight in the production the result can never be bad.

To trace the work of a class in one of these modern schools, for example the Norma Gould school in Los Angeles, is to be convinced anew that we have no real need to fear the entrance of the younger generation into its own. There is in these moderns, perhaps a slight intolerance for a too close adherence to the customs of day before yesterday, a request to be advised as to why a branching out and a desire to blaze a new path through the wilderness is not commendable, while through the whole there is every evidence of unbounded energy awaiting an outlet. And the dance furnishes not only a channel for that physical energy but offers opportunity for mental and spiritual stimulus.

It follows naturally that if a school holds to its high ideals and demands the threefold growth of all students, spiritually, mentally and physically, the public as well as the student cannot fail to be benefited. Perhaps no other side of educational growth has increased so rapidly and changed so much within a few years. Indeed, the old order changes, and new things are old within a day, and frequently it is only by contrast that we realize what an advance has occurred.

MISS NORMA GOULD, THE HEAD OF THE NORMA GOULD SCHOOL, AND ONE OF THE MOST SUCCESSFUL TEACHERS IN LOS ANGELES. A SCHOOL WHICH HAS GROWN WITH THE CITY AND HAS IMPLANTED FINE IDEALS IN TEACHERS AND PUPILS

A GROUP OF DANCERS FROM THE NORMA GOULD SCHOOL, DANCING IN THE BIRKELL GARDENS, LAUREL CANYON

There is also the wide difference to be noted between the school maintained entirely for the development of professional dancers, and those that lay less stress on that possible result of the training.

A good background is important in any event. It is probable that a certain daintiness is retained by a dancer who has entered a class with merely a desire to dance as a pleasure yet who may later become a professional, than can be found in one who has the commercial and material object implanted in the beginning. To be surrounded entirely by the professional view might dim the development of a spiritual interpretation.

Miss Gould holds to the highest, she, in a sense, regards her school as a part of the growth of her State, an integral section of her inherited city, and holds the young people with whom she is surrounded as a charge, which she cannot fail and in this is doing as much for art and also for good citizenship as any organization we have.

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

MONTHLY BULLETIN

"All for Service—And Service for All"

OFFICERS:

MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President
MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President
MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, Sec. Viee-Pres.
MRS. ERWIN P. WERNER, Third Viee-President
MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Vice-Pres.
MRS. JAMES REED, Secretary
MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treasurer.
MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

5604 De Longpre Avenue, Los Angeles
Telephone HE 5133

CALENDAR

Dec. 1, 10:30 a. m.	—Meeting of the Board of Directors.
Dec. 1, 12:15 p. m.	—Round Table Luncheon. Mr. Dudley Cortlett, speaker. Subject: "The New Botanical Gardens in Los Angeles."
Dec. 3, 10:30 a. m.	—Meeting of the Good Samaritan Committee.
Dec. 7, 8 and 9	—Christmas Sale at the Assistance League down town sh p. 829 S. Flower St.
Dec. 14, 10:30 a. m.	—Meeting of Day Nursery Committee.
Dec. 15, 10:30 a. m.	—Meeting of Executive Committee.
Dec. 17, 10:30 a. m.	—Meeting of Good Samaritan Committee.
Dec. 22, 10:30 a. m.	—Meeting of Executive Committee.
Dec. 22, 12 Noon	—Children's Christmas Party at the Day Nursery.
Dec. 23, 8:00 p. m.	—Benefit for the Day Nursery at the Olympic Auditorium.
Dec. 29, 10:30 a. m.	—Meeting of Executive Committee.

CHRISTMAS SALE

Remember the Christmas Sale on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, December 7th, 8th and 9th, in our down town shop, 829 S. Flower Street. For the period of the sale both our present Exchange in the Women's Athletic Club Building and the adjoining store will be used. Tea will be served every afternoon of the sale from 3 to 5 o'clock. We are counting on you to come and to bring your friends.

The Committee is working hard to make this one of the most successful Christmas Sales we have had. Dresses, garments, dolls, Christmas cards, dainty handkerchiefs, embroidered goods of all kinds, in short, gifts for all members of the family may be purchased or ordered through the Committee. Those assisting Mrs. Maurer, the Chairman, are, Mrs. Isaac-Hamshur Jones, Vice Chairman, Mrs. James Reed, Mrs. Seward Cole, Mrs. Charles Lippincott, Mrs. John Schmoele, Mrs. Herman Janss, Mrs. John Dunlop, Miss Elizabeth H. Terrill, Mrs. Charles Jeffras, Mrs. Eugene Hirsch, Mrs. Frances L. Spence, Miss Jean Hill, Miss Polly Schoder.

MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, COLONEL OF DIVISION 17, COMMUNITY CHEST CAMPAIGN LOS ANGELES

THRIFT SHOP

The Thrift Shop has suffered lately, as most of our members have been busy with the Community Chest and the pre-holiday activities. Our racks are rather bare just at the time of year when we should like to have them filled to overflowing, so that the working mothers who cannot afford to purchase new things might outfit the little ones for the holidays and the winter season. Used toys or tree trimmings will be most acceptable at this time.

COMMUNITY CHEST CAMPAIGN

We cannot say too much in praise of the splendid work done by Assistance League members in the Community Chest Campaign. Although we had members scattered throughout many of the divisions, as well as members who are on the Board of Directors of the Welfare Federation and active workers on important Chest Committees, we find that most of us consider Division 17 as representing the League.

Under the leadership of Mrs. E. Avery McCarthy, Colonel of Division 17, the quota of 80,000 was collected during the first week of the campaign, and on Saturday, November 14th, the Division went over the top, leading all other residential divisions, but carrying on with the same enthusiasm and zeal until the campaign was declared closed. Mrs. McCarthy attributes this achievement to the splendid cooperation of every member of the Division and to October 1st and continued until the day the opening gun was fired, when every Major, Captain and Yieutenant went forth into their various districst. Mrs. James eRed returned in time to take her place on the headquarters' staff with Mrs. McCarthy; Miss Lillian Van Dyke assisted with the organization up to the opening of the campaign.

GROUP OF A NUMBER OF CHEST WORKERS IN FRONT OF MRS. JONES' HOME. DOING THEIR BIT GLADLY

The Majors who commanded the five battalions of this Division were, Mrs. Isaac-Hampshur Jones, Dr. W. F. Traughber, Mrs. Wm. Armstrong, Mrs. T. H. Dudley, Mr. Chas. F. Billingsley. The Captains whose teams lead in the most amount of money collected for Battalions A, B, C, D and E respectively, were, Mrs. Clarence King, Mr. Wm. H. Hahn, Mrs. Bradley Lee Jr., Mrs. Ynez Whatley, Mrs. W. H. Klein.

To Battalion A. of which Mrs. Isaac-Hampshur Jones was Major, goes the honor of having collected more than any other hattalion, Mrs. Clarence King's team having brought in more money than any team of all residential divisions.

At the Chest Headquarters the chart for Division 17 looked like a veritable milky way, so crowded was it with stars which had been awarded for the highest goal; for the most amount of money collected by any residential division; for the most amount of money collected by any team on certain dates; for the greatest number of teams reporting daily; for the greatest number of subscribers on various days, etc. But better and more significant than the record for filling the Chest was the magnificent spirit of service and sacrifice shown by the workers. The Assistance League is proud to be so well represented in the front ranks of this Army of Service.

MRS. ISAAC-HAMPSHUR JONES AND TWO CHEST WORKERS IN FRONT OF MRS. JONES' HOME WHICH WAS USED AS DIVISION HEADQUARTERS DURING THE CAMPAIGN

THE CHILDREN'S CHRISTMAS PARTY

The yearly Christmas Party for the children, made possible by the generous gift of Mr. Rafael Herman, will be held this year on Tuesday, December 22nd, in the Day Nursery. Dinner will he served to 100 children, after which toys and candies will be distributed. We must provide transportation for the children to the Nursery and home again. We need all of you who can give your car or your time to volunteer to help us make this party a really festive occasion for the kiddies. Leave your name with the office for the kind of service you can give us on this day.

ANOTHER GIFT TO THE DAY NURSERY

Word has just been received by the Day Nursery Committee that Mr. J. M. Danziger has declared his intention of presenting the proceeds of the evening's entertainment at the Olympic Auditorium, Wednesday, December 23rd, to the Assistance League Day Nursery Building Fund. Although we are not asked to sell tickets or in any way promote the attendance on this evening, still the Day Nursery Committee urges that every member of the Board of Directors and League members and friends be present as an appropriate expression of our appreciation of this most generous and acceptable gift.

GOOD SAMARITAN

Through the generosity of the Velada Club, eight of our most needy families received Thanksgiving baskets. Some found their way into homes where there was little else to be thankful for, where the struggle to keep body and soul together is proving almost too much for the weary mother, the invalid father, or the man out of work. Unemployment has been our most serious problem from the first. We need jobs for men and jobs for women. If you know of any kind of work, will you please call the office—HEmpstead 5133. We have been more than gratified with the ready response of some employers, who call us whenever they have openings to fill. How often a job changes utter despair to hope and happy planning for the future!!!

It is especially requested by our President that everyone who can possibly do so will complete the vanishing luncheon plan before December 15. Volunteer to help it vanish!

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

(Continued from Page 14)

that has not yet happened. Hector C. Bywater, an English naval strategist, has forecasted a conflict between Japan and the United States, in the years 1931-33, and described its imaginary progress in "The Great Pacific War." In the preface he tells his readers, that as far as he knows no writer before himself with a western point of view, has attempted this sort of prophesying, while in Japan, at least two authors have ventured upon this dangerous topic. It may be a thrilling theme for all interested in the business of making war, but for the layman, and a female layman at that, it has little power to rouse enthusiasm. We will say for Mr. Bywater however, that he has presented his invented account with clarity, simplicity, and a lack of confusing technicalities, which makes it readable even for the most uninitiated person.

In arranging a series of events, misunderstandings, and struggles for national supremacy, leading to a "casus belli," he pays due heed to the best human standards, regarding intricacy of motives and conflicting aspirations. The avowed and apparent reason for precipitating hostilities, is not the real one, it never has been. A concession is made to an American citizen in China, then being exploited by Japan, in which county there is unlimited social unrest, and communistic activity, and when a sudden deadly bomb explodes, "the dogs of war slip loose," just as if the whole matter were real and not fictitious.

Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes
TROY LAUNDRY
In Business for Twenty Years
Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146 Alhambra 243-J

Welcome to call and Browse
First Editions
Early Printing
Autographs
Americana
Rare & Art Books
Books Notable for Printing Illustrations and Binding.
Dawson's Book Shop
627 So. Grand Ave.
Catalogues sent on request:—
LOS ANGELES

GEORGE · D · MAIGHT
159 · NO · MEREDITH · AVE ·
PASADENA · CALIFORNIA
TELEPHONE F · O · 3133
ARCHITECTURAL · PHOTOGRAPHS

The House of K. H. S.
GREETING CARDS
Are suitable for the individual.
$15 to $35 per hundred.
229 S. Normandie Ave. Washington 4642
Los Angeles, California

UHRICH
Ladies' and Gentlemen's Riding Coats and Breeches

Absolutely Correct in Model and Details
188 East Colorado Street
Pasadena

For Large and Stout Women

Frocks
Gowns
Sizes 38½ to 56½
Schaffer
GOWNS for LARGE WOMEN
566 East Colorado Street
(Near Madison)
Pasadena

CORONA
TYPEWRITERS
With Standard Keyboard
$60 Complete With Case
Also All Makes Sold, Rented, Repaired, Exchanged
Anderson Typewriter Co.
84 E. Colorado St. Pasadena

"The Gate to Healthful Beauty"
CORLANE
Marinello System
F. O. 1648 570 East Colorado St.
Pasadena
Opposite the Presbyterian Church

QUALITY SERVICE
THE ELITE
DRY CLEANERS AND DYERS
Plant: 797 So. Fair Oaks Ave.
Colo. 1349 Pasadena, California

HILLER'S STUDIO
Official Photographer for California Southland
49 East Colorado Street
Pasadena, California
Albert Hiller Phone, Fair Oaks 155

LANDSCAPE DESIGNING AND PLANTING
A properly planned and executed design for your grounds will add greatly to your pleasure in them and also to their material value.
See us for estimates.
EDWARD H. RUST
NURSERYMAN
1625 Bank St., So. Pasadena
—PHONES—
ELiot 2639 Colo. 997
"Everything for the Home Grounds"

T. W. Mather Co. Inc.
PASADENA, CAL.
Dry Goods
Women's & Children's Wearing Apparel
Colorado Street at Marengo

LAUNDERERS DRY CLEANERS
ROYAL LAUNDRY CO.
461 South Raymond Colorado 67
Pasadena, California

FLORNINA
Gowns · Negligees · Accessories and Bathing Suits
Ready to Wear or Made to Order
Unusually Attractive Frocks in Tub Silks and Dotted Swiss
95 South Los Robles Ave., Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 113

THE ENGLISH SPEAKING UNION

THE HOLLYWOOD BOWL

From The Manchester Guardian Weekly of July 31, 1925—By B. Ifor Evans

AMERICA perhaps more than any other country in the world has the power of presenting you with the unexpected. Thus in South California a few hundred yards from where the Babbit Realtors have built the ugliest seaside resorts imaginable, Katherine Tingley has erected a Greek Theatre with the blue Pacific as its background, a structure and a setting which would seem proper in one of the old, noble civilizations. So it is with Hollywood. In this cynical, vulgar home of the world's most democratic art there exists the Hollywood Bowl, where music can be heard under conditions which I believe, must be quite unparalleled. The fact that Sir Henry Wood has seen it worth while to come all the way to California to conduct four concerts in the Bowl and then to go home again without doing anything else in America may make one realize the musical attraction of this institution.

The Hollywood Bowl itself is a natural canyon sheltered on all sides by hills and used in the more unsettled days of American history as a resting place and refuge by settlers and Indians and outlaws. The Christian communities in Los Angeles first realized the possibilities of the Bowl as a gathering place, and since the war immense Easter services have been held in the canyon. From this came the idea that rough wooden benches might be built around the canyon to fill its entire depth, and that the vast outdoor auditorium thus obtained might be used on summer nights for popular audiences who wished to hear orchestral music.

I saw the Bowl on the night of the first concert of this summer season. The crowd on that summer night I can best describe by saying that it resembled in size, though in no other quality, the crowd at a Football Cup final. Over twenty thousand people came out of Hollywood and Los Angeles. Special tram services were run to carry them, while around the canyon there was parking for thousands of cars. The Bowl itself was lit with enormous arc-lights until the music began, when suddenly everything was extinguished except the lights on the pillared stage at the bottom of the canyon, where, in a little jumble of black and white, the orchestra was sitting.

On that first night Fritz Reiner was the conductor, and that audience of twenty thousand people was held in absolute silence while his orchestra played such pieces as Richard Strauss's "Don Juan," the Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2 of Liszt, and Tschaikovsky's Symphony No. 5 in E minor. It was after Liszt's Rhapsody that a German lady who sat near me, a recent immigrant one would imagine, made guttural noises of joy and said, "Ah, but isn't it wonderful? I had not expected this. America is a great country." Whatever one might think of the cruelty of so much in American life one had to concede that here was something heroic in the popularization of the arts. America is capable of all things and here she has achieved something supremely worth doing.

Music in this Hollywood Bowl is, without exaggeration, different from music anywhere else in the world. In the first place, the conditions are different. You can sit in the warm California night and listen to music under the stars until the moon comes up, and you may be sure that it will never grow cold and that it will never rain. Usually outdoor music means music which has lost by wind or weather its finer shades and tones, but the amazing thing about the Hollywood Bowl is that its acousties are perfect, that the most delicate meaning of the quietest movements can be followed. From the top of the Bowl, far, far, away from the orchestra, I could follow every movement in "Don Juan," even those whispering, exhausted sounds in which Strauss describes the end of Don Juan's storm of love. Apart from these qualities, the Bowl possesses by its very magnitude and by the absence of vibrations, which are so often troublesome in closed-in buildings, a power of making music liquid. Every sound in the orchestra seems to blend into one inevitable sound which flows smoothly and without effort throughout the canyon. So pure are the tones that one could almost imagine discord to be impossible.

The Hollywood Bowl is a democratic institution. You pay "a quarter' (25 cents) for the right to sit yourself on any part of the wooden benches which you may be early enough to obtain. Even if you are too late for any wooden bench at all, you can still sit, high up on the hillside, and be sure of hearing everything perfectly. The whole concert, then, you obtain at a price which in exchange values is just over the shilling, but which in the mental values of the American people is not worth more than sixpence.

After each piece has been played the arc-lights are lit again and enormous searchlights, red, blue, and violet, are played upon the crowd. Somewhere in the middle of the programme you will have to endure an "uplift" talk; how good music is, how good for the soul and for America. It would be a ludicrous anticlimax if one did not remember that these "uplift" speakers are those who have made these summer Bowl concerts possible. And like Bernard Shaw, they believe, when it comes to music, in leveling up and not down. There is no piece introduced merely in order to make concessions to popular taste.

I have not written these impressions to suggest that the method of the Hollywood Bowl should be followed in England. God did not give Manchester California sun or California summer nights. Rightly we follow other ways. But the greatest temple in the world to the popularization of good music is probably the Hollywood Bowl, and for that reason alone it seems fitting that Sir Henry Wood should be asked to conduct four concerts there during this coming summer season.

Clipping by Courtesy of Mrs. B. O. Kendall, Pasadena

TWO ENGLISH BOOKS

REVIEWED BY MARY NORDHOFF

"THE SAILOR'S RETURN" by David Garnett—Chatto & Windus, London, 1925.

Mr. Garnett, in "Lady into Fox," and "The Man in the Zoo," lent a quaint reality to things fantastic. His subjects the manner of their treatment, perfect English, combined to make a literary aperatif of the first order, and as such these books remain in the mind. They contain, however, sharp reflections upon human nature, and much staid humor.

With no change of manner, Mr. Garnett now turns to a story of race antipathy. It would seem a breach of taste to eall this history of Tulip's life in an English village of 1860, tragedy. But, in spite of the author's aloofness, his calm interest in the tale, it is a tragedy. The sailor, William Targett, returning from Africa with Princess Gundemy, or Tulip, for wife, settles in the country of his birth. Tulip's wealth of pearls and gold dust, enables him to lease a public house, and to "The Sailor's Return" come the farmers, carters and riff-raff of Maiden Newbarrow. Tulip's memories of her own country, William's swift yarns of Africa, are sketched in against this background: The dour secretiveness of English village life and the flare of African nature side by side. Mr. Garnett may be on Tulip's side. Certainly we see through her eyes, and find her in spite of the "poor, black skin," spirited, wise in her way, and charming. Tulip is a princess and unspoiled by a civilization for which nature neglected to fit her. She is, then, the possible best of Africa contrasted with the hidebound gossips of Maiden Newbarrow—the worst of England. Her ignorance seems no deeper than that of the "Witch-Woman" Mrs. Sturmey; the treachery of Tulip's scandalous ancestor finds its counterpart in the villagers who attack her during William's absence. It is, no doubt, the readers fault if he reflects that cruelty in all races, all ages, differs only in the mode of expression. There is no moralizing in the book; events are merely set down, and if they form a sad pattern in the mind—so much the worse for us.

Mr. Garnett is never oppressive; if he suggests the terrible, he hints, as well, at the beauty of English seasons, the days of spring or harvesting. There is comfort in the ship-shape Inn, the shining dray with its gray, dappled horses, the burden of beer and spirits, the vision of future cheer. He invests the simplest things with an aroma. On the next page, confusingly, rise African forests, firelight and mirth. Tulip indeed is sickened by the ugliness of winter village life; here murder and debauchery are less frequent, but, winter or summer, she hears no real laughter, sees no dancing.

The author's interest never varies; the same tempo is set for Tom, the prizefighter, the vicar, a village woman whose love of Tulip is only less strong than her fear of public opinion, Sambo and the loveable William. There is no haste and no delay when it comes to the Inn's refurnishing, or Tulip's revels by night, the memorable family party, William's death, or Tulip's good-by to Sambo.

In "Lady into Fox," an old Irish legend is linked to a perfectly Victorian atmosphere. In "The Sailor's Return," the Victorian Village becomes a strange thing. Commonplace character and event loom with uncommon interest as a result of Mr. Garnett's technique. His use of the simplest word, a sense of his relish in such a tale and the calm vigor of its telling lend an incongruity, faint to be sure, which pricks mind and senses to life. There is no pleading of a cause; our emotions are not threatened, and so, discreetly, they arise and walk.

No-one can criticize Mr. Garnett's style; many may doubt if he has very much to say. It seems to one reader that in his last book, Mr. Garnett leaves the rank of mere technicians, using his established manner to veil the departure and to enhance the matter.

SERENA BLANDISH, OR THE DIFFICULTY OF GETTING MARRIED by "A Lady of Quality."—George H. Doran Co.

"A Lady of Quality" upset, perhaps, by the fogs of London, looked upon life and grew angry. Later on, in another mood certainly, she returned to that hour, and wrote 200 pages about Serena Blandish. Those who like to kiss the rose and die of aromatic pain will not enjoy this farce; neither will the cynics, idealists eternally disgruntled by the truth about —others.

Serena Blandish is poor and extraordinarily beautiful. She is innocent, for she has no moral sense, and without that husband which is the due of beauty, she is faced by work or starvation. Lovers turn righteous, they become adepts in a strange logic when asked for financial help. At this point a countess finds the suburbs and Serena. A busy body and devoted to novelties she takes Serena home to her Arab, her monkey, her parrot, her gazelle and the sardonic butler, Martin, promising a month's entertainment if, in that time, Serena will secure herself a husband. So runs the tale, and the reader is in despair at Serena's short memory. She is too truthful; Martin's advice falls on barren ground; Serena will never learn. If she escapes the scandal of being an old maid, it will be by means of a scandal only less horrid, and we are not surprised, save in the details, at her last tragedy.

Many characters, familiar enough beneath their grotesqued dress, pass before us. There is that apprehensive bachelor, Lord Ivor Cream, on edge, in the midst of what might to duller men seem safety; fearing for his mind, no less than his freedom, he would be a subject for pity, if his pity were not self-supplied. His escapes from matrimony, too, provide him with small talk. There is the tragic chorus of virgins who discuss fate before the eligibles join them in the drawing room. There is the Jew, with his theory that one diamond attracts another; the Princess, mildly intrigued by a speechless count, and her trained troop of artists and literateurs. This princess, and Martin, make a calm amid the storm. The Princess has, or has had, a husband; she is no longer young. Martin's poise has in it something extra-mundane, though he, too, has his bad hours.

Never, surely, have the rich language and balance of Johnsonian prose been turned to such uses. The good doctor knew how to condemn—We hope he would not object to this unknown "lady's" flippancy. It is a surface thing, and beneath it lies healthy ridicule of certain types and some truth. There is not a superfluous character in the book, nor a dull page. It may be that some readers will find the entire book superfluous. A very different thing—"The Constant Nymph" has been called wicked and a menace. But those who consider the foibles and falls of human nature fit subjects for analysis, mirth, pity and satire, may look forward to Serena Blandish.

A BANK ON COLORADO STREET, PASADENA

BENNETT AND HASKELL — ASSOCIATED ARCHITECTS

By M. URMY SEARES

ON the main street of Pasadena, California, there has been recently built a handsome structure which carries out the higher phases of the city's new administrative center. That the business streets of the town might be as pleasing as the residence section, or the civic center, has been but slowly realized. Each owner of business frontage built as he pleased without regard to the beauty which every citizen who builds his home in Pasadena has a right to expect in the business section of so notable a town. Now that Colorado street is being widened in the downtown section we may hope for something as fine on Colorado street as we have on Orange Grove avenue or on Lombardy road. The owners of the frontage to be set back several feet have begun well and have showed their wisdom in selecting Mr. Cyril Bennett as appraiser. The tentative plant of Bennett & Haskell, shown on page 24 of this issue, is full of good ideas for making order and unity evolve out of the mixed building of fifty years ago. This will easily unite the new store fronts, which have to be rebuilt anyway, into a handsome street, more attractive than any other one block in town.

That a plan for the shopping and market center of Pasadena can only be made by all the architects in conference is apparent to all; for as each new structure is built new harmonies or new discords will be struck. The Rue de Rivoli of Paris is a fine example of a business street and Pasadena's new buildings do better when they emulate this ideal, or remember the Marina, the beautiful street of shops at the Panama-Pacific Fair.

The Central National Bank building is the result of careful study and good co-operation between the owners of the property, the bank directors and officers and the architects.

Of many possible schemes for a spacious banking room on an area of 50 feet by 110 feet, the basilica form was chosen as giving the opportunity for air and light into the upper part of the room, regardless of possible high buildings on either side. There will be no need of artificial light and the ventilation can be easily controlled, two important factors in making the room a place in which to work efficiently and comfortably.

THE HANDSOME ENTRANCE ON COLORADO STREET. PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

The walls of the room are plaster, slightly rough in texture. The woodwork is dark walnut, heavily moulded paneling, the wickets are treated as wrought iron with a little color, the deal plates are of Belgian black marble. Color is also introduced in the capitals of the columns and more freely used in the ceiling.

For materials, stone, wrought iron and glass form an imperishable exterior. On the interior, the floors are of gray Tennessee marble with bases of black and gold marble, intended for indefinite use and wear. For the working spaces, the floors are covered with heavy linoleum for the sake of quiet and comfort.

At the great windows are heavy damask hangings drawn back in graceful folds; and covering the windows themselves are soft sash curtains extending the full length. Shaped lambrequins cover the semi-circular top. Co-operating with the architects in this subtle department of interior decoration was Henry C. Foes, whose studio is in the patio of the Community Playhouse. The success of the interior decorator in this instance depended upon a perfect blending of textile with the tones of the paneling and other woodwork, and restraint where hangings meet the more severe lines of woodwork and wrought iron.

The architectural style selected for the Bank is Italian renaissance, the ceiling decoration of an earlier type. The basilica scheme was used in ancient Rome for all sorts and kinds of business, and the Christian churches later adopted a similar plan. The exterior motive of arch and side windows which light the three divisions of the room is modified from the garden front of the Villa Medici in Rome. This general scheme adopted, the details have been studied to harmonize with each other and to conform to the modern needs and uses of the building.

On such a plan the architectural forms were raised, columns, arches, arcaded walls, clerestory windows and ceilings. Decoration followed as a matter of adornment, of secondary importance, yet contributing a great deal to the general character of the completed whole.

THE DIRECTORS' ROOM PANELED AND RESERVED IN ITS DECORATION.

VIEW OF INTERIOR LOCKING THROUGH CENTRAL AISLE TO THE STREET.

A COURSE IN THE APPRECIATION OF ARCHITECTURE

NO more welcome appeal was ever made to a magazine than that received by California Southland to co-operate with the Art Sections of the Women's Clubs of California by publishing an illustrated course in the Appreciation of Architecture. The whole effort of this magazine has been along these lines, and recognition of this endeavor coming from this important source is more than gratifying.

It inspires to further effort to set before the laity and, especially those interested in building the towns and cities of this country, the work of the best minds of our generation in city planning, architecture and the allied arts of sculpture, mural painting, iron-work, wood-work and all the other crafts which contribute to interior decoration.

It is our purpose to plan the entire make-up of each number to contribute to this course; and not to limit the subject of appreciation of architecture to any one page. The main contribution, however, will appear each month as a definite part of the course outlined by Miss Gere, the second installment of which appears on the next page. The first section was published in the October number, which also contained Mrs. Peters' introduction and Mr. Witmer's article on The Site. In September a preliminary article by Mr. Myron Hunt, prepared for the A. I. A. page by Mr. H. O. Sexsmith was so appropriate to the introductory subject listed, that it was included in the course as the leading article, although it appeared on the architects' own page instead of on that assigned to the course.

There are many books which the club libraries might buy or which could be added to one's own library with profit. A list of these could be obtained by writing to the Rapid Blue Print Company, whose announcement of Architectural Books appears on another page.

Perhaps the best book the writer knows for this popular study is the first edition of Architectural Composition by John Beverly Robinson, A. I. A. It had an introduction by Russell Sturgis which was a very great delight to at least one reader, who regrets the fact that it does not appear in the edition before us. (1908 D. Van Nostrand Company). In this book is set forth, however, the principles of architecture perfectly understandable by everyone. One fundamental quality of fine art, recognized by all history as essential, is made so important by Mr. Robinson that

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 26)

THE CENTER OF THE BUSINESS DISTRICT OF PASADENA. SOUTH SIDE OF THE STREET NOW BEING WIDENED ON THE NORTH SIDE. IF ARCADED IT WOULD ATTRACT THE TRADE OF THE ENTIRE TOWN. NOTE HOW THE ARCHITECTS HAVE BROUGHT UNITY OUT OF CHAOS IN THEIR TENTATIVE PLAN FOR THE NORTH SIDE OF COLORADO STREET WHICH IS EVEN NOW GREATLY IMPROVED BY THE REBUILDING OF THE FIRST UNIT.

PAINTINGS OF THE WEST
STENDAHL GALLERIES
OF THE PACIFIC COAST
The Ambassador Hotel—Los Angeles Hotel del Coronado—San Diego

LAKE ARROWHEAD LODGE
E. K. HOAK, Managing Director.
Mile High—American Plan—Open All Year
Reservations made at 319 Van Nuys Bldg. Tel. VA. 0929, or direct to Lodge. Call Lake Arrowhead Main 1. Rates, $7.00 a day and up, including meals and room.
"Dinner Dance Every Saturday Night. Special Features for Thanksgiving Holidays."

WE offer for investment of Personal or Trust Funds sound Securities returning highest rates consistent with safety.
WILLIAM R. STAATS COMPANY
Established 1887
Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds
311 East Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIF.
Los Angeles San Diego San Francisco

THE MAKING OF TILE ROOFS

The permanency which types of Italian and Spanish houses have established for themselves in this southern country affords workers in tile abundant opportunity to perfect their work. It brings out, at the same time, a stricter demand for perfection. Among the craftsmen whose work has been closely connected with this growth is Earl Fisher, of 4936 Buchanan Street, Los Angeles. Mr. Fisher began his trade with The Frank Meline Company, in the days when that company built houses. Today he is working for several well known firms, such as the Clarence P. Day Corporation. His most attractive work, among his latest buildings, is the tile-roofed houses erected by the Spaulding Company at Bradford and Grand Avenues in Pasadena. Mr. Fisher is doing all of Mr. Loveland's work in tile-roofing and in sheet metal, and is highly recommended as a man who is honest and dependable and eager to improve on his own work.

Beautiful Garden Pieces
in
Sculptured Terra Cotta
Italian Terra Cotta Co.
W. H. Robison
1149 MISSION ROAD
Opposite County Hospital
Phone Lincoln 1057 Los Angeles

NO. 121 TALMAGE VASE

NEW SCHOOL OF ARCHITECTURE, UNIVERSITY OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

The Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles, in order that the City of Los Angeles may ever have architects trained to the highest ideals of the profession, has devoted its membership and resources to the development of a School of Architecture in Southern California.

The success and benefit of this work is proved by the action of the University of Southern California in creating a School of Architecture to produce our future architects, advised and assisted by this Association.

Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles

AN INTERIOR DECORATING DEPARTMENT NOW OFFERS TO ARCHITECTS AN UNRIVALLED SERVICE IN THE SELECTION OF CHOICE PIECES, DRAPERIES AND COVERINGS

Silk Lamp Shades made in our own workrooms by specialists

The
Serendipity Antique Shop

Antiques Lamps Decorations

22, 26 and 30 SOUTH LOS ROBLES AVENUE
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

BRADFORD PERIN, Proprietor Telephone F. O. 7111

RARE FOREIGN ARCHITECTVRAL BOOKS

An unusual collection of books interesting to ARCHITECTS, ARTISTS, INTERIOR DECORATORS, IRON WORKERS and others, will be on display during December and January

The RAPID BLVE PRINT CO.
818 Santee Street
Los Angeles

The Girls' Collegiate School 34th Year
NEWLY LOCATED IN THE COUNTRY
Boarding and Day School. Accredited East and West. Out-Door Life a Reality. 50-acre estate. All sports. Saddle Horses. New Buildings. Italian type. L. A. Office, 1008 W. Adams St.
Glendora, Calif. Miss Parsons and Miss Dennen, Principals

An Ideal School for Young Women
Cumnock School
COLLEGE WORK IN THE FOLLOWING COURSES:
Vocal Interpretation of Literature
Literary Appreciation — Voice and Diction — Short-Story
Public Speaking — French — Dancing
Dramatics — Story Telling — Psychology
Journalism
Art and Art Appreciation
An accredited High School and Junior School under same management
HELEN A. BROOKS, Director
5353 West Third Street — Los Angeles
WHitley 3427 —TELEPHONES— WHitley 7311

The Elliott School for Girls
Residence and Day School.
Ideal Home Life — Character Building
Superior Educational Advantages. Sub-Primary through Eleventh Grade.
Martha Collins Weaver, M. A., Principal. Pico Blvd. at Grammercy Place.
EMpire 5347

GREENWOOD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
5928 Franklin Avenue, Hollywood
Select Resident and Day School
Lawns, Tennis Courts, Outdoor Swimming Pool. Special advantages in music, under Mrs. Elsa Spencer.
Principals:
Mrs. M. Greenwood, Newnham College, Cambridge
H. F. Greenwood, A. B., Corpus Christi College, Cambridge
Telephone HOlly 2886

MISS HARKER'S SCHOOL
FOR GIRLS
Palo Alto -:- -:- -:- California
"The Home of Stanford University"
Outdoor life all the year round. One hour from San Francisco. College Preparatory and Special Courses. Separate residence for girls from 5 to 14 years. Catalog on request.

The Katharine Branson School
Ross, Marin County, California
A Country School for Girls — College Preparation
One Hour From San Francisco — Outdoor Athletics

KENWOOD HALL
Resident and Day School for Girls. Sub-Primary through High School.
Open throughout the year.
Directors: Ruby Mildred King, Grace Baylor Bobbitt.
Tel. WAshington 1612 — 675 So. Vermont Ave., Los Angeles

The Art of
Norma Gould
Authentic Dances—Pantomime
Eurythmics
Ballroom Department—Louise Kramer
Special Course for Professional Dancers
Phone or write for information
460 N. Western Ave. HEmpstead 3530

SUAVE AND FINE ARCHITECTURALLY IS THIS INTERESTING CORNER OF WESTLAKE SCHOOL. ARTHUR KELLY, ARCHITECT, LOS ANGELES

we may safely depend upon it for the basis of our future criticism. This is unity. A fine example of the application of this quality appears on page 24. It is a remarkable example of the skill which a trained architect exhibits when he makes architecture to appear where there was no architecture before. That he does this by first removing the extraneous parts, and then introduces beauty by making a row of houses co-operate to produce it, is proof enough that architecture is not merely decoration, as Ruskin once declared it. We hope to have an article on this subject from Mr. Fitch Haskell, who took the Beaux Arts Course without being spoiled for original work by it and who has done much for architecture in California, both by example and by teaching in the Los Angeles ateliers.

Another architect who has been extremely helpful by teaching is Sumner Maurice Spaulding, whose article appears below. A member of the firm of Webber, Staunton and Spaulding, whose design of a plaza for Palos Verdes estates has appeared in Southland, Mr. Spaulding continues his teaching by helping in this remarkable example of what architects, city planners and landscape architects can do if given free rein on a fresh, untouched stretch of California's shore line. Palos Verdes is in itself a liberal education in the appreciation of architecture, and we recommend to everyone who can reach it, or its exhibition on Pershing Square, Los Angeles, the study of the unique work of its architectural jury.

MISS GERE'S OUTLINE (Continued)

VI—Notan, Color and Texture

The notan or dark and light of buildings is largely due to the patterns of light and shadow in doors, windows, cornice and moulding, emphasizing the proportional areas and accents of contrast. Notan is also due to difference in color values, as in a combination of light terra cotta with a darker brick. The material chosen often determines the color, in other cases color is applied. Bright sunlight makes white in large unsheltered areas trying to the eyes—it is better to subdue the glare by making walls of light warm gray or gray yellow. Concrete walks and drives are often too light in value.

The texture of walls and other surfaces is determined by the material chosen, or the manipulation of material. The clapboard or shingled surface gives a pleasing texture, certain uneven plastered surfaces are more agreeable to the eye than smooth unvaried texture. A tile roof not only adds color but gives a note of difference in texture. It was a wonderful experience to look down from the towers upon the old tile roof of the Santa Barbara mission,tiles rich and vibrant in color and interesting in texture. The choice of brick or tile for walls or fireplace involves both color and texture. The use of varying hues and values, within a certain range, gives a finer and more lively color effect than to use closely matched material.

VII—The Importance of the Garden

The grounds a setting for the house. Use of walls or planting for privacy. The treatment of service portion of the yard. The patio, arbor, fountain stepping stones, garden seats and pottery. Garden design should emphasize the best features of the house but many often conceal some less fortunate detail. Planting of trees, shrubs, flowers, lawns. Massing of dark shrubbery against a lighter wall. Repeating color notes from house in flowers of garden. Shadow patterns from trees or vines on house or garden wall.

VIII—Town and City Planning—The Architect's Greatest Problem

The city planning board or art commission. Beauty an asset in any town or city. Make a survey of your own town—the civic centre, the community art centre; the streets, open squares, parks and playgrounds, public buildings, fountains, electroliers, bridges, shops and homes. Choose the finest architecture of the city and associate the names of architects with their work. Interest local papers in giving space to news of civic art, and in reproducing photographs of the best arichitecture and gardens. In some cities competitions have been inaugurated in the schools with excellent results, for example, a prize offered for the best photograph of a really beautiful doorway, or of a building with distinctive roof lines. An entire community may become aware, for the first time, of its appearance, choosing, discussing and making constructive criticism of its architectural design, and of the city plan as a whole.

X—Civic Architecture and Buildings for Commercial Uses

Libraries and theatres have always received much thought from architects and the public. Today the packing house, the garage, the fire station and occasionally the gasoline filling station have been designed for beauty as well as service. Architects are beginning to design panels for signs on mercantile buildings, an excellent thing—many well designed structures are ruined by ill proportioned ugly signs which are placed without regard to the architectural lines.

HELP FOR PROSPECTIVE HOMEBUILDERS

By SUMNER MAURICE SPAULDING

WHEN the inexperienced decides to build a home, the first impulse is to "go and look at houses." Sometimes, for convenience, the study of photographs of houses and plans is substituted. This research seems to be a great help, and before many months, the friends of the above-mentioned hear such remarks as these: "I like Mrs. Brown's house. Its plan is lovely, but the outside is hideous." "Mrs. Smith's house is beautiful outside, but the plan is impossible." Therefore, by the addition of a room or two to Mrs. Brown's house and a dormer or two to Mrs. Smith's, the design is complete. This method of attack, unfortunately quite typical, is inadequate.

We may as well admit that the last one hundred years have produced the worst buildings the world has ever known, with the consequence that ninety-nine per cent of the houses in this country are obviously of bad taste. Being surrounded by these atrocities, our sensibilities have become so numb that we are not conscious of their ugliness. As is natural, our standards of judgment have been formed by observation of these same atrocities. Realizing this, there is a genuine danger to the average person who relies on his own inexperienced and untrained judgment in selecting a pattern for study. The possibility that the one per cent of good houses wll fall in the path of the casual observer is remote.

Goodness and badness in architecture are relative, and it is no disgrace to the average individual that he is unable to choose correctly between them. The disgrace lies in his unwillingness to confess this inability. One of the most striking examples of this is the utter confidence with which most people refer to styles of architecture. We all are familiar with real estate advertisements of "ten room Colonials," "seven-room Spanish," and "five-room hand-decorated English." These simple epitaphs immediately call to our minds the handsome dwellings that now line the streets of our exclusive residential districts. These commercialized architectural terms, used so vulgarly, should be revolting to any public-spirited citizen.

Assuming that it is unwise for us to chose any other house for our pattern, we must resort to our own ingenuity to develop a plan which will suit our own personal needs. For a concrete problem let us select the average small flat city lot. This type covers most cases and is the most difficult to handle. Unfortunately in our exclusively residential districts, building restrictions require a deep set-back, providing unnecessarily wide streets at the sacrifice of garden space.

On one side of our lot we find a "steep-pitched English" house, on the other a "darling white Colonial," and across the street the early Japanese period. The house in the lot back of us stands out square and bold. We cannot catalogue it as a style, for none of the characteristic architectural embellishments have been wasted on the rear. Even the possibility of a view of the mountains has been destroyed by the telephone poles and the network of wires. It is obvious that the center of interest and vistas must be created within our own property. Here in California where we have almost continuous sunshine and pleasant weather, we can derive the maximum pleasure and benefit from our gardens, which can be made private by a surrounding wall. Considering the garden the center of interest, let us have our principal rooms opening on it, and let us sacrifice none of it for the garage when this strictly utilitarian feature can be more conveniently and economically attached to the house. With these rooms thus located, the service and bed rooms can be located on the sides or on the street to suit individual needs.

Upon this plan we will construct walls of masonry with large openings into the garden, and smaller ones with grilles for light and ventliation only on the street. Steep-pitched roofs, the natural outgrowth of snowy and rainy climatic conditions are unnecessary here. Therefore, we choose a low-pitched roof of some local material, such as tile, shingles or shakes. The walls of a simple unassuming texture, can be plastered inside and out. The ceilings inside can very properly show the honest, open construction of the roof, and the floors may be of either tile or wood. Tile panels may even be used to break the monotony of plain walls.

The sole requirement for furniture for a house built in this manner is that it be of good design and of proper scale with the rooms.

In the matter of draperies, color texture and design are the chief consideration. Simplicity is paramount.

As to the economical arrangement of rooms, it is better to reduce the number rather than the sizes of rooms. For example, why build a small dining room and a small breakfast room, when a larger dining room would serve for both? Why build a sleeping porch when bedrooms can be adequately ventilated? Or, if economy must be carried even further, the dining and living rooms can be combined, divided when necessary by a decorative curtain.

A house is full of compromises, at best, and it is far better to admit some of them than to sacrifice all beauty to the god of efficiency.

It is possible to illustrate this philosophy of planning by photographs of houses already built. However the writer believes that it is better for the student to work out his own problem, keeping simple fundamental principles in mind.

The Westlake
School for Girls
333 South Westmoreland Avenue
Residence and Day School
Lower School, College Preparatory, Junior College
Fully Accredited
Departments of Art, Music, Home Economics
JESSICA SMITH VANCE FREDERICA DE LAGUNA
Telephone DRexel 0052

Urban Military Academy
The Great Outdoor School for the Building of Body and Brain and Character Under Matchless Conditions
Open All Year. Address MISS SALEY, Registrar
637 Wilcox Ave., Los Angeles. HEmpstead 7602

NEW HOME OF PACIFIC MILITARY ACADEMY
Culver City, California

Boarding and Day School. Fireproof Buildings. Completely Equipped Laboratories. Grammar and High School. Enrollment limited.
For Catalogue Write Mrs. Loughan or telephone Culver City 3294

SECRETARIAL COACHING
For cultured people desiring personal attention. Refined, harmonious surroundings. All Secretarial subjects. Parliamentary Law. Bride's Budget.
Management, Mrs. Frank Rutherford, 711 South Vermont Ave. Fltzroy 1763.

MARTHA
WATSON-KERBY
Exclusive Fashions for Women
GOWNS WRAPS SPORTS CLOTHING
2224 WEST SEVENTH STREET
LOS ANGELES
WESTLAKE SQUARE PHONE FITZROY 0823

The Assembly Tea Room
The In and Out-of-Town House of Los Angeles serves
LUNCHEON, TEA AND DINNER
INCIDENTALLY
The Very Choicest Food
Special Sunday Dinner 5 to 8
644 South Flower St., Los Angeles
Phone VAndike 7177

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A. MONTHLY BULLETIN

PLAGIARISM AS A FINE ART

THE following article is intended as the first of a series of most interesting papers on precedent in architecture, which were given at a recent convention of the American Institute of Architects. The articles will run through several numbers of this bulletin and each will represent the widely divergent views of as many groups of designers, from rigid classicism to the Sullivanesque of the Middle West.

The series are reprinted from the Proceedings of the 1924 Convention of the A. I. A.

FIRST ADDRESS BY MR. VAN BUREN MacGONIGLE

"When the President of the Institute asked me to organize and conduct a session of the Convention this year, he gave me a free hand in the choice of topic and of the men to treat it. It appeared pretty obvious that the subject worthy of devoting a whole session to must be one of real and deep significance to the profession and be in the public interest as well. And it seems to me that nothing to do with architecture is of such vital consequence just now, in these days of readjustment to the conditions of a world awry, as to direct the thought of the whole profession, those now practicing and those who will take our places, toward the future of American design. If art be, as I believe it to be, the expression of the civilization that gave it birth, the inexorable recorder of the taste, culture, and intellectual and spiritual level of that civilization, then we architects have a grave responsibility toward contemporary society that its taste and ideals may be worthily expressed and recorded for posterity. Shall the record be an inspiration or a warning?

It was clear to me also that I must choose my coadjutors from the profession itself, since only designers may discuss design with that degree of insight we may not expect to find in even the most enlightened and intelligent layman. And in surveying the available field I have chosen men who not only represent differing schools of thought and disparate training, but who are eminently qualified by all their talents to make available and constructive contributions to the subject. They need no introduction to you. They are William A. Boring, Ralph Adams Cram, William L. Steele, and Walter R. B. Willcox. Professor Boring will, I hope, not object to being called an Authoritarian, Cram I trust will not flinch from the designation Mediaevalist or even Gothicist, Steele is of that school of which Louis Sullivan was another notable exemplar, Willcox may be called a progressive eclectic. I shall have something to say also but just where to place myself I know not—the Classicists I understand won't have me, and the Gothicists repudiate me, which permits me to roam at large in that delicious and irresponsible freedom known only to the excommunicated. Geography, which is to say environment, has a lot to do with moulding a man's ways and habits of thought and I took that into consideration also in framing the list from which the ultimate choice was made: Cram from Boston, Boring trained in New York and Paris, Steele in Illinois, Willcox in Boston and Philadelphia and the far Northwest, myself chiefly in New York.

As the chairman of this session, I have seized the opportunity to have the first word—and perhaps the last as well.

The most difficult part of the task was to find a name for the subject to be discussed. I knew perfectly well what it is, but what to call it on the program! Something urbane, something non-explosive, something safe—but not so safe as to make the delegates decide to go somewhere else this afternoon. Various titles suggested themselves—The Use and Abuse of Precedent—The Architect and His Use of Precedent—Adaptation of Creation—Collation or Design—all of these and others came to mind. At last Mr. Kemper suggested the official title—What is Precedent Doing to American Architecture. But I will not conceal from you my own preference, which is Plagiarism as a Fine Art.

For, ladies and gentlemen, we architects in America have raised plagiarism from the low estate in which it languishes in other arts and professions to the rank of an art in itself and one highly esteemed. We applaud its successful practice by each other, we educate our public to demand it, and our public responds with enthusiasm and rewards us by bestowing further opportunities for its exercise. Before you damn me quite for such a statement and bristle at it as a base betrayal of a guild secret, let us consider together and see whether I am far wrong.

FROM A WINDOW IN FLORENCE
[Courtesy of F. H. S.]

In literature, the undergraduate who borrows the thoughts and phrases of any other man, living or dead, is plucked if he is found out; in our schools of architecture the unfledged plagiarist gets a medal—the fact that he is unfledged has nothing to do with his not being plucked. The mature writer, novelist, poet, dramatist, who appropriates the intellectual capital of any other author, living or dead, is universally condemned and the offence is rare.

THE GARDEN OF VILLA FALCONIERI, ITALY

In music, that subtle and elusive art in which it would seem almost impossible not to repeat harmonies heard perhaps years before, the composer scrupulously avoids the faintest far-off echo of the strains in which other musicians have sung out their souls; and should he perchance fail to do so by ever so faint a recall, the critics and amateurs of music instantly pronounce his work reminiscent and the value of his composition is nullified at once; thus, in music the mere reminiscence of another's work is banned.

Pass the sculptors of the world in review and ask ourselves if they, in all the vast company of works they have wrought in the long history of their art, have not sedulously avoided the repetiton of pose or gesture or character that has been used before. And what should he the fate of the sculptor who adapts another man's work, living or dead, to his own uses and calls it his own?

What of the painter? Is he content to repeat the concepts, the tones, the handling of light or of pigment of dead or living men? Is not his life devoted to the search for a meaning, a coloration, a technique, a point of view, that shall be his very own? The merest novice instinctively recoils from such heady flattery as the implication that he draws just like Michael Angelo; he wants to draw as well as Angelo but he wants to draw like himself, not another, however exalted.

It is their glory and their pride to be themselves, to be individual, these fellow artists of ours. In short, in the arts of Literature, Music, Painting, and Sculpture, plagiarism is not—well, shall we say, not admired? And the plagiarist, with us so envied, so emulated, and so rewarded, with them weeps and gnashes the despairing tooth in outer darkness.

Let us ponder these things well and then let us look ourselves square in the eye, perhaps in the sacred privacy of the bath room mirror, and ask ourselves whether we architects are plagiarists or not, and if we are, why? And if we think not, then let us try to formulate a plausible argument to prove that while plagiarism in literature, music, sculpture, and painting is most justly to be condemned and its practitioners ostracised, it is different, somehow, in architecture, and excusable, even laudable. Or let any two of us look each other in the eye like the Two Augurs and try to keep a straight face as we solemnly aver that our work is our very own, individual and original, and, above all, that it is appropriate to our own moment in history and exactly expressive of American ideals and of the civilization of the twentieth century in the United States.

Pecksniff, you know, used to add a water spout to a pupil's design and call it his own. May I descend to the vernacular long enough to suggest that Pecksniff was a piker?

Call it by all the gentle names we may, call it adaption, refer to it as we used to in a certain office after a particularly flagrant piece of cribbing—"the old man has been anticipated again"—that which we commit daily and hourly is plagiarism; and the dictionary defines that as "the act of appropriating the ideas of another without due acknowledgement; literary or artistic theft." And you will not be surprised to learn from the same authority that a plagiarist is one who plagiarises. I dare say we could distinguish grades of guilt, just as in law we have manslaughter, justifiable homicide, murder in the second degree and just plain murder. Let us extract what comfort we can from any excuses or sophistries we may construct, let us point with a finger trembling with resentment to the august figure of Shakespeare—the fact remains that the American School of Architecture of the present moment is essentially imitative, plagiaristic. I am not bound, I conceive, to name the exceptions which will confirm this rule; we may safely leave them to the apologists for the system.

(To Be Continued)

THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

OFFICERS

J. E. Garnsey, President
Roy H. Kelley, Vice-President
H. O. Sexsmith, Secretary
Paul W. Penland, Treasurer

DIRECTORS

Walter S. Davis, Director
J. E. Stanton, Director
H. C. Chambers, Director

A BOUQUET FOR THE CLUB'S SMALL HOUSE PLAN SERVICE

THE following extract is taken from a letter written by the Real Estate editor of the Kansas City Star. "I watch your designs in the Los Angeles Times with interest as they rank high in originality and merit. I do not know of any plan service that ranks with them, week in and week out, considering always that they are designed for a California background. —We like to produce your plans occasionally because both the design and the floor plan are decidedly stimulating."

GARNSEY SNEAKS HOME

Our esteemed president made his first public appearance since his recent European trip, at the Fairbanks-Pickford Studios. Welcome home Julian. We understand that if the Goddess of Liberty ever gets another look at our genial mural painter she will have to turn around.

POMONA COLLEGE

Pomona College is about to subdivide a portion of ground at La Jolla and is planning to restrict the development to the Latin type of house. Mr. James M. Judy has requested that club members who have designs of this type in the form of perspectives and floor plans could help greatly by forwarding directly or through the Club Secretary, any material available. Credit will be given to the designer for all work so used. Charles Cheney is laying out the subdivision and Allison and Allison are to be architects for the business center; sufficient assurance of the high character of the project.

STUDIO TRIP

On Saturday afternoon, November 7th, the members of the Club and their friends were the guests of the Fairbanks-Pickford Studios. Close to two hundred composed the party which was conducted through the Studios by Mr. Ibbotsen of the Fairbanks-Pickford Organization, who very entirely explained the sets and gave most interesting information regarding them. The sets for Douglas Fairbank's new picture, "The Black Pirate," which included several most fascinating medieval ships were seen, also some of the sets remaining from Don Q. and Little Annie Rooney. In addition there were some decidedly realistic sets representing the Florida Everglades, which are being used in Mary Pickford's new picture.

Margaret Craig.

DETAIL OF THE WOMEN'S ATHLETIC CLUB. ALLISON AND ALLISON, ARCHITECTS

The party also had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Edward Langley, Art Director of the Studios who made a very entertaining talk on the problems confronting an art director in a large motion picture studio. The Club is greatly indebted to the Pickford-Fairbanks Studios for its hospitality.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS

The next meeting of the Club will be given over to the Election of new officers and other like entertainment, also a celebration of the retirement of the present lazy and good-for-nothing incumbents in office. It is very possible that in the interim a new party or political faction may spring into existence and wage its campaign at the coming election upon the platform of "more real meetings, more fun, less dry talk and lower membership dues."

Speaking unofficially, our vice-president, (one of the aforementioned lazy, good-for-nothing incumbents), is willing to go on record as endorsing such a policy, and further, offers the suggestion that all membership dues paid during the past year be refunded, those not paid cancelled, and the membership dues decreased to not more than five dollars a year. This should offer material for a lot of excitement at the next meeting. Come out and enjoy the fun!

The Home of Beauty

J. H. Ramboz House, Glendora
Aleck Curlett, Architect

The happy blending of older architectural forms into a style distinctively Californian is coming more and more into vogue. We are akin to the Latin-Mediterranean countries in more ways than one. The brightness of nature's colors; the easy climate; the deep azure of the sky; the "drenching" quality of the sunlight: all these call for harmony between nature and the works of man. So it is fitting that our Homes of Beauty should be crowned with Latin Tile, which, as developed by this company, has been pronounced a real contribution to American architecture. Nothing could be more appealing than their soft rose overtone under the lovely Californian sky.

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.

Los Angeles Office: Los Feliz Boulevard and S. P. Tracks
Tropico Plant: Glendale, Los Angeles County

NOTES FOR CONNOISSEURS

There is a particularly fine collection of old Breton pieces at the Cannell and Chaffin studios in Los Angeles. One especially, an old Breton wall seat of the atmosphere of Louis Quinze, is a prize. It has charm, distinction, and above all, utility. If there ever was a truly livable piece of period furniture, this is it. With its built-in bookshelves and its cushioned depths it hospitably invites you to come and find a world of seclusion and peace; an appeal which is well-nigh irresistible.

We might as well admit that we've never been partial to Oriental Arts. In fact, the truth of the matter is, that we had been distinctly hostile toward them until we made a visit to the Grace Nicholson Shop in Pasadena. There we found out that the appeal of beautiful things is irresistible, no matter what influence they show. We found delicate and subtle shadings of color that were exquisite. There were over a hundred shades of beautiful brocaded Chinese silks. There was case after case of crepes of every shade imaginable; rich heavy velvets; and lovely brocades. We were allowed to see the treasures in the vault, and we lost our scepticism and became fired with enthusiasm and no small amount of avarice. There were two of the ten large Sung statues of the country. There was a host of small temple statues, beautifully carved. There were obie cloths of every color and description. Chinese tapestries, old roof tiles, hand woven gold cloth; treasures of art that would have reconciled us, very nearly, to a life of crime for their possession. It was too much for mortal man to bear. We left with a far-away look in our eye, praying for strength to resist temptation until money to buy should be forthcoming.

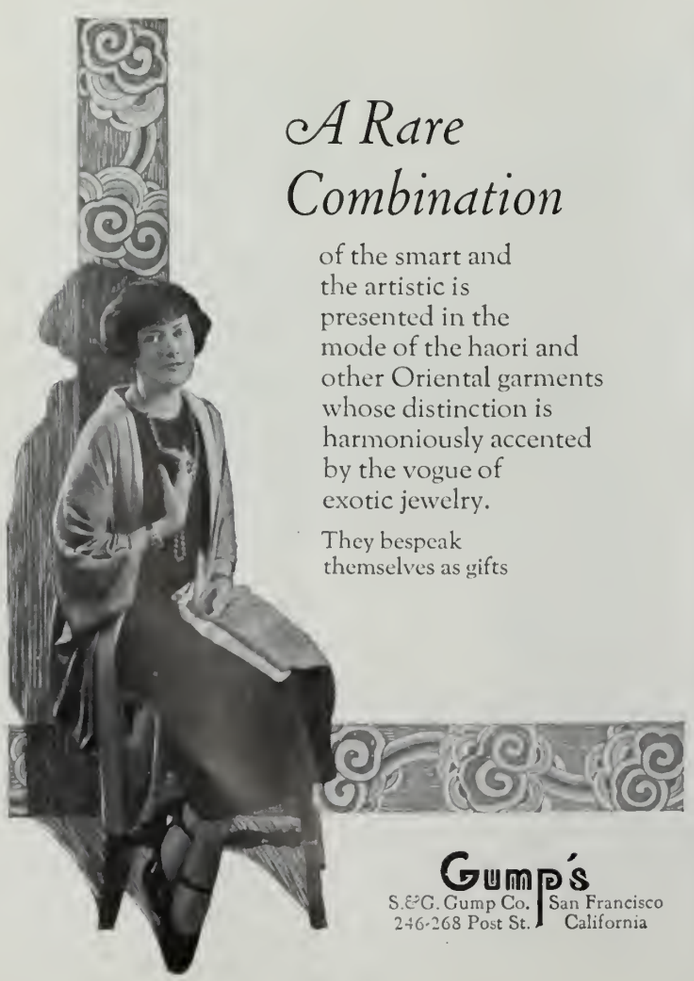
The Meyer and di Segni Gallery, on Figueroa Street, has just received a fine shipment of stone pieces from the Province of Rome. There are great wine jars, some of them four and a half to five feet tall, beautifully turned and in well-nigh perfect condition. Then there are smaller jars which the monks in the old Franciscan monastery, from which all these jars came, used for oil. Since every jar of any size always reminds every descriptive writer of Ali Baba, we won't call forth visions of that gentleman and the forty brethren of the road, but we'll say just this: If you're looking for old-world atmosphere, these old jars have it, and to spare. There hangs about them an air of centuries long gone by. Jars aren't the only things, however, in this latest collection of Mr. di Segni's. There is a Byzantine well with especially fine carving, and an early sixteenth century well. Their charm as garden pieces supreme is undeniable. An early sixteenth century stone fireplace completes the lot, and is, to my mind, the finest of them all. This is a really unusual importation.

The lovely green glass Olla shown in the illustration is imported from Old Mexico. Breath-blown and hand-shaped, this piece is as attractive as it is decorative. An unusually attractive gift in two sizes at $9.00 and $13.50. Write for illustrated catalogue of Mexican Glass.

The Cheesewright Studios, Inc.

Decorators and Furnishers

PASADENA CALIFORNIA



Have you ever gone into the Hewson Handcraft Studios, either in Pasadena or in Los Angeles, and watched the looms working? There you may see your own design being woven into beautiful fabrics. After your goods have been woven, the design is destroyed, which protects you from duplication. Something novel in house decoration would be to have your drapery materials made to order. Why not? The idea appeals to me. Doesn't it to you? There are any number of interesting and lovely things to be had at the Hewson Studios. Besides the hand-woven dress materials, there are scarves, coatings, draperies, hand-wrought silver and pewter, brass and copper work, batiks, wood carvings, potteries, and a host more.

Those who know the difficulty of trying to find a dining-room set of more than six chairs, will be delighted with a composite Sheraton dining-room set at The Serendipity Antique Shop in Pasadena. These two sets of chairs, fourteen pieces in all, are in beautiful condition and show the very finest of nineteenth century Sheraton workmanship. The chairs of the two sets are not alike in design, for who would want fourteen chairs exactly alike? They are alike, however, in the essential points which determine a good or a bad composite. The backs are of the same height, and the seats are the same height from the floor. The turning on the front legs and the shape of the hind legs, is the same in each set. There isn't the slightest difference in the reeding. This is an unusual group of chairs, and I regret that I cannot do them justice in a short description. They more than speak for themselves, however, so go in and see them.

TO SOUTHLAND READERS

In our wanderings about during the month we cover a great deal of territory among the finest shops of Los Angeles and Pasadena. If you are looking for some one thing in particular for your home, don't hesitate to write us in care of the magazine and we will be more than glad to help you look.

SAXE BRAINERD.

A Rare Combination of the smart and the artistic is presented in the mode of the haori and other Oriental garments whose distinction is harmoniously accented by the vogue of exotic jewelry.

They bespeak themselves as gifts

Gump's

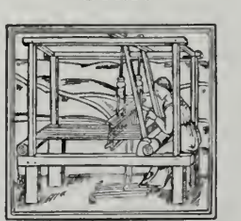
S. & G. Gump Co. 246-268 Post St. San Francisco California

Lovely Linens of Rare Charm and Distinction

Fine Linen Damasks

Embroidered Luncheon Sets; Towels; Art and Handkerchief Linens; Handkerchiefs of Exquisite Quality

Your Inspection Is Invited



The Irish Linen Store

McBratney's

Monrovia, California.

HEWSON Hand Craft STUDIOS

Hand Weaving, Dutch Brass, Mexican Glass,

Hand Wrought Silver and Pewter, Etc.

Hand Decorated Christmas Cards

—Unique and Artistic Christmas Shopping Places

2508½ W. 7TH ST. LOS ANGELES

602 E. COLORADO ST. PASADENA

Central National Bank of Pasadena, Equipped Throughout With Weber Fixtures

WRITE FOR CATALOG SHOWING

Weber's Fine-Art Bank Equipment

Used by Many of the Leading Banks of the West.
Sectional Units—plus Individuality

Weber Showcase & Fixture Co.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
5700 South Park Ave. Tel. HUmbolt 0460
EIGHT ACRES OF SERVICE

Clarence P. Day Corporation

Engineers — Contractors
Builders

205 Boston Bldg.
Pasadena, Calif.

Phone
WAkefield 6841

THOMAS FRANKLIN POWER
ARCHITECT
AND ARCHITECTURAL ENGINEER

DUNKIRK 1442

2615 W. SEVENTH ST.
LOS ANGELES

Decorating and Finishing Exclusive Furniture

W. G. Pesenecker

Interior and Exterior Painting
34 North Broadway
Phone Col. 5656 Pasadena, Calif.

WESTERN TILE AND MARBLE COMPANY, INC.

Bathrooms and Accessories

Tile Garden Pools

Fountains and Benches

Importers of Spanish, Mexican and Italian Tiles

Show Rooms 386 South Raymond Ave., Pasadena
Telephones: Fair Oaks 3157; Terrace 3158

BETTER HOMES
ARE HEATED WITH

OHRMUND BROTHERS
Unit System of Heating
ELECTRICALLY CONTROLLED

Thousands in Use in Southern California. Let us show you why Ohrmund Brothers Units are superior.

HEATING AND SHEET METAL CONTRACTORS

PASADENA GAS APPLIANCE CO., INC.
901 E. Colorado Street
Pasadena Fair Oaks 9393

THE BATCHELDER TILES

BATCHELDER-WILSON COMPANY

We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

2633 Artesian Street

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

come! —and golf with us

The Palos Verdes Golf Links is the only all-grass links on the seashore between Del Monte and San Diego. It is, moreover, conceded to be the finest 18-hole course on the Coast. Fourteen of its greens command a view of the ocean, and its fairways and natural hazards have evoked the favorable comment of internationally known golf experts. The Club House is of stucco with tiled roof and contains lounge, sun room, locker rooms, showers and a golf shop. The links are championship length and 213 acres in extent—land involved, buildings, and necessary construction work are the property of homesite owners who are thus assured of perpetual enjoyment of the Club privileges.

The Terrace, Palos Verdes Golf Club — the Bay Cities in the background.

THE GOLF CLUB HOUSE AT PALOS VERDES
One of the most completely equipped and architecturally perfect club houses in California.

THE Golf Links is just one of the many exclusive features embodied in the general development of the Palos Verdes Estates—California's finest residential suburb. Here are 3200 acres of some of the choicest seaside property in the Southland—landscaped, developed and building into the ideal home environment . . . ideal because it has everything necessary to ideal living—ocean and mountain scenery, a delightfully tempered climate—maximum of sunshine, with extreme invigoration. Added to this Palos Verdes has carefully graded building restrictions, a generous allotment of areas for parks, schools, plazas, bridle trails and 4½ miles of protected shore line. Palos Verdes has made every provision for outdoor recreation.

The homes, business buildings, school, hotel, riding academy, etc. which you now see in Palos Verdes, are ample evidence of the original master plan which has in somewhat less than three years made this the nation's outstanding example of seaside community building.

—and yet homesites in Palos Verdes cost no more than in many other less desirable communities having far less to offer—

PALOS VERDES

4½ miles of California's finest shore line

5TH FLOOR LANE MORTGAGE BUILDING, 8TH AND SPRING STREETS, LOS ANGELES

JAY LAWYER, Gen. Mgr. BANK OF AMERICA, Trustee

C.S. 11-25

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

PATRIARCHS OF THE GROVE, A PAINTING IN OIL BY WILLIAM WENDT, N. A. : COURTESY OF STENDAHL GALLERIES, THE AMBASSADOR.

A PAN-AMERICAN EXHIBITION, AND COMING HORSE-SHOWS IN THE FAR WEST

No. 73 JANUARY, 1926 25 Cents

Los Angeles National HORSE SHOW

Ambassador Auditorium

February 8-13, 1926

105 Classes
1000 Entries

$30,000 Cash Prizes

7 Championship Model Classes

The Greatest Mid-Winter Horse Show in the United States

W. W. MINES, Pres. IRVING H. HELLMAN, Vice-Pres.
ELMER A. GREEN, Secy. GUY G. WOODIN, Vice-Pres.
WILBERT MORGRAGE, Chmn. Horse Show Com.
W. S. BLITZ, Manager

Los Angeles National Horse Show, Inc.

811 Stock Exchange Building
Los Angeles, California
VAndike 6592

Entries Close January 28th

Scott Auto Rental Company

Successor to

Meagers Auto Rental Service

Buick, Chrysler, Dodge and Ford
Open and Closed Cars

For Hire Without Drivers

California without a Car is like a fishing rod without a line. Both are necessary for your enjoyment.

161 W. Colorado St., Pasadena. Wakefield 8181

AN INTERIOR DECORATING DEPARTMENT NOW OFFERS TO ARCHITECTS AN UNRIVALLED SERVICE IN THE SELECTION OF CHOICE PIECES, DRAPERIES AND COVERINGS

Silk Lamp Shades made in our own workrooms by specialists

The Serendipity Antique Shop

Antiques Lamps Decorations

22, 26 and 30 SOUTH LOS ROBLES AVENUE
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
BRADFORD PERIN, Proprietor Telephone F. O. 7111

When Women Invest

Safety is the first consideration

Back of Edison Stock is a record of 61 consecutive dividends.

Edison stock has the highest endorsement of bankers and financial authorities.

The Company is managed by experts who have spent their lives in its service.

It is under the regulation of the State Railroad Commission.

An essential service in a diversified market assures continued earnings.

These are 5 of the many reasons why 32,848 women have bought Edison Stock.

AND IT MAY BE PURCHASED ON THE EASY SAVINGS PLAN.

Write for particulars

Southern California Edison Company

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Dance!

at the

Ambassador

Cocoanut Grove

to the Entrancing Music of

COCOANUT GROVE
ORCHESTRA

Under the Leadership of Ray West

SPECIAL NIGHTS Every Tuesday

COLLEGE NIGHTS

With Dancing Contest every Friday.

Tea Dances

every Saturday at 4:00 in the
Fiesta Room, Tea Service $1.00

SOUTHERN PACIFIC LINES

East-bound

the popular

GOLDEN STATE LIMITED

Enjoy travel luxury aboard this finest train to Chicago and the East, via El Paso and Kansas City.

For it's strictly first-class—Standard Pullmans, club car and observation car, Golden State dining car service. Many extra comforts, too—maid, barber, valet; shower baths, and a private lounge for women travelers.

Convenient leaving and arrival times. Connects at Chicago with fast trains to all eastern points. Through sleepers to St. Louis.

The quick, interesting route East, over the line of low altitude.

Buy Roundtrip Tickets
—and save money.

Ask any agent for complete information. Or write to

Southern Pacific Lines

C. L. McFAUL, A.P.T.M.,
Los Angeles, Calif.

Golden State Limited East

Full half a train devoted to woman—greater recognition of her just dues in travel than ever before planned. Perfect in every appointment—of course.

All-Pullman—women's lounge, shower bath, maid, manicure, expert hair bobbing in the barber shop—comfort for the men, too—club car, bath, valet and barber.

Leave Los Angeles 12:01 p. m. [via Southern Pacific]; San Diego 10:45 a.m. [via S. D. & A.]; arrive Chicago 10:00 a. m. third day [via Rock Island].

Thru Pullman daily from Santa Barbara 8:00 a. m. [via Southern Pacific].

For tickets, reservations, personal service, call on

Southern Pacific City Ticket Office
937 State St., Santa Barbara, Calif.
Phone 243
or address B. F. Coons, General Agent
Rock Island Lines
809 Van Nuys Bldg., Los Angeles, Calif.

Rock Island

SOUTHERN PACIFIC LINES

Meals? "The best on wheels"

893

"UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST"

The CALIFORNIAN HOTEL

MANAGEMENT H. WINGATE LAKE

FRESNO, CALIFORNIA

A modern, model Hotel devoted to sincere hospitality and dedicated to California's Guests.

THE LOGICAL STOPPING PLACE IN THE SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY FOR ALL POINTS, WHETHER YOU TRAVEL FOR BUSINESS OR PLEASURE.

EUROPEAN PLAN
258 ROOMS - 258 BATHS
$2.50 PER DAY AND UP
ALL OUTSIDE ROOMS

CALIFORNIA STATE AUTOMOBILE ASSOCIATION

★★★

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertainments, etc., for the calendar pages are free of charge and should be received in the office of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, at least two weeks previous to date of issue, the 10th. No correction can be guaranteed if they are received later than that date. California Southland is published monthly at Pasadena, California. One dollar and twenty-five cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be changed as many times as desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the change is made.

Entered as second class matter, July 28, 1919, at the Post office at Pasadena, California, under act of March 3, 1879.

Clubs

VALLEY HUNT CLUB, PASADENA:
The program for January includes: Bridge Luncheon, one o'clock, the 4th; Bridge Tea, two thirty o'clock, the 11th, 18th and 25th; Evening Bridge, eight o'clock, the 15th. Special club dinner will be served that evening. Annual Bridge Tournament will open the 19th.

Sunday evening suppers are served at seven o'clock, followed by interesting programs.

ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB, PASADENA:
The afternoon bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been discontinued for the season, but tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.
The usual Wednesday and Saturday sweepstakes each month through the summer.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged, followed by tea.
Table d'hote dinner served in dining room every Sunday from 12 to 3 p. m.

LOS ANGELES COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.
Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 .p m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month.
Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturday during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.

MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday in each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Daneing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday.
Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.

LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week, Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal.
Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL COUNTRY CLUB:
A dinner dance is arranged for the third Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a. m., and not before two p. m.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB, SANTA BARBARA:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A recent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a special luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served.

PALOS VERDES GOLF CLUB:
Offers an eighteen hole, all grass, seaside course, delightful for summer play.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Lunch and dinner served every day.

PASADENA GOLF CLUB:
Wednesday is Ladies' Day, with cards and mah jongg from two to four-thirty, when tea is served.
Dinner will be served on Sunday from five-thirty to seven-thirty. The usual luncheon and dinner service will prevail through the week.

FLINTRIDGE RIDING CLUB:
Children's Horse Show, third annual exhibition, January 9. Two performances, the morning exhibition begins at 10:00 a.m., the afternoon show at 1:30 p.m. The first prize in each class will be a silver trophy and blue ribbon, the second prize, red ribbon, third prize, yellow ribbon, and the fourth prize a white ribbon.

Where the Treasures of a Collector May Be Purchased as Gifts

A. Schmidt & Son

For Fifty-six Years

IMPORTERS OF ANTIQUE AND MODERN SILVER AND Sheffield Plate, Fine China and Glass

2320 W. Seventh St., Los Angeles

391 E. Colorado St., Pasadena

Boston New York Washington

Bullock's
Broadway—Hill and Seventh
Los Angeles

"One o'Clock Saturdays"

Art

LOS ANGELES MUSEUM OF HISTORY, SCIENCE AND ART, Exposition Park: Pan-American Exhibition of Oil Paintings, including the work of the artists of North, South and Central America. This exhibition is installed in the new unit, the opening of which it inaugurated, and is the main gallery. It continues to Jan. 31.

SOUTHWEST MUSEUM, Marion Way and Avenue 46, Los Angeles: Educational courses, including the usual lecture course, with the Sunday afternoon lecture at three, throughout the month. The Museum announces the opening of the Lampercht Collection Exhibit of Objects of Art of Cast Iron Technique, to continue to January 20th, in the Art gallery of the museum, hours 1:00 to 5:00 p.m., including Sundays.

THE BILTMORE SALON, Biltmore Hotel, Los Angeles, announces an exhibition by the Painters of the West throughout the month. The canvases will be hung both in the two display galleries and in the Galleria Real.

THE CANNELL AND CHAFFIN GALLERIES, 720 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles, will show the work of Eliot Clark, A.N.A. in the large gallery, January 4 to 16. The exhibition is made up principally of Eastern landscapes and is of unusual interest. Later in the month, January 18 to 30, the work of Leland Curtis will occupy the larger gallery. In the small gallery will be hung throughout the month well selected examples of the work of both Eastern and Western painters.

STENDAHL Galleries, Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, will show during the first two weeks in January paintings by Frances Cougat and Dorothy V. Anderson. During the last two weeks in January and the first part of February a Guy Rose exhibition will be held. This will be the most comprehensive collection that can be assembled of the work of this well known painter, for whose pictures the demand is always growing.

SOUTHBY'S Art Salon, 112 North Larchmont, Los Angeles, will show the work of Franz Bischof, to the middle of the month. During the latter part of the month will move and reopen the Art Salon at 424 North Larchmont.

GRACE NICHOLSON Galleries, Pasadena are showing paintings and etchings by Power O'Malley.

HOWELL C. BROWN, secretary of the International Printmakers, announces that the last day for receiving prints for the seventh annual exhibition is February 7, prints received after that date cannot be considered.

JOHN FROST has made three separate sketching trips to the desert in the neighborhood of Palm Springs within the month, the results of these visits are eagerly anticipated by his friends and admirers.

PASADENA ART INSTITUTE, Carmelita Gardens House, is open daily from 10 to 5 o'clock. One room is always given over to the work of local artists, and interesting displays arranged for the other galleries.

THE FOURTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION OF PICTORIAL PHOTOGRAPHY, under the auspices of the Southern California Camera Club, was held at the Southwest Museum during December and included the work of about forty-five entrants from the Pacific Coast, ranging from Vancouver to Globe, Arizona. Eleven of the exhibitors were Japanese, while perhaps the best known was Margaret Mather, international exhibitor.

VICTOR HIGGINS, who exhibited at the Biltmore Salon during December, has gone to Honolulu, where he will hold an exhibition and also sketch and paint.

CHARLES RUSSELL is in the East, at present holding an exhibition in New York.

HELEN DUNLAP, after an interesting sketching trip into Africa, returned to Paris for the holidays with her family.

THE STONE INTERNATIONAL GALLERIES, Monrovia, California, opened by M. Theodore Stone and William Murrell Fisher, plan to show contemporary works of art exclusively. The exhibitions for the month are: To January 10, a group exhibition of drawings, lithographs, etchings, water colors, small oil paintings, and wood carvings; January 10 to February 10, first exhibition in California of screens by Robert Winthrop Chanler and flower paintings by contemporary artists.

POWER O'MALLEY, whose paintings were recently enjoyed at the Biltmore Salon, has taken a Studio at Laguna Beach and will there sketch and paint for the first time in California.

NELL BROOKER MAYHEW has made the illustrations, eleven delightful pen drawings, for the book of fairy tales recently issued by her sister, Adelaide D. Royer, of Urbana, Ill.

THE PAN-AMERICAN PRIZES have been awarded as follows: A. C. Balch Purchase prize to William Wendt's California landscape, "Where Nature's God hath Wrought," and to John Carroll's figure study, "Parthenope"; The Los Angeles Museum prizes, to be applied for purchase, first to Diego Rivera's "Dia de Flores," second, Andrew Dasburg's "Tulips" and third to Guy Pene Du Bois' "Shops"; The Earl Standahl prize, restricted to landscapes in the Latin-American section, was divided in two and went to Manuel Villareal's "Interior of Churubusco," and to Manuel Cabre's, "Fishing Boats at Martigues, France; The Bivouac Art Club of Otis Art Institute prize, restricted to figure paintings in the Latin-American section, went to Louis Martinez, "Don Panchito," and to Maria Ramirez Bonfiglio's, "Mexico Indians." The Republic of Ecuador medals were awarded as follows: Gold Medal to Nicholas Delgado's, "Old Song," Silver Medal to E. Martinez Serrano's landscape, "A Place of Retreat," and a Silver Medal to Wilhelmina Coronel's figure painting, "Indian Girl." Four honorable mentions were given. These went to Lilias Torrence Newton's "Yvonne"; Bernard Karfiol's "Seated Figure," Warren Wheelock's, "Old Man and Child," and Henri De Kruif's, "A Song to Autumn." Miss Cora Eshman, of the Biltmore Hotel, has purchased the "Seated Figure" by Bernard Karfiol, and this will ultimately be presented to the Museum.

MR. NORMAN EDWARDS, who designed the winning emblem in the contest conducted by The Arts and Crafts Society, was a student in San Francisco of Mr. Rudolph Schaeffer's. He was later a teacher in the Otis Art Institute and is now in charge of Prologue Stags Craft with the Rochester Theatre of New York, owned and operated by the Eastman's.

MR. AINSLEE HEWETT'S wood carving and book plates were exhibited at the Arts and Crafts headquarters the week beginning December fifteenth. Other exhibitors in December were Miss Emma Waldvogel of Monterey, Embroideries and Miss Eleanore Cole, Batik.

MR. DOUGLAS DONALDSON returned to his studio on Melrose Hill on Christmas eve after a trip of several weeks, during which time he lectured in many places upon the philosophy of color and design.

THE BILTMORE SALON extends its art influence throughout the neighborhood by sending exhibitions to clubs, schools, libraries and such public institutions as make the request. During the past year exhibitions were shown in the following places: The Friday Morning Club, Ebell Club, Hollywood Women's Club, Chamber of Commerce, Allied Arts Association, Tuesday Morning Club of Glendale, Women's Club of Azusa, Women's Club of Glendora, Contemporary Club of Redlands, Montecito Country Club, Delphian and Ebell Clubs at Long Beach, South Pasadena High School, Venice High School, Whittier High School, Santa Monica Beach Club, Wiley B. Allen Building, County National Bank and Trust Company of Santa Barbara, Woman's Club of Tucson, Women's Club of El Paso, Women's Club of Van Nuys, Rocky Mountain Club of Los Angeles, San Dimas Woman's Club, South Pasadena Woman's Club, Hollywood Improvement Association.

Music

THE PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA OF LOS ANGELES, W. A. Clark, Jr., founder, Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor, announces Ernest Bloch as guest conductor in the sixth symphony concerts, January 1 and 2. The dates for the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts for January are 1-2 and 15-16 and 29-30. The hours are 2:30 and 8:30. The popular Sunday afternoon concerts are given at 3.:00, the dates are January 10-24. All concerts are given at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Fifth and Olive.

PASADENA MUSIC AND ART ASSOCIATION, in the 1925-26 Artists Series, will present Sousa's Band, Tuesday evening, January 5; On January 8 Sigrid Onegin, contralto, will appear, and on January 25, Toti Dal Monte, soprano, will be the attraction. The concerts are given at the Pasadena High School Auditorium.

AUDITORIUM ARTISTS' SERIES, under the management of George Leslie Smith, will present Benno Moiseivitsch, Russian pianist, January 11.

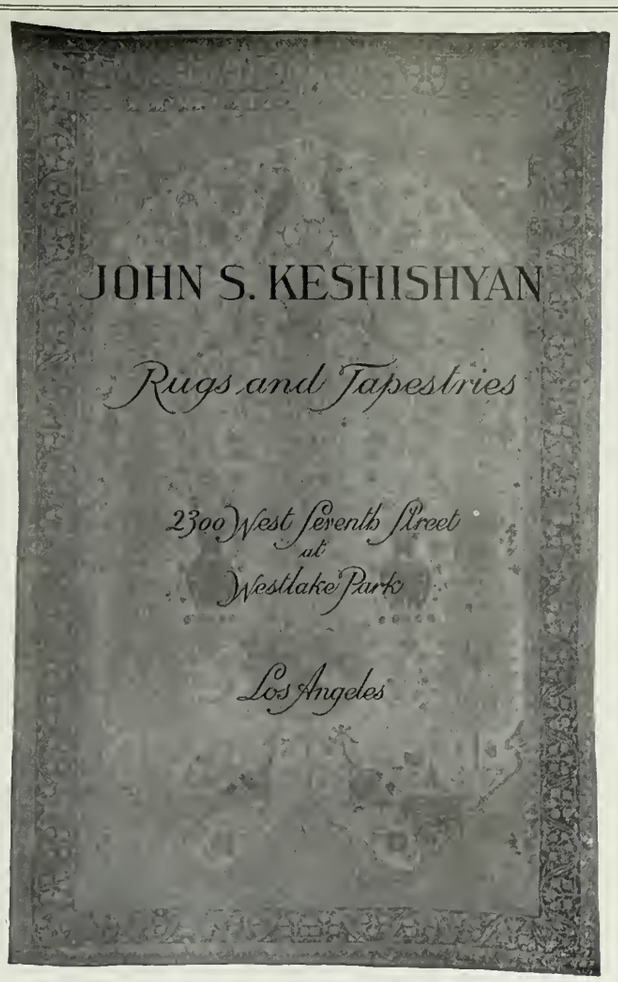

Table Service, Pieces and Sets, $1.00 to $20.00

MEXICAN Fabrile GLASS

May be purchased in the following California Studios:

Los Angeles—A. E. Little Co., 7th St. Store, Hewson Studios, Arts & Crafts Society, Ye Treasure Chest, Margaret Craig's Studio.
Pasadena — Cheesewright Studio, Inc., Sam Farrington.
Berkeley — Reginald Markham Jno. McKeown, Old World Shop.
Carmel—Tilly Polak.
Hollywood—Mary Helen Tea Room.
Monrovia—The Ivy Gift Shop.
Oakland—The Copper Shop.
Riverside—Mission Inn.
San Francisco—Vickery, Atkins & Torrey, O'Hara, Livermore & Baken, Jones & George.
Alhambra—The Gift Shop.
Beverly Hills—The Fanfare.
Coronado—Harold A. Taylor.
La Jolla—The Jack-O-Lantern.
Monterey—Mission Art Store.
Palm Springs—Desert Inn Studios.
Santa Barbara—Robert L. Lewis.
San Diego—Jack-O-Lantern.
Santa Monica—The Attic.
Ventura—La Floreria.

If your dealer cannot supply, write for illustrated catalogue.

Talavera Importing Company, Inc.
322 East Colorado St. Pasadena

PASADENA'S CONCERTS by the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra will be given at the Raymond Theater, the January date being the 11th. The entire Philharmonic orchestra appears, under the direction of Walter Henry Rothwell, on these occasions.

BEHYMER PHILHARMONIC ARTIST COURSES include for January, Sigrid Onegin, contralto, January 5, Helen Stanley, soprano, January 12, and Feodor Chaliapin, greatest of Russian baritones, January 14. One appearance only.

ADOLF TANDLER'S LITTLE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA will give four Saturday morning concerts, at eleven o'clock, at the Biltmore hotel, Los Angeles, during the winter season, January 9, February 6, March 6, and April 3; also a series of Sunday night concerts at the same place, January 17, February 7 and 21, March 7 and 21, April 4 and 18, and May 2.

THE SAN CARLO OPERA COMPANY opens January 18 for a three weeks' season, under the management of George Leslie Smith, at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Los Angeles. The repertoire announced includes "Tosca," "Rigoletto," "Faust," "Aida," "Lucia Di Lammermoor," Hansel and Gretzel," "Thais," "Boheme," "Florza Del Destino," "Tales of Hoffman," "Romeo and Juliet," "Faust," "Carmen," "Butterfly," "Lohengrin." Among the artists are Bianca Saroya, Luchese, Karagau, Philine Falco, Desantis, Clara Jacobe, Salazar, Tafuro, Tomarchio, Curci, Lorna Doon Jackson, DeMette, Schalker, De Biasi, Cervi, Cesare, Ghirardini, Valle and Interrante. The conductor this season is Carlo Peroni.

THE LOS ANGELES TRIO, May McDonald Hope, pianist and founder, Sylvain Noack, violin, Ilya Bronson, 'cello, will give the fourth of the series of six evening concerts in the Music Room of the Biltmore, Los Angeles, January 28.

THE ZOELLNER QUARTET will give the third concert of the annual series of chamber music concerts in the Music Room of the Hotel Biltmore, Los Angeles, Jan. 25.

THE GAMUT CLUB will present a composite program at the club house, Wednesday evening, January 6, this will include a New Year's dinner, a program in the theater, and a dance in the ballroom.

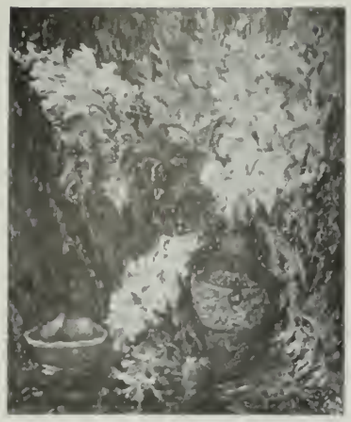
SEVEN ARTS SOCIETY OF LONG BEACH, founded by Katheryn Coffield, will present Cecil Arden, contralto, January 19. The Society also sponsors the morning lectures by Aline Barrett Greenwood.

ADOLPH TANDLER'S LITTLE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA will present ten concerts in the winter series at the Community Playhouse, Pasadena, the first and third Sunday afternoons of January, February, March and April. There will be seven programs by an orchestra of at least sixteen pieces, two programs by a string orchestra, and one by a quartette.

JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, and his ever popular band, will appear in Los Angeles at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Jan. 7-8-9, matinees and evenings. The band is made up of more than a hundred musicians, with ten soloists.

LOS ANGELES Conservatory of Music and Arts sponsored, through the Dramatic Art Department, the opening of The Little Theatre Around the Corner, December 12 and 14. "Before Breakfast" by Eugene O'Neil, the three other one-act plays by Oscar Wilde, Ruth Comfort Mitchell, and Christopher Morley, made up the program, under the direction of Elisabeth Cloud Miller. Similar plays will be given from time to time.

LOS ANGELES Philharmonic Orchestra Association has offered a prize of $1000 for symphonic work, to be performed at the Chicago N.F.M.C meeting in 1927.



GLENDALE Symphony Orchestra Association, Mrs. Charles H. Toll, president, will sponsor a series of winter concerts by the Glendale Symphony Orchestra, J. Arthur Myer, director. The series will include five monthly concerts, with assisting soloists opening in January.

THE Crocker-Redding opera "Fay Yen Fah" will be given the first American presentation in San Francisco, during the opera season, opening Jan. 11, under the management of Gaetano Merola. During the season, which continues for two weeks, Toti dal Monte, coloratura soprano, will make her first operatic appearance on this coast. She will sing in "Rigoletto," "Lucia" and "The Barber of Seville."

THE SMALLMAN A CAPELLA CHOIR, organized and directed by John Smallman, is composed of forty young and enthusiastic singers, modeled after the style of the Ukranian Chorus, and appearing in gypsy costumes of various colors. This choir made its first concert appearance in Los Angeles in December.

MRS. EDWARD MacDOWELL will hold classes in Los Angeles in the interpretation of MacDowell piano music and songs in February and March. Funds will again be turned over to the Peterborough Colony Endowment Fund. The class will be under Rena MacDowell's management.

"THE Marriage of Figaro," under the direction of William Wade Hinshaw, will be presented by L. E. Behymer early in February. The Mozart opera will be given in English.

"ORCHID, FLAME AND GOLD," PAINTING BY ROBERTA BALFOUR

THE ART DEPARTMENT OF THE LOS ANGELES PUBLIC LIBRARY has compiled, because of numerous requests, a list of the women painters now exhibiting at the Pan-American in the new unit of the Los Angeles Museum. The list includes twenty-eight American women artists, and is given herewith, including some information concerning their work:

Kathryn Leighton. Her excellence of composition and depiction of atmosphere is well known. Her California scenes have added to many local exhibits.

Loren Barton. Oils, watercolors, pencil sketches and drypoint etchings contribute to the fame of this versatile young artist. Life in and about Los Angeles is the theme of much of her work.

Mary Cassatt. A member of the Legion of Honor of France, holds to the tenets of the impressionists.

Lillian Genth. Has studied with Whistler and is represented in many important exhibits. Best known for nude figures and out-of-door scenes.

Jean MacLane. Studied at the Art Institute of Chicago, has exhibited in the Paris salon, and assisted in painting the portraits of the Allied Leaders of the World War.

Helen M. Turner. Noted for soft interiors and painting of sunshine. Has paintings in the Metropolitan Art Museum and in the Corcoran Gallery.

Theresa Bernstein. Educated in America, a true product of democratic schooling. Delights in painting crowds.

Margery Ryerson. Best known for her studies of child life in New York's East side. With a few strokes she catches the spirit of her models.

Mabel Alverez. Striking portraits and feeling for color distinguish her work.

Donna Schuster. Vividness in both oil and water colors are characteristic.

Other women exhibitors represented at the Museum are: Jean Adams, Annie Baldaugh, Roberta Balfour, Ruth Harris Bohan, Marjorie Conant, Anna Fisher, Gertrude Fisk, Felicia Howell, Harriet Lord, Emma F. Macrae, Bela Mayer, Peggy Nichols, Edith Phelps, Lucy Pierce, Henrietta Shore, Anna Lee Stacey, Florence Alston Swift, Paulette Van Rockens.

Announcements

PASADENA Community Playhouse: January 7 to 16, "Merry Wives of Windsor" by William Shakespeare. Each play will begin on Thursday and end on the second Saturday, matinees on Saturday.

"HISTORY of Costume" talks by Fairfax Proudfit Walkup under the auspices of the Pasadena Center of the Drama League, at the Community Playhouse, Pasadena, will be resumed Monday, Jan. 4, at 2:30, to continue on Mondays.

THE Serendipity Antique Shop, South Los Robles Avenue, Pasadena, announces the opening of a Book Department, in which will be found the best of current literature, carefully selected.

SOROPTIMIST CLUB weekly luncheon meeting at the Biltmore hotel, Los Angeles, December 15, was of unusual interest. The program was presented in the combined Palm and Supper room of the hotel and consisted of a brief summary of the art of costuming as applied to the dance and stage, given by Norma Gould and illustrated by actual numbers of character, interpretive and national dances, by pupils from the Norma Gould School of the Dance. Miss Gould appeared in an Eastern costume, never shown before, an unusual example of authenticity, design and workmanship, rich with hand embroidery in brilliant silks.

THOMAS G. PATTEN is giving a series of Fortnightly Talks on topics of present interest at the Women's Athletic Club, Los Angeles, the second and fourth Mondays of January and February, from three to four. The January dates are the 4th and 18th.

SECOND Annual Roller Canary Show will be held at the Biltmore Hotel, Los Angeles, Jan. 16-17, and is free to the public. The bird fanciers of this section will compete for the highest awards.

Eleanor and . . . . Hollingsworth Beach

French and Italian Arts

630 East Colorado Street

Pasadena,

California

YOU ARE INVITED TO ATTEND AN EXHIBITION OF

Antique Brass, Copper and Pewter

Also

Hand Blown Mexican Glass

Jan. 10 to 15, 1926

at

HEWSON HAND CRAFT STUDIOS

2508½ WEST SEVENTH ST., LOS ANGELES

N. B.—We specialize in Porter Blanchard's Hand-wrought Silver and Pewter.

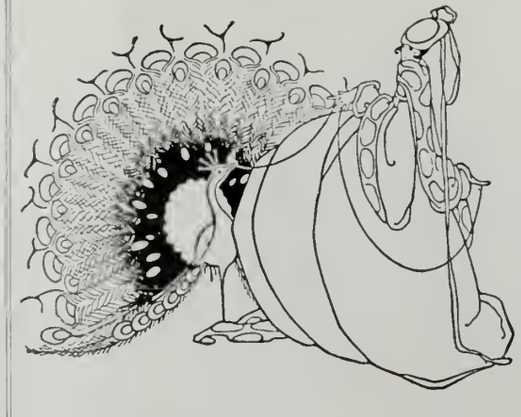
HAVE YOU EVER VISITED



GRACE NICHOLSON'S

TREASURE HOUSE OF ORIENTAL ART

46 NORTH LOS ROBLES AVENUE

PASADENA

A Famous and Fascinating Shop, specializing in Brocade Silks, Crepes, Haori Coats, Fine Kimonas, Jewelry, Antiques and Exclusive Gift Novelties

Lenz HAT Studio

643-645 East Colorado St.

Pasadena, Cal.

Near the New Community Playhouse

Phone Fair Oaks 573

THE PASADENA LECTURE COURSE on Current Topics, 1925-26, will be held, as in past seasons, at the California Institute of Technology in Culbertson Hall, Wilson Avenue and California street, on Tuesdays at 4:15 p.m. The January programs are as follows: January 5, Dr. Bruno Roselli, chairman of the Italian Department at Vassar College "The Romance of Colonial Expansion"; January 12, Sir Thomas Adams, formerly Professor of Education, University of London, "Psycho-Analysis in Real Life"; January 19, John P. Buwalda, California Institute of Technology, "Earthquakes and Safety" (Illustrated); January 26, Major Vivian Gilbert, "The Romance of the Last Crusade" (Repeated by request).

DECEMBER marked the opening of the season hotels in Pasadena, the Raymond and the Huntington are filled with Eastern visitors for whose pleasure diversified entertainments are planned. The Hotel Vista del Arroyo, while open all the year gave the first formal dinner dance of the winter, December 15, including an elaborate Dance-Drama in the ball room, following dinner, and carrying the theme of "California the Land of Flowers." The Hotel Green, and the Maryland are also open throughout the year, but the winter months are marked by their more formal entertainments, and new and novel amusements are planned and worked out for the daily pleasures of the guests.

CALIFORNIA Fruit Exposition, a comprehensive display of all varieties of California fruits will be held January 21st to 31st in Alhambra, Valley Blvd. and Garfield Avenue. One of the features of the exposition will be a beautiful and comprehensive display of California's mid-winter flowers, plants and shrubs, for which entries have already been booked from Pasadena, Beverly Hills, Los Angeles and Santa Barbara.

Santa Barbara

JANUARY Programs at the Lobero Theater are as follows: January 5, Irving Pichel, of the Berkeley Playhouse, presents Eugene O'Neill's drama "All God's Chillun Got Wings"; Jan. 14, 15, and 16, Community Arts Play, "Minick" by Edna Ferber; Jan. 18, Ursula Greville, English mezzo-soprano, in concert; Jan. 23, Gilman Williams, baritone, in recital.

The School of the Arts reopens Jan. 4, and new pupils may enroll in classes of Graphic, Plastic and Decorative Arts, Drama, Music, Dancing, French.

The Artists' Series of musical recitals begins February 6 at the Lobero Theater with the appearance of Margaret Matzenauer, internationally prominent contralto. Other artists in the series are Roland Hayes, one of America's best known tenors, and The London String Quartet.

Formal opening of The School of the Arts in its new home at 916 Santa Barbara street, will occupy festivities lasting three days, Jan. 21, 22 and 23. On the two latter days the new home of the School will be open to the public and a public entertainment will be held at 8:30 Jan. 23 in the School's little theater.

The Spring Term of the School of the Arts will open Feb. 1 in the new home recently completed at 916 Santa Barbara street. All of the departments are located in new buildings and landscaping of the spacious campus will begin soon.

Pomona College

AN announcement has been made by Pomona College of the gift of 120 acres of mountain woodland at Bluff Lake near Big Bear Lake to be used for a mountain summer session for Pomona College. This was the gift of J. S. Edwards of Redlands, a trustee of Pomona college and three other associates on the Pomona college board of trustees. The addition of this mountain acreage gives Pomona three summer schools, one at the Laguna Beach Marine laboratory, another on the Claremont campus and a third at Bluff Lake.

The second in a series of Chamber music concerts by the Zoellner Quartet will be held at Bridges hall, Jan. 4th. An original musical comedy, the production of two Pomona students, will be presented as the annual Associated Women Students' production in Holmes Hall, Jan. 15 and 16. Elly Ney, famous European pianist, will be presented on the music and drama course in Bridges hall, Jan. 25th. The annual Claremont American Legion play is scheduled Jan. 28 and 29 in Holmes hall.

Dudley Crafts Watson, extension lecturer of the Art Institute of Chicago, will be in residence on the Pomona college campus from January 8 to 13 inclusive. He will give a number of addresses before classes and the general public. In addition to his lectures an exhibition of paintings by the famous California artist, Edgar Alwyn Payne, will be held in Rembrandt hall every afternoon from January 4 to 16 inclusive.

An effort to show prospective home builders that they can build an artistic home of the Latin type of architecture for $4000 or less will be made by Pomona college, the Claremont City Planning commission and other local organizations at the Community Small House exhibit to be held in the Women's club house after January 15. Cooperating with local organizations in the exhibit are the Architectural Society of Los Angeles, the Small Home Planning bureau, and the Santa Barbara Community Arts association.

El Paseo Patio

Lunch Out of Doors or Dine

at

"EL PASEO"

23 E. de la Guerra St.

Santa Barbara

Community Arts Association

SANTA BARBARA

SCHOOL OF THE ARTS

FRANK MORLEY FLETCHER, DIRECTOR

GRAPHIC, DECORATIVE AND PLASTIC ARTS — DRAMA. MUSIC. DANCING

Semester October-May. Summer School six weeks July-August

Address 916 Santa Barbara Street, Santa Barbara, Calif.

A delightful shop in an old Spanish mansion; specializing in

Indian Blankets—Rugs—Baskets —Jewelry—Mexican Fabrile Glass—Pottery and Hand-Made Chairs

Importer of Hand Loomed Wool Druggets from India

ROBERT L. LEWIS

Studio No. 5 at East de la Guerra St.

Santa Barbara, Calif.

Choose your own architect from the representative styles shown in "California Homes" by California Architects. Price $1.00.

Address: ELLEN LEECH,

544 So. El Molino Avenue Pasadena, Calif.

Clarence C. Knight

Dealer in Worthwhile Homes

Income Properties—Business Properties

112 East Figueroa St.

Santa Barbara, Cal.

THE BATCHELDER TILES

BATCHELDER-WILSON COMPANY

We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

2633 Artesian Street

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.

H. G. CHASE

(Established 1903)

Real Estate and Rentals

1012 State St. Phone 125

PORTRAITS

BY

PHOTOGRAPHY

Charles S. Seabolt

26 No. Los Robles Avenue, Pasadena, California

Opposite Maryland Hotel

Terrace 6712

Margaret Craig

PICTORIAL PHOTOGRAPHER

Portraits

Architecture

Gardens

Studio 3223 W. 6th St.

Telephone WAshington 1653

Los Angeles

fabriano shop

"By the Tall Sycamore"

Sixty South Catalina, at Green, Pasadena

Fine Imported Hand Loom Papers

For correspondence, etching, engraving, printing, poster work and fancy wrapping.

Designing, Printing, Engraving

Imported and Domestic Handmade Gifts

Wakefield 4082

The Mansfield Studios

Interiors designed and executed—Embroideries—Textiles

Pasadena WAshington 3473

Altadena Office Under Direction of Mrs. Samuel Lee Bierbauer

Colo. 2015

PAINTINGS OF THE WEST

STENDAHL GALLERIES

OF THE PACIFIC COAST

The Ambassador Hotel—Los Angeles Hotel del Coronado—San Diego

The Assembly Tea Room

Luncheon, Tea and Dinner

Special Sunday Dinner 5 to 8

644 South Flower St.

Los Angeles

Phone 827-177

Mt. LOWE
"Earth has no finer view to show."

Mt. LOWE TAVERN and Cottages
Enlarged and Improved

at the terminus of this World-Famous Trip afford a most delightful retreat for a long or short sojourn at reasonable rates

5 Trains Daily at convenient hours - from Main St. Station Los Angeles

$2.50 Round Trip Rate

For information and Reservations apply

Pacific Electric Ry.

Information Bureau Phone MEtropolitan 1400 - TRinity 3661

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - - Editor and Publisher
ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - - Associate Editor

NO. 73, VOL. VIII. JANUARY, 1926

CONTENTS

	PAGE
PATRIARCHS OF THE GROVE, IN THE STENDAHL GALLERIES (A painting by William Wendt, N. A.)...Cover Design
SOUTHLAND CALENDAR.....Ellen Leech	4, 5, 6
THE PAN-AMERICAN EXHIBITION.....M. Urmy Seares	9
PASADENA AS HOSTESS—LA SOLANA.....	12
A "PETIT PALAIS" IN PASADENA—CANNELL AND CHAFFIN.....	13
A GLIMPSE OF OLD MONTEREY.....Louise Morgrage	14
THE GARDEN CLUB AT SANTA BARBARA.....	15
HORSES AND HORSE SHOWS IN THE WEST.....	16
THE JAPANESE NOH PLAYERS.....	17
SOUTHLAND OPINION—PEACE.....Clarence Thomas Urmy	18
BIRDS IN SEASON.....Thersa Homet Patterson	19
ON SANTA BARBARA'S BRIDLE TRAILS.....Mary Nordhoff	20
THE TOURNAMENT OF ROSES—PASADENA.....	21
CLOTHES FOR THE CALIFORNIENNE.....	22
A BEAUTIFUL HOUSE BY WITMER AND WATSON.....	23-24
THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF ARCHITECTS.....H. O. Sexsmith	26
THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB.....	27
THE COURSE IN ARCHITECTURE.....Fitch Haskell, A. I. A.	29
THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE LETTER.....Anne Banning	32
NOTES FOR CONNOISSEURS .....Saxe Brainerd	34

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.
Copyrighted, 1926, by M. Urmy Seares
Subscription price $2.50 per year, $1.25 one half year
RALPH B. URMY, JR., ADVERTISING MANAGER
CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
Mrs. D. B. Sebastian, 2410 W. 7th St., L. A., National Representative
Advertisers desiring information concerning space or rates may call Fair Oaks 7034 for assistance
During Press Week, 24th to 30th, call TRinity 1501

Ye Claremont Inn

a residence hotel on the Campus of Pomona College affords unusual opportunity for rest, pleasure and study

Rates reasonable

CLAREMONT, CALIFORNIA

La Solana

A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue.
Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day.

Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St. Pasadena

KIEVITS GALLERIES
Vista del Arroyo Hotel, Pasadena
European and American Paintings

GATES
GRILLES
VICENZA STONE
FOUNTAINS
BENCHES
FIGURES
FURNITURE
—:—
Chapwoods
ITALIAN HOUSE
6908 HOLLYWOOD BLVD.
HOLLYWOOD
GR 1349

HOTEL GREEN

A well ordered Residential and Tourist Hotel of peculiar excellence. Open all year. Moderate rates. Apartments by the month.

The Green Tea Pot
Opened October 15
CHARLES B. HERVEY, Proprietor

J. W. Robinson Co.

RARE BOOKS

IN THE Book Section of J. W. Robinson Co. is one of the notable collections in America, of unusual books.

There are rare bindings in Levant, the royal leather, for individual books of great value; books in morocco; books in English calf.

For those who wish them with extra ornamentation, there are books with doublure bindings, inlaid miniature bindings, books with gem-studded covers and leather inlaid designs.

First Floor

Antiques
JOHN W. CONDIT

Dealer in rare old pieces selected from private homes. Specialist in the proper restoration of heirlooms.

199 S. Fair Oaks Ave., Pasadena
Telephone Terrace 0315-W

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Italian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

A FEW COMPLETE FILES OF CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
May now be secured by those who wish to bind them for libraries. 72 numbers for $7.50 postpaid. A discount of $2.00 will be given for any set not requiring No. 3.

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

THE ALL-AMERICAN ART SHOW IN LOS ANGELES

TWENTY years ago, when entering upon a study of art in Europe, one watched the sailing time of steamers homeward bound and counted the days for their return. At the postoffice in a great commercial city, the question, "What days does the mail leave for America?" was answered by, "Which America?"

Taking this viewpoint of a student far enough away to have a good perspective, the art of one America is as good as that of the other; and an exhibition can not be divided along national boundaries for purposes of a just critique. What the Pan-American Exhibition at Los Angeles will accomplish is something far beyond the pleasure local critics may indulge in as they find fault here and there according to their command of studio vocabulary. There is perhaps no other large city in America so avid of art, so hungry for good things, so eager to know how it is done. Here is a great population with a high average of leisure and almost no sources of training in art. The country occupied is so beautiful that the talented among them learn to paint little else.

Studying covertly and almost shamefacedly the work of every painter on view in their environment, our young artists must learn by absorption and personal

"HUELGA NOCTURNA," BY ARTURO GORDON, CHILE

"Where Nature's God hath Wrought," by Wm. Wendt.

LA GITANA. A PAINTING BY ROBERT HENRI, TAOS, LATIN AMERICA. INTERPRETED BY THE UNITED STATES.

NOSA SENORA DAS MARINAS, A PAINTING IN OIL BY MARIANO MIGUEL. CUBA

PAINTINGS IN THE PAN AMERICAN EXHIBITION, LOS ANGELES MUSEUM, JANUARY, '26

effort. To such as these and to every painter, stranded on this far-off coast, this Pan-American Exhibition, conceived and assembled personally by Wm. Alanson Bryan, Director of the Los Angeles Museum, is such a boon that it is hard to see how Los Angeles, once possessed of it, can ever let it go. Did ever county supervisors, museum patrons and board of governors give to their public more bounteously, more wisely, or more intelligently than this!

Consider the fact that we have never had in Los Angeles before any exhibition of our own artists that compares for one moment with their part in this. The element of comparison has hitherto been absent, and comparison is the life of progress in art.

The gratitude of the whole community, the whole state, goes out spontaneously to our friends in Mexico and in South America for having given us this great privilege of seeing their canvases, of talking over problems of art with them and of calling them friends.

What Los Angeles has needed hitherto is a world view of anything. Absorbed in our own affairs we have known no art but our own feeble attempts to keep up with what we guessed Europe was doing before the war. Now we have caught a glimpse of our own continent and the best that artists on this hemisphere are accomplishing. How shall we ever assimilate it in one more month! It seems almost imperative that every picture obtainable should be retained somewhere in Los Angeles, where it can be seen and studied by the hungry multitude.

Ticked off at the door of the museum on a Sunday 18,000 people visited this exhibition in one day! Their children's children will be better artists and understand their neighbors better because of that significant day.

NU, A PAINTING IN OIL BY GEORGIANA DE ALBUQUERQUE, BRAZIL

We have here used a few of the engravings made for the museum's catalogue of this exhibition and spread broadcast throughout the homes of California.

The large engraving of the painting by Wm. Wendt is our own contribution. It shared the splendid Balch prize with John Carroll's "Parthenope," an exquisite study of spiritual values in human form that is done with so masterly a hand that no one thinks of it as a nude, but from yokel to connoisseur the observer grasps at once its powerful beauty. John Carroll received his foundation of training in San Francisco and went to Europe for more; William Wendt came to California a finished painter trained by his own work among the best world painters and has lived here for decades, giving to both connoisseur and art student the pleasure and the art education which comes from association with great talent and serious work.

The decisions of this first real jury we have had the honor of having, are in themselves a liberal education and go deeper than is dreamed of in the selfish view so often assumed.

Technique, methods, style and mannerisms, these are all for the painters among us; appreciation of this exhibition and of every picture sent to it is to be found in the results. Trained in Europe much more often than are our own artists, trained severely by world competition, as our young men and women should be, the painters who contributed to the first Pan-American exhibition in Los Angeles have lifted us up to see ourselves in comparison with world art and whether it has made us humble or closed our hearts to progress depends upon our own capacity for vigorous, healthy growth.

LA VIEJA, A PAINTING BY ALFREDO GALVEZ-SUAREZ, GUATEMALA

PICANTERA AREQUIPENA, A PAINTING BY CAMILO BLAS, PERU

Overwhelming as this exhibition is in its presentation to Los Angeles at this time, we must not be dazed into a lack of appreciation of the spirit in which it was conceived and carried out. Only the youngest art students will look upon it as merely a chance to learn new technique rather than to understand and enjoy. What do we know of the countries below the border? What does the choice of subject by their artists show of the spirit, the character, the tastes and the environment of the people? What does our California art show of ours? One answer comes from the two pictures on page nine, "Strikers at Night." Who in California would chose such a scene to paint? Who among our own local students has made a study of the figure enabling him to group and portray like this? Trained in Paris and Madrid as most of the Latin American painters seem to be, they would if transported to this place, be found painting the people, the flower and fruit markets of Los Angeles, the Tournament of Roses Parade. How clever and delightful is their use of the human body in weaving the pattern. How soberly the background reflects the character of the sitter or is woven into the very fabric of design!

Something these brother artists of ours in the rest of America have in the fundamentals of their art that has not yet come to our landscape school versatile and pleasing though that may be. There is no doubt that their constant effort to represent the human spirit as expressed in the human body gives them a more serious attitude toward all art.

See how the pattern of the flowers and figures in Rivera's Dia de Flores expresses the spirit of a whole people in its daring conventionality and carefully worked out design. Reams could be written on this subject alone and yet the schools or the style or the modernity of the art never enter our thoughts as we begin our study of art in Mexico.

There is a very decided unity of effort shown by Mexico in her "Syndicate of Painters" of which Sr. Rivera is the leading exponent. The Education of this world master of painting shows how much more closely in touch with Europe is our sister republic than are we on this western shore of the United States. A review of the training and careers of the Latin-American painters exhibiting shows in many cases the support and sympathy of their national governments and of the people at large. The reception given to our Museum Director in every country and the response made all over the world by directors, consuls and friends of art in various capitals has done more to make friends for Los Angeles than all the banal "literature" sent out by seven counties telling of our climate and other things of which everyone knows more than do we.

VIEJA CASTELLANA, THE OLD WOMAN OF THE CASTLE BY FRANCISCO VIDAL. ARGENTINA
THREE ENGRAVINGS LOANED BY THE MUSEUM OF ART, LOS ANGELES.

In selecting for illustration these six paintings, the writer was interested in presenting the work of some of the Latin-American painters; but no thought of the surprising uniformity of composition prevailed. Anglo-America, Guatemala, Peru, Cuba, Argentina, Brazil, or Chili, the form of the woman is used to express the history of the art of each race, and only the United States has no background for its figure work.

Costa Rico, Colombia, Venezuela and Uraguay, Honduras and Equador, whose names are to most of us but a part of our school geography lesson, all these countries have graciously loaned to us their paintings and endeavored to communicate with us on the subject of art.

That we, as well as they, have much to talk about is evident in this the first Pan-American Exhibition of oil paintings. The new museum has justified itself the first day it was opened and its splendid facilities for the future will have to be described in forthcoming numbers of this magazine.

This month we have our first good chance to see the superb Harrison Collection properly hung. In addition we have a great showing of our own painters from all over the United States and our own private view of a room full of canvases from Canada. Never again can our Art clubs hang an unworthy or amateurish collection and find a docile reception. Los Angeles has seen the masters of all the Americas. She loves them and to them she will be true.

LA SOLANA (THE SUNNY SPOT)

THE GARDEN OF LA SOLANA
Photographs by George Haight

WHO that has come to Pasadena for a visit or a venture has not stopped at La Solana! Some places are so intimately woven into the fabric of the town to which they minister that they become its best expression, and an account of their relation to their environment is the story, the tradition of the town. To "welcome the coming, speed the parting guest" is the function of "mine host" at the great hostelries which have made "Southern California" a notable resort for tourists, winter refugees and seekers after a salubrious climate wherever it may be. But more than such passing service has been the secret of the great growth of California's intensively settled Southland. To probe the depths of the all embracing hominess that has populated all the seven counties, the historian must look deeper than the caravansaries.

Beginning with the Mission Inn at Riverside, in which Mr. Frank Miller is the exponena of what I mean, the families of that "Southern California"—which is passing to make way for more conventional conditions—were hosts and hostesses in an intimate and companionable way. Just as the dons and donnas of California's pastoral years in the seventeenth century held open house for travelers on foot or horseback up El Camino Real; so did every family of the Indiana occupation which founded Pasadena in the eighties, keep open house for friends and relatives coming on train de luxe or "tourist special" every winter and later for trippers from the "hot belt" of Arizona and Texas, eager for the cooling breezes of The Coast. Every home became a temporary, small hotel expanding as emergency demanded into a group of tents or cottages that sheltered many subsequent citizens of our Southland towns. "Let us store your goods, you'll be back" still read the prominent signs on all the storehouses and moving vans of a great transfer and storage company whose service has been developed to meet that demand as the great railroads brought the multitudes year after year to fill the land.

After a visit or two to the finely adapted tourist hotels that are the portals to Pasadena, families who had become enamored of the climate or who have business relations with the larger cities of the coast, look around for a small hotel in which to live while selecting their home site, their architect, and appropriate household goods for a typical Californian home. The transient boarding houses, thickly placed over the town near its center are indeed for transients only, and serve them well.

But, just as the suburban hotel is answering to the needs of our present settled condition, so this small hotel of La Solana, near the edge of our cool canyon through which sea breeze and land breeze alternate each day, has been the stopping place for streams of winter visitors and homeseekers for decades of Pasadena's history and still maintains its reputation as its name and fame are broadcasted by word of mouth all over the continent. One by one its guests pass the word to others where to stop for a week, a month, or a year in this all-the-year-round city of hostess and guest.

La Solana is not merely typical of Pasadena's expert reception of tourist and winter resident, it is more than that. Through the years which have witnessed it as charming neighborhood center and town builder, it has led in this highly developed function of giving the particular people who come to Pasadena a particular reason and a particular "sunny spot" for their return.

Basking in the sunshine which filters through the tall eucalyptus trees, the palms and citrus trees, the vine-clad porches of La Solana, glorying in the roses, and the great wistarias that drape their purple and white blossoms over neighboring houses, one sits in a comfortable garden chair or lies full length in his chaise longue and dreams of his own cottage smothered in roses of all colors, or plans a palace in Pasadena on one of the broad boulevards.

Some world tourists who like to live quietly for part of the year in Pasadena's finished environment choose this quiet little hotel for their permanent abode; while others, settled in their own homes on Pasadena's west side along the handsome boulevards and little side-streets of Orange Grove Avenue, depend upon La Solana with its central dining room for an aid in maintaining the life of a home without its carking cares and drudgery.

Such a life is ideally lived in California, where the out-of-doors calls constantly and where the home in its generous character spreads out into the gardens, and the pleasure parks, the country clubs and bridle paths.

California's fruits are notably large, her children, born of out-door mothers and fathers, are robust and vigorous and so her homes take on the aspect of community and out-door life and start and thrive in such a place as La Solana has to offer within the compass of Grand Avenue, Lockhaven Street, Palmetto Drive, and most significant of all the names, South Orange Grove, a boulevard becoming as famous as is Pasadena, the "city of homes."

THIS ROOM, BUILT BY THE ORIGINAL OWNER FOR A MUSIC ROOM, HAS SEEN MANY A PLEASANT CHAT OVER TEACUPS

THE DRAWING ROOM AND GALLERY OF LA SOLANA, THE TRAVELERS' "SUNNY SPOT" IN PASADENA

PASADENA CALIFORNIA

CANNELL AND CHAFFIN'S SHOW ROOMS

THE ENTRANCE ON COLORADO STREET

A CHARMING ACQUISITION TO PASADENA

397 East Colorado Street, Pasadena

View of One of the Upper Show Rooms of Cannell and Chaffin's Pasadena Store

Main Room on Colorado Street Near the Entrance of Maryland Hotel

The show rooms of Cannell and Chaffin, Inc., recently opened in the Hotel Maryland as a branch of their well-known Los Angeles establishment, is proving an attraction to Pasadenans seeking the unusual in antique and modern furniture, paintings, etchings, porcelains, and glass, from England, France, Italy and Spain

A complete decorative service is at the disposal of those desiring assistance in furnishing a new home—a wide range of domestic and European fabrics being a feature in this connection. Here can be found not only the essential pieces, but also the smaller decorative accessories which are necessary to make a house a livable home

ON THE SEVENTEEN MILE DRIVE NEAR PEBBLE BEACH. THE FAMOUS CYPRESS TREES

THE SHORE OF PEBBLE BEACH. POINT LOBOS IN THE DISTANCE AND WIND BLOWN TREES ABOVE

A GLIMPSE OF OLD MONTEREY

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

THE "Monterey Peninsula Communities," whatever that may be,—and it is hoped it is not commercial—is putting out a folder, describing this small section as the "circle of enchantment". For once in California a community is saying something about itself that no one will dispute. It is true indeed that he who goes to this peninsula to work or play or merely exist falls at once under a spell so strong that he never wants to leave, and surely enchantment is just the word to describe this state of mind. There is everything here in the way of beautiful scenery for him to see; and every kind of sport for his diversion; and any number of places for him to stay, depending on the sort of company he likes to keep.

The person who loves the distractions of gay and fashionable society, with chances for continual recreation at close quarters, takes one look and decides wisely that Pebble Beach is the very place for him. For here the affluent and ultra dwell in the modern version of marble palaces, which are plastered residences equipped with every known device for making life comfortable and luxurious. No precious time is lost in Pebble Beach; there is something doing every minute of the day. The golfer may pursue his favorite pastime on a course with marvelously beautiful vistas over piney heights and rocky shore line, so entrancing to the eye that one wonders how such amazing scores can ever happen. The lover of horseback riding can wander over miles and miles of trails through a forest, not so long ago the haunt of savage beasts, and in which even now, despite encroaching civilization, a variety of wild creatures may be encountered. Carmel-by-the-Sea is the very antithesis of Pebble Beach, near which it lies. It will be chosen by him who likes simplicity and unconventional surroundings, who prefers to dwell in an unpretentious home, among artistic people; for Carmel is the Greenwich Village of the peninsula. Nearly everybody who lives in this picturesque resort has done something in some line of art, or is trying to, or at least admires what other folks have done, and among them all are some famous people. The streets wander unpaved, up and down the little hills, over sand dunes amidst scrubby pines, in the most aimless manner, producing a somewhat higgledy-piggledy effect. But never mind, there is here a splendid beach, the very finest to be found in this "circle of enchantment."

The practical soul who wants to be virtuous and happy, and in the meantime turn an honest penny in the typical American bustling and hustling way is advised to select Pacific Grove for his abode. This highly respectable community attends to the financial and commercial affairs for the whole locality, with efficiency and zeal, besides indulging in aspirations along its own peculiar line. For Pacific Grove is in most respects a sinless town, and thus furnishes an ideal center for educational and religious conventions.

Such marvelous scenic effects meet one's view at every turn on this glorious peninsula, that a person is apt to be a continual exclamation point of wonder and delight. But he who comes to Carmel Highlands, very likely will be too overcome for any kind of speech at all. Here the spectacle is utterly sublime, with lofty precipitous jagged crags rising abruptly from the sea, to meet almost vertical pine clad heights. It might seem an impossibility to find a level site large enough for building anywhere in this locality, yet it has been done, and attractive homes scattered here and there, apparently perching on the edge of nothing, seem to fit their surroundings in a most harmonious way. These are the homes of some more artistic people, quiet, famous, and conservative, who wish for a refuge far from the maddening crowd, in which they may work undisturbed by any distracting worldly influence. If anyone could do anything at all, surely this magnificent grandeur would drive him on to wonderful achievements.

THE HOME OF MARCY WOODS, PAINTER. THE TILES ON THIS DELIGHTFUL OLD ADOBE WERE BROUGHT FROM GENERAL VALLEJO'S HOME IN JOLON

AN ADOBE IN OLD MONTEREY, AT THE CORNER OF POLK AND HARTMAN STREETS, DATED 1846. NOW OWNED BY MRS. GRAGY

But for him who revels in the charm and quaint atmosphere of a place which has seen the romance of the past, there is Monterey, after all the reason for all the "communities." Rambling over the low hills above the cerulean bay, this delightful hamlet, seems to wear an aspect as inscrutable and elusive as the smile which Leonardo painted on his Mona Lisa's face. And Monterey has plenty of reasons for this air of mystery and self satisfaction, since it has a thrilling background of historical and romantic episodes, of a kaleidoscopic variety, to charm the most confirmed specialist in matters of antiquity. If these hills could talk, they might describe a Spanish galleon, which came like a moving castle into this bay in the fifteen hundreds; and that seems long, long ago, when it is recalled that then Queen Elizabeth was ruling England, and one of Catherine de Medici's brood was still upon the throne of France. Moreover before the Pilgrims even knew there was a Plymouth Rock, or the English settlers had thought of James-

(Continued on Page 29)

THE REEFS ALONG THAT PART OF THE SEVENTEEN MILE DRIVE WHERE ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON WANDERED AND OBTAINED MATERIAL

THE SANDDUNES OF MONTEREY AND THE CYPRESS TREES. HERE STEVENSON FOUND INSPIRATION FOR MANY OF THE SCENES IN TREASURE ISLAND

PREPARING FOR THE GARDEN CLUB'S COMING VISIT

THE Garden Club of America has announced its spring meeting in Santa Barbara and California as a whole is up on its toes.

Santa Barbara will be ready for its April visitors. Planting of wild flowers (let us hope in their own special habitat) and the hurrying of reconstruction are going on hand in hand.

The notable gardens of Santa Barbara will keep open house for the delegates and the great seed farms thereabouts will find a new fame.

But California is, when left unmolested, a great natural garden and those who love her best will continue to labor and plan that every new citizen who has leisure enough to garden in our "glorious climate" is rapidly made familiar with its more subtle beauties which are apt to be overlooked by those who have never lived in a two-season land.

The Plans and Planting Committee of the Santa Barbara Community Arts Association has already done a fine piece of work with the school children's gardens on the west side of town. The Garden Club is well prepared to play the part of hostess, as will the Garden Clubs of San Diego and Pasadena during the days allotted to them.

In the School of Arts, suported by the Community Arts Association at Santa Barbara, a new course in Practical Gardening has been established. Mr. Lockwood de Forest, Jr., is the instructor. This course comprises twenty lessons with lectures, demonstrations and visits to gardens. It is so arranged that individual lectures may be attended by those who cannot take the whole course. Meetings are at the school every Wednesday at 10 a. m.

THE Biltmore is announced for Santa Barbara. Mr. B. F. Kerr, who took the initiative and interviewed the Biltmore management in New York has shown his faith in the future of Santa Barbara; and the directors of the enterprise are wise in following this lead. Overlooking the water front and the bathing beaches for miles, this hotel, managed by the most successful hotel organization in the country, will offer every interest known to tourists and will command a superb view of harbor, channel islands, shore line and mountains. In Santa Barbara certainly, "Beauty pays."

THE GARDEN OF L. DE FOREST, SANTA BARBARA. LOCKWOOD DE FOREST, JR., LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT. THIS DELIGHTFUL BIT OF CALIFORNIA WOODLAND WAS ALL DELIBERATELY PLANTED, EVEN THE STONES WERE MOVED IN. IT COULD BE THE JOYFUL GARDEN OF ANYONE WHO LOVES CALIFORNIA'S NATIVE PLANTS IN THEIR OWN HABITAT

UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST

DURING California's spring months of November, December, January, February, March and April, and May (if the rains are late) it does not matter much whether one motors up The Valley and down The Coast or down The Valley and up The Coast. The main object of those who want to tour California is to get a comprehensive idea of this state as an entity, and this is best and most easily obtained by going up one way and down the other.

After the first rains in November or December, the hills turn green, the wild flowers begin thir seasonal procession in the north and follow down south as the rains become more frequent in the arid sections.

If the year is especially rich in rain the wild flowers of the desert will be worth a special trip to see. This year the rain came early and now the wild verbena has clothed the desert with pink.

During the Fall months of June, July, August, September and October, and sometimes in the South, November, the rains cease. Often in May the hills begin to turn yellow and a beautiful shaggy brown where the wild plants have been left to grow. Hay is harvested early in the little valleys and cattle are driven up higher into richer meadows where the grass is long and luscious, fed by the snows of our high Sierras.

In the dry season, composed of the months known as Summer and Autumn in climates having four season, the trip around the thousand mile loop of California's great Valley and Coast Range should be made up the San Joaquin and Sacramento Valleys and down the Coast highway from Monterey. In these months when all California goes camping or seeks a beach cottage on the shore, the direction of travel has a very definite reason. The breeze from San Francisco Bay blowing into the interior of the state and carrying bountiful coolness of a San Francisco August through the Straits of Carquinas meets the traveller on his tour north and keeps down his temperature in the warmest days. Cool nights in California are the rule in every part of the year excepting in the upper Sacramento Valley and in other interior sections of the state.

Down the entire coast it is always cool and comfortable; and life is vivacious or serene as the shore faces west or south.

On the train now as I write, on December 11th, we are passing through a little valley some distance from the coast of Ventura County. Men are plowing the fields. The hills are green beneath their border of evergreen oaks and in a little town through which the train is running slowly, two neighbors chat over their washtubs which they have moved out near the clotheslines in their sunny backyards.

As I left El Encanto, set so alluringly on Mission Ridge above the enticing town of Santa Barbara, the hotel teemed with tourists' just come. Landing from Holland-American liner at San Pedro, many travelers had motored up to El Encanto and others had come by Southern Pacific lines from the storm-swept Middle East.

One youthful enthusiast, long past fifty, full-chested and sombrero-crowned, had been for a saunter around the lily pool and pergola before breakfast. Standing in the sparkling sunlight and breathing deep the elixir of Santa Barbara's salubrious air, he looked out over the quiescent sea and the picturesque town at his feet, then turned to his host and said in a low voice but with reverence and conviction, "I believe God lives somewhere around here!"

Santa Barbara grows more and more into the semblance of one great garden dotted on hillside and mesa with picturesque white-walled, red-tiled little houses where everyone may live and enjoy an interesting life. Hostess by inheritance and disposition is Santa Barbara; and now that her house is set in order and her guest rooms are filling, talk of a beautiful new hotel out on the point above the proposed break-water and yacht harbor has taken on form and verity.

NANCY HIGHLAND, OWNED BY MISS MAUDE BANKS OF COVINA: GENERALLY CONSIDERED THE OUTSTANDING THREE-GAITED HORSE OF AMERICA

ELIZABETH GREIS, OWNED BY MR. W. W. MINES OF ALTADENA: A CONSISTENT BLUE RIBBON WINNER IN FINE HARNESS AND MODEL CLASSES

HORSES AND HORSE SHOWS IN THE WEST

AMONG other delightful things to be provided by the new year, including much rain, and more and added prosperity, is the fifth annual horse show, to be held as in the past seasons, in the Auditorium of the Ambassador hotel, Los Angeles, February 8-13.

With each year adding to the ever increasing interest in riding, and in knowledge of the points, conformation and gaits of a horse, so each year brings a more enlightened and better informed spectator to the horse shows.

The shows are always distinctive events, bringing socially many functions in its train and fostering brilliant costuming, but the zest is by no means confined to the boxes. A fair proportion of the audience is well informed as to the attainments of the various horses, and able to judge fairly accurately as to the merits of a new comer.

While the visiting public enjoys the atmosphere, the surroundings, the touch of excitement provided by the beautiful animals and their performance in the ring, no one gives a thought to the amount of detail work involved in securing the proper entries and eliminating the undesirables, thus providing a show in every way a credit to the Association of American Horse Shows, Inc. All past shows add to the prestige of the present organization and lessen the preliminary work but intensive work on a show to be given in February really begins in the previous October. Letters are mailed to long lists of owners and interested persons, requesting all information that may add to the show, and in order that only the finest horses may be shown.

The organization, now known as the Los Angeles National Horse Show, Inc., justly feels particularly indebted to the retiring president, Marco H. Hellman, for his untiring efforts in behalf of better shows and for his constant support in the early days of the shows; in fact to him is due the credit that a great horse show is now possible in Los Angeles. While Mr. Hellman felt it necessary to resign the presidency, he is still Chairman of the Executive Committee and gives much of his time to this work. In order to make a fairer division of the many duties entailed the directorate has been doubled, now numbering thirty-five.

One of the most necessary items to be included in the preparations for the show is the compilation of the prize lists. For the coming show, for instance, which will run six nights and probably three matinees there will be one hundred and five classes, with cash prizes to aggregate in excess of $30,000, exclusive of trophies. There will be championship stakes of $1000 each in the roadsters, fine harness, harness ponies and stock horse classes; and a championship stake of $1500 for heavy harness horses. In the three-gaited and five-gaited saddle horse classes, always of the greatest interest to the audience, and in the hunters and jumpers classes, where the admiration is always clearly expressed, there will be a series of three $500 stake events culminating in a $2000 stake in each of these three divisions. Among the events introduced this year for the first time there will be a $500 stake for Shetland ponies; a stake of $500 for stallions where formerly both stallions and geldings were combined in one event; a junior five-gaited stake of $500 for horses foaled since January, 1921; a championship class for polo ponies with handsome trophies donated by Mr. Carleton F. Burke; championship model classes for each of the seven principal types of horses; and also two championship breeding classes for stallions and mares. The prizes in the seven championship model classes and in the two breeding classes will be magnificent cups donated by distinguished citizens of the United States.

One of the most enthusiastically received events at the 1925 show was the awarding of the grand championship cup.

Last year this cup went to Elizabeth Greis, a grand-daughter of the celebrated Rex McDonald, bred in Missouri, owner, William W. Mines, Altadena, California. Winner of approximately thirty-five Blue Ribbons throughout the East, prior to 1925. Winner of the following Blue Ribbons in 1925: Los Angeles National Horse Show: Fine Harness stake. Also winner of the Grand Championship and the Reginald C. Vanderbilt Cup. Pomona, California: Fine Harness stake. Kansas National Horse Show, Wichita: Fine Harness Stake. First in the Model Class. American Royal Horse Show, Kansas City: Fine Harness Class and first in the Model Class. National Horse Show, New York: Fine Harness Class. At the International Horse Show, Chicago: Prevented by serious illness from showing in the Fine Harness Class.

EASTER STAR, OWNED BY MR. MARCO H. HELLMAN, OF LOS ANGELES; ONE OF THE GREATEST FIVE-GATED HORSES IN AMERICA

The Show Ring records of some of the other notable horses to be entered are as follows: Easter Star, owned by Marco H. Hellman, Los Angeles. Twice winner of the $10,000 Louisville five-gaited stake. On his trip East under the management of Roy L. Davis of Bel-Air Stables, he won at the Kansas National, at Wichita, Kansas, the five-gaited gelding class and the $1,000 five-gaited stake. At the American Royal, at Kansas City, he won the five-gaited gelding class. At the National, in New York, he won the five-gaited class, and the $1,000 five-gaited stake. He is one of the greatest five-gaited horses in America.

(Continued on Page 32)

THE PRIEST IN COSTUME DESIGNED WITH SKILL

THE CHORUS IN A MORE CHEERFUL MOOD

THE CHORUS RECIPIENT AND YET SLY

THE JAPANESE NOH PLAYERS

DURING the summer of 1925 the Gloucester Players, an experimentalist group gave a Japanese Noh play, "The Cherry Blossom River." The play was an adaptation made by Colin Campbell Clements, now director of the Community Arts Players of Santa Barbara, and was produced under his direction with the assistance of Mlle. Jacqueline Mellor, of the Dalcroze school, with special masks by Hardie Hunter Albright.

The Japanese Noh play has its sources in the Shinto god dance, in the warrior court dance and the Buddhist sacred pantomine. As the dance was modified in a later period, lovers of poetry began to add poetical comment, and the next step was the addition of a text for the chorus to sing.

Early in the fifteenth century, the Japanese drama took on a psychologic breadth and expanded.

The beauty and power of the Noh lie in the concentration. All elements unite to give a single impression. The emotion is drawn to the idea rather than to a personality. The solo parts express great types of human character such as brotherly love, filial love, or the sorrow of unrequited love. The types of character are made especially vivid by means of masks. Spirits, women, and old men wear masks; other human beings do not. The carefully trained actors are given a moral discipline. They are trained to revere the profession, to feel the privilege of impersonating the hero.

Through the abstraction of the conventionalized costumes, settings, chants, and masks, the Japanese Noh seem to have something peculiar to give the audience. An atmosphere that is more than human is created and even an occidental audience, seeing the play for the first time, is strangely moved.

"The Cherry Blossom River" was voted the most striking and best liked play put on by the Gloucester Players in the summer.

THE COLOR PLATES

Our cover plates for January are loaned by the Stendahl Galleries, Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles. We are especially happy in having them this month to further illustrate the work of our National Academician, Wm. Wendt.

A NEW VENTURE FOR STUDENTS OF THE DRAMA

A Word from the Preliminary Organizing Committee

THE fortunate presence of the Artist-Director, Maurice Browne, in Los Angeles, and the experience of a small group of students of acting who worked under him during the last few months has led to a project to organize an independent group of student players for study and production under his direction during the next twelve weeks, with a view toward possible resumption after Mr. Browne's contemplated summer trip to England and the continent.

The proposed plan offers three-fold opportunity: Participation in plays under Mr. Browne's immediate direction; independent rehearsals in voluntary groups, with the privilege of review by Mr. Browne and the possibility of acceptance for further rehearsal and production by him if warranted; and instruction both in direction and in acting through observing rehearsals, hearing criticisms and lectures, and attending performances.

Three degrees of membership, not mutually exclusive, are contemplated: Associate, Semi-Active, and Active. Active membership pertains to all who are cast for roles. Semi-Active members comprise such as are cast for supernumerary parts. Associate membership is to be held by those who either cannot give as much time as the Active membership will require, or are waiting to be cast for parts. Such members will be privileged and invited to attend rehearsals, of which they will be notified from time to time; to hear criticisms and occasional lectures; to participate in rehearsals under their own initiative and leadership, with the privilege of one review by Mr. Browne; to attend public performances free of charge; and to compete for membership in the Active group.

The scale of costs tentatively proposed includes four items: A five dollar Registration fee and an Associate membership charge of ten dollars payable by all; to which Semi-Active members must add ten dollars and Active members twenty-five. There will thus be a minimum total fee of fifteen dollars, payable by all members, twenty-five dollars for Semi-Active members and forty for Active members for the entire period of twelve weeks.

A second meeting of those interested in joining a group with plans substantially as outlined, but subject to any desired modification before adoption, is to be held at the Denishawn Studios, 932 South Grand Avenue on Monday evening, January 4th, at seven-thirty o'clock. Please invite others.

THE MOTHER IN "CHERRY BLOSSOM RIVER," A NOH PLAY ADAPTED BY COLIN CAMPBELL CLEMENTS, NOW DIRECTOR OF THE LOBERA THEATER FOR THE SANTA BARBARA COMMUNITY ARTS ASSOCIATION

SOUTHLAND

PEACE

A Chant Royal By CLARENCE URMY

LEND ME YOUR LYRE, APOLLO, WHILE I PLEAD
WITH GODS AND GODDESSES THAT THEY MAY GUIDE
A TIMID BARQUE, IN ANXIOUS HOUR OF NEED,
ACROSS CHANT ROYAL'S WAVE-ENTANGLED TIDE.
FAITH'S MYSTIC, PURPLE-VEILED HORIZONS HOLD
THE ISLES OF CALM SET IN A SEA OF GOLD,
AND I, EVANGEL-VOYAGER, ARRAYED
IN PLEASING VESTURE FASHIONED TO PERSUADE
ALL MEN TO VENTURE THITHER, WAIT THE NOD
OF FORTUNE, THIS THE CRY OF MY CRUSADE:
"TO BE AT PEACE, ACQUAINT THYSELF WITH GOD."

UNRIGHTEOUS WAR HAS MADE THE WORLD'S HEART BLEED:
THE SOUL OF EARTH IN AGONY HAS CRIED
AGAINST THE ANGER, CRUELTY AND GREED
OF DESPOTISM, SELFISHNESS AND PRIDE.
IN CEASELESS TERROR DIRE, DARK YEARS HAVE ROLLED AND SWEPT GREAT MULTITUDES TO NAMELESS MOLD; AND NOW, A RIGHTEOUS VICTORY HAS STAYED
THE WRATH OF BUTCHERY; SHEATED IS THE BLADE
AND STILLED THE BURST OF SHELL WITH THUNDER SHOD;
NOW, ON SONG'S FOND LIP IS THIS GOSPEL LAID:
"TO BE AT PEACE, ACQUAINT THYSELF WITH GOD."

OUR COUNTRY HEARD THE CALL TO FIGHT, TO FEED; FOR YOUNG AND ILL AND HOMELESS TO PROVIDE—
HOW SWIFTLY FELL THE BARS OF CASTE AND CREED,
HOW QUICKLY WERE THOSE FAR CALLS SATISFIED.
MEN, MONEY, FOOD — NO GIFT BEGRUDGED OR DOLED;
LONG WILL OUR AID IN STORY BE RETOLD.
OUR NATION IN THE BALANCE HAS BEEN WEIGHED
AND FOUND NOT WANTING. LET US NOT UPBRAID
THE VANQUISHED, BUT ACROSS THE BATTLE SOD
LET THIS MOMENTOUS MESSAGE BE CONVEYED:
"TO BE AT PEACE, ACQUAINT THYSELF WITH GOD."

DOMESTIC HEARTH, HOME TIES — WITH WHAT GREAT SPEED
TO THESE CAME VIOLENCE UNPROPHESIED —
IN UNEXPECTED PATHS WAR'S DICTATES LEAD
WITH FIRM COMMANDS THAT WILL NOT BE DENIED.
AND NOW THE CLOCK HAS STRUCK; HATE IS CONTROLLED,
THOUGH FAR-OFF FIELDS BRAVE MARTYR-MEN ENFOLD.
BRUSH TEARS AWAY. FOR THEM, BEYOND THE SHADE,
IS FAR MORE FASCINATING WORK DISPLAYED.
ALL SPURNED THE HAMPERING OF MORTAL CLOD;
BE GLAD WITH THEM. CALL THIS THOUGHT TO THINE AID:
"TO BE AT PEACE, ACQUAINT THYSELF WITH GOD."

WHAT RECOMPENSE FOR ALL THIS WOE? WHAT MEED
FOR ACHING HEARTS WITH BLOOD OF BATTLE DYED?
OUT OF SUCH HARVEST THERE MUST COME A SEED
OF HEALING PLANT WHOSE FLOWER SHALL BLOOM EARTH-WIDE.
HEARTS THAT WERE UNRESPONSIVE, LUKEWARM, COLD,
SHALL LEAP TO ACTION, PANOPLIED AND BOLD;
HEARTS THAT ALREADY WERE BY SERVICE SWAYED
SHALL MOUNT NEW HEIGHTS, UNDAUNTED, UNAFRAID;
NONE SHALL BE FEARFUL OF WAR'S IRON ROD —
ALL STRIFE MUST END, IF THIS WORD BE OBEYED:
"TO BE AT PEACE, ACQUAINT THYSELF WITH GOD."

ENVOY

HAIL, WORLD AND NATION, HOMES AND HEARTS, FAST FADE
WAR'S BLACK CLOUDS, FREEDOM'S FINAL DEBT IS PAID.
TRANQUILITY SHALL WALK WHERE MADNESS TROD.
TRUTH, CARVE THIS TEXT HIGH ON LIFE'S COLONNADE:
"TO BE AT PEACE, ACQUAINT THYSELF WITH GOD."

Awarded First Prize in the Peace Poem Contest
Conducted by the San Francisco Chronicle, 1918

Copyright, 1918, by Clarence Urmy

This Peace Poem by Clarence Thomas Urmy, California's first-born among American poets, is here printed by request of those who wish to broadcast it in the cause of world peace. It has been called one of the most perfect examples of the Chant Royal form ever written. Reprints on cards may be obtained at any of the book shops, California Southland or, Miss M. H. McCoy, Mission Inn, Riverside.

The Year of Our Lord Nineteen Hundred Twenty-six

ONCE upon a time it was the custom to review the past year and, taking account of stock, to make New Year's resolutions to succeed or fail within the year to come. Looking over the intensively and rapidly populated field of our Southland counties may we not perform this commendable action for the section as a whole and give in a nutshell that popular impression so voluminously exploited by our purveyors and concoctors of "news."

The southern end of the great State of California is not a separate entity, excepting in so far as it is a state of mind. Its citizens have not been here long enough to become acquainted with the wide stretches of the state's great valleys or the upland meadows of its immense mountain territory reaching north and then west to enclose the inhabited level land along a thousand miles of interesting coast. That part of the state which is south of Santa Barbara is gradually coming to think in terms of the whole state. This is especially true of the new generation, born on this coast and calling Los Angeles its "home town." They realize that while Los Angeles shares with the rest of the coast that marvelous variety and climate which is characteristic of the islands and shore of the Pacific, that climate is not a product of Los Angeles, but rather is Los Angeles, in its rapid development, a product of the climate —a young, giant child of California and the virile Middle West.

In taking account of stock, therefore, we must first learn of our inheritance, and that will make us humble.

Our blessings and the gifts bestowed on all Californians alike imply our ability to perform the great duties which loom before us as citizens of a nation whose western representatives we are. If we can still find time during the coming year to do more than the work which lies nearest us in conquering fire and flood, and in building well and beautifully for posterity, we have wide interests to develop in Pacific waters that will demand that we keep our vision clear and keen. The time has truly come when Los Angeles has found herself, and instead of seeking rivals she will now make New Year's resolutions to find out what it means to be a California city and then take her place among maturer centers making worthy contributions to the reputation of the state as well as the whole nation.

OPINION

A DULL season to me has no reference to real estate or lack of tourists; it is the time when birds are few and quiet. So rare is a bird song these days that the least twitter of a Linnet calls me to the window. Some December days there was not even a Linnet on the feeding shelf and three at one time seemed like a party. It is said that the little Phalarope lady is the only female bird who does the courting and carries women's rights to the extreme of having her mate do the incubating and forage for the family. But certainly the female Linnet is boss at the table and orders the rosy lords to begone. Her table manners do not bespeak a very amiable disposition and she has none of the Oriental notion that the mate should be served first. The males bear them no malice and their happy morning chatter is a pleasant way to be wakened.

As if to welcome me back from the East the Mocker mounted his high singing perch. The mountains had looked bare, the fields dry and everything dusty but that song made everything all right. I have heard him remonstrating about cats and Bluejays and practising a bit in hiding but he hasn't been on the concert stage again. The rains will be doubly welcome because they will put songs into the throats of our birds. It is a good thing that they are silent for a time lest we take their free music as a matter of course and under-value the morning concerts which help us to start the day with good cheer and gratitude.

The Bluejays, whose virtues are only feather deep, having no young birds or eggs or soft-shelled walnuts, are feasting on persimmons. The color combination does give one a thrill. A word to the wise is not sufficient! As I succeeded in driving one out of the tree a Mocker flew in plainly looking "Thank you! I would like a taste myself." Bird lovers are going to have murder in their hearts unless the surplus Jays die a natural death without delay.

The Robins came down very early this year—the first of November—and have so far forgotten the season, as to sing. How can any one be expected to remember the season with such summer-like weather. They perch on the tall tree tops and go screaming with delight over our gardens, being quite particular on which lawns they settle. One Robin has grown tame enough to look into the kitchen door when his breakfast is not put out. Many of them spend the summer in the Yosemite where they are very tame, even eating from the hand. Some campers put nesting material on their tent which was quickly woven and plastered together on an overhanging limb. The robin which did all this work had no mate and after days of sitting on the nest and singing, no mate came and the home was deserted. Nests have been done over and used again for four seasons. This may be one difference between eastern and western Robins for the Robins on my farm build three new nests in one season.

The Song Sparrow—always with us—is tuning up and singing not only more often but with more spirit, and the lady goes about chuckling to herself. The vicinity of Chatsworth Lake is a good place for those who wish to study Sparrows at this season. Golden Crowns may be found in the foothills and in the parks where there is plenty of cover. The Fox Sparrows, easily distinguished from other sparrows by their speckled breasts, might be taken for Thrushes scratching under the bushes. They give a vigorous hop with both feet, scattering the crackling leaves, but they lack the "wing twinkle" and blinking eye which distinguish a Thrush. The Lincoln Sparrow has a warbler-taste for willows and his song, resembling the Purple Finch's, makes the search for him worth while. I found a company of seven Chipping Sparrows pasturing on a lawn. The Large Billed Sparrow keeps near water. The gray Juncos, with their monk's hoods, should be called the Nervous Sparrows since they feed close together in flocks and all fly off over nothing, flashing the white of their lateral tail feathers. The Vesper Sparrow, with white lateral tail feathers also, is one of the winter residents. In Pennsylvania we couldn't go to bed without his summer vesper service. The Gamble Sparrows with their lovely white crowns are everywhere, praise God! We couldn't have too many. He is of the earth always scratching in the leaves and more of a pal but less poetic than his cousin, the White Throated Sparrow, which is rare in California. It is a real Christmas present to find one in Whittier this season. Whittier is double starred again in having some Kentucky Cardinals. There were three mature birds there last year and one pair nested twice which should double the number. They feed in some of the farm yards.

There was a thriller for me one morning as I was passing a block recently plowed, the dirt being well sprinkled with white stones. The earth and stones suddenly became animated and about fifty Kildeer began lifting their wings as if doing their daily dozen. Later they were snoozing, looking like so many clods of earth, until a heavy truck went by when they all skated a few feet and settled for another nap. The Kildeer is wise in getting used to dry places against the time when all our lakes and marshes will be drained and subdivided.

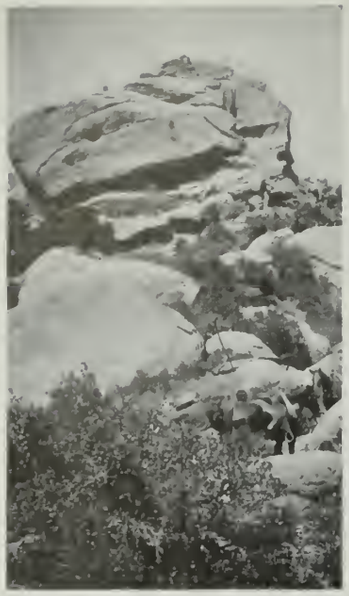
Desert Rain

By Marie Honeycutt Hinrichs

The rain has come!
The grateful sand, and baking clay
Drink eagerly.
The patter of the drops that strike
The broad palm leaves
In the oasis sounds like music
Out of Heaven;
The little rings of dust about
The earliest drops
Blend into a softened cloak
That wraps the world
In moisture; and the first sweet smell
Of dampened earth
Greets dripping sage and cactus.

O thirsty land!
The palm holds up its many fingered hands
In gratitude for rain.

Shores of lake and grassy plain
And wooded hill
Know not the burning thirst
Of blazing days,
Nor how the desert reaches out and grasps
The cup and drains,
All thankfulness, the blessed winter rains.



The Answer of Christmas

(From a selection by Anne C. E. Allinson in the leaflet of The Class in Personal Religion, St. Paul's, Boston)

FROM the cross-currents of opinion there floods in this universal affirmation of the day: "Cast out fear!" Then the sick will be well, the weak strong: then power will be set free, hidden capacity will come into play: then there will be a new life for each of us, a life as good and beautiful as it will be true. But how—how?

Christmas comes. Its answer peals above our clamorous surmises. A faith is born; perfect love casteth out fear. It is no wonder that of that birth poets and painters have made an imperishable story by associating with it many varying kinds of love. The friendly helpfulness of the busy innkeeper. The mother and her child. The kind, serviceable animals. The shepherds loving peace and goodwill. The wise men turning from knowledge to adore wisdom. For all loves that give instead of grasp celebrate the birth of a Way of life in which fear becomes as unreal as darkness when the sun shines.

Christmas comes. The Light of the world is ours.

GENTLE ART OF TRAIL RIDING

EXPERIENCES IN OUR CALIFORNIA HILLS

By MARY NORDHOFF

EVERY VARIETY OF BEAUTY MAY BE FOUND IN THE FOOTHILL TRAILS, HUGE ROCKS, TALL PINES, AND THICK UNDERGROWTH.

THE foothills of Santa Barbara offer a variety of trails, and a novice in the gentle art of trail-riding can there break himself in with a half day's ride or a week's trip. From the coast these hills look barren enough, uninteresting save for beauty of line and the color which is their's at sunrise or sunset. One may prowl about for some time convinced that distance lends enchantment and with no desire to lessen the distance. There is always the beach; the riding there, at low tide, is very good, though one can no longer go from Carpinteria to Gaviota as in days gone by. There are bridle paths through the Gillespie, Knapp, Armour, Underhill and other estates; these the owners very kindly leave open to the riding public, but the stretches of paved road one must traverse on the way, the interminable motors make such riding a mixed pleasure. Sooner or later one must take to the trails. When this state of mind has been reached it is best to forget a favorite mount unless he is familiar with, and has a taste for, crawling up and down small mountains, over rocks and stones and through shale. Drew, my companion's first choice, let us know all too clearly that he disapproved of heights and depths; this mood alternated with a flippant disregard of the trail's narrowness. If the animal knew more about the country than I did, he was an excellent actor. When the trail disappeared for a few yards, and shale took its place, Drew's revolt fired even my philosophic mare; without spurs, we were forced to make a dash through the shale on foot, dragging a horse each behind us. It is quite impossible to keep the trails clear of shale, and a sedate and handy horse on the small side adds to one's peace and leaves time for the views, which are magnificent.

The Montecito Riding School keeps a number of good trail horses. They had at one time a gray mare familiar to the point of ennui with trail etiquette. She would dash at and up a sliding bank of shale, put on the brakes and coast down upon the trail where next it came to life.

A two or three hours' ride up the San Ysidro and to the left along the Hot and Cold Springs trail makes a good introduction to the country. The trees in the canyons are beautiful, and the sound of running water in this dry land gets its full value. The birds and the gray squirrels with their prodigious leaps and air of business, break through the silence of these hills. The trail winds slowly up from the life and coolness of the canyon to the bare ridge, where one gets a magnificent view of the ocean, the islands and the coast. Another favorite is the half day's trip to Mono Flats and Blue Canyon. The Deane School, the Secretary of the Riding and Trails Association, and others have built cabins by the river here. The Flats are near the coast, yet wild enough to make picnics and week-end trips worthwhile. Quail and deer are fairly plentiful and one whose word must not be doubted came across bear tracks not long ago, large enough to belong to the last of the grizzlies. The three days ride to Big Pine, past Zaca Lake into Sisquoc canyon and Manzana is well worth while and should distract even the exiled fox-hunter from his boredom.

TRAILS FOLLOW THE SLOPES OF MATILIJA CANYON FROM COOL DEPTHS TO BARE HEIGHTS

While such a country may be tame when compared with the Rockies, and one fond of "The Chase" may find trail riding dull, there is a great variety of beauty in these foothills. When it comes to excitement, those who least expect it may get a fall from the trail to the canyon below. I heard of one rider who knew the trails as well as her horse, and both had been traveling them for some years. Without a thought, my friend let "Kate" pick her own way, around instead of over a boulder. The edge of the trail gave way, and the two of them vanished. After a bit, the rider managed to get free, and clambered back to the trail; every lunge the horse made took her farther down instead of up the hillside, until at last she came to roost in a tree. It took three people several hours to get her out, and her owner was a good deal more than stiff for a week.

Two young Easterners made a sensation sometime ago. At least, they are still mentioned as a caution to the ignorant. One of the two managed to excite her horse, who reared and went over the trail's edge; fortunately the girl came off, and after rolling a few hundred yards managed to wedge herself against a cactus. While a cactus is not comfortable, this one saved her from falling over the edge of a small cliff, and there she clung until her companion could ride to San Ysidro and back with help. Such incidents are rare enough; for the most part the trails are safer riding than paved roads.

Several members of the Riding and Trails Association have felt the need of more bridle paths in and about Montecito. They have guaranteed the funds, and the association hopes in time to provide bridle paths along the highway and paved roads of this district. It would certainly be a help—the trails are hard on a good horse, though they may have been graded and cleared as well as possible, and the back country is too hot, in summer, for pleasure.

THE SWAYING GARDENS OF PASADENA'S TOURNAMENT

The dominant note of the Rose Tourney of this year was the emphasis of the contrast between the first entries and those of today, because of the historical interest, and to this end many types of horse drawn vehicles from the pleasant days of the 'eighties and early 'nineties were entered. Also the old bicycles, with the sky scraping big wheel, and a tiny one for balance. The old Roman chariots were given a prominent place as in the long past years the chariot races followed the pageant as does football today.

Beyond everything else that a lover of the Pageant cherishes is the fact that from the beginning when Dr. Francis F. Rowland and Mr. Charles Frederick Holder, suggested and assisted in working out the first event, only fresh flowers have been used on every entry. It is not the quantity of blooms used that matters, but the manner in which they are blended. By this careful blending not only will each float be the beautiful thing desired, but the pageant itself will become a harmonizing whole. The first tournament was held as a fiesta for Pasadenans only, but its fame spread until now all the world comes, and the entries embrace not only the neighboring towns but the Coast.

THE 1926 TOURNAMENT BROUGHT BACK MANY OLD CARRIAGES, FILLED WITH LOVELY LADIES IN GOWNS OF OTHER DAYS, OF RICHEST SATINS AND LACES, AND EQUIPAGES GRAND WITH COACHMAN AND ATTENDANT FOOTMAN IN LIVERY, ALSO AN ENTRY FROM THE VALLEY HUNT CLUB, BUT NOT THIS ORIGINAL OLD COACH WHICH HELD DELIGHTFUL MEMORIES FOR THE MEMBERS, AND WAS ACCLAIMED WITH PLEASURE BY THE NEIGHBORLY CROWD WHO ENJOYED THE EARLY PAGEANT.

A SANTA BARBARA SHOP FOR WOMEN OF UNIQUE SERVICE AND DISTINCTION

ONE who has discovered Santa Barbara and has solved the secret of its distinction is not surprised to find there the shop of B. F. Kerr and Company. Yet, to those who, tired of the mere size of larger places, seek a quiet but efficient service in this city of discriminating women, the first experience is filled with a growing and delightful satisfaction. Whether from New York or San Francisco, women who have taken up their residence in Santa Barbara have accepted B. F. Kerr and Company as an established part of the place, and find that the judgment behind their confidence has never been betrayed. For this woman's shop on the western coast is in as close touch with the sources of proper clothes for all occasions as is any other first-class shop in the country. Its patrons walk the streets of New York with no regrets that their wardrobe was completed before leaving home.

That such a unique service is possible on this coast can be believed only on its acceptance. So conspicuously has the far West been made the salon de refusé of manufacturers and trades people in general that many women have resolved to buy only when they are abroad. This condition has produced its own salvation. Intelligent study of the finer forms of dress and its accessories, close touch with the best designers and manufacturers, discriminating buying during leisurely trips to Eastern and European cities make possible a stock sans reproach. Upon this constantly renewed selection of desirable gowns, wraps and specialties of every season—this Santa Barbara house of B. F. Kerr and Company has built up its unique service of helping its patrons buy that which is especially suited to their needs of the moment.

That the merchant should be the trained buyer for his constituency is the conviction of the whole firm. So thoroughly does this idea permeate the place that this handsome little shop on the far Pacific coast becomes, through its service alone, an open door to the best clothes obtainable in the country.

Unique indeed is a service which turns the whole expert world of fashion like a spotlight of interest upon each customer's problem as it appears upon the scene.

To this Shop of Unique Service and Distinction, no request appears too insignificant, no detail too small; for, out of attention to minute details, perfection is accomplished; and as the most fastidious of Californians have discovered, it is worth while going to Santa Barbara just to replenish one's wardrobe at this interesting shop whose sincere purpose is "to help you buy rather than to sell you".

THE WOMEN'S APPAREL SHOP OF B. F. KERR & CO. AT STATE AND VICTORIA STREETS IN SANTA BARBARA

AN ORIGINAL CALIFORNIAN ARCHITECTURE IS BEING DEVELOPED TO ANSWER OUR NEEDS AN EXAMPLE BY WITMER AND WATSON, ARCHITECTS

Commended to the Art Study Sections, Federation of Women's Clubs of California

ANOTHER excellent bit of domestic architecture has recently been completed in Pasadena and has produced much favorable comment among architects and others interested in establishing southern California's name for beautiful houses. The house in question is that designed for Mr. and Mrs. Roger B. Emmons, by the firm of Witmer & Watson, Architects. These two capable men have a very refreshing way of taking the simplest building materials and working them into a delightful composition which, without a trace of faddishness, is yet a brand new note in domestic architecture. Much has been said and written about the need of a truly southern California style which will take the traditions of early days, mix them with a due regard for climatic conditions and modern building materials, and make of this conglomerate a creation truly indigenous. This is precisely the result which has been achieved in the Emmons house. The composition is simple and expresses the plan obviously. There is repose and dignity with an ample touch of friendliness and color in light and shadow. Another quality, resulting from a wise selection of materials, is that of texture. In recent years architects have often "gone to seed" in their efforts to obtain pleasing surfaces on walls or roofs. The effects have often been garish and banal in their condity. In the Emmons house, Witmer and Watson have given freshness and vitality to wall and roof surfaces by accepting the natural beauties inherent in the materials and using them with trained discrimination.

A PEPPER TREE AND A ROUND "STONE-TILE" TOWER BRING SECLUSION TO A DIGNIFIED ENTRANCE.

The walls are built of "Stone Tile" furnished by the Pacific Stone Tile Co., New York and Santa Anita Avenues, Pasadena.

These tile are hollow concrete blocks 3½ x 12 x 6 or 8 inches wide, They are cast by the most scientific methods and of the finest materials obtainable. They are particularly adapted to residence construction where their soft, pleasing texture is most acceptable. The hollow space in each tile makes for a very dry insulated wall. In the Emmons house the only finish is two coats of flat white paint. Inside plaster can be applied directly to Stone Tile walls without special preparation and for exterior stucco the tile form a perfect base. No special shapes are needed to turn corners or form window jambs, and where special radial tile are needed for arches or for round towers, as in the Emmons house, they are provided without extra expense. The tile have been carefully designed as to size and shape so that the mason can handle them in the easiest manner and consequently it is found that they can be used most economically and often at a lower cost than other materials.

THE ROGER B. EMMONS HOUSE, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA.

Photographs by George D. Haight.

AN ARTISTICALLY-LAYED AND BEAUTIFULLY STAINED SHINGLE ROOF HOLDS ITS OWN, EVEN IN THIS HEYDAY OF TILE POPULARITY. THESE ARE HAND-HEWN, RED CEDAR SHAKES FROM THE LONGLYFE SHINGLE COMPANY

There was a time not so long ago when a shingle roof to be "right" must be laid with edges straight and smooth, with rows evenly spaced and all as if turned out on a machine. Some one with an artist's instinct must have made a trip to the big woods of California and come back with a wonderful story of a beautiful hand-made shake roof. At any rate, the hand-split shake roof was immediately adopted and adapted to California architecture. It seems to "belong" in the same way that tile finds its natural place in our domestic work of Latin influence. The Emmons roof is an excellent example of this type of hand-split red cedar shakes. Red cedar is used in preference to redwood, as it has been found that the cedar will take the various colors in the creosote stain much better than the redwood. Then, too, the cedar when left unstained will weather to a beautiful silver grey, while the redwood turns black in weathering. Both woods are equally beautiful as to texture and both resist decay equally well. The shakes have a natural beauty even in unskilled hands, but a knowledge of their limitations and peculiarities is essential if their maximum beauty is to be brought out. The finest shakes obtainable are known as "Longlyfe Rustics." They are sold and laid in Los Angeles and vicinity by the Longlyfe Shingle Company, 2203 Santa Fe Avenue. This company furnishes and lays the shakes in one color or several, using a high grade creosote stain. Their workmen specialize in the laying of shakes, and the beautiful roof of the Emmons house is a testimony to their skill.

AN OUTDOOR LOUNGE OF COMFORT AND RETIREMENT

Every architect, yes, and he who has passed through the experience of building a home, knows that the painter can be a joy or a never-ending source of irritation. In John V. Gierding, who completed the painting contract on the Emmons house, Witmer and Watson have a real craftsman of the old school. There is no fear of dilution or use of inferior materials where Mr. Gierding is working. It would be as easy to get him to do a slipshod piece of work as it would be to get a saint to tell a lie. Only the most skillful workmen are found on Mr. Gierding's crews. Under his direction they have produced results which have added much to the reputation of the architects who seek his work.

AN EXPANSE OF WHITE WALL, WHICH THROUGH A SUBTLETY OF DESIGN AND EXECUTION, HAS LOST NONE OF ITS SOFTNESS AND CHARM. "STONE-TILE" WAS USED THROUGHOUT.—THE EMMONS HOUSE, PASADENA, WITMER AND WATSON, ARCHITECTS.

THE HOLLYWOOD BOWL

A great natural amphitheatre in which the best musicians of the world play before vast crowds; where thirty thousand democratic lovers of art rub elbows with each other and are swayed by the same common impulse.

The directors of this unique musical organization, knowing the harmony that comes of an orchestration of talents, has retained the Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles to give complete architectural service in planning the new Hollywood Bowl.

Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles

The Home of Beauty

J. H. Ramboz House, Glendora
Aleck Curlett, Architect

The happy blending of older architectural forms into a style distinctively Californian is coming more and more into vogue. We are akin to the Latin-Mediterranean countries in more ways than one. The brightness of nature's colors; the easy climate; the deep azure of the sky; the "drenching" quality of the sunlight: all these call for harmony between nature and the works of man. So it is fitting that our Homes of Beauty should be crowned with Latin Tile, which, as developed by this company, has been pronounced a real contribution to American architecture. Nothing could be more appealing than their soft rose overtone under the lovely Californian sky.

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.

Los Angeles Office: Los Feliz Boulevard and S. P. Tracks
Tropico Plant: Glendale, Los Angeles County

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A. MONTHLY BULLETIN

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH,
Editor

PLAGIARISM AS A FINE ART

The following is the second installment of a series of articles on the influence of precedent in current American architecture. The series of addresses were given by a group of noted architects at a recent convention of the American Institute of Architects and are reprinted from the proceedings of the convention. They represent widely divergent views within the profession and will be of general interest to all readers for they are the frank and often amusing statement of the architect's opinion of himself.

ADDRESS
BY MR. H. VAN BUREN MAC GONIGLE

SECOND INSTALLMENT

THERE was a moment of great promise in the history of American design when it looked as though the influence of the genius of Joseph Morrill Wells would direct American thought toward a virile and fruitful eclecticism that would lead in its turn toward an architecture we could fairly call our own. Of all his work his last was his best and ripest. It is a fabric woven of so many threads of influence, visible and invisible, tinged with the memory of so many beautiful things, so subtly and cunningly wrought, controlled by so sure a grasp upon the technique of terra cotta, brick and marble, that it became under the hand of this lamented master a new and original work of art, respecting tradition but kindling a new fire from its slumbering embers. But Wells died in the very early nineties just as the great waves of building set in, and in the rush to keep up with the demands upon the profession the photograph and the monograph began to exert their deadly, pernicious persuasion. The World's Fair in Chicago came on and turned our minds toward Greece and Rome, and another classic revival ensued. There was no time to devise new and native envelopes for the many and diverse new structures that were to spring up over night; and so began the baneful abuse of precedent which, from the expedient of busy hours became a habit, then a method, then was erected into a virtue, and here and now, after a long and prosperous career, is being basely assailed. Dear old Aunt Plagiarism! How sad it is to be betrayed by one of your old frequenters!

We architects know the reasons for our parlous state. We know how driven we are: how little time our manifold duties leave us in which to think or to invent; how often we have to take the shortest road to a result; and how easy it is to drift. We know, too, the popularity of Follow-My-Leader in our profession. We know that after the issue of every new book upon some freshly exploited corner of Europe with measured details complete, an eruption appears upon the face of American architecture just as inevitably as certain people exhibit a rash after indulgence in strawberries. Every new building, foreign or domestic, is the signal for a dozen or more illegitimate offspring with a fatal resemblance to the responsible parent. When the book on the Grand Palais was published about 1900, the facade designed by Girault, a natural development by a Frenchman of a style indigenous to France, the Louise Seize, had an immediate and immense vogue here; straightway American design displayed flat oval cartouches wherever they could be handily hung, and ropes of laurel which suddenly left the light of day and burrowed into the solid stone to ooze out below somewhere and hang limp, exhausted by labors no laurel garland is really fitted to perform.

Three or four years ago some new books on the work of the Brothers Adam appeared, work exquisite in its delicate strength and refinement, low relief in ornament and restraint in its use, a style eminently suited to the domestic scale of its period and destination. Instantly there was the usual race to use this fresh ready-made material. It was considered a triumph of genius to make your relief so very refined and flat that unless you caught it in a cross light you couldn't see it near the sidewalk; and its presence at the top of a twenty-story building was a secret shared only by the architect and the birds. With a consistency one cannot sufficiently admire, our window reveals in buildings in the New York version of the Adam Style are becoming so slight that I for one walk on the other side of the way for fear a deep breath will pull acres of plate glass down upon me.

FACADE OF THE FIRST UNIT IN THE BUSINESS CENTER OF ONE OF THE FIVE NEW TOWNS PLANNED AND NOW BEING BUILT AT PALOS VERDES, CALIFORNIA. WEBBER, STAUNTON AND SPAULDING, ARCHITECTS

And just now in New York, because presumably of the notable success of a certain splendid bank building inspired by the Romanesque of Lombardy, there are signs of a coming epidemic of the crudities and naivetes of the eighth and ninth centuries; and Christian symbols, the emblems of the four evangelists among them, adorn buildings of decidedly profane significance—which is after all a kind of naivete, isn't it? A sort of happy innocence; a don't-give-a-damnativeness that is enviable and rather charming.

Pillaging the defenceless dead is, one would think, bad enough; but what shall we say of the logical sequel, robbing the living, quite openly, without apparently any sense of its enormity, without a "by your leave or damn your soul or any other like civility"? I refer to the preposterous practice of using the several monographs that have appeared in the past few years, upon the work of living and practicing architects, as copy books in our drafting rooms.

If I had my way I should substitute for a certain unpopular amendment to the Constitution one forbidding the use of books and photographs to any architect after ten years' study of precedent and tradition in school or office.

I might go on and enumerate special examples of our favorite crime, our dearest vice, but I have said enough, I think, to indicate my meaning and your own memories will supply the omissions.

But perhaps someone is saying, "What does this fellow mean? Does he ask us to forget the past, forget the history of our race and of our art?" Ah, no! He means no such thing. He is no iconoclast. He has a whole private Pantheon of strangely assorted deities that dwell together in amity, collected in the course of what is getting to be a rather long professional life. No one believes more ardently than he in the just and true value of tradition and precedent. He believes that art must develop much as language develops. No man having something to say invents a new language to express his new thought; he uses the parts of speech familiar to us all, uses the alphabet of his race, and with these simple elements in new combinations makes us burn or shiver, tremble or exult. Each art must respect the traditions of its past and develop new things with the old sap just as new leaves grow on old trees every spring. The leaf does not despise the roots hidden in the earth over which it quivers in the light of a new day. Mass and proportion, heights and widths, walls and openings, voids and solids, mouldings and ornament, light and shade, these are the simple elements of the language of architecture, capable of infinite modulation and variety, plastic to the expression of an individual temperament or of the genius of a nation.

(To be continued)

MEETING AT THE UPLIFTERS' GROVE

THE afternoon of Saturday, December 12, was spent at the Uplifters' Ranch in Santa Monica Canyon. The occasion of the meeting was the visit to Los Angeles of the directors and president of the American Institute of Architects. About one hundred and sixty members and guests of the Southern California Chapter were present. The president of the Institute, D. Everett Waid, of New York City, the vice president, Abram Garfield of Cleveland, the following directors were present: William E. Fisher, Denver; C. C. Zantzinger, Philadelphia; William J. Sayward, Atlanta; Sylvain Schnaittacher, San Francisco; J. Monroe Hewlett, New York, and Goldwin Goldsmith of Lawrence, Kansas. Mr. E. C. Kemper, executive secretary of the Institute was also a guest.

Tables were laid under the autumn colored branches of great spreading sycamore trees near the barbecue kitchen. For the first time in several years the wives of Chapter members were present and added a friendly note which would have been sadly missed if their presence had been lacking. We have wondered a number of times (some times right out loud) why the Executive Committee of the Chapter has always been so neglectful of including the ladies at some of our functions. We know from bits of conversation we heard that afternoon that it will not be so easy in the future for us to slip away on some pleasant jaunt with our fellow Chapter members without a complete explanation to friend wife as to why and wherefore she is not being asked. And while we are on the subject of ladies, let's start a little propaganda right now to get them invited to the honor award dinner.

There were some sixty or seventy-five invited guests from among the local architects who are not members of the Chapter. It was a pleasure to have the opportunity to meet them as hosts and it is hoped that many of them will be invited to become members of the Institute. We give too little thought to the men outside whose abilities should be recognized and thereby lessen the effectiveness of the work of the Institute in improving our status as architects. The Institute will never be truly representative of the profession until a larger proportion of architects are members.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE CHAPTER

THE Annual Meeting of the Chapter was held at the University Club on Tuesday evening, December 15. The officers elected for the year 1926 are as follows: David J. Witmer, president; C. E. Norenberg, vice-president; Edgar H. Cline, secretary; Winchon L. Risley, treasurer. Delegates to the national convention which will be held in Washington, D. C., in the spring, were also appointed by ballot.

Mr. George Dahl, who held the Harvard Fellowship in Architecture for 1921 at the American Academy in Rome, was a guest of the evening. He gave a fascinating account of a trip to the forgotten Roman city of Timgad in north Africa near Algiers.

Mr. Charles H. Whitaker, Editor of the Journal of the American Institute of Architects was also present. In his quiet earnest manner he swiftly analyzed the economic and social elements which are so profoundly affecting the world today and sketched their influence upon the profession of architecture. Charles Whitaker is a rare spirit and a quiet chat in a corner with him is sure to produce some gem of thought over which one can ponder for days. His frankness and friendliness have been the inspiration of hundreds of those who are proud to call themselves his friend.

THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

420 South Spring Street, Los Angeles

OFFICERS

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH, PRESIDENT
CLIFFORD A. TRUESDELL, VICE PRESIDENT
C. R. JOHNSON, SECRETARY
PAUL R. WILLIAMS, TREASURER

DIRECTORS

JULIAN GARNSEY, DIRECTOR
J. E. STANTON, DIRECTOR
H. C. CHAMBERS, DIRECTOR

SOMETHING NEW

If any of the brothers in the fraternity have a grievance or perhaps an idea, we are going to give them a chance to get it off. Each month we are planning to devote a paragraph to a sort of Open Forum. We realize that one paragraph isn't very much room for some of the aforementioned brothers to unwind. The fellows who have been designing two-room apartments will have it all over the rest of us, for they are every day meeting and beating the problem of getting a lot into a very small space. We have decided to call this column Blah Relief, which, by the by, we think is a dern clever name. We haven't a library competition to discuss, but there is the Allied Architects and the Imperial Triumvirate, Parkinson, Martin and Austin, who are starting out boldly to bust the new City Charter. Then, too, we can always get up an argument about excavating or heraldry if nothing else better offers itself.

"THE BOSS'S BIBLE"

The December number of the Pencil Points Magazine prints pages from a booklet issued to the men in the office of H. Van Buren MacGonigle. It contains the sum of what every architect worthy of the name feels the relation between himself and his draftsmen should be. Every man in the club should read and ponder it. You will be struck with the fact that technical ability is not the important idea, but that a proper attitude of mind toward one's work and one's employer is the first essential. Every architect knows that many good men are ruined by their unwillingness or inability to co-operate. Mr. MacGonigle says in part, "Remember that there is almost always more than one solution for a problem; you may find the best or I may; whichever finds it first wins.

"I don't want to design every smallest detail. I only reserve the right to change or modify your work if it is not what I want. This fact should not make you feel helpless, discouraged or at sea. This should not make you wait for me to establish a character. . . . I want you to work with me as well as for me. I feel a strong sense of responsibility to you—for while an office is not a school in the formal sense, it ought to be in the highest sense. I should like to feel that every man who passes through the office has gotten something valuable to him. And don't forget that if a man can learn from his chief, his chief can learn from him."

He says further that there are four types of draftsmen whom the experienced architect picks out in a very short time:

(a) The honest, serious, conscientious man who buries himself in what he is doing and barely budges from his table.

(b) The man who rarely leaves his table, but makes a pretense of being busy and thinks he gets away with it.

(c) The man who is nearly always at someone's else table for any one of a dozen bad reasons.

(d) The man who is thoroughly interested in his own work, but is also interested in the job as a whole, who isn't afraid to leave his own table if he wants to or needs to for any one of a dozen good reasons, who knows in a general way what is going on in the office and yet manages to get his own work done.

A pretty canny analysis of the average drafting room. What!

ANNUAL MEETING

After due display of wit on the part of certain members and after much vigorous pounding of the gavel by our retiring president, Julian Garnsey, the following officers were elected for the year 1926:

Harold O. Sexsmith, President.
Clifford A. Truesdell, Vice-President.
C. R. Johnson, Secretary.
Paul R. Williams, Treasurer.
Julian Garnsey, Director for three years.

All of the members present (about forty) pledged support to the new officers and it is believed that this goes for the whole club.

The Executive Committee will be called immediately after Christmas and a program of activities and committee appointments presented for their approval. Let's all get busy and pull the loose ends together.

CHRISTMAS CARD EXHIBIT

The second annual Christmas card exhibit will be held in connection with the January meeting. If you have designed a card or have received some clever ones please mail them to the new secretary:

Johnson, care Allied Architects.

They should reach him not later than Monday, January 11. They will be arranged in an exhibit for the evening of the meeting and you may take them away at the close. About seventy cards were shown last year.

NEW TREASURER ON THE JOB

Remember, henceforth send your dues to Paul R. Williams, Stock Exchange Bldg. That reminds us that a treasurer's report will appear in next month's bulletin. The accounts could not be audited in time for this issue.

WILLIAM M. CLARKE

Concluding the annual meeting of the club our good friend William Clarke exhibited about fifty or sixty exquisite photographs taken on his last trip abroad. The subjects ranged from country churches in England to the famous gardens of Italy. The photography, choice of subject, and composition of each print was most inspiring and Mr. Clarke's whimsical way of punctuating his talk with amusing anecdotes of his trip was very entertaining. Everyone enjoyed it.

CLUB MEETINGS

Announcement of club meetings for the month following the issue of this bulletin are to be published here each month. Post card notices will also be sent out. Please respond when they reach you. Ordinarily the meetings will be held at the University Club.

WE offer for investment of Personal or Trust Funds sound Securities returning highest rates consistent with safety.

WILLIAM R. STAATS COMPANY
Established 1887
Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds
311 East Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIF.
Los Angeles San Diego San Francisco

WESTERN TILE AND MARBLE COMPANY, INC.
Bathrooms and Accessories

Tile
Garden
Pools

Fountains
and
Benches

Importers of Spanish, Mexican and Italian Tiles
Show Rooms 386 South Raymond Ave., Pasadena
Telephones: Fair Oaks 3157; Terrace 3158

Clarence P. Day
Corporation
Engineers — Contractors
Builders
205 Boston Bldg.
Pasadena, Calif.
Phone
WAkefield 6841

A new, popular edition of
SMALL HOUSE DESIGNS
Published by the
Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara, California.
Price $1.50 Postpaid

Ornamentals

You will find here a fine and varied stock of ornamental trees and shrubs as well as flowering and perennial plants.

Visit our nurseries and greenhouses.

EDWARD H. RUST

NURSERYMAN

1625 Bank St. Colo. 997

So. Pasadena ELliot 2639

Dawson's

"The Birds of California"

Notable for Illustrations and Binding

May Be Found in the Following Homes

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Stetson
Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Hamlin
Dr. and Mrs. Ernest Bryant
Col and Mrs. J. H. Poole
Mr. and Mrs. Cecil deMille
Mr. and Mrs. Edward S. Hunter
Mr. and Mrs. Harlan Shoemaker
Mr. and Mrs. Geo. S. Patton
Mr. and Mrs. King G. Gillette
Mr. and Mrs. Moye Stephens
Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Spalding

Inquiries should be directed to

SOUTH MOULTON COMPANY

301 Bank of Italy Building
Los Angeles, California

CORONA

TYPEWRITERS

With Standard Keyboard
$60 Complete With Case
Also All Makes Sold, Rented, Repaired, Exchanged

Anderson Typewriter Co.

84 E. Colorado St. Pasadena

THE LITTLE FLOWERS OF ST. FRANCIS

Translated By JAMES RHOADES,
Oxford University Press

In the century after the death of St. Francis, legends sprang up which were circulated orally among the people, who regarded the saint's memory with loving reverence. Of course they are no more reliable than legends usually are, but they contain the essence of his spirituality, and show the veneration universally bestowed upon him. At length some unknown writer collected these stories, and set them down in either Latin or Italian, even that point is uncertain, since we know them only from a later translation. The name of the collection was "Fioretti," and among scholars this work is considered one of the most exquisitely beautiful among the religious writing of the middle ages.

Now in a series called "The World's Classics," appears a slender volume of these legends rendered into verse by James Rhoades entitled "The Little Flowers of St. Francis." By refraining from imagery and ornamentation, the translator has retained the original simplicity of a naturally poetic subject, and so appears to have caught the soul and atmosphere of a very lovely period of mediaeval life. He has shown also the best of taste in selecting a form of blank verse, iambic pentameter, which has always proved to be the happiest medium for transcribing a theme pitched in so low a key as this. Here we may read presented in this pleasing book all the old familiar tales about the life of St. Francis.

THE BLACK MAGICIAN

By R. T. M. SCOTT, E. P. Dutton & Company

Plausibility and possibility are evidently essentials neither to be expected nor demanded by the devotees of mystery and detective stories. The writer needs merely to be able to use plain straightforward English, and to excel in inventive incident, the wilder the better. If matters get too difficult, there are cults enough to supply the explanation for the most improbable events, to say nothing of the powerful consequences of hypnotism and mesmerism; also the latest discoveries in medicine and science can be made to furnish assistance to a man of resourceful imagination. Major Scott has used all these in this tale of matching wits between the keen detective, Aurelius Smith, and the deepest dyed of villians able to call to his aid supernatural powers. Indeed it is vaguely understood that he was born some centuries past and ever since has been the devil's disciple. The book contains considerable information on occultism, which Major Smith has studied attentively in India, and this adds much to the general interest of the story.

BOOTS

English Model and Jodhpore Boots made to your measure from the finest of imported English leather.

Leshin

CUSTOM
BOOT MAKER

LOS ANGELES
688 S. VERMONT WA 7171

Welcome to call and Browse

First Editions
Early Printing
Autographs
Americana

Rare & Art Books

Dawson's Book Shop
627 So. Grand Ave.

Books Notable for Printing Illustrations and Binding.

Catalogues sent on request:—

LOS ANGELES

FLORNINA

Gowns · Negligees · Accessories and Bathing Suits

Ready to Wear or Made to Order

Unusually Attractive Frocks in Tub Silks and Dotted Swiss

95 South Los Robles Ave., Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 113

T. W. Mather Co. Inc.
PASADENA, CAL.

Dry Goods

Women's & Children's Wearing Apparel

Colorado Street at Marengo

QUALITY SERVICE

THE ELITE

DRY CLEANERS AND DYERS
Plant: 797 So. Fair Oaks Ave.
Colo. 1349 Pasadena, California

Horse Show Dates

Beverly Hills Dec. 26,
Flintridge Jan. 9,
Los Angeles Feb. 8-13

UHRICH

Ladies' and Gentlemen's Riding Coats and Breeches

Absolutely Correct in Model and Details

188 EAST COLORADO STREET
PASADENA

Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes

TROY LAUNDRY

In Business for Twenty Years
Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146 Alhambra 243-J

LAUNDERERS DRY CLEANERS

ROYAL LAUNDRY CO.

461 South Raymond Colorado 67
Pasadena, California

"The Gate to Healthful Beauty"

CORLANE
Marinello System

F. O. 1648 570 East Colorado St.
Pasadena
Opposite the Presbyterian Church

OLD MONTEREY (Continued from Page 14)

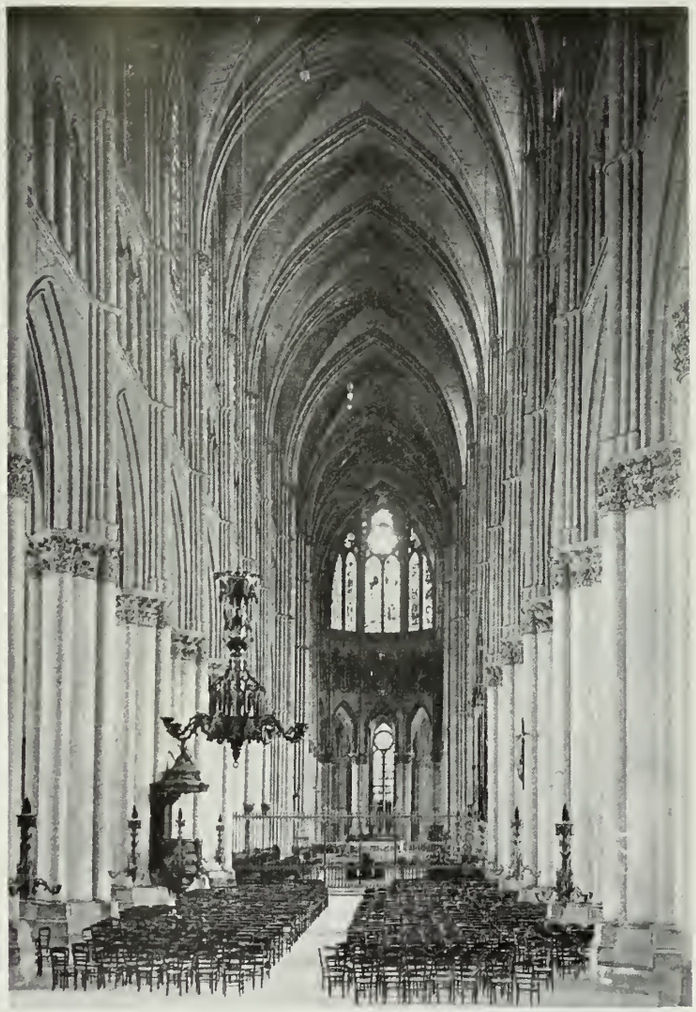
town—in 1602, to be exact—a Spanish explorer, Viscaino, landed on a spot near the old Custom House and raised his banner in the name of Spain. But the importance of Monterey as a settlement and capital of the province of California began in 1770 when the presidio of Monterey and the second mission in California were established.

There followed lively times indeed for Monterey. The presidio, an outpost of the conquering Spaniards, full of rough and riotous Spanish soldiers, was thronged with grand and haughty Spanish gentlemen, the official administrators of the new province, who at the same time attended to their own affairs connected with the enormous grants of land bestowed so generously upon them by one who did not own what he gave away. But lofty airs can be forgiven in those who are responsible for the delightful type of architecture which marks the period of Spanish occupation in Monterey. These gorgeous officials built for themselves dwellings of adobe, with thick walls and fascinating balconies, simple and dignified in design, but indescribably attractive to the eye. This article, with illustrations of the houses mentioned, will be continued in February.

PASADENA CORSET SHOP
HELEN B. FORD
A Complete Line of Robes, Negligees, Bed Jackets, Lingerie, Handkerchiefs, and Novelties.
308 E. Colorado Street Fair Oaks 3388

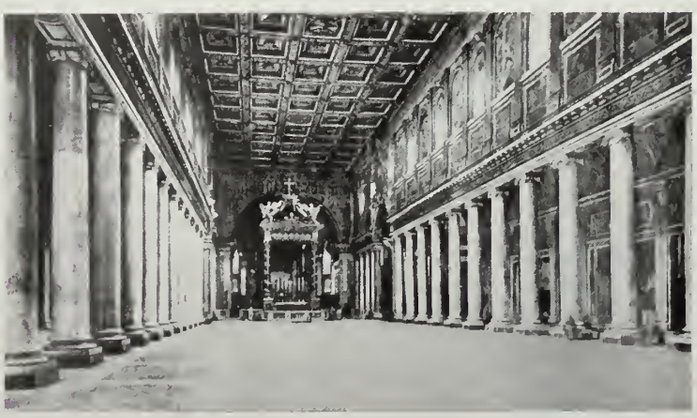
a refined shop created solely
FOR LARGER WOMEN
Daytime Dresses
Dinner Gowns
Ensembles
Sizes 38-56
and half sizes
Schaffer GOWNS for LARGE WOMEN
566 E. Colorado Street :: :: :: Pasadena



English Riding Boots

Have a style and snap all their own. The ones we offer are made by Cook & Company, London. They are the last word in boots for style and wearing qualities. Black or tan. Price includes set center bar, never-rust spurs and boot top straps.

Men's $35.00
Ladies' 30.00



"little joe" Wiesenfeld
Baltimore, Md.

A COURSE IN APPRECIATION OF ARCHITECTURE FOR ART STUDY SECTIONS OF CLUBS

RHEIMS, FRANCE. THE CATHEDRAL INTERIOR, SHOWING THE GREAT NAVE. THIS ILLUSTRATION WAS ENLARGED FROM A EUROPEAN POSTCARD, IN THE POSSESSION OF MR. HASKELL.

THIS month we present on the following pages an interesting article on Proportion in Architecture, illustrated by the two postal cards on this page and drawings on pages 30 and 31. We are indebted to Mr. Fitch Haskell, A. I. A., for this generous contribution to the course in the Appreciation of Architecture prepared by Miss Gere, U. C. S. B., and introduced by Mrs. Peters, Chairman of Art Study into the year's programme of the California Federation of Woman's Clubs. This is the sort of work which architects do to prepare themselves for their profession and is interesting to all.

INTERIOR OF SANTA MARIA MAGGIORE, ROME, ITALY.

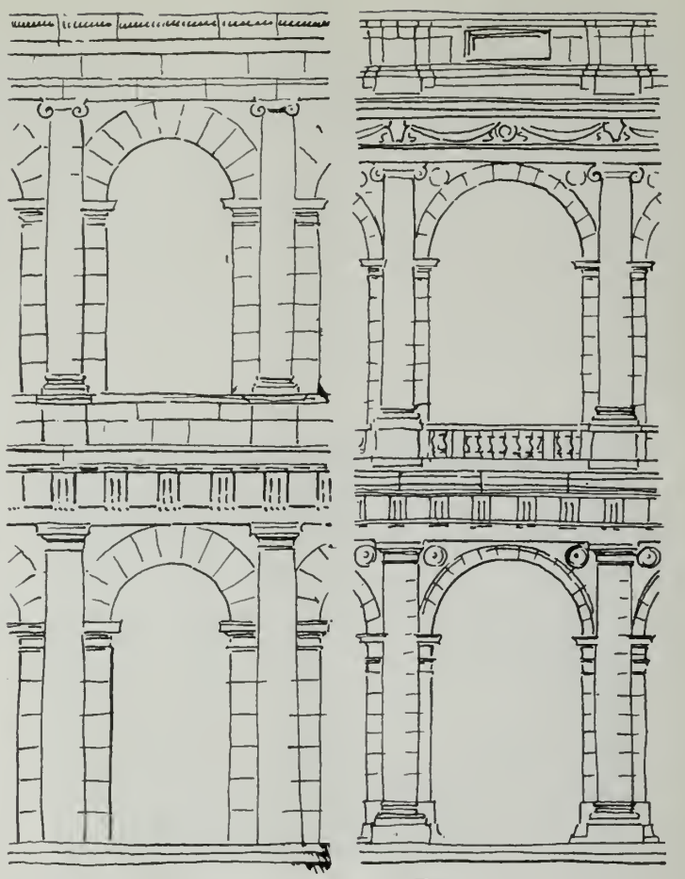
LAKE ARROWHEAD LODGE
E. K. HOAK, Managing Director.
Mile High—American Plan—Open All Year
"Dinner Dance Every Saturday Night. Special Features for Thanksgiving Holidays."
Reservations made at 319 Van Nuys Bldg. Tel. VA. 0959, or direct to Lodge. Call Lake Arrowhead Main 1. Rates, $7.00 a day and up, including meals and room.

The Girls' Collegiate School 34th Year
NEWLY LOCATED IN THE COUNTRY
Boarding and Day School. Accredited East and West. Out-Door Life a Reality. 50-acre estate. All sports. Saddle Horses. New Buildings. Italian type. L. A. Office, 1008 W. Adams St.
Glendora, Calif. Miss Parsons and Miss Dennen, Principals

An Ideal School for Young Women
Cumnock School
COLLEGE WORK IN THE FOLLOWING COURSES:
Vocal Interpretation of Literature
Literary Appreciation — Voice and Diction — Short-Story
Public Speaking — French — Dancing
Dramatics — Story Telling — Psychology
Journalism
Art and Art Appreciation
An accredited High School and Junior School under same management
HELEN A. BROOKS, Director
5353 West Third Street — Los Angeles
WHitley 3427 —TELEPHONES— WHitley 7311

The Elliott School for Girls
Residence and Day School.
Ideal Home Life — Character Building
Superior Educational Advantages. Sub-Primary through Eleventh Grade.
Martha Collins Weaver, M.A., Principal. Pico Blvd. at Grammercy Place.
EMpire 5347

GREENWOOD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
5928 Franklin Avenue, Hollywood
Select Resident and Day School
Lawns, Tennis Courts, Outdoor Swimming Pool. Special advantages in music, under Mrs. Elsa Spencer.
Principals:
Mrs. M. Greenwood, Newnham College, Cambridge
H. F. Greenwood, A. B., Corpus Christi College, Cambridge
Telephone HOlly 2886



MISS HARKER'S SCHOOL
FOR GIRLS
Palo Alto -:- -:- -:- California
"The Home of Stanford University"
Outdoor life all the year round. One hour from San Francisco. College Preparatory and Special Courses. Separate residence for girls from 5 to 14 years. Catalog on request.

The Katharine Branson School
Ross, Marin County, California
A Country School for Girls — College Preparation
One Hour From San Francisco — Outdoor Athletics

KENWOOD HALL
Resident and Day School for Girls. Sub-Primary through High School.
Open throughout the year.
Directors: Ruby Mildred King, Grace Baylor Bobbitt.
Tel. WAshington 1612 — 675 So. Vermont Ave., Los Angeles

The Art of
Norma Gould
Authentic Dances—Pantomime
Eurythmics
Ballroom Department—Louise Kramer
Special Course for Professional Dancers
Phone or write for information
460 N. Western Ave. HEmpstead 3530

THEATRE OF MARCELLUS — FARNESE PALACE
THE SAME COMPOSITION — DIFFERENT PROPORTIONS

PROPORTION IN ARCHITECTURAL DESIGN

By FITCH HASKELL, A. I. A.

PROPORTION is used in two senses: first, in the absolute sense, or mathematical relation of two dimensions, as for example an entablature one-fourth the height of a column; second, in a relative sense, as the result of proper relative sizes and harmony between parts of a whole, as a well proportioned human body in which all parts are well developed and balanced.

In Architecture there are no fixed proportions save those of accepted taste. No system of mystic numbers determines good proportion, it is not fixed by science, nor entirely by inherited taste. Without freedom to study there could be no architecture, yet the greater the freedom, the greater is the responsibility of the designer.

As for proportion in plan, a well proportion plan tells more than much discussion. For example the plan of the Hotel des Invalides in Paris with its vast courts, spacious stairs, dormitories, refectories, chapel and the Dome built as a tomb for great generals and dedicated to Napoleon—all the elements take their place and the spaces indicate their various uses. One important principle is shown: a court yard should always be much wider than any hall. Even the Dome is less than one-third the width of the Court of Honor.

The sense of proportion varies in interiors and exteriors; in a small room and in a large room. "The open air devours an object" and makes it seem smaller—as does distance—or a great room. Though the scale of objects should be changed to meet such conditions, there are several necessary dimensions which remain more or less fixed,—such as steps, balustrades, the practical height of stone courses, etc. dependent on construction, and on human size. These give scale as a whole.

Proportions are essentially variable according to the program, i.e., the requirements of the building, or to produce a monumental effect when that is desired.

The free study of proportions is necessary to the architect to produce the character he seeks to express. The scheme or design carried out in different proportions may express two entirely different kinds of building, and unless the architect is master of proportions, there would be no architecture. There are no hard and fast rules or formulas, hut there are Architectural laws.

To follow out certain specific proportions, and the causes for them to vary,—take the proportion of the space between columns of a colonnade to the height of the columns. It varies greatly. First of all it is dependent on the practical length of a stone lintel which can not vary as much as the height of the columns. Therefore the higher the column, the narrower the proportion of the space between. Then if orders are superimposed, the upper one, unless it is more slender looks top-heavy, so the wider proportion in the upper order becomes the rule. In a long colonnade it is the rule to find narrower proportions than in one of two, four or six columns and the reasonable basis may be that if there be but one or three openings, they need to be wider than if there are more numerous passages. Interior orders are better if thinner than exterior orders; and when coupled columns are used, the space becomes wider than if single columns of same height are used. A colonnade in a supporting first story has a wider proportion than if set on the ground, due to the fact that the eye includes the two stories as a single bay for their combined height.

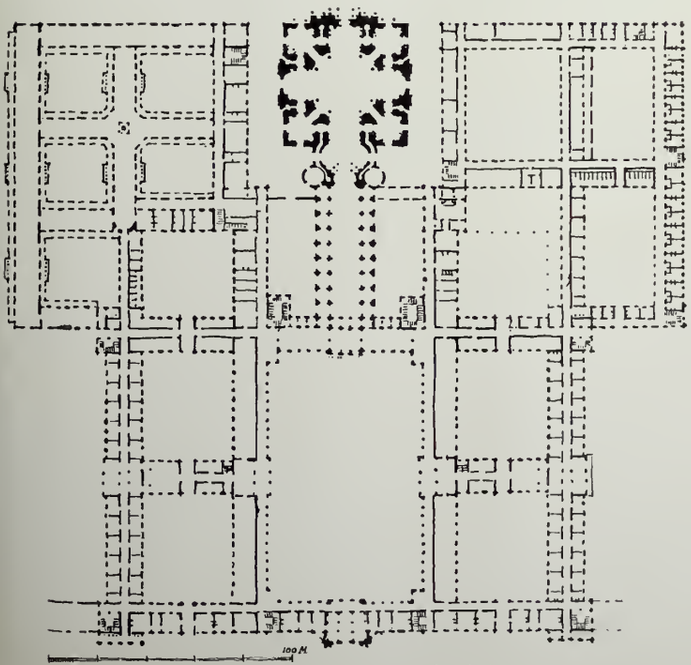
The proportion of door and window openings is dependent upon their use. Except for very great openings the easy opening and closing of the sash is important. The good old rule of the height equal to twice the width cannot apply to double doors. Given the width, limited by the practical span of a large stone, there is no limit to the height, and by increasing this a monumental effect is gained. On the other hand, a very narrow closet door must have a certain height for passage and so may have a higher proportion than a very great door.



Window openings are determined chiefly by story heights. For a double casement, the practical opening (in monumental building) might vary from 4′ 0″ to 6′ 6″, but the heights may have much wider range. The purpose of the window is to light an interior, and according to its use, as a bedroom, a study, a hospital ward, a school room, etc., so the proportion of the opening varies;—from a horizontal form in a mezzanine or basement to the narrow, high church window.

PORTICO OF OCTAVIUS IN ROME
(SAME INTERCOLUMNIATION IN TWO ORDERS)

Construction has a great influence on Proportion. Architecture is not an art of imitation or of established arbitrary forms, but the art of truth, truth to satisfy construction and the program, truth in the hands of an artist.

The arch is one of the great discoveries. A stone lintel is limited by the material, and though there are marble beams up to eighteen feet in length, arches and vaults of small stones span much greater spaces. With the arch, extreme width produces the greatest monumental effect—and the bridge is the extreme example. There is also to note the "moral" effect of very high proportions as in a church. In the same building, if arches and lintels are used, it is a point of design and of construction that the arches have the wider span. The exceptions to these rules are the Arc de Triomphe with a high proportion, yet colossal scale, and the colonnades with flat arch lintels above arcades on the Place de la Concorde,— a beautiful design by a master. Such exceptions do not prevent the rules and only a master can violate them successfully. And these rules are not rules of caprice—of preconceived mathematical formulas, or of unexplained tradition—but are based on truth and from truth comes beauty. Architecture is the putting together of the elements and materials

HOTEL DES INVALIDES
PARIS

The Westlake
School for Girls
333 South Westmoreland Avenue
Residence and Day School
Lower School, College Preparatory, Junior College
Fully Accredited
Departments of Art, Music, Home Economics
JESSICA SMITH VANCE FREDERICA DE LAGUNA
Telephone DRexel 0052

Urban Military Academy
The Great Outdoor School for the Building of Body and Brain and Character Under Matchless Conditions
Open All Year. Address MISS SALEY, Registrar
637 Wilcox Ave., Los Angeles. HEmpstead 7602

NEW HOME
OF PACIFIC
MILITARY ACADEMY
Culver City, California

Boarding and Day School. Fireproof Buildings. Completely Equipped Laboratories. Grammar and High School. Enrollment limited.

For Catalogue Write Mrs. Loughan or telephone Culver City 3294

SECRETARIAL COACHING
For cultured people desiring personal attention. Refined, harmonious surroundings. All Secretarial subjects. Parliamentary Law. Bride's Budget.
Management, Mrs. Frank Rutherford. 711 South Vermont Ave. Fltzroy 1763.

of construction to satisfy material and spiritual needs. The laws of construction come first, all proportions follow.

In addition to doors, windows, arcades, etc., the proportions of rooms may be considered. For small apartments and dwellings, great heights of ceilings are absurd, and for rooms of large area, an ordinary room height is equally undesirable. For those large rooms which have no limitation of floors above them, there are the two requirements to meet,—material and spiritual. A refectory would require more height than a chapel for merely practical need of air and ventilation, but the chapel is sure to be higher in proportion to express spiritual inspiration. A hall twenty feet wide and twenty feet high is reasonable, but if it is seventy feet wide it is not reasonable to make it seventy feet high. The proportion is guided by such reasons as air for a large number of people, greater height if the light is from only one side, and from materials of construction:—if of masonry, less wide than if the roof be on wooden or steel trusses. The exception is that of great vaults or domes of small blocks which span wider spaces than vaults of larger stones. Compare the section of Rheims Cathedral with that of Santa Maria Maggiore built for the same purpose. Thanks to different materials and proportions, they are of different arts.

Truth is the beauty of Architecture; and the proportions which we admire, in all their great variety, have truth in common. It takes much study to develope an architectural sense of proportion, yet in the infinite varieties of the human face, it takes the sense of proportion to recognize a friend. The same elements are all there, and with very slight differences in size and shape, yet ordinarily we easily know a friend in a crowd of passing strangers.

There is a tendency in some schools and some designers to worship size, to produce work of gigantic parts out of harmony with human scale. It is actually less dignified and monumental than work in which scale is carefully considered, and the effect of grandeur achieved by height or by reasonable contrast or accent in size of different parts. Exaggerated size results in mere vulgarity, and ornament or parts too gross may dwarf the apparent size of the building.

Good proportion comes only from the study of the practical needs and uses of the structure, modified by the understanding use of monumental scale, of small domestic scale or of picturesque qualities to express the spirit of the whole. To close this outline of ideas on Proportion given by the great French teacher, Gaudet, the following ends his lectures on the subject: "If in art, composition is the thought, proportion is the sentiment, and a happy proportion is the greatest satisfaction to the artist."

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

MONTHLY BULLETIN

"All for Service—And Service for All"

OFFICERS:
MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President
MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President
MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, Sec. Vice-Pres.
MRS. ERWIN P. WERNER, Third Vice-President
MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Vice-Pres.
MRS. JAMES REED, Secretary
MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treasurer.
MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

5604 De Longpre Avenue, Los Angeles
Telephone HE 5133

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER

SUMMARIZING our work of the past year, I feel that we can say that we have made substantial advances in many branches of our work. The various committees have accomplished excellent results.

The Day Nursery, under the supervision of its excellent committee and most efficient chairman, Mrs. Erwin P. Werner, has provided daytime care for dozens of little children whose mothers were obliged to leave the home to earn a livelihood. An average of more than thirty children have been cared for daily, taxing to the limit our present quarters.

The Good Samaritan Committee with Mrs. William Gibbs McAdoo as chairman, replaced by Mrs. Giles Hall during the summer months, has had a huge task in trying to stem the ever-flowing tide of distress and misery that has come to our doors in greater numbers than ever before in the history of our work. Miss O'Reilly, our manager, who is ever at the helm, has accomplished a stupendous piece of work. I greatly wish that every member of our League would ask to see our Good Samaritan records, otherwise they could have no idea of the volume of work that has been accomplished. In all there have been, I believe, 600 cases involving many, many times that number of people.

The Assistance League Unit of Wilmington, with Miss Tuller, chairman, and Mrs. Gilmour, caseworker, are filling a long-felt want in that community. The bulk of the work in Wilmington has been done among the families of the laboring people and most satisfactory results have been obtained in the two hundred and seventy-five cases handled. Aside from this case work, a Thrift Shop has been opened in Wilmington, where for small amounts whole families may be outfitted. It is quite generally felt that much credit is due the League for assuming the responsibility of initiating this work.

The Thrift Shop, with Mrs. G. Alex. Bobrick, chairman, and Mrs. John McCarthy, assistant chairman, has forged ahead, yet ever the cry goes out for more clothes, more shoes, furniture, bric-a-brac, everything and anything you can spare, we need. If only you could follow the histories of the things you bring to us and realize that your clothes aid in making men and women presentable enough to secure employment, I know that you would cheat the devastating moths by fetching us your garments.

The two Woman's Exchanges, one at the Community House, Hollywood, and the other in the Women's Athletic Club Building, 839 S. Flower Street, with Mrs. John Maurer and Mrs. Issac H. Jones, joint-chairmen, have been busy marts this past month in supplying the holiday demands for beautiful gifts. This branch of our work, now only in embryo, has great potentialities and is most constructive in purpose. Is there anything more needed than ways and means to help deserving men and women help themselves?

The Tea Room has taken a new lease of life under the supervision of Mrs. Charles Jeffras and Mrs. Isaac H. Jones, with Mrs. Dodge as manager, and in consequence of better food, more daintily served, the attendance has been greatly augmented. Mrs. Jeffras is being assisted by a most energetic Tea Room Committee; much is expected from this quarter.

The Location Bureau, with Mrs. Ada E. Laughlin and Mrs. W. L. McLaine, joint chairmen, has earned for the various philanthropic agencies many thousands of dollars during the year, which without this effort on the League's part would be lost to charity.

Owing to the kindness of our board member, Mrs. Frederick H. Seares, our monthly report bulletin is published in every edition of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, one of the most attractive and interesting of the monthly journals. In subscribing for a membership to the Assistance League you will receive monthly our CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND. And that reminds me, have you sent in your membership?

As you know, only three of our departments —The Day Nursery, the Good Samaritan Relief and the Wilmington Unit—have been beneficiaries of the Community Chest the past year. We feel that the Chest has demonstrated its usefulness to the community and that the League has benefited. This year the League has entered as a whole.

In counting our blessings for 1925 they seem almost too numerous to mention. Our many loyal friends have demonstrated their belief in us by their generous gifts during the year. In December these gifts came in rapid succession. Our annual Xmas party to one hundred little children, taken from families aided during the year by the Good Samaritan and the Wilmington Unit, was made possible by our friend, Mr. Rafael Herman, who supplied the luscious turkey dinner, and by our Board members and friends, who gave the tree and toys.

As though in answer to our fondest hopes comes the announcement from Mr. Herman, the Godfather of Our Day Nursery, who gave the initial donation which resulted in its establishment, of his princely gift of $25,000 toward a new nursery building, with the understanding that we raise an equal amount to add to it. Immediately following this came the promise from Mr. Walter P. Simons of building materials amounting in value to $10.000, and from Mr. J. M. Danziger the most generous gift of the entire proceeds of an evening's entertainment at the Olympic Auditorium, amounting to $3000. The number and size of such gifts are overwhelming; their magnitude puts the stamp of approval on the type of work we have undertaken and makes it possible for us not only to continue as we have begun, but to enlarge our work to meet the ever growing demands upon us.

Do not forget those of you who have promised to continue the Vanishing Luncheon "after the holidays" to start as soon as possible. This will afford us a means of raising money for our building fund to make our dreams come true. As you know, our building fund is distinct, of course, from our maintenance. Our property has almost trebled in value since our purchase; we are hoping that we can entirely wipe out the remaining indebtedness in this coming year.

In the space which has been allotted to me I have not been able to mention the splendid work and loyal support of every one of my officers. They are directly responsible for the accomplishments of the past year, and from them we have derived the inspiration which has carried us through.

The Assistance League has suffered a distinct loss in the death of our beloved board member, Mrs. Willis Hunt, who was ever ready to do her part in the work of our organization. The memory of her beautiful and radiant spirit will remain with us always.

Words seem to fail me when I try to thank you, board members and friends, for the tribute paid to my husband by the establishment of a memorial in his name which, continuing down the years, will be a source of hope and comfort to the little children who benefit thereby. Certainly no greater tribute could have been paid his memory, nor none which would have been more deeply appreciated hy me.

With the continued support of all of you who have shown in the past your devotion to our cause, we can accomplish even more in 1926 than we have in the year just closed.

OUTSTANDING EVENTS IN JANUARY

Jan. 5th: Round Table Luncheon at 12:30 with Dr. Remsen D. Bird, President Occidental College, Speaker.

(The regular Board meeting will precede the Round Table Luncheon on this date.)

Jan. 26th: The annual meeting and election of officers.

MAKING XMAS MERRY FOR OUR WEE CHARGES IN THE DAY NURSERY AND THE KIDDIES IN HOMES WHERE ONLY THE BARE NECESSITIES CAN BE PROVIDED.

THE HORSE SHOW

(Continued from Page 16)

Nancy Highland, owned by Miss Maude Banks, Covina, California. During the Eastern trip, under the management of Roy L. Davis, of Bel-Air Stables, this remarkable mare won the over 15-2 three-gaited class at Kansas National, Wichita, and also the three-gaited stake. At the American Royal, at Kansas City, she won the over 15-2 class, and the $1,000 three-gaited stake. At the National Horse Show, at New York, she won the over 15-2 three-gaited class and the $1,000 stake, defeating Bohemian Actress, who has been the undefeated champion for six years. Later in the same show, she won the Grand Championship. At the International, in Chicago, she won the over 15-2 three-gaited class, and is now considered the outstanding three-gaited horse in America.

The officers serving the association in the 1926 show are as follows: W. W. Mines, President; Irving H. Hellman, 1st Vice President; Guy H. Woodin, 2nd Vice President. Honorary Vice Presidents: John McE. Bowman, C. Groverman Ellis, J. D. Farrell, Atholl McBean, John B. Miller, Reginald W. Rives, Alfred Rogers, E. A. Stuart, W. H. Weeks. Elmer A. Green, Secretary; Fred E. Harris, Treasurer; Willis H. Brown, Controller; Marco H. Hellman, Chairman, Executive Committee; Wilbert Morgrage, Chairman, Horse Show Committee; F. E. Harris, Chairman, Finance Committee; Wm. May Garland, Chairman, Entertainment Committee. W. S. Blitz, Manager, 1926 Horse Show. Mr. Blitz comes from New York annually to manage these events.

ONLY a short time now—then a new home—new inspiration for service—new merchandise from all over the world—yet, essentially the same Barker Bros., devoted to the needs of "small homes and large".

At present, the Removal Sale, impelled by the necessity for quick clearing of stocks, is daily pushing forward remarkable value events in every department.

BARKER BROS.

COMPLETE FURNISHERS OF SUCCESSFUL HOMES
BROADWAY BETWEEN SEVENTH AND EIGHTH

NOTES FOR CONNOISSEURS

It was due to the forethought of a king of ancient Spain, that we now have the beautiful Talavera tile. Long years ago, four monks were sent, by royal command, from Talavera, Spain, to Mexico to teach the Mexicans how to make the beautiful Talavera tile. When the Spanish monks arrived, they found that the Mexicans had been making tile for centuries, baking the clay biscuit in the sun. With a rare perception, the Spaniards gave up the idea of starting a new industry, and concentrated their efforts on improving the old. Kilns, glazing processes, and new designs were introduced and the industry grew until now Mexico is able to spare some of her lovely tile for the homes of her northern neighbor. There is no decoration which lends itself more charmingly to our California Spanish homes than Talavera tile, and what could be more appropriate?

At the John W. Condit Antique Shop on South Fair Oaks, Pasadena, there is a very fine Sheraton cylinder secretary. It dates from about 1790 and is still in its original condition. Since it hasn't been refinished or touched up in any way, and since it combines the best of design with the best of workmanship, it should appeal strongly to a collector. The ends and sides are solid slabs of mahogany, covered with a veneer of crotch mahogany. The tracery of the glass is most delicate and thin, with each pane of glass a separate insertion; showing great skill and painstaking work on the part of the glass cutter and the wood turner. The worker who set the inlay was an artist, for his work on this secretary is outstanding. As a desk-bookcase combination, or as a china closet, this piece is ideal.

There is nothing can approach the charm of old silver. Nothing ever has, or ever will take its place among the precious metals. To find some graceful old wine flagon bearing the stamp of a silversmith who has been dead for two or three hundred years brings a thrill like nothing else. In the display rooms of A. Schmidt and Son there are scores of old pieces which will give you just such a thrill. I remember one lovely old crystal and silver table set consisting of a centerpiece and four sweetmeat dishes. The pedestals are of silver, handpierced in a leaf design, and contain Waterford crystal holders, making an exceedingly graceful and dignified group. This particular set was made in London in 1799 by Parker and Wakelin, and is a fine example of their outstanding work as silversmiths. Examples of the art of all the great silversmiths of England are there. Old tea and coffee service, liqueur sets, sweetmeat dishes; all of the finest workmanship. You will lose your heart to these beautiful things when you visit this shop, but you are sure to find the silver that you have been looking for for so long.

For centuries, discriminating people have been using hand loom paper as a vehicle for their messages, but I think that most of us have considered it as rather a luxury. Like so many things, however, which were once luxuries but have since become necessities, hand loom papers have made a definite place for themselves with those who realize that the paper upon which a message is written is as important as the message itself. The Fabriano Shop, in Pasadena, is making a specialty of hand loom papers, and has the work of nineteen different countries in stock. There you will find hand made papers particularly adapted to every conceivable use, from correspondence paper to fancy wrapping paper, in just the shadings you want.

The Meyer and di Segni Galleries, in Los Angeles, have just received a new shipment of painted Venetian furniture. Although the shipment is small, the selection is especially choice. Another stone well arrived to augment their already distinctive collection of old stone. Before you finish planning your garden decoration, visit this gallery on South Figueroa Street and look at the fine old stone wells. You will find that you need one in your garden.

Mr. George Hunt has just recently had the formal opening of his new furniture shop on East California Street, Pasadena. Working on the principle that all things are better when made by hand, he is making fine furniture by the old methods, using only a lathe as his sole piece of machinery. Heavy, rugged pieces, and light, delicate French pieces are being made by skilled artisans whose deftness and precision is a revelation. The skilled worker with his hands seems to be coming into his own again. May he wax fat and prosperous!

To Southland Readers

In our wanderings about during the month we cover a great deal of territory among the finest shops of Los Angeles and Pasadena. If you are looking for some one thing in particular for your home, don't hesitate to write us in care of the magazine and we will be more than glad to help you look.

Saxe Brainerd.

The Cheesewright Studios, Inc.

Decorators and Furnishers

PASADENA CALIFORNIA

ARABIAN TAPERS

are the daintiest candles made.
They are as slender as wands,
and burn for an hour
with a long, graceful flame.
On Sale only at

THE SOUKS OF TUNIS

in the Patio of the Pasadena Community Playhouse

The...
RAYMOND

Open December 27, 1923
PASADENA
Southern California

Walter Raymond
Proprietor
Arthur E. Safford
Manager

Golf course on its own grounds.

Decorating and Finishing Exclusive Furniture

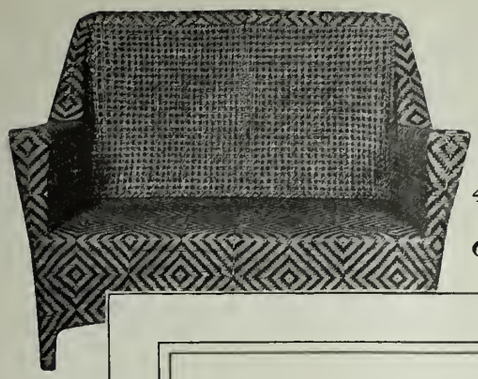
W. G. Pesenecker

Interior and Exterior Painting
34 North Broadway
Phone Col. 5656 Pasadena, Calif.

BETTER HOMES
Are Heated With
Ohrmund Brothers
Unit System of Heating
Electrically Controlled
HEATING AND SHEET-METAL CONTRACTORS
Pasadena Gas Appliance Co., Inc.
901 E. Colorado Street
Pasadena Fair Oaks 9393

Beautiful Garden Pieces
in
Sculptured Terra Cotta

Italian Terra Cotta Co.
W. H. Robison
1149 MISSION ROAD
Opposite County Hospital
Phone Lincoln 1057 Los Angeles



NO. 121—TALMAGE VASE

THOMAS FRANKLIN POWER
ARCHITECT
AND ARCHITECTURAL ENGINEER

DUNKIRK 1442

2615 W. SEVENTH ST.
LOS ANGELES

4 ft. 6 in. long
65.00
6 ft. 11 in. long
80.00

Bilibid Furniture

3 panel screen 18.00
(each panel 24 in. x 68 in.)

Gump's

S. & G. Gump Co.
246-268 Post St.
San Francisco,
California

chaise longue
55.00

desk
65.00

22.50

25.00

52.50

low tea table
27 in. diameter

chair with adjustable foot rest
40.00

arm chair 35.00
rocker same style
37.50

SMART, comfortable, durable and economical, Bilibid Furniture is unequalled for porch and sun-room.
Made in Manila under government supervision, it never falls below the highest standard of excellence.
Always distinctive, a great variety of forms make a group most pleasing. In association with bloom and foliage or gay linens, the contrast is strikingly effective.
We have a large stock for immediate delivery including chairs, nests of tables and all sizes of stools.
Photographs and prices upon request.

53 in. high
50.00
60 in. high
55.00
67 in. high
60.00

hour-glass table
35.00
28 in. high
29 in. diameter

stool 13.50
chair 37.50

Malaga Cove Plaza~Palos Verdes

-the first of 3 business centers

under development in this lovely seaside community

TO STAND, for instance, in Malaga Cove and let the eye wander in any direction is to see the evidence of intelligent development and constructive planning.

Not one single beauty spot has been marred, not one scenic vista lost. It is as though nature herself had supervised every detail of planning, improvement and landscaping—so perfect is the relation of construction to the surrounding scenery. Everything that ideal living can suggest is provided in this beautiful seaside community. Magnificent homesite locations, a perpetual view of ocean, valley and mountains, a free membership in an 18-hole grass golf links, a club house, a Spanish roadside Inn, riding academy, bridal trails, 4½ miles of shore line—everything that makes for better living conditions, greater happiness and abundant health.

—and yet homesites in Palos Verdes cost no more than in many other less desirable communities having far less to offer—

PALOS VERDES

4½ miles of California's finest shore line

5TH FLOOR LANE MORTGAGE BUILDING, 8TH AND SPRING STREETS, LOS ANGELES

JAY LAWYER, Gen. Mgr. BANK OF AMERICA, Trustee

C.S. 12 25

SOCIETY :: ART :: INDUSTRIES :: HOMESITES

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

STATE LIBRARY

Courtesy of The Stendahl Galleries, The Ambassador. THE DESERT, CALIFORNIA, From a Painting by John Frost.

THE GARDENS OF CALIFORNIA NO. I
THE COLORADO RIVER AND THE RESULTS OF IRRIGATION AND RAIN

No. 74 FEBRUARY, 1926 25 Cents

CALIFORNIA'S HOME AND GARDEN MAGAZINE

Los Angeles National HORSE SHOW

Ambassador Auditorium

February 8-13, 1926

105 Classes
1000 Entries

$30,000 Cash Prizes

10 Magnificent Championship Cups for 8 Model Classes and 2 Breeding Classes

The Greatest Mid-Winter Horse Show in the United States

W. W. MINES, Pres. IRVING H. HELLMAN, Vice-Pres.
ELMER A. GREEN, Secy. GUY G. WOODIN, Vice-Pres.
WILBERT MORGRAGE, Chmn. Horse Show Com.
W. S. BLITZ, Manager

Los Angeles National Horse Show, Inc.
811 Stock Exchange Building
Los Angeles, California
VAndike 6592

Entries Close January 28th

AN INTERIOR DECORATING DEPARTMENT NOW OFFERS TO ARCHITECTS AN UNRIVALLED SERVICE IN THE SELECTION OF CHOICE PIECES, DRAPERIES AND COVERINGS

Silk Lamp Shades made in our own workrooms by specialists

The
Serendipity Antique Shop

Antiques Lamps Decorations
22, 26 and 30 SOUTH LOS ROBLES AVENUE
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
BRADFORD PERIN, Proproietor Telephone F. O. 7111

An Invitation To Join 33,627 Women

Women holders of Southern California Edison Company shares have invested, on their own initiative, $16,800,000. From this investment not one of them has ever lost a penny.

As proof of their good judgment these women receive more than $300,000 every quarter in dividends.

Write for copy of booklet about Edison Women Partners—showing how they use this method of thrifty saving. It is yours for the asking.

INVESTMENT DEPARTMENT

Southern California Edison Company
306 WEST THIRD STREET
LOS ANGELES PHONE: MAIN 7120

Scott Auto Rental Company

Successor to

Meagers Auto Rental Service

Buick, Chrysler, Dodge and Ford Open and Closed Cars

For Hire Without Drivers

The key that unlocks Southern California's heart is a car.

161 W. Colorado St., Pasadena. Wakefield 8181

YOU are cordially invited to visit the exhibition-sale of the Brainard Lemon Collection of Antique Silver and Old Sheffield Plate of the Queen Anne and Georgian periods, to be held at The Cheesewright Studios.

TUESDAY,
FEBRUARY 16
THROUGH TUESDAY,
MARCH 9

Hundreds of rare and authentic old pieces of hand-wrought silver from the homes of titled families of England, Ireland, and Scotland, will be on exhibition.

The Cheesewright Studios, Inc.
DECORATORS AND FURNISHERS
PASADENA CALIFORNIA

"UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST"

The
CALIFORNIAN HOTEL
MANAGEMENT H. WINGATE LAKE
FRESNO, CALIFORNIA

A modern, model Hotel devoted to sincere hospitality and dedicated to California's Guests.

THE LOGICAL STOPPING PLACE IN THE SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY FOR ALL POINTS, WHETHER YOU TRAVEL FOR BUSINESS OR PLEASURE.

EUROPEAN PLAN
250 ROOMS-250 BATHS
$2.50 PER DAY AND UP
ALL OUTSIDE ROOMS

Fast, Through Service Direct to Eastern Cities
via Southern Pacific

GOLDEN STATE ROUTE
to Chicago

Through sleepers to many eastern points—
St. Louis - Minneapolis - St. Paul - Kansas City
Des Moines - Memphis and intermediate places.

The Country's Finest Trains

Golden State Limited—none faster to the east.
Every travel luxury—observation and club cars, shower-baths, maid, barber, valet; Golden State dining car service. Connects with fast trains leaving Chicago.
Also, the Golden State Express - Californian

Ask your local agent about fares, reservations, schedules, etc.

Southern Pacific Lines

Ticket Offices: 212 West 7th St. 1147 South Broadway. Main Floor Pacific Electric Bldg., 6th and Main. Station—5th and Central. Phone MEtropolitan 2000

GLENDALE 106 N Brand | HOLLYWOOD 6768 Hollywood Bl. | LONG BEACH 156 West Ocean | OCEAN PARK Trolleyway | PASADENA 148 E. Colorado

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertainments, etc., for the calendar pages are free of charge and should be received in the office of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, at least two weeks previous to date of issue, the 10th. No correction can be guaranteed if they are received later than that date. CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, California. One dollar and twenty-five cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be changed as many times as desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the change is made.

Entered as second class matter, July 28, 1919, at the Post Office at Pasadena, California, under act of March 3, 1879.

Clubs

VALLEY HUNT CLUB, PASADENA:
The program for February includes: Bridge Luncheon 1 o'clock, the 1st; Bridge Tea, 2:30 o'clock, the 8th, 15th and 22nd. The annual Bridge Tournament opened January 19, will run through February, play begins promptly each evening at 8 o'clock. Sunday evening suppers are served at 7 o'clock, followed by interesting programs.

ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB, PASADENA:
The afternoon bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been discontinued for the season, but tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.
The usual Wednesday and Saturday sweepstakes eacb montb through the summer.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged, followed by tea.
Table d'hote dinner served in dining room every Sunday from 12 to 3 p. m.

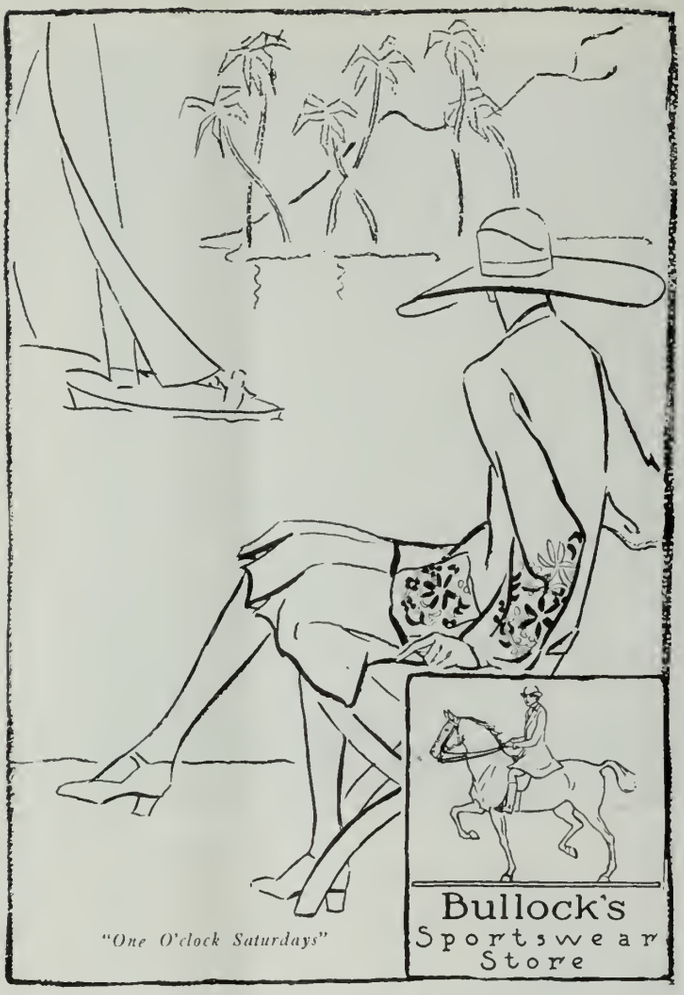
LOS ANGELES COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.
Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 .p m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month.
Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturday during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.

MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday in each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Dancing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday.
Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.

LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week, Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal. Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL COUNTRY CLUB:
A dinner dance is arranged for the third Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a. m., and not before two p. m.



MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB, SANTA BARBARA:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A recent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a special luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served.

PALOS VERDES GOLF CLUB:
Offers an eighteen hole, all grass, seaside course, delightful for summer play.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Lunch and dinner served every day.

PASADENA GOLF CLUB:
Wednesday is Ladies' Day, with cards and mah jongg from two to four-thirty, when tea is served.
Dinner will be served on Sunday from five-thirty to seven-thirty. The usual luncheon and dinner service will prevail through the week.

Music

THE PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA OF LOS ANGELES, W. A. Clark, Jr., founder, Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor, will present the usual symphony concerts throughout the month, the dates for the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts are February 12-13, and 26-27; the hours are 2:30 and 8:30. The popular Sunday afternoon concerts are given at 2:30, the dates are February 7 and 21. These concerts are given at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Fifth and Olive. The orchestra gave the first of the Spring series of open-air concerts at the Coliseum, Los Angeles, Sunday, January 17. Each following concert will be made up of popular numbers and the seat prices are kept within the reach of everyone, ranging from ten to fifty cents. The succeeding concerts are scheduled for February 14, March 14 and 28, and April 11, at 2:00 p. m.

PASADENA MUSIC AND ART ASSOCIATION, in the 1926 Artists Series, will present Beniamino Gigli, tenor, Tuesday evening, the 16th. These concerts are given at the Pasadena High School Auditorium.

AUDITORIUM ARTIST SERIES, under the management of George Leslie Smith, will offer Margaret Matzenauer, contralto, February 8, and Cecilia Hansen, Russian violinist, the 22nd.

PASADENA'S CONCERT by the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra will be given at the Raymond Theater, the date for the month is the 8th. The entire Philharmonic Orchestra, under the direction of William Henry Rothwell, appears on these occasions.

DEHYMER PHILHARMONIC ARTIST COURSES include for February, Marriage of Figaro, a William Wade Hinshaw production of the delightful Mozart opera in English, the 9th; Isa Kremer, Russian singer of folk songs and ballads, the 16th; Beniamino Gigli, dramatic tenor, the 18th, and Toti Dal Monte, coloratura soprano, the 25th.

ISA KREMER, Russian balladist and singer of folk songs, will be presented at Pasadena in a matinee musicale by Miss Teresa Cloud, Thursday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, February 11, at the Shakespeare Clubhouse. The program is unusual, the songs tell stories, illustrated by pose and gesture. Miss Kremer's voice is pure mezzo-soprano, she is an impersonator and an interpreter.

SEVEN ARTS SOCIETY OF LONG BEACH, Katheryn Coffield, director, will present Ethel Leginska, pianist, February 16, and Thelma Given, violinist, March 2. The Society also sponsors the morning current events talks by Aline Barrett Greenwood.

ADOLF TANDLER'S LITTLE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA is giving a series of Saturday morning concerts, eleven o'clock, at the Biltmore Hotel, Los Angeles, the February date is the sixth. Also a series of Sunday night concerts at the same place, the February dates for which are the seventh and twenty-first.

THE WOMAN'S SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA of Los Angeles, Henry Schoenefeld, conductor, will give the first concert of the season, Wednesday evening, February 17, at the Philharmonic Auditorium. Alexander Kisselburgh, baritone, will be the soloist.

THE ZOELLNER QUARTET will give the fourth concert of the annual series of chamber music concerts in the Music Room of the Hotel Biltmore, Los Angeles, February 1, and the fifth concert February 15.

THE ZAHPAD TRIO presents an all-American program at the Playhouse, Los Angeles, Sunday afternoon, February 28. The program will include Charles Wakefield Cadman's Trio in D, and Mr. Cadman, who has just returned from New York, will direct the rehearsals for his composition.

THE LOS ANGELES TRIO, May McDonald Hope, pianist and founder, Sylvain Noack, violin, and Ilya Bronson, 'cello, will give the fourth of the series of six evening concerts in the Music Room of the Biltmore, Los Angeles, February 24.

ADOLF TANDLER'S LITTLE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA is presenting a series of concerts at the Community Playhouse, Pasadena, the first and third Sun-

Where the Treasures of a Collector May Be Purchased as Gifts

A. Schmidt & Son

For Fifty-six Years

IMPORTERS OF ANTIQUE AND MODERN SILVER AND Sheffield Plate, Fine China and Glass

2320 W. Seventh St., Los Angeles

391 E. Colorado St., Pasadena

Boston New York Washington

day afternoons during February, March and April.

THE GLENDALE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, J. Arthur Myers, conductor, gave the first program of a series of five concerts, January 26.

MRS. EDWARD MacDOWELL will give a course of interpretative lectures in Los Angeles, between February 15 and April 1, on the music of Edward MacDowell, America's distinguished composer.

THE ETHEL LEGINSKA piano recital at the Olympic Auditorium, Los Angeles, is scheduled for February 15. Owing to the immense seating capacity of the auditorium over 4000 seats at twenty-five cents each have been reserved for teachers of music and students for this recital.

LOS ANGELES ORATORIO SOCIETY, John Smallman, director, will present Elgar's "Dream of Gerontius," February 28, at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Los Angeles. The soloists will be Richard Crooke, tenor, Frances Warren Haynes, mezzo-soprano, and John A. Patton, baritone.

THE DE RESZKE SINGERS are scheduled to appear at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Los Angeles, the evening of February 23.

PASADENA LIGHT OPERA ASSOCIATION, Arthur K. Wyatt, will present "Robin Hood" at the High School Auditorium, February 22-23-24.

OPERA READINGS in Mrs. Elizabeth B. Turney's series, given at the Community Playhouse, Pasadena, will include for February "Martha" or "La Gioconda," possibly both, on the 15th. These recitals have proved extremely popular, presenting the principals, duets, and outlining the dramatic moments of the operas which make up the list.

Announcements

PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE: "Head Acres," by Colin Campbell Cooper, Feb. 4-13; "The Makropolus Secret" by Karl Kapek, Feb. 18-27. Throughout the year the plays begin on a Thursday and end on the second Saturday. Matinees on Saturday only.

THE PASADENA LECTURE COURSE on Current Topics, 1925-26, will be held, as in past seasons, at the California Institute of Technology in Culbertson Hall, Wilson Avenue and California street, on Tuesdays at 4:15 p. m. The February program is as follows: February 16, General Peppino Garibaldi. (Subject to be announced.) The first lecture in March will be given on the 2nd by Raymond Robins, social economist and industrial expert, on "Law Enforcement."

POPULAR SCIENCE LECTURES are announced by Throop Memorial Church, Pasadena, Sunday evenings at 7:45. The public is invited, but no seats will he reserved. The February dates and programs are as follows:

February 7—Prof. Franklin Thomas, California Institute of Technology: "Earthquakes: Can We Circumvent Them?"

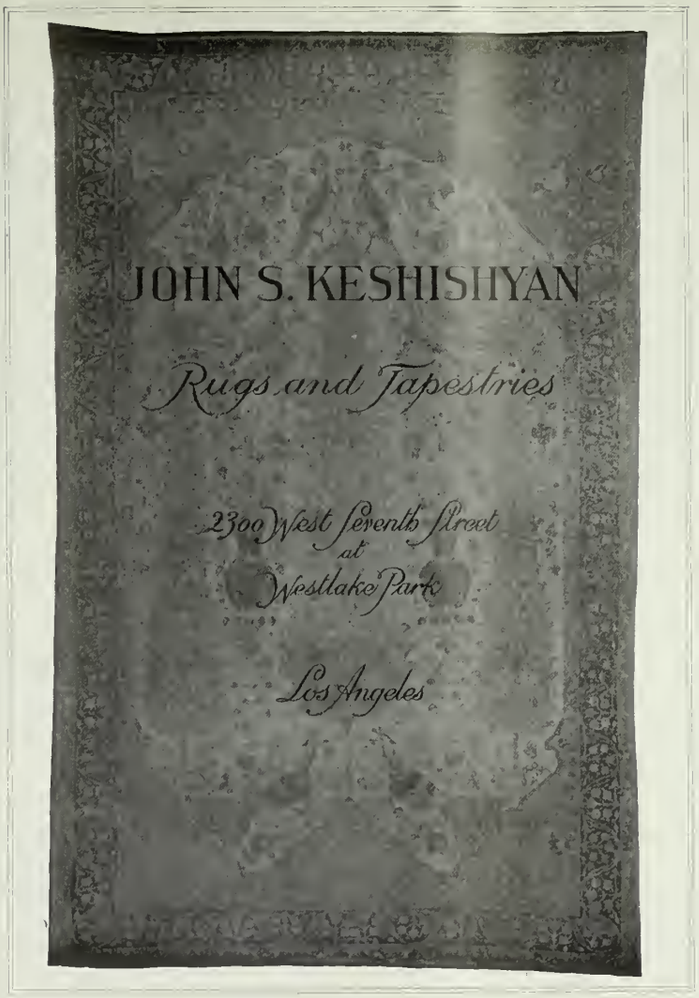
February 14—Prof. Robert L. Daugherty, California Institute of Technology: "White Coal, or Water as Power."

February 21—Prof. R. W. Sorensen, California Institute of Technology: "Our Debt to Electricity."

February 28—Prof. Alfred N. Cook, Occidental College, "Chemistry of Food."

THE BROWNING SOCIETY of Pasadena meets the second and fourth Thursdays at 2:30 p. m., Recital Hall, Community Playhouse. For the season 1925-26, The Catholicity of Robert Browning.

ALINE BARRETT GREENWOOD Month-Reviews are held in the Shakespeare Clubhouse, Pasadena, third Wednesday in the month, 11 a. m.; Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, the third Thursday in the month at 11 a. m.; and at the Biltmore Hotel, Los Angeles, the third Saturday of each month in the Music Room, at 11 a.m.



HISTORY OF COSTUME is the subject of a series of lectures to be given by Mrs. Fairfax Proudfit Walkup, under the auspices of the Pasadena Center of the Drama League and Westridge School for Girls, at the Community Playhouse, Pasadena. The course consists of twelve lectures, to be given Monday afternoons at 2:30, Feb. 1-8-15,22, and will trace the development of every phase of apparel, illustrated by mannikins in color.

INVITATIONAL TENNIS TOURNAMENT, Huntington Hotel, Pasadena, is announced for Feb. 12-13-14, under the auspices of the Pasadena Tennis Club.

SIXTEENTH NATIONAL ORANGE SHOW AT SAN BERNARDINO will be held Feb. 18-28 in its own building. Four hundred exhibitors have reserved space, and twenty feature exhibits will add to the spectacle.

SAMARKAND HOTEL, Santa Barbara, is now open, having been restored and redecorated following the damage occasioned by the earthquake last June.

AMBASSADOR HOTEL, Los Angeles, announces that a series of Special Nights will be presented throughout the year in the "Cocoanut Grove." The first will be an Arabian Nights Party, Tuesday evening, Feb. 2.

AN EXHIBITION OF PORTER BLANCHARD'S handwrought silver will be held February 8 to 13 at the Hewson Handcraft Studios, 2508½ West Seventh Street, Los Angeles, and 602 East Colorado Street, Pasadena. A general invitation is extended to all who are interested in this charming product of the silversmith's art.

THE DICKENS FELLOWSHIP of Pasadena celebrated its seventh anniversary on Monday evening, January 25, at the Shakespeare Clubhouse. Miss Eleanor Miller, founder of the branch, took as her subject, "Our Purpose and Problems." Leslie Henry's theme was "Charles Dickens, the Humanitarian."

TWO ornithological societies, The Western Bird Banding Association and the Cooper Ornithological Club, will hold a meeting at the Museum of Science and Art, Exposition Park, Los Angeles, April 5-6-7. At that time a large exhibition of the work of the individual members will be held.

Santa Barbara

LOBERO THEATER programs are as follows: February 6, Margaret Matzenauer, in the first recital of the Artists Series; February 11, 12, 13, Community Arts Players present George M. Cohan's mystery play, "Seven Keys to Baldpate," directed by Colin Campbell Clements; March 6, famous melodramatic comedy, "The Gorilla"; March 11, 12 and 13, Community Arts Players present "School For Scandal," by Richard Sheridan.

Edward Borein, distinguished cowboy etcher, has affiliated with the School of the Arts faculty and began instructions in etching with a class February 1. Much interest has been shown in this new department of the school.

The Music Branch of The Strollers, a dramatic, literary and musical organization of Santa Barbara, held an interesting meeting January 28 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Mulhauser, Hot Springs avenue, Montecito.

Dr. Irving Wills has accepted nomination to the Drama Board of the Community Arts Association. During the last three years Dr. Wills has taken a great interest in the Community Arts productions.

Zoe Kincaid Penlington, lecturer and author, gave a very interesting discussion of Japanese Drama at the School of the Arts Theater January 26. Henry Eichheim, well-known authority on Oriental music also spoke.

Interest of high school pupils is being centered in the small house design contest which the Plans and Planting committee of the Community Arts is sponsoring. The contestants are submitting plans which will help solve the rehabilitation problem in Santa Barbara for families of modest circumstances. The plans must be drawn for homes which can be built for $2000 or less.

Miss Ursula Greville, recognized English editor of The Sackbut and accomplished soprano, gave a delightful recital of modern and old English airs at the Lobero January 18. Assisting her were Antoni Van Der Voort, violinist, instructor in the music department of the School of the Arts; Ethel Roe Eichheim and Grace Kaplun, pianists.

Pomona College, Claremont

FIFTEEN students were graduated at the mid-year commencement exercises held in Bridges hall of music, January 30. The graduating students represented communities from Mexico City to Oregon.

A series of three lectures have been announced for the month of February to be given by Dr. William Morris Davis, eminent geologist and member of the Harvard University faculty. Dr. Davis will be in residence on the Pomona College campus for over a month as the year's Harvard exchange professor. On February 4 he will speak on the Grand Canyon, February 11, the Coral Reef problems and on February 18, Basin Range problems.

Of the musical events to be held during the month probably the most important is the third Chamber Music concert by the Zoellner Quartet to be given on the evening of February 8 in Bridges hall of music. As features of this third concert Mrs. William S. Ament of Claremont will play a piano number accompanied by the quartet and guitar selections will be played by Vahdah Olcott-Dickford of Los Angeles. Marjorie Hall, a student at Pomona College, will give her senior recital in Bridges hall of music Monday evening, February 15, at 7:15 o'clock and the girls glee club, directed by Professor Arthur Babcock, will present their home concert in Bridges hall on the night of February 26.

The popularity of art exhibits in Rembrandt hall during the last year has brought a special exhibit from the Kanst gallery of Los Angeles. This exhibit will he open to the public from February 4 to 18.

Two intercollegiate debates are scheduled, one to be held in Holmes hall at 8 p. m., February 12, and another in Rembrandt hall on February 25.

Paul Blanchard, nationally known speaker and author, will address the Pomona College students in Chapel service on the morning of February 5.

Art

LOS ANGELES MUSEUM OF HISTORY, SCIENCE AND ART, Exposition Park, announces that owing to the tremendous interest shown in the Pan-American Exhibition of Oil Paintings, which includes the work of the artists of North, South and Central America, it will be held over throughout the month of February. This exhibition is installed in the new unit, the opening of which it inaugurated, and which is now the main gallery.

BILTMORE SALON, during the first half of the month will show the work of Malcolm Thurburn, a young English painter, now living in Santa Barbara. His mediums are as varied as his subjects and each bit is symbolic, occult and mysterious, beautiful and exquisite in technic. Some of the titles are slightly descriptive, such as "God of the Snowflakes," "The Finger of Conscience," and "Poet in the Modern World." In the larger gallery selected groups of general paintings will be shown. The last half of the month, opening on the 22, a very interesting exhibition will be hung, made up of the recent work of Katherine Leighton and Clyde Forsythe. Both of these painters were busy all summer and have examples of some of their best work to show.

SOUTHWEST MUSEUM, Marmion Way and Avenue 46, Los Angeles: Elizabeth Mason, sculptor of Santa Barbara, under the personal supervision of J. P. Harrington of the Smithsonian Institution, has completed her first habitat group for the Southwest Museum, which was installed in one of the tunnel niches and entrance to the museum, and is known as the Santa Catalina Island Group. Elizabeth Mason succeeds Marguerite R. Tew, former sculptor of the museum, who is taking up work with Tulane University and the State of Nevada under Governor Scroogan in the erection of their first museum. Dr. John A. Comstock, present director, has resigned, effective February 1st, to resume the practice of medicine. A new director has not been named. Activities of the month: February—Fourth Annual Butterfly Exhibit, under auspices of the Lorquin Natural History Club and the Southwest Museum. Sunday afternoon lectures: February 7th—Rabbi Edgar F. Magnin—subject: "The Great Race"; February 14th—Dr. Jasper J. Mayer—subject: "Customs and Culture of Russia," illustrated; February 21st—Dr. Jasper J. Mayer—subject: "Russia and Her Possibilities," illustrated; February 28th—Captain Basil Webb—subject: "Understanding Hindustan," illustrated. Saturday morning programs for children of from 5 to 14 years of age, from 10:30 to 12:00 o'clock in museum. Classes in pageantry, developing the folk-lore of the Indians, early California and Spanish history, under direction of Mrs. Anne Hare Harrison and the Extension Department of the museum. February 6th—Emmy Matt Rush—subject: "The Apache Indian of White Mountain Region," illustrated with slides, motion picture and specimens of their industries; February 20th—Mrs. Francis M. Fultz will present a "George Washington Program," children to take part.

STENDAHL GALLERIES, Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, will show February 1st to 15th, new paintings by John Frost, including desert and mountain studies. From February 15 to March 15 the Guy Rose memorial exhibition will be held. This will be of surpassing interest not only to the friends of Mr. Rose but to lovers of good art everywhere.

THE GRACE NICHOLSON GALLERIES 46 North Los Robles Avenue, Pasadena, invites you to attend an exhibition of paintings by Norman S. Chamberlain, February 1st to the 15th. The galleries are open week days from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m.

PASADENA ART INSTITUTE, Carmelita Gardens House, will include in the February exhibition: Pasadena Society of Artists; I. Maynard Curtis; Painters and Sculptor's Club; Prints by Arthur Millier; Water Colors by Carl Oscar Borg; Miniatures by the California Miniature Society.

DERNAYS, 2501 West Seventh Street, at Carondelet Street, Los Angeles, announces the opening exhibition of California artists, January 30th to February 20th inclusive. This exhibition will be followed by a showing of Portraits in Oil by Antonia Melville from February 23rd to March 6th, inclusive, also Etchings by Arthur Millier. The galleries are open evenings by appointment. DUnkirk 3839.

THE ART GALLERIES OF BARKER BROS. new store, Seventh and Figueroa streets, Los Angeles, occupy five rooms on the second floor, and is a branch of the Ainslee Galleries of New York, the first branch established since the founding of these well known galleries nearly fifty years ago. The gallery is in charge of Frank Ainslee who announces that while the gallery will specialize in American art, especially California and Western artists, all paintings shown will be representative of the real art of the world.

DEWITT PARSHALL, of Santa Barbara, held an exhibition at the Chicago Art Institute in January.

NEW SHIPMENTS
JUST RECEIVED

English and Spanish
Antique Furniture
Lamps, Venetian Glass,
Rare Prints and Paintings

Cannell and Chaffin, Inc.

397 East Colorado St.
Hotel Maryland, Pasadena

720 W. Seventh St.
Los Angeles, Calif.

HAVE YOU EVER VISITED
GRACE NICHOLSON'S
ORIENTAL SHOP
AND HER CHARMING CHINESE GARDEN
The new Grace Nicholson Art Galleries are open daily with exhibitions by leading artists and sculptors
46 NORTH LOS ROBLES AVE., PASADENA

Eleanor and . . . .
Hollingsworth Beach
French and Italian Arts
630 East Colorado Street
Pasadena,
California

THE CANNELL AND CHAFFIN GALLERIES, 720 West Seventh street, Los Angeles, announce the following exhibitions: February 3 to 13, portraits by Arthur Merton Hazard; February 8 to 20, the work of George Elbert Burr. Opening February 15, one of the most important exhibitions of the season, Ettore Tito, greatest of Italian artists, will hold the first one-man show ever held in America. Tito has exhibited at the most important galleries of the East but has never before held a one-man show in this country.

ARTHUR MILLIER is established in a new studio, 218 South Broadway, in the Copp Bldg., where he has his own etching press and where he is always glad to see his art loving friends.

LEON BARTON spent the holidays in Madrid, she is painting in Spain this winter.

SAN DIEGO FINE ARTS GALLERY announces the appointment of Reginald Poland, of the Detroit Art Institute, as director. Plans are being consumated for the opening of the beautiful building, given to the city by Mr. and Mrs. A. S Bridges.

THE SAN DIEGO ART GUILD has arranged to have a continuous exhibition of paintings and sculpture in the Art Center at Balboa Park. William Pierce is the recently appointed custodian.

MAURICE BRAUN, after an extended sketching trip in the East, is again established in his Point Loma studio. The paintings made in New York and Connecticut will be exhibited at Macbeth's in New York, and in March Mr. Braun will hold an exhibition at the Biltmore Salon.

THE STONE INTERNATIONAL GALLERIES, Monrovia, California, announce the following exhibitions for the month: To February 10, first exhibition in California of Screens by Robert Winthrop Chanler and Flower Paintings by contemporary artists. February 10 to March 10, exhibitions of paintings by Julius Bloch and by Charles S. Price. Contemporary works of art are shown exclusively. The galleries are open from two to ten p. m., daily and Sundays.

CALIFORNIA ART INSTITUTE announces the annual Poster competition and exhibition. The title this year is "Better Homes," and is open to all art students, amateurs, and those regularly in attendance in schools. The competition is for a poster, done in poster water colors, that will pictorially interpret the subject of Better Homes. There will be fifteen prizes in all, including scholarships and cash. The competition is open and all entries must be received postmarked on or before 5 p. m., March 1, 1926, in the hands of the Competition Committee, The California Art Institute, Alvarado and Ocean View Ave., Los Angeles. Terms of the contest will be furnished on application.

THE WILSHIRE GALLERIES, 3309 Wilshire Boulevard, Los Angeles, opened last month, and will show modern painting and etchings.

THE SOCIETY OF ARTS AND CRAFTS held a meeting at the Studio Inn in Los Angeles on the Thirtieth of January. A full report was given of the Society's activities since its organization in the fall of 1924, when Mr. H. L. Hewson rented them half of his shop, until October, 1925, when the strong young society moved into quarters of its own at 2871 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles.

DARK AND LIGHT is the name of an Art magazine published each month by the Arthur Wesley Dow Association. Miss Annita Delano is the editor.

THE ARTS AND CRAFTS SOCIETY are issuing a book of original designs in dark and light. The selections have been made and the book is in the printer's hands.

AARON KILPATRICK, after painting in Mexico during the fall months returned to his studio in Eagle Rock, and during January held an exhibition at Carmelita Gardens House, Pasadena.

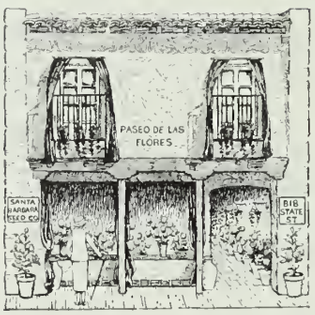
ARTHUR MILLER will show dry points he has been doing of local subjects in the print room of the Biltmore Salon during the last part of February, opening the 22.

CALIFORNIA SOCIETY OF MINIATURE PAINTERS will hold the Ninth Annual Exhibition at the Biltmore Salon, Los Angeles, opening February 1. The Society held the annual meeting in January when the following officers were elected: Miss Ella Shepard Bush, president; Miss Martha Wheeler Baxter, 1st vice-president; Miss Helen Beatrice Slutz, 2nd vice-president; Miss Gertrude L. Little, secretary, and Mrs. Annie Baldaugh, treasurer.

El Paseo Patio

Lunch Out of Doors or Dine
at
"EL PASEO"
23 E. de la Guerra St.
Santa Barbara

DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS
SANTA BARBARA



THE LOVELY SHOPPING STREET IN SPAIN

SPUNWOVEN
"THE GYPSY SHOP"
Hand Fabrics
BETH AND IAN M. WOLFE
Studio 32, de la Guerra Studios

ELEANOR JOHNSON
Studio for the Voice
Suite 103, de la Guerra Studios

THE STUDIO ART SHOP
A. FALVY
Antiques
9 East de la Guerra Street

MARINA FLINT
Kimonos, Chinese Suits, Bed Sacks
Suite 114, de la Guerra Studios

Flowers Sent From
Paseo de las Flores
Will Be Greatly Appreciated

Street of Flowers
818 State St.

All are welcome to Browse in this delightful shop in an old Spanish Mansion.

Indian and Mexican Handicrafts

Hand Loomed India Drugget Rugs

ROBERT L. LEWIS
Studio No. 5 at East de la Guerra St.
Santa Barbara, Calif.

EL PASEO SPORT SHOP
MRS. CHARLES O'DONNELL LEE, JR.
Sport Clothes, Hats, Evening Gowns
Children's Clothes
Studio 30, de la Guerra Studios

B. CROFTON ATKINS
Pipe and Tobacco Shop
And Men's Imported Clothing
Studio 29, de la Guerra Studios

DORIS OVERMAN
Designer
Shades, Trays, Decorative Panels,
Aztec Pottery and Lamps
Studio 27, de la Guerra Studios

LEE ELEANOR GRAHAM
Interior Decorator
de la Guerra Studios
23 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

El Cuartel

Visit This New Shop

The Guard House of the old Presidio is now displaying a fine collection of Antique Spanish and Italian Furniture, Spanish and Tunisian Tile, Tile Fountains, Garden Seats, Wall Panels, Mantels, etc. There is also a fine collection of Old Spanish Iron.

WESTERN TILE & MARBLE, INC.
122 EAST CANON PERDIDO
SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

MONCURE DEARDORF
Important Collection of Chinese Jewelry
Dealer and Expert in Chinese Works of Art
Studio 24, de la Guerra Studios

THE POLK STUDIOS
MUSIC, DRAMA, DANCE
Gertrude Jeanette Polk
Artist Teacher of Vocal and Physical Expression
Henry Polk
Teacher of Piano, Voice and Pipe Organ
Suite 110, de la Guerra Studios

PACIFIC MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.
SANTA BARBARA BRANCH
101 EL PASEO DE LA GUERRA

THE GUILD
Inc.
Book Publishers
Studio 28 de la Guerra Studios

TECOLOTE
Bookshop and Lending Library
New and Standard Books
25 DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS
SANTA BARBARA

Community Arts Association
SANTA BARBARA
SCHOOL OF THE ARTS

FRANK MORLEY FLETCHER, DIRECTOR
GRAPHIC, DECORATIVE AND PLASTIC ARTS —
DRAMA, MUSIC, DANCING
Semester October-May. Summer School six weeks July-August
Address 916 Santa Barbara Street, Santa Barbara, Calif.

LA MANTILLA
Costume Designing and Remodeling
Studio 31, de la Guerra Studios

SANTA BARBARA ART CLUB
No. 15 E. de la Guerra Street
Free Exhibition of Paintings and Etchings
Open Daily 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.
Paintings and Etchings for sale

Mt. LOWE

"Earth has no finer view to show."

Mt. LOWE TAVERN and Cottages
Enlarged and Improved

at the terminus of this World-Famous Trip afford a most delightful retreat for a long or short sojourn at reasonable rates

5 Trains Daily at convenient hours - from Main St. Station Los Angeles

$2.50 Round Trip Rate

For information and Reservations apply

Pacific Electric Ry.

Information Bureau Phone MEtropolitan 7400-TRinity 3661

HOTEL GREEN

A well ordered Residential and Tourist Hotel of peculiar excellence. Open all year. Moderate rates. Apartments by the month.

The Green Tea Pot
A Convenient Restaurant
CHARLES B. HERVEY, Proprietor

Antiques

JOHN W. CONDIT

Dealer in rare old pieces selected from private homes. Specialist in the proper restoration of heirlooms.

199 S. Fair Oaks Ave., Pasadena
Telephone Terrace 0315-W

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - - Editor and Publisher
ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - - Associate Editor

NO. 74, VOL. VIII. FEBRUARY, 1926

CONTENTS

THE DESERT, CALIFORNIA—A PAINTING BY JOHN FROST..Cover Design
(Courtesy of The Stendahl Galleries) PAGE
A COLORADO RIVER DAMSITE..... 9
THE WILD FLOWERS OF CALIFORNIA...Ralph D. Cornell, M. L. A. 9
RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS.....Louise Morgrage 11
THE GARDEN OF MRS. WALTER F. COBB..Ervanna Bowen Bissell 12
FAIRIES IN OUR GARDENS.....Theresa Homet Patterson 13
THE HARRISON COLLECTION OF PAINTINGS....Kathryn Leighton 14
THE SCHOOL OF THE ARTS, SANTA BARBARA..... 15
THE LOS ANGELES NATIONAL HORSE SHOW..... 17
SOUTHLAND OPINION 18-19
DRAMA AT THE STUDIO PLAY BOX. COSTUMES..... 20
THE PASSING OF THE COW-BOY.....Ellen Leech 21
ARTS AND CRAFTS—WEAVING.....Natalie White 22
CLOTHES FOR CALIFORNIANS.....Flornina 23
UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST..... 25
THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER, A. I. A.....H. O. Sexsmith 26
THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES..... 27
FOR ART SECTIONS OF THE FEDERATED WOMAN'S CLUBS..... 28
THE ELEMENT OF LINE IN ARCHITECTURE ... Reginald Johnson 29
A FRENCH FARM HOUSE BY JOSEPH KUCERA..... 31
ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA..... 32
NOTES FOR CONNOISSEURS.....Saxe Brainerd 34

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.

Copyrighted, 1926, by M. Urmy Seares

Subscription price $2.50 per year, $1.25 one half year
RALPH B. URMY, JR., ADVERTISING MANAGER
CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
Mrs. D. B. Sebastian, Box 296, Hollywood, National Representative
Advertisers desiring information concerning space or rates may call Fair Oaks 7034 for assistance
During Press Week, 24th to 30th, call TRinity 1501

The Los Angeles

Elizabeth Arden Salon

with

J. W. Robinson Co.

Los Angeles

UNDER the direct management of Miss Arden and her New York staff, and offering the same specialized treatments which have made Miss Arden's other salons internationally known.

Seventh Floor

GATES
GRILLES
VICENZA STONE
FOUNTAINS
BENCHES
FIGURES
FURNITURE

Chapwoods
ITALIAN HOUSE
6908 HOLLYWOOD BLVD.
HOLLYWOOD
GR 1349

La Solana

A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue.

Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day.

Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St. Pasadena

KIEVITS GALLERIES
Vista del Arroyo Hotel, Pasadena
European and American Paintings

The Mansfield Studios

Interiors designed and executed—Embroideries—Textiles

Pasadena WAshington 3473

Altadena Office Under Direction of Mrs. Samuel Lee Bierbauer
Colo. 2015

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Italian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

A FEW COMPLETE FILES OF CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
May now be secured by those who wish to bind them for libraries. 72 numbers for $7.50 postpaid. A discount of $2.00 will be given for any set not requiring No. 3.

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

THE COLORADO RIVER AT GLEN CANYON WHERE THE FIRST URGENTLY NEEDED FLOOD-CONTROL RESERVOIR IS RECOMMENDED BY THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR. THE CANYON SECTION OF THIS RIVER OFFERS POTENTIAL RESOURCES SECOND ONLY TO NIAGARA. THE EQUALIZATION OF THE FLOW OF THE ST. LAWRENCE RESULTS FROM THE NATURAL GREAT LAKES. CONTROL OF THE COLORADO IS POSSIBLE BY RESERVOIRS FOR WHICH NATURE FURNISHES THIRTEEN SITES OF GREAT CAPACITY. A DAM HERE WILL MAKE ACCESSIBLE BY MOTOR BOAT 200 MILES OF BEAUTIFUL GRAND CANYON

THE WILD FLOWERS OF CALIFORNIA

By RALPH D. CORNELL
Master in Landscape Architecture

AS is wont to befall a maiden of charm, California has received the adoration of many admirers who voice their love in the varying words of lovers, as lovers have done down the eons of time. Her appeal, universal to those who love sunny days, large spaces and the intricate joys of nature, has brought response, equally, in the rugged expression of outdoor men and in the well chosen poesy of the bard who sings of his love. To write anew of the unending, ever-changing beauty of a land already so loudly sung would seem a surfeit of words were it not that the whole can never be said. Love is always new to the lover, who sings, blissful and oblivious to what may have gone before.

It has been said prosaically that California is the original Garden of Eden; that her beauty even surpasses that of this first attempt at garden-making. It is common to refer to her as the land of perpetual summer. But such expression seems vacuous since it would entail the height of monotony to dwell in a place of unchanging beauty and unending seasons. Rather should it be said that in California there are two seasons—Spring and Summer—even though her calendar goes merrily on its way just as in the strange, exotic lands of which we hear and some few may remember. The summers of California are bright and warm with day after day of clear sunshine that paints the landscape with a carpet of soft browns and yellows against which stand, in varying relief, the trees and shrubs and chaparral growth of her vast plains and towering mountains. Throughout her vast spaces exists the greatest variety in landscape pictures, that range from the dessicated wastes of a sun tortured desert, parched and writhing in its contortions of heat, to the cool, green slopes of the high Sierras whose peaks are mantled by perpetual snows. Summer rains are unknown, except in the mountain highlands, and the country broods beneath its canopy of golden sunlight. But when the autumn months of other lands come to bring their killing frosts and stifling cold to those regions so far away, then does the expectant breast of nature stir restlessly in this place called California, for her spring season is at hand.

The first gentle rains of the autumn months awaken the life of a new springtime; the brown grass carpets of a vast country effect a subtle change; tender greens appear, soon to clothe with fresh raiment of increasing color the hills that long have lain in dormant expectancy. Spring is at hand; and Spring remains through the long months when Eastern States are mantled deep in snow. Springtime is always a season of unfoldment and joyful revelation which, in California, culminates in a climax of color and woven tapestries of wild flowers that are unequaled in other climes. Whether it be coastal slopes, inland valley or desert plain, wildflowers seem literally to clothe the earth, appearing in only that prodigality of which nature is complete mistress. Then this joyous springtime of many weeks, climaxed by her vast orgy of flower color, is at last checked by unseen hands. The sunshine of warmer days creeps upon the land, drought settles like a hood over the smiling faces of our flower friends; grasses parch and brown, and Summer once more claims for her own the months of unbroken sunshine.

Monotony? No! The days in California are glorious. Compared with the lands of other days, which some who read this page may remember, this Golden State seems to have been chosen as a favorite canvas by the one great Artist who paints best in Nature's colors, for California has more varieties of wildflowers, trees and shrubs than any other state in the Union. She has practically

DESERT SAND VERBENA (ABRONIA VILLOSA) IN THE COACHELLA VALLEY NEAR INDIAN WELLS
THIS LITTLE VALLEY IS AT THE HEAD OF LANDS IRRIGABLE IN CALIFORNIA BY WATERS FROM THE COLORADO RIVER WHEN THE SALTON SEA IS PROTECTED FROM FLOODS AND THE WATERS OF THE COLORADO RIVER ARE CONTROLLED

WHITE EVENING PRIMORSE (OENETHERA TRICHOCALYX) ON THE FLOOR OF THE SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY, NEAR BAKERSFIELD

as many native plant varieties as are found in all of Europe. She has contributed more plants to the gardens of the world than has any other one section of the earth's surface. More than three thousand distinct species of plant life are employed to weave the intricate carpets that clothe her hills.

In the face of such statements, it would seem as though the supply might be inexhaustible and as though the tapestries of color might be woven anew each springtime with undiminishing brilliance. In contrast to such a happy thought, however, the truth is, that as on all frontiers, the progress of man is trampling to dust much of the God-given beauty of our natural landscapes and the wild flowers are disappearing about the congested communities that have felt the heel of his imperious stride. Automobiles that make remote spots easily accessible; the human lust for possession; thoughtlessness; "taming" of the soil with its attendant cultivation; grazing of stock; the inevitable "improvements" of expansive growth;—all unite to wipe from the hills this unsurpassable beauty of her primitive wild flowers. Choice varieties of wild flowers have become extinct in many localities where once they flourished in countless millions. The war of civilization is on and man has ever been the most destructive genus of the animal kingdom. The single hope remains that a sufficient appeal can be made to the intelligence of the masses for them to protect the wild flowers; to leave them in the open spaces for the enjoyment of all; to sow them in their own gardens and on the vacant lands in their community. The older and more densely settled states have long had leagues for the protection of wild flowers, and California should never be one to lag behind.

It is perhaps fortunate that a vast number of our native flowers are annuals that propagate each Spring from seeds of the previous season, and that they may be grown easily in man-made gardens. Their cultivation is simple. Properly sown in cultivated ground, they will mature in splendid beauty with no more care than that of the gentle rains and warm sunshine of a normal season. As there have ever been pioneers to point the way to riches just beyond the horizon, so, too, has California's Southland had her pioneer in the realm of wild flowers and native plants. Theodore Payne, a seedsman and self-made botanist of thoughtful personality, early saw the writing on the wall and has spent the past twenty years of his life in an effort to bring to the realization of the people the beauty of these flower friends and the danger of extermination with which they have been threatened increasingly. Results are at last forthcoming in a gradually awakening public conscience against the wanton destruction of the sunny-faced wild flowers and toward their perpetuation through protection and cultivation. California flowers, trees and shrubs have been grown in the warmer regions of England and France for years. Her seeds have been propagated in all civilized countries of the world whose climates are hospitable to her unusual forms of plant life. Even in the strange, exotic lands of which we read, where winters are cold and summers are brief, seeds of annual flowers from this sunny State will germinate and grow to a fulness of maturity that carries with it a bit of sunshine transplanted from their native heath. Such seeds can be sown only after danger from late frosts has passed, but they are more and more finding their way into eastern gardens. Thus is the way of beauty, which is ever sought in every clime. Where there is beauty there must be love, and love is ever new to the lover.

THE COLOR PLATES

BY courtesy of The Stendahl Galleries we have been able to present color plates of paintings by two painters of California's varied scenes this year; and it is hoped that the series may be unbroken for the twelve months.

In January a characteristic landscape by William Wendt, A. N. A., gave a comprehensive idea of the beauty of our wooded arroyos or dry water-ways where much of the leafy boscage of the southland is concentrated.

This month Mr. Stendahl has loaned us his plates of a painting of the desert by John Frost, one of our most sympathetic interpreters of this great stretch of the southern part of California.

The presence of the desert is the most distinctive influence which will eventually mark whatever school of art develops in the southwest. Its splendid cloud forms provide skies unknown to other palates; its great sweep of country intrigues the painter much as the level stretches of Holland have dominated her art.

In color the desert air and the remarkable soil of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado combine to lure the painter to his own undoing; and yet, something true is surely springing up out of this unique combination, and our desert pictures are most popular.

Restraint is the quality most needed in handling the gorgeous colors of the desert; and it is his restraint in the use of colors, his mastery of the blue in the atmosphere and his simple handling of great masses of mountain and mesa that has made John Frost's canvases so greatly in demand during the few years in which he has been working here.

So varied is the material of our landscape, so universal throughout the state is our individual response to weather conditions which make for out-door living, that painters in California find studio work uncongenial and an out-door studio is almost indispensable. Artists have, therefore, a great influence in leading the development of the country; but like the trapper and hunter of pioneer days they disappear into the landscape when the subdivider appears on the scene and seldom do they help him to develope the landscape successfully. Soon our painters who care to be near the edge of civilization will be compelled to turn and meet the subdivider half way, and even to help him, and his partners of the building fraternity, to make paintable pictures whenever they are determined to occupy the land.

To be sure there is always the sea; the mountains are ours for the lifting of an eyelash; and forever our artists will find above them the peerless blue of a California sky.

"CANDELABAS DE DIOS" OR SPANISH BAYONETS (HESPEROYUCCA WHIPPLEI) NEAR CAMP BALDY, SAN ANTONIO CANYON

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

THE SENATE AND THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

By HENRY CABOT LODGE, Charles Scribner's Sons

The people who lived through the four years of the World War, could scarcely be expected to grasp its essential significance. They were like spectators placed too close to the screen at the cinema, where an exciting and frightful spectacle is passing swiftly before the bewildered vision. Startling incidents, critical situations, distracting episodes follow one another in rapid succession, leaving the observer dazed and absolutely powerless to make any use whatever of his reasoning faculties. The World War was just like that. And when this terrible show was over, and tremendously complicated issues arose demanding immediate settlement, a muddled world seemed undecided on all other points but one, which was a fervent prayer for some or any contrivance to avert for all time any repetition of this horrible calamity. Surely this was the moment for the man of the hour, and to many this man was Mr. Wilson. No one could be more eager than he to effect some method for doing away with wars, and the device for accomplishing this purpose, upon which he pinned his faith, and for which he was even willing to sacrifice his life, was the League of Nations.

Probably in this country, for a comparatively brief period, no question connected with the aftermath of the war aroused greater interest in the public, than did this same League of Nations. Mr. Wilson was its enthusiastic sponsor, Mr. Lodge its chief opponent. Squarely behind these two men as leaders, the senators and the people ranged themselves into two opposing and often bitter factions. The whole affair will of course in time resolve itself into one of the great problems of history, and tons of literature on the subject will issue from the printing presses. In the meantime a most satisfactory beginning has been made in "The Senate and the League of Nations," written by Mr. Lodge just before his death, and recently published. It contains a clear, forceful and, for the most part, dignified exposition of what he did during the crucial period, and why he did it, and also his estimate of Mr. Wilson's character and motives for his conduct. The value of this contribution made by one so eminently qualified to speak upon this vexing problem can not possibly be overestimated.

Mr. Lodge's convictions regarding the membership of the United States in the League of Nations apparently became almost as sacred as a creed. It is impossible to read this carefully prepared account of his procedure in the matter without respecting his acumen in the stand he took on a question of such vital importance to our country as a whole. His sincerity, his prudence, his integrity, and patriotism can not be doubted for a moment. Likewise we admit his justification for the judgment he formed regarding the perplexing personality of Mr. Wilson. And yet there may be readers who will recall Shakespeare's "there are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio, than are dreamed of in your philosophy." Mr. Lodge refers again and again to the celebrated phrases, "too proud to fight," and "peace without victory," as evidence of certain weaknesses of character and purpose, but after all, is the sentiment there expressed so very different from the precept contained in "turning the other cheek," spoken nearly two thousand years ago and still echoing down the corridors of time? Is it not barely possible that Mr. Wilson was sincerely a mystic with transcendent vision? Naturally so obvious a comparison occurred to his associates, and it is reported that M. Clemenceau said that "Mr. Wilson talked like Jesus Christ and acted like Lloyd George."

The difference in viewpoint of the senator and the president might well be resolved into the eternal conflict between realism and idealism. Mr. Lodge and Mr. Wilson were like two men, standing on opposite sides of an inexpressibly wide and deep chasm, each seeing only his own prospect and having no conception of that on the other side. One was the practical man of affairs, who saw the world as it really is, while the other was the dreamer, who saw the world as he wished it to be. Mr. Wilson was the Socrates, who harangued on the street corners, while Mr. Lodge was the Xantippe, who attended to the practical management of the home and spoke about it. If the comparison strikes anyone as petty, he is referred to Mr. Lodge's last chapter, where in summing up his characterization of Mr. Wilson, as a whole, he unconsciously displays the irritation, which persons like the president, often arouse in others having dispositions like Mr. Lodge's.

The reader may disagree with these reflections, but all must agree with the statement that this volume will constitute a most valuable reference book to place upon the library shelves of anyone even slightly interested in this important period of our country's history. It contains data on certain questions, bound to come up in discussion from time to time, like the trouble with Mexico in Mr. Wilson's administration, and the correspondence over the sinking of the Lusitania. Mr. Lodge quotes freely from his own speeches regarding these episodes, and he gives the entire speech of Mr. Wilson's containing the "fourteen points," and parts of others with the famous phrases. The League of Nations appears with all its original articles, amendments and reservations proposed by various individuals, during its consideration by the senate, and reasons for the rejection of each. The appendix, occupying nearly half the book, contains in entirety important speeches by both men, and the report of a conference at the White House, August 19, 1919.

THE MAN WITH A LOAD OF MISCHIEF

By ASHLEY DUKES, George H. Doran Company

Dramatists and others who feel they have the call to interpret the romantic aspects of the past, must exercise some cunning regarding the period chosen for exploitation. Not every age, by any means, can possibly be made to yield the requisite shades of glamour, since tradition has bestowed them generously upon some and denied them to others. A romancer who wishes a prince for a character, will do well to choose one of the Jacobites in England, since time has varnished their naughty deeds with a gleaming lustre. But he is brave indeed who takes a prince from the eighteenth century for his romantic hero, for were they not all fat, stolid and Germanically inclined? Yet Mr. Dukes, in his fantastic and whimsical little comedy, has chosen a nameless prince of just this time and made something of a cavalier of him, simply because he is adroit enough to keep his highness out of the play altogether. He constantly hovers over the scene, threatens to appear, but never does. Instead, his friend, his mistress, the gentleman's valet and the lady's maid make up the play. None of these characters have much more than a trace of moral sensibility, while they simply reek with charm, a condition, which unfortunately happens to be a universal accompaniment of life.

So out of very little indeed, four nameless characters, a shadow of a prince, no action to speak of, nothing spectacular in the way of setting, which is the living room of an English inn, Mr. Dukes has constructed a bit of charming, subtle, and delicate illusion, with a very definite appeal to the imagination. Due to the fineness of its shading, we fancy it may read better than it plays upon the stage.

BEYOND KHYBER PASS

By LOWELL THOMAS. The Century Company

Well seasoned globe trotters generally adore visiting those parts of the world where the majority do not travel, yet they omit from their itineraries, the unknown country of Afghanistan. This is not at all strange, since it took Lowell Thomas two years to obtain from English officials in India, and the Emir of Afghanistan, such necessary credentials as would enable him to enter this savage region of Central Asia. In "Beyond Khyber Pass," he has given a graphic and very competent account of his experiences and observations on this remarkable journey to Kabul. Nobody but a reckless adventurer, willing to gamble with fate for his life would care to make this trip, through the brigand-infested defiles of the Khyber Pass, thence over roads, well suited for travelling mountain goats, but not for locomoting Buick cars. But this was nothing to Kabul, where a stranger has to watch out in a wary fashion, if he wants to live. Mr. Thomas, however, managed to emerge a very live man and not a corpse, because he was lucky and most tactful beside. His book is entertaining and instructive, and we are perfectly willing to travel in Afghanistan, through the medium of its pages from the depths of an easy chair.

PENCILLINGS

By MIDDLETON MURRY. Thomas Seltzer

Since Goldsmith is dead and can not help himself, we shall take the liberty of twisting about a rhyme of his to express our sentiments regarding Mr. Middleton Murry, after reading his book of literary essays, entitled "Pencillngs."

We gaze and gaze, and still the wonder grows
That one small head can carry all he knows.

Naturally we expect an Englishman, whose trade is literature, to have his intellectual system built upon a classical foundation as firm as the rock of Gibraltar. But this equipment is a small part of what Mr. Murry can produce, in the way of acquaintance with the world's literature, past and present, if we are to take the contents of "Pencillings" as an indication of his knowledge. It would seem that he has read everything worth while, and even some not so much so, that has ever been written. It is somewhat discouraging for the amateur literary critic to contemplate such thorough preparation in one so eminently fitted for such an exacting, if rather pleasant job.

The reader of books written by the most notable among our current authors, will find here most stimulating and refreshing matter in the way of literary gossip of a high order, and criticism that is reliable. Mr. Murry can criticize because he understands the technique of writing, and his prose in every respect illustrates the requirement for style, which he stresses in the paper discussing that elusive subject. However in the chapter, called "Why do Poets Write?", we suddenly find an indefinable quality, missing elsewhere in these papers, which rouses that glowing sensation in the reader's consciousness, and we forthwith decide that Mr. Murry has omitted the most important element of style from his discussion. But anything he has to say will prove most invigorating to the person interested in literary discussion and criticism.

TOLERANCE

By HENDRIK WILLEM VAN LOON. Boni & Liveright

Everybody who read enthusiastically Mr. Van Loon's "The Story of Mankind," is well acquainted with his blandly engaging manner of rewriting history. That volume was primarily intended to give children a bird's eye view of man's progress since primitive times, but like that famous classic "Alice in Wonderland," amused and instructed the younger generation, to a certain degree, but could be comprehended only by the older person, fairly well grounded in the psychology of living as well as the facts of history. Nevertheless it was an excellent piece of literary work, and the same may be said of its successor, "Tolerance," written in the same mellow, genial, broadminded fashion, displaying the same keen eye, leveled this time at the progress of man's spiritual life, his faith, and what he thought about God and infinity, and moreover how he treated those who did not agree with him on these vital questions.

Viewed in the light of an absorbing story, retold with spirited distinction, "Tolerance" is certainly a great success, but it is inadequate in the way of offering any solution of how to make man look upon his neighbor's viewpoint with kindly sufferance. Mr. Van Loon, however has x-rayed this nutty problem and found the kernel, even if he does not explain how to extract it, when he remarks that the faith of men, who have fought for tolerance, "was tempered by doubt; they might honestly believe that they themselves were right, but they never reached the point where that suspicion hardened into an absolute conviction." Indeed what other course is open to the man, who knows that he himself is right, than to believe his neighbor wrong? Just what can be done to help that situation? Mr. Van Loon suggests the cultivation of an alloyed faith, so to speak, a "divine doubt," a very sensible theory probably to some, but we may reflect with amusement on its appeal to good Roman Catholics or

(Continued on Page 22)

WITHIN GARDEN GATES

ERVANNA BOWEN BISSELL
EDITOR, GARDEN PAGES

THE GATE TO CASA DE MARIPOSA, THE HOUSE OF THE BUTTERFLIES

THE garden of Casa de Mariposa is really an extension of the house. Every well-planned garden should be, especially in a land where one lives out-of-doors the year round.

In the morning, one steps from the breakfast-room, yellow in furnishings and decorations, into the sunshine of a green-walled garden whose flowers repeat the same golden note. Yellow roses clamber over the hedge. Yellow lantana, yellow alyssum and yellow seedums reflect the same hue from jar and garden vases. Here, "Shut in from all the world without" one may breakfast or lunch with the birds for company.

THE BIRD BATH IN THE BLUE AND GOLD PATIO AT CASA DE MARIPOSA, THE MONTECITO HOME OF MRS. WALTER A. COBB

The Patio on the west side of the house emphasizes the deeper yellows of a noontide sun, the richer blues of a midday sky. These colors are echoed in furniture and awnings, in tiles and pottery, and in the flowers. Clipped edges of Japanese box and rows of trimmed arbor vitae, with grass between keep a green space down the middle of the formal garden.

In the center of the Patio is the birdbath with its flying figure: an eager messenger poised to summon winged friends of the air. Visitors often pause to fling a coin into the fountain, safe-guarding their sure return.

The long garden is enclosed by trellises covered with blue Plumbago and Reve d'Or roses. The borders on either side are filled with the blue of Nemesia, mauve of stock and viola which blend with the orchid tones of Schizanthus. Rounded openings in the lattice-work frame views of the rose garden outside and the distant mountains.

The formal garden is terraced, ending in broad steps of natural rock which lead down to the rock-garden beyond. The steps are abloom with flowers. From every crack spring many colored seedums, alyssums, yellow and white, tufts of English pinks and primroses. At the top of the stone stairs are perfect specimens of Bouquet d' Fleur. Outlined against their shiny green are two Strawberry jars filled with seedums and topped with rosy-twigged cacti, the Bird's Nest variety.

Nature evidently intended Santa Barbara to plan Rock gardens. Ages ago she hurled down from the mountains boulders of every size and shape, and has weathered them through the years. Could any gardener resist such an opportunity, although the climate is not adapted to many varieties of rock plants? The beauty of lichen-covered boulders has been too strong for some enthusiasts to resist. They are willing to supply the gentle dew from heaven, even through a hose. Glad indeed to be rain makers by rubber to belover rock-plants.

The western end of Mariposi garden is laid out in a series of rock divisions like Mrs. Wilder's jewel-boxes. Here seedums and succulents and shallow-rooted plants grow in profusion. In the shade of spreading Monteray cypresses are tree ferns and maidenhair, Cinerarias, from palest blue to deep purple blossom on the outer edges of this circle of shade.

THE GREEN-WALLED GARDEN WITH ITS SENTINEL CYPRESS

The mistress of Casa de Mariposa is a wizard with colors whether dyed by Nature or man. Color is the distinctive characteristic of this house and garden.

Fragile will-o'-the-wisps of color float in the sunshine; hover over the heliotrope, come to rest upon a rose. As if the flowers themselves had taken wing, drifting upon the wind, are clouds of jewelled butterflies which give the house its name.

Boulders in Broad steps lead to the Rock Garden—Casa de Mariposa

Where in jewel boxes the rare plants grow—Montecito, California

THE FAIRIES IN OUR GARDENS

By THERESA HOMET PATTERSON

DO YOU believe in fairies? Of course I do, for I have seen them in every garden. We scarcely know whence or why, but when they come their gossamer wings transport us from any plain commonplace garden into fairy land. No one but fairies could live on honey or build houses of plant down and anchor them with cables of spider web. Ask any little child if any one but a fairy could build this little mossy house on the apricots, and any grown-up knows that only a fairy could come out of such a tiny pearl.

This apricot nest was built in Altadena between a drive and the house hardly four feet from a window. What an opportunity for a moving picture, starting with the decision, laying the cornerstone as it were, making fast the foundation, moulding the spungy walls with her own pulsing breast, adding the decoration of lichens and choice bits from time to time, and then the parting! Some think Mr. Hummer sort of a Mormon who leaves his lady for one in Arizona and after that another in Colorado, but I think it is this way. Mrs. Hummer says, "Now, I haven't a thing to do but sit on these eggs and I know just how to feed the babies and there will be only two of them and I'd rather be busy anyway, so why don't you run along up into the mountains or over to Arizona. Maybe you could help some little miss over there to get a house started!" No sooner said than gone! (Camera again.) The miracle of life—a bill pierces the shell, then it opens and two wee naked bugs grow into birds. It is a real comedy which looks for all the world like tragedy when mother feeds the babies. The first day or so she shows some consideration for their inners, but after that she runs them through with her bill and churns them up and down. Only fairies could be strung on a bill and not be hurt.

THE TWINS ARE DREAMING OF FLIGHT

In that flower-lined court at Santa Maria Inn I saw a young bird meeting the passing insects more than halfway by running his tongue out and lassoing them. The mother came and sat down beside him. Son opened his mouth—he opened it wider, but the time had come when he must hunt for himself.

There are six Humming Birds in California, most definitely identified by their tails, but that means salt and it is far more sport to identify them on the wing. Your eye can get more exercise in one minute in watching a Humming Bird, to get all its colors and markings, than in following a golf ball all day. The names identify Rufous and Black-Chinned; Calliope is the tiniest, visits us occasionally on migrations and nests above 3000 feet elevation; Anna wears a crown of metallic pink and Costa blue; Allen resembles Rufous with an extra shimmer of green over his back. Their gorgets are opalescent, usually corresponding to the crown color. Rufous, an exception, wears a necklace of fire opals, the Black-Chinned one of black opals, Calliope rubies and amethist, Costa sapphires and emeralds and Anna pink tourmalines.

Burbank is called a Wizard for his cross fertilization of flowers, but these little fairies were engaged in this work long before Burbank's most ancient ancestor had looked upon a flower. This might be called their avocation or work that they do on the side when gathering honey—the same as the bumble bee, whose great value in this respect has been recognized. In their attempt to reach the deep funneled flowers it seems scientific to say that the centuries have lengthened their bills. In some cases they avoid getting their eyes full of pollen by piercing the throat of the flower or by tucking the bill between the petals from the outside, as in the abutilon, again they will dive straight in regardless and come out looking like a dusty miller.

We have a regular storm of Rufous hummers in the orange blossom season (the trees are blooming out of season now.) They seem born of the whirl wind so fierce and daring is their flight. They rise like a sky rocket and when the sun strikes them they are a sunburst of golden light. Someone told me he saw a yellow Humming bird and in great wisdom I replied there is none, but I too have seen the Rufous turn to gold. I think he could make a dash for the Pole from his most northern breeding grounds and return the same day. I saw a currant bush in a Tacoma Park that was simply canopied by whirring Rufous wings, which sounded like an aeroplane field. Mrs. Bailey notes that they build in the vicinity of red flowers, feeding on scarlet penstemons, painted-cups, tiger lilies and columbines, and show as much interest in red as a turkey gobler (or is it a goose?). I think a red perfumed handkerchief tucked petal-like into the pocket would at least be investigated.

It is difficult to say whether the wild gooseberry is the last flower of autumn or the first one of spring, for as late or as early as December it begins to hang rows of little red tassels under its stems. It no sooner hangs out the little red flag than it is adorned by that living jewel, the humming bird, flashing from flower to flower from which it swings as an irridescent pendant. The Anna is everywhere where there are flowers and at all seasons, the only hummer which is an all year resident. There are two other summer residents, the Black-Chinned nesting by streams in sycamores and live oaks, and the Costa nesting in the mesas and foothills. It is very simple to feed in the gardens where gardners have coaxed nature to forget all about seasons, but Anna can forage for herself and while she can be stroked upon her nest by the discreet she can never be entirely tamed or weaned from the wild. November finds her sipping from the tobacco plant; January it is eucalyptus, February manzanitas; March is a revel in orange blossoms with migrating friends; she loves to take a whirl around the blue sage; and in August there is always tar weed in the stubble field. Being honey eaters the humming birds follow the flowers and as the valleys become parched and dry the greater number go into the mountains up to 9000 feet elevation.

Anyone who plants tubular flowers may have his garden be-jeweled without money and without price.

A PEARL OF GREAT PRICE RIPENS WITH THE APRICOTS

HOUSE-KEEPING WITH GREAT EXPECTATIONS

THE HARRISON COLLECTION OF PAINTINGS

With a report by Kathryn W. Leighton of Mr. Harrison's response at a dinner by the California Club

MR. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen:

Mr. President and Members of the California Art Club.

I think you all know that I have a habit of running away from, rather than running towards any opportunity of making the sound of my voice heard in public. It is not ungraciousness nor unwillingness on my part — I simply have the good sense to admit that I have no business inflicting myself upon a good-natured audience.

Tonight conditions are different—I feel that this momentous occasion merits a few personal remarks; that I have a duty to perform; and therefore, I should face it—and, finally, I want to thank your Club for including my wife and myself among your honor guests of the evening.

Not for one moment do I believe you are doing this for us as individuals, but entirely for what we have striven to do for art in a substantial way—as a public benefit. It is no easy task to look at one's self in an impersonal fashion—it is precisely what I am doing—at least trying to do—at this time.

If there is one thing that the name of Harrison stands for in Los Angeles it is Art—American Art at that — and your Club is generous and courteous enough to express its appreciation.

Please remember that the big Los Angeles Museum stands for many things besides art; things that interest the vast majority of our population much more than art. We have had a hard, uphill fight to get recognition, as you know. But the battle has been won and we are now celebrating the new unit of our Museum with a wonderful art exhibit representing the three Americas. The entire Western Hemisphere.

Over and over again we have been asked what prompted us in making our original donation of American Art in 1918, and what has actuated us in adding to, or improving that collection ever since? It was that foundation that has resulted in a permanent Art Gallery in Los Angeles and all you have to do is to visit the Museum to see that the present Pan American Exhibition radiates in all directions from the nucleus which I am proud to say is called the Harrison Gallery.

A Painting by Friezeke in the Harrison Collection Museum of Art, Los Angeles

For a man and woman in their own lifetimes to meet with such a reward is honor enough for anybody. I am not magnifying the importance of the collection which we gave, nor am I minimizing the results of that pioneer gift — call it a laudable ambition, if you wish, or a foolish ambition, if you prefer.

You will pardon me I know for the personal reference I am about to make:

For nine generations within the present borders of the United States, the Harrisons have done something for the community in which they dwelt; beginning in 1628 in Virginia you will find the name is represented in Colonial history — later producing a signer of the Declaration of Independence; two Presidents of the United States and two mayors of one of the greatest cities —Chicago. I could not afford to come to California and be the one Harrison whose obituary would read: "He was born—he lived—he died." It isn't in the blood!

A PAINTING BY GEORGE LUKS IN THE HARRISON COLLECTION, LOS ANGELES MUSEUM OF ART.

On my mother's side my Americanism dates back even further—eleven generations, to Pocahontas who was present when Jamestown was founded in 1607, soon after marrying John Rolfe. So you see that although I have Indian blood in my veins, we are not "Indian givers." No string has been tied to our Harrison Gallery, the donation being outright and for all time. This also explains my natural love for anything and everything American, including Art, and all we require in the Harrison Gallery is that a good picture must be painted by a good American!

A few weeks ago the death of a distinguished eastern citizen was published in the papers. The item briefly mentioned his successful career and the large fortune he had amassed as a glass manufacturer — a matter of interest mainly to his immediate heirs. A reference was made to his palatial winter home in Southern California—a bit of gossip, after all. Finally, however, followed the important news which was broadcasted by the Associated Press from one end of the world to the other: "Mr. E. D. Libbey of Toledo, a famous Art Collector and Art Connoisseur, had willed his treasures to the Toledo Museum."

To be remembered by posterity is not in acquiring wealth, but in knowing how to make proper use of money for the public good.

Your Club invitation reads: "In honor of the Pan American Exhibition" and includes my wife and myself, our Director and Mrs. Bryan and our prominent visiting Artists, as guests of honor. I take it this means that it is in recognition of our individual work in this particular undertaking — the Pan-American—that you have singled us out this evening in a complimentary way.

The United States Section must speak for itself. It is the part with which I have been identified. Out of 217 pictures, I think less than a baker's dozen can be called poor paintings. Any real criticism I feel should not be directed so much to what we secured but on what we failed to include — a case of omission and not commission. You may miss certain well known names in our catalogue, through no fault of ours. Death removed several, including John Singer Sargent from whose brush an example was promised. Absence abroad explains a great many, and absolute indifference the balance. I know that there are many, many heart burnings, and justly so, and this has distressed me deeply. Remember, that 150 invitations went out in a country containing a population of 120,000,000. The three Juries in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles were supposed to give every deserving painter a chance at least.

I feel a word of explanation is absolutely necessary. No successful exhibition can possibly depend exclusively on Juries of Admission. Many important artists simply will not compete. Word cannot always reach every artist of exhibitions nor of meetings of Juries. Eastern exhibitions have tried every known expedient and the invitation system has been found to be most efficacious and when honestly and intelligently administered, the fairest method.

You may ask why I was selected to make out the list of the invited United States artists.

Our worthy Toast Master, Mr. Bowen, a human dynamo—a go-getter at all times, the Father of the Los Angeles Museum and the good friend of Art, away back in 1921 suggested that the Board of Supervisors should appoint me Honorary Art Curator of the Museum. I accepted the position at its full value—not as an empty compliment. I knew Mr. Bowen and the Board of Supervisors intended the word "Honorary" to be taken literally — work without compensation as Art Curator in an advisory but official capacity.

PORTRAIT OF MRS. WILLIAM HARRISON BY ROBERT HENRI. THE PORTRAIT OF MR. HARRISON BY ADAMS IS ALSO IN THE COLLECTION GIVEN TO THE LOS ANGELES MUSEUM BY MR. AND MRS. HARRISON IN PERPETUITY

When the Board of Governors voted favorably on the Pan-American exhibition I was appointed as a sub-committee to work with the Director. We divided the work, and there you are.

Our visiting Artists — the Jury of Awards: Mr. Wayman Adams, Mr. Victor Higgins and Mr. George W. Eggerts — the East and the West—a most efficient Jury. Victor Higgins and I have been friends since 1911. Two of his pictures painted when first he went to Taos, were included in the Harrison Gallery from 1918 until the present moment and only now removed with his approval to make way for something more important later on; for Victor Higgins is an Artist who is developing all the time. Wayman Adams is one of the younger generation of portrait painters so rapidly replacing the great Masters of the past. In June, 1924, he honored me by letting me sit for him. He began one morning at 9 o'clock. That evening at five o'clock the portrait was completed and passed upon favorably by a dozen leading New York artists who happened to meet in the studio. Born in Indiana within a few miles of each other and within a few months of each other — Adams emigrated to New York and became an

(Continued on Page 30)

THE SCHOOL OF THE ARTS

THE formal opening of Santa Barbara's School of the Arts, one of the branches of the Community Arts Association, which was observed January 21, 22 and 23, was so largely attended that it was necessary to repeat the entertainment features of the formal opening on January 25 in order that the public, which clamored for tickets, might be accommodated. Thousands of citizens of Santa Barbara and Montecito attended open house at the School during the ceremonies and the interest in the School as a result of this activity has been quickened as evidenced in the increased enrollment for the Spring term which opened February 1.

The School of the Arts was finally established five years ago by a group of men and women who saw the good such an institution could accomplish for Santa Barbara and her citizens who wished to make a study of the fine arts. Fernand Lungren was leader of this group, and today he still is chairman of the directorate. Shortly after the School of the Arts was founded, it affiliated with the Community Arts Association and now is one of the four branches: Drama, Plans and Planting, Music, and the School.

MISS KUBERT, DANSEUSE, IN A HAPPY POSE

While three branches of the Community Arts Association are working for the community betterment and entertainment, the School of the Arts is aiding the community by training students in the fine arts. The present enrollment of the school is about 300 and under the direction of Frank Morley Fletcher, artist and instructor, who came to Santa Barbara from the University of Edinburgh, the School is growing and its influence is widening. Colin Campbell Cooper, painter and dramatist, has taken such an interest in this little university of fine arts, that he conducts classes because he recognizes the great work which is being accomplished.

The earthquake shattered the old buildings of the School of the Arts, but in six months time a new plant has been constructed on the most interesting historical ground in the city—the site of the old presidio and the first buildings in Santa Barbara. While the six buildings which have been erected for the school are temporary structures, they are built on permanent foundations and soon the first of the permanent units of the School of the Arts will be started.

Many scholarships are given by Santa Barbara and Montecito citizens to persons whose talents indicate genius, and the School of the Arts is doing a fine work, not only for the community but for the art world in general by training those who have taken up the arts.

Isabel Keith Morrison, Teacher of Dancing, Community Arts Association, Santa Barbara

CHLOE KUBERT, INTERPRETER De Mikuan Studios

OF THE ARTS

MISS CHLOE KUBERT, who is affiliated with the dancing section of the School of the Arts, has brought to Santa Barbara a new idea. She has demonstrated this idea and has proved its soundness. Her art is dancing and she is an artist in that field. Miss Kubert believes that the mood governs the dance. She knows that no music can find the dancer in the same mood twice, therefore she knows that no dance can be twice alike even when the same music is played.

This artist has danced many times in Santa Barbara and has been acclaimed as one of the most graceful and expressive improvisors ever seen in the city. There is no rehearsing. She does not even have to know what her accompanist is going to play. As her mood dictates, she interprets the music in dance. The result is a beautiful, natural, free expression which has made for her success in this community as well as in other places where she has appeared. Especially adapted to California's out-door life is this daily expression of joy.

PUPILS OF ISABEL KEITH MORRISON, SANTA BARBARA. MRS. MORRISON OWES HER START IN HER PROFESSION TO THE COMMUNITY ARTS ASSOCIATION OF SANTA BARBARA

WILBERT MORGRAGE, LOS ANGELES, CHAIRMAN OF THE HORSE SHOW COMMITTEE AND INDEFATIGABLE WORKER, TO WHOM MUCH OF THE SUCCESS IS DUE

JOHN McENTEE BOWMAN, NEW YORK, HONORARY VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE LOS ANGELES NATIONAL HORSE SHOW, INC.

February 8 to February 13, 1926

W. W. MINES, PASADENA AND LOS ANGELES, PRESIDENT '26

THE LOS ANGELES NATIONAL HORSE SHOW, INC.

FEBRUARY sees the Horse Show in Los Angeles at the Ambassador Hotel Auditorium. With a strong organization and sincere enthusiasm on the part of all horse lovers in the southwest, the association, formed so short a time ago, is already well established and manned for hard work in the future. Experience has come quickly in the West because of the affiliation with experienced Eastern men interested, and also because of the selection of experts in management.

The officers serving the association in the 1926 show are as follows W. W. Mines, President; Irving H. Hellman, 1st Vice President; Guy H. Woodin, 2nd Vice President. Honorary Vice Presidents: John McE. Bowman, C. Groverman Ellis, J. D. Farrell, Atholl McBean, John B. Miller, Reginald W. Rives, Alfred Rogers, E. A. Stuart, W. H. Weeks. Elmer A. Green, Secretary; Fred E. Harris, Treasurer; Willis H. Brown, Controller; Marco H. Hellman, Chairman, Executive Committee; Wilbert Morgrage, Chairman, Horse Show Committee; F. E. Harris, Chairman, Finance Committee; Wm. May Garland, Chairman, Entertainment Committee. W. S. Blitz, Manager, 1926 Horse Show. The Board of Directors is made up of W. A. Alderson, Dr. Frank F. Barham, Roy D. Bayly, Fred H. Bixby, Carleton F. Burke, Edgar Rice Burroughs, Harry Chandler, Maurice DeMond, E. A. Dickson, E. L. Doheny, Jr., Guy W. Finney, Sen. Frank P. Flint, Fred W. Flint, A. Frank, Cecil Frankel, Wm. May Garland, Fred E. Harris, Irving H. Hellman, Marco H. Hellman, Jack Holt, William M. Keck, Geo. W. Lichtenberger, W. D. Longyear, W. C. McDuffie, Ben R. Meyer, W. W. Mines, Wilbert Morgrage, Benjamin E. Page, LeRoy Sanders, Earl Sandusky, Col. Walter P. Story, Guy G. Woodin, S. H. Woodruff, James Woods, George G. Young.

In these competent hands the interests of all exhibitors will be carefully followed, and the success of our National Horse Show in the West is definitely and emphatically assured.

At the Ambassador Hotel the lovers of fine horseflesh will congregate during the week of February 8 to February 13. There will be hurried luncheons in the grill room where gay parties toss banter and repartee and fly back to the auditorium to see the jumping, or to the stables to see a favorite horse. There will be handsomely appointed dinners for those fortunate ones who have boxes at the show.

This is the most exciting and exhilarating week in the season and it centers in the Ambassador Ring.

ON THE GROUNDS OF THE AMBASSADOR HOTEL, LOS ANGELES

JUMPING IS ONE OF THE MOST EXCITING PARTS OF THE HORSE SHOW

SOUTHLAND

Current Events

CALIFORNIA Institute of Technology has, ever since its founding as Throop College by "Father Throop," been the source of cultural movements and the strong support of civic betterment in Pasadena. The Institute does not yet bear the relation to Pasadena that a university bears to the college town in which it is situated, yet its influence is felt in every good work and its expert knowledge will in time show through the thick layer of politics and prejudice which in our typical American towns doggedly assumes that because we are all free and equal we all know everything that needs to be known on any subject of civic import.

Gradually the newer generation is being educated to respect expert opinion because it knows the labor and time spent in acquiring technical knowledge and is often trained to use that knowledge itself.

Academic the faculty of any Institute or University may justly be called, that is its function and that it is expected to be.

But difficult as it may be to articulate the office of a School of Technology with the life of the man in the street, California Institute has accomplished this in many ways because its staff and its students are residents of value and weight in the community.

Through an affiliated group of people interested in hearing many of the scientific and literary men called to California by the scientific institutions, the Huntington Library and the tourist character of the place, Pasadena is afforded a series of lectures on Current Events held in the Assembly Hall of California Institute of Technology.

Many a noted man or woman has lectured to students or visited the Mount Wilson Observatory in the past without due recognition by the city of Pasadena or without having been met and enjoyed by the music-hungry, art-hungry inhabitants—refugees from climates less kind but more erudite. Today the Current Events Committee maintains its Lecture Course each season and bestows upon an eager audience every Tuesday afternoon some choice reading by the thinkers, the scholars, the leaders of the country in politics, literature, philosophy, or up-to-date discoveries in the scientific field.

Chester Rowell on The World Court prepared us for its contest in Congress; Albert E. Wiggam talked on Heredity; Maurice G. Hindus was announced as speaking on Russia, America and the World, and Dr. Bruno Roselli of the Italian Department of Vassar, on the Romance of Colonial Expansion and twice we heard Maj. Vivian Gilbert.

Varied as the subjects are they never fail to interest a large and appreciative audience. And prominent Europeans like Sir Thomas Adams, who lectured on practical use of scientific knowledge, find enthusiastic receptions and must expect to meet a demand for "more".

January 19, Professor John P. Buwalda, newly appointed head of the Department of Geology in the Institute of Technology, was asked to speak on "Earthquakes and Safety." He remarked on the growing faith in scientific research which could list that subject in a lecture course on Current Events. But his audience showed an absorbed interest and grasped easily the lucid contribution the lecturer made to an intelligent understanding of the source of earthquakes and the sensible building of earthquake proof towns in California.

Professor Buwalda comes to the Southland of California from this State's own University at Berkeley. His knowledge is personal as well as technical and what he gave his audience in information proved that science has a duty to perform in giving the layman a fair show at the results of scientific work in our universities and scientific schools. Too often it is thought impossible to put scientific results into ordinary language and life is too short for the serious scientific man anyway. But certain gifted ones can explain in words of few syllables and unscientific terminology the marvellous insight which science has gained in this age and these favored few must be the mouthpiece for the others and unfold to the waiting world periodically that which science has discovered and which no technician or researcher, no matter how valuable his work is to science, has any right to keep to himself.

Who's Who in Architecture

SOUTHERN California has been called a state of mind instead of a State, but it is really an important part of the long State of California, and its fervid building of shelter and office room for the thousands who have poured into its expansive communities so rapidly forms its chief claim to fame. Whether it builds wisely and well or cheaply and badly depends upon its respect for the high profession of architecture and this journal sees no higher duty than that of helping, as only an independent journal can in the dissemination of information on the subject of who is an architect and, incidentally who is not.

We are therefore beginning—with Mr. Edwin Bergstrom, to whom the thanks of the whole community are due for his vigorous organization of the highest ideals in his profession when those ideals are most needed—a short sketch of the life and works of the architects upon whom Southern California may call with confidence. It is hoped that examples of the work of each architect may be shown in due course of the series throughout the year.

Edwin Bergstrom was born in Neenah, Wisconsin, and received his early education in the place of his birth, later entering Andover. He is a graduate of Yale Sheffield Scientific School, 1896, and of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, 1899. After graduation, he was employed in the office of Tower and Wallace, New York City.

Coming to Los Angeles in 1902, he formed a partnership with Mr. John Parkinson, with whom he was associated for ten years. In 1912 this partnership was dissolved and he entered the field independently.

While a member of the partnership of Parkinson and Bergstrom, the firm erected the greater part of the large buildings of Los Angeles, among which are the Title Insurance, Security, Citizens National Bank, Los Angeles Trust and Savings Bank, Union Oil, Central, Metropolitan, Jevne's, Broadway Department Store, Bullock's, The Home of the Aged, Boyle Heights; the California and the Los Angeles Athletic Clubs, the Alexandria and Rosslyn Hotels, the Utah Hotel of Salt Lake City, Southland Hotel of Dallas, Texas, and the Taft and Pennoyer Department Store, Oakland, California. He has to his credit many beautiful residences in Southern California, among which are those of A. C. Bilicke, South Psadena; C. B. Boothe of South Pasadena; and M. H. Whittier, Beverly Hills.

Since entering the field independently, he has designed the South Broadway Building Company's Building, the Park Realty Company's Building, Metropolitan Theater Building, California Yacht Club, which received the honor award of the Southern California Chapter, A. I. A., several buildings for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Hollywood Studios, the John C. Fremont High School, five grammar schools for the City of Venice, California, the Home Commercial and Savings Bank, South Pasadena, Public Service Building, San Pedro, and the Salvation Army Hotel for Women. At the present time, he is just completing the drawings for the Pasadena Municipal Auditorium and the Southern California Athletic and Country Club.

He is a loyal supporter of everything pertaining to the growth and development of Southern California and may always be depended upon to give liberally of his time and means to any movement that has for its purpose the general advancement of this section of the state. In this field, he was for six years a member of the Los Angeles Municipal Housing Commission and for five years, its President. He has taken an active part in state legislation relating to architecture and housing, and for two years represented the City of Los Angeles in those matters at Sacramento, and was a member of the State Housing Institute.

OPINION

He is past-president and director of the Southern California Chapter, The American Institute of Architects; past Ninth Regional Director of The American Institute of Architects (national organization), past president, Joint Technical Societies of Los Angeles; and a past member of the Municipal Art Commission.

At the present time, he is President of the Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles, which he was a leader in organizing; President of the Sierra Corporation; President of the Sierra Building and Finance Corporation; and a Director of the Los Angeles Athletic Club.

Mr. Bergstom was married in May, 1903, at Redlands, California. Mrs. Bergstrom was formerly Nancy Cheney Kimberley. They have two children, Alice Cheney, and George E., Jr.

The Ethics of Advertising

THERE has been a question in the minds of some ethical publishers as to the advisability of using advertising in their journals. Those who fear they may be influenced in their editorial policy by the necessity of considering the feelings of those who buy space, are acknowledging a weakness which in itself disqualifies them as publicists. It is the independence, the virility, freedom from business entanglements, which give a great publication its influence and therefore its circulation; and its circulation causes advertisers to seek it rather than to be solicited by it.

The ethics of the advertiser demand that he shall tell the truth about what he has to sell. The professional ethics of the advertising agency or counselor are embodied in his preparation for his profession and are vouched for by the whole profession. The publisher belongs to a profession which professes to know more than the public in general on some general topics of interest and to be able to give to readers much information they need or enjoy. His obligation to the public is to present in his advertising pages information they desire on reliable business or professional service and he is as unethical if he misleads them there as he would be if his editorials were in any way untrue.

The ethics of the community as a whole determine the number of jobbers who have no professional ethics but who are hangers-on, or originators of some printed matter which serves merely as a sluice box to convey the funds of the merchant into the cash box of the printer and the postal service of the United States.

Outdoor Advertising and Its Relation to Public Interest

THOSE who use or operate Outdoor Advertising must today be cognizant of the obligation imposed upon them by their employment or exploitation of this medium. Outdoor Advertising, as it exists in America today, is a commercial necessity, and as advertising itself is recognized as being of a value equal in the modern business world to transportation, the cooperation of user and producer of Outdoor Advertising should be developed to its fullest extent in that the aesthetic aspect of its existence should be regarded.

We say that a special obligation toward the public is incurred by the user and producer of Outdoor Advertising, inasmuch as its elements of size, color and pictorial appeal compel the passer-by to see it and read it regardless of his own inclination. Thus its attention value departs completely from the accidental and becomes compulsory.

In accord with the golden rule that he who receives must give, the compulsory attention exacted by Outdoor Advertising must be compensated for by the production of such outdoor advertisements as will give beauty and inspiration in return for attention, and by their placement with such discretion that natural scenic beauty spots are not interfered with nor their aesthetic value impaired.

It has during the entire period of their existence been the practice of Foster and Kleiser Company, who today operate Outdoor Advertising plants in the four states of Arizona, California, Oregon and Washington, in approximately 600 cities and towns, first of all, to employ the finest artistic talent available for the production of the copy to appear on their Outdoor Advertising structures, and to avoid the placement of these structures in such localities as to interfere with scenic beauty.

This latter practice on their part, however, has been to a certain degree unavailing, due to conditions beyond their control. There are many scenic boulevards on the Pacific Coast where Foster and Kleiser Company refrain entirely from the placement of any of their advertising structures, but where certain unthinking individuals nevertheless, mar the beauty with a really objectionable type of outdoor advertisement.

The most deplorable feature of this condition is that to offend the public by such practices is uneconomic, since there is created in the mind of the beholder an unconscious resentment causing any expenditure for this kind of display to be pure economic waste if not actually serious detriment to the product or service exploited in this manner.

Outdoor Advertising is a natural medium of publicity expression. It has existed since the first dawn of history and depends upon nothing but its intrinsic value for its existence, since it is created, supported, and maintained for the sole purpose of valuable publicity and has no other reason for existence.

Foster and Kleiser Company have sought the assistance and advice of all of the civic societies, women's clubs, and other organizations interested in public welfare in an effort to maintain to the highest degree possible the necessary restraint in the employment of such locations as would be objectionable. They do this primarily from a feeling of obligation toward public rights, and also from a conviction that the biggest problem in advertising today is the elimination of waste and that misuse of the medium of Outdoor Advertising in any way constitutes waste.

R. S. MONTGOMERY,
General Sales Manager, Foster and Kleiser Company.

God's Revelation of Himself

"To be at Peace, acquaint thyself with God." Following out our search for Peace, we print each month an answer to the question—"How shall we acquaint ourselves with God?"

IN these few minutes I want to raise the old question: How are we to find God?

He is much nearer than we dream; He is not so difficult to find. Our world is a revelation of God. Shakespeare speaks of "this bank and shoal of time." He means that around us surges an infinite sea. The visible has come out of the invisible. The temporal has emerged from the eternal. Ours is a purposeful universe. It has come from somewhere, and it is going somewhere—moving toward a far-off divine event.

History is a revelation of God. All great literature is a revelation of God. You never are satisfied until you find something higher than yourself. No experience of ours is adequate for us. We transcend what we have and are. We should not seek, if in some degree we had not already found. Eternity is in our hearts. There are high moments in the soul, mystic experiences when we know that we are in contact with more than ourselves.

The God who thus discloses Himself has been breaking through upon the world in the evolutions of all ages at different levels and heights of revelation. But His greatest unvailing has been in the face of Jesus Christ.

No one knew anything of electricity until we invented the dynamo that let electricity through. Nobody made electricity. The dynamo only reveals it. Jesus Christ let God break through His being in tenderness, forgiveness and love. In Jesus Christ we can see Him, find Him, know Him. And in Jesus Christ can we become the objects of His love.

"The healing of His seamless dress
Is by our beds of pain.
We touch Him in life's throng and press,
And we are whole again." RUFUS M. JONES.

THE SUBJECT OF ETCHER AND PAINTER

TWO WESTERN STUDIES BY EDWARD BOREIN, WELL KNOWN ETCHER, A RECENTLY APPOINTED MEMBER OF THE FACULTY OF THE SCHOOL OF THE ARTS, SANTA BARBARA

WITH the passing of the cowboy goes one of the vivid sources of inspiration of the great west to the artist, the painter and etcher. The hills, the mountains, the great forests and spreading plains, the streams and the deserts, have furnished inspiration but always the human interest has been infused through the cowman, the Indian and the cattle.

The high pitched yell of the plains, and the "Ride him, cowboy, ride him!" calls from the canvas and the copper plate. But with the lessening acres, the diminishing herds of cattle, the cowboy recedes into the past and his picturesqueness becomes more a vivid memory than an actuality. Unfortunately one is liable nowadays to visualize a cowpuncher rounding up his charges, not on a sturdy Indian pony or bucking bronco, but in a snorting Ford.

Since so much has been lost, geographically and pictorially, in connection with the early wild West idea,—and since neither wild animals nor wild horsemen are so prevalent on the plains, the artist may yet find inspiration, so far as an example of quick motion and untiring energy goes, in the polo pony in depicting his quick response to every thought of the rider,—or hope of his adversary. Here, too, in this field we have a battle cry, differing only a trifle, the "Ride him off", rises as lustily and with as strong import as the yell of the cattlemen.

While the followers of this kingly—at least princely—sport have no material gain in mind in connection with their goal, and material gain governed the cowboy, yet he infused all the sport possible into every duty, and extolled the merits of his horse in both certain and uncertain language.

For years all the Horse Shows have had a special class for stock horses, and their performances in the ring with their owners and riders have proved extremely interesting to the audiences. This year's Los Angeles Show also includes a class for polo ponies, chiefly through the efforts of Carleton F. Burke of Midwick. Major Burke, with Eric Pedley, Arthur Perkins and Ted Miller, compose the Midwick "Big Four", who won the National Open and Junior Championships in the East two years ago.

Will Rogers has, perhaps, more reason than most to sense the close relationship between cowpunching ponies and polo mounts, at any rate, he is a member of the Midwick Junior team and gets as much zest out of a hard fought chucker as the conquest of a maverick. Jack Holt is another recruit at Midwick from the list of the cowpunchers, who would aid in tracing resemblances.

Artists and polo enthusiasts alike will be offered unlimited opportunity this Spring to learn more about polo and polo ponies as the season opens February 8 at Del Monte with a month of tournament in prospect. San Mateo, Del Monte, Santa Barbara, Midwick and Coronado will divide the sixty-four day meeting.

A dispatch from the East announces a polo contest between horsewomen from Philadelphia and Baltimore as an event of the Spring.

COSTUMES: PLAYHOUSE AND PLAYBOX

BY FAIRFAX PROUDFIT WALKUP

PHOTOGRAPH BY CLINTON C. CLARK

WITH that flair for accuracy which has done much to enhance the steadily mounting reputation of the Community Playhouse, Shakespeare's play, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," was costumed in the dress appropriate to its historical era. This was the fifteenth century.

To some, who expected to see the usual Elizabethan dress, this may have seemed a bit anachronistic, even as would a white-collared Hamlet. Yet, on second thought, would one wish "Julius Caesar" in doublet and hose?

The Costume Committee is to be commended highly for the excellent work in designing the various costumes of this most intriguing era. Not only were Mistress Ford and Mistress Page historically correct as to the cut of their full, semi-circular skirts, deep V necks, and quaint headdresses, but the materials themselves, though "play-made," suggested the rich stuffs of the time. They might have been the richly patterned brocades of Sicily, the ciclatoun or baledin from Bagdad. In a drama of quick action such as this was, the graceful play of the full skirts was not one of the least attractive features.

Since the Renaissance period was noted for its remarkable headdresses, particular stress was laid on this item of costume; with the result that the hennin, or steeple headdress, with its wisp of pendent veil created at once the atmosphere of the time. So, too, did the butterfly wings that graced other fair heads in the comedy.

Dame Quickly, arch gossip and maladroit matchmaker, wore the costume of the middle class; so on her head, as on Chaucer's Wife of Bath, perched the wimple, agitated with every move of her active, tale-telling chin.

The men, too, reflected in their garments the spirit of the times. There was the parson's sombre gown and chaperon, the interestingly cut Cyclas which hung upon Shallow's ineffectual person; the country-style doublet of Slender, emphasizing his Corydonic crudities; and the ultra-stylish costume of the French Doctor. Pages and other lesser characters wore the tabards or doublets, such as their masters would have furnished; John Rugby, especially, might have stepped out (or, rather, been shoved out), of one of Ucello's compositions.

Of course, though the play is named the "Merry Wives," it is Falstaff that makes the play. He, who occupied the centre of the picture, if not the centre of the Dames' affections, should naturally be garbed arrestingly. With that sense of humor in keeping with the comedy itself, this Gargantuan braggart, this Rabelassion plain-speaker, appeared, draped in couleur-de-rose! The huge girth of his doublet, the insouciant lapse of his boot-tops, the saucy set of his rosy cap, all added to the joyous debacle of puffed pride and amorous ambition. Never could Falstaff have been more fittingly portrayed, both in spirit and in manner, than Gilmor Brown created him, in this debonair, ill-suited suit of dandyism.

Since a play attains reality and completeness only when it is presented on the stage, before an audience, it enhances the effect tremendously, when the settings and costums reflect harmoniously the spirit and meaning of the lines. In the "Merry Wives" this effect has been most convincingly attained, with charming continuity and delicacy of motivation; and the rich, winsome costumes, with their aura of tradition and their cleverly arranged color scheme, added a note of verisimilitude and gaiety which will long be remembered by the pleased crowds that filled the theater.

IN a Shakespearean production a unit setting is almost essential, as the swift change of scenes demands the simplest elements of stage design.

With a large Gothic arch in the center, flanked by wings, each having a door with a window above it, both interiors and exteriors of houses may be easily depicted. For a scene in the woods, or a field, however, curtains are let down to hide the side openings and the center arch is used as a frame for the scene.

In a sense, this is true to the old stage mechanics, where both the inner and outer stages were employed.

"The Merry Wives of Windsor," as a specific example, makes use of drop curtains a great deal, with the special instance of a movable stage. The scene in the "Garter Inn," with its cupboards, tables, fireplace and other interesting effects, in order to remain pictorially good composition, required that it remain entire unto itself: so the whole set, with ceiling, lamps and furniture, was built on a platform and is rolled on and off-stage almost instantaneously.

THE SETS FOR "TREASURE ISLAND," PRODUCED IN THE COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE, PASADENA, WERE DESIGNED AND PAINTED UNDER THE PERSONAL SUPERVISION OF ALSON CLARK, INTERNATIONALLY KNOWN ARTIST

When there are so many scenes (fifteen in this particular play), many people doubtless think the cost of production enormous, but it is surprisingly small. In the warehouse of the Pasadena Community Playhouse we have hundreds of arches, tree-pieces, fireplaces, et cetera, and I laways dsign a play with them in mind. ROBERT R. SHARPE

A development room as well as an experimental theater is a descriptive phrase covering the Studio Playbox of Pasadena. In this small theater very interesting phases of the growth of the drama may be followed. The majority of communities count themselves fortunate to have one evenly functioning little theater but Pasadena goes calmly on seemingly unaware that it is vouchsafed more than the usual small city, and not even thoroughly awake to the fact that scarcely a city in the world can boast so beautiful a playhouse or one in which such sincere and earnest work is done.

In the Playbox plays are tried out which have a decided appeal intellectually, and are the work of the best playwrights, which are not apt to prove universally popular but which serve as vehicles for the schemes of Gilmor Brown, the director, and his associate, Maurice Wells. The very essence of this very small theater is its intimacies, the close relation between the players and the audience, as there is no stage, the action taking place within a few feet of the listeners. There is no stage setting in the usual sense but the suggestion of the time and place is attained through the use of an occasional chair, table, and couch, with curtains, and a very clever lighting system, the varying effects are produced. The experiment in this close relationship is for a two-fold purpose, to establish whether such an arrangement lends itself to better productions, and also to guage the benefits to the players. In the last respect the results have been varied, the majority develop astonishingly under these conditions. They feel themselves so much more responsible in a way, finding it necessary to stay in character all the time, never letting down for a moment,, and frequently depending on their own initiative to attain results rather than depending entirely on the director for every detail. Occasionally this training does not carry advantages to a player, it may result in an extreme selfconsciousness, which cannot be eradicated, and in this case the experiment is not repeated.

When the method is a success then the Playbox serves as a laboratory for rounding out and building up central figures for the main roles in the Community Playhouse, the volunteer players for which are recruited not only from the community but the roles are frequently taken by professionals who gladly offer their services as an expression of their appreciation of the theater itself and the work.

Admittance to the Playbox is by subscription only and therefore the opportunity is highly valued and broadly conserved.

BOOK REVIEWS (Continued from Page 11)

Mohammedans, or staunch Prohibitionists, or League of Nationists, to mention only a few classes of people, firmly convinced of their own rectitude. Now that Mr. Van Loon has brought up this matter for discussion, we find it astonishing that the feeling of tolerance prevails so widely in the world even of the present day.

This author believes that the sensation of fear is at the bottom of all manifestations of the spirit of intolerance; well how about self-interest? That ever present instinct in human nature causes more trouble than most people realize, because they are so constantly unconscious that it is often a motive for their conduct, and their viewpoints. But that worldly-wise Samuel Butler, whose note book everybody is at present reading, although it was written years ago, has this to say about self-interest. "The world will always be governed by self-interest. We should not try to stop this, but we should try to make the self-interest of cads a little more coincident with that of decent people."

"Tolerance" therefore may not convince, but it will in most cases entertain and stimulate the reader. Mr. Van Loon has a gift of presenting, with simplicity, what is really complicated and profound; and his smooth manner reminds us that "still waters run deep"; certainly their depths will furnish an exhilarating experience for anyone caring to take a plunge therein.

THE ARTS AND CRAFTS SOCIETY

MARION HUGUS CLARKE, Editor

PHOTOGRAPH OF A CORNER OF A COUNTERPANE WOVEN AT THE SOUTHERN BRANCH OF THE STATE UNIVERSITY

MANKIND has been weaving since the time long, long ago when some savage, who was lying under a palm tree, perhaps, noticed the way in which the wind had caused the leaves to plait themselves together and decided to plait himself a shelter in a similar way. And mankind has been doing it in practically the same way ever since, only each country and each period has woven some of its own individuality into its fabrics.

Until recently, except in the hills of Tennessee and Kentucky, little hand-loom weaving has been done in this country since our great grandmothers wove those beautiful old coverlets of homespun and home-dyed wools. The revival of interest in hand weaving, which sprang up at the close of the late war, was started, probably, through the rehabilitation work among the soldiers. It has not died out, as many other such interests have, but still seems to be growing keener and keener.

A great deal of this interest is among women who found, when the necessity arose, that it was possible to reorganize their household duties so as to gain time for hospital and Red Cross work, and since the war, finding themselves with a new freedom and knowledge within them of the joy and thrill which comes from constructive, creative work, have turned to the arts and crafts to satisfy this new desire for self expression. Weaving for many has proved a very happy medium. It is a craft which would naturally appeal strongly to women interested in the home because of the beautiful and useful things which can be made on the loom.

Through this revival of interest a new type of weaving is now developing which is indicative of the present time, just as the strictly useful towels, table linen, blankets and coverlets of the earlier period were indicative of that day when to satisfy the needs of the household was all that could be hoped for. Now, beautiful silk brocades are being woven for hangings, draperies, cushions and upholstery, as well as lovely linens for napkins, towels, table and dresser scarfs.

At first most of these weavers seemed quite content to copy, or adapt the old colonial patterns to this new type of work. Many of these patterns are very beautiful, and to be able to use them in a fine way requires a great deal of appreciation. But now there seems to be a very general desire to learn the analysis and drafting of pattern, which must mean that the desire to create is growing still stronger.

How splendid it would be if out of all this urge to create would arise a collection of new patterns even finer than those produced during our country's early struggles, and these to be representative of the spirit of this new found freedom and independence of women.

NATALIE WHITE, Art Department, University of California.

WE offer for investment of Personal or Trust Funds sound Securities returning highest rates consistent with safety.

WILLIAM R. STAATS COMPANY

Established 1887

Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds

311 East Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIF.

Los Angeles San Diego San Francisco

A new, popular edition of

SMALL HOUSE DESIGNS

Published by the

Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara, California.

Price $1.50 Postpaid

The Assembly Tea Room

The In and Out-of-Town House of Los Angeles serves

LUNCHEON, TEA AND DINNER

INCIDENTALLY

The Very Choicest Food

Special Sunday Dinner 5 to 8

644 South Flower St., Los Angeles

Phone VAndike 7177

So Goes Milady With luxury attending

Golden State Limited East

Full half a train devoted to woman—greater recognition of her just dues in travel than ever before planned. Perfect in every appointment—of course.

All-Pullman—women's lounge, shower bath, maid, manicure, expert hair bobbing in the barber shop—comfort for the men, too—club car, bath, valet and barber.

Leave Los Angeles 12:01 p. m. [via Southern Pacific]; San Diego 10:45 a.m. [via S. D. & A.]; arrive Chicago 10:00 a. m. third day [via Rock Island].

Thru Pullman daily from Santa Barbara 8:00 a. m. [via Southern Pacific].

For tickets, reservations, personal service, call on

Southern Pacific City Ticket Office
937 State St., Santa Barbara, Calif.
Phone 243

or address B. F. Coons, General Agent
Rock Island Lines
809 Van Nuys Bldg., Los Angeles, Calif.

Rock Island

SOUTHERN PACIFIC LINES

Meals? "The best on wheels"

893

CLOTHES FOR CALIFORNIA—FLORNINA, PASADENA

SOUTHLAND SERVICE PHOTOGRAPHS

SOUTHLAND clothes selected by discriminating people for all occasions share the general trend of the Coast toward out-door life. They are therefore gay in color and more or less of the sports clothes variety.

Nevertheless, evening at the restaurants or the club functions sees the most ultra of evening frocks in Los Angeles, and no more handsomely dressed women appear anywhere.

On the street in summer as well as in the long spring-weather season, we find much to be desired in the appearance of the multitude, which, so recently come from points east of us, and so easily carried into the city, does not know where to find the proper clothes for town.

Californians, however, are well served in Pasadena and no traveller need worry about what to bring to the Coast. Travelling clothes are alike the world over, and everything else may be found after one has arrived on the scene and tested out her own reaction to the climate.

THE SELECTION OF AN EVENING GOWN IN THE EXCLUSIVE SHOP, "FLORNINA," 95 SOUTH LOS ROBLES AVENUE, PASADENA

A SPORTS SUIT IN WHITE FROM "FLORNINA," 95 SOUTH LOS ROBLES AVENUE, PASADENA. THE SERVICE OF THIS HOUSE IS RECOMMENDED TO VISITORS IN CALIFORNIA AS SINCERE AND COMPLETE

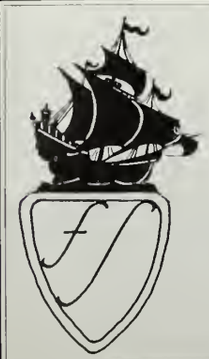
PAINTINGS OF THE WEST

STENDAHL GALLERIES

OF THE PACIFIC COAST

The Ambassador Hotel—Los Angeles Hotel del Coronado—San Diego

The...
RAYMOND



PASADENA
Southern California

WALTER RAYMOND
Proprietor

ARTHUR E. SAFFORD
Manager

Golf course on its own grounds.

fabriano shop

"By the Tall Sycamore"
Sixty South Catalina, at Green, Pasadena

Fine Imported Hand Loom Papers

For correspondence, etching, engraving, printing, poster work and fancy wrapping.

Designing, Printing, Engraving
Imported and Domestic Handmade Gifts

Wakefield 4082

Landscape

Designing and Planting

The beautiful gardens of Southern California which we have created are evidence of our ability to design and plant your own grounds properly.

A reliable firm of thirty-eight years' experience in Southern California.

EDWARD H. RUST
NURSERYMAN

1625 Bank St. Colo. 997
So. Pasadena ELliot 2639

"The Birds of California"

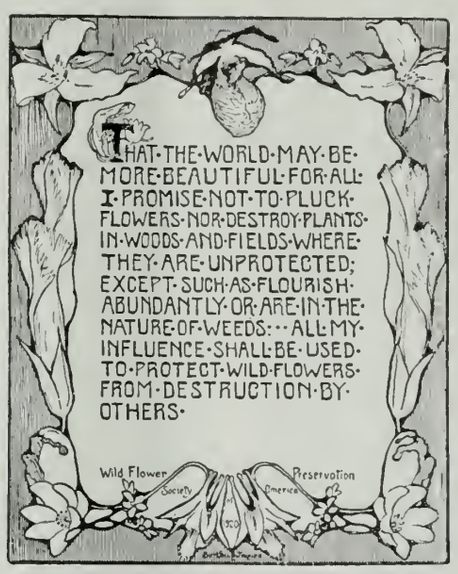
—by—

W. LEON DAWSON

The most beautiful nature book ever published

SOUTH MOULTON COMPANY
301 Bank of Italy Building
Los Angeles, California

CORONA



TYPEWRITERS

With Standard Keyboard
$60 Complete With Case
Also All Makes Sold, Rented, Repaired, Exchanged

Anderson Typewriter Co.
84 E. Colorado St. Pasadena

EL ENCANTO HOTEL, SANTA BARBARA

SOMEWHERE SOUTH IN SONORA
By WILL LEVINGSTON COMFORT, Houghton Mifflin Company

The wild and wooly west, once so useful to the purveyor of tales of adventure, as a storehouse of themes, has declined in interest of late since cowboys have taken to managing temperamental Fords instead of temperamental steeds. But Mr. Comfort has employed it partly as a background for his novel "Somewhere South in Sonora," and therein we read once again about the eastern youth who feels that western lure. As the thrills to be encountered in the Southwest are scarcely flaming enough to keep the lure on fire, south he goes to Mexico. And there he finds bandits, outlaws, rurales, powder, shot, and shell, and finally we think, a girl. What more can possibly be required by the most exacting reader of this type of fiction?

FANCY'S GARDEN
By LUISA RE MONDINI, The Rowney Press

This is a deluxe edition, with attractive features in the way of type, paper and printing. The illustrations pleasingly fantastic and symbolical, are drawings made by Stuart Taber, and Esther Betty Lewis. These combine very well with the subject matter which consists of short poems lyrical in inspiration, for the most part objective, and showing the influence of nature's loveliness in various forms and manifestations, on the poet's mind. Which is just the trouble, they influence the mind and not the heart. Their verbal success is striking, but their lack of true emotional force in most instances, interferes with the pleasure, which a reader expects to find when considering poetry.

FLORNINA
Gowns . Negligees . Accessories and Bathing Suits
Ready to Wear or Made to Order
Unusually Attractive Frocks in Tub Silks and Dotted Swiss
95 South Los Robles Ave., Pasadena
Phone Fair Oaks 113

T. W. Mather Co. Inc.
PASADENA, CAL.

Dry Goods
Women's & Children's
Wearing Apparel

Colorado Street at Marengo

QUALITY SERVICE
THE ELITE
DRY CLEANERS AND DYERS
Plant: 797 So. Fair Oaks Ave.
Colo. 1349 Pasadena, California

Los Angeles National Horse Show, Inc.

Ambassador Auditorium February 8-13

UHRICH
Ladies' and Gentlemen's Riding Coats and Breeches
Absolutely Correct in Model and Details
188 EAST COLORADO STREET
PASADENA

Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes
TROY LAUNDRY
In Business for Twenty Years
Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146 Alhambra 243-J

LAUNDERERS DRY CLEANERS
ROYAL LAUNDRY CO.
461 South Raymond Colorado 67
Pasadena, California

"The Gate to Healthful Beauty"
CORLANE
Marinello System
F. O. 1648 570 East Colorado St.
Pasadena
Opposite the Presbyterian Church

Welcome to call and Browse

First Editions
Early Printing
Autographs
Americana

Rare & Art Books

Books Notable for Printing Illustrations and Binding.

Dawson's Book Shop
627 So. Grand Ave.

Catalogues sent on request:—

LOS ANGELES

A GLIMPSE OF OLD MONTEREY

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

(Continued from January)

IN the United States, where health and sanitation are most important matters, outweighing any effort to preserve relics of past glory, the instant any object gets that musty smell down it comes or goes up in smoke. Most fortunately this destruction did not take place in Monterey. Those lovely old Spanish houses managed to survive until residents of vision, artists, writers, world travelers, and other discriminating persons not so famous, perhaps, realized their charm and the old world flavor of their surroundings, and bought them up one by one. Now carefully and attractively restored, they are homes for one of the most distinctive artist colonies on this coast, if not in America. The whole atmosphere is most appealing and fortunately little has happened to mar its perfection, although there is one restoration so unhappy as to make one wince and look away, and there is a pink stucco house in a spot where no pink stucco house has any right to be. Naturally publicity is not desired. Let even a few merchants of "architecture" rush in and begin erecting those museum pieces that line the streets of cities of southern California, examples of every type of architecture, adapted from every age and every country on the globe, and good bye, Monterey! Its ruin would be complete. Far better would it be for its population to starve or live on bread and water, than to join in the prevailing orgy of selling lots.

BUILT BY THOMAS O. LARKIN IN 1834 AND STILL IN THE POSSESSION OF A DESCENDANT

Although these houses are built along the same general lines, each has its individual features and ways of conveying charm, just as the varying characteristics are found in different persons of the same race. In one part of the town, a road so primitive as to endanger life and limb, to say nothing of one's motor, takes one past a restored adobe with a walled garden. This is a charming residence, and is the home of Governeur Morris, the noted novelist. Next beyond, is another restoration, entirely different, but equally attractive, the home of Marcy Woods, the artist. This has interesting associations, probably no more so than are connected with every old house in town, but more successfully unearthed. It was originally erected for a widow of one of the Presidio's men and the tiles used in its construction were brought from Vallejo's house in Jolon, and are very likely the oldest in California. Another extremely attractive dwelling, although not as old as some, is situated in the town at the corner of Polk and Hartnell Streets. Of course everybody knows the old Custom House, and the little one-storied building that sheltered General Fremont. Near the First Theatre, high above the street, is a dwelling with a garden sloping to the highway that is especially alluring, but defies any attempt of the camera to encompass its fascination. They all have lovely gardens indicative of varying yet always exquisite taste shown by their owners. Anything more delightful than the combination of homes and gardens together is absolutely impossible to conceive.

But there is one feature of this lovely architectural scheme, that should make Anglo-Saxon residents of California fairly shout with glee. Those people accustomed to view with blushing cheeks the atrocious specimens of homes perpetrated by their predecessors in the seventies and eighties in this state, may in Monterey, see a few examples only, alas, of earlier Anglo-Saxon architecture, sure to arouse feelings of joy and satisfaction. After Spain was expelled, and the Mexican period began, this element came creeping in, Gringos or Yankees they were called. Dana tells us in his classic, "Two Years Before the Mast," that these enterprising persons garnered all the coin, since the Spanish aristocracy was too supercilious and proud to engage in commercial activities, and the lower classes too dumb and stupid. Be that as it may, what concerns one far more than the mere accumulation of wealth, is the type of homes these merchants built. The Larkin House was erected in 1834, evidently adapted from the surrounding typical Spanish home with Anglo-Saxon requirements regarding comfort, utility and appearance. This house is still owned by a descendant, but occupied by an appreciative world traveler who knows true charm, wherever it can be found. One other, the "Amnesti" house is similar in type, and both have attached to them large gardens enclosed with high, thick walls of adobe and tile. Their fascination is simply indescribable. If romance and drama, and thrilling events have not happened within their secluded and inviting depths, then these accompaniments of life do not know how to choose appropriate spots wherein to function.

THE AMNESTI HOUSE, OCCUPIED BY MRS. EVANS

THE BATCHELDER TILES

BATCHELDER-WILSON COMPANY

We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

2633 Artesian Street

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Pernays

OPENING EXHIBITION OF CALIFORNIA ARTISTS

January 30 to February 20, Inclusive

(Evenings by Appointment)

William Wendt, Alson Clark, Raymond Nott, Kathryn Leighton, Marion Kavanaugh Wachtell, Edgar A. Payne, Edouard Vysekal, Arthur Hill Gilbert, Carl Oscar Borg, Dana Bartlett, Paul Lauritz, Max Weiczorek, Donna Schuster, Edward S. Curtis

Fine Arts—Pictures—Framing—Nott-Shook Hand Looms

2501 WEST SEVENTH ST., LOS ANGELES

(At Carondelet Street)

Allen's Water Gardens

We specialize in the construction, planting and care of Water Gardens. Consult us before you build that Pool and have it correct in every detail. Now is the time to Plant Water Lilies, for early spring blooms. Our Collection is the finest in the world.

Write for Catalogue Visitors Welcome at the Gardens

3304 Rowena Avenue, East Hollywood, Cal.

Phone Olympia 5816

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A. MONTHLY BULLETIN

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH,
Editor

PLAGIARISM AS A FINE ART

The following is the third installment of a series of articles on the influence of precedent in current American architecture. The series of addresses were given by a group of noted architects at a recent convention of the American Institute of Architects and are reprinted from the proceedings of the convention.

ADDRESS
BY MR. H. VAN BUREN MAC GONIGLE

THIRD INSTALLMENT

IN what I now feel to have been a beneficent pause in the pressure of professional life, the decline of practice during and since the War that afforded time for thought and appraisal, my thoughts on design have been turning, in a kind of intellectual and moral stock-taking, in the direction I am indicating here. I have been wondering whether it is possible to accentuate the vertical movement of a design if conditions of site, or light, or height, or use, suggest it, without its being Gothic or being immediately so labelled. May we not ourselves decline to think of it as Gothic, and regard it as the natural result of an economic condition, as the Gothic was of a spiritual? Is it possible to oppose to the strong light verticals of columns and their shadowy intervals corrective and balancing horizontal shadows without having what we do called Classic? Is it impossible, somewhere, sometime, somehow, to have what we do called just Architecture? Must we forever work in terror of the pestiferous maker of categories who lurks, paste-pot in hand, ready to clap on a label the moment a piece of work is done. Above all, may we not fool him by ceasing to design things that deserve all the labels he can plaster on them through a long summer day? May we not design an architecture firmly rooted in tradition, appropriate to its uses and therefore of infinite variety; free from freakishness as it is free of pedantry, from the timidity that shrinks from the responsibility of placing two mouldings in a certain relation unless toilsome search through the books reveals the glad fact that what we propose has been done before by some braver soul; or from the revolutionary and unbalanced temerity that would sweep the alphabet of our race and art into limbo and substitute for it some impromptu and illiterate gibberish?

Do any of you remember Zenobia, the heroic queen of colonnaded Palmyra, who figured in our childhood's copy books? What would be thought of our penmanship today if we continued to reproduce the correct but colorless Spencerianisms of that copy-book script? And what would be thought of our mentality if we repeated at frequent intervals as the staple of our conversation the statement "Zenobia, Queen of Palmyra, was an heroic Queen." Might not our penmanship as that of mature men be described, by kind persons, as perhaps lacking in character, and might not our mentality with some show of justice be rated as a trifle limited in expression? Yet what, after all, are the columns and orders and details collected in Mauch and other compendia but the Spencerian script of school days? And the statement that Zenobia, Queen of Palmyra, was an heroic Queen, while a thrilling pronouncement in earliest youth, ceases to arouse a passionate interest after the first few hundred repetitions; but it is cognate to the old architectural platitudes we solemnly repeat as the phrases of our daily architectural speech.

I do not know of one architectural school in this country (and if I am doing one an injustice I rejoice in the exception and respectfully salute it) in which the basic elements of architecture are taught—to repeat the figure already used—as parts of speech. Of course we have the famous Orders; but we hear little in elementary instruction of walls and how to build and use them, of openings and how and why to place them, of void and solid and how to span and cover in these voids from solid to solid; of conceiving of architecture, not as a succession of styles ready made to our use, but as what it really is—the arrangement and modulation of light, of shade, and of shadow. Guadet has been crying the secret aloud to heedless generations of students and teachers. Viollet-le-Duc long ago suggested the rational use of precedent in the study of a problem. And in literature, Stevenson in his 'prentice days, to use his own words, "played the sedulous ape" to the great masters of English, one by one, that he might penetrate the mystery of Style by a study of their styles; with the result that he formed a style of his own, rooted in the best traditions of the use of the English language, but so distinct, so personal, that a mere fragment of it torn from its context is recognizable anywhere. But the present day draughtsman in America is helpless without a book open on the table before him, and a pair of proportional dividers to ensure the accuracy of his crib lest he be chided by us, his chiefs and superiors, for departing from the copy we have set him. In Paris we spend years learning to evolve a design from the intrinsic conditions of the problem without looking at a book; but the moment the gangplank is made fast to these shores we yield ourselves to the embraces of the siren Plagiarism, unfair yet not unlovely—and so delightfully easy in her manners.

Entrance Door, House of David J. Witmer Architect

May we not solve an architectural problem in terms of the elements of architectural speech, constructing our own phraseology, developing our own idiom, instead of repeating the phrases and sometimes the entire compositions in which the men of generations dead and gone have expressed the ideals and the modes of thought and living of civilizations long since passed into silence? Must our minds, until we drop doddering into our last long sleep, go instinctively first, not to architecture as just architecture but to the thing represented by some qualifying adjective such as Spanish, Byzantine, Elizabethan, Colonial? Must we forever repeat the gestures to which the chlamys of the Greek, the toga of the Roman, or the hooded cloak of the Middle Age, are appropriate and graceful vesture? Is it impossible to be expressive, even eloquent, even beautiful, in that virile garment the American pant?

Please observe that I am not dogmatizing; I am asking. This is not a lecture, it is an inquiry. And my contribution to this occasion, like those you are very soon to be privileged to hear, is directed toward one single end and that end is the stimulation of thought.

Now, if ever, in the dawn of a new and different tomorrow, is the time for self-searching, for ruthless self-criticism, for high resolve and for laborious and sincere endeavor to cease stammering in alien tongues and to develop and to learn to speak plain and clear, eloquently and beautifully, the language of our own day, the idiom of our own civilization.

I do not propose that we should rush out from here and instantly, in the twinkling of an eye, change the character of American architecture. I have always pleaded with impatient layman for time for our profession to find itself. I know that we cannot evolve a national art with a true native content and accent in a few years. But is it not time to make a conscious and deliberate beginning; to cease to drift; to cease to borrow and commence to pay the world the debt we owe it? If we were mere tyros there might be some excuse for us as there was for the men of 1890, for they had no such supporting background as that they prepared for us. We have worked out our own skeleton, native and American, but we continue to drape it in the costume of Harlequin, a thing of shreds and patches from the European ragbag, too indolent or too indifferent or too ignorant or too driven to devise new garments for it; and the children of our fancy, poor things, are forced to figure in life in the garments of their great-great-grandparents, cut down and made over—a process that fails to conceal their poverty. We could do better by them. I believe the American architect can do anything: But he is a captive in the squirrel cage of the styles; sooner or later, one by one, they all come 'round. If the styles would only die of fatigue and Style be born—and liberated!

For we have had a generation of design now. We are, as a school, sophisticated, even erudite—too sophisticated, too erudite—and there

(Concluded on opposite page)

Excerpts from the Address of David J. Witmer, incoming President of the Chapter, given at the opening meeting for the year 1926.

Fellow Members:

"It is with a sense of loss that I step out of the Secretary's shoes, a feeling of a shifted burden and an added responsibility that I enter this high office which you have seen fit to grace me with. I esteem it a privilege, a very high honor, to be acclaimed your chief servant for the ensuing year. I appreciate deeply, with pride and yet humbly, the trust I feel you have placed in me and only hope with the inspiration you have given me that at the end of the year, with your aid, the honor of this office not only shall have been upheld but that there shall have been recorded adequate progress in the strength of this Chapter of the Institute, a closer bond established among its members, a greater power evidenced for better architecture and better building in its relation with what we are pleased to call, for lack of a better word, the Public."

Urging a continued and wider participation in public service, he continued:

"A wider participation in public service, and by that I mean active work on committees of public or semi-public character such as John Austin's work on the Industrial or Manufacturing Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, Sumner Hunt's activity on the Planning Commission, and the work of others in various service organizations, is most valuable in bringing a better public understanding of the architect, what he produces and his particular value to the community. This thought I urge especially upon the younger men who may not readily see the value of and their responsibility in other than their own immediate interests.

"There is an entirely new problem before us. Or, perhaps, if it is not new, the thought of meeting that problem or conceiving a plan to meet it is new. One of our members, in fact, the new President of the Architectural Club, has suggested that some scheme should be worked out in advance ready for use in the event of civic calamity such as met Santa Barbara, so that the abilities and resources of the architects could be used most efficiently, most effectively to the end that the difficult rebuilding situation confronting Santa Barbara would not be confronting this city after a similar calamity. That is a matter which will receive the careful attention of your Executive Board. I think that a special committee may be asked to work upon this matter."

The chapter pledges its loyal support to the new officers and looks forward expectantly to a year of growth and activity under their leadership.

THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

OFFICERS

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH, PRESIDENT
CLIFFORD A. TRUESDELL, VICE PRESIDENT
C. R. JOHNSON, SECRETARY
PAUL R. WILLIAMS, TREASURER

420 SOUTH SPRING STREET, LOS ANGELES

DIRECTORS

JULIAN GARNSEY, DIRECTOR
J. E. STANTON, DIRECTOR
H. C. CHAMBERS, DIRECTOR

A MESSAGE FROM THE NEW PRESIDENT OF THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB

Fellow Members:

I am deeply appreciative of the obligation you have placed upon me as your president for the year 1926. I have taken this appointment with much reluctance as I feel there is much to be done if the Club is to function as it should. Many of you have already pledged your support to the new officers and it is my hope that every member will be found willing to co-operate in the program of activities which has been laid out for the year.

It will be our policy to have a meeting each month at a set date if possible. The program of the meeting will always contain some fun and entertainment, preferably by Club members. There will also be a part of the meeting devoted to a subject of architectural interest.

The Atelier is to be given more help in criticism and other ways where help is needed. It is our hope that many of the Atelier members will get busy in Club activities. We are planning to call on them to conduct one of the monthly meetings of the Club.

In closing may I say it is my firm belief that the Club has a function in the life and progress of Los Angeles. There is prestige in the Club's name which is going to waste. If we can renew the old spirit of helpfulness and friendliness which has, in the past, held this group so closely together, we can do many of the things this year which need so badly to be done. We can also have a lot of fun along the way while we are doing them. Let's see what we can do.

Sincerely,
H. O. SEXSMITH.

LOS ANGELES PRESSED BRICK PORTFOLIO

The third of the series of portfolios on English domestic architecture has recently been sent out to local architects by the Los Angeles Pressed Brick Company. The photographs are the work of our fellow club member, William Clark. If possible, the last folio is even of greater interest than the first two and has been received with great appreciation by all those who were fortunate in being on the chosen list.

The Los Angeles Pressed Brick Company has shown rare good judgment in the selection of this material. It is intimated that another folio on Latin types of architecture may be issued next year. Let's hope the rumor is true. It will lose no friends for L. A. P. B.

"BLAH RELIEF"

TRUE to our promise the Blah Relief column starts this month and here is the first communication we are privileged to publish:

Dear Editor:

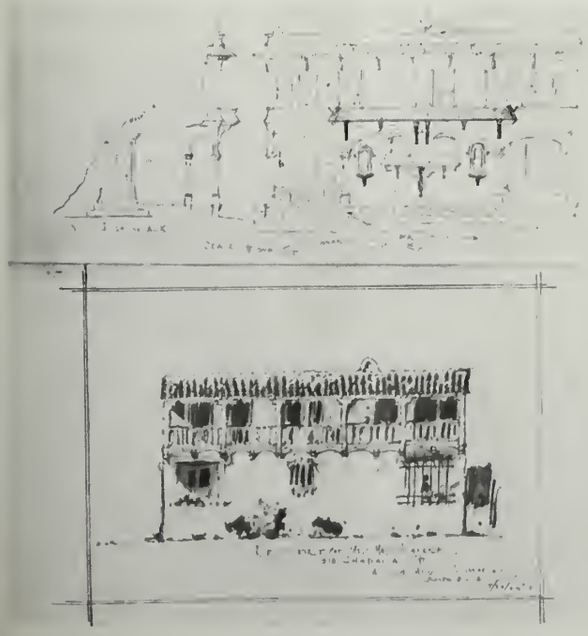
I am just a poor struggling draftsman, but I wield a nasty pen and I admit I try to do a little thinking on my own account. I have watched with great interest the development of the Civic Center Plan for the city of Los Angeles. The plan has been adopted by the county commissioners apparently after much careful study. The city council, however, doesn't seem to have considered it worth while to even express an opinion one way or the other, even though it bound itself as a party to a contract for the design of this great project. I am told that the plans for the new city hall are progressing far toward completion and that it is the avowed intention of the city council to ignore the Civic Center Plan and place the city hall in such a position as to make the realization of the plan impossible. I am also aware that there is absolutely no difficulty, technical or legal, which would prevent the location of the building in conformity with the desires of the county and the scores of civic and semi-public bodies who have memorialized the council upon this subject. Is Los Angeles to suffer as other cities have by such dumb short-sightedness. Are we to have another situation similar to that in San Francisco, where they solved (?) their Civic Center problem on the basis of medieval traffic condition and are already going out on the fringes of the civic group to buy or construct buildings for public use which have no relation to the scheme.

Why don't the great and powerful newspapers in Los Angeles have the courage to come out as a united group and put over this greatest of Civic Center Plans in spite of the little half grown potatoes who keep the varnish from cracking in some of our council chairs?

Yours sincerely,
G. B. R.

Will some enlightened member of the much abused body named above please favor us with a reply?

(Concluded from opposite page)



seems to be little sign of change in our ideals or methods unless a change from the style in which we make our buildings masquerade or from the man to whom we play the sedulous ape, a change from the delicate sophistications of the Brothers Adam to the crudities and quaintnesses of the Lombard Romanesque, may be considered change. Of course I am speaking just here of what is going on now in New York, the town I know best. If this latest wave has not yet swept beyond the Palisades that are said to mark the New Yorker's western horizon, fear not! It will! New York always gets these advance styles first—but I hasten to say there is no cause for jealousy in that fact.

Let us, in the silence of after-hours when every one else has gone home, or in the quiet of the office on a Sunday, sit down somewhere and think; remember our responsibilities as the pilots and guides of a new generation of mankind; pause to take our bearings, estimate the winds and the currents and our drift and so lay our future course that what we do shall shed lustre on this, our own, generation; and men in ages yet unborn shall say—There were giants in those days, creators not collators, who gave richly but were too proud to borrow or to steal.

THE ARCHITECTURAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE AT SANTA BARBARA

FOR the past six months there has been operating in Santa Barbara a committee of architects, resident in that city, having to its credit the first definite control of the flood-waters of "Design and Building" which almost swamp our section of the country and which, after the disaster which lay low that city, surged into Santa Barbara.

Here in a Californian city of stability and long standing, an earthquake, for which native California is fundamentally prepared, could but emphasize the difference between building which had been done with the destructive force of earth tremors in mind, and that which had been done by later comers who knew not the real tests to which building in California is subjected. Like a great mastiff rising from the ground and shaking off the litter which has clung to his coat, Santa Barbara as a city has cleared up the debris of bad construction and has established a building code so good for Californian cities, so thorough in its grasp of every expert fact available, that it has already made Santa Barbara famous the world over. This building code was prepared during long weeks and months of strenuous labor

ABOVE IS THE ORIGINAL DRAWING PRESENTED. BELOW IS THE SUGGESTION MADE FOR THIS SAME STRUCTURE BY THE COMMUNITY DRAFTING ROOM ESTABLISHED IN SANTA BARBARA BY THE ARCHITECTURAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE. AND AT THE RIGHT IS THE ACTUAL BUILDING

PHOTOGRAPH OF THE SAME HOUSE AS EVENTUALLY BUILT, SHOWING HOW FAR THE PENDULUM WILL SWING BEFORE IT COMES TO REST IN A WELL DESIGNED CALIFORNIA TOWN

An Ideal School for Young Women

Cumnock School

COLLEGE WORK IN THE FOLLOWING COURSES:

Vocal Interpretation of Literature

Literary Appreciation	Voice and Diction	Short-Story
Public Speaking	French	Dancing
Dramatics	Story Telling	Psychology
	Journalism

Art and Art Appreciation

An accredited High School in Class A preparing for Western and Eastern Colleges and Universities.

HELEN A. BROOKS, Director

5353 West Third Street — Los Angeles

WHitney 3427 —TELEPHONES— WHitney 7311

The Girls' Collegiate School 34th Year

NEWLY LOCATED IN THE COUNTRY

Boarding and Day School. Accredited East and West. Out-Door Life a Reality. 50-acre estate. All sports. Saddle Horses. New Buildings. Italian type. L. A. Office, 1008 W. Adams St.

Glendora, Calif. Miss Parsons and Miss Dennen, Principals

The Elliott School for Girls

Residence and Day School.

Ideal Home Life — Character Building

Superior Educational Advantages. Sub-Primary through Eleventh Grade. Martha Collins Weaver, M. A., Principal. Pico Blvd. at Grammercy Place.

EMpire 5347

GREENWOOD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

5928 Franklin Avenue, Hollywood

Select Resident and Day School

Lawns, Tennis Courts, Outdoor Swimming Pool. Special advantages in music, under Mrs. Elsa Spencer.

Principals:

Mrs. M. Greenwood, Newnham College, Cambridge

H. F. Greenwood, A. B., Corpus Christi College, Cambridge

Telephone HOlly 2886

MISS HARKER'S SCHOOL

FOR GIRLS

Palo Alto -:- -:- -:- California

"The Home of Stanford University"

Outdoor life all the year round. One hour from San Francisco. College Preparatory and Special Courses. Separate residence for girls from 5 to 14 years. Catalog on request.

KENWOOD HALL

Resident and Day School for Girls. Sub-Primary through High School. Open throughout the year.

Directors: Ruby Mildred King, Grace Baylor Bobbitt.

Tel. WAshington 1612 — 675 So. Vermont Ave., Los Angeles

The Art of

Norma Gould

Authentic Dances—Pantomime Eurythmics

Ballroom Department—Louise Kramer

Special Course for Professional Dancers

Phone or write for information

460 N. Western Ave. HEmpstead 3530

by the City Planning Commission, Architectural Advisory Committee, Sub-Committee composed of W. L. Snook, (Contractor), Chairman; John Frederick Murphy, (Architect); L. L. Pope, Building Inspector; Vern D. Hedden, Secretary; The Builders' Exchange of Santa Barbara; Building Trades Council; and Francis E. Price, City Attorney. A tentative draft of the proposed building code was printed by Wilson and D'Andrea, Santa Barbara, last year before the code was adopted by ordinance of the Council of the City of Santa Barbara, and the full text of the established code was printed in the Santa Barbara MORNING PRESS of December 22, 1925.

The thanks of the whole of California and especially of its architectural organizations are due to Frederick Murphy, A. I. A., for the time and energy he has given and the service he has rendered his fellow architects in representing architecture on this Committee, and to Mr. Bernard Hoffmann, chairman of the Architectural Advisory Committee, which saw to it that things were done in Santa Barbara—things which, in 1906, San Francisco merely planned to do.—M. U. S.

A FLAT-ROOFED HOUSE BY WESTBROOK, A. A. C., SANTA BARBARA. PUBLISHED BY REQUEST OF AN EASTERN SUBSCRIBER.

ARCHITECTURE FOR ART STUDY SECTIONS OF CLUBS

Editor's Note—Mrs. Florence W. Peters, Chairman of Division of Arts, California Federation of Women's Clubs, through whose co-operation this course is being presented, reports that the interest aroused in this study is widespread and that the architects who have so generously given of their time and effort in furnishing articles may be assured of sincere appreciation on the part of the club women who are studying in art sections throughout the state. Letters have come to her from Kentucky, Arizona, and as far north in California as the delightful little hill town of Sausalito on San Francisco Bay. Everywhere there is indication that—given the expert advice of our best architects, the women's clubs of California are prepared to do some fine house cleaning on the general subject of domestic architecture; each in its own town. A public service covering this community work and centering in the ateliers already existing is imminent. The Small House Corporation, planned so comprehensively and with such wise inspiration by Mr. Clifford Truesdell during his brief association with the Architectural Advisory Committee in Santa Barbara, and now before the Powers That Be for adoption, has here its complementary solution in the chance to establish a broad-casting Bureau of Good Domestic Design. Such a Bureau, with an office in the Chamber of Commerce of every town in the state, and a large number of stations in Los Angeles, would put a stop to the pathetic attempts on the part of poor little designers chained to their stools in the back rooms of jobbers in architecture, to turn out something new each hour and ruin the face of nature more thoroughly than it has been done already. Example: the northwest part of a town not twenty miles from this editor's office. We cannot work quickly enough in this emergency. Public taste is changing fast to help architecture to its own dominant place in the community.

Contractor's houses, planned without benefit of architecture, are out of date before they are finished. The cleverest contractors and builders realize this already and are keen to grasp the help furnished by The Architectural Advisory Committee in Santa Barbara, for instance: a notable improvement in the designs they bring in is recorded in the files of that typical Community Service for Builders.

THE outline of Miss Gere's course is here concluded from the section printed in the December number. The series of issues, covering this course including Mr. Myron Hunt's article on Californian Traditions and The Rise of Santa Barbara by Mr. H. C. Nickerson of Pasadena may be obtained by subscribing for the year beginning with August '25. Address: CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, 351 Palmetto Drive, Pasadena, California.

BECAUSE of the meeting of The Garden Club of America in Santa Barbara and the interest in our gardens just now, the next article will be a symposium on The Relation of the Garden to Architecture. The fact that the Palos Verdes Project has called to our Coast eminent landscape architects and aroused the local Chapter A. I. L. A., gives us much material to draw upon and illustrations of extensive work at Palos Verdes will be used as illustration in March and April issues.

IX—Church Architecture

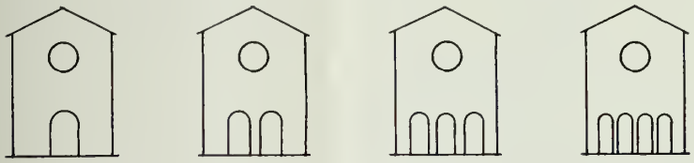
A brief resume of historical styles for appreciative study. The simple beauty of the early Christian basilica—the greater richness of mosaics in the Byzantine churches. The fine simplicity and dignity of the old Romanesque churches and the splendid way in which sculptural decoration grew out of the architectural lines and became a part of the building instead of something added to it. The flowering of the Romanesque into Gothic, the beauty of stained glass, the fine old portals, the spires of Chartres and Litchfield; the Renaissance domes of the Florence cathedral and of St. Peter's in Rome and St Paul's in London. Trace historic influences and creative design in modern church architecture in Europe and America.

XI—The American Sky-Scraper

A great architectural achievement. A new architecture to meet new conditions. Cities that must grow up instead of out. Influence of zoning laws—building codes to prevent streets becoming like canyons. These laws have developed great possibilities for beauty and variety in design. The "Cathedral of Commerce" in New York, the proposed Pittsburg Cathedral of Learning, the Tribune Tower in Chicago, and the splendid new State Capitol at Lincoln, Nebraska.

XII—California Achievements

Churches, club buildings, bridges, schools, commercial structures and residences—great interest in the small home. The Colorado St. bridge between Pasadena and Los Angeles is a splendid rythmic design worthy of camparison with the finest of European bridges—St. Paul's Cathedral in Los Angeles one of the beautiful California churches. The University Club of Los Angeles simple and stately, the design of exterior and interior consistent throughout. The Womans Athletic Club—The Friday Morning Club—the Los Angeles gas building and many others which will well repay study. A packing house in Santa Paula—a lesson in design. In Santa Barbara, fortunately uninjured by the earthquake, the beautiful de la Guerra shops and studios, varied, interesting, pleasing in proportion, of great simplictiy and of perpetual and delightful surprises. It will be even finer five or ten years from now, when the walls have mellowed and grayed through effects of time and weather.



A COURSE IN THE APPRECIATION OF ARCHITECTURE

THE ELEMENT OF LINE IN ARCHITECTURE

By REGINALD D. JOHNSON, A. I. A.

FIRST let me say that I feel that the mental attitude of most critics toward architectural design is inclined to be too academic, too literal. The critic is inclined to be too much of a slave to precedent, too much of an archaeologist. The evolution of any style in the past would have been almost impossible if such a mental attitude had been common. I think you will agree with me that while precedent should always be respected there is but one standard of criticism, the standard of beauty of line, proportion, texture and color. It is the understanding and keen appreciation of the beauty of line and proportion which has created and made distinct the so-called styles of the past. For example, a square window in a Gothic cathedral is unthinkable. The builders of St. Michel and Chartres thought not in terms of style but in terms of line.

Let us therefore develop our appreciation of architectural design by studying some altogether simple examples of line in relation to proportion in order that we may see the method of approach of the critic who is taking the viewpoint of a designer rather than that of an archaeologist or academician. Let us illustrate graphically what is meant. If one studies their architectural history, he will find that in all so-called styles the odd rather than the even number of openings in a wall is preferred. It is, however, far more interesting to see that within oneself there is a natural preference for the odd rather than the even number of openings in almost any design one may select. Let us now see our own reaction to this simple experiment.

I believe that nine out of ten would choose those designs with one or three openings over those with two or four, but remember that these designs show not a vestige of detail. Take the church entrance with two openings and introduce other elements, and see how much more difficult it becomes to analyze this design.

In other words, in your mental approach to a composition first eliminate all detail and only see mass, and then the outline of the most important elements such as the window and the two doors shown above.

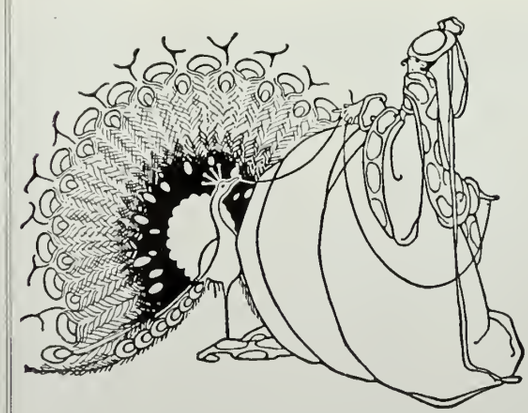
Let us now consider for a moment the mass of a house.

Let us imagine that the above four sketches are the outlines of various facades. No. 1 and No. 2 show houses with flat roofs. No. 1 of course is the most uninteresting of the four, simply due to the fact that a square has not even the interest of a rectangle. No. 3 is somewhat of an improvement in outline as to interest, but is faulty in that the roof pitch is exactly forty-five degrees, a roof angle which lacks interest as in the case of the square. Note what an improvement is brought about by a lower pitch as shown in No. 4. Try to introduce into these sketches doors and windows, and see how No. 4 remains the most attractive design, due to its mass and outline, and also due to the fact that you are now thinking of design in outline. Try to take this approach in criticism of all architectural work; first consider the mass, then the proportions and disposition of important elements such as doors and windows, then turn your criticism on the architectural detail, and finally give full consideration to those all important elements, texture and color.

If these steps are taken by you and you prepare yourself for each step, you will soon become not only a good critic but you will hold in your hand the key to all architectural design.

Westridge
A COLLEGE PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS. ACCREDITED.
Primary, Intermediate and Academic Departments.
MARY L. RANNEY, AMIE C. RUMNEY, Principals.
324 Madeline Drive, Pasadena, California Telephone Wakefield 5276

The Westlake
School for Girls
333 South Westmoreland Avenue
Residence and Day School
Lower School, College Preparatory, Junior College
Fully Accredited
Departments of Art, Music, Home Economics
JESSICA SMITH VANCE FREDERICA DE LAGUNA
Telephone DRexel 0052



Urban Military Academy
The Great Outdoor School for the Building of Body and Brain and Character Under Matchless Conditions
Open All Year. Address MISS SALEY, Registrar
637 Wilcox Ave., Los Angeles. HEmpstead 7602

NEW HOME
OF
PACIFIC MILITARY ACADEMY
Culver City, California

Boarding and Day School. Fireproof Buildings. Completely Equipped Laboratories. Grammar and High School. Enrollment limited.
For Catalogue Write Mrs. Loughan or telephone Culver City 3294

SECRETARIAL COACHING
For cultured people desiring personal attention. Refined, harmonious surroundings. All Secretarial subjects. Parliamentary Law. Bride's Budget.
Management, Mrs. Frank Rutherford. 711 South Vermont Ave. Fltzroy 1763.

Lenz HAT Studio
643-645 East Colorado St.
Pasadena, Cal.
Near the New Community Playhouse
Phone Fair Oaks 573

Choose your own architect from the representative styles shown in "California Homes" by California Architects. Price $1.00.
Address: ELLEN LEECH,
544 So. El Molino Ave Pasadena, Calif.

(Continued from Page 15)

eastern celebrity—Higgins went to Chicago and then to Taos, New Mexico, and today is known wherever American art is recognized. Mr. Eggers, the well known Curator of the Denver Art Museum, as well as an Artist of much reputation, makes up the trio.

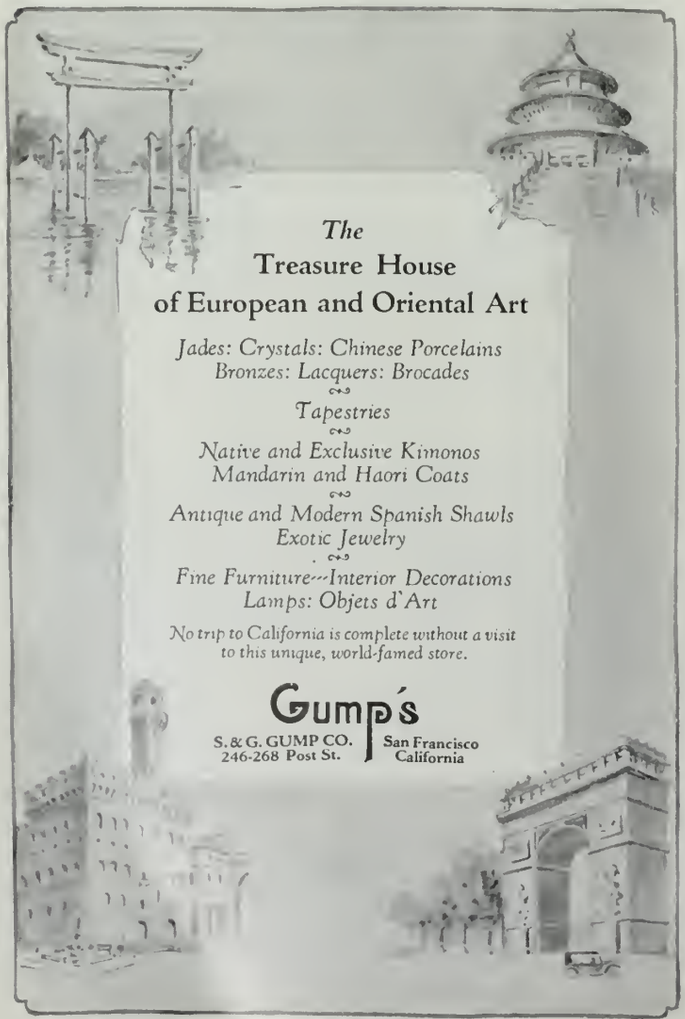
We must not forget Mr. and Mrs. Allan C. Balch, now traveling in the East Indies. It seems to me a vote of thanks should be sent to them by the California Art Club, as a token of appreciation, for their wonderful art prize of $5,000.00—an incentive that had much to do with making our Pan-American Exhibition such a huge success.

I feel too much praise cannot be given to our Board of Supervisors—the real owners of the Los Angeles Museum. Their kindly sympathy towards Mrs. Harrison and myself has been attested time and time again in our humble efforts to build up an Art Gallery.

In conclusion, and in so far as Art is concerned, I am now singing my Swan Death Song—I wish to say: We feel our work has been done—whether well done or not, only future generations will know. The Harrisons cannot go on buying pictures forever. If I live, I shall try to lay aside a fund for the future care of the Harrison Gallery with which to correct any possible weak selections and substitute therefor something more enduring. It may surprise you to hear that only seven of the original twenty-eight pictures remain.

THE LOS ANGELES MUSEUM OF HISTORY SCIENCE AND ART

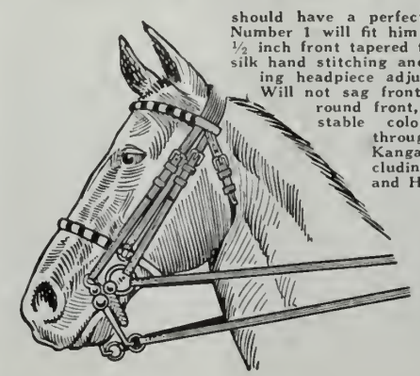
PORTRAITS
BY
PHOTOGRAPHY



Charles S. Seabolt
26 No. Los Robles Avenue,
Pasadena, California
Opposite Maryland Hotel
Terrace 6712

ART NOVELTIES
at
WILBER'S GIFT SHOP
2212 Sierra Madre Street
Pasadena, California

Margaret Craig
PICTORIAL PHOTOGRAPHER
Portraits
Architecture
Gardens
Studio 3223 W. 6th St.
Telephone WAshington 1653
Los Angeles



J. R. BRAGDON & CO.
Real Estate and Insurance
15 So. Raymond Ave., Pasadena

a refined shop created solely
FOR LARGER WOMEN
Daytime Dresses
Dinner Gowns
Ensembles
Sizes 38-56
and half sizes
Schaffer GOWNS for LARGE WOMEN
566 E. Colorado Street :: :: :: Pasadena

YOUR SHOW HORSE

should have a perfect fitting bridle and our Number 1 will fit him perfectly. The caveson ½ inch front tapered to ⅜ inch has 4 rows of silk hand stitching and passes through a sliding headpiece adjustable to fit any horse. Will not sag front or back and with it a round front, either plain or in your stable colors. All super grade throughout, with a set of Kangaroo Never Rust bits including Curb, Bradoon, Chain and Hooks and round lip strap.

$16.00

Price post paid elsewhere $25.00.
Write for catalog special discount to Riding Academies and Saddlery Stores.

"little joe"
Wisenfeld Co.
BALTIMORE, MD.

A FRENCH FARM HOUSE BY KUCERA A. I. A.

AND CALIFORNIA'S USE OF CONCRETE IN FLAGS

WORKING from studies made of the environment and the building materials at hand, the architect of this charming bit of domestic architecture in Pasadena has introduced a new note harmonious and fitting even in our polyglot streets.

Mr. Kucera has considered the background of great eucalyptus trees, the width and shallowness of the lot, the approach along the street and the intimate relation of the life of the household to the garden areas around it.

The long wall gives breadth to the composition, yet does not hide the entrance tower or shut out the passerby entirely. The right wing recedes that it may not intrude upon one coming from the most frequented end of the curving street. Interest is added to this wing by adzed half-timber and casement, and over all this talented young architect has flung a roof which is a joy to behold.

Isolated houses are rare in Europe. California has more than, perhaps, the whole of Europe. That is why our hills sections are so distressing just now, hacked and dotted with isolated homes. In European hill towns the houses touch one another and cover the ground, making a united picture. Only the farm houses are isolated, and our architect has here adapted one of these charming pictures to our paved streets successfully. Even the hand-work of the roof shows the rich effect of an isolated unconventionalized workmanship which lost its bearings here and there—to the glory of the picture set down in our artificial town.

There is a quality almost to be called luscious in the surface of the plastered walls of this house as the photographer caught the sunlight across its dimples. The round door fitting the round tower is also a delightful feature and a unique touch.

THE ENTRANCE, SHOWING THE ROUND TOWER AND THE BEAUTIFULLY CURVED DOOR, THE WEATHERED FLAGSTONES AND PLASTERED WALL.
Photographs by George Haight

On the ground of the entrance court and across the lawn the architect has used flagstones made by William Smith of Pasadena and invented by him to take the place of natural stone flags, to which he was accustomed in the lands where they are found. This worker in architectural concrete has for many years been the staunch friend of architects who realize that artificial stone can express all that is put into it of good design and careful work. Years ago Mr. Smith was found in his place on South Fair Oaks by the writer, who was attracted there by the classic models scattered over his yard. Since that time the business has grown tremendously because architects have found their designs will there be executed with precision and sympathy. The coloring of these particular flagstones is especially fine and this is Mr. Smith's own invention. He has led the way in this delightful use of artificial stone and his workmen know how to lay it so that it will stay put. Such craftsmen should be encouraged and protected from inferior imitation—that bane of all art. Owners who wish to be sure of their flagstones should follow this architect's example and find Wm. Smith, maker of artificial stone, Pasadena.

But the architect's chief business is not ended when he has made a delightful and satisfactory design and has drawn up the specifications. He must select with care from among the hundreds of contractors operating in southern California one of the best who can be relied upon to carry out the plans. The contractors on this house were C. C. Johnson and Son of Pasadena, and the work is well done. Mr. Johnson sees to that himself. So determined is he to see that the specifications are properly carried out that he superintends the job himself and will not accept inferior material or workmanship. His reputation goes before him and everybody knows that a Johnson foundation cannot be slighted or made to cover up any poor work. Many of the subcontractors on this house were employed by the contractors and their names are not at hand. This time their work goes to the credit of the architect who designed it and the contractor who selected them because of their reputation for good work. Certainly good workmanship speaks eloquently from this happy little Pasadena house.

One of the things which house holders and home builders are continually asking for information on is hardware and it is with much interest that we can refer them through this article on Mr. Kucera's house to The Van Sittert Hardware as displayed at the store on South Raymond avenue in Pasadena. One does not expect ordinarily to find art in a hardware store; but this is the architect's own store—an exhibition of their thought in iron and a display of fine pieces selected by our leading architects or designed by them and executed for this firm.

Besides furnishing full sets of every stock design promptly and efficiently the Van Sittert Company shows special designs that are distinctive and unique. Most people like to choose their own hardware and they will enjoy a visit to this store which furnished the appropriate hardware for this Kucera house on one of the streets bordering Pasadena's arroyo seco park. Other houses by Mr. Kucera rise in San Marino.

THE LITTLE FRENCH FARM HOUSE AMONG THE EUCALYPTUS TREES IN PASADENA. JOSEPH KUCERA, OF KUCERA AND DANIELS, ARCHITECTS

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

MONTHLY BULLETIN

"All for Service—And Service for All"

OFFICERS:

MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President
MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President
MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, Sec. Vice-Pres.
MRS. ERWIN P. WERNER, Third Vice-President
MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Vice-Pres.
MRS. JAMES REED, Secretary
MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treasurer.
MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

5604 De Longpre Avenue, Los Angeles
Telephone HE 5133

CALENDAR

Feb. 2, 10:30 a.m.—Meeting of the Board of Directors.
" 2, 12:30 a.m.—Round Table Luncheon. Mr. Lal Chand Mehra. Subject: "The Supreme Contribution of India."
" 3, 10:30 a.m.—Meeting of the Good Samaritan Committee.
" 8, 10:30 a.m.—Meeting of the Day Nursery Committee.
" 16, 10:30 a.m.—Meeting of the Executive Committee.
" 17, 10:30 a.m.—Meeting of the Good Samaritan Committee.

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT, MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, PRESENTED AT THE ANNUAL MEETING, JANUARY 26, 1926

A year ago today we told you of what had been accomplished in 1924 and what were our plans and hopes for 1925. Today we are here to review our activities to see whether or not our plans have been carried out—our hopes realized. It has devolved upon me to give the entire report this time, to tell you, as department heads have told me, of the progress made in each department and to show the inter-relation of one department to all the others, for each year sees us more closely bound together into a big Assistance League, living up to our motto "All for Service and Service for All," being directed, in the type of our service, by the demands of an ever growing community upon us.

Let us say that we have taken as our guiding stars the beatitudes Faith, Hope and Charity. As is often the case when attaching wagons to stars, there will necessarily be casualties, so it has been in our case, but the casualties have not been serious and we have weathered through with a supreme faith in our ideals and faith in all those who have joined us in the carrying out of these ideals.

Hope we have that we may carry our banner of service higher and more understandingly each year, and ever raising our goal to greater heights as we progress, leaving, as we must, "more worlds to conquer" for those who will follow in our wake.

And Charity—the greatest of these is charity. Oh my friends, would that I could write this blessed word in flaming letters on the walls of our Community House as well as in our hearts. "Though I speak with the tongues of men and angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass or as tinkling cymbals." It is the great ameliorative, more important to our work than any other quality, the foundation stone on which rests our future usefulness.

We say the war is over. In very fact, it is not over, and ever the battle continues between the great forces of Darkness and Light; and you are needed in the ranks, as you have never been needed before.

The Assistance League needs each and every one of us. It is founded upon the ideals of many and guided by the sincerity of all. However, we should not fail to realize that each and every one of us needs the Assistance League—that by service we grow. Success is attending our efforts. We have every reason to review our work with pride and to press on to still greater accomplishments in 1926.

Our program is two-fold—that of earning money to devote to charitable enterprises and that of disbursing all monies earned or received from other sources in a way to do credit to our institution. We may rightly boast of our earning departments, for they have continued under trying circumstances and have made a very good showing.

Our Treasurer has prepared a careful report of the year's income and disbursements, showing us how we stand financially, and has given a copy of this to every Board member present. In the department reports I have used many of these figures, so I shall not read them now. Beginning January 1st of this year our funds have been segregated, the one being our Building Fund, which has been set aside for building purposes only—the other, our earnings and receipts from the Community Chest, which are used in the operation of our plants and the conduct of our charities.

Mrs. Tatum has been a Treasurer not only in name but in fact. She has done all of the actual bookkeeping and deserves not only credit for the result, but appreciation for the time she has so generously given to this work.

On October 1st Mrs. G. Alexander Bobrick accepted the chairmanship of the Thrift Shop and that department is now forging ahead with brighter prospects for the coming year. The gross sales for the whole year 1925 amounted to $6,080, which means an average of $500 a month. The greater part of this is net profit to the League, as the expenses of this department were only $2,182.40. Our profit from the Thrift Shop of $3,890 is almost $1000 less than that of the previous year. This falling off is no fault of the management. Excellent and most conscientious work has been done in this department since Mrs. Palmer took charge in April. However, for long stretches at a time the racks have been almost bare—customers have come day after day and have left disappointed. The cause lies, I feel, in the lack of interest on the part of our members and the consequent dropping off in the number and size of donations. Our appeals to you have been many but our need was great.

Mrs. John McCarthy has taken charge of the Thrift Shop Millinery Department. With the skill of an expert old hats are made new and the seemingly impossible ones become the much sought after character hats.

Our Woman's Exchange in the Community House has been without a chairman for some months and we regret deeply that we have not made more rapid strides in this department this year. Miss George, who has carried the work alone the greater part of the time, deserves much credit for the fact that the Exchange shows an increase over last year, even though this increase is small. We hope that there will be many volunteers this year to bring the Exchange up to its full capacity for service to humanity.

Through the kindness of the Bank of Italy and the Women's Athletic Club, the Downtown Shop was established. It has proved a growing success with great potentialities. From July to January there, the sales have amounted to $2,640, the gross profit on this amount being $700. At the Community House the sales have amounted to approximately $8,250, our gross profit on these being $2,250. making an increase of $200 over last year's profit.

The Christmas sale, with Mrs. John Maurer and Mrs. Isaac-Hampshur Jones in charge, not only was very profitable for the League financially, but added many friends and proved of the greatest help to our many consignors at this particular time of year. Every article seemed to have a special meaning at this time of year—the sale of an apron brought in by some poor woman, representing perhaps her Christmas dinner. Funds accrued from the sales of these articles go toward getting materials for the home workers, who are often able to do splendid work, but unable to provide materials for themselves.

The Location Bureau, which has from its beginning been the source of our greatest income, was losing ground in 1924. It is therefore a source of much gratification to see the curve turn upward for the year 1925. Specifically, the figures are as follows:

Gross income, 1924.....$ 9,940.60
Gross income, 1925..... 14,824.27

An increase of..... 5,116.33

From this last, however, we must deduct salary and expenses amounting to $3,844.47. Of the money earned this year $6,898.35 went to designated charities, including $736.68 to our own Day Nursery and $590 to Tiny Tim. Those of us who have closely followed this work feel that had there not been the re-organization of this department, which took place early in 1925, that the curve would have continued its downward course. So, although there has been approximately only $1000 gain in earnings, our actual gain has been great. This result has been accomplished under the able direction of Mrs. Ada Laughlin, chairman, by Mrs. Richard Sperry and other committee members.

So important was this department deemed that last February the Board of Directors authorized the employment of a Location Manager to take full charge of the details of the Bureau. We were fortunate in securing for this position Mr. Harry Connelly, a man whose knowledge of location work and whose contact with the studios have proven a great asset. During the year many new and valuable locations have been added to our files and many others which had been withdrawn have been re-secured. The efficiency of the files has been greatly increased by the installation of a complete new filing system, which required weary hours of work by the committee members.

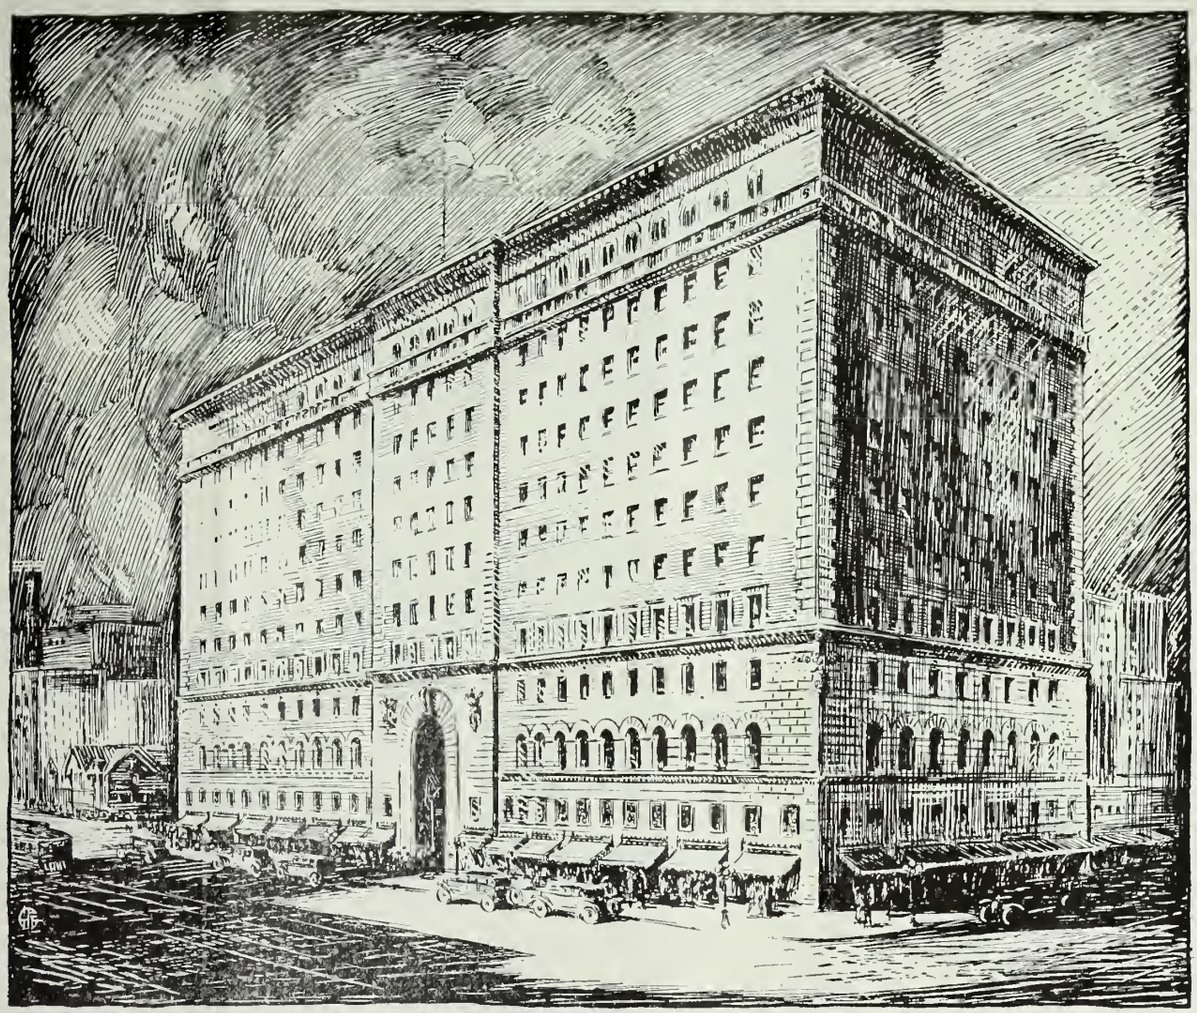
It is generally felt that our increased efficiency in this department has gained for the League the full cooperation of the studios and that the guarantee of property protection has gained the confidence of property owners.

We are still, however, depending upon you, League members, to list your homes with the Bureau and to aid in securing those of others.

It may be truly said that our Tea Room has at last come into its own. After the many viscissitudes of the year, it is flourishing as never before. With an enthusiastic committee of twenty, of which Mrs. Charles Jeffras is Chairman, it bids fair to accomplish what those of us who have always believed in it knew could be accomplished. Confident that one of our most important activities would be lost if the Tea Room closed, Mrs. Jeffras assumed the responsibility of its re-organization.

At a time when the outlook was the gloomiest, Fairy Godmothers with their wands have come to her support. Gifts of china, glassware, linen, flowers, the use of cars for marketing, etc., have come in rapid succession. These gifts are the practical expression of faith in this department, which has always been so dear to the hearts of many of us.

I am listing the Tea Room with the earning departments, for although it has not for some time been a source of income, it is now well on its way toward becoming so. I am certain that Mrs. Dodge, the Manager, with her staff of five, and the cooperation of the Tea Room Committee, will demonstrate that the Tea Room is an earning department.



* * * * * * * *

In mentioning gifts, I must tell you of the promise of the Vanishing Luncheon Fund to give the Assistance League one-third of its total receipts. The Vanishing Luncheon Fund was started by a group of women to raise money to donate to well organized agencies. We are more than fortunate to have been one of the agencies chosen, the other two being the Boys and Girls Aid Society of Pasadena and the Castelar Creche.

This donation may mean the solution of our problem of raising money to meet Mr. Herman's gift. I am therefore reiterating the urgent appeal which has been made to me by Mrs. Harold Wrenn, Mrs. John MacFarland and Mrs. Robert Monroe and other members of this committee that those who have promised to give a Vanishing Luncheon do so as soon as possible, realizing the serious consequences of procrastinating and the loss of the whole when there is a break in the sequence. I am extending to this committee an expression of appreciation from all of you members for its kindness in remembering the League.

Surely it will be appropriate for me to close this part of our report with my usual appeal for clothes for our Thrift Shop. A call to the office will bring one of our members to your door to collect your bundle.

This address will be concluded in March issue.

BARKER BROS. invite you to their new store in the quality center of the shopping section, SEVENTH Street, Flower and Figueroa.

BEAUTY unsurpassed you will find to delight you and all fine furnishings from every part of the world together with intelligent and interested service.

We are waiting to make you truly "at home."

BARKER BROS.

Complete Furnishers of Successful Homes
SEVENTH STREET, Flower and Figueroa

NOTES FOR CONNOISSEURS

Mr. Bradford Perin, of The Serendipity Antique Shop, has attained the ultimate in good taste and beauty with his table lamps. He has drawn from his collection of old English china those vases which are loveliest in line and decoration, and converted them into lamps. The shades have been carefully designed in a way that accentuates the beauty of the china, and in no way detracts from their charm as decorative pieces. Adding the factor of utility to a work of art should not, of necessity, destroy its artistic appeal, but we must admit that that is very often the case. The idea of transforming an old Worcester Empire piece into a lamp is not a thing to be considered lightly, and when a man of established skill and artistry launches upon such an undertaking with a complete knowledge of the difficulties involved, there can be only one result: unusual, strikingly beautiful lamps. Mr. Perin has drawn upon a comprehensive knowledge, in this specialized treatment of old china, and has achieved a fine success. He has used Delft, Spode, Worcester, Swansea, and other famous makes of china in this work, and in no case has he done other than enhance each lovely piece.

In the Cannell and Chaffin studios in Pasadena, there is a splendid example of gesso work on an old commode. The commode is Venetian, of the period of Louis Fourteenth, and is, in itself, a very graceful example of the workmanship of that period. The gesso work, however, gives it a distinction which sets it apart from the common run of old pieces. The gesso is in dull gold and is tooled in on the face of the commode in a diaper pattern. Floral designs furnish the decorative motif for the end panels.

We went into the showrooms of James Cini and Company, on East Walnut Street in Pasadena, the other day to look at some furniture, but we never got beyond the first room, and we never gave a second thought to furniture, for in that first room we found a wonderful collection of antique jewelry. Most of it was European, and there was case after case of it. Precious and semi-precious stones in quaint and curious old settings; old gold and silver work; rings and stones with histories involving wars and revolutions. Some had passed from hand to hand from one end of the globe to the other. There was one great intaglio of white topaz which had belonged originally to the dei Medici family. It has the head of Catherine dei Medici carved upon it. It belonged to a private museum in Florence up until the time of the World War, and at that time was sold into this country. Then, there was a curious Persian ring, bearing pigeon's-blood rubies and green emeralds in a square setting. This ring was given by the Shah of Persia to M. Greboydoff, one time Russian ambassador to Persia. It was said to be, at that time, one hundred and fifty years old. In 1829 Greboydoff sent it to his niece in Russia, and after her death, it passed into the possession of a family named Zanoiav, in whose possession it remained until the time of the revolution, when a niece of the family, fleeing from the Terrorists, brought it into this country. There are other pieces with histories just as interesting. We spent an enchanting morning there, and we are going there again, for beautiful old jewelry has an appeal that cannot be resisted.

Grace Nicholson has done a great deal toward the furthering of art in Pasadena. Her latest undertaking is the establishment of several small galleries where artists may have exhibitions at a nominal cost and under ideal conditions. In the past two weeks, we have seen two splendid exhibits, both of them ideally hung and lighted, and we have been told that there will be showings regularly every month in all of the galleries there on Los Robles. Each gallery has it own heating system, but what is of much greater importance, each one has (praises be to Heaven!) an excellent ventilating system. None of us can afford to miss these exhibitions, especially with the galleries at Grace Nicholson's so easily accessible.

To Southland Readers

In our wanderings about during the month we cover a great deal of territory among the finest shops of Los Angeles and Pasadena. If you are looking for some one thing in particular for your home, don't hesitate to write us in care of the magazine and we shall be more than glad to help you look.

Saxe Brainerd.

Send them Wild Flower Seeds

A specially prepared mixture of over twenty varieties of California's most beautiful wild flowers mailed to any part of the world for $1.00. Simply enclose one dollar with your name and the name to whom it is to be sent and we will mail it for you. Address

Theodore Payne

2969 Los Feliz Boulevard Los Angeles, California

"Plant Wild Flowers this year!"

LAKE ARROWHEAD LODGE

E. K. HOAK, Managing Director.

Mile High—American Plan—Open All Year

Reservations made at 319 Van Nuys Bldg. Tel. VA. 0959, or direct to Lodge. Call Lake Arrowhead Main 1. Rates, $7.00 a day and up, including meals and room.

Dinner Dance Every Saturday Night.

If you are going for a hike this week take along one of our gay Tunisian bandannas.

You will enjoy the trip better yourself and will give more pleasure than usual to everyone who looks at you.

(The cotton ones are 50c, the silk ones $2.00.)

THE SOUKS OF TUNIS

in the patio of the Pasadena Community Playhouse

HAND WOVEN COATS

are more than ever the vogue

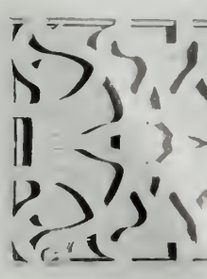
THIS SPRING

Your material may be woven in design and color to suit at

HEWSON HAND CRAFT STUDIOS

2508½ W. Seventh Street, Los Angeles

602 E. Colorado Street, Pasadena



Decorating and Finishing Exclusive Furniture

W. G. Pesenecker

Interior and Exterior Painting

34 North Broadway

Phone Col. 5656 Pasadena, Calif.

A Terra Cotta design carried out in Aluminum makes a Register which is as Durable as it is Beautiful. Now being specified by the leading Architects.

Designed and Executed by

Pasadena Gas Appliance Co., Inc.

901 E. Colorado Street

Pasadena Fair Oaks 9393

Beautiful Garden Pieces

in

Sculptured Terra Cotta

Italian Terra Cotta Co.

W. H. Robison

1149 MISSION ROAD

Opposite County Hospital

Phone Lincoln 1057 Los Angeles

NO. 121—TALMAGE VASE

BATH HOUSE AND PLAYGROUND BUILDINGS, GRIFFITH PARK

It has been truly said that the strength of a Nation is directly proportional to the physical well being of its youth.

For the physical welfare of this Community, the Board of Playground and Recreation Commissioners is carrying out an extensive program of greater and better facilities for training and developing our young citizens.

The Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles takes great pride in being retained by the City in work so essential to continued growth and prosperity.

Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles.

GARDEN POTTERY

No. 46

Planned rigorously, rounded smoothly, balanced symmetrically, lipped softly for pouring out oil or wine.—RUSKIN.

NEITHER FOR OIL NOR FOR WINE ARE THESE GARDEN VASES OF CALIFORNIAN MANUFACTURE, BUT FOR FLOWERS & SHRUBS. THEIR SUAVE CONTOURS FLOW WITH THE LINES OF PLANTED VISTAS, SOFTEN THE ANGLES OF WALLS, AND LEND A TOUCH OF INFORMALITY TO THE STUDIED CURVES OF PATHWAYS.

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.

LOS ANGELES OFFICE: LOS FELIZ BOULEVARD AND S. P. TRACKS
TROPICO PLANT: GLENDALE, LOS ANGELES COUNTY

Mediterranean style fireplace, in a corner of the cosy Lounge at the Golf Club House—Palos Verdes Estates.

Palos Verdes ~ The City Beautiful

YOU might search the entire length and breadth of wonderful California and not find a place so fortunate in either its beauty of location and climate, or its completeness as a residential community.

To begin with, Nature herself endowed Palos Verdes with some of California's finest ocean views—of silver beaches stretching for miles into the purple distance. Here also are mountain vistas extending, range on range, from Santa Monica to the snow-tipped Sierras. Busy valley cities are spreading over the flat lands at your feet, while all around you on the sloping hillsides of this romantic domain, are numberless canyons, mesas, knolls—each with its "private view"—ideal spots for the homes of those who love the blue ocean and the warm grey tints of the mountains.

Master builders, indeed, are the builders of Palos Verdes! Every foot of development, every individual dwelling, every piece of construction has been made to conform to surrounding beauty. Nothing that Nature gave has been lost. Nothing unsightly or undesirable will ever have a place in Palos Verdes. It is in very truth The City Beautiful.

WE ARE ANXIOUS FOR YOU TO SEE PALOS VERDES—See it today!—it will tell you its own story!

PALOS VERDES

4½ miles of California's finest shore line

5TH FLOOR LANE MORTGAGE BUILDING, 8TH AND SPRING STREETS, LOS ANGELES

JAY LAWYER, Gen. Mgr. BANK OF AMERICA, Trustee

C.S.2-26

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

GARDEN CLUB OF AMERICA SPECIAL NUMBER

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

IN ARCADY—THE GARDEN OF GEORGE O. KNAPP, ESQ. FROM A PAINTING BY LILIA TUCKERMAN, SANTA BARBARA

No. 75 March, 1926 25 Cents

CALIFORNIA'S HOME AND GARDEN MAGAZINE

El Paseo Patio

Lunch Out of Doors or Dine

at

"EL PASEO"

23 E. de la Guerra St.

Santa Barbara

DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS
SANTA BARBARA

THE LOVELY SHOPPING STREET IN SPAIN

All are welcome to Browse in this delightful shop in an old Spanish Mansion.

Indian and Mexican Handicrafts
Mexican Pottery and Glass
Hand Loomed India Drugget Rugs

ROBERT L. LEWIS
Studio No. 5 at East de la Guerra St.
Santa Barbara, Calif.

EL PASEO SERENADERS
PLAY
OLD TIME MELODIES AND SONGS
DURING DINNER
AT
EL PASEO

For Special Engagements—12½ W. Corrillo
Loring Andrews—E. C. Peters—Vences Los Kedrina

MARINA FLINT
Studio 114 on Tea Room Balcony
Lamp Shades
Kimonos and Chinese Negligees Made to Order

ELIA TAYLOR
Art Objects
Spanish Antiques
Formerly Old Adobe Art Shop

EL PASEO SPORT SHOP
MRS. CHARLES O'DONNELL LEE, JR.
Sport Clothes, Hats, Evening Gowns
Children's Clothes
Studio 30, de la Guerra Studios

LEE ELEANOR GRAHAM
Interior Decorator
de la Guerra Studios
23 East de la Guerra Street
Santa Barbara

ELEANOR JOHNSON
Studio for the Voice
Suite 103, de la Guerra Studios

SANTA BARBARA ART CLUB
No. 15 E. de la Guerra Street
Free Exhibition of Paintings and Etchings
Open Daily 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.
Paintings and Etchings for sale

TECOLOTE
Bookshop and
Lending Library
New and Standard Books
25 DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS
SANTA BARBARA

Community Arts Association
SANTA BARBARA
SCHOOL OF THE ARTS
FRANK MORLEY FLETCHER, DIRECTOR
GRAPHIC, DECORATIVE AND PLASTIC ARTS —
DRAMA. MUSIC. DANCING
Semester October-May. Summer School six weeks July-August
Address 916 Santa Barbara Street, Santa Barbara, Calif.

The Same Blue Bird Limousine Taxi Service
Which we are giving in Montecito is now
Available in Santa Barbara
The Same Familiar TELEPHONE
50-50 (Fifty-Fifty) 50-50
Smart Motor Cars of All Types With or Without Drivers

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertainments, etc., for the calendar pages are free of charge and should be received in the office of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, at least two weeks previous to date of issue, the 10th. No correction can be guaranteed if they are received later than that date CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, California. One dollar and twenty-five cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be changed as many times as desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the change is made.

Entered as second class matter, July 28, 1919, at the Post Office at Pasadena, California, under act of March 3, 1879.

Clubs

VALLEY HUNT CLUB, PASADENA:
The program for March includes:
Bridge luncheon, 1 o'clock, the 1st.
Bridge tea, 2:30 o'clock, the 8th, 15th, 22nd and 29th.
Evening bridge, Friday, the 5th, 8 o'clock, supper will be served.
Sunday evening suppers at 7 o'clock, with programs as follows:

March 7th—Musical program by Mme. Ettori Cadorim, a contralto, who has made a study of negro spirituals. Hostesses: Mrs. Homer Warren, Mrs. Charles McReeve, Miss Katherine H. Lyman.

March 14th—Mr. Thomas G. Patten will speak on "The Historical Aspects of Russia." Hostesses: Mrs. Francis Stevens, Mrs. John G. Boswell, Mrs. Desaix Myers, Mrs. Charles B. Scoville.

March 21st—Professor Frederick H. Seares, of Mt. Wilson Observatory, will speak on "Color in the Heavens." Hostesses: Mrs. Joseph Caunt, Mrs. Vernon O. Heddens, Mrs. Lawrence Macomber, Mrs. I. Graham Pattinson.

March 28th—Musical program will be given by Miss Mildred Marsh, assisted by Miss Olive Heiss at the piano. Hostesses: Mrs. Phillip Schuyler Doane, Mrs. L. Q. Younglove, Mrs. Ray R. Marsh, Mrs. Frederick Carter.

ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB, PASADENA:
The afternoon bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been discontinued for the season, but tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.
Blind Bogey Tournament for women players, March 5.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
The March Bridge Day, with prizes and afternoon tea, will be held Friday, the 19th.
Dinner dance, Saturday, the 27th.
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged, followed by tea.
Table d'hote dinner served in dining room every Sunday from 12 to 3 p. m.

LOS ANGELES COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.
Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 .p m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month. Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturday during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.

MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday in each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Dancing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday. Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.

LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week, Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal. Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL COUNTRY CLUB:
A dinner dance is arranged for the third Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a. m., and not before two p. m.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB, SANTA BARBARA:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A recent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a special luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served.

PALOS VERDES GOLF CLUB:
Offers an eighteen hole, all grass, seaside course, delightful for all the year play.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Lunch and dinner served every day.

PASADENA GOLF CLUB:
Wednesday is Ladies' Day, with cards and mah jongg from two to four-thirty, when tea is served.
Dinner will be served on Sunday from five-thirty to seven-thirty. The usual luncheon and dinner service will prevail through the week.

Music

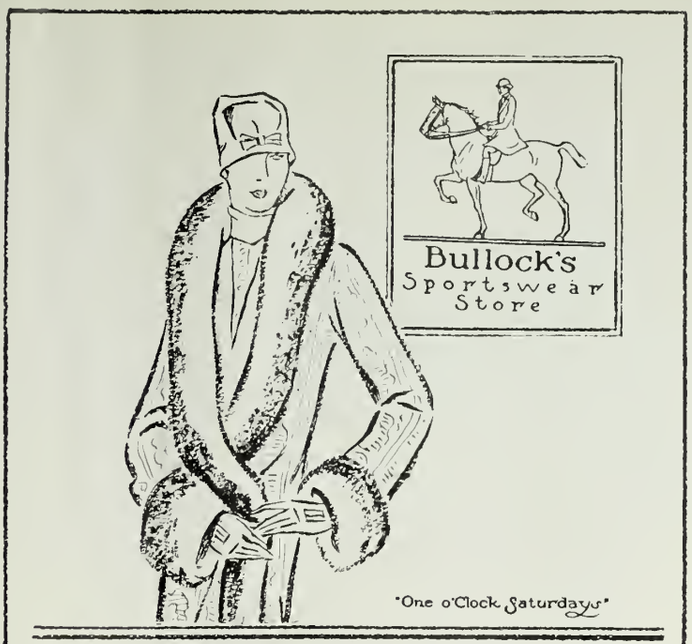
THE PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA OF LOS ANGELES, W. A. Clark, Jr., founder, Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor, will present the usual symphony concerts throughout the month. The dates for the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts are March 12-13, and March 26-27; the hours are 2:30 and 8:30 The Popular Sunday afternoon concerts are given at 2:30, the dates are March 7-21. These concerts are given at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Fifth and Olive. The Spring series of open-air concerts are given by the Orchestra at the Los Angeles Coliseum. These are made up of popular numbers and the seat prices, ranging from ten to fifty cents, kept within the reach of everyone. The remaining concerts are scheduled for March 14 and 28, and April 11, at 2:00 p.m.

PASADENA MUSIC AND ART ASSOCIATION, in the 1926 Artists Series, will present Ignace Pederewski, Saturday evening, March 13. These concerts are given at the Pasadena High School Auditorium.

AUDITORIUM ARTIST SERIES, under the management of George Leslie Smith, offers nine subscription concerts during the season. In March the artists appearing are Roland Hayes, the negro tenor, the 15th and 19th, and Olga Samaroff, pianist, the 29th.

PASADENA'S CONCERTS by the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra are given at the Raymond Theater; the date for the March concert is the 8th. The entire Philharmonic Orchestra, under the direction of Walter Henry Rothwell, appears on these occasions.

BEHYMER PHILHARMONIC ARTIST COURSES, including Tuesday and Thursday evening concerts, offer during March the following artists: John McCormack, the well-beloved tenor, the 2nd and the 4th; Ignace Paderewski, the 16th; Toti Dal Monte, the 19th; Ignaz Friedman, pianist, the 23rd; and Cyrena Van Gordon, mezzo-contralto, the 25th. These concerts are given at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Los Angeles.



MRS. EDWARD MacDOWELL will continue her course of interpretive lectures, in Los Angeles through March, on the music of Edward MacDowell, America's distinguished composer.

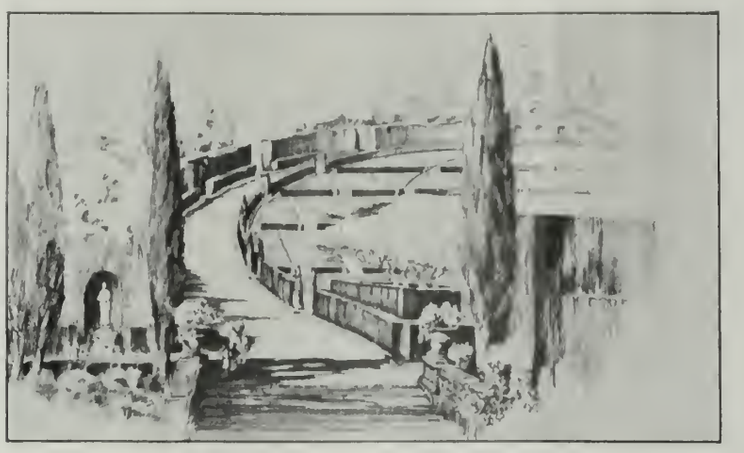
ADOLF TANDLER'S LITTLE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA is presenting a series of concerts at the Community Playhouse, Pasadena, the first and third Sunday afternoons during March and April.

THE LOS ANGELES TRIO, May MacDonald Hope, pianist and founder, Sylvia Noack, violin, Ilya Bronson, 'cello, will give the fifth of a series of evening concerts in the Music Room of the Biltmore, Los Angeles, March 25th.

THE ZOELLNER QUARTET will give in the Music Room of the Biltmore Hotel, Los Angeles, the sixth concert of the annual series of chamber music concerts, March 15th.

KATHRYN MONTREVILLE COCKE is conducting her third season of artists' concerts for children, students and teachers at the Gamut Club auditorium, on Saturday afternoons. The artists appearing in March are Harold Bauer, the 6th, Homer Grunn and Gilman Williams, the 20th.

Knitted coats and all new "sportswear" fashions!



Old English Silver Salver made in London by Hester Bateman in the year 1787

Exhibit of Antique English Silver and Sheffield Plate

A. Schmidt & Son

391 East Colorado Street, Pasadena

THE HOLLYWOOD BOWL

Another development of Art and Architecture in Southern California.

Designed by the Allied Architects' Association of Los Angeles.

Decorators

and

Furnishers

Antiques

O'Hara, Livermore & Arthur Baken

522 Sutter Street, San Francisco :: :: 644 E. Colorado Street, Pasadena, Calif., Terrace 2175

HOLLYWOOD BOWL is undergoing improvements of various kinds, including a concrete stage, larger than the old one, with basement dressing and property rooms, by means of which great spectacular productions may be given. Several thousand trees are to be planted, promenades laid out, and the automobile parking space enlarged. Raymond Brite has been made business manager of the Bowl. The summer concerts, as in past seasons, will be managed by Mrs. J. J. Carter, chairman of the association's board. The Allied Architects' Association has charge of the designs.

F. M. HINER'S CONCERT BAND announces ten weeks of concerts at the Olympic Auditorium, Grand Ave. at 18th, Los Angeles, beginning February 16. These concerts will be given each Saturday night, Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, and Sunday night at 8:30; Hiner organized and for a number of years directed Hiner's Kansas City Band, one of the best known bands of the country.

CALIFORNIA FEDERATION OF MUSIC CLUBS announces through the president, Lillian Birmingham, that a prize of $250 has been donated by Mrs. Cecil Frankel, president emeritus, for a one-act opera. The composer must be American born and have resided in California at least two years. All manuscripts must be sent in not later than March 25, for additional information address Miss M. Gardner, 1125 Union Street, San Francisco.

ADOLF TANDLER'S LITTLE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA will give the Saturday morning concerts, at eleven o'clock, at the Biltmore Hotel, Los Angeles, March 6 and April 3. Also the Sunday night concerts at the same place, March 7 and 21, April 4 and 18.

GARROWAY PIANO RECITAL will be held in the Barker Bros.' new auditorium, March 3. Mr. Garroway will be assisted by Calmon Luboviski, violinist.

DR. ROLAND DIGGLE is arranging a series of programs to be given at St. John's church, Los Angeles, on Sunday afternoons during Lent. The Philharmonic String Quartet, Kastner's Trio, and the Zoellner Quartet will assist.

RUSSIAN ART CLUB, Dr. Alexis Kall, president, presents the second symphony concert of Russian music of the series, Saturday evening, March 6th, at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Los Angeles. Modest Altschuler, conductor.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF HARPISTS, INC. will hold the sixth annual Harp Festival, for the first time on the Pacific Coast, March 18 and 19, in Los Angeles. Festival Concert, grand harp ensemble of more than fifty harps, March 18, 8:30 p.m., Philharmonic Auditorium, Fifth and Olive Sts. The program will include harp solos by Carlos Salzedo and Alfred Kastner, songs with harp accompaniment by Lenore Ivey, works for flute, viola, and harp played by Il Trio Novello.

MISS BESSIE CHAPIN, concert violinist, will give the second of a series of three costume programs in the ball room of the Huntington hotel, Pasadena, Thursday morning, March 25, eleven fifteen, the subject being, "Music of the Bible."

MISS TERESA CLOUD presents Roland Hayes, tenor, William Lawrence, accompanist, at the High School Auditorium, Pasadena, Thursday evening, March 18, at 8:15.

THE SMALLMAN A CAPELIA CHOIR has been engaged to sing for the Easter Sunday sunrise service at the Hollywood Bowl. The choir will give a concert at the Philharmonic auditorium the 28th, Palm Sunday.

Announcements

PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYERS announce for March 4th to 27th, an unusual season of repertoire: The programs are:

"MARCH HARES"
A Fantastic Satire in Three Acts
By Harry Wagstaff Gribble
March 4, 5, 10, 15, 20 (Mat. & Eve), 23, 26

"HEDDA GABLER"
By Henrik Ibsen
March 6 (Mat. & Eve., 12, 17, 24

"OUTWARD BOUND"
By Sutton Vane
March 8, 9, 16, 18, 19, 22, 27 (Mat. & Eve.)

"THE TWO VIRTUES"
A Comedy in Four Acts
By Alfred Sutro
March 11, 13 (Mat. & Eve.), 25

PASADENA LECTURE COURSE on Current Topics, 1926, is held, as in past seasons, at the California Institute of Technology in Culbertson Hall, Wilson Ave. and California street, on Tuesdays at 4:15 p.m. The March program is as follows:

March 2—Raymond Robins, Social Economist and Industrial Expert: "Law Enforcement."

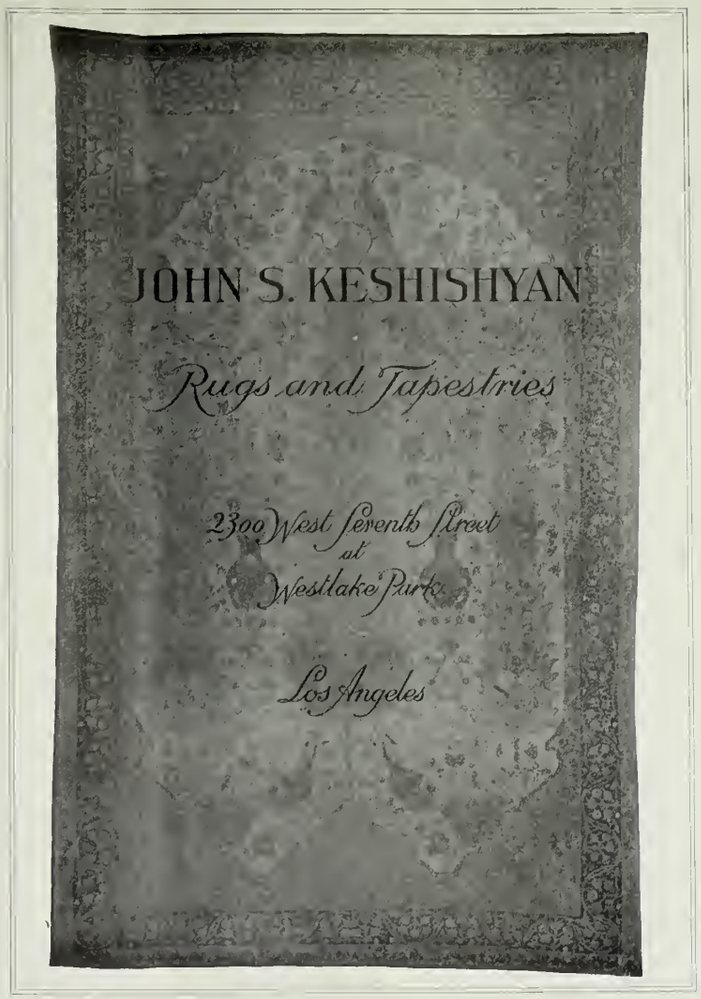
March 16—Dr. Robert A. Millikan, California Institute of Technology.

March 23—Mark Sullivan, Author and Publicist: "Reviewing and Digesting Current Opinion."

March 30—Dhan Gopal Mukerji. "The India of Kipling and the India of Ghandi."

MISSION PLAY, pageant-drama of the old Spanish days, by John Steven McGroarty opened the fifteenth season early in February at the Mission Playhouse in San Gabriel, twelve miles from Los Angeles. The cast includes R. D. MacLean as Father Junipero Serra, and Violet Schramm as Senora Yorba. Among the assisting singers this season will be Irmalee Campbell, Alma Real, Charles King, and Mario Hernandez. Performances every afternoon, except Monday, at 2:15, Wednesday and Saturday nights only.

THE SIERRA MADRE WISTARIA FETE, arranged by the Sierra Madre Woman's Club, working with Mrs. H. T. Fennel, will be held about the middle of the month, as in past seasons. The mammoth wistaria vine on the Fennel property, 201 West Carter avenue, Sierra Madre, entirely encircles the house and continues on wires and pergolas to a total length of 375 feet.



THE SANTA CLARA VALLEY BLOSSOM FESTIVAL AT SARATOGA will be held Saturday and Sunday, March 27 and 28. San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, Alfred Hertz, conductor, will furnish the accompaniment for the chorus numbers. The combined chorus includes units from San Jose, Palo Alto, Mountain View, Saratoga and Los Gatos. The chorus will be lead by Earl Towner, composer of the cantata, "The Promise of Spring," which will be a feature of the program.

SOROPTIMIST CLUB'S first luncheon of the month, held the 2nd in the music room of the Biltmore, President Gertrude C. Maynard, presiding, is Members Day. New members will be welcomed. The honor guest for the day is Maud Allan, one of the foremost aesthetic dancers of this country, and who makes only one other public appearance in Los Angeles.

PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE ASSOCIATION resumed the membership meetings in February at the Recital Hall, at which time Mrs. Milbank Johnson, president of the Association, gave a report upon the General Conference of Little Theaters recently held in Pittsburg. These meetings are scheduled for each month in the future.

CHARLES RANN KENNEDY, with an all-star cast of three players, under the auspices of the Pasadena Center of the Drama League, presents two plays, "The Admiral" March 5th, 2:30, and "The Chastening," March 14, 2:30, in the Pasadena Community Playhouse.

MAUD ALLAN and the Philharmonic Orchestra, Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor, will give one performance, Friday evening, March 5, Philharmonic Auditorium, Los Angeles.

Pomona College, Claremont

TWO DRAMATIC EVENTS are scheduled for Claremont and Pomona valley during the month of March. On March 6 Charles Rann Kennedy, with an all-star cast of three players, will present, in a matinee at 3 o'clock in the Bridges hall of music, his successful play, "The Admiral." In the evening at 8 o'clock his comany presents "The Chastening," which has been called the "Passion Play of America." On March 19 and 20 the annual Junior Farce will be given in Holmes hall at 8:15 o'clock.

Pomona College has announced an exhibit of block color prints during the first two weeks in March from the Gearhart studio in Pasadena. Over thirty prints by noted American and European artists will be on display in Rembrandt hall of art each afternoon from 2 to 5 o'clock. During the remainder of the month a collection of prints by Los Angeles artists will be exhibited.

The final Chamber Music concert of the Zoellner Quartet will be presented in Bridges hall of music at 8 p. m., Monday, March 1. A number of student recitals have also been scheduled on the 8th, 15th, 22nd and 29th. These student recitals are open to the public and weekly draw large audiences of music lovers from Los Angeles, Riverside and San Bernardino counties.

An unusually fine number of lectures have been announced by the college. Dr. William W. Scudder, former district secretary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, will present the following lectures on the general topic "The Protestant Missionary Movement and Its Present Major Problems."

Six lectures will be given by Dr. Eugene Lyman of the Union Theological Seminary.

On March 11, Dr. Russel McCullough Story, head of the department of political science at Pomona College, will give an illustrated lecture on Revolutionary Russia.

The second of a series of unique demonstration lectures by Professor R. R. Tileston and the science department, will be given on the night of March 25, on the "Scientific Basis of Music." This lecture is by invitation only and will be held in Mason hall auditorium.

The annual military formal dance, sponsored by the Pomona College Reserve Officers Training Corps, will be held in the college gymnasium on the night of March 27.

The annual series of Lenten Vespers will be given during Lenten season by the Pomona College department of music each Thursday afternoon at 5 o'clock in the Bridges hall of music.

Art

LOS ANGELES MUSEUM OF HISTORY, SCIENCE AND ART, Exposition Park, announces for March the Seventh International Print Makers Exhibition, under the auspices of the Print Makers Society of California, opening the first and continuing through the month. The exhibition includes etchings, lithographs, block prints and engravings, fully nine countries being represented. Jury of awards: Frances H. Gearhart, Roi Partridge, Nelbert M. Chouinard, H. L. Doolittle, and Cecil de Mille.

MODERN ART WORKERS, a new group of California artists, are holding an exhibition in one of the smaller galleries.

PAINTERS AND SCULPTORS CLUB are showing in still another gallery.

JOHN RICH is holding a one-man show during the month.

BILTMORE SALON will continue during the first week of March the Kathryn Leighton exhibition, an unusually interesting show as it includes the work done last summer in Glacier National Park, one canvas showing the Sperry Glacier, and all of them strong and vigorous. The pictures of Ernest Atwood will be shown early in the month, and during the last half of March an exhibition by Maurice Braun, and an accompanying one by Jack Wilkinson Smith. The artists to follow are Dan S. Grosbeak and Douglas Parshall.

PASADENA SOCIETY OF ARTISTS hold the formal opening of their second annual exhibition, Thursday evening, March 4th, Pasadena Art Institute, Carmelita Gardens, Pasadena. The exhibition will run through the month, and the artists showing are Jean Mannheim, Louis Hovey Sharp, Maud Daggett, Alson Clark, F. Carl Smith, Eva McBride, Carl Moon, Ada Belle Champlin, Frederick A. Zimmerman, Benjamin Chambers Brown, Herbert Van Blarcom Acker, Frances Clark, Wallace L. DeWolf, Antoinette de Forest Merwin, Orrin A. White, Jane McDuffie Thurston, Ethel Farnsworth, John Frost, Edward B. Butler, Franz A. Bischoff, Katherine Beecher Stetson, and S. Tolles Chamberlain.

THE CANNELL AND CHAFFIN GALLERIES, 720 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles, announce the following exhibitions: To March 6, Emma Ciardi, Italian landscapes and studies; Percival Gaskell, mezzo-tints and etchings. The opening of the Ettore Tito exhibition was postponed to this month and it will run March 15 to April 17. This great Italian artist has never before held a one-man show in this country, exhibiting previously only a canvas or two at Eastern galleries, and this is, therefore, one of the most important exhibitions of the entire season.

THE GRACE NICHOLSON GALLERIES, 46 North Los Robles Avenue, Pasadena, will show to March 26 in the large gallery the Undersea Paintings, studies of coral reefs and fish, by Zarh Pritchard. This is the only one-man show Mr. Pritchard will hold in this country, though his pictures may be seen in Eastern galleries, also in the Museum of the Luxembourg, Paris, Oceanographic Museum, Monaco, and the Museums of Natural History both of New York and Cleveland.

VICTOR HIGGINS, who has just returned from Hawaii, will show in one of the smaller galleries during the month.

STENDAHL GALLERIES, Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, will continue the Guy Rose Memorial Exhibition to the 15th. This exhibition is made up of the unsold work of Mr. Rose, who made Pasadena his home until his death last November, and consists of pictures, studies and sketches. It is an exceptional showing and of great beauty. The last half of March recent pictures by Paul Lauritz will be shown, including completed canvases from the sketches he made last summer in Norway.

BERNAYS, 2501 West Seventh Street, at Carondelet, Los Angeles, announces an exhibition of Antonia Melvill to March 6. Etchings by Arthur Millier to the same date. The galleries are open evenings by appointment. DUnkirk 3839.

HATFIELD GALLERIES, 3142 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles, are showing a general exhibition of notable Eastern pictures.

THE WENZELL STUDIO, 3002 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles, is open from 3 until 6 daily, and at other times by appointment, for the exhibition of the paintings and drawings by A. B. Wenzell.

LONG BEACH ART ASSOCIATION elected the following officers for 1926: Matt Piper, president; Mrs. Clara Barnett, first vice president; Adelle Phelps, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Alice Maynard Griggs, treasurer.

PAINTERS OF THE WEST held the fourth exhibition at the Biltmore Salon, with Seymour Thomas, Roscoe Shrader, and Elliott Clarke as the jury on awards. The gold medal was given to Douglas Parshall's "Arabs in the Market", the silver medal to Orrin White's "Sycamores El Capitan", and the bronze medal to "Attraction to Art" by Karl Yens.

JOHN SINGER SARGENT'S memory was signally honored in London last month, when over six hundred of his paintings were exhibited at the Royal Academy.

Partial View of

GRACE NICHOLSON'S CHINESE GARDEN

46 No. Los Robles Avenue, Pasadena

Delegates to the Annual Meeting of The Garden Club of America will be welcome to visit the Garden and Miss Nicholson's Famous Treasure House of Oriental Art and Art Galleries

Directly across from Hotel Maryland

Eleanor and . . . .

Hollingsworth Beach

French and Italian Arts

630 East Colorado Street

Pasadena,

California

Allen's Water Gardens

We specialize in the construction, planting and care of Water Gardens. Consult us before you build that Pool and have it correct in every detail. Now is the time to Plant Water Lilies, for early spring blooms. Our Collection is the finest in the world.

Write for Catalogue Visitors Welcome at the Gardens

3304 Rowena Avenue, East Hollywood, Cal.

Phone Olympia 5816

AINSLIE GALLERIES, in Barker Bros'. new store on Seventh Street, Los Angeles, is a branch of the Ainslie Galleries of New York, and is the first branch to be established since the founding of these famous galleries nearly fifty years ago. The collection of historical marines by Edward Moran will be continued in the large gallery for another month, pending the possible purchase by a museum. After these have been taken down the large gallery will be used entirely for the display of the work of Western artists, generally California men and women. At present the Californians are using a smaller room, and the remaining galleries are showing the work of famous artists. Frank Ainslie is in charge of the galleries, with Silas Dustin as his assistant.

CALIFORNIA SOCIETY OF MINIATURE PAINTERS will continue the ninth annual exhibition at the Friday Morning Club, 940 South Figueroa Street, Los Angeles, throughout March. The exhibition was held at the Biltmore Salon, and at the Art Institute, Carmelita Gardens, Pasadena, in February. The prize offered went to Ella Shepard Bush's portrait of Mrs. Lillian T. Converse; first honorable mention to Mary Coleman Allen's "Yvette", and the second to Aurelia Wheeler Reid's portrait of Elizabeth Reid.

ALSON CLARK has completed a studio home at Palm Springs. The house is located in one of the small canyons and follows the Spanish lines, so well adapted to the location.

HENRI DE KRUIF has been sketching along the edge of the desert and in Palm Canyon.

LOREN BARTON is at home again in Los Angeles, 3840 Wilshire Blvd., after five months in France and Spain.

ARTHUR HILL GILBERT held an exceptionally successful one-man show at the Mission Inn, Riverside, last month.

F. TENNY JOHNSON is again in California and has opened his studio home in Alhambra.

HANSEN PUTHUFF has completed his new home and studio at La Crescenta.

HERMAN SACHS is in Florida, having been chosen from among the many artists considered to decorate the interior of the Alba Hotel at Palm Beach. His work here in many interesting buildings proves his adaptability to different types of architecture.

IRVING MANOIR will have an exhibition of his bird paintings, starting March 1st and continuing through March 15th, at the Ainslee Galleries, Los Angeles. Because of the extremely decorative quality of these paintings and the reputation of Mr. Manoir's work, this promises to be a most interesting exhibition.

HERBERT V. B. ACKER exhibited new portraits at the Ebell Club during January, which included "Mervin Williams as Pelleas," Alice Gentle in the role of Carmen, and Neal Begley in "Pagliacci."

F. HODGSON SMART has returned from Canada and opened a studio on Wilshire Blvd. His exhibition of portraits at the Biltmore Salon, including those of General Pershing, the late President Harding and General Foch, will be remembered.

JULES KIEVITS is showing in his gallery at the Huntington Hotel a few examples of the work of the Italian artist, Gennaro Favai, as well as pictures by California artists including Jean Mannheim. Orrin White, and F. Carl Smith. Guy Brink is manager of this gallery.

IL CONTE LATTANZIO DI FIRMIAN, well known portrait painter, is spending the winter in California, dividing his time between the Huntington and Beverly Hills hotels.

SOCIETY OF ARTS AND CRAFTS offer an exhibition of the work of the Weavers, March 8 to 13, in the headquarters, 2871 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles.

DOUGLAS DONALDSON is giving a course in color and design under the Extension Division of the University of California which includes planning the garden with reference to color and design. Mr. Donaldson will give this course in his studio on Melrose Hill, Hollywood, during the summer.

BENJAMIN BROWN has sold one of his landscapes, a winter scene in the mountains, to the Ebell Club, Los Angeles, for its permanent collection.

HAROLD SWARTZ, sculptor, is sketching and collecting material for later work, in Japan.

ARTHUR HILL GILBERT is sketching at Laguna Beach.

DAVID ANTHONY TAUSZKY held an exhibition of some of his recent paintings from February 19th to 28th, at the Henry C. Foes studios, Patio Community Playhouse, Pasadena.

THE GLENDALE ART ASSOCIATION, of which Mrs. Roy A. Ballagh is president, held their annual banquet, February 6, at the Tuesday Afternoon clubhouse. Many unique features were introduced at the affair and distinguished artists were special guests.

Scott Auto Rental Company

Successor to

Meagers Auto Rental Service

Buick, Chrysler, Dodge and Ford
Open and Closed Cars

For Hire Without Drivers

California in the Spring—Poppy fields, desert wild flowers, orange blossom lanes—have the joy of discovering them for yourself.

161 W. Colorado St., Pasadena. Wakefield 8181

Entrance—Sidney Glass Residence
Truesdell & Newton, Architects

REINFORCED "GUNITE" VENEER EXTERIOR STRONGER THAN CONCRETE

"GUNITE" was used on the Sidney Glass and H. G. Johansing residences in Flintridge (see article on page 34 of this magazine).

L. A. CEMENT GUN CO.

623 UNION LEAGUE BLDG. TRINITY 4066

Literature sent upon request

PASADENA

Flower-City of the Southland

A city of beautiful homes and gorgeous gardens—of smart shops, magnificent hotels, and rare recreational and cultural advantages. Home of Busch Gardens, the Tournament of Roses, Carmelita Gardens, the Huntington Library, Carnegie Institute Solar Observatory, Pasadena Art Institute, and a community playhouse of which John Drinkwater said: "It is one of the most encouraging things I have seen in America."

Our new illustrated booklet, "Pasadena—Summer and Winter," upon request

Pasadena Chamber of Commerce and Civic Association

PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

CANNELL AND CHAFFIN, INC.

IMPORTERS :: :: INTERIOR DECORATORS

Los Angeles

720 West Seventh Street

Pasadena

397 East Colorado Street

California

Mt. LOWE
"Earth has no finer view to show."

Mt. LOWE TAVERN and Cottages
Enlarged and Improved

at the terminus of this World-Famous Trip afford a most delightful retreat for a long or short sojourn at reasonable rates

5 Trains Daily at convenient hours - from Main St. Station Los Angeles

$2.50 Round Trip Rate

For information and Reservations apply

Pacific Electric Ry.
Information Bureau Phone MEtaio-TRinity 3661

HOTEL GREEN

A well ordered Residential and Tourist Hotel of peculiar excellence. Open all year. Moderate rates. Apartments by the month.

The Green Tea Pot
A Convenient Restaurant
CHARLES B. HERVEY, Proprietor

La Solana

A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue.

Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day.

Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St. Pasadena

KIEVITS GALLERIES
Vista del Arroyo Hotel, Pasadena
European and American Paintings

A FEW COMPLETE FILES OF CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
May now be secured by those who wish to bind them for libraries. 72 numbers for $7.50 postpaid. A discount of $2.00 will be given for any set not requiring No. 3.

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - - Editor and Publisher
ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - - Associate Editor

NO. 75, VOL. VIII. MARCH, 1926

CONTENTS

	PAGE
IN ARCADY—A PAINTING BY LILIA TUCKERMAN.....Cover Design
SOUTHLAND CALENDAR.....Ellen Leech	3,5,6
THE ELFIN FOREST.....Francis Fultz	11
THE SEED FARMS OF SANTA BARBARA COUNTY.....	12
WITHIN GARDEN GATES.....Ervanna B. Bissell	13
THE STREET IN SPAIN, SANTA BARBARA.....E. B. B.	15
THE PATHWAY TO A CITY'S BEAUTY.....M. Urmy Seares	17
THE NEW SOROLLAS AT THE HISPANIC MUSEUM..Christine Curtis	19
A BRIDE OF THE HOUSE OF HUNTINGTON.....	20
RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS.....Louise Morgrage	21
SOUTHLAND OPINION.....	22-23
SPORTS AFIELD AND AT THE CLUBS.....	24-25
STYLES FOR CALIFORNIANS.....Fairfax Proudfit Walkup	26
SET IN A SEASIDE GARDEN—MIRAMAR.....	27
A PAGEANT OF SPRING FLOWERS—SAMARKAND.....	29
REPORT OF THE MEETINGS OF THE A. I. A.....H. O. Sexsmith	30
BULLETIN OF THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES.....	31
THE RELATION OF THE GARDEN TO THE HOUSE.....Myron Hunt, A. I. A.	32
FLINTRIDGE VILLAS BY TRUESDELL, NEWTON AND STEWART CHISHOLM.....	34
A CIRCLE OF CHARM AT OLD MONTEREY.....	38
BULLETIN OF THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA	40

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.
Copyrighted, 1926, by M. Urmy Seares
Subscription price $2.50 per year, $1.25 one half year
RALPH B. URMY, JR., ADVERTISING MANAGER
MAIL ADDRESS: CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
Mrs. D. B. Sebastian, Box 296, Hollywood, National Representative
Advertisers desiring information concerning space or rates may call
Fair Oaks 7034 for Publisher's Office
During Press Week, 24th to 30th, call TRinity 1501

The Los Angeles
Elizabeth Arden Salon
with
J. W. ROBINSON CO.
LOS ANGELES

UNDER the direct management of Miss Arden and her New York staff, and offering the same specialized treatments which have made Miss Arden's other salons internationally known.

Seventh Floor

Antiques
JOHN W. CONDIT

Dealer in rare old pieces selected from private homes. Specialist in the proper restoration of heirlooms.

199 S. Fair Oaks Ave., Pasadena
Telephone Terrace 0315-W

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Italian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

Margaret Craig
PICTORIAL PHOTOGRAPHER
Portraits
Architecture
Gardens
Studio 3223 W. 6th St.
Telephone WAshington 1653
Los Angeles

PORTRAITS
BY
PHOTOGRAPHY

Charles S. Seabolt
26 No. Los Robles Avenue,
Pasadena, California
Opposite Maryland Hotel
Terrace 6712

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

THE ELFIN FOREST AND THE GARDENS OF MAN

Francis M. Fultz, of the Forestry Department, Public Schools of Los Angeles, has written a book which is so vitally needed by all who have come to California, so interesting to all who sojourn here and so eloquent of his work among the school children that we here quote part of the introduction and some of the first chapter.

FOR many years I have been wandering among the mountains of Southern California, so it is with some degree of assurance that I write about them and their wonderful forest-cover. And for this reason, too, what I shall have to say is largely out of my own personal experience and investigation.

The Chaparral is very dear to me now, but when I first "hit the trail" that led me into it, it did not strike me at all favorably. And everything about it was so new and strange that I almost felt as if I were in another world. Of the "brush" of which it was composed, there was scarcely a familiar form, and it was all so harsh and unyielding that it aroused a certain feeling of hostility within me. I knew, however, that the feeling was unjust, for I was fully aware the Chaparral was a forest-cover designed by Nature as the best possible means for the conservation of the land. I knew, too, the proper thing for me to do was to down the unfriendly feeling and make an honest effort to get acquainted.

A BRIDLE TRAIL THROUGH THE ELFIN FOREST ON THE HILLS OF FLINTRIDGE, CALIFORNIA.

Naturally, I sought books on the subject, but found none that gave me immediate help. The only work devoted exclusively to the subject which has so far appeared is a pamplet of 48 pages issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, through the Forest Service, by Fred G. Plummer, entitled "Chaparral."

* * * * *

THE fame of California's Giant-Forest has spread around the world; but who, outside of a few botanists and those most interested in the conservation of our land, knows of the wonders of the Elfin-Wood? Yet this dwarf forest of the Southwest is really the more marvelous of the two.

THE POOL IN THE GARDEN OF CASA SANTA CRUZ ON MISSION HILL, SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA. FURTHER ILLUSTRATED ON FOLLOWING PAGES.

While California does not have the only forest of elfin-trees in the world, it has by far the most extensive stretch of the dwarf woodland, excepting only that of Australia, which is largely made up of elfin-eucalyptus, and which is said not to be so uniform in growth and development as the elfin forest-cover of our mountains and foothills. There are smaller areas on the coast of Chile, along the shores of the Mediterranean in Europe and Asia, and eastward into Turkestan, and on the shores of Africa west of the Cape of Good Hope. Each region has its own particular dominating group or groups of shrubs—acacias in the East; eucalyptus in Australia; scrub-oaks, buckthorn and others to be mentioned later, in California.

Tourists, visitors, and newcomers to the region see the foothills and mountains covered with a low, scrubby, woody growth and they immediately get the idea that Nature has treated Southern California very shabbily in the matter of forests. To them the chaparral is just so much brush cumbering the ground. In its stead, to their way of thinking, there should be a forest of sizable trees that are fit for lumber, shingles, cross-ties, fence posts, telephone poles and fuel. When they try to invade the chaparral, and are repulsed by the dense, tough and spiny growth, they are not only confirmed in their first unfavorable opinion, but they add to it the conviction that the elfin-wood is a positive curse, and that the land would be far better off without it.

MAN HAS FILLED VALLEYS OF CALIFORNIA WITH FIELDS OF FLOWERS.

But Dame Nature knew her business when she developed the chaparral. Without it the mountains of the Southwest would be stark pinnacles and naked ridges, the foothills barren, rock slopes, and the valleys nothing but beds of cobble-stones and gravel. The growing season on the Southwest Coast is the short, cool, wet winter; the resting period is the long, hot, arid summer. Forest trees are not constituted to do their growing during three or four months of winter rains, and then rest through eight or nine months of absolute drought; the shrubs of the chaparral are. Pines, spruces, firs and cedars need some soil, or at least some deposits of rock-waste, in which to spread their root-systems; a rock-crevice is all that many of the chaparral shrubs demand.

The wealth of Southern California lies in the mountains; not in the gold and other minerals which may be hidden there, but in the water stored away from the winter rains and snows. And the mountains would be very poor reservoirs, indeed, if it were not for the blanket of elfin-tree growth which keeps the rain from running off as it falls, holds the covering of soil and rock waste in place, and prevents an enormous amount of evaporation. How defenseless the mountains are without their coat of chaparral against the elements, and how much of the rainfall they let run away which they should store up, we just now have the opportunity of seeing vividly illustrated in the Pacoima and Big Tejunga region, and in the Big Dalton and San Dimas section, where a few years ago fire swept away every vestige of vegetation. But of this I shall have more to say further along.

To those who have only a casual acquaintance with the chaparral, its various shrubs have little individuality. It is all brush. They may recognize the fact that the shrubs are not all alike, yet the distinctions between them are hazy. But to one who frequents the trails of the Southern mountains, and who familiarizes himself with what is found along them, there is as distinctive a make-up to the Elfin-Wood as there is to the forest of giants.

(To Be Continued)

THE SEED FARMS OF LOMPOC, SANTA BARBARA COUNTY, CALIFORNIA. FLORADALE FARMS FURNISH MOST OF SWEET PEA SEEDS SOLD IN PHILADELPHIA.

WITHIN GARDEN GATES

ERVANNA BOWEN BISSELL EDITOR, GARDEN PAGES

THE HOUSE AND GARDEN OF MR. AND MRS. BERNHARD HOFFMANN SANTA BARBARA

OLIVE BRANCHES SHADE THE SPANISH DOORWAY LEADING TO THE WALLED GARDEN.

Below is the Forecourt of Casa Santa Cruz, Santa Barbara, California. The gray of Olive branches, of Buddleia asiatica, and the Saltbush's powdered silver leaves blend with the soft green of window blinds and casements, while the white walls and red-tiled roof make a pleasing contrast. The giant cacti—one of the so-called Night blooming Cereus, shows shades of gray in its gnarled ribs towering like a tree over the house.

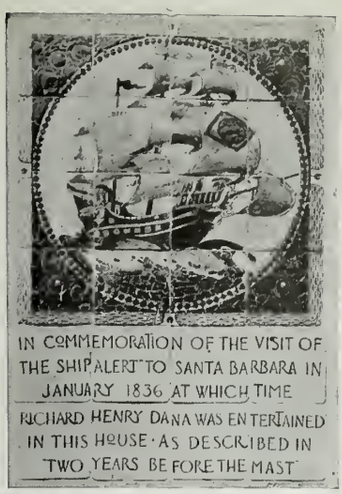
CASA SANTA CRUZ, SOUTH FRONT FACING THE CHANNEL AND THE ISLANDS. JAMES OSBOURNE CRAIG, ARCHITECT.

The path to the Secret Garden enclosed by trellises covered with Cecile Brunner roses. Blue daisies and spring bulbs make gay this hidden place where a little girl brings her friends. The birds come in and even, as in that other Secret Garden, the robins dig for worms after the winter rains.

The Tea Terrace where, shaded by trees, one sits looking through the open tiles of this Mexican wall, upon the fountain and the flowers of the lower garden.

There are two separate gardens at Santa Cruz. The lower one lies in the canyon, sheltered by the cliff and rich in soil washed down from the mountains. Here under Live Oaks and Sycamores is the Spring Garden, and beyond their shade the picking and vegetable gardens, cold frames and lath-houses.
On the house-level is the Garden of Views made bright with flowers. With the mountains for a background, one looks out across the Mesa to the Channel and the island of Santa Cruz from which the house is named.



THE OLIVE WALK LEADS TO THIS CIRCULAR TERRACE, WHERE DELIGHTFUL GARDEN PARTIES ARE HELD UNDER THE BRANCHES OF A SPREADING MONTEREY PINE.

SANTA BARBARA'S STREET IN SPAIN

SANTA BARBARA had a day-dream—not of a castle in Spain—but of Spanish houses in California. Great dreams sometimes carry blueprints with them. Ours are the de la Guerra Studios, that street in Spain wrought by the white magic of the Bernhard Hoffmanns.

It is largely because we have grown familiar with the artistic practicality of El Paseo—as we call the Studios—that the city is building her business section in modified Spanish architecture.

For three years we have shopped in El Paseo; held flower shows and concerts there; danced and dined in its Patio. Betimes when a moon came and a mandolin tinkled we whispered, "It's just like a bit of the Old World!" What we meant was, that it didn't in the least resemble our own work-a-day world. We had left that behind, and in some effortless way slipped out of the commonplace into Charm.

The tourists are delighted with El Paseo. We shall never forget the family dining near us in the Patio one early evening. It was quite evident that they were travelers from the Plains of Nowhere. They had wandered in looking for a restaurant, yet food was forgotten in the enjoyment of their surroundings. The contentment on the tired mother's face; the girl's dreaming smile, even the lad's look of kinship with Peter Pan's realities, were heart warming. The father's air of satisfaction said, "At last, I've brought you Somewhere!" And their eager comments; where did the stairways lead, and who was behind the casement windows? Their interest in the little tables, the fountain, the flower jars and growing vines was almost child-like. The colorful china, quaint lanterns and tiles brought questions about ships, far countries, and journeys that people make. The family was watching the stars come out and hearing the musicians play when we came away feeling more sure than ever of Beauty's power to break life's monotony.

THE PATIO RESTAURANT IN EL PASEO. ON THE NORTH, EAST, AND SOUTH ARE CHARMING ROOMS DECORATED IN DISTINCTIVE MANNER AND OVER THE OPEN AIR RESTAURANT ARE DRAWN GREAT AWNINGS OF RICH BROWN WHEN THE SUNLIGHT IS TOO STRONG.

In his book, "Two Years Before the Mast," Richard Henry Dana describes his visit in 1836 to the de la Guerra house. A wall tablet of colored tiles commemorates this event.

The de la Guerra house is the heart of

ALONG DE LA GUERRA STREET ONE FINDS THE SOUTH ENTRANCE TO EL PASEO.

ONE OF THE ENTRANCES TO EL PATIO AND A STAIRWAY LEADING TO STUDIOS ON THE SECOND FLOOR OF DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS.

the Studio group, and so wisely was it restored in 1922-23 that its ancient charm still remains. Next to the Missions, this historic dwelling is one of the most interesting and important landmarks left from the Spanish occupancy in California.

Don Jose de la Guerra, the founder of the family and of the house, although born in Spain, spent his long life in military and civic service in this country. He was Commandante of the Presidio of Santa Barbara from 1815 until he resigned his post in 1842. He left gifted children to carry on the family traditions. There is a dramatic touch in the Fiesta picture, for the leader of the Spanish Cavaliers is a direct descendant of the great Commandante. [See Fiesta picture on page 15]

It is often said that "People leave their traditions behind when coming to California." Perhaps they do. It would seem possible, though, to keep one's own while enriching them by association with those of one's present surroundings. Our Puritan ancestors are dear to us, but who can deny that a Spanish ancestor is not equally noble and a trifle more picturesque? If, at least in our civic life, we can forget the family in the national relationship, we can appropriate some of our country's ancestors, both eastern and western, with satisfaction.

To many of us it is a matter of pride and gratitude, that two people of vision have saved an historical landmark, and made it possible for those who follow after, to share in the traditions which cluster around it.

STAIRWAYS LEAD FROM EL PASEO UP TO THE STUDIOS AND TO DELIGHTFUL LITTLE APARTMENTS.

ERVANNA BOWEN BISSELL.

IN WINTER THE DOORS TO THE DINING ROOM OF EL PATIO MAY BE CLOSED, BUT MANY PREFER TO DINE OUT OF DOORS IN JANUARY AND DECEMBER

THE EAST SIDE OF THE COURT OPENING AT THE RIGHT INTO DE LA GUERRA STREET, THROUGH THE DOOR BELOW THE BELL TO THE RESTAURANT

EL PASEO—SANTA BARBARA'S PATHWAY TO BEAUTY

IN the story of Santa Barbara written in the stones of her streets, the walls of her buildings and the laying of her roofs, El Paseo was the passage way—the open door—to truth and beauty.

From de la Guerra street, where the old house of the de la Guerras stood since the Declaration of Independence was written, through the city block whose key lots looked like many another dumping place behind a dingy Main street, El Paseo slowly grew in grace and beauty.

On the east, this piece of what the realtors would call "inside private property" opens on Anacapa street, where the ancient adobe wall of the original property stood for so many years unnoticed by the "Gringo." On the north this "Passageway" behind the business blocks of the old presidio city runs through to Canon Perdido street. Tumbled-down adobes and Chinese wash-houses still stand beside the gateway to El Paseo's parking place, but across the street stands the lovely white stage tower of the new Lobero Theatre, whose sheer whiteness shimmering up into the blue of a California sky caught the first rays of the morning sun that terrific day last June and answered the fear of the populace with confidence, saying, "There is a way to build in truth and beauty and stability. There are some things which have not fallen. Build again!"

So this well built, intelligent and wisely directed inside court, Paseo, or plaisance that was at first but a restoration of Old Adobe Days, became, in that time that tried men's souls, the center of the

THE DOORWAY TO PASEO DE LAS FLORES WHERE THE FLOWER SHOPS FACE ESTADO, THE FAST GROWING AVENUE OF BEAUTIFUL SHOPS.

THE WINDOW OF PASEO SPORT SHOP. APARTMENTS FILL THE SECOND STORY AND THE DOORWAY LEADS TO THE LOBERO THEATRE.

IN 1922 THERE WAS PUBLISHED BY THE ARCHITECT AND ENGINEER OF SAN FRANCISCO WORK OF THE LATE JAMES OSBOURNE CRAIG. THE ENGRAVINGS INCLUDED THIS SKETCH FOR THE RESTORATION OF THE OLD PLAZA UPON WHICH THE DE LA GUERRA HOUSE FACED. THE CITY HALL HAS ALREADY BEEN BUILT ON THE SITE OF THE BUILDING ON THE LEFT, BUT NOT BY MR. CRAIG. IT IS TO BE HOPED THAT PROPERTY OWNERS WILL FINISH THE WORK SO BEAUTIFULLY BEGUN AND THAT A MEMORIAL TO JAMES OSBOURNE CRAIG WILL GRACE THE CENTER OF THE LITTLE PARK, NOW KNOWN AS THE DE LA GUERRA PLAZA, SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

Red Cross emergency work—the heart of Santa Barbara.

For that fact must be written down in every history of California: the building of a better and more beautiful city had begun in Santa Barbara long before the angry earth had shaken its old head at shoddy building. For three years the work has been in progress.

No sooner was the inner patio and court completed than the beauty of the de la Guerra Studios broke through by sheer force of necessity to the main street of the city through "El Paseo de las Flores," a tiny passageway across from Diehl's and Trenwith's; those who were in Santa Barbara some years ago remember which block of the long, stupid street it was. Here, facing the other stores with its pretty smile, like that of a little child, stands the two-story building designed by Mrs. James Osbourne Craig, in conformity with the Paseo plans Mr. Craig had made, but had not lived to see completed.

Long before Nature herself took a hand in the rebuilding of State Street, Mr. Bernhard Hoffmann as an active member of the Community Arts Association had planned with Mr. Craig, his chosen architect, to restore as much of the historic city as was possible. The Mission of Santa Barbara has been the best preserved of California Missions for decades because it was used for the purpose for which it was built and the life of the community flowed through it, preserving it.

Not so with the presidio, the domestic houses, the old trading place. The new American town made up of its ungraceful long country road lined with uninteresting, badly designed and slightly built stores was superimposed upon the ancient city, crawling over it but not occupying or revivifying that record of a civic life not yet completely snuffed out. The Spanish built well-rounded towns that did not sprawl. They planned their center and grouped their homes around it or set them in rancherias like Hope Ranch.

State Street has become Estado and in time all its little shops will be good looking and attract more trade. But the Santa Barbara of today must rest for a moment until it has thought out again some lovely general plan which shall encompass the community as a crown to all its work.

Preparedness is the one word which should always be emphasized when Santa Barbara is held up as an example to the cities of the Southland which, built by emigres from cities and towns provided with cyclone cellars and lightning rods, have ignored earthquake faults.

It is because there were men on the job who know what an earthquake is like that the switch was closed, and the gas turned off, and the radio set up in the main street instantly; and Santa Barbara saved, and her few wounded succored so efficiently. It is because the Community Arts Association through its Plans and Planting Committee had since 1922 been teaching the ignorant by precept and example how to restore the proper sort of California building in California, that the earthquake of 1925 became a blessing instead of a disaster to that city and to the whole region south of it. It is because El Paseo was there that Beauty entered. For, look you what that martyred city had to contend with. Cowards, who like the ostrich seemed to think that sticking their heads in a hole in the fence will hide their bodies, flew to Santa Barbara on the wings of the wind and began at once to exploit her and to persuade her, promising that if she would accept no help from outside and pretend that there had been no cause for alarming possible tourists, they would see that the city received all the money necessary for a quick recovery. The Rockefeller fund offered $500,000 from Paris, but it was not accepted by California and so went to France instead. Three million was the estimated amount needed. By cutting out any aid to churches and other semi-public buildings, Santa Barbara managed to make her estimated necessary fund less than half the first sum really needed. Little towns all over the state raised their quotas—many sacrificed in order to help Santa Barbara, and out of the 1,100,000 promised, that city, after taxing herself to the limit and keeping still about her troubles, has received only $600,000! Besides taxes she has raised half that amount herself in addition. But the men and the Chambers of Commerce who asked Santa Barbara, known and beloved the world over, not to accept outside aid have failed her; and her churches, her public buildings and her pavements still stand in ruins crying out shame on such false publicity.

"The Truth shall make you free," says Holy Scripture. Only by being true to California and to our guests can we see to it that our beloved state continues to prosper. Unless the untrue and incompetent are allowed to build in Santa Barbara, it will forever be the safest place in the world to visit or to live in. Think of the danger to passengers on a ship if those who are building houses in Los Angeles were allowed to construct the ship with no more knowledge of the sea than the inland population of that city has at present. Think of the danger to cities in California springing up in a day with no rules for earthquakes to guide them, and then know that man himself is the only cause of danger from the great waves of force which pass under our Californian cities. Santa Barbara has everything screwed down or nailed tight or tied-in with reinforced concrete. Santa Barbara has no cause to keep still about her earthquake nor any cause to be ashamed of the knowledge she has salted down in her building code that resulted from it. Truth is far better than fiction.

THE GRAVE MEN OF NAVARRA BENEATH THE BANNER OF THE CROSS. PHOTOGRAPHS BY COURTESY OF HISPANIC MUSEUM, NEW YORK
SOROLLA IN THE HISPANIC MUSEUM, NEW YORK CITY

SOROLLA AND THE SPANISH PROVINCES

By CHRISTINE TURNER CURTIS

SUNLIGHT—the brilliant, blinding white light of Southern Spain,—this is home-coming to the sun-worshipper who steps from the cold smoky streets of New York into the new Sorolla room of the Hispanic Museum. Here are placed the last great works of Joaquin Sorolla y Bastida, foremost among painters of modern Spain, who was commissioned in 1911 by the president of the Hispanic Society of America to do a grand series of paintings representing the Spanish provinces of today. Five years was the time specified for the completion of the work. But the World War intervened and Sorolla after various setbacks, finished the last canvas in 1920.

In February of this year, the magnificent murals were first opened to public view. Collectively they cover the entire circuit of the four walls of the museum's spacious exhibition room. The panels mirror the glorious rich life of the Spanish provinces, including Castilla, Aragon, Galicia, Navarra, Cataluna, Valencia, Andalusia and Sevilla. Each canvas flashes a glimpse of the characteristic scene of the province, painted in full sun, with the miraculous effect of pulsing light which Sorolla preeminently was able to convey. Under the broad sky, the prodigal colors of that intense country glow in lavish and drunken luxuriance: a certain camelia red, a green of lakes set deep in the hills, a melting yellow, and Sorolla's own magnetic sea blue.

BRINGING HOME THE GOLDEN ORANGES OF VALENCIA. A PAINTING BY SOROLLA IN THE HISPANIC MUSEUM, GIVEN BY ARCHER HUNTINGTON TO THE CITY OF NEW YORK

The largest of the panels, covering the entire length of one wall, represents Castille—a gorgeous Saint's day procession—led by a detachment of the Civil Guard, in uniform on white horses. A crowd of balloon-skirted women carrying loaves of bread and frosted cakes follow, with banners of cherry red billowing and blowing. The ox-drivers, the donkey boys, the brilliant-clad populace look on, wagons carry piled-up sacks of grain, snowy white and rounded under the open sun, beyond rises the yellow sandstone of the town, and the white gleam of a distant mountain range.

In contrast is the soft mealy green and yellow picture of date harvesting in Elche, where the peasants rest under the sprays of the date palms, pensive, in the strained yellow-green light. One peasant carries a great saffron clump over his shoulder, the paniers below are crammed with dates, in the background shines the round white dome of a baking oven.

One of this writer's favorites was the peasant dance of Aragonla Jota, it may have been,—a group of tall lithe villagers dancing in the shadow of the blue towering mountains. The women wear sweeping skirts of a lovely peacock green, with little red-laced bodices, white leg of mutton sleeves, and white ruffs, on their heads, tams of red, white or purple,—the men are in purple and green trousers and straight black hats. Over the little group loom the mountains, flanks of yellow and dusk-blue, swooping up to crests of white drifted snow.

More reminiscent of the Sorolla with whom we are familiar were the seaside panels,—Cataluna, where the sailors were hauling in the enormous tunny fish, boats moored to the wharf, the light flickering through the canopy into an open air market. In the interstices of the boats one sees the pale blue flat little curls of the morning sea, just touched with early silver light. In Ayamonte the peasants arrange their small gray-pink fishes in paniers under the white stripped trunks of the sycamores. The yellow leaves and the great gnarled trunks stand out on the cobalt blue of the sea in the brilliant flood of noonday sun.

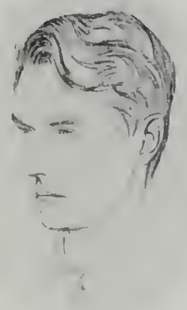
Sevilla shows the Spanish belles in airy white laces, with magenta rosettes in their hair dancing the Seguidilla in the open patio. Red, yellow and orange blooms climb the white walls, the small fountain sprays, colored lanterns swing, the dark-eyed beauties lift their trim feet, and flaunt their fans.

Into each of the distinctive scenes the great Spanish master has thrown his vigor, his inimitable dramatic veuve, so that the gay, ardent spirit of the country leaps from the canvas. By its joyousness, its bold sweep and color, its sense of robust and abundant life, this Sorolla showing delights and expands the heart.

More than two decades ago Sorolla opened the Hispanic Museum with a large and highly colorful exhibition of his works which proved one of the most popular art fiestas that New York has ever known. The Spanish artist died three years ago, still in the flush of his powers. These new testimonies to his unique genius will permanently recall the enchantment of sun-saturated lands and high spirits of romantic Spain to the many Museum visitors.

THE COLOR PLATES

SANTA BARBARA County is one of the most paintable parts of California. Its gardens are especially lovely and have been planned to fit the landscape which extends in gentle beauty from the mountains directly to the sea. Fruit orchards in full bloom are bordered by live oak groves—"Pomona whispering to Pan" our California Troubadour, Clarence Urmy, once described it. Nature and art are indeed most fortunately blended in the gardens of Montecito. In our cover plates in color, Mrs. Tuckerman has caught this happy combination of the natural beauty of our mountains and our art.



THE GREY CORN-FED PIGS OF EXTREMADURA. SOROLLA'S PAINTING

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

ISABELLA STEWART GARDNER AND FENWAY COURT,
by MORRIS CARTER,
HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY.

Almost any woman, inclined toward the unconventional in deportment and viewpoint, is bound to meet with disapproving frowns from others in her walk through life. However if wealth and position be her lot human nature is just queer enough to be somewhat less critical, and if in addition she has charm, then indeed the world is hers, albeit a portion will be terribly green about it. All of which was apparently true in the case of Mrs. Jack Gardner, that remarkably striking character, who kept Boston all agog for sixty years. Her friends and artistic aspirants, thronged about her in worshipful adoration, the man in the street was always on the alert to hear about her latest pranks, while certain members of Boston's social set allowed an aloof and haughty mien to express exactly what they thought about her conduct. However even these capitulated in the end and joined the admiring circle, for while sixty years are passing standards regarding propriety are apt to change.

JOHN DRINKWATER, AUTHOR OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN, A PLAY; AND POEMS, 1908-1919.

There is plenty of material here, as any one can see, for a racy tale, but Mr. Carter has chosen not to emphasize this phase of the life of the woman who dominated for so many years the aesthetic activities of the "hub". Aside from a few sly and delicious thrusts at Boston's aristocracy, and an anecdote or two showing what Mrs. Gardner could do when her temperament was working, he is strictly conservative, and somewhat eulogistic. Her career is considered mostly as it relates to the inception, development and accomplishment of Fenway Court, which results in making the book a most satisfactory resume of the aesthetic life of Boston during a very glorious period in its history. Many a reader will lay it aside, overcome by haunting and poignant memories, recalling dear, delightful days that are no more.

STICKS AND STONES,
by LEWIS MUMFORD,
RONI & LIVERIGHT

Of all the arts, architecture is the one most closely connected with the lives of human beings. Music and painting for instance are arts, which may be and frequently are totally disregarded by all who feel no particular urge in their direction, but no one is wholly indifferent to architecture, since most men have to live and work and even play at times, under a covering of some sort. Hence it comes about that styles of architecture reflect the characteristics of the period in which they appear, and a community gets just about the kind it deserves, since invariably "man's buildings are done in the image of his mind and institutions." Such are the pertinent reflections of Mr. Lewis Mumford in his engrossing little volume on architecture in the United States since colonial times, called "Sticks and Stones". Sticks and stones are objects, lifeless and impotent but under the luminous treatment given them by this extremely competent and comprehending writer, they become glowing, vibrating symbols of human aspirations.

ALICE MACGOWAN, WORKING IN THE GARDEN OF HER HOME, CARMEL-BY-THE-SEA, MONTEREY, CALIFORNIA

This book discusses architecture from an unusual standpoint, concerned largely with its human element, and its sociological and psychological aspects. The author, equipped with a philosophical and sympathetic appreciation of artistic achievement in past ages, is able to analyze our attempts of the present day to evolve a satisfactory type of architecture, and to tell us why we fail and where. He writes with exquisite finish and a distinctive clarity, that makes of the subject a very vital matter and we enthusiastically recommend the volume as worthy of the attention of all readers who care for good writing on an absorbing topic.

ROBERT BURNS, A PLAY,
by JOHN DRINKWATER,
HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY.

Mr. Drinkwater apparently takes great pleasure in making his dramas practically characterizations of men famous in bygone days. Often it is a question whether his interpretation is the result of studious research, or that intuitive understanding which talent must always have of its kindred genius. In this play however, we venture to say that he has followed tradition closely. Far be it from us to find any fault with the work of a gentleman of Mr. Drinkwater's standing in the literary world, but in our humble opinion, the mechanism of this play is somewhat too obvious. We recognize at once every device, wherever it occurs, and comprehend clearly its part contributed to the presentation as a whole. In form the play is rather unconventional, really operatic in its tendency, since Burns's lyrics are sung by him and other characters in all the scenes of the play. With competent singers able to act to some extent, the staging of this play should be very effective.

THE 7TH PASSENGER,
by ALICE MACGOWAN AND PERRY NEWBERRY,
FREDERICK A. STOKES COMPANY.

Here is a mystery story for the tired business man to use his wits upon. The scenes are laid in the San Francisco of recent years, when political rings were flourishing and bosses stooped at nothing to gain their ends. So there is a murder and kidnaping and all the other ingredients for a concoction of this kind; only in putting them together, in our humble opinion, the authors forgot to add some spice. But this is most decidedly not our favorite brand of literature, so what we think should not count.

A DIPLOMAT LOOKS AT EUROPE,
by RICHARD WASHBURN CHILD,
DUFFIELD & COMPANY.

In view of the fact that in Europe during the past decade, history has been making fast and furiously, it seems inevitable that the making of many books should keep equal pace. We welcome them one and all, buoyed up by the hope that a composite effect of their combined contents, will be, in time at least, a glimmering of the truth. "A Diplomat Looks at Europe", is written by the man who was ambassador to Italy in Mr. Harding's administration, and while serving in this capacity, was also chief delegate to the conferences of Genoa and Lausanne. Mr. Child was very young to hold such responsible positions, but his mind appears to have been vigorous and actively keen in its appraisement of men and the trend of events. He writes about the proceedings at these conferences, and his obsrvations thereupon, in a bold swinging style, using vast metaphors, that put over his points with a crashing effect. All this energy was however needlessly expended upon the inefficiency of "open covenants openly arrived at". No diplomat need take time and ink, to tell us anything about those high sounding phrases of Mr. Wilson's which raised us to a idealistic heaven, and afterward let us down to the realistic and practical earth with a terrific thud.

What Mr. Child has to say about Mussolini, whom he had the pleasure of knowing rather well and intimately, at a very critical moment in the Italian tide of affairs, is interesting and very much worth consideration. He took great interest in Italy at that period, and he also watched closely the functioning of the League of Nations, to judge if possible just what effects it was having on European affairs. He reached the conclusion, that as a servant it was most successful, but on the contrary, as a master merely a failure.

FORTY YEARS OF IT,
by BRAND WHITLOCK,
D. APPLETON & COMPANY.

Politics has apparently been the breath of life to Mr. Brand Whitlock, and the very first enthusiasm of his youthful days. For he deals with this phase of American life almost exclusively in the narrative of his experiences and observations, prior to 1914. What happened to him after that date has been noted by him in another book. But "Forty Years Of It", is entirely middle west American in the section about Chicago. He himself was at first a reporter, concerned only with reporting political affairs, which brought him into close relations with those holding political office. Then he became a lawyer, still politically inclined, except that he had an interest in writing about politics on the side. That led him into the ranks of office holders, and he was elected mayor of Toledo for four terms, following "Golden Rule Jones". His viewpoint is liberal, even radical at times, but on the whole sane, a sensible visionary if such a person can exist.

Mr. Whitlock is much concerned on the subject of municipal reform, but he has some things to say about professional reformers, that are not exactly flattering. He had considerable experience with the tactics of such persons, while he was mayor of Toledo, and was much puzzled over the unusual amount of trouble they invariably caused on Mondays. At length after careful consideration, he concluded this absorption in the affairs of their neighbors on that day was due to the huge Sunday dinner, which had to be digested in tribulation, meanwhile making the world take on the hue of indigo to the diner. This is a somewhat facetious sample to select from a book which is really very serious, but any writer who can show the evil effects of that terrible American Sunday dinner should be commended highly as one reformer who has done something to benefit the nation.

THE SANTA CLARA VALLEY IS VERY BEAUTIFUL IN SPRING WHEN THE FRUIT TREES ARE IN BLOOM. NEAR SARATOGA, CALIFORNIA.

A BRIDE OF THE HOUSE OF HUNTINGTON

Mrs. James Hoagland Hinckley, nee Huntington Daughter of Mrs. James R. Brehm, and Granddaughter of Mr. Henry E. Huntington of San Marino and New York.

SOUTHLAND

Ignorance and Matches

AT the door of a powder magazine or munitions factory every entrant is asked to give up his matches and no one would think of lighting a cigarette within those dangerous doors. Here in California during the dry season the same definite caution is necessary when travelling through the mountains with their dense, dry chaparral, or along the country road bordered with wild grass. An entire population of new comers to our new climate must be educated to prevent the forest fires which are devastating the state every summer.

Mr. Fultz's book, The Elfin Forest, is the first definite move in this education and is here quoted again that this journal may aid in the work.

He says: Fire protection is the one urgent need of the chaparral. It is spared the danger of the lumberman's ax, on account of its size; and is not in jeopardy of the pioneer's mattock, because of its position; but it is doubly exposed to that greatest of all forest foes, fire. It burns like a torch of fat. Its evergreen leaves not only burn as readily as do pine needles, but the denseness of the cover furnishes a continuous, unbroken sheet of fuel, in which for long distances there is no break of any sort where the flames may be brought to a stop. Then, too, the long, hot summer period dries out the twigs and desiccates the grasses, flowers and weeds, until finally the thicketed slopes are as inflammable as a match. Let a fire once get started on a thickly set chaparral slope and there is no stopping it until it reaches the ridge above. It furnishes conflagrations which light up the region for leagues around, and which make the very world seem on fire.

So great is the fire danger in the chaparral regions that, as the summer advances, the force of fire patrols must be largely increased. While the height of the dry season is on—August, September and October—fire guards are stationed in many quarters of the national forests which during the remainder of the year receive scarcely any attention at all. The forest fires in the southern reserves are caused almost entirely through the carelessness of campers. The vigilance of the rangers and fire guards and the arrest and punishment of all persons who are proved to be in any way responsible for the starting of forest fires have greatly lessened their occurrence. So great is the danger from this source, however, that in most of the national forests of California—if not in all—fire permits are issued, and it is a misdemeanor to start a fire without holding such a permit.

A burned-over chaparral slope is as desolate looking a region as a fire-swept forest of pines It has one advantage, however: it is more apt to recover, and requires a much shorter time in doing it. In fact, its "come-back" is often so rapid as to appear only a little less than a miracle. Then, too, Nature seems to take pains to hide the fire scars, even while she is getting ready for another growth of chaparral. She calls forth a troop of phacelias or other wild flowers to occupy the ground, or festoons the charred and blackened skeletons which the fire has left with garlands of wild morning-glories.

But however much Nature may thus beautify the burned and blackened earth, she loses no time in covering it again with chaparral. Some of the new growth comes from the old roots which have successfully resisted the fire; some from the seeds that were buried deeply enough to survive the heat; and some from fresh seeds carried in by birds and small mammals. A few seeds, such as those of the clematis and mountain mahogany, are brought in by the wind. Often by three or four years the new growth is making a respectable showing, and within fifteen or twenty years the chaparral may have fully come into its own again. In thus making haste to "rechaparral" a ravished slope it is as if Nature knew there were urgent need for no delay. And she does. One season of torrential rains may sweep away from an unprotected mountain side the results of a century's growth of chaparral. If the soil and rock waste are to be held in place, there must be a new forest-covering at once.

I was profoundly impressed with this fact recently when passing over the burned district north and east of Glendora. A heavy rain had immediately followed the fire; and as a result I found the flats in the adjoining canyons covered with a deposit of fine soil, in some places to the depth of several feet, while on the ridges above bare rocks were everywhere showing on the surface. It will take a quarter of a century for the chaparral to replace the amount of soil-covering that was washed away in that region during the winter following the fire.

While the chaparral is quick to take up the work of recovering any ground lost through fires, and within a few years may completely reforest a denuded area, yet it is of slow growth as compared with forest trees of larger size. Most of the species at fifteen or twenty years of age are not more than two or three inches in diameter and six to eight feet in height. The maximum ages of the different species have not been fully determined, but it is pretty well established that most of them attain full stature at from twenty to twenty-five years of age.

Harwood Hewitt, Architect

BUT a little over a week ago we were all stunned by news of the sudden death of Harwood Hewitt. The shock was greater because many of us had seen and talked with him within the two or three days prior to his death.

He came amongst us first, twelve or thirteen years ago, from the East, after having equipped himself with the fullest and best preparation in architecture that the schools can give, having graduated from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and taken his diploma from the Beaux Arts.

He was endowed with an enthusiasm for his work, a frank attractive personality, and a gift for friendship that immediately won him a place in the hearts of all of us. He carried with him always the enthusiastic spirit of the Atelier, was never happier than when called in by one of us to discuss a problem in design or when one should visit his office for a like purpose. This enthusiasm was of a kind that many times would keep him working 'till the morning hours—that led him also to give largely of his time and energy to the criticism of student work in the Atelier, of which he was for some time patron.

Many will remember the completion of the Schultz house some seven or eight years ago, in which he seemed in a sense to find himself, giving to the community a distinctive and beautiful building and one that has found large echo in much of the finest work of similar character since done in the City. Many other beautiful works have also come from his hand, all characterized by a fine feeling for design and adaptation to climate and conditions. But few individuals have contributed as much as he to the development of a satisfying residential type for Southern California.

Passing on as he has in the prime of life, at the age of fifty-two years, there can be no doubt that many important things in larger fields would have come from his pencil, as is fully evidenced by the beautiful preliminary sketches well on their way for his last and largest project, the Ebell Club. It is to be hoped that this building may be carried out by his successors in such manner as to constitute a fitting memorial to his splendid service—though to those of us who knew and loved Harwood Hewitt, must always remain a sense of irreparable loss in the passing of this honorable, talented and stimulating friend.

Memorial read at the meeting of the Southern California Chapter, the American Institute of Architects.

Knowledge Is Power

IT is to be expected that the college graduate, as well as the "self-made" man, busy with commercial and professional activities during the day, finds that the only hours left to pursue study are in the late afternoons and evenings.

To satisfy a desire for higher and broader knowledge—gathering in convenient hours, Metropolitan College, established in the Transportation Building, Seventh and Los Angeles Streets by the University of Southern California, has included in its program over 100 evening courses, the greater number offered at 7 p. m., and all meeting after 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

Because of the variety and diversity of subjects, there are courses to interest and benefit both men and women; those engaged in professions, trade, business or domestic life; those who are working for college degrees and those who are eager for the advancement that comes with greater knowledge.

Evening university courses in art and agriculture, economics and English, sociology and Spanish, psychology and political science, petroleum geology and real estate, commerce and chemistry, mathematics and modern drama; short story writing and home nursing; investments and laboratory sciences; property valuation and costume designing, engineering and advertising; interior decoration and music; nutrition and dietetics and accounting, and many other practical, cultural, and scholastic subjects are included in the curriculum, granting college credit.

OPINION

According to announcement by Dr. T. W. MacQuarrie, Director of Metropolitan College, U.S.C., the Spring Quarter, with courses meeting one evening a week for 12 weeks, will open the week of March 22. Registrations will be taken, however, during the week of March 15, and full information may be secured by addressing the Director on the 13th floor of the Transportation Building, Los Angeles, or by calling TRinity 1701. Although courses are held in the late afternoons and evenings, the doors of Metropolitan College are open from 8 a.m. to 9:30 p.m.

Alliance Francaise

PASADENA added her weight of interest to the study of French civilization by establishing last year a strong society of the world-wide Alliance Francaise. Many delightful programs have been given, and close connection with what is going on in France has been established through the continued interest of Paul Perigord, now Professor of French History in the University of California, Southern Branch, at Hollywood.

The vital importance of study to qualify Americans to take part in world government is here emphasized. We are not governing our own country as we should unless we know the history of older nations. The following letter to members of the Society is equally suggestive for students who cannot attend the meetings:

Pasadena, February 7, 1926.

To the Members of the Alliance Francaise:

Your membership in the Alliance Francaise is an evidence of your interest in French Letters and Culture. The meetings of the Alliance are not frequent enough, however, to give you the practice you need in order to develop your ability to read and understand French.

I have often urged our fellow members to read French regularly at home. To that end there is no better way than to subscribe to a French paper or magazine, or to receive at regular intervals a good French book. La Maison Champion (5 Quai Malaquais, Paris, and 2938 Magnolia, Berkeley, Cal.) makes a specialty of such service, and if you refer to them your needs or preferences, they will give you complete satisfaction.

Paul Perigord.

Periodicals to be recommended (the prices are for subscriptions of one year):

Le Jardin des Modes (excellent monthly fashion newspaper),$3.00.

Les Nouvelles Litteraires (weekly, the best there is in France) $2.50.

L'Art Vivant (fortnightly, full of illustrations) $5.50.

Le Journal des Voyages (weekly illustrated magazine, "Discoveries, Science, Sport, Adventures," the ideal magazine for boys and girls) $3.00.

L'Illustration (the first and best illustrated weekly on general actuality in the world) $11.00.

You can subscribe by sending your cheque to Librarie Champion, 2938 Magnolia, Berkeley, California.

Advertising Ethics

An Answer to an Article Which Appeared in February

THE publishers who value their status would never allow an advertiser to lower their moral standards, or influence in any way their judgments.

The power of the magazines and the papers is built up by advocating Truth that leads to enlightenment and progress.

No individual or combination should be allowed to use patronage as a bludgeon or belabour or batter down impartiality.

Anyone attempting intimidation should be shown up in the fierce light of publicity—subjected to firey scorn and condemnation, as worthless citizens and commercial tyrants.

Advertisements—mixed up with legitimate reading—is a malarrangement, an uncalled for strain upon patience—it is surprising that so many readers submit so tamely, for time is too precious to waste looking for disconnected scraps of literature or information, that should be given in unbroken formation, or proper sequence, instead of inexplicably mixed up among the ads.

Readers have every right to be considered. They pay for the pleasure or the instruction—no one has the right to punish them. They are entitled to a square deal and in all fairness.

A lot of pomposity overflows into the bombastic arguments of the advocates of advertising barriers.

Positively and plainly, there is no obligation of exploiting the public through what they are pleased to call the medium of bill boards.

The most effective placement for these hideous close ups, would be in a pile—for a happy bonfire, where they could safely burn, without endangering the surroundings; the resultant ashes being applied to the shrubs and trees to enhance their true beauty.

That outdoor advertising has existed from the dim past, gives it no intrinsic value, no heavenly or earthly reason to perpetuate it.

The people can have all the publicity they require or crave for, through the medium of papers, magazines, journals, cinemetagraphs, and be kept well informed on all subjects and requirements in every detail, up to the last moment.

Noble men and women, who are banded together for the welfare of the United States, for the greater glorification of Old Glory arise and deliver us from eyesores and blighting influences.

CLAUD H. SIMSON, San Jose, California.

Finding God—In Prayer

PRAYER is not crying to a mysterious individual off somewhere; prayer is not bouncing the ball of one's own aspiration against the wall of one's own soul and catching it again; true prayer is fulfilling one of the major laws of the spiritual world and getting the appropriate consequences.

Just as around our bodies is the physical universe, in dependence upon which we live, so that we create no power of our own but assimilate it—eat it, drink it, absorb it—so around our spirits and in them is the Spiritual Universe. It is really there and it is as law-abiding as the physical cosmos with which the scientist deals. True prayer is fulfilling the conditions of our relationship with this Spiritual World. We cannot create inward power any more than we create our physical strength. We assimilate it. We fulfil the laws of its reception and it comes. So Spirit, which is God, surrounds our lives, impinges on them, is the condition of their existence, in whom "we live, and move, and have our being." To see the truth of this is to believe in God; to pray is make earnest with it and avail ourselves of the resources of strength waiting for those who fulfil the conditions and get the results.

Such an approach to prayer, as the fulfilling of spiritual law in one's relationship with God, is bringing back the intelligent and fruitful practice of it to many who thought that they had lost it altogether. Such an approach saves us from the pious blasphemy of telling God what we think He should do, or reminding Him of gifts to be bestowed which He unhappily would otherwise forget. Such an approach saves us from the futile and dangerous extension of prayer to realms where it does not belong, as though praying, which is a law of the inner world of personal life and is demonstrably effective there, could be relied on to accomplish results beyond its own realm. Such an approach saves us also from the loneliness of mere self-communion, for prayer is more than eating and drinking are; like them, praying is receptive fellowship with a real world by which we are surrounded and of which we are a part.

HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK.

SPORTS—NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL

By ELLEN LEECH

A SPECTACULAR MOMENT IN PROBABLY THE HARDEST FOUGHT POLO MATCH IN THE HISTORY OF THE SPORT. A GAME ON THE RIVERSIDE FIELD BETWEEN THE MIDWICK AND RIVERSIDE TEAMS, IN WHICH MIDWICK SCORED A DECISIVE VICTORY, AFTER GIVING RIVERSIDE A HANDICAP OF TWENTY-FOUR GOALS. THE TWO PRINCIPALS IN THIS DUEL OF HORSE AND MAN ARE CARLTON BURKE OF MIDWICK AND FLEISHACKER OF THE RIVERSIDE TEAM.

PHOTOGRAPH BY CHATEAU ARTS.

ELEANOR GOSS, MARIAN WILLIAMS AND HELEN JACOBS, WHO WERE ENTERED IN THE HOTEL HUNTINGTON MID-WINTER TENNIS TOURNAMENT, UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE PASADENA TENNIS CLUB. THE TOURNAMENT, HOWEVER, WAS CANCELLED BY THE MILLION DOLLAR RAIN. HELEN JACOBS HAS WON THE NATIONAL GIRLS' CHAMPIONSHIP FOR TWO YEARS IN SUCCESSION, AND CAME DOWN FROM BERKELY TO PLAY. MISS GOSS HAS BEEN IN THE FIRST TEN FOR SEVERAL YEARS.

WALTER WESBROOK, WHO WON THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA SINGLES TENNIS CHAMPIONSHIP LAST MONTH ON THE LOS ANGELES TENNIS CLUB COURT, WAS SCHEDULED TO PLAY IN THE HUNINGTON HOTEL MID-WINTER TENNIS TOURNAMENT, AND IS HERE SHOWN ON THE HUNTINGTON HOTEL COURT.

THE YACHTING SEASON IS NOT OPEN, THE SHIPS WITH SAILS REEFED SEEM ASLEEP IN THE HARBORS OF THE YACHT CLUBS, BUT NEXT MONTH WILL NOTE A GREAT AWAKENING. PAINT AND POLISH WILL OCCUPY THE ATTENTION OF EACH AND ALL SKIPPERS AND INSPECTION DAY WILL FIND EVERY BOAT AND EVERY MASTER WITH A SHINING FACE.

TWO IMPORTANT EVENTS ARE SCHEDULED: THE HONOLULU RACE, STARTING JUNE 12, OFF THE END OF THE BREAKWATER AT SAN PEDRO, CALIF., AND FINISHING OFF DIAMOND HEAD, ISLAND OF OAHU, HAWAIIAN ISLANDS; AND THE REGATTA OF THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA YACHTING ASSOCIATION TO BE HELD THE FIRST TWO WEEKS IN AUGUST AT THE NEWPORT HARBOR YACHT CLUB.

TO write an interesting sports story at this season of the year offers unsurmountable obstacles from the very beginning, because everybody knows something of the main events, and muttering, "Huh, I read that," they skip your juciest paragraphs. People who never read the sports pages before, probably didn't know they existed—regardless of the stentorian calls of the newsies, and the effulgent shades of the afternoon editions — have now acquired a very proper knowledge of several championships.

This introduction has come to a number, however, because of the world-interest in the tennis tournaments in France, and particularly the battle royal waged at Cannes, when Helen Wills finally met Suzanne Lenglen. This was a decisive victory for feminine athletics, if not for our sturdy little champion, as it proved beyond doubt the ability of these two young women to hold the attention of two worlds.

First there was the uncertainty of their meeting at all, then if they met would the French idol topple from her pedestal, or would our valiant little Helen merely leave another wreath at its base?

All Americans, most of us anyway, have good sporting blood and we followed these matches with a double interest because we wanted to know in what spirit, just how in fact, these two contestants would meet. How a French woman and an American girl would bear themselves in a game which had come to have almost an international significance and which was sure to be a gruelling contest.

At the end, however, while we naturally regret that the brave little Helen was not victorious, we can admire the skill of her adversary as we realize that the meeting was fought through to the end with each player using every particle of muscle and brain vouchsafed her. It is not likely that it even occurred to Helen or Mlle. Lenglen but in a way it was a trial of femininity as sports. Are women, in every way, good sports, physically, mentally and spiritually? The answer seems to be yes, absolutely in the same class with men, if that is an answer. If streaks of yellow appear we can remember color has no sex, and romps around choosing a home here and there and yonder.

THE GOLF COURSE AT FLINTRIDGE IS SCENICALLY BEAUTIFUL, AND HOLDS SPECIAL INTEREST TO THE GOLFER BECAUSE OF THE VARIED HAZARDS. THE COURSE INCLUDES MANY ACRES, ROLLING AWAY FROM THE CLUB HOUSE, WHICH WAS BUILT BY MYRON HUNT, AND CONFORMS IN DETAIL TO THE TRUE SPANISH-CALIFORNIA TYPE.

Another test of good sportsmanship will be the Honolulu race for sailing boats in June. These long races are not new to Western yachtsmen, as last summer was marked by the run to Tahiti, and the previous summer offered a Honolulu race. These events prove not only the seamanship of the skipper and his ship but prove just how deep his coloring is set, and whether or not he is the true-blue of the regular sailing man.

The Honolulu race is not confined to members of local yacht clubs but is open to any sailing yacht, affiliated with any recognized yacht club in any part of the world, provided such yacht meets the requirements of the Honolulu Race Committee as to size and seaworthiness.

The boats will be divided into three classes, A, B and C, according to size, and first, second and third prizes will be given in each class.

As in the past the smaller yachts will doubtless sail with amateur crews, and as a racing yacht does not at best offer unlimited privacy, the eccentricities of the master are soon as an open book to his crew.

ALL SEEKERS OF BEAUTY ARE INDEBTED TO GOLDEN GATE PARK, SAN FRANCISCO, BUT NONE SO MUCH PERHAPS, AS THE EQUESTRIENES WHO FOLLOW ITS BY-PATHS AND TRAILS BY DANCING STREAMS AND LINGER IN THE TREES' SHADOWS.

Miramar at Montecito

Set in a Garden of Flowers

Near Santa Barbara California

Dowered With a Beautiful Bathing Beach

WHERE the Montecito Valley touches the shore there is a charming group of cottages set in a garden whose paths lead down to a little bathing beach.

Since early Californian days the name of Miramar has meant long summer hours of happy childhood playing on the beach, long nights of rest and quiet in a cottage vine-embowered. And, today, while to older generations it still recalls such memories and gives such rest, to the younger set it forms the background of golf and tennis, motoring and swimming, riding, sailing, dancing, all the year.

Grown from a single farmhouse to accommodate two hundred guests in forty bungalows of varying capacity, this charming center of a delightful neighborhood now has, beyond its lanes and fine encircling roads, the golf links, polo fields of two country clubs to enjoy.

Fishing can be varied from the deep sea sort among the channel islands to that of the mountain streams, and motor boats are added to the list of joys.

Each bungalow is set in its own garden in the twenty-five acres enclosed with the beach below. In size they vary from one to five rooms including a parlor giving each family a private house of which the management assumes full charge in every detail.

Charm is the magnet which has drawn travelers to Miramar. Sport or complete rest, regular exercise as fancy may dictate, or the enjoyment of an excellent menu that Miramar's table offers; here one finds them all under most favorable conditions and skies unsurpassed. Any information desired will be sent on a request to H. J. Doulton, Proprietor, The Miramar, Santa Barbara, California.

For decades this warm stretch of sand near Santa Barbara has been the scene of gay parties and a quiet resting place for the Californians

Here on this favored bathing beach the guests of Miramar and their guests share the beach with permanent residents to whom the season's cards are sent

The Ultimate in Period Pianos

All the daintiness of a Du Barry, the charm of a Maintenon, the grace of a Pompadour has been transported from the courts of French Romance into the Versailles Model and combined with the incomparable beauty of Stieff Tone. Owners of this instrument possess the atmosphere of the French Courts.

Designed by
ERNST JAHN
Carving by SAMUEL NADLER

RICHARDSON'S INC
Victrolas ~ Radios ~ Pianos
730 WEST SEVENTH STREET
LOS ANGELES CALIFORNIA

STIEFF

Master Piano-Forte Builders Since 1842

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A. MONTHLY BULLETIN

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH,
Editor

PLAGIARISM AS A FINE ART

Five nationally known architects were asked to discuss precedent as applied to architectural design. The concluding installment of the most interesting address by H. Van Buren Magonigle was printed here last month. We now print the first portion of the address by William A. Boring who heads the school of architecture at Columbia University and who has been named the "Authoritarian" in this discussion by its leader Mr. Magonigle. Reprinted from the proceedings of the 1924 Convention of the American Institute of Architects.

"What Is Precedent Doing to American Architecture?"

In considering this inquiry it may be well for us first to agree upon what is a reasonable interpretation of the term precedent as used in criticism and in the design of architecture. A direct copy of the main features and details of an admired example does not, as I understand it, fall into the proper meaning of the use of precedent. Precedent to me means form which has been accepted as the proper expression of good logic, fitness and beauty, proven by the test of time and accepted as standard upon which new expression can be modeled and with which it may be compared.

The testimony of all history indicates that art forms grow like living things. They evolve from the simplest rudimentary ideas and forms, slowly changing to conform to changing environment, and eventually reach a climax which might be classed as perfection. This period of perfection rarely endures, for from it there is usually a retrogression and often entire disappearance. In this evolution those forms have survived which, by reason of fitness and beauty, have captured the imagination of the artist, and by him are crystallized into new design to meet new conditions.

Such forms come into the category of precedent, as I understand the term, as clearly as the establishing of a comprehensive style, as for instance, Classic was the precedent for the Renaissance.

While we may be safely guided by precedent within certain limitations, there is a point beyond which our design, if too obviously influenced by the prototype, fails to properly express the true expression of the new product and of the individuality of the artist. Creation is not stimulated where there is direct copying of a precedent, but on the contrary, it is hindered in free expression.

For illustration, let us admit that the English revival of Greek architecture fails to reach that exquisite refinement of proportion and purity of form which the antique monuments reveal; we nevertheless admire and copy the adaptation of Greek ideas which we see in English domestic work. It is better suited to our needs than a pure Greek interior would be, even were it designed by Ictinus or Calicrates, for we are essentially English. We are not Greek, and our architecture must and will admit that fact in spite of any rare exotic flavor with which we may try to adorn it.

Neither can we comfortably settle down in rooms of strictly French design. However admirable they are as works of art, they were developed amid surroundings not at all in harmony with our social life, and while we use them as models of beauty and good taste, we cannot copy them exactly and successfully to meet our own social needs.

Precedents must be in harmony with present ideals, or at least be suggestive of agreeable ideas, otherwise they cannot be accepted as useful and inspiring for guidance in design. Forms admirable in themselves but not applicable to the problems of today are not useful to the designer. While ancient Egyptian was highly developed we can use as little of its forms as we can of modern Russian architecture because the forms do not fit our needs. Antiquity adds nothing more of value than does modernity, age not being an essential quality of beauty. It appears that when it has served its purpose in the development of style to meet the requirements of new environment, Precedent is abandoned. The new art, being perfected, goes forward as the most important and logical expression of the new age.

In the time of Pericles, what was then modern Greek art was a higher type of art expression than anything the world had to that time seen, and it was natural that precedents were not sought for. In the age of Augustus the Roman architects were not scouring the world for precedents. When Roman art was young, Greece furnished the precedents, and even the architects to use them for the development of Roman architecture, but when they had arrived at their own style and outgrew everything else, the Romans, like young ambition spurned the rungs of the ladder on which they climbed.

LOGGIA, HOUSE OF SYDNEY GLASS, ESQ., FLINTRIDGE. TRUESDELL AND NEWTON, ARCHITECTS.

Whenever a nation seeks precedents for its expression in art, it by that token, admits that it is not satisfied with its own expression; that it is not contented with what it has accomplished, that it demands better architecture. It acknowledges that certain preceding periods in the course of civilization have reached a higher degree of cultivation in art. A nation showing these symptoms has healthy growing pains.

When America reaches her apogee in art we will probably show much less interest in the architecture of the past. In fact we will probably either have copied all of it or bought it all and re-erected it in the United States.

Along in the early eighties a firm of architects in New York began to work rather closely to precedent. The buildings they designed were so much better than anything till then produced that, in spite of the cry of plagiarism, the entire architectural world began to study precedents.

Enthusiasm for the Colonial swept the country like a prairie fire. Symmetry took precedence over the picturesque. Withered papier mache garlands curled up, glass bottle discs fell out of stucco gables, round shingled towers lost their bannerets, and architects began to use precedent.

After the Italian Renaissance had taught the lesson of simplicity, dignity, and scale, the transition in public buildings to the grand manner of the monumental school was an easy step. Our public competitions now have the severeity and stateliness of the Grand Prix de Rome of 1830. Extreme dignity and simplicity with almost archaeological fidelity to classic precedent, interestingly arranged, is a fair description of the winning designs in the majority of our great public competitions.

The precedent of the Ecole des Beaux-Arts has taught us method in our plan and composition. Our schools are training the student to design in sound classic styles which accustom him to beautiful forms while he devotes his energy to plan and composition. He thus cultivates a sense of fitness and good taste, and when this quality is established he may then be original, but until then, unless he is one of those rare geniuses we discover occasionally, he would better stick pretty closely to precedent.

But we are no longer teaching only historic forms as the basis of design. Modern methods of construction and present day requirements have developed new problems in design which must be reckoned with.

The struggle with the immature mind is to make it work logically, and at the same time to feel that there is something really alive in architectural design. We can train the student to draw, we can teach him to theorize, we can instruct him in history, and we can show him how to construct buildings, but routine instruction will not teach him to design. We can put all kinds of knowledge into his brain, but design has to come out through his soul. Design comes from that divine love for beauty, and the gift divine for its expression which is given but sparingly to the minority, and in fullness to only a favored few.

It is comparitively easy to feel something one must express in painting and sculpture, but to really feel it in architecture, and to be able to express it is the mark of genius.

(To be concluded in the April number.)

FEBRUARY CHAPTER MEETING

The first meeting under the administration of the new Chapter officers was well attended. The new president has mapped out a well planned program of activities for the year and, judging from the list of committee appointments, he intends to report some very definite accomplishments at the end of his term of office. We happen to know by first hand experience that he knows how to make working for him seem a pleasure. Will the Chapter members who happen to read this just please neglect to mention it to him. He might suggest a cut in our monthly pittance.

It was an impressive moment in the meeting when all the men stood with heads bowed in silent tribute to Harwood Hewitt, our fellow member who passed away so suddenly. His loss will be felt many times by the Chapter and by the Allied Architects' Association. A beautifully expressed tribute to his memory was written by David C. Allison and read at the meeting.

The United States Senate is not the only body which sometimes spends endless hours in heated discussion over inconsequentials. Our Chapter can now claim that distinction. Some enthusiastic Los Angeliar in our membership suggested that the time is now ripe for the change of our name from the Southern California to the Los Angeles Chapter of the American Institute of Architects. The discussion and the reasons pro and con, (mostly the latter), were at least amusing for a time but when it gave signs of being protracted we slipped out. We contributed nothing to the discussion at the time so here is our offering in the form of a story.

When the great Zeppelin airship was to be named back East recently many people back East felt that perhaps the word Los Angeles would be the best name for it because it was the biggest gas bag in the country. We are all proud of Los Angeles and what it has accomplished but let's not forget to be modest about it.

PAYNE FURNACE BROCHURE

The first of the series of twelve beautiful photographs of Italian Gardens by our own William Clark, have been sent out by the Payne Furnace Company. The subject is a ramp and wall in the garden of the Villa Falconieri. Mr. Payne is a personal friend of Mr. Clark and decided that it would be too bad if some means of presenting this garden series was not found, hence the arrangement to distribute twelve of the choicest of these garden studies. We are glad of two things. One is that Mr. Payne has "Bill" Clark for a friend, and that "Bill" showed him the photographs. Selah!

ROI PARTRIDGE TO SERVE ON JURY OF AWARDS AT PRINT MAKERS EXHIBITION

Roi Partridge, director of the Mills College Art Gallery and chairman of the Department of Art, has recently been honored by the Print Makers Society of California.

He has been asked to serve on the Jury of Awards for the Seventh International Print Maker Exhibition to be held in Los Angeles March 1 to 31, 1926.

THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

OFFICERS

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH, PRESIDENT
CLIFFORD A. TRUESDELL, VICE PRESIDENT
C. R. JOHNSON, SECRETARY
PAUL R. WILLIAMS, TREASURER

DIRECTORS

JULIAN GARNSEY, DIRECTOR
J. E. STANTON, DIRECTOR
H. C. CHAMBERS, DIRECTOR

FEBRUARY MEETING

About forty of the faithful, including most of the Davis family (thank goodness for large families), attended the meeting on the evening of February twenty-third. After a long wait the old familiar army cry of "come and get it" was heard and it was not long before the fellows were stowing away another of the famous Dutch suppers the Club is serving at meetings.

After the last vestige of Mexican beans, salad, kraut, coffee and pie had disappeared, including "seconds" on all of them, the President sprung a little surprise. He had, during the week, come upon some interesting and beautiful curtain materials in the hands of a skilled dyer and weaver and had collared him, curtains and all, and brought his wares up to show us. The idea of presenting the work of able craftsmen to the Club, is a happy thought and we hope our worthy President will do it often.

Before Arthur Millier spoke we had some snappy songs by a young lady not at all hard to look at. This, we take it, was to get us into the proper frame of mind to listen to Millier. It did.

Millier has the happy faculty of being an entertaining talker and can explain the technicalities of his art so clearly that it was a pleasure to listen to him. We understand now why the fellows in his etching class have enjoyed it so much. An hour was gone before we knew it and every one who heard the talk declared that some day or ither he would try his hand at mangling a copper plate or two.

The meeting closed with more singing by the above mentioned young lady with the "easy looks" and after another last peek at the etchings Millier had brought along, we all went home. You fellows who haven't turned out to these last two meetings haven't waked up yet to the fact that you are missing something good. Turn out!

The next meeting will be March twenty-third unless the final postcard notice states to the contrary. The meeting will be in charge of one of the big offices. The whole thing is a secret as yet, so we say no more at this time but save the date.

The Old Plaza, Los Angeles, Arthur Millier, Etcher. Loaned by Barker Bros.

ATELIER BANQUET

The Atelier of the Los Angeles Architectural Club held one of its semi-respectable banquets on the evening of the twenty-second of January, at a French cafe down in the Latin quarter of our Spanish city. The boys literally over-ran the quaint little place, to the apparent discouragement of other patrons. Although a map of the vicinity appeared on the announements, some difficulty in orientation was experienced among the personnel, as evidenced by their late arrival.

The decorative scheme, as carried out over the walls and ceiling of the tiny hall, was really a revelation, consisting of festoons of crepe paper fastened with thumb tacks and pins to picture mold, door trim and chandelier. Much favorable comment was expressed over the fact that such an elaborate motif could have been carried out at a total expenditure of only twenty-five cents, fifteen of which provided thumb tacks, the balance defraying the cost of the roll of paper.

A pleasant tuoch of atmosphere was gained by the substitution of candle light for candlepower. As a reminder of a day long departed, bottles of beer, without the beer, were used for candle sticks, their unstability being the only objectionable feature.

A rather informal program was furnished by the committee in charge, good fellowship and reunion being stressed rather than entertainment by individuals. A bit of boxing by experts was scheduled, but due to the inability of the boxers to read their maps correctly, the Massiers Abrams and Smith, donned the gloves and did a very clever burlesque of a world's champion about to lose his crown.

Mr. Roy Kelley favored us with a few brief remarks of a light nature, followed by Mr. Lee Fuller in a still lighter and briefer vein. Mr. Lee Rombotis, one of our Patrons, gave an inspirational pep talk, after which the evening was given over to an effervescence that will be remembered for a long time.

DUES ARE DUE

An error has been made in some of the statements for the year 1926. No club member should receive a bill for more than five dollars. Please call the Treasurer, Paul Williams, if your statement is in excess of this amount. The letter of the Club President enclosed with the statement, gives a correct explanation of the dues situation.

THE BATCHELDER TILES

BATCHELDER-WILSON COMPANY

We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

2633 Artesian Street

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

The Cheesewright Studios, Inc.

Decorators and Furnishers

PASADENA CALIFORNIA

—opposite Presbyterian Church, at Madison

Sizes 38 to 56

Sizes 38 to 56

The new Spring Daytime and Dinner Gowns for LARGER WOMEN
——have arrived——

Schaffer
561 S. Colorado St. at Madison
GOWNS for LARGER WOMEN

Your library of Californiana is not complete without

"The Birds of California"

by

W. LEON DAWSON

Published and Sold by

SOUTH MOULTON COMPANY
301 Bank of Italy Building
Los Angeles, California

"The Gate to Healthful Beauty"

CORLANE
Marinello System

F. O. 1648 570 East Colorado St.
Pasadena
Opposite the Presbyterian Church

Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes

TROY LAUNDRY
In Business for Twenty Years
Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146 Alhambra 243-J

JOHN S. KESHISHYAN
RUGS AND TAPESTRIES
2300 West Seventh Street
At Westlake Park

Los Angeles, Feb. 15, 1926.

Editor California Southland:

Mr. Frank A. Vanderlip of New York City, a large owner in the Palos Verdes District, has placed with me a collection of exceedingly important 16th and 17th Century tapestries in Gothic, Flemish and Beauvais weaves. Perhaps a short article, with an illustration or two, would be of interest for CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND. At any rate, I invite you to come in for I am sure you will enjoy seeing them.

Yours sincerely,
(Signed) JOHN KESHISHYAN.

DEVELOPMENT OF THE CASA ADOBE

UNDER the auspices of the University of California, Southern Branch, the University of Southern California, and Occidental College, through their Spanish Departments, and the Southwest Museum, a Spanish Vaudeville Performance will be given, Tuesday evening, April 6th, in the Philharmonic Auditorium. Spanish students and instructors of Spanish and history are taking a civic interest in the development of the Casa Adobe on Pasadena Avenue opposite Sycamore Grove, built by Mrs. Randolph Huntington Minor and her associates of the Hispanic Society a number of years ago, and which is now owned by the Southwest Museum. The purpose of the performance is to raise funds with which adequately to complete rehabilitation of the Casa Adobe which was in a more or less dilapidated condition from standing idle for a period of thirteen years. The Casa Adobe, when furnished, will represent an historical achievement in preserving in an ideal manner the home life, traditions, art and culture of early California. The Adobe will house the original furnishings brought here from Spain around the Horn in sailing vessels over 100 years ago. One of the purposes of the Casa Adobe which will be open to the public free when completed is to set aside one room for instructors of Spanish in the city of Los Angeles and environs.

HILLER'S STUDIO
OFFICIAL PHOTOGRAPHER FOR
CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
49 EAST COLORADO STREET
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
ALBERT HILLER Phone, Fair Oaks 155

CORONA
TYPEWRITERS
With Standard Keyboard
$60 Complete With Case
Also All Makes Sold, Rented, Repaired, Exchanged
Anderson Typewriter Co.
84 E. Colorado St. Pasadena

Welcome to call and Browse

Rare & Art Books

First Editions
Early Printing
Autographs
Americana

Books Notable for Printing Illustrations and Binding

Dawson's Book Shop
627 So. Grand Ave.

Catalogues sent on request:—
LOS ANGELES

FOR SALE
BEAUTIFUL ANDALUSIAN HOME
7 Rooms—living room 30x17—beam ceiling—3 bedrooms—2 baths—tiled patio—iron grills, gates, tiles from Mexico-wrought iron light fixtures and hardware.
Double garage—large corner lot—gardens—4 fountains—large aviary.
Built for owner's home.
Oneonta Park Near San Marino
Phone Elliott 2486

T. W. Mather Co. Inc.
PASADENA, CAL.

Dry Goods
Women's & Children's
Wearing Apparel

Colorado Street at Marengo

LAUNDERERS DRY CLEANERS
ROYAL LAUNDRY CO.
461 South Raymond Colorado 67
Pasadena, California

QUALITY SERVICE
THE ELITE
DRY CLEANERS AND DYERS
Plant: 797 So. Fair Oaks Ave.
Colo. 1349 Pasadena, California

Landscape
Designing and Planting

The beautiful gardens of Southern California which we have created are evidence of our ability to design and plant your own grounds properly.

A reliable firm of thirty-eight years' experience in Southern California.

EDWARD H. RUST
NURSERYMAN

1625 Bank St. Colo. 997
So. Pasadena ELliot 2639

THE GARDENS OF SAMARKAND

SANTA BARBARA CALIFORNIA

A JEWEL set in a green jade ring! An opal formed of wind-blown flowers, gay awnings, and blue jugs such as some Semiramis might have placed in her garden where the Oriental color is supreme!

Looking down from the terrace enclosed by the low, spreading wings of this unique hotel and set with blue jars overflowing with trailing plants of pink and lilac bloom, one lets the eyes feast upon color in the masses of flower beds in the foreground and then follows the curve of pergola and path as they circle the little lake below. Water plants and low lying islands, two white swans among green shadows, and over all and below all reflected, is the deep blue of California's perfect sky.

Samarkand is the answer to an insistent demand for an exquisite, fascinating stopping place in southern California. All the scintillation of color and light, all the delight of a pageant of seasonal flowers is here for the traveler, the tourist, the winter guest or the summer motor party on a coastwise trip.

Regularly from the frozen East come families who find here a fulfillment of their needs in a comfortable country estate managed by an expert in making guests comfortable and happy in having what they want. Regularly again in July, August and September come the gay groups from the north and the south, motoring through or stopping for golf, horseback-riding and a swim in the warm waters of Santa Barbara, the ideal watering place of the Pacific Coast.

Nowhere else is there a public or semi-public garden where the succession of California's bloom can be seen in greater profusion or with so carefully thought out a scheme. For the hotel's season of February, March and April, Mrs. Alberta Hinson, whose experience dates back to the gardens of the Fair Grounds at San Diego, has planned the following, from seeds sown last October and November in cold frames: hardy annuals in variety—alyssum, calendula, candytuft, annual chrysanthemums, nemesia, California poppy, sweet peas, centaurea, lobelia, scabiosa, petunias, stocks, salpiglosis, pansy, verbena, ageratum, cinerarea, clarkia, marigolds—African and French, larkspurs, demorphotheca, godetia, myosotis, schizanthus, violo cornuto.

Plants put in garden beds in December for early flowering are pentstemon, campanula, primula malicoides, digitalis, anchusa, delphinium, hollyhocks, antirrhimums, and bulbs in variety. There is no frost in Santa Barbara, so these flowers may be planted at any time that will bring them in bloom when they are wanted for color in garden or in the daintily-colored rooms.

This list is, of course, familiar to all and their use familiar to all Californians, but their orderly planting and obedient bloom is best illustrated in the opal of Samarkand gardens circled by a setting of green—in the hedge and the wind-blown meadows of wildgrass and sage.

MISS HARKER'S SCHOOL
FOR GIRLS
Palo Alto -:- -:- -:- California
"The Home of Stanford University"
Outdoor life all the year round. One hour from San Francisco. College Preparatory and Special Courses. Separate residence for girls from 5 to 14 years. Catalog on request.

The Westlake
School for Girls
333 South Westmoreland Avenue
Residence and Day School
Lower School, College Preparatory, Junior College
Fully Accredited
Departments of Art, Music, Home Economics
JESSICA SMITH VANCE FREDERICA DE LAGUNA
Telephone DRexel 0052

Urban Military Academy
The Great Outdoor School for the Building of Body and Brain and Character Under Matchless Conditions
Open All Year. Address MISS SALEY, Registrar
637 Wilcox Ave., Los Angeles. HEmpstead 7602

GREENWOOD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
5928 Franklin Avenue, Hollywood
Select Resident and Day School
Lawns, Tennis Courts, Outdoor Swimming Pool. Special advantages in music, under Mrs. Elsa Spencer.
Principals:
Mrs. M. Greenwood, Newnham College, Cambridge
H. F. Greenwood, A. B., Corpus Christi College, Cambridge
Telephone HOlly 2886

fabriano shop
"By the Tall Sycamore"
Sixty South Catalina, at Green, Pasadena
Fine Imported Hand Loom Papers
For correspondence, etching, engraving, printing, poster work and fancy wrapping.
Designing, Printing, Engraving
Imported and Domestic Handmade Gifts
Wakefield 4082

IRISH REDUCINE
A cure for all lameness
Use REDUCINE
Using your horse.
Best by test
International Testimonials
Ordered through your dealer or sent post paid anywhere in the United States. Price $5.00, discount to trade according to quantity.
Write for Catalog.
Sole United States Agent
"little joe" Wiesenfeld Co.
Baltimore, Md.

A COURSE IN THE APPRECIATION OF ARCHITECTURE

THE ARCHITECT AND THE GARDEN

By MYRON HUNT, A. I. A.

A WELL trained architect necessarily thinks in terms of what is to be seen from the various window openings. This is only saying in a few words that he of necessity is thinking in terms of the garden. He thinks in terms of the garden as a whole, but he first thinks of it in terms of the appearance of the garden from the windows.

The massing of foliage and the massing of the elements of a building are much the same problem. The vistas from room to room, and the vistas from one portion of the garden to another, require the same kind of planning and thinking, but there is a difference in what an architect refers to as "scale."

Perhaps the most elementary difference results in a flight of steps in a garden being thought of in plan and section in different terms from a flight of steps within the building. There is a breadth about the out of doors which, of course, is the reverse of the feeling of confinement in a room. The rules by which an architect designs the rise and tread of a staircase of varying degrees of steepness, as conditions may require or his desire may lead him, are similar to but not the same rules as he uses in the garden, or in a flight of steps leading up to a building. He recognizes that feeling of breadth in the out of doors and has not only a lower step than he would use inside the building, but a step differently proportioned with respect to the relation between its rise and tread.

Considerations such as these come up every day in an architect's office. An architect who has not learned to think in terms of planning of grounds is apt to find himself with paths and walks that are too broad or too narrow, steps that are too steep, or steps that hear the wrong relation to their paths. For instance, in designing a long hall, ending in a staircase, he would never think of making the staircase wider than the width of the hall, but if he knew the tricks of the garden and were designing a path leading to a little flight of steps between two levels, his actual staircase, its treads, that is to say, would be a few inches wider than the path, for reasons that are optical and the result of centuries of building of gardens.

Unless an architect is really interested in a garden, there is no question but that the landscape architect, pure and simple, will make a better garden if the architect keeps his hands off, but if an architect knows something about a garden, or rather about the optical illusions which have to be taken into account in designing a garden, then the joint work of the two, working together, is always better for the cooperation.

No architect, and particularly, no busy architect, wants to take full charge of the designing and planting of a garden. Even Charles Platt, who is perhaps the father of the better class of garden work in America, told the writer some years ago that he found he could not follow it up because there is not time enough in the world, and that he in his later practice is now only setting general policies.

On the other hand, in building a residence, there are sure to be minor buildings, such as the garage, perhaps pergolas; there are quite apt to be walls; there are certain to be paths; there may be seats or architectural termini, and these are all related, or should be all related, to the architecture of the house and the feel of the whole place. To plan a really good house and then to have another person plan a wholly, separately thought out garden to go with the house, can only be accomplished successfully "if" the architect is so trained that he leaves his work in such form that the landscape architect has an opportunity. This of necessity implies a knowledge of the basic principles of gardening on the part of the architect. For the landscape architect and the architect to collaborate is always the better method.

A block plan for a house in most of the best residence architects' offices in California almost invariably carries with it a block plan for the garden because the two are thought out together—the roadways, the paths, the location of all the masonry that is not an immediate part of the house—all are indicated. This does not mean perhaps in any case in any architect's office that he expects to make the planting lists himself. Most architects are not in a position to do this. They have not the information, but it means that the same abilities which produce the general massing of the house and its convenience are exercised in producing the general setting for the house, and the radiation of the principal elements of the garden from their logical supports in the house—in fact, the two lines of thought are inseparable.

The landscape architect then has a point of beginning. If the owner is fortunate enough to employ them both at the same time, or better still, if he arranges to have the landscape architect collaborate with the architect, then not only the garden is thought of as a setting for the house from the beginning, but the house is thought of in terms of the setting which the architect and the landscape architect jointly feel for it.

If the landscape architect is as well trained as he ought to be, his collaboration and advice, with respect to the setting which the garden will make for the house, should be as valuable to the architect as the architect's natural inclination to lap over into the landscape province should be valuable to him.

All this has to do with the planting of a garden which is a setting, a picture, and not an horticultural establishment. There are gardeners and owners who are most interested in the largest bloom they can get on a rose tree. It is not such a garden that I am thinking of, rather, it is the type of garden which, with its massing of trees, gives form to itself and sets off the house; with its massing of shrubs, splits up this form into minor elements and minor foils for the architecture; with its perennials and its annuals, through the planting of colors in different seasons, is set off by these recurring colors from month to month.

One of the first gardens I planned in California was the old Maryland pergola. I had a little information with respect to plants but almost none at that time with respect to California plants. The result was a color chart which showed a shrub of a certain height, with a certain type of foliage texture and color. It showed two vines on a column, one to bloom, we will say in April, and one to bloom in June; the April bloom and the June bloom was thought out with respect to its relation to the color which in the same month would be blooming adjacent to it. This color chart was taken to a nurseryman, and except that some of the plants were so much more vigorous in their growth than others that in a few years the weaker sisters had been crowded out, the scheme worked perfectly. Anyone can do this who has a color scheme in his head. It is a good way to start thinking about any garden, whether you are professional or amateur.

GARDEN OF THE FORMER HOME OF MISS ANNA HEAD, BERKELEY. THE CHARM OF THIS GARDEN IS THE CLOSE RELATION BETWEEN THE HOUSE AND ITS ENVIRONMENT, EVOLVED BY THE OWNER.

MR. STUART CHISHOLM, landscape architect for the Flintridge estates shown on another page, has been writing a series of articles for a Los Angeles paper. From the February contribution the following was taken as being especially appropriate to this course and showing the view of the landscapist looking toward the house from the garden, the reverse of the standpoint taken by the architect.

IF plants and trees are to be considered as material with which to make a natural garden, it is then important to decide how we are going to use this material, when we are going to use it, and where we are going to use it.

The consideration of how shrubs should be used and where they should be used are considerations so closely allied that we may almost treat them as one. There is a line of demarcation, but the line is so finely drawn that present space is not adequate. Suffice it to say that these two considerations are the most important and can be treated as one.

After a general plan of the garden has been agreed upon, we begin to plan our shrubbery groups. The main facade of the dwelling requires planting, and then comes the problem how the varieties we desire may be blended, and where these blendings must take their place. The type of architecture may limit us to plants of a distinct character, such as palms and the cactus. Some one corner of the dwelling, or a corner may call for a Washingtonia palm. It may be called upon to serve two purposes; it may give the height desired, and it may possess certain qualities of character, such as color and shape, that will bring out a certain character in the dwelling that the architect has striven to gain. Further planting will be called for along the front, and perhaps the wing. The selection and placing of the main effect has been decided.

The question now arises as to the position of our plants and as to the manner in which they are to be grouped. Again we must take the house as the director. There will be certain outstanding features in the dwelling, that should be observed by the planter. The openings require study. The main entrance may call for slender and tall growing trees, such as the Italian cypress; or it may be better pleased with soft, colorful masses of low and spreading habit. The gardener must have a sense of the fitness of his plants in connection with the architectural elements presented. Otherwise, the scheme becomes a hodge-podge. To continue with the discussion of openings in the dwelling, there are too many cases where the gardener has paid no attention to the fenestration.

Windows and their "garden treatment" should be studied with the greatest care. Windows are "the soul of the house." Many planters either entirely plant them out from the base, or hang an impenetrable curtain of unclean vines in front of them.

It is best to approach their treatment with reverence. They are the emblems of freedom. From them, we not only get relief from stuffy rooms, but we get release from stuffy minds. They are placed by the architect so that they comply with these two important factors. Aside from that, they have been planned to command a far-distant view and a noble aspect, and Tagore was thinking of just this point when he said, "He mounted a tall tower in his mind, and looked out far and wide." Feeling as the most of us do, in regard to windows, and the spiritual part they play in our natures, how fatal would be our error, if we failed to give them the consideration necessary, in the landscape scheme.

The Art of

Norma Gould

Authentic Dances—Pantomime
Eurythmics

Ballroom Department—Louise Kramer

Special Course for Professional Dancers
Phone or write for information

460 N. Western Ave. HEmpstead 3530

NEW HOME
OF PACIFIC
MILITARY ACADEMY
Culver City, California

Boarding and Day School. Fireproof Buildings. Completely Equipped Laboratories. Grammar and High School. Enrollment limited.

For Catalogue Write Mrs. Loughan or telephone Culver City 3294

An Ideal School for Young Women

Cumnock School

COLLEGE WORK IN THE FOLLOWING COURSES:
Vocal Interpretation of Literature

Literary Appreciation	Voice and Diction	Short-Story
Public Speaking	French	Dancing
Dramatics	Story Telling	Psychology
	Journalism

Art and Art Appreciation
An accredited High School in Class A preparing for Western and Eastern Colleges and Universities.
HELEN A. BROOKS, Director
5353 West Third Street Los Angeles
WHitney 3427 —TELEPHONES— WHitney 7311

Westridge

A COLLEGE PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS. ACCREDITED.
Primary, Intermediate and Academic Departments.
MARY L. RANNEY, AMIE C. RUMNEY, Principals.
324 Madeline Drive, Pasadena, California Telephone Wakefield 5276

KENWOOD HALL

Resident and Day School for Girls. Sub-Primary through High School.
Open throughout the year.
Directors: Ruby Mildred King, Grace Baylor Bobbitt.
Tel. WAshington 1612 675 So. Vermont Ave., Los Angeles

The Girls' Collegiate School 34th Year

NEWLY LOCATED IN THE COUNTRY
Boarding and Day School. Accredited East and West. Out-Door Life a Reality. 50-acre estate. All sports. Saddle Horses. New Buildings. Italian type. L. A. Office, 1008 W. Adams St.
Glendora, Calif. Miss Parsons and Miss Dennen, Principals

LAKE ARROWHEAD LODGE
E. K. HOAK, Managing Director.
Mile High—American Plan—Open All Year
Dinner Dance Every Saturday Night.

Reservations made at 319 Van Nuys Bldg. Tel. VA. 0959, or direct to Lodge. Call Lake Arrowhead Main 1. Rates, $7.00 a day and up, including meals and room.

SCULPTOR OF SILVER
FOR THE TABLE OF THE BRIDE
PORTER BLANCHARD
BURBANK :: :: :: CALIFORNIA

AN ITALIAN GARDEN VILLA FLINTRIDGE PASADENA

PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERNE

TRUESDELL & NEWTON
ARCHITECTS

STUART CHISHOLM
LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT

THE FORECOURT. FOUR VIEWS OF THE JOHANSING HOUSE ARE GIVEN ON THIS PAGE. ON THE RIGHT IS THE NORTH FACADE. BELOW, THE EAST END.

BELOW those lofty mountains Cabrillo saw from the sea crowned with soft clouds that must have given the name "los angeles" to this district, there rise high hills that make a lovely valley, La Canyada. Shut off from the rush of the city to the south and around the corner from Pasadena, this favored portion of our livable hill-country opens out widely to the eastern mountains and forms the pass between the San Gabriel Valley and the Big and Little Tujunga.

Perched high up on a lookout served by a splendid system of winding streets, one looks from the homes and gardens of upper Flintridge to the mesa above Pasadena stretching east along the foothill boulevard. Where once were poppy fields, seen from the sea because of their orange color, now fields of little homes, white-walled and orange-tiled, lie in the lap of our Mother Mountains. Seen over the saddle of a Flintridge hill, the landscape is indescribably lovely. Fluffy clouds caress the peaks and trail down into the canyons. Shadows of higher masses of white cloud drift over the green flanks of lower ridges and a soft haze makes the distance blue.

Set in a green mass of live oaks and "elfin forest" or crowning a hill, there look out upon this enchanting scene many homes built in this choice section of our Southland and characteristic of its best architecture. Led by the beautiful Hanson House designed by the late Harwood Hewitt, the California country estate or villa here finds unusually fine expression.

No one type of architecture seems to dominate. The home of Senator Frank P. Flint is pure southern colonial adapted to our California climate; down on the level stretches near the golf links are a variety of fine English and Mediterranean houses, and the delightful club house by Myron Hunt is our very best example of the adaptation of the old mission forms to modern uses.

Two excellent examples of distinctive southern architecture by Truesdell and Newton, Architects, and Stuart Chisholm, Landscape Architect, are here presented. The Johansing House, designed by Mr. Truesdell before his last year's trip to Europe terminated the partnership, is of pure garden villa type; and in the beautiful photographs taken so sympathetically by Berné, looks like a bit of old Italy. That Californians have a perfect right to transplant so complete and beautiful a

A CALIFORNIA GARDEN VILLA FLINTRIDGE CALIFORNIA

CARL J. IKE
GENERAL CONTRACTOR

TRUESDELL & NEWTON
ARCHITECTS

STUART CHISHOLM
LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT

SIX PICTURES OF THE SYDNEY GLASS RESIDENCE, FLINTRIDGE

type from the old world can not be gainsaid even by one who believes every word of the heart-searching series of articles on American architecture now appearing on the A.I.A. pages of this journal. Mr. Truesdell has here wrought into the fabric of Californian life the very essence of old world charm and picturesqueness, constructing it out of memories subconsciously brought back from the short American occupation of war-torn Europe when our men were overseas.

Looking down upon the beautiful roof of the Johansing house which rises like a brilliant flower out of the leafy boskage of trees, one feels a desire to see these two houses more closely. From the road the view of the group is enhanced by the background of mountains which unites these two companionable but distinctly different houses emphasizing their setting as a unit with the landscape.

The Glass House, carried to completion in the same architectural office, was built last year following the construction of the Johansing House and represents the application of old world forms and designs to actual Californian Architecture. There is no doubt in the mind of the writer that California out of her travail of building will bring forth her own architecture. The fore-runners are to be seen by anyone who can read as he motors.

In the Glass House, Mr. Newton explained the forming of original architectural motifs out of tile brought from Tunis; the development of the owner's ideas and those of the architects through the craftsmanship of local artisans who learned their art in Europe; and the bringing together of all the materials skillfully used in California to make a country home adapted to the site, the climate and the congenial life of the two friendly families.

Fundamentally to this end of making one garden of the two estates is the work of the landscape architect. Mr. Stuart Chisholm has here given to Flintridge and to all who pass through it a fine example of the Relation of the Garden to the House, our subject for the course on page thirty-three.

THE GARDEN TERRACE OF THE JOHANSING HOUSE, STUART CHISHOLM, LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT

A garden wall begins the unification and makes a delightful and useful entrance court to the Italian villa, whose stately cypress and rows of Lombardy poplars bring its old-world beauty out to the street.

Paths lead from this forecourt to the entrance on the East or make a little formal garden out of the space between. All about are native oaks treated with the dignity which only a native Californian who has learned his art in Europe seems able to accord them. Great lawns sweep under them and where they grow thickly on the sides of little canyons native shrubs of the elfin forest comrade them and soften formality where architecture ends and nature begins.

The service court of this house is so well thought out and so good looking that it deserves a larger picture, from the interior as well as from the back.

The north facade of each house is most interesting. Here are the inspiring views and the seats from which to view them. Here are little belvederes and stately terraces ending in a slope of native wild grass that the view may be absolute.

The residence was built by Carl J. Ike who was selected by the architects after very careful consideration of many contractors doing this class of work.

In the picture on page 28 is shown more of the fine hand wrought iron work for which the Glass House is notable. Simple in design, yet undeniably beautiful, this wrought iron railing appears again in the interior.

Its bold curves out from the tiled, main stairway make room for the necessary cleaning of the steps and risers and impress us with the aim of the master craftsman to make the use of an object the foundation for decorative qualities. The wrought iron was made by the Shumway-Anderson Company of Los Angeles.

Main Entrance and Stairway of the Sydney Glass House. Truesdell and Newton, Architects. The wrought iron work which is a distinctive feature of both exterior and interior was done at the shop of Shumway-Anderson Co. at 2912 West Los Feliz Boulevard.

The illustration showing the service court is on page 37.

El Caurtel

Visit This New Shop

The Guard House of the old Presidio is now displaying a fine collection of Antique Spanish and Italian Furniture, Spanish and Tunisian Tile, Tile Fountains, Garden Seats, Wall Panels, Mantels, etc. There is also a fine collection of Old Spanish Iron.

WESTERN TILE & MARBLE, INC.

122 EAST CANON PERDIDO
SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

PLANT WILD FLOWERS THIS YEAR

COMBINE BEAUTY WITH ROMANCE

Your choice of two separate packets, one containing 12 species in separate packets, and the other a mixture of over 20 varieties.
EACH $1.00 POSTPAID

THEODORE PAYNE
2969 Los Feliz Boulevard Los Angeles, California

The...
RAYMOND

PASADENA
Southern California

WALTER RAYMOND
Proprietor

ARTHUR E. SAFFORD
Manager

Golf course on its own grounds.

COMMUNITY ARTS ASSOCIATION OF SANTA BARBARA

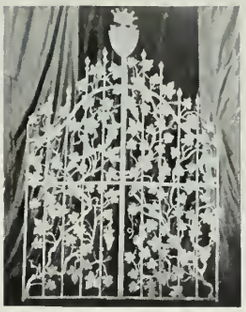
CALENDAR—MARCH, 1926

MARCH 4—Thursday afternoon, 4 o'clock. Lobero Theatre, membership meeting Elizabeth Burchenal, author, lecturer and educator, will conduct a session of folk dancing and speak on community recreation. Members present membership card at the door. Admission to non-members, 50 cents.

MARCH 10-24—Wednesday evenings, 8:30. School of the Arts Theatre, 916 Santa Barbara Street, concerts by the Van Der Voort Ensemble.

MARCH 11, 12, 13—Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings, at 8:30, and Saturday matinee at 2:30, at Lobero. Community Arts Players present "Three Live Ghosts," a dramatic comedy. Admission 50 cents, $1, $1.50.

MARCH 13—Saturday afternoon, 3:00 o'clock, School of the Arts Theatre 916 Santa Barbara Street, dramatic recitals by Maude Morley Fletcher.



MARCH 22—Monday evening at 8:30 in Lobero, Community Arts Chorus under the direction of Harold Gregson, will appear in concert of classic and modern choral numbers. Admission 50 cents and $1.

MARCH 23—Tuesday evening at 8:30 in School of the Arts Theatre, 916 Santa Barbara Street, Ella Young, famous Irish poet, scholar and story teller, will tell about Gaelic fairies and their doings. Admission 50 cents and $1.

MARCH 26-27—Friday and Saturday evenings, 8:30, School of the Arts Theatre, 916 Santa Barbara Street, plays by Ian Wolfe's advanced drama class. "The Dreamy Kid," by Eugene O'Neill, and An Apology to a Noh Play, written by Ian Wolfe and based on a Japanese fairy story, "The Boy Who Drew Cats."

SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.
H. G. CHASE
(Established 1903)
Real Estate and Rentals
1012 State St. Phone 125

One of the World's Beauty Spots
California's Choicest Residence Park
Beautiful Wooded and View
Estate Sites
Golf
Riding Academy
Bridle Paths
30 Minutes to Los Angeles
10 Minutes to Pasadena
FLINTRIDGE
FLINTRIDGE COMPANY
BERKSHIRE AND COMMONWEALTH AVENUES
TELEPHONE TERRACE 0212-W
R. F. D. 4, BOX 711 PASADENA, CALIF.

GATES
GRILLES
VICENZA STONE
FOUNTAINS
BENCHES
FIGURES
FURNITURE
—:—
Chapwoods
ITALIAN HOUSE
6908 HOLLYWOOD BLVD.
HOLLYWOOD
GR 1349

Beauty in Terra-Cotta

SHAPED with soft-flowing contours and of majestic size, these graceful terra-cotta urns—styled after the Italian Renaissance—match perfectly in texture and color the gray Bedford limestone of the first story of the Biltmore Hotel Los Angeles (Schultze & Weaver, Architects). Eight of these urns were used, and, placed on pedestals at the second-story balustrade, they serve to soften the severer lines of the building's design. They are over six feet in height.

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.
LOS ANGELES OFFICE: NEW PACIFIC FINANCE BUILDING, 621 SOUTH HOPE STREET
TROPICO PLANT: GLENDALE, LOS ANGELES COUNTY

An Invitation

All flower lovers are invited to visit our Dahlia Gardens at Del Monte (on the Monterey Peninsula), while in California this year. Our blooming season starts in July and extends into November. Visitors are welcome every day in the year.

Among the hundreds of famous Dahlias of our introduction are:

"The Wizard of Oz"
"Earle Williams" "Nobilis"
"Paradise Found"
"The Screamer" and
"Clarissa Blanco"

Write for our new "Catalog of Dahlias and Book of Instructions."

LESLIE E. DOOLITTLE
"Dahlia Specialist"
DEL MONTE DAHLIA GARDENS
DEL MONTE, CALIFORNIA

Our Dahlias Excel—"Ask those who grow them"

A GLIMPSE OF OLD MONTEREY

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

(Continued from February)

ANOTHER structure curious in style and not particularly attractive, is noteworthy because it is one of the few remaining shrines in America connected with Robert Louis Stevenson. Even in 1879, Monterey was noted for its artistic quality, and hither came this noted writer, not so famous then but ill and poor and altogether miserable. He found accommodation in this house, and there wrote some of his most popular fiction, as well as one of the best characterizations ever penned of Monterey and its vicinity. Evidently he loved roaming about, and after Monterey, the region most intimately associated with his memory is that portion of the famous seventeen mile drive, outside of Pebble Beach, on the way to Pacific Grove. This part of the coast is bleak and lonely and unsurpassingly haunting with its wild beauty. Here long reefs stretch out into the water like skinny knotted fingers groping about for prey and pieces of old rotting ship timbers scattered all around prove they got what they were after. It is a region rich in lore about "old, unhappy, far off things," tales of smugglers, shipwrecks, and such and moreover, along its shore occur those queer weird trees, the Monterey cypress that grows nowhere else in the world. In the article Stevenson wrote, he says

AN ANCIENT ADOBE HOUSE IN OLD MONTEREY.

"no words can give an idea of the contortion of their growth; they might figure in a circle of the nether hell, as Dante pictured it." After he had gone to another part of the world, he used the wild scenery on this coast as a background for some of the thrilling situations in "Treasure Island." From the descriptions in this book, the reader acquainted with the landscape here, may recognize the

Aluminum Plaster-Flush Registers for Hot Air Furnaces

The Beauty and Artistic Design of Terra Cotta made Durable and Practical by an aluminum casting — finished to match your interior.

Designed and Executed by

Pasadena Gas Appliance Co., Inc.
901 E. Colorado Street
Pasadena Fair Oaks 9393

PEOPLE OF IMAGINATION
who are beginning to find Spanish, French, and Italian furnishings a little conventional and monotonous are turning to the other side of the Mediterranean for bits of exotic color which, while they blend well with a South European background, give it a touch of novelty and distinction.

THE SOUKS OF TUNIS
in the patio of the Pasadena Community Playhouse

PAINTINGS OF THE WEST
STENDAHL GALLERIES
OF THE PACIFIC COAST
The Ambassador Hotel—Los Angeles Hotel del Coronado—San Diego

Pernays
EXHIBITION OF OIL PAINTINGS
By LELAND S. CURTIS
MARCH 8 TO 27, INCLUSIVE
OIL PAINTING BY ARTHUR HILL GILBERT.
MARCH 29 TO APRIL 10, INCLUSIVE
FINE ARTS — ETCHINGS — FRAMING — NOTT-SHOOK HAND LOOMS.
2501 W. 7TH ST. LOS ANGELES
(At Carondelet Street)

Hand Wrought Wedding Silver of unusual charm and distinction is being shown at both our studios:
DUnkirk 4909
2508½ W. 7th St.
Los Angeles
602 E. Colorado St.
F. O. 6555
Pasadena
HEWSON HAND CRAFT STUDIOS

Beautiful Garden Pieces
in
Sculptured Terra Cotta
Italian Terra Cotta Co.
W. H. Robison
1149 MISSION ROAD
Opposite County Hospital
Phone Lincoln 1057 Los Angeles

NO. 121—TALMAGE VASE

CLOTHES FOR CALIFORNIA—MODE OF MAN

BY FAIRFAX PROUDFIT WALKUP

CLOTHES may not make the man; but they do much to explain him. Are not the petticoat breeches of Charles II strangely appropriate? On the other hand, who can look upon the sweeping draperies of the Winged Victory without realizing anew the beautiful simplicity, the innate artistry, of the Greeks?

As one delves into the story of dress, one finds not only diversion but illumination. The evening coat for men, which appears so meaningless incut, assumes historical dignity when one traces it back. Louis XIV, le Grand Monarque, first designed and introduced a coat of wide, sweeping skirts. Later, for convenience in riding, these skirts were buttoned back; it is thus they appear in Colonial times. Finally, in the days of Beau Brummel, the effect of the looped-back coat tails was retained, without the extra folds of materialism; and this simple cut is, with slight variation, retained today in the evening coat; the sole reminder of the original full skirt being the buttons at the back.

This is only one of the many evolutions of dress; but each can be traced back to some varyingly remote, but authentic, ancestor. For the story of dress is an old one—as old as the story of civilization. It begins at the moment when Man saw himself, not merely the creature of arms and legs (Falstaff's "forked radish"), but a being capable of expression.

MISS VIOLET HEMING, FEATURED IN A REVIVAL OF "THE JEST," WEARING ONE OF THE LARGE HAIR HATS CREATED BY HENRI BENDEL. THIS LOVELY PALE GREEN TRANSPARENCY IS EDGED WITH A DELICATE REEF OF GREEN LEAVES.

It must have been a thrilling experience when Man first tried draping the furry skins, tunic fashion, front and back, tying them together by the claws on his shoulders. One can see this primitive Beau Brummel parading before his loin-draped fellows—accepting complacently their grunts of admiration—while the women looked on in silent awe. This First Spring Showing of the New Fashion meant more than mere display—it heralded the first development of Man's individual taste. Altogether an important moment, this, when Man's artistic selectiveness first asserts itself.

To trace the evolution of dress from this first fumbling attempt, will be the aim of this series. It is a story which keeps pace with the progress of Man; in fact, the progress of Man begins when he abandons the merely utilitarian idea of clothing. Only the Australian Bushmen, and other savages of the same low order, go utterly unclad because of the hot climate; the Hindu and the Arab, in equally torrid countries, are garbed in picturesque garments of individual arrangement.

Fashion, in truth, is not an ephemeral mode; it is the expression of the taste of human-kind as it adapts itself, with varying degrees of success, to the changes of environment.

(Continued from opposite page)

exact cove where the treasure hunters landed, the sand dunes over which they toiled, and the shelter of oaks within which Jim Hawkins hiding, overheard their murderous plans.

The region just described most fortunately has not become available for building sites, nor does the Carmel River Valley harbor anything more than scattered homes. This is a delightfully peaceful region, with its lush meadows, drenched in sunshine, which fade into pastel shades as they recede and gradually melt into the glorious coloring of the distant mountains. This spot seems made for happy events alone, and must have appealed tremendously to Father Serra, since he took one look, and immediately moved the mission he had already founded at Monterey, bag and baggage, Indians and all, to the entrance of this lovely valley, where he placed it in a spot with heavenly vistas on one side, and the low breathing surf upon the other. This must have been his favorite of all the missions, for he is buried here, although there are legends about that too, as well as every other event true or otherwise connected with this storied locality. The old mission buildings have had many vicissitudes, having fallen into decay after the secularization period, but now restored most effectively, seem to drowse in the sunshine and dream of memories of long ago.

Near this valley is the famous Point Lobos, which hurls its defiant precipitous headlands into the Pacific daring the crashing waters to come and do their worst. The spectacle here is too sublime and magnificent for any description to give an adequate account of its marvelous effects. It can not be built on, thank kind fates for that. Just beyond is a road leading around the point to Carmel Highlands, which if one can stand a terrible jolting, in time will bring the intrepid traveler to the Big Sur River where the primeval aspect is still unchanged, and he can view one of the grandest beauty spots in California. The way of getting there is unspeakably uncomfortable, but the scenery is sublime, so one regrets to hear that a boulevard is proposed which will wind along this solitary and rugged shore and in time spoil all its natural charm.

"Circle of enchantment!" That is exactly what this region is! But just the same, the Monterey Peninsula communities should be a little careful about sending forth this sort of literature. The first thing they know, they will wake up and find the lovely solitude of the seventeen mile drive all mixed up with dwellings just as likely as not, constructed on the order of mausoleums, and every pine covered knoll in Pebble Beach surmounted by a solid mass of yellow plaster; the vacant lots in Monterey may be completely covered by some contractor's ideal of architectural beauty for a home and Carmel Valley filled with rows and rows of bungalows. Of course even these blemishes can not destroy the scenery of this favored region for the rocks and crags are there to stay, and no one would be mad enough to mutilate the forests. But let the whole place fill with all sorts of people, with every kind of taste and standards, and see what might happen to the word "enchantment." Its true significance would fail and another designation would have to be found to take

FLORNINA
95 South Los Robles
Pasadena, California

Gowns—
Negligees—
of Distinction

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

MONTHLY BULLETIN

"All for Service—And Service for All"

5604 De Longpre Avenue, Los Angeles

OFFICERS:

MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President
MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President
MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, Sec. Vice-Pres.
MRS. ERWIN P. WERNER, Third Vice-President
MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Vice-Pres.
MRS. JAMES REED, Secretary
MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treasurer.
MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

CALENDAR

March 2nd, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Board of Directors.
March 2nd, 12:30 p. m.—Round Table Luncheon. Speaker Mrs. Edward MacDowell. Subject: The "Peterborough Colony".
March 2nd, 2:30 p. m.—Meeting Hancock Banning Memorial Committee.
March, 8th, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Day Nursery Committee.
March 10th, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Good Samaritan Committee.
March 24th, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Good Samaritan Committee.
The Executive Committee meets every Tuesday.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors in December it was voted that it as a body hold itself responsible for the continuation of the Tea Room. The success of this department seems now to be assured.

Many of the biggest stars in Filmdom visit our Tea Room. From now on Friday of each week is to be Colleen Moore's Day, sponsored by Mrs. F. P. Newport, and many of the First National stars, writers and directors plan to come that day. Almost every day may be called Fox Studio Day, but Wednesday is now being called a special day, to be sponsored by Mrs. Charles Jeffras, Mrs. John Ford and Mrs. Ray Irvine.

As you know, we have this year entered the Community Chest as a whole. Our budget was based upon our estimated income and expenditures for the year, allowing only for a normal increase over last year, the Community Chest supplying the deficit between the money we shall earn and that required for our operation and our charities. In 1925 a total of $12,630 came to us from the Chest for the conduct of only three of our departments—the Day Nursery, the Good Samaritan Relief Department and the Wilmington Unit. This year our budget of $30,506 was approved, $14,160 of this amount to be earned by the League, $16,346 to be supplied from the Chest.

Having told you of our earning departments, I come now to those which this year were beneficiaries of the Chest.

It was little over a year ago that we met in this room to dedicate our newest project, the Day Nursery. In that short time it has developed into a well established institution, filling a real need in the community and winning the enthusiastic approbation of all who believe with us that nothing is more important than the care, protection and training the child. Credit for the unqualified success of the Nursery is due to the able leadership of its Chairman, Mrs. Erwin P. Werner, and to the loyal support of her committee of twenty, with Mrs. R. D. Shepherd, Vice-Chairman, and acting head during Mrs. Werner's absence. In summing up the year's work, we find that 153 children have been cared for over varying lengths of time. No small part of our task was to provide the wholesome midday meal for these little charges. Thanks to the generous donations of clothing and the work of the Sewing Committees, 1,094 garments were distributed to Nursery children.

A staff of five employees is maintained at the Nursery proper, a superintendent, a house matron, play and educational leader, and janitor.

From the Community Chest for maintenance the Nursery received $4,630 and closed its year without a deficit. This year only a slight increase was asked and a budget of $6,155 was granted.

We are happy to report to you that the Day Nursery property is without debt, the last lien against it having been removed with the $3,000 given by Mr. Jay M. Danziger in December. The Nursery now has a physical valuation of approximately $25,000.

Even in this short time it has been demonstrated that our present quarters and equipment are not adequate to meet the need for this work. We now have great hopes for a new modern building to meet our increased demands, both as to larger number of children and to greater service under the best conditions.

We told you in last month's bulletin of the $25,000 given by Mr. Raphael Herman for a new Nursery, on the condition that a similar amount be raised for this purpose. This wonderful gift has already inspired others to assist with this project. We told you, also, of the donation of 100,000 bricks and roofing tile by Mr. and Mrs. Walter R. Simons. We shall have other gifts to report to you soon.

I have come to our Good Samaritan Committee, which struggled along for so many years with inadequate funds—doing its little bit. It is most gratifying to note the splendid growth of this branch of our service, this work that goes to the very heart of things and means so much to all of us.

Mrs. Wm. Gibbs McAdoo, Chairman, and Mrs. Isaac-Hampshur Jones, Vice-Chairman, Mrs. Giles Hall, who served in Mrs. McAdoo's absence, and the other members of this committee, have guided this work for the year and have given freely of their time and their cars.

With the employment of a trained social worker, we entered into a definite piece of social work in the Good Samaritan Committee and have taken our place with the foremost case-working agencies under the Community Chest. We now have a full time case-worker, as well as a case supervisor, giving about half of her time to this department. During the year a total of 451 have called upon this department for assistance. Of the total 210 were families, the remainder being women or men alone. It is interesting to note that in the families we have helped over 360 children. This, in itself, is proof that our efforts are in the right direction, the greater part of our interests being in child welfare.

The most frequent call upon us has been for employment. That we have had no little success in meeting this call is evidenced by the fact that employment was secured for 152—positions, for the most part, of the higher type; for our requests come from those who have held formerly positions of responsibility. We have also given a general service; securing medical attention where needed or legal advice, or giving clothes or shoes. Through this department, too, transportation has been arranged for 34, most of whom were enabled to return to families able to care for them, but not able to send the money for tickets.

In reading these cold statistics, you cannot grasp the magnitude of this service, nor could I give you an adequate idea of the meaning, when I speak of interviews—visits—employment secured, etc., unless you would come and stand at the door of Miss O'Reilly's office and watch the procession pass in and out of that "door of hope." Last Monday, it was an old man with patrician face, so emaciated he must really have been ill. He had lost his position, his wife was ill at home—a little dry goods box home in one of our numerous subdivisions in the purlieus of our great city. The payments for the little home were long overdue.

There is a way out, I heard Miss O'Reilly say. She had given him that beautiful something called "Hope", which I saw reflected in the faded old eyes, as he left the room.

How was this case followed up?—Visits to the home, (our worker taken usually by a member of the Good Samaritan Committee or of our Motor Corps)—arrangements made for one of the doctors, who so generously give their services for this work, to call on the wife—a position secured for the old man—and of course, the necessary food and money to tide the couple over until they could carry their own burden again.

Now this is but one case, but you can readily see the time, strength, diplomacy, understanding and, above all, the heart required for the other 450.

In Wilmington our work has been confined almost entirely to case work with families. Under the direction of a local committee, with Miss Montana Tuller, as Chairman, and Mrs. Eve N. Gilmour, caseworker, very splendid work has been done. Recognition of this came in the form of a request from the local Chamber of Commerce that the Assistance League Unit be considered the principal relief agency of Wilmington; and the consequent increase by the Community Chest in the budget for 1926.

There, in Los Angeles proper, the greatest need was for employment. This problem was greatly facilitated by the ready response of the larger companies located on and near the harbor which called upon us when in need of men. In all 262 were given work—positions which meant to them the possibility of becoming self-supporting.

Much of the case work in Wilmington is with foreigners; the larger proportion of the 238 cases handled this year being Mexican, requiring on the part of our worker a knowledge of Spanish.

One of the most gratifying results of the year's work is the confidence in our Unit evidenced in the hearty cooperation of all local agencies and the general support of the community.

Recently the Unit has opened a Thrift Shop, so that clothes may be supplied poor families at a nominal price, or given to the very needy. You may now expect more than ever to be asked to secure donations of clothing, remembering that we also, have use for every kind and variety of thing.

The work with the veterans in Sawtelle, under Mrs. Edward Elliott, Chairman of the Veterans' Committee, has broadened its scope during the year. Besides providing presentable clothes for veterans who find themselves ready to leave the hospital, without money nor the hope of government compensation, this committee has supplied delicacies for the boys, who were too ill to eat the regular hospital food. Fresh eggs, nourishing soups, squabs and broilers, have been the treats given the grateful lads. And here again, from this committee, comes the call for employment—usually part time jobs for the convalescent. May I urge you, one and all, to assist with this employment problem?

Our Opportunity Circle, which was launched in September, has lived up to its name, for in this short time it has paid out to the women who have filled the orders for children's dresses, guest towels, handkerchiefs, etc., about $170. Mrs. Henry Lissner, Chairman of the Circle, lays most stress on this; for the primary object of this committee is to help the woman obliged to remain at home, to help herself. Be prepared for calls at your home from members of this committee, for they are taking their wares to your door.

The Shut-In Department has not been active during the past year, but plans for 1926 are most promising. Mrs. Sydney R. Brough has accepted the chairmanship and is now organizing her committee.

Thanks to the thoughtfulness of some of our Board members, who happened to be in Santa Barbara last summer, the Assistance League was privileged to do its bit in the earthquake relief. Mrs. E. Avery McCarthy as Chairman of this emergency committee and Mrs. Wm. Brackenridge, Vice-Chairman, secured large shipments of clothes to be distributed to the poor families in the district affected by the flood following the earthquake.

It would not be possible for me to express to you how deeply touched I am at the beautiful Memorial to my husband, which you have raised in the establishment of a bed for a child in the hospital in his name, through our Tiny Tim Floral Memorial.

This Tiny Tim Fund was founded in our Assistance League some years ago, in memory of one of our first secretaries to the League, Mr. K. Elliott, who passed away, the idea being that in lieu of sending flowers in time of bereavement, in the name of the departed, a contribution is made to some charity, dear to his or her heart.

Flowers will always be sent by some at this time. Why not, also, this tribute of everlasting flowers of service; to continue on forever in the memory of our beloved ones gone.

Unique in its Atmosphere

Each morning a refreshing shower. A joy at forty miles an hour.

Golden State Limited East

The luxurious and congenial environment of an ocean liner translated to railroad travel.

Rock Island

Southern Pacific Lines

Leave Los Angeles 12:01 p.m. [via Southern Pacific]; San Diego 10:45 a.m. [via S.D.&A.]; arrive Chicago 10:00 a.m. third day [via Rock Island].

Thru Pullman daily from Santa Barbara 8:00 a.m. [via Southern Pacific].

For tickets, reservations personal service, call on

Southern Pacific City Ticket Office, 937 State St., Santa Barbara, Calif., Phone 243; or address B. F. Coons, General Agent, Rock Island Lines, 609 Van Nuys Bldg., Los Angeles, Calif.

A "comfy" lounge for women planned. A kind of traveling "no man's land."

CHINESE RUGS

Antique ~ Modern & Made to Order

Photographs and designs submitted
Monograph on Chinese Rugs on request

Gump's

S. & G. Gump Co. | San Francisco
246-268 Post St. | California

RECONNOITERING IN BARKER BROS.

HAVE you explored the new home of Barker Bros.? Have you discovered its many beautiful and unique features—its unusual services? We invite you—now—to make a complete tour of the building. Do not miss, for instance:

THE FOYER
—with its decorative scheme, its Maynard Dixon paintings—a welcoming atmosphere the only commodity dispensed here.

THE GALERIA
—through the building from Flower Street to Figueroa, with its little balconies and display windows affording a revue of the resources of the store.

THE ORIENTAL SECTION
—on the main floor, with its brilliant array of art objects from the far east.

THE AINSLIE ART GALLERY
on the second floor—an internationally famous institution, with exhibitions of world masterpieces.

THE AUDITORIUM
where clubs or individuals may give programs, lectures, recitals.

THE INTERIOR DECORATING STUDIO
—on the second floor, with its special rooms for arranging furnishings and hangings in tentative schemes.

THE HOME ADVISORY SERVICE on the eleventh floor, where plans and complete furnishing schemes, budget plans or a mere bit of advice are available for puzzled homemakers.

BARKER BROS.

COMPLETE FURNISHERS OF SUCCESSFUL HOMES
SEVENTH STREET, FLOWER & FIGUEROA

Visit
An Old Fashioned Garden
and choose your Trees, Shrubs, Perennials and Herbs
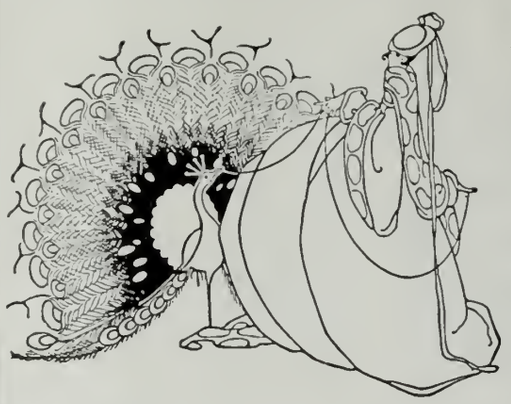
Orders filled with thoughtful care
Nosegays made to please you.



McAFEE GARDENS
An Old Fashioned Garden
640 No. San Gabriel Blvd.
The Broadway Garden
Broadway and Encinitas
SAN GABRIEL, CALIFORNIA

Decorating and Finishing Exclusive Furniture

W. G. Pesenecker

Interior and Exterior Painting
34 North Broadway
Phone Col. 5656 Pasadena, Calif.

Paul H. Vaucheley
Lighting Fixtures.
Andirons Console Tables
Metal Work
1530 North Western Ave ~ Holly 2669
Los Angeles ~ California

Lenz
HAT
Studio
643-645
East
Colorado St.
Pasadena,
Cal.
Near the New Community Playhouse
Phone
Fair Oaks
573

FRIENDS OF THE SERENDIPITY WILL BE INTERESTED TO KNOW THAT BY ARRANGEMENT WITH THE WESTERN TILE AND MARBLE COMPANY OF PASADENA AND SANTA BARBARA A PART OF MY COLLECTION IS NOW EXHIBITED IN THE 18TH CENTURY ADOBE KNOWN AS EL CUARTEL, 122 CANON PERDIDO, SANTA BARBARA

The
Serendipity Antique Shop
Antiques Lamps Decorations
22, 26 and 30 SOUTH LOS ROBLES AVENUE
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
BRADFORD PERIN, Proprietor Telephone F. O. 7111

Thru Service Direct to Eastern Cities
Via Southern Pacific
Golden State Route
to Chicago

Through sleepers direct to many eastern points—
St. Louis • Minneapolis • St. Paul • Kansas City
Des Moines • Memphis and intermediate places.

The Country's Finest Trains

Golden State Limited—none faster to the east.
Every travel luxury—observation and club cars, shower-baths, maid, barber, valet; Golden State dining car service. Connects with fast trains leaving Chicago. Also, the Golden State Express — Californian

Ask your local agent about fares, reservations, schedules, etc.

Southern Pacific Lines
Ticket Offices: 212 West 7th Street. 1147 South Broadway. Main Floor Pacific Electric Bldg., 6th and Main. Station—5th and Central. Phone MEtropolitan 2000
Glendale 106 N. Brand. Hollywood 6768 Hollywood Blvd. Long Beach 156 West Ocean. Ocean Park Trolley way. Pasadena 148 E. Colorado.

Come..... and See!

Seeing is Believing!

Just off the main highway to San Diego is RANCHO SANTA FE. The distance from Los Angeles is about one hundred miles and to San Diego about thirty miles. At Del Mar you will see the sign by the side of the road. Turn inland, drive six miles and you are at the Civic Centre of RANCHO SANTA FE.

Ask some nice person there to tell you all about . . . .

Great Lake Hodges Dam, holding in reserve billions of gallons of water for the use of the Citizens of RANCHO SANTA FE.

The marvelous threadwork of roads — 53 miles in all, opening up the entire 9000 acres.

The Civic Centre.

The Guest House (before long to be the Club House.)

The land set aside and now surveyed for the Golf Course.

Some of the 24 houses already built, (some of them at a cost of from 20 to 40 thousand dollars.)

It is the Glory of The Southland—
Come and See It!

Rancho Santa Fé

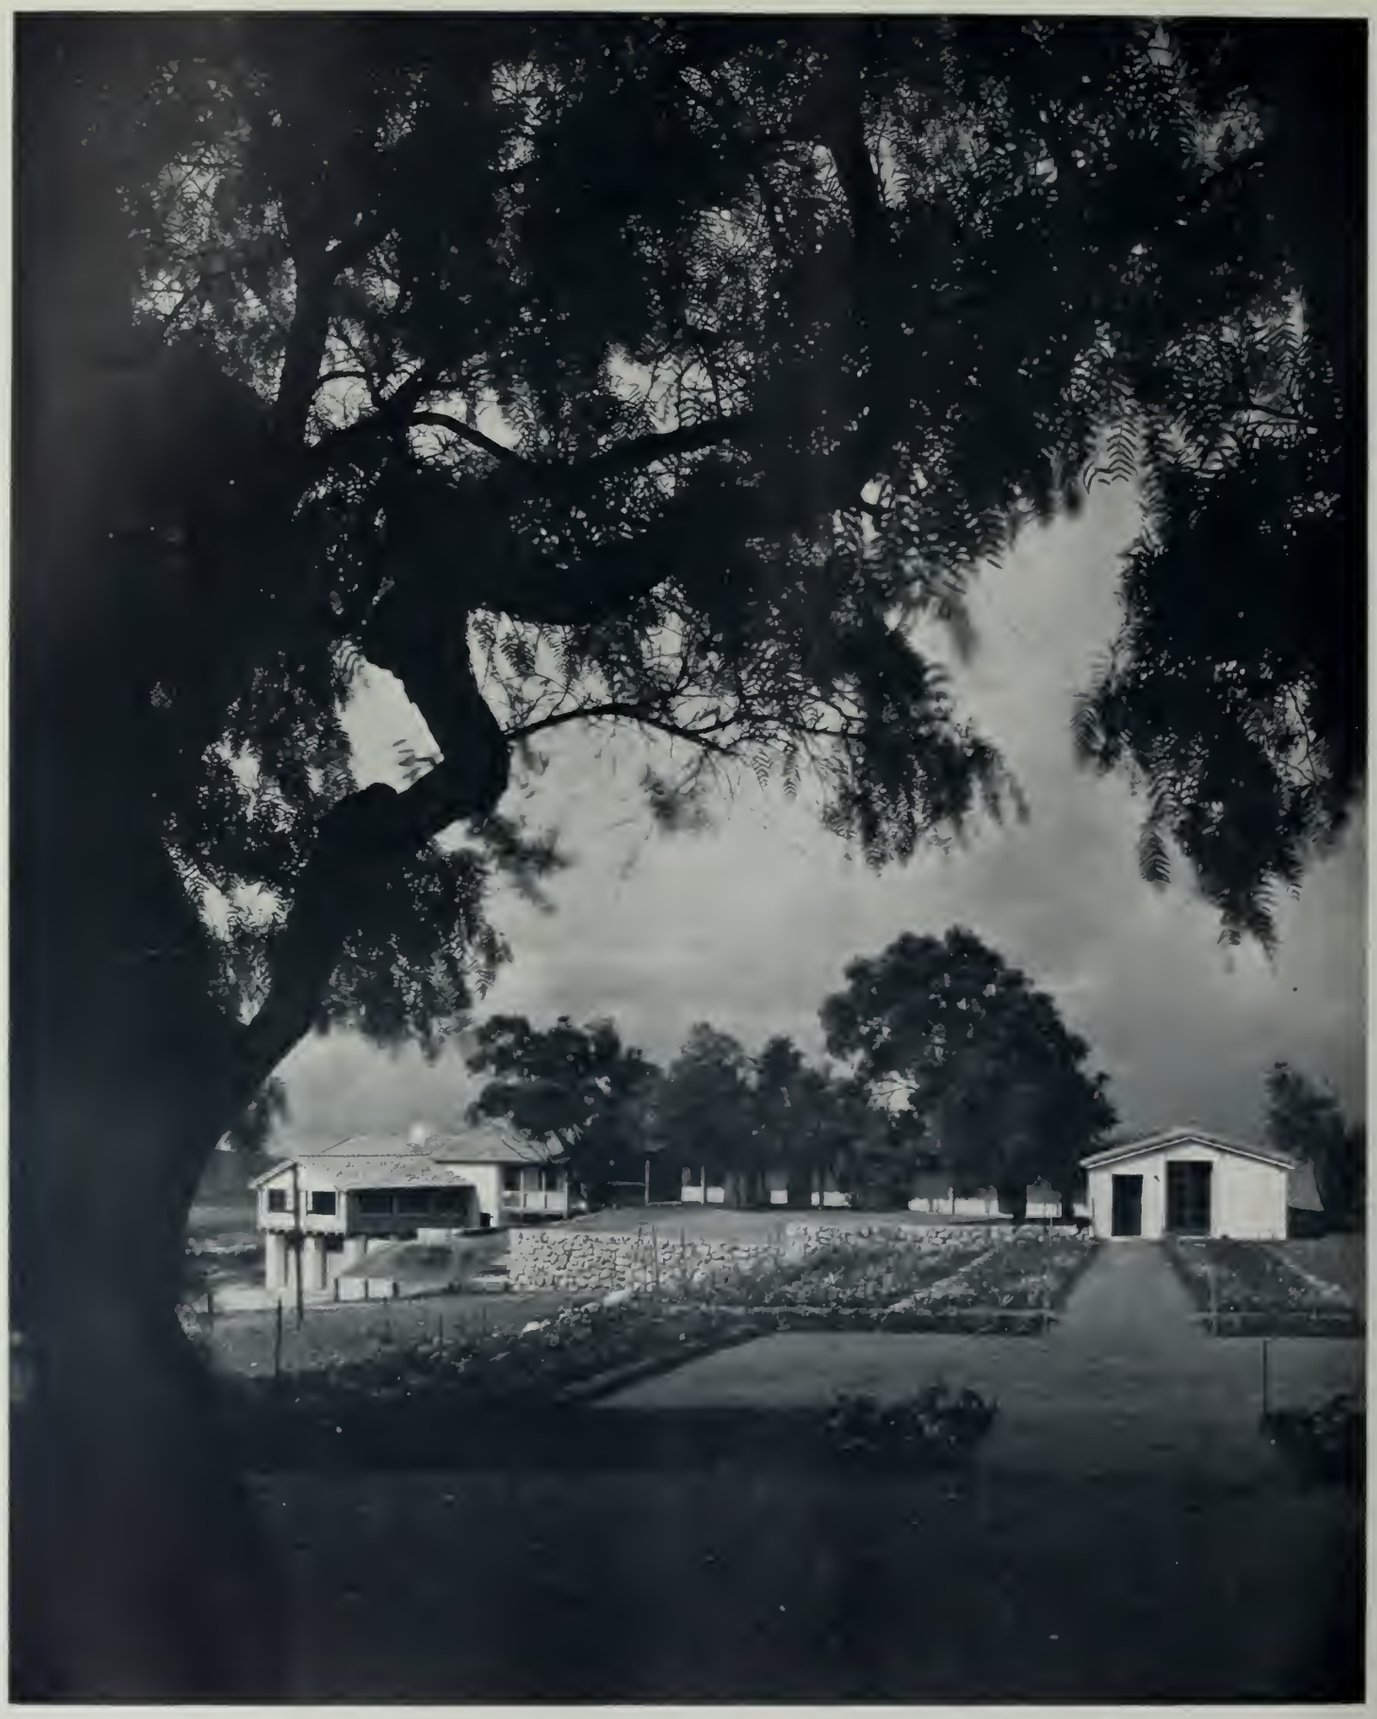
FOR THOSE PARTICULAR ABOUT ENVIRONMENT

SAN DIEGO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA

Pasadena Office
ELLIS BISHOP
Pacific Southwest Bank Bldg.
Phone TErrace 2840
Associated with Rancho Santa Fe

Surpassing Values, Convenient Terms
15% Cash, balance 7 equal
Annual payments, 6% interest.

Write, or come by auto or Santa Fe Ry. —Rancho Santa Fe is 5 miles inland from Solano Beach or 7 miles from Del Mar, San Diego County



MAIL THIS COUPON FOR BOOKLET

SANTA FE LAND IMPROVEMENT COMPANY
601 Security Building :: :: Los Angeles

Name _____

Address _____

Southland, March

The Frederick Law Olmsted place—situated on a steep bluff overlooking the Pacific at Palos Verdes.

Palos Verdes Estates

California's most distinctive seaside Community offers boundless opportunities for the creation of elegant homes such as the one pictured above.

JAY LAWYER
Gen. Mgr.

BANK OF AMERICA
Trustee

LANE MORTGAGE BUILDING, EIGHTH AND SPRING STS.
LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Every modern city convenience in one of the Southland's best scenic locations—

SOCIETY :: ART :: INDUSTRIES :: HOMESITES

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

Courtesy of Gladding, McBean and Company

TILE ROOFS OF RONDA, SPAIN.

From a painting by Gerald Palmer

THE SOUTHLAND OF CALIFORNIA MAY BUILD MOST BEAUTIFULLY IN NATIVE MATERIALS OF CONCRETE AND CLAY AND ITS TOWNS ARE TERRA-COTTA TOWNS

No. 76 APRIL, 1926 25 Cents

CALIFORNIA'S HOME AND GARDEN MAGAZINE

CHINESE WORKS OF ART

Superb jar of the Sung Dynasty. Brown pottery base with unctuous black glaze boldly modeled in foliated design. ✣ Diameter 15 in. Height 12¼ in., without stand.

Jades Crystals Bronzes Porcelains
Potteries Lacquers Textiles
Paintings Screens Cabinets Rugs

S. & G.
GUMP CO.
246-268 Post Street
San Francisco, California

FRIENDS OF THE SERENDIPITY WILL BE INTERESTED TO KNOW THAT BY ARRANGEMENT WITH THE WESTERN TILE AND MARBLE COMPANY OF PASADENA AND SANTA BARBARA A PART OF MY COLLECTION IS NOW EXHIBITED IN THE 18TH CENTURY ADOBE KNOWN AS EL CUARTEL, 122 CANON PERDIDO, SANTA BARBARA

The
Serendipity Antique Shop

Antiques Lamps Decorations
22, 26 and 30 SOUTH LOS ROBLES AVENUE
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
BRADFORD PERIN, Proprietor Telephone Terrace 3509

WESTERN TILE & MARBLE, INC.
—at your service for
TILE AND MARBLE FEATURES
— in —
Homes - Gardens - Swimming Pools - Stores - Office Buildings
ESTIMATES CHEERFULLY GIVEN

You are cordially invited to visit our display of Modern and Antique Tile from all parts of the world.

386 So. RAYMOND AVE.
PASADENA, CALIF.

PHONES
F. O. 3157
TERRACE 3158

A Winter Bargain In Summer Bridles

IRISH REDUCINE
Best for all lameness. Order through your dealer or direct. Postpaid $5.00.

Weymouth Bridle (like cut)—Hook in Stud. Good Butt Stock. Hand sewn in silk. Caveson nosebend faced where joined to head. Heavy square Never Rust Buckles.

Never Rust Bits including Curb, Bradoon, Chain and Hook (all never rust) and Lip Strap $11.85

This Bridle has Style, Service and Satisfaction.
Your money back if you want it—but you won't.
Sells elsewhere $20-025.
Dealers: Write for my English Bargain Bulletin of Items purchased while abroad.

"Little Joe" Wiesenfeld Co.
Baltimore, Md.

Always Enchanting

Fortnightly Sailings with Giant Liners

Direct from Los Angeles
O'er the Popular Southern Route

THE round trip from Los Angeles to Hawaii and return may be made for $278.50, $323.50, $406.00—and up—according to steamship and hotel accommodations selected—covering every necessary expense afloat and ashore—seeing the outstanding attractions of Honolulu on the Island of Oahu—and enjoying the daylight trip along the Windward Coast of Molokai, to Hilo on the Island of Hawaii, where time is allowed to visit the Kilauea Volcano, Lava Tubes, Giant Fern Forests and other wonders of Hawaii National Park.

Write for Booklet

Los Angeles Steamship Co.
517 S. Spring Street
Telephone VAndike 2421
Los Angeles :: California

23-126

PASADENA REAL ESTATE

FOR SALE
or
FOR RENT

"Early California"

Mac. Blankenhorn and Associates
AGENTS - REALTORS

Properties of Character

J. H. Woodworth & Son

200 East Colorado St., Pasadena, California
Established 1886

Realtors; Insurance
Bonds and Mortgages
Architecture and Construction

PASADENA REAL ESTATE GUIDE

An illustrated booklet of attractive Pasadena homes for sale ranging in price from $10,000 to $150,000. Send for a copy.

MORSE and GATES
Pacific Southwest Bank Bldg. Pasadena, Calif.

THE POTTENGER-SHAW COMPANY

REAL ESTATE INSURANCE
Specializing in
ALTADENA AND PASADENA PROPERTIES
1465 North Lake Ave. Terrace 8118

FOR SALE

CASA DEL CARAVEL

Grounds landscaped, with bearing fruit trees, lily pool, rose garden, dog kennel, etc.

Large living room, dining room, breakfast room, kitchen, laundry and basement for trunks. Master's suite with two bedrooms, dressing room, and tiled bath with shower. Guest room and bath. Two car garage with servant's room and bath. Unit gas heaters, Ruud hot water heater, large fireplace.

Near schools, churches and transportation.

PRICED LOW FOR IMMEDIATE SALE. TERMS

255 E. Calaveras St., (at Marengo Ave.) Altadena
Sherwood Hall Tel. Fair Oaks 5656

"Complete Realty Service"

Garden 1667 Homewood, Altadena

FOR SALE

NINE ROOM COLONIAL HOME

Four Bedrooms, Three Baths, Grounds Beautifully Landscaped Ask Us About It

CARROLL PAGE FISK CO.

28 N. Garfield REALTORS Terrace 6171

WE OFFER BEAUTIFUL HOMES FOR SALE OR RENT IN ALL SECTIONS OF PASADENA ALTADENA SAN MARINO FLINTRIDGE ETC.

THE HOGAN CO.

INSURANCE REALTORS BUILDING
Main Office Maryland Hotel Building
379 E. Colorado St. PASADENA Telephone F. O. 63

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertainments, etc., for the calendar pages are free of charge and should be received in the office of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, at least two weeks previous to date of issue, the 10th. No correction can be guaranteed if they are received later than that date CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, California. One dollar and twenty-five cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be changed as many times as desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the change is made.

Entered as second class matter, July 28, 1919, at the Post Office at Pasadena, California, under act of March 3, 1879.

Clubs

VALLEY HUNT CLUB, PASADENA:
The program for April includes:
Bridge luncheon, 1 o'clock, the 5th.
Bridge tea, 2:30 o'clock, the 12th, 19th, and 26th.
Evening bridge, the 23rd, 8 o'clock, supper will be served.
Sunday evening suppers at 7 o'clock with programs.

ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB, PASADENA:
The afternoon bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been discontinued for the season, but tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
The April Bridge Day, with prizes and afternoon tea, will be held Friday, the 23rd.
Dinner dance, Saturday, the 27th.
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged, followed by tea.
Table d'hote dinner served in dining room every Sunday from 12 to 3 p. m.

LOS ANGELES COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.
Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 .p m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month.
Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturday during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.

MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday in each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Dancing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday.
Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.

LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week, Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal.
Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL COUNTRY CLUB:.
A dinner dance is arranged for the third Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a. m., and not before two p. m.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB, SANTA BARBARA:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A recent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a special luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served.

PALOS VERDES GOLF CLUB:
Offers an eighteen hole, all grass, seaside course, delightful for all the year play.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Lunch and dinner served every day.

PASADENA GOLF CLUB:
Wednesday is Ladies' Day, with cards and mah jongg from two to four-thirty, when tea is served.
Dinner will be served on Sunday from five-thirty to seven-thirty. The usual luncheon and dinner service will prevail through the week.

NEWPORT HARBOR YACHT CLUB:
The annual pilgrimage of the "Woofel Birds" in search of the fabled eggs will be made April 9-10-11. The annual election of officers will be held in Catalina Harbor preceding the hunt.

Bullock's
Los Angeles

"One o'Clock Saturdays"

Music

THE PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA OF LOS ANGELES, W. A. Clark, Jr., founder, Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor, will present the usual symphony concerts throughout the month. The dates for the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts are April 9-10 and April 23-24. The hours are 2:30 and 8:30. Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will be given April 9 and 10, with a chorus of two hundred voices, at the Shrine Auditorium. The Popular Sunday afternoon concerts are given at 2:30; the dates are 4-18-25. These concerts are given at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Fifth and Olive. The Spring season of open-air concerts are given by the Orchestra at the Los Angeles Coliseum. These are made up of popular numbers, and the seat prices, ranging from ten to fifty cents, kept within the reach of everyone. The April concert is scheduled for the 11th at 2:00 p. m.

PASADENA'S CONCERTS by the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra are given at the Raymond Theater; the date for the April concert is the 5th. The entime Philharmonic Orchestra, under the direction of Walter Henry Rothwell, appears on these occasions.

LOS ANGELES ORATORIO SOCIETY, John Smallman, director, will give the third and final concert of the season the evening of April 30 at the Philharmonic Auditorium. The program will be miscellaneous, featuring compositions by Percy Grainger, composer-pianist, who will play and direct some of his own compositions. Members of the Philharmonic Orchestra will again furnish the orchestral accompaniment.

THE CAULDRON SINGERS, eighty male voices, Roy V. Rhodes, director, Eleanor Remick Warren, accompanist, Raymond McFeeters, accompsnist, will present the second concert of the fifteenth season, Tuesday, April 13, 8:20 P.M., st the Shakespeare Club, Pasadena.

THE SAN FRANCISCO CHAMBER MUSIC SOCIETY, after a tour of the East, presenting seventy-five concerts, are at home and are considering holding symphonic concerts throughout the summer, following, to some extent, the ides and the arrangement of the concerts in the Hollywood Bowl.

THE LOS ANGELES TRIO, May MacDonald Hope, founder, Sylvian Noack and Ilya Bronson will give the sixth of the series of concerts at the Biltmore Hotel, Los Angeles, April 29. These concerts are always highly interesting in character and attract large audiences.

THE HOLLYWOOD HIGH SCHOOL will close the series of concerts for this season on April 16, when a morning concert will be presented by the Barrere Little Symphony Orchestra.

BEHYMER PHILHARMONIC ARTIST COURSES, including Tuesday and Thursday evening concerts, offer during April the following artists: Claire Dux, Polish lyric soprano, the 8th; Richard Crooks, popular American tenor, the 13th; the Barrere Little Symphony, the 15th; and Mischa Elman, called the poet of the violin, will close the series, the 27th. These programs are given at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Los Angeles.

THE ZOELLNER QUARTET, will give the seventh of the annual series of chamber music concerts the evening of the 19th, in the Music Room of the Biltmore Hotel, Los Angeles.

AUDITORIUM ARTIST SERIES, under the management of George Leslie Smith, offered nine subscription concerts during the season. In April the artists appearing are Edward Johnson, tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who will, with Joan Ruth, soprano, present selections from Rigoletto, La Boheme, and Romeo and Juliet, the 5th; the London String Quartet, the 12th.

ADOLF TANDLER'S LITTLE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA will continue the series of concerts at the Community Playhouse, Pasadena, the first and third Sunday afternoons during April.

Old English Silver Sauce Boat
Made in London by Peter and Anne Bateman in 1784.

Exhibit of Antique English Silver and Sheffield Plate

A. Schmidt & Son
391 East Colorado Street, Pasadena

HOLLYWOOD COMMUNITY ORCHESTRA, Jay Plowe, director, has been pledged the support of the members of the Hollywood Woman's Club, under the chairmanship of Jessica Lawrence.

ADOLF TANDLER'S LITTLE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA will give the Saturday morning concert, 11 o'clock, Biltmore Hotel, Los Angeles, April 3d; also the Sunday night concerts at the same place, April 4th and 18th.

MISS BESSIE CHAPIN, concert violiniste, will give the last of a series of costume-programs in the ballroom of the Huntington Hotel, Pasadena, Thursday, April 15th, 11:15, the subject being "Romany Rythms."

F. M. HINER'S CONCERT BAND will continue the series of concerts at the Olympic Auditorium, Grand avenue at 18th, Los Angeles, during the month. The concerts are given each Saturday night, Sunday afternoon at 2:30 and Sunday night at 8:30.

THE SEVEN ARTS CLUB of Long Beach, Katheryn Coffield, director, will present Gay MacLaren, reader, April 20th.

RUSSIAN ART CLUB of Los Angeles, Dr. Alexis Kall, president, presents the third symphony concert of Russian music of the series, Saturday evening, April 17th, at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Los Angeles. Philharmonic Orchestra, Modest Altschuler, conducting.

MRS. J. J. CARTER, one of the founders of the "Bowl," has resigned the presidency of the Hollywood Bowl Association to the deep regret of her many friends and admirers. Perhaps more than any one thing the force and strength of Mrs. Carter's belief in the success of the Bowl concerts brought the realization, and to her untiring efforts Los Angeles is indebted for the symphony concerts offered each summer "under the stars."

OXNARD EISTEDDFOD CONTESTS are announced for the week of April 5, and will close with a concert by the Orpheus Club of Los Angeles, Hugo Kirchhofer, director.

LA JOLLA OPERA COMPANY will present Gilbert and Sullivan's delightful comic opera, "The Gondoliers" at the Granada theater in La Jolla on April 8 and 9.

MEN'S GLEE CLUB of Whittier College leaves April 2 on the annual tour, returning April 13. Howard L. Hockett, head of the department of vocal music will direct the club.

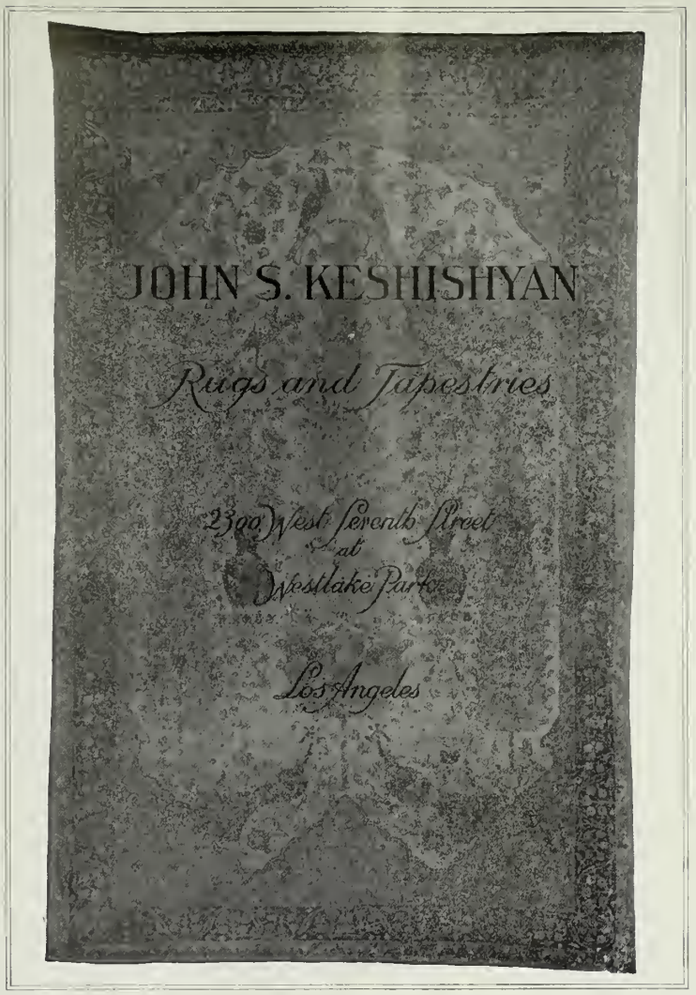
Announcements

PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYERS announce programs for April: "Hassan," an Oriental drama by James Elroy Flecker, April 4 to 17; "Hay Fever," by Noel Coward, April 22 to May 1.

CASA ADOBE BENEFIT PERFORMANCE, under the auspices of the University of California at Los Angeles, the University of Southern California, and the Occidental College, through their Spanish Departments, and the Southwest Museum, will be given the evening of April 6th, in the Philharmonic Auditorium, Los Angeles. The object is to raise funds to complete the rehabilitation of the Casa Adobe, which, when completed will be open to the public and will show the home life, the art and culture of the most romantic period of California history.

DR. JOHN ADAMS COMSTOCK announces his resignation from the directorship of the Southwest Museum and his reentrance into the practice of medicine and surgery.

COOPER ORNITHOLOGICAL CLUB will hold the annual meeting at Exposition Park, Los Angeles, April 8-9-10. Dr. George H. Miller, chairman of the department of biology at the University of California at Los Angeles, is in charge of the programs.



GARDEN CLUB OF AMERICA members will make Pasadena their headquarters, April 10 and 11, before attending the annual convention at Santa Barbara, April 13 to 16. This is the first time the organization has met on the Pacific Coast, where four clubs are members of the National oragnization; Berkeley, Santa Barbara and Montecito, Seattle and Pasadena.

LOS ANGELES DISTRICT, CALIFORNIA FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS will meet in Pasadena, April 6-7-8. The delegates are being entertained at a garden party in Busch Gardens, a theater party at the Community Playhouse to see "Hassan," and the annual banquet will be held at Hotel Huntington.

LOS ANGELES OPERA AND FINE ARTS CLUB, Mrs. J. T. Anderson, president, will open a new department, devoted to the study of Shakespeare and the production of Shekespearean drama.

SIEGFRIED," with Wagner's music, Dr. Ray Hastings at the organ, returns to the Philharmonic Auditorium, Los Angeles, for a week's engagement, opening March 22. Matinees daily.

"SAINT JOAN," with Julia Arthur and a distinguished cast, will open a fortnightly engagement at Philharmonic Auditorium, Los Angeles, April 5. There will be twelve matinees with performances each Friday and Saturday nights.

SOROPTIMIST CLUB BUSINESS AND STYLE SHOW: In the ball room of the Biltmore Hotel the Soroptimist Club of Los Angeles gave a brilliant and original business and style show during the luncheon meeting, Tuesday, March 23. The diversified program revealed the wide scope of the professions and trades which occupy the hundred and fifty members. A complete fashion show was not attempted but a presentation of the part that women are taking in the business world was interpreted. Thirty-two numbers made up the program, opening with a group of Camp Fire Girls, beautifully illustrating the welfare interests of the club. Norma Gould, dancing director, presented pupils in special numbers, and supervised other numbers. Following the general business presentations came the style show, including sports and street wear, afternoon, dinner and evening gowns, and closing with "The Pajama Parade."

A "ROSE LUNCHEON" will be held April 21, sponsored by the women's division of the Tournament of Roses Association, Pasadena, to foster a general meeting of all members of the organization in Southern California. Mrs. Myron Hunt is president, and Mrs. Florence Magill Wallace, secretary of the women's division.

MISS TERESA CLOUD presents Col. William J. Mitchell at the High School Auditorium, Pasadena, April 23. The subject of the talk is "America's Place in the Air."

PACIFIC COAST CHAPTER of the American Society of Landscape Architecture will sponsor the third annual exhibit of landscape architecture and garden sculpture in the Casa Adobe of the Southwest Museum during May.

GLENDALE DISTRICT EISTEDDFOD contests will be held during the month, closing April 27, when the Glendale Symphony Orchestra, Burbank Choral Club, and the oratoria section of the Glendale Music Club will compete.

Pomona College, Claremont

THE month of April offers a number of lectures and music and dramatic events. On April 1 at 4:30 p.m. and April 2 at 10:30 a.m. Theodore Dubois' "The Seven Last Words of Christ" will be presented by the Pomona college choir of 147 voices.

The fifth concert of the Zoellner Quartet in the Claremont Chamber Music Society series will be held in the Bridges Hall of Music on Monday evening, April 12 at 8 o'clock.

Professor Buwalda of the California Institute of Technology, speaks on "Earthquakes and Safety" in Holmes hall, Thursday evening, April 15, at 7:30.

The Barrere Little Symphony will be presented in concert as a number of the Pomona college music and dramatic course in Bridges hall of Music, Monday evening, April 16 at 8:15 o'clock.

Professor George M. Turner of Pomona college will present his illustrated lecture "The Romance of Petroleum" on Thursday evening, April 22, in the Mason hall of chemistry.

The annual Father and Son banquet is to be held in the big Gymnasium or Friday evening, April 23 at 6 o'clock.

The Pomona College Masquer's Society presents the four act comedy "Grumpy" in Holmes hall on the nights of April 23 and 24 at 8:15 o'clock.

The annual Pomona college woman's day and May Masque is scheduled Saturday, May 1. A number of athletic events are planned for Southern California high school girls. The May queen is crowned at noon and in the late afternoon the May Masque, "Hansel and Gretel," will be presented in the Greek theatre.

Both the Pomona college men's and women's glee clubs leave on extended concert tours April 2. The men's glee club presents fifteen concerts in San Diego county and Imperial Valley. The women's club will sing in Northern Central and Southern California.

Wood block prints of the Orient will be exhibited in Rembrandt hall of art, April 13 to 25.

Pomona college spring recess begins at 4:15 p.m., April 2, and ends at 7:30 a.m., April 13.

Arts and Crafts

A Dance at the Studio of Mr. and Mrs. Francis William Vreeland, 2206 Live Oak Drive in Hollywood on April, the sixth.

An exhibition of Volga tiles at our shop, 2871 West Seventh Street, April fifth to the tenth.

An Exhibition of silver and pewter by Mr. Porter Blanchard; of weaving by Miss Blanche Sell and of batike by Liljedahl and Bengtsson at the California Made Exhibition in the Shrine Auditorium April nineteenth to the twenty-fourth.

An Exhibition of miniatures by Miss Ella Shepherd Bush at the Shop April twenty-sixth to May first.

A formal Evening at Berkeley Hall School on Dayton Way in Beverly Hills on April the thirtieth.

Art

LOS ANGELES MUSEUM OF HISTORY, SCIENCE AND ART, Exposition Park, announces for April the annual Spring exhibition of the Painters and Sculptors Club, which will continue this year into May. Also an exhibition of sculpture by Ivan Mestrovic, in one of the smaller galleries. Under the auspices of the Cooper Ornithological Club, holding its annual meeting April 8-9-10, an interesting collection of bird paintings will be shown.

THE CANNELL AND CHAFFIN GALLERIES, 720 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles, will show to April 17, the first individual exhibition in America of the paintings of the famous Italian master, Ettore Tito. Founder of the great school of Impressionism in Italy, Tito has progressed until he is now recognized not only as the most famous living painter of that country but also one of the great painters of the world. Among the honors awarded Tito since 1885 have been the gold medals at the International Art Exhibition, Munich, 1888; the International Art Exhibition at Vienna in the same year; the Paris Exhibition in 1900; Art Exhibitions in Rome; and his home city, Venice. He was also awarded the Grand Prize at the Panama-Pacific Exhibition held in San Francisco, 1915. During the Carnegie International Exhibition, 1924 that institution purchased for its permanent collection his painting "The Market Place, San Marco." The Tito paintings will be shown in the Pasadena galleries following the close of the Los Angeles Exhibition.

Orrin White will show April 5 to 17.

PASADENA SOCIETY OF ARTISTS will continue their exhibition throughout April at the Pasadena Art Institute, Carmelita Gardens, Pasadena. Approximately eighty paintings and sculpture pieces are shown, and for this month a collection of studies by students of the local schools are added. The hours of the display are from 10 to 5 o'clock daily, except Sunday and Wednesday. On Wednesday the hours are from 10 o'clock to noon; on Sundays, from 2 to 5 o'clock.

THE GRACE NICHOLSON GALLERIES, 46 North Los Robles Avenue, Pasadena, will show to April 10 paintings of Italy and the Rivera by Russell Cheney. Oriental Paintings will be shown the last half of the month.

AINSLIE GALLERIES, second floor, Barker Bros.', Seventh Street, Los Angeles, is a branch of the Ainslie galleries of New York. During April the large display room will be used for the exhibition of the work of Western artists, principally California men and women. One of the smaller galleries will be used to show the work of Eastern men, while in the other canvases by European artists will be hung.

PAINTERS AND SCULPTORS CLUB OF LOS ANGELES will be established in their new home, 4715 South Wilton Place, this month. T. R. Tingle has presented his home to the Club, conforming with the request of the late Mrs. Minnie Tingle, an artist herself and the friend of all artists. The new club home will include not only exhibition galleries but also working studios.

BILTMORE SALON will show during April a carefully selected exhibition of the work of both Eastern and Western artists.

ETTORE CAVORIN has taken the old Harmer studios in Santa Barbara and is finding it pleasant to work there. He recently made the War Memorial for Edgewater, N. J. Mr. Cavorin is a valued member of the Advisory Board of the "Beaux Arts Institute of Design" in New York.

DANA BARTLETT has been doing unusually good work at his studio gallery, 101 South Virgil avenue, Los Angeles, and has sent a traveling exhibition through the East, which has been very successful.

STENDAHL ART GALLERIES, AMBASSADOR HOTEL, LOS ANGELES, announces the following exhibitions for the month of April: Alfons Blome of Belgium to April 3: Paul Lauritz Show will continue for two weeks in April: Bertha Lum opens first of April continuing until the 15th.

AARON KILPATRICK will continue his exhibition at the Biltmore Salon into April. These canvases are all the result of a visit to Cuernavaca, Mexico, last Fall and were all painted there, as Mr. Kilpatrick does not work from sketches. The pictures are a delight and through them one may enjoy a visit to one of the most charming spots in the old republic.

CHARLES RUSSELL and Mrs. Russell have taken a bungalow in Hollywood where they will make their home until June or later.

EDGAR PAYNE is the recently elected president of the California Art Club.

VICTOR HIGGINS held a very successful show at the Grace Nicholson Galleries, Pasadena, last month.

JACK WILKINSON SMITH is now at home in his new house and studio, recently completed, at Alhambra, near San Gabriel.

HERBERT V. B. ACKER is at work on a portrait of Gilmor Brown, well known director of the Pasadena Community Play house and the Studio Playbox.

XVIth, XVIIth and XVIIIth Century

French, Italian, English and Spanish Furniture

Lamps, Venetian Glass, Prints and Paintings

First American Exhibition of ETTORE TITO in our Los Angeles Galleries until April 17th.

Cannell and Chaffin, Inc.

397 East Colorado St. Hotel Maryland, Pasadena

720 W. Seventh St. Los Angeles, Calif.

THE Coolidge Rare Plant Gardens

OF PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

CAN UNDOUBTEDLY SHOW THE LARGEST VARIETY AND DIVERSITY OF PLANTS OF ANY CONCERN IN AMERICA

VISITORS ARE MOST CORDIALLY WELCOMED IN THE POSITIVE BELIEF THAT THE ABOVE STATEMENT CAN BE PROVED.

NORTH FOOTHILL BOULEVARD, PASADENA

PHONE F. O. 6610

Eleanor and . . . . Hollingsworth Beach

French and Italian Arts

630 East Colorado Street

Pasadena, California

WILLIAM WENT EXHIBITION at the Standahl Galleries, Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, is the first comprehensive, large show William Wendt has ever held in California. A pretentious book is being published by the Stendhal Art Galleries, which will contain fifty or sixty reproductions from this exhibition. Mr. Wendt has been working on this exhibition for the past three years, it is promised to be one of the greatest art events of this season. This exhibition opening April 15, because of the recent high honors Wendt has received through the Pan-American prize and the Ranger fund, is anxiously anticipated.

MAX WIECZOREK'S portrait of J. B. Millard, principal of the Virgil High School, has been bought by the teachers of the school and will be placed in the school library. The portrait was recently exhibited with the Painters of the West at the Biltmore Salon.

THE FREE LANCE ART LEAGUE held an exhibition at Brent's, 724 South Broadway, Los Angeles, during March.

LAGUNA BEACH ART ASSOCIATION is holding the annual Spring exhibition at Laguna.

SEVENTH INTERNATIONAL PRINTMAKERS EXHIBITION, held in March at Exposition Park, Los Angeles, under the auspices of the Print Makers Society of California, of which Benjamin Brown is president, and Howell Brown, secretary, awarded the following prizes: The gold medal to A. Rigdon Read, of England, for "Carvasonne"; the silver medal to Ernest D. Roach of the United States for "Ponte del Parasido;" and the bronze medal to Ernest W. Watson of the United States for "Misty Morning." The Huntington prize, given to the best etching in the exhibition, was awarded to Sidney Tushingham of England for "Gateway, Hampden Court." The Mr. and Mrs. William Alanson Bryan prize for the best American print was given to John Taylor Arms for "From the Ponte Vecchio." The Storrow prize for the best block print was awarded to Gustave Baumann of the United States for "Summer Clouds."

PAINTERS AND SCULPTORS CLUB prizes were awarded as follows: Gold, "Sunlit Hills" by Ralph Holmes; Silver, "Pines among the Dunes" by John Frost; Bronze, "Red Sails" by Edgar Payne. The medals were awarded as memorials to Minnie Tingle, by T. R. Tingle and will be continued for the most meritorious landscape, will carry a $200 award, and will be known as the Minnie Tingle Memorial Prize.

JESSIE M. BECKMAN, well known painter of landscapes, has closed her studio at 4570 West First street, Los Angeles, for a time, owing to illness, and will hang her unsold paintings at the MacDowell Club until next Fall.

SOUTHWEST MUSEUM, Marmion Way and Avenue 46, Los Angeles, has authorized a campaign to raise money for the purchase of the Lamprecht collection of art objects of cast iron technique, now on exhibition at the Museum. The collection contains a thousand examples of industrial and artistic achievement, and is of utilitarian and artistic value. The authorization is made by Charles Lansing Haskell, art curator and secretary-treasurer of the Museum. The campaign will be directed by M. Barbara Dacier, field secretary of the museum.

FRANCES CLARK, exhibiting with the Pasadena artists at the Pasadena Art Institute, Carmelita Gardens House, has sold the first picture of the exhibition, her painting entitled "Clouds over San Rafael" to an art lover and collector of Evanston.

BENJAMIN C. BROWN suggested to the members of the Ebell Club that they submit to him a title for the picture recently purchased by the club, and from the titles sent in he has decided upon the "Sentinel of the Snows" submitted by Mrs. W. G. Eccleston. An etching is the prize for the winning title.

BERNAYS, 2501 West Seventh St., Los Angeles, is showing the paintings of Arthur Hill Gilbert to April 10.

FINE ARTS GALLERY OF SAN DIEGO, now holding the inaugural exhibition of old and modern masters, announces the first purchase for the permanent collection, a painting by Valentine de Zuhiaurre entitled "Old Folks." Two other paintings from the Gallery of Modern Paintings have been presented to the Fine Arts Gallery, these are "The Girl in White" by Sorella, presented by Archer M. Huntington, and "Home of the Mermaids" by Locas, presented by Mrs. W. W. Whitney. The director of the gallery is Reginald Poland.

ALSON SKINNER CLARK has accepted a commission to do some of the murals and supervise the entire mural decoration of the new theatre in Carthay Center, of which Dwight Gibbs is the architect. This theatre is being built by J. Harvey McCarthy and in it he will carry out a few of the plans to which he has given much thought. F. Tenney Johnson will execute one of the murals, the subject being the first theatre ever built in California and depicted in a flood of moonlight.

Patio, School of Architecture, University of Southern California

The foundation of a school of architecture in Los Angeles places Southern California in the front rank of opportunity for architectural education.

The benefits of contact with the practicing profession, so essential to the mature development of the student, is provided by the Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles, whose members give their time and skill to the teaching of these future architects of Southern California.

GEORGE S. HUNT

FINE HAND MADE FURNITURE—ANTIQUE REPRODUCTIONS

171 EAST CALIFORNIA STREET PASADENA

Mt. LOWE

"Earth has no finer view to show"

Mt. LOWE TAVERN and Cottages
Enlarged and Improved

at the terminus of this World-Famous Trip afford a most delightful retreat for a long or short sojourn at reasonable rates

5 Trains Daily at convenient hours - from Main St. Station Los Angeles

$2.50 Round Trip Rate

For information and Reservations apply

Pacific Electric Ry.

Information Bureau Phone MEtaphor 1400-TRinity 3661

HOTEL GREEN

A well ordered Residential and Tourist Hotel of peculiar excellence. Open all year. Moderate rates. Apartments by the month.

The Green Tea Pot
A Convenient Restaurant
CHARLES B. HERVEY, Proprietor

La Solana

A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue.

Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day.

Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St. Pasadena

KIEVITS GALLERIES
Vista del Arroyo Hotel, Pasadena
European and American Paintings

A FEW COMPLETE FILES OF CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
May now be secured by those who wish to bind them or for libraries. 72 numbers for $7.50 postpaid. A discount of $2.00 will be given for any set not requiring No. 3.

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - - Editor and Publisher
ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - - Associate Editor

NO. 76, VOL. VIII. APRIL, 1926

CONTENTS

	Page
TILE ROOFS OF RONDA, A PAINTING BY GERALD PALMER..Cover Design (Courtesy of Gladding-McBean and L. A. Pressed Brick Co.)
SOUTHLAND CALENDAR.....Ellen Leech	4, 5, 6
THE FIELD OF THE LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT.....	9
BIRDS IN PARKS AND GARDENS.....Theresa H. Patterson	10
SOME VIADUCTS IN SPAIN, Two Photographs by George E. Hale	12
A GARDEN UNDER LATH.....Nathaniel E. Slaymaker	12
AN EXHIBITION OF PORTRAITS AT CASA MANANA, LA JOLLA....	14
RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS.....Louise Morgrage	15
WITHIN SANTA BARBARA'S GARDENS....Ervanna Bowen Bissell	16-17
SOUTHLAND OPINION	18-19
SPORTS OF THE SOUTHLAND.....	20-21
REPRINTS FROM THE A.I.A. PUBLICATIONS.....	22
BULLETIN OF THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB.....H. O. Sexsmith	23
A CHURCH—BY FREDERICK KENNEDY AND CARLETON E. WINSLOW	25
THE RELATION OF HOUSE AND GARDEN....Katherine Bashford	28
THE COURSE IN APPRECIATION OF ARCHITECTURE.....	29
A HISTORY OF STYLE.....Fairfax Proudfit Walkup	30
BULLETIN OF THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE.....	32

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.

Copyrighted, 1926, by M. Urmy Seares

Subscription price $2.50 per year, $1.25 one half year
RALPH B. URMY, JR., ADVERTISING MANAGER
MAIL ADDRESS: CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
Mrs. D. B. Sebastian, Box 296, Hollywood, National Representative
Advertisers desiring information concerning space or rates may call
Fair Oaks 7034 for Publisher's Office
During Press Week, 24th to 30th, call TRinity 1501

J. W. Robinson Co.

Oriental Rugs

RICH treasures of the Orient, exquisite in color and craftsmanship, create in everyone who sees this collection a desire to possess several of these luxuriously beautiful rugs.

From small throw rugs to large room sized rugs, this entire collection was bought, and is owned, outright by J. W. Robinson Co.

The prices which prevail are, therefore, considerably lower than those made necessary by the methods usual to the Oriental Rug Trade.

Sixth Floor

Antiques
JOHN W. CONDIT

Dealer in rare old pieces selected from private homes. Specialist in the proper restoration of heirlooms.

199 S. Fair Oaks Ave., Pasadena
Telephone Terrace 0315-W

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Italian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

The Mansfield Studios

Interiors designed and executed—Embroideries—Textiles

Pasadena WAshington 3473

Altadena Office Under Direction of Mrs. Samuel Lee Bierbauer
Colo. 2015

PORTRAITS
BY
PHOTOGRAPHY

Charles S. Seabolt

26 No. Los Robles Avenue,
Pasadena, California
Opposite Maryland Hotel
Terrace 6712

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

THE FIELD OF THE LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT

IN the March number of this magazine there was presented a matter of vital importance to the Southland of California, namely, the removal of our virgin forest called by Francis M. Fultz, of our Forestry Department, "The Elfin Forest"—in his valuable book of the same name.

When Man has removed this natural growth from the hills and mountains of California, he has in his ignorance depleted his own water supply and misapplied his energies. The surface of California's hill country cannot be touched without disastrous results from landslides and storm waters. It is therefore vitally necessary that the uninformed land developers who are so harshly exploiting our beautiful hill country for their own profit be estopped and that experts in landscape architecture be encouraged and supported by the intelligent layman. Few, indeed, realize that there is available expert knowledge on this subject in our midst; and this part of California seems still to be experimented upon by inexperienced small town realtors from rolling prairies of our great Midi who know not how to handle a hill-town lot.

From a collection of articles, compiled by the secretary of the American Society of Landscape Architects there has been selected the following information on the profession and our own Pacific Coast Chapter A. S. L. A., which is composed of about twenty experts, is strong and capable in applying its principles.

LANDSCAPE ARCHITECTURE. April 1924. p. 212.

From letter to Mr. A. D. Taylor written by Mr. William Rutherford Mead, President of the American Academy in Rome. This was written in reply to a letter by Mr. Taylor regarding the attitude of the Academy as to the relation of Landscape Architecture to the other Fine Arts.

Through its School of Fine Arts the Academy has made specific provision by the establishment of separate Fellowships and otherwise, for advanced professional study in each of the arts of architecture, sculpture, painting, landscape architecture and music. In one sense the Academy regards these arts quite definitely as co-ordinate.

This does not imply that they do not merge into one another or that each of them may not on occasion, and in relation to a given problem, become entirely subordinate to one of the others, nor does it imply that one of them may not more frequently occupy a dominant position than does another; as sculpture, for example, merges into and becomes the subordinated art of furnishing decorative detail for architecture more often than architecture becomes subordinate to sculpture as in furnishing a mere frame or support for a primarily sculptural monument. It means, rather, that each of these arts has its own distinct point of view and its own distinct and independent sources of inspiration as well as its own peculiar technique, and that none of them can develop to its highest reaches if approached always from the point of view of any of the others or if constantly subordinated to one of the others. Each has, and ought to have, its own distinctive, self-impelled and self-governing development; and in that sense they are all regarded by the Academy as quasi-independent and co-ordinate.

At the same time the Academy constantly emphasizes the interrelation of all the Fine Arts with each other; the need on the part of artists working in different parts of the field of Art for mutual understanding of each other's points of view, ideals, principles and methods; the importance of sympathetic and appreciative collaboration between such artists in the solution of the many problems which do not belong exclusively to any one of the arts alone; and the fact that some problems belong as much to one as to another of the fine arts as each is ordinarily practiced.

This last is notably true of architecture and landscape architecture in the regions where they meet and overlap. But, as indicated above, the Academy has acted on the firm belief that such intimate coordination and co-operative development of the several arts is best to be secured through close and friendly collaboration on an essentially co-ordinate basis rather than by the systematic and general subordination of others to any one of them.

HOUSE BEAUTIFUL. April 1924. p. 376. The Landscape Architect.

The field of the landscape architect includes all outdoors from the earth to the sky and the sea, from wild woods to lawn and water garden, from trunks of trees to tiny flowers, from walls and bridges to seats and sundials and brick patterns on pavements, from cities to city backyards. All of these and more are his proper interests, though he may choose to specialize in narrower phases.

THE BEAUTY OF A DECIDUOUS TREE IN FULL BLOOM AGAINST DARK PINE AND FRUITED ORANGE TREES IS OURS IN THE LANDSCAPED PART OF OUR RESIDENCE STREETS

Broadly speaking we divide landscape architecture into two parts—public work and private, or domestic work. The public work includes city planning, parks and playgrounds and all land developments which concern public groups. Domestic work is more concerned with private estates. Each division is worthy of a separate profession and the landscape architect generally finds himself committed sooner or later to one or the other by his interests and individual qualifications.

THE ARCHITECTURAL RECORD. May 1924. p. 499; 500. From article by Fiske Kimball: Architect, Landscape Architect, and Decorator.

The same increasing technical complexity which, between the sixteenth century and the later eighteenth, brought about the differentiation of architect and engineer, has in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries split engineering into a great number of branches, and has called into being specialized practice in landscape architecture and interior decoration. Instead of working in a single locality with well known native shrubs and flowers, and a few experimental exotics, we have today a national field of work with varied problems of adaptation, a constant stream of new varieties, and highly developed techniques of transplantation, tree repair, and a dozen other special branches. Any architect who glances over Mr. A. D. Taylor's "Landscape Construction Notes" will realize that here is a realm of technical knowledge in which he is as inexperienced as the landscape architect is in steel construction. . . .

No architect who has worked with a really competent landscape man can fail to have realized that his associate can think in terms of informal arrangement of ground and foliage masses, color grouping of flowers, and succession of seasonal effects, which lie wholly outside his own thought.

In the rapid evolution of the callings of landscape gardener and decorator into independent and truly professional status, the landscape architects have already provided the thorough cultural and professional education needed. The enlightened decorators are working hard to establish similar educational facilities and standards. Let us as architects recognize ungrudgingly the new state of affairs, and welcome the collaboration of professional men who have special knowledge and skill quite as valuable as our own.

LANDSCAPE ARCHITECTURE. Jan. 1912. p. 50-51. "Co-operation Between Architects" by Frederick Law Olmsted.

I may add, as it is easier and much more interesting to pluck the mote from another man's eye than the beam from one's own, that some architects do assume responsibilities in regard to landscape work which as individuals they appear, to competent judges, to be very ill fitted to carry out successfully. There is nothing in the fact that a man is an architect that should, in itself, interfere with his becoming

LANDSCAPING, PALOS VERDES. OLMSTED BROS., LANDSCAPE ARCHITECTS

(These excerpts are continued on page 29 and in the May issue)

SPRING LEADS HER SARABAND

By THERESA HOMET PATTERSON

Photograph by George D. Haight

WHERE FLOWER MIST FILLS THE CANYON AND PETALS FALL LIKE SNOW IN THE GARDEN OF MR. AND MRS. MORRIS COHN, OAK KNOLL

WHO would not follow close behind when spring enters a garden. Any gate is enticing but where it is hung on warm brick gate posts shaded by a pine tree and opens into fairyland, it is great good fortune if it swings inward. When South Los Robles has run past the last house and scurried down the hill along the wooded ravine, where deer surely prove it to be wild, there are two gates, the path through one leading down some rocky steps, the drive through the other over a bridge and up to the house. Stepping from out to in one pauses in a flood of enveloping joy and a deep sense of gratitude for the beauty of creation.

Art in this garden is so disguised that nature seems to be taking her own sweet way. There are great trees above, there are tree tops below. It is the heart speaking when anyone says, "I get hungry for the woods". Mrs. Cohn must have been a wood lover to have absorbed so much of the woodland spirit that she could translate it back into trees and singing brook so cleverly that the birds themselves don't know it isn't all natural. The stream pauses in little pools, where lily pads make floating islands for the frogs and parasols for the goldfish. The paths are not of angled stone or concrete but soft and velvety as though worn by the feet of deer and wild things going down to the brook to drink. There is the leafy freshness, the beauty of tree trunks with the vines that eling, and swinging tendrils that obey the slightest breeze. Nature skips and runs and tosses her curls, and voices the music that is in her heart through the birds, the frogs, the wind in the trees, the soughing of the pines and the rippling of the brook. But the music is heard only by her lovers who are attuned and whose hearts answer.

The sycamores giving high lights to green masses have their own notions, none of which are orderly; they are the unruly children that we love just as much or a little more. The greatest charm of the garden is its fruit blossoms, and when March enters with her train, it resembles the cherry blossom fetes of Japan so much that we look for the little artists from the poet nation writing sonnets all sprinkled with falling petals. What a setting for the red blankets on which they sit to serve tea and write poems, and for the gay flowered little children who look like flocks of butterflies as they run with lifted arms. No garden in Japan, no matter how extensive, is complete without a miniature landscape and almost no home is too small or too poor to have one. This little Japanese garden with its bridges and lantern makes the delusion complete. There are many single specimens of flowering peach, purple plum and other flowering trees in gardens, but to have them like a pink fog hanging between green banks is as unusual as it is satisfying.

"How kind that earth should treasure
So beautiful a thing,
All mystical enchantment
To stir our hearts in spring."

I would know it is spring with my eyes closed for I heard a peeper, and the brown thrasher hidden in the shrubbery was trying out his liquid notes so full of contentment and joy. I would know it is spring if my ears were closed, for there are the perfumes and even without them I believe I would know it.

The little groups of people who went quietly about agreed with the brown thrasher who kept saying "Ain't it pretty?" Who does not love the droning of the bees in their honey harvest, and wild gooseberries with their accompanying humming birds. The Black Phoebe circles out and back as he snatches his prey from the air; and if one song sparrow could be happier than another, here is that one. Roses spring from tree to tree as agile as flying squirrels. The Grosbeak will soon arrive flooding the garden with his vesper music while the warblers are already here on their semi-annual visit.

And so with song and opening bud, frogs and flowers and new green, falling petals, bees and breezes, sweet odors and earthly smells, quail and butterflies, spring leads her saraband.

There is a feeling of snugness and intimacy in the private garden, which must be lost in the municipal garden, The City Hall or Club cannot be like the home. But as one enjoys his own garden most when sharing it with a friend, so the municipal garden can give us great pleasure in that it is shared by all who love flowers and birds and open spaces. With apartment houses increasing and lots growing smaller, how necessary are the parks if we would keep our reputation

Coming to California in May which was early autumn in the hills, all the roadsides were dusty and brown, and who remembers the old Santa Fe station! Could it be California? I had come out of the maze of fruit blossoms of the East, through the jasmine and magnolia perfumed South, and anyway one can't think of May with any brown. By some saving fate my hotel was at Westlake Park. There was grass gently rolling down to the water and cool shadows to break the glare of Zenith sun, there were flowers—flowers to temper my disappointment. I'm sure that oasis saved California for me. It is a great solarium where, without price, those with worn bodies and tired nerves may find healing for body, mind and soul. Green grass is as restful to the eye as the ripples lapping the shore are to the ear, and the gentle sea breeze which rustles the bamboo is caressing and soothing. Men take their paper and pipe, women their books and sewing, nurses the chidren, and children their dolls, boys their enthusiasm, and tourists their leisure. That is a questionable statement as tourists have so much to see they have no legitimate leisure. After sight-seeing for days this would be just the place to go to mull it over—tne dictionary says "Mull" means to spice and sweeten. That would be a way to preserve the memories to carry home.

Photograph by George D. Haight

OUT WHERE THE GARDEN BEGINS

At one of the entrances where an old date palm etches its likeness on the walk, iridescent black birds weave in and out of the traffic —just beyond gulls ride like boats at anchor, their white breasts glistening in the sun. Looking into the air one known where they got the song "White Wings, They Never Grow Weary," for other gulls on graceful wing hover and float and rise and circle — almost hundreds of them. When I went out the other morning I thought I was at a vaudeville, except that there were many new things on the bill and all clean and entertaining for all ages. One gull flew in perfect circles, catching with hardly a miss the bread tossed up to him. The American Coots are reversible, standing on their heads they bob about as black and white triangles with yellow sidewheelers. They are always sure of an audience. Their white bills are fastened on with an orange ornament. The little boy was right who said "Dad, ain't they funny birds?" It is a grand melee of Pin-tails, Baldpates, Ringnecks, Mallards, Lesser Scaups, Teals and Cackling Geese; and when popcorn is thrown out the splashing sounds like a boy's swimming pool. I asked a little boy if he couldn't find out the names of the ducks, his wise reply was. "They don't name them, I don't think." Wouldn't it save a lot of trouble if they didn't name so many things?

The large trees are mostly peppers and eucalyptus—blue gum and ficifolia of the red blossoms. Melaluca furnishes a preening shelter. Yellow lilies and plants that like to have their feet in water wade along the shore. Children throng the park on Saturday. There is a restaurant and off in a section by itself is a place to cook, tables and swings. There are radio concerts on Sunday. The birds may have the lake during the days, but the canoes have it summer evenings. When the curtain of night is drawn the scene shifts and the Black-crowned Night Heron moves ghostlike about the stage while—"On the ear
Drops the light dripping of the suspended oar,
Or chirps the grasshopper one good-night carol more."

Photograph by M. Craig

A STAGE WHERE THE WATER BIRDS PLAY MANY PARTS, AND MARK THE CHANGE OF SEASONS BY THEIR ENTRANCES AND EXITS

THE COLOR PLATES AND BRIDGES NEAR RONDA

THE ROMAN (IN THE FOREGROUND) AND THE MOORISH BRIDGES NEAR RONDA, SPAIN. THIS CITY IS SITUATED ON HIGH CLIFFS.

GRANADA roofing tile, handmade and beautiful, has a history connecting California with Spain. Some years ago when the late Willis Polk, one of California's most original architects, returned from Spain, he suggested to Gladding, McBean and Company the making of a tile like those he had seen abroad. The Granada and Cordova tiles resulted and their rich color and rippling roof surface are ours to delight the eye. Another trip to Spain, that of Mr. Jess Stanton, resulted in much for the combined firms of Gladding-McBean and the Los Angeles Pressed Brick Company, and secured for our delectation the stunning reproduction which appears on our cover this month. Painted especially for these manufacturers of clay products by Gerald Palmer, a distinguished English water-colorist, this painting gives a vivid picture of a "terra cotta town."

Still another trip to Spain, that of Mr. George E. Hale, Honorary Director of the Mt. Wilson Observatory, has brought us a fine series of photographs taken with an unusual discrimination by the astronomer-physisist and put at the disposal of all through the magazine. Two are here reproduced.

THE PUENTE NUEVO SPANNING THE GORGE OF THE GUADIARO NEAR RONDA, SPAIN. THIS RIVER NEARLY SURROUNDS THE CITY.

EL DESCANSADERO, A GARDEN UNDER LATH, LA JOLLA

By NATHANIEL E. SLAYMAKER, Landscape Architect

Designed and Erected under the Supervision of Gardner and Slaymaker, Landscape Architects

THE GARDEN LATH HOUSE BUILT BY THE FORMER FIRM OF GARDNER AND SLAYMAKER FOR MISS SCRIPPS OF LA JOLLA

THE INTERIOR OF THE LATH-HOUSE, A CALIFORNIA ARCHITECTURAL GARDEN FORM

THERE could scarcely be a better example of the evolution of an architectural form from the pressure of climatic environment than this "Garden under Lath" or Lath House. The climate of southern California affords a maximum of sunshine coupled with great natural aridity, and garden lovers long ago discovered that they would be denied access to a great wealth of tender plant materials unless more than the average shade and water could be provided. The Mission Padres and the early Spanish-Californians used a sort of thatch protection and later on this gave way to a device of lath roofing raised on four posts. To get still more protection—from live stock—for instance, the sides were covered with lath also, and this chicken coop affair served for many decades although larger and larger areas were covered.

Purely practical and utilitarian, such lath houses became quite the thing offering perfect growing conditions in the climate. As garden ornaments they were sadly lacking in beauty: more so, even, than the ordinary glass greenhouse of the East, which, by the way, we could not use if we wanted to, with our hot southern sun. Little by little more attention came to be paid to the outward form of these lath gardens; attempts were made at projecting beams, cornices, and the like. Finally the opportunity came to design a Lath House, every inch of it, inside and out according to architectural and landscape principles of design and the subject of this article became a reality. It took a full year to achieve the result, which is the property of Miss Ellen B.

Scripps of La Jolla, that delightful seaside rendezvous of lovers of beauty of all kinds lying a little to the north of San Diego.

The goal was two-fold, not only that the structure should in itself be a creative work of art, but that it should suitably house growing plants, especially ferns and begonias of every kind, of which no one who has not seen their glorious flowering varieties can imagine the beauty; and also afford a place of restful repose, meditation and the social amenities of a tea room. There were thus no precedents, no prototypes, no literature on the subject. It was a pioneering job, as so many in the Far West have been. And that is why it could be unorthodox, with new ideas worked in and old ones freshly treated.

Taking the general form of a main entrance rotunda with flanking wings to right and left, the former short, the latter very long, to fit the piece of ground, there was used a novel combination of materials, namely, rough hewn redwood timbers for the main supports and unmilled redwood lath as filler, all upon a foundation of natural weathered rock, in order to get a blending of color and texture. And in addition,—also being features that no lath house had ever had before handmade tile paths, as well as disintegrated granite paths were to be used, a special water-proof lighting system for night illumination effects, was to be installed, a tiled tea room with great landscape windows facing the Pacific and adjacent stretches of coast line, and perhaps best of all, in so arid a land, a complete series of water features, embracing several pools and a cascade.

The site is a triangular plot of six acres or so some fifty feet above the sea-level and two hundred feet back from the rocky sandstone coast of the Pacific. A residence in an adapted Spanish style occupied the broad end of the plot. To get a rhythm between the domicile at one end and the lower and narrower end of the area it was felt that a rotunda having a flat dome with the two flanking wings pointing, roughly, toward the domicile would achieve this result, especially if the intervening area were carefully designed and broad, restful greenswards were made to lie between the two. The site was poor in every way at the outset. The original planting had to be removed, old walks and the contours twisted naturally in several unfortunate directions in a small area. However, by taking advantage of this last fact and putting the rotunda at one level and the shorter right or east wing slightly higher, and the longer or west wing at varying levels throughout its length, the structure was early made to conform to the ground-form, to grow out of it, and thus it took on the needed long horizontal lines. From the street above the structure thus foreshortens pleasantly against the coast and sea lines without obtruding itself into the views. Even if it did, the diaphanous texture of the lath building makes for a certain transparency.

As we said before, liberties could be taken in various ways. The two-inch lath, being very light, allowed considerable scope and offered freedom from the usual restraints of building materials. The flat dome of the rotunda, for instance, is a case in point because there is only the light lath webbing between the ribs. To be sure, these are constructed of laminated strips of redwood over iron T-beams which spring from the tops of the vertical supports and are caught in a frog at the apex. Looking up from under the dome, one seems to see a great cobweb. The wings are covered with the same light lath, supported, of course by the numerous rough-edged redwood cross-beams. All the roof lath was laid in a north and south direction to get the best out of the sunshine.

The skeleton of the structure as can now be seen, consists of the vertical timbers, eight and ten inches square, in pairs, supported by the natural rock foundation walls of varying heights on the different levels, and themselves supporting the great connecting and cross beams. Certain mouldings were used and every beam, every moulding was rough hewn. The spaces between the uprights afforded the opportunity for real lath design. The predominant measurement between the stone "wainscot" or foundation walls and the horizontals supporting the roof beams was used as a norm and divided into unequal thirds according to a Japanese scheme of proportions. A standard pattern or design was then created and adapted to the various heights and widths as called for in the various "gardens." In each instance the lower third was the heavier the middle and greater third less heavy and the top and narrowest third the lightest in texture.

Although the resultant effect or feeling inclined more to the Japanese, this panelling scheme might also be called by the French term "Treillage." The only variation from this fixed pattern was in the rotunda where the additional height, a total of 20 feet, as opposed to the 12 feet or so of the wings, allowed a more detailed pattern of circles and semi-circles, out of deference to the Mission architecture in the vicinity. This open-work frieze occupied the space between the top of the regular panelling and the spring of the dome.

Special mention ought to be made of the natural rock work, because it divides honors in quality and quantity with the rough-hewn redwood elements of the building. Many tons of natural weathered lichen-covered hardpan rock were brought down from a neighboring mountain. A crew of Mexicans was trained and inducted into the job of setting the rock in place. They developed a rare feeling for the work, laboring for many weeks "con amore." The concrete foundations supporting the frame superstructure were battered and heavy wires ten inches long were fastened into the concrete at frequent intervals. Using these walls as a core, and the wires as hooks, the natural rock was applied by these Mexicans like a veneer, using only enough cement to hold it, none being visible. Somewhat the effect of the dry stone walls of New England is thus achieved. As in the case of the redwood superstructure, even to mouldings, the exterior and interior of these rock walls are exactly alike.

As we said before, the whole problem was the unusual one of landscape design inside an architectural unit. Each different level, and there are six, is a separate garden, and each has its own ground design or pattern. The path system, though continuous throughout, was made to suit the particular garden in each case. What is not path space is garden space. All the paths, except in two gardens are tawny from the disintegrated granite used, thus harmonizing with the redwood and native rock in color and texture. The path circling the central fountain pool in the rotunda is built of hand-made rough green tile, shot with tan laid at random, except the edging. The path leading into and through the tea garden is of blue tan tile similarly laid. The blue and green tiles reflect the colors of the Pacific everywhere visible and especially through the great landscape windows of the tea garden. These three windows are enframed in double rows of blue tile. All paths, hence all flower beds are faced with native lichen-covered rock.

The difference in the level of the successive gardens is taken up by retaining walls and steps. From the rotunda to the east garden this is only eighteen inches, from the rotunda to the tea garden three and one-half feet, tea garden to pool garden two and one-half feet, pool garden to lower garden five feet. The retaining walls are of natural weathered rock, of course, and the steps of weathered granite in each instance. The steps in each case took whatever shape was necessary, twisting as they go down from rotunda to tea garden, with unequal rises, more or less, as they happened to work out, purposefully, to be sure.

It can be seen that of the two prime requisites of a Lath House, shade and water, the former was fulfilled, and now a word or two about the water. In a semi-arid land, every garden should be able to boast of both visual and aural pleasures derived from water. This Lath House has five pools or fountains, and a cascade. The rotunda has a shallow circular pool of tiny green tile which serves as a splendid foil for the brilliant gold fish. A smooth conical pedestal supports a bronze figure, "Boy with Frog," by the sculptor Berge. The east garden has a wall fountain, two dolphins emitting water into a huge conch shell. The shell is supported by a base of native rock, the interstices filled in with maidenhair fern. The path leading from the tea garden to the pool garden divides at the break in the levels and the encircling steps inclose a Spanish brown tile pool, the water issuing from a conventional fish form. This pool is the beginning of the main water feature, sixty-five feet long. It empties into a short level runnel connecting the largest pool of all in what is called the pool garden, a lily pool edged with lichen-covered granite. A simple jet d'eau in its midst and at two diagonal corners bronze frogs spout delicately. This pool is a bent rectangle to reflect the bend in the axis of the longer wing of the Lath House, which occurs at this point. From the lily pool the water empties through a runnel onto a granite cascade which divides into the longer flight of granite steps leading to the lower garden, whence the water passes again through a granite bordered runnel and empties into the sea-horse pool, named from the fountain figure used. This spouts a jet d'eau equal in height to the initial Spanish pool and the ryhthm is thus completed. Only motifs got from the sea, shells, fish, frogs, sea-horses were used as fountain accessories.

A complete electric lighting system was evolved, using lead waterproof conduits and concealing them behind the cross-beams. Great lanterns of hammered copper with orange mica in place of glass depend from the rotunda, tea garden and from garden roofs, besides the lights over all entrances; inside and out. Each separate garden can be lighted independently by flood lights concealed behind the planting and against the retaining-walls. The tracery of the lath design, picked out by the lights, against the black night outside, makes a very unusual and fascinating picture.

With such a background, by day or by night, the vines, ferns, and

(Continued on Page 29)

PORTRAIT BY FRANCES AMES OF MRS. MORRISON HOPKINS.

AN EXHIBITION OF PORTRAITS AT CASA DE MANANA BY FRANCES AMES OF NEW YORK

THE pastel portraits of Mrs. Morrison Hopkins, owner and manager of the Casa de Manana, La Jolla, and of Mrs. Julia Sawyer Trask and Edward Ewald of La Jolla were three of the interesting paintings in the art exhibition of Frances Ames, the New York artist, at the Casa de Manana, in La Jolla.

Mrs. Ames is a painter of portraits in pastel and of miniatures. Her work is outstanding for its delicacy and exquisiteness; and for her ability to paint likenesses along with remarkable color tones. She is a member of the Society of French Artists and has exhibited her work at the Salon in Paris. In France she studied at Grande Chaumier, Colorossi school and was a pupil of M. Colin and M. Cautoir. She studied under William Chase in the New York School of Art and under Bryson Burroughs at the New York Art School.

PASTEL OF MRS. JULIA TRASK BY FRANCES AMES.

Owner and manager of The Casa de Mañana Mrs. Hopkins is an enthusiastic patroness of all things artistic in La Jolla and is in a position to add much to the pleasure of that charming watering place.

A PORTRAIT OF EWALD BY FRANCIS AMES.

Edward Ewald, originator of the unique L'opera en Miniature, has for two years brought opera to La Jolla

The exhibitin at the Casa de Manana was made up of pastel portraits of a number of prominent San Diego people and miniatures of notables of the east and abroad, including portraits of the Countess of Dufferin, London; Mrs. Potter Palmer of Chicago; Mrs. George J. Gould; Mrs. Frederick Hall and baby; Mrs. H. L. Williams; Mrs. Hobart J. Park; Mrs. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw; Mrs. Victor Herbert, and Gloria Caruso, all of New York.

Mrs. Trask has given a most interesting course of lectures on "The Drama," both at Casa dé Manana and at the Coronado this winter, and Mr. Ewald has presented his fascinating "Opera in Miniature" at his studio for over two years. Many of our new people have heard of him and ask to go. He will surely become "famous" for it at some near future time. He goes to Chicago to direct and produce open air opera this summer.

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

JOHN SARGENT. HIS LIFE AND WORK

By WILLIAM HOWE DOWNES. Little Brown and Company

It would be something of a task for any biographer to make a lively story of human interest out of the life of a man, who like Sargent, was always irreproachable in his conduct, and never did anything but paint. Even at the outset of his career, there were none of the struggles with poverty, family opposition, or states of irresolution, unhappy intimacies, and none of the tragic episodes, which are usually so abundant in the lives of famous artists. Early in his twenties he painted the first picture of his to be hung in the Salon, and it was bought at once by an American; immediately afterward he made distinctive portraits of four members of one family and despite the darts of certain hostile critics, nearly as futile as the stings of bees attacking window panes, there followed soon, recognition, reputation and commissions. Talent, genius perhaps, wisdom, industry, and well-balanced traits of character did the rest.

And so in the case of Sargent, very obviously one who was born with a silver spoon in his mouth, as the saying goes, his biographer has written not so much about his personality, as his artistic triumphs and achievements. This role of critical appreciation and interpretation, is indeed a fitting one for Mr. Downes, since for many years he was the art critic on the Boston Transcript, therefore we find his discussion of the painter's work most instructive, and his opinions worthy of respect and consideration; especially his forecast of Sargent's place in the world of art, "below the first rate men, such as Velasquez, Hals, Holbein, Titian and Rembrandt, and certainly rather higher up than the majority of the British painters of the eighteenth century."

Mr. Downes knew Sargent intimately and was fortunate enough in 1924 to obtain the painter's verification of most of the material in this volume, so that it will become an authoritative work to all future biographers. Another life is now in preparation by Mr. Evan Charteris, Q. C., which on its completion should be interesting to compare with the life by Mr. Downes.

There are some valuable features connected with this biography, all of which represent the expenditure of intelligence and painstaking on the part of its author. The illustrations are many and furnish illuminating examples of Sargent's most famous pictures, portraits, figures and landscapes. Fully half of the volume is devoted to a pretty comprehensive list of the pictures of every kind, which he ever did, with information briefly given, regarding most of them. For these reasons, as well as for its quality, the work will prove most welcome to artists, and others interested in artistic achievement of the present period.

FROM A BLACK AND WHITE BY SARGENT BY COURTESY OF MRS. C. W. CATE, CARPINTERIA, CALIFORNIA.

FERNANDE

By W. B. MAXWELL. Dodd Mead and Company

These are the days when novelists see so much in life, that they are driven to esoteric expression of it, and a public eager to know what they see, buckles down and acquires a taste for that kind of writing. But no cultivated taste is at all essential for understanding what Mr. Maxwell sees in life, because he tells us about it in a manner of the most translucent clarity, giving us the impression of looking through an open window at scenes in life, with nothing to obstruct our vision, but the air we breathe.

This latest novel of his, "Fernande," contains an objective description of a woman, who like Circe of old, leads her victims, subtly, but inevitably down the path to worldly ruin; and also a study of the youthful hero, a more subjective character, perhaps a shade less successful in its treatment. When once he creates these characters, in this story of present day Bohemia in London, the author hands them over promptly and unceremoniously into the control of fate—the kind of fate many readers recognize at once and shudder at; the kind the Greeks knew about and alluded to, when they said, "Whom the Gods would destroy, they first make mad"; the kind of fate Flaubert understood, when he washed his hands of Madam Bovary. Pitiless, merciless, exacting, inexorable, horrid old Fate!

But Mr. Maxwell apparently has little confidence in fate. None of us have, for that matter. But we have no alternative: Mr. Maxwell, however had, and he used it. He snatched away his hero precipitously although dexterously, from the jaws of impending doom, and just in time at that. And so that nice conscientious, generous, chivalrous young man, marries the girl of her choice, and as we leave him in this realm of unexpected bliss, we venture to hope, (now that both Mr. Maxwell and fate are done with him,) that that backbone of his may stiffen up a bit. But after all, such is life; some very estimable people, have backbones made of gelatine.

THE HEART OF ARYAVARTA

By the EARL OF RONALDSHAY. Houghton Mifflin Company

This is a very scholarly book, written by a very scholarly man, and probably to be comprehended only by very scholarly people. Still Mr. Average Reader, if patient and persistent, and keen about knowing a thing or two regarding the unrest in India, may extract some information thereupon from the pages of this book. It appears that after a trial of one hundred and fifty years of western education, the intelligentsia of the Hindu middle class have concluded that such training has fostered a materialism, destructive of the old Indian spiritual ideals. In order for the country to return to that pristine condition of holiness, and lofty plane of living, these people consider it absolutely essential to rid India of England, bag and baggage, and regard as justifiable any means whatever, which tend to aid in that expulsion. The writer, formerly an able and just administrator of affairs in Bengal, a true Britisher to the core, with unquestioning belief in the "white man's burden," presents the revolutionary side of the case to show its perfidy and futility, dwelling with sorrowful reproach on the method of fanning the flames of revolt by the use of the old religious tenets. In fact it might seem as if the Hindus were perfectly willing and even eager to bite the hand that has fed them.

Somehow as a result of reading this book, the reader finds himself hoisted to a position on the fence. Doubtless these people are very, very wrong, but nevertheless they are human. And even in the Earl of Ronaldshay's country, there is a saying "all is fair in love and war." Moreover, what citizen of the United States can consider unmoved the struggle of a people for self government, however misplaced and impractical any sympathy with the cause may be? Probably most of us have perplexing problems to settle right at home without bothering over England's duty regarding India; still this question happens to be one of the burning issues of this age.

TEMPLE BELLS AND SILVER SAILS

By ELIZABETH C. ENDERS. D. Appleton and Company

Travelers returned from China write innumerable books to tell us how picturesque that country is, and we believe them more or less, depending on how forcible they are. But to the readers of the volume with this lyrical title, "Temple Bells and Silver Sails," China becomes at once an entrancing experience, a land of dusky, tawny, gleaming tints, glimpsed through a veil of seductive glamour. The book is thus effective, because Mrs. Enders is a poet, who has written all unconsciously a poem. Analyzing her style in order to uncover the secret of her witchery, is like pulling the petals off a lily to find out why it smells so sweet; still there must be ever present in the reader's mind an awareness of the limpid lilting movement of a prose that forms a proper setting for onamatopoetic words of melody and charm.

Here is indeed a wondrous China, a picture as well as a poem. Even bits of tragedy and squalor have color and poignant significance, such as appears for instance, in those slum paintings which George Bellows has made from time to time. Perhaps the finest part of the book is the description of a trip, taken in the Robert Dollar II far into the wild interior of the country, up the Yangtze River, which winds its way among the beetling gorges, towering upward to tremendous heights. It is an exciting tale, since bandits were constantly threatening, and finally attacked, while shortly afterward, this staunch and luxurious boat was wrecked upon the treacherous rocks, lying here and there just beneath the surface of the water. Whereupon our lady chronicler, whom by now we have come to regard as a graceful and fragile figure, a damsel out of a Pre-Raphaelite painting, got out and swam lustily and vigorously for her life, in the athletic fashion most approved for the modern female, and lived, thank Heaven, to tell us all about it in her smoothly slipping rippling prose.

WITHIN GARDEN GATES.

ERVANNA BOWEN BISSELL
EDITOR, GARDEN PAGES

Vancouver from the North,
Cabrillo from the South,
Searched her coasts to find a mouth
To unite the East and West, faring forth;
And knew not that their quest
Was ended on this shore;
That here forevermore
Pine and olive, and heather and rose,
Arid desert, and mountain snows,
Make a land of all lands the best—
California, Queen of the West.

—Caroline Hazard

THE Garden Club of America will hold its thirteenth Annual meeting in Santa Barbara from April 12 to 16.. The delegates arrive by special train, spending Saturday and Sunday in Pasadena. On Monday evening they come to be the guests of the Garden Club of Santa Barbara and Montecito.

Aside from the annual meeting which is to be held at the Montecito Country Club, the days are to be spent out of doors. The visitors will lunch in gardens, have tea under the trees and always and everywhere be asked to look at the flora which can be grown under our peculiar climatic conditions.

The court at Miraflores, the home of Mrs. John Percival Jefferson. In this out-of-door room —roofed by blue sky— one sits to enjoy the view of mountains and sea. It is always summer here. The flowers bloom, the fountain plays and MacMonnies' Bacchante dances through the sunny hours.

The Rose-garden of Mrs. De Witt Parshall where tall Palms decorate the background. Underneath them rise Foxglove spires and blue Delphiniums. Climbing Roses and standards give color and fragrance. Alas, the dial's finger counts the hours one spends in this delightful garden!

Mrs. Oakleigh Thorne's winter home is Las Tejas—a series of little gardens forming a delightful whole. The Spanish garden, gay with tiles in walls and floors, is set among Live Oaks. The boyish figure in the center seems a veritable Peter Pan lost in thought. One waits, expectantly, to see him grasp a swaying branch and disappear into the tree-tops.

Below—
Mrs. George Choate Kendall has kept her garden, Illahee, true to its Indian name. Trails wind under Live Oaks and native shrubs clothe the banks—the Lemonade Berry and the blue Ceanothus. Rocky pools bordered by ferns and aquatic plants give a rustic aspect to a garden carefully kept in tune with Nature.

IN THE GARDEN. SOLANA. THE HOME OF MR. AND MRS. FREDERICK FORREST PEABODY, SANTA BARBARA. PHOTOGRAPH BY COLLINGE

Solana is a house set on a hill and the gardens lie along the slope in the sun.

On this shady seat one may sit to think, to dream, to watch the birds bathe and drink; and to remember that the owners, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Forrest Peabody have planted and watered much of our up-springing civic life. "Here's rosemary!"

The forecourt at El Eliseo — the winter home of Mrs. Edward Lowe. The house looks toward the Palm terrace where choice exotics grow. The formal garden faces the sea.

Beyond it lies a grassy canyon where wildflowers bloom and finches sing in the Sycamores.

SOUTHLAND

Pacific Problems

SUNDAY evening at The Valley Hunt Club after-supper program, the speaker of the evening was Mr. Thomas G. Patten. Introduced by the president of the club, Mr. J. C. Sloane as one who has studied the deeper currents of history, Mr. Patten gave his intensely interested audience a swift survey of the causes which developed Russia from a Mongol race into one of European civilization.

Convincingly the speaker proved his thesis: it is through Russia that the Orient has touched the Occident most vitally and there the old problem which separated the Greek Christian from the Holy Roman Empire must be worked out by moderns.

Thrown back time after time upon herself by physical defeat at the hands of Latin and Anglo-Saxon races, as in the last war through Prussia, the Tartan race still seeks an outlet to warm waters of the Pacific. Therefore the problem of greeting the Orient with modern economics and Christian spirit has become ours of California. Russia is behind China and Japan pushing them toward America.

Referring to a recent article by Judge Gary on business ethics, Mr. Patton showed that war has defeated itself in a civilization which demands that economically the victorious must resuscitate the vanquished or go down with them to defeat. So dependent has this little world become on its own unity of purpose that war between races has become a common enemy. The non-white races have now thrown off the dominating rule of the white race: this was the immediate message of the evening. They stand on their own feet, looking at us with the cruelty of the Cossack and the efficient training of the Prussian, combined with the culture of ages in old China and the commercial instinct of the Japanese.

Across the broad Pacific they look at us out of narrowed eyes. In their hands are weapons of the past and those of the present, and above them floats the banner of the Greek Christian Church! Shall we greet them as brothers or as enemies?

He Is Risen

ON MOUNT RUBIDOUX, NEAR RIVERSIDE, CALIFORNIA, CROWDS DESCENDING AFTER EASTER SUNRISE SERVICES

The Blossom Festival

EVER since the world began, the human race has greeted with some sort of festival, the coming of the Spring. With many races it has been a religious festival which gave outlet to the spirit of joyous thanksgiving for the new life which wells up in the earth each year, stirring even the coldest heart. The Pagan felt it, and the Christian has taken possession of it as of God.

On every little hill that mounts beside a little settlement or suburb in the Southland there has been placed a cross, symbol of Christian sacrifice of self for others; and on ever Easter morning throngs from town and city gather below the Cross to worship and adore, to pray or sing or simply gaze upon the Easter sunrise as a symbol of new faith, new life and new approach to God. "He is Risen" greets each heart in some form of expression, and since He arose, we too, may be assured that we shall rise from earth to higher spheres of joy and usefulness.

In the north the Spring Festival has taken the form of a gathering to see the flowering trees of Santa Clara Valley overflow like billowing mist across the fertile valley and to sing or to play in joyous phrase as a great multitude rejoicing that again the Spring is here. There is great beauty in the massing of deciduous fruit trees all in bloom at one time and this Festival waits always the day when Beauty is paramount—and yet, no less is reverence and prayer and praise established as in the hearts of those who gather there. The founder of the festival, the Rev. "Sunshine" Smith was deeply devout in his ideals, and still believed that all the joy and gladness of this feast of beauty should be the part of Christian faith and ritual.

The poetry of any section expresses the deeper feelings of its people best; and here, in the heart of California her joy of life mingled with religious and spiritual devotion is found in the verse of its native poet.

The old ideas of "pagan joy" and "Christian dolefulness" have disappeared in California and in their stead has come the joyous outpouring of the heart in a united festival of Easter and the Spring.

At Saratoga where the Blossom Festival of California was held March 27 and 28th the wild flowers had their part as well as the flowering trees. Word comes to one who could not be there that the native blossoms Californians all love so dearly had the honor that should always be their due:

In the Hillside Clubhouse the Garden Club held a wild flower exhibition. Mrs. Judge Wallace brought from El Retiro, the memorial cottage and summer home of Clarence Thomas Urmy in Wildwood nearby, two baskets of blossoms from the poet's wild flower garden, which she has kept green and blossoming in his memory. We give below from the flowers of his unpublished book of poetry, extracts of poems which identify the spring and Easter time. M. U. S.

One Spring More

So many springs have come and fled,
So many happy springs are dead;
But lo, through winter's open door
Comes Flora, bringing one spring more!

* * * *

CLARENCE URMY.

Easter Flowers

The roses were the first to hear—
The roses trellised to the tomb;
Bring roses—hide the marks of spear
And nails that sealed His wretched doom;
The lilies were the first to see—
The lilies on that Easter morn;
Bring lilies—crowned with blossoms be
The Head once crowned with cruel thorn.

* * * *

The roses were the first to hear,
The lilies were the first to see—
Bring fragrant flowers from far and near
To grace the Easter jubilee;
"Rabboni!" be on every tongue,
And every soul the rapture share
Of Mary, as she kneels among
The roses and the lilies fair!

CLARENCE URMY.

Saratoga, California. July 10, 1858—June 2, 1923.

OPINION

The Soldier's Garden

April 4, 1917

Winds swing the gate on its half-broken hinges
Over a pathway now matted with weeds.
Stately box borders have wild-carrot fringes,
Mullein and plantain from gypsy-sown seeds.

Roses and ivy have hidden the dial,
Woodbine has covered the seat's ancient stone,
And standing between them, on guard the while,
A sentinel hollyhock watches alone.

Bumblebees boom where the bergamot blazes;
Flycatchers strike sailing gnats in the air;
Butterflies wigwag from white-petaled daisies;
Spiders entangle their webs for a snare:

War!—which is mimic and waged behind hedges
With no one to battle the blighting foe!
The garden's owner—beside a stream's sedges—
Went out to the Fields where the asphodels blow!

Ervanna Bowen Bissell.

A PEACEFUL PATH UNDER GRAY OLIVE BRANCHES

Cuesta Linda
the Beautiful Hillside garden of

Mrs. E. Palmer Gavit
Montecito
California

THE FLINTRIDGE RIDING CLUB WILL AGAIN SPONSOR AN AMATEUR HORSE SHOW IN MAY. AND AGAIN THE PROCEEDS WILL GO TO THE CHILDREN'S CONVALESCENT LEAGUE. WHICH OPENED A HOME IN LOS ANGELES LAST YEAR. THE OBJECT OF THE HOME IS TO PROVIDE PROPER CARE FOR CHILDREN JUST RELEASED FROM HOSPITALS AND TO SEE THAT THEY HAVE ADEQUATE ATTENTION

TRAVESTIES AND GOSSIP OF A GREEN ROOM

By ELLEN LEECH

AWAY back in the earliest days of theater going, when the spelling was so delightfuly vague, and so intrigues the imagination of today, may be found a description of a theater in which a section of it is referred to as a "tireynge-howse or green room," proving that beyond a doubt we are following an ancient and time honored custom in holding to and emphasizing this section of our modern theaters.

Of course when the primitive dramas or plays were produced they were not assigned a building at all but were given more often than not in the courtyard of an Inn, whence the retiring room of the actors was most likely to be the green sward surrounding the hostelry. Whether or not this influence of coloring was responsible the fact remains that the premiere green rooms mentioned are alluded to as deriving their names from the tinting of the walls. And we find the personality of these rooms has persisted and the elusive quality of their allure for the public has never waned since the first theater especially constructed for dramatic performances was built in London in 1576 by the actor, James Burbrage.

Just how much precedent there may be for dining in the green room is a little vague, but tea, and we may guess, slightly more powerful cups were often passed, but whatever may have been the rule in the green rooms the fact that the audiences regaled themselves with food all down through the ages is an established fact. In case they did not come well supplied with nourishment it was sold them by vendors catering to all kinds of appetites. While this is no longer prevalent with us in a, strictly speaking, theater it is the very life breath, and sustenance of all roof gardens, which may be merely a reversion to the fact that it was in the gallery nearest the roof that eating in our theaters persisted the longest, though generally confined to the consumption of peanuts, the gallery becoming entitled thereby, and probably earning the epithet still, though, due to modern progress, the succulent nuts have shed their shells and now may be secured in smaller and less obtrusive quantities. And many of us on a visit to an Oriental theater seem to exist merely as a small island entirely surrounded by a sea of queer exotic delicacies, largely dominated by dried fish.

It matters very little however about the sanction of usage in this matter of dining as the custom adopted by the Pasadena Players of serving a cast dinner in the green room between one afternoon and evening performance of each production has proved such a delightful one. In the less affluent days, when the playhouse functioned less grandly on Fair Oaks avenue, the cast dinners were a part of the social life of the actors but they were given either in private homes, clubs, or occasionally the hotels but in planning the new theater, where every detail is worked out to such perfection, the green room has become a charming salon, a friendly pleasant place where the cast may gossip or criticise, study or relax, as time permits, and where after every performance friends may gather for a word of congratulation,—or just words! Then the room is so charmingly adapted to the service of a dinner to quite a party of people as the two refectory tables, always a part of the furniture of the room may be utilized as tables of honor, with a long central section set up for the occasion. The dinner given in the midst of the season of repertoire last month was especially memorable as the guests of honor were Edith Lynne Matthison, Charles Rann Kennedy, and Edith Gage, who so delighted the community by their productions, "The Admiral" and "The Chastening," and who after dinner thrilled their auditors by a five minute travesty on the Russian tragedy of today. Mr. Kennedy later voiced his admiration of the work done here and of the encouragement offered to the future of the drama by such earnest and sincere work as Pasadena shows in our Community theater.

The season of repertoire which this dinner punctuated was intended, and provided, for a catholicity of tastes. From a program offering March Hares, Hedda Gabler, The Two Virtues, and Outward Bound, a choice could be made for every mood and all temperaments should have been satisfied. The principals seemed particularly well cast in these productions; Lenore Shanewise's interpretation of Hedda Gabler was unusually strong, but then the subtilities of her Mrs. Midget were most pleasing. Maurice Wells may not by nature be so temperamental as Geoffrey of the March Hares family but even so we might forgive him—that is, we couldn't resist his charm. Mrs. Palmer is so delightful in everything it is hard to differentiate.

In all this gossip to and fro, the question of the ultimate supremacy of the theater, it might be well to remember the very old proverb which tells us "It is not the weathercock that changes, it is the wind," and drama we believe to be eternal. We are always glad to find encouraging statements in the press, to hear them from lecture platforms, and to seem to gather them from the air around us, regarding the growth and progress of the drama within the past year or so, but coming right down to the voice of the masses nothing more to the point has been contributed than the opinion voiced by a fellow trolley traveler who, having corralled an auditor in a seatmate and compelled an audience by sheer vocal power, said among many things that the movies might be all right, though paid much too much but as for him he was getting tired of pictures he liked "to hear 'em say something sometimes, if it ain't only to swear,"—probably still holding fond recollections of "What Price Glory," and we echo more power to his voice, may his tribe increase and grow in appreciation.

THE COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE, PASADENA, IS NOT ONLY THE DRAMATIC CENTER BUT IS A POINT OF CONTACT FOR MANY VARIED INTERESTS,

SPORTS—POLO TOURNAMENTS; CHANCEY GOLF

THE POLO FIELD AT SANTA BARBARA JUST AS THE ACTION STARTS. THE SANTA BARBARA TEAM HAS BEEN PLAYING REMARKABLE POLO THIS SEASON, AND LAST MONTH WON THE PACIFIC COAST OPEN CHAMPIONSHIP, WHICH CARRIES THE RIGHT TO COMPETE IN THE NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP MATCH AT MEADOW-BROOK IN SEPTEMBER

THE MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB POLO FIELDS WERE THE CENTER OF INTEREST DURING THE TOURNAMENT THE LAST HALF OF MARCH WHEN TEAMS REPRESENTING DEL MONTE, SANTA BARBARA, FIRST CAVALRY DIVISION FROM FT. BLISS, ELEVENTH CAVALRY FROM MONTEREY, TWO TEAMS FROM SAN MATEO, AND TWO TEAMS FROM MIDWICK ASSURED A GAME PRACTICALLY EVERY DAY

MRS. DOROTHY HILL OF ST. PAUL, AND WILLIAM H. KIDSTON OF CHICAGO, DISCUSSING THE MERITS OF THE ANNANDALE COURSE, WHICH WITH ITS ADDED ACRES OFFERS GREATER ADVANTAGES NOW THAN EVER BEFORE

A WINNING FOURSOME AT THE HUNTINGTON HOTEL, PASADENA: HENRY NEWBY, E. H. HICKS, OF CHICAGO, G. L. CURTISS, CLINTON, IOWA, AND F. H. BARTLETT, CHICAGO. IT MAY BE POSSIBLE THAT MR. BARTLETT IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THE OPENING OF FREE PUBLIC GOLF SCHOOLS BY COOK COUNTY, MODELED FROM THE REGULAR SCHOOL SYSTEM. WHILE THE OPPORTUNITY TO WIN OR LOSE A $25,000 MATCH MAY NOT OCCUR OFTEN, THE CHANCE MAKES THE COURSE WORTH WHILE

POLO COMBINES TWO INTERESTS TO A GALLERY OF FANS—THRILLED SPECTATORS IS A MORE DIGNIFIED APPELATION—THE MAN AND THE HORSE, THEIR CLOSE RELATIONSHIP, AND THE EVIDENT ZEST WITH WHICH THE PONIES ENTER THE MELEE, AND THEIR FRANTIC EFFORTS TO OBEY THE REPEATED INJUNCTION, "RIDE HIM OFF!"

All Polo Photographs by Chateau Art Studios.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A. MONTHLY BULLETIN

OFFICERS
David J. Witmer, President
C. E. Noerenberg, Vice President
Edgar H. Cline, Secretary
Winchton L. Risley, Treasurer

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH,
Editor

DIRECTORS
H. C. Chambers
Donald Parkinson
Alfred W. Rea

PLAGIARISM AS A FINE ART

Five nationally known architects were asked to discuss precedent as applied to architectural design. The first installment of one of these addresses was printed here last month. We now print the concluding portion of the address which was given by William A. Boring, head of the School of Architecture at Columbia University. Next month we will print the address of Walter R. B. Wilcox who is now head of the Department of Architecture at the University of Oregon. Reprinted from the proceedings of the 1924 convention of the American Institute of Architects.

"WHAT IS PRECEDENT DOING TO AMERICAN ARCHITECTURE?" CONCLUSION OF ADDRESS BY WILLIAM A. BORING

The big tonnage of building in America is not vitalized by architectural quality. It will be so vitalized only when judicious use of precedent is more widely accepted by the intelligent practitioner. He must build for convenience, he must build for safety, and his impulse is to build as beautifully as his quota of genius makes possible, but he will never create beauty by logical deduction alone, nor ever without precedent, and of these two sources of inspiration he will be much happier to see in the publications his creations from the latter than from the former.

Had the elevator been known in Italy in the year 1500 the tall commercial structure would not now be a difficult structure to make beautiful.

Every tried experiment has so far failed to produce in a tall shaft crowded with uniform windows and perched on a plate glass base, a type of beauty we can safely leave to the future generations as precedent. It is, however, a problem which can be solved; a very interesting type it is, distinctly American, and in it are the elements of a strikingly beautiful expression of architecture.

The new Shelton Hotel in New York suggests in a rather rugged way a spirit of design which is most inspiring, and it is one of many recent buildings which lead us to expect beauty in the skyscraper.

We expect the architect to begin his design by logically determining the facts, functions and general disposition of parts; but he should soon envelope these great hard facts in a web of design which he spins over them, concealing everything except the spirit of the design. When the facts are logically disposed we forget them, for in contemplating the design we see only the beauty of the expression, if beauty exists.

If the facts are badly composed we feel the trouble in the design, for they cannot be concealed.

What precedent cannot do is to guide us in those problems for which we have no prototype. We must, when we meet such situations be guided by good taste and logic. All that precedent can then do is to recall to us beauty of form and composition. We must work out our own salvation in the tall office building, the sky scraping hotel, the many storied apartment house, the subway station, and the traffic tower. Our brave attempts to design the ideal office building conclusively proves the difficulty of designing a beautiful, new, and extraordinary thing without the guidance of precedent.

It is impossible for anyone to design an important building free from the influence of precedent. One always does use precedent consciously or unconsciously, and cannot free his mind from the impression made by buildings of which the image lingers in his memory. If Letarouilly had published a twelve story palace with each floor the same in plan and height of ceiling alike, a water tank and elevator shaft on top, and with dignity and charm of a Bramante masterpiece, and paying a ten per cent rate on the investment above all charges, including amortization and brokers' fees, medals for the best apartment house designs would have the value of the German mark. If Lepautre had thought of it he could easily have dashed off a traffic tower which would guide us to a complete solution of the traffic problem.

GARDEN OF VILLA FALCONIERI. FROM A PHOTOGRAPH IN THE CLARK-PAYNE GARDEN STUDIES.

There are building problems arising from our modern ways of life for which we find no precedent. When such a problem arises we are cast away in the fog of uncertainty. We go on groping for a precedent. Fog horns all about us are resounding with warnings to be modern, to let construction show us the way, to avoid the dead classic. Then we resolve to go on dead reckoning; we know about mass, about line, about proportion, and classic detail. With these as guides we tackle the design. It is not easy to work. Study goes on over study until the entire universe of form has been tried.

We are convinced that this probably would have discouraged even Baldissari Perruzzi when all of a sudden we see a light. We have an idea! A brand new idea! We make a telling sketch of it and call our partner to admire. He looks it over, lights a cigarette, and says, "Well, it might do, but I never did care particularly for the things in that book; why don't you look in later Renaissance in England?"

But is there not danger in relying too much for inspiration on what has been done in the good old days when everything had charm? Do we show the right spirit when we are satisfied to follow precedent which easily fills the needs instead of searching more earnestly for a design to meet each particular problem? ** ** ** **

Precedent is doing good to American architecture when it brings us back to good taste after the aberrations of those newly discovered American styles which bob up now and then. The Lincoln Memorial, the Boston Public Library, the University of Virginia, and the New York City Hall, while original in design, are founded on the truths laid down in precedent.

Precedent is changing the redwood jig-saw house of California into that semblance of solidity seen in the masonry construction of Italy, Spain and Mexico, and the plan into a logical and luxurious arrangement with court, arcade, and balcony, delightfully picturesque and rambling; the kind of villas with stucco walls and tile roofs we see on the hillsides of Italy.

Precedent is guiding the design of luxurious midwestern houses toward conservative originality which has marked character and beauty, and the broad flat wooded areas available in that fertile country are converted into landscape gardens of a distinct and handsome type. The precedents inherited in the houses built by our great grandfathers are leading us back to intelligent disposing of masses, purity of detail and good taste in furnishing the modest dwelling. The public is in sympathy with the work based on precedent. Good architecture is demanded and appreciated more and more each year. There was never in the history of the world such activity in building as there is now in America, and there was never before such a high average of useful, comfortable and agreeable buildings as we now inhabit. Our mechanics enjoy comforts denied the king of England when the precedents of our popular domestic homes were in the making.

With all the intelligent effort directed toward better architecture, and the vast experimental laboratory the building industry affords, it seems reasonable to expect and cherish the hope that some day, before the coal beds are exhausted and the sun spots turn off the light, the effect of precedent may lose its potency for our guidance, because we shall have attained the goal toward which all eyes are turned, a beautiful logical, modern American style of architecture.

APATHY WINS AGAIN

The splendid scheme for our Civic Center, designed by the Allied Architects' Association, is never to be realized. Our City Council headed by the Mayor says so, in spite of advice to the contrary by every authority on traffic and city plan in the United States. The new City Hall is being placed practically in the center of the proposed central esplanade of the Allied scheme which will block forever the realization of any really great solution for this our greatest civic project. Seventeen percent of the voters in Los Angeles elected the Mayor and Council.

The foundations will be set and the steel frame designed for the proposed great tower of the City Hall, at an added cost of thousands of dollars to support the additional weight of the tower. The City Council has no legal right to authorize this expenditure until such time as the charter provision limiting the height of buildings is set aside by vote of the people. It is doubtful as to whether the people will vote to allow the Council to be the first to break its own charter. If the Council, by a negative vote at the next election is not allowed to build the tower to the additional height, the steel and the foundations built in to support it will be like the miser's buried treasure: thousands of dollars where no one can use it. The architects will also be paid an additional fee for redesigning that portion of the building effected by the elimination of the tower. Worse than all this is the building of the City Hall without the adoption of a Civic Center plan.

EXCERPT FROM THE CIRCULAR OF ADVICE RELATIVE TO THE PRACTICE OF ARCHITECTURE, ISSUED BY THE A. I. A.

The American Institute of Architects seeking to maintain a high standard of practice and conduct on the part of its members as a safeguard of the important financial, technical, and aesthetic interests entrusted to them, offers the following advice relative to professional practice:

The profession of architecture calls for men of the highest integrity, business capacity, and artistic ability. The architect is entrusted with financial undertakings in which his honesty of purpose must be above suspicion; he acts as professional advisor to his client and his advice must be absolutely disinterested; he is charged with the exercise of judicial functions as between client and contractor and must act with entire impartiality; he has moral responsibilities to his professional associates and subordinates; finally, he is engaged in a profession which carries with it grave responsibilities to the public. These duties and responsibilities cannot be properly discharged unless his motives, conduct, and abilities are such as to command respect and confidence.

No set of rules can be framed which will particularize all the duties of the architect in his various relations to his client, to contractors, to his professional brethren, and to the public.

THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

MONTHLY BULLETIN

OFFICERS

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH, PRESIDENT
CLIFFORD A. TRUESDELL, VICE PRESIDENT
C. R. JOHNSON, SECRETARY
PAUL R. WILLIAMS, TREASURER

DIRECTORS

JULIAN GARNSEY, DIRECTOR
J. E. STANTON, DIRECTOR
H. C. CHAMBERS, DIRECTOR

WE'VE FOUND A HOME AT LAST

The other day George Hales of John Parkinson's office called us on the phone and let us know that both members of the w. k. firm of Gardner-Payne and Company were bursting for a chance to house the Club and the Atelier on the second story of their building at Seventh and Union. The next morning the president of the Club "stopped by" to look the place over and met Mr. Gardner. Hales didn't stretch the point much. They really want us to come. Gardner is an old Philadelphia T Square Club and Class "A" Beaux-Arts man and knows the atmosphere we want. He says we can do anything to the place but burn it down. So we are going to sign a lease jointly with the Atelier and hope to have our April meeting there as a house warming.

There will be a large atelier, a smaller room or rooms for life class and etching class, a library, a lounging room. The Atelier men are taking on the burden of moving our property to the new location and will fix things up for us. We hope that many of the club members will contribute sketches or other interesting material to help produce the above mentioned atmosphere.

The auto parking problem will be easy at this location and its accessibility from down town and from Hollywood by the Sunset bus on Eighth Street will commend it to many fellows. Saturday afternoon, March 20, the first Beaux-Arts esquisse was taken in the new quarters. Come in and look us over.

SKETCHING AND LIFE CLASSES

The Club Secretary is now ready to register the names of Club members who are seeking instruction in sketching or life drawing. The plan is to have classes which will meet one or two evenings a week at the new club quarters. The fee will be from fifty cents to a dollar depending on the number registered. Arthur Millier has also indicated his willingness to instruct a class in etching if enough men are interested. Send in your name to C. R. Johnson at 420 So. Spring.

NEW MEMBERS

The following new members have been taken into the Club:

Hott Lindsley, Herbert C. Anset, Harvey B. Smith, Arthur T. Raitt, Marc N. Goodnow, Harold Abrams, M. McClary, Wade B. Rubottom, Albert R. Ritter, J. Raymond Wyatt, H. I. Moses.

If you are employed in an office where there are men who are not members won't you appoint yourself a one-man membership committee to gather them in? Your Executive Committee is spending a lot of time and effort to make the club more live and interesting than ever before. The minimum budget for the year is between $750.00 and $800.00. With the reduction in club dues now in force this means that there must be a healthy growth in the club if we are to be a solvent institution at the end of the year. It can easily be done if every fellow who believes Los Angeles should have the best architectural club in the country, will help to make it so. Mark you, we didn't say the "largest club," we said the best club.

COURT OF THE BOURNE HOUSE. WALLACE NEFF, ARCH., KATHERINE BASHFORD, LANDSCAPE ARCH.

ARCHITECTURAL EXHIBIT

During the month of April, date to be announced later, there will be held at Barker Brothers galleries, an architectural exhibit of domestic architecture. If present plans go through the hanging will be in charge of the exhibition committee of the Southern California Chapter of the A.I.A. Club members will be asked to submit material so look around and see what you can submit.

After the Barker Brothers exhibit the Chapter is to hold its Annual exhibit at the Museum at Exposition Park. It is the intention of the committee to assign a room in the exhibit to the Architectural Club. The work submitted for the Club's portion in the exhibit need not conform to the uniform requirements asked by the Chapter, but can be photographs, sketches, models, or renderings.

Both of the above exhibits are a big opportunity for the Club and we must "come thru" in good style, for it will be the first time we have been in the public eye for several years. More of this next month.

THE DAVIS TRAVELING SCHOLARSHIP

The first group of men to register for the Davis Scholarship Competition have within the last week turned in their names. The Architectural Club is well represented in the group, which is composed of some of the men who have already won their share of laurels in local and national competitions. The problem will be a subject in domestic architecture the exact nature of which will be announced later. The Scholarship was organized for the purpose of advancing the domestic architecture of Southern California. The Scholarship is a fitting memorial to the distinguished father of a distinguished family. We hope to be able to publish more fully the program under which the Competitions are to be established. The Educational Committee of the Southern California Chapter A. I. A. is conducting the competition for the donors.

There are sixteen names on the list of those who are to compete for the one thousand dollar prize this year. They are as follows:

Lionel Banks, Norman Low, Lowell W. Pidgeon, Van Buren Livingston, William Lundeberg, Randall Duell, Francis Parsons, F. E. Morehead, Cecil Strawn, Richard King, Noble McIlvaine, Johnson Hughes, Ralph High, Frank von Rehder, F. W. Gloege, R. H. Crawford.

A stipulation of the prize is that the money shall be spent in travel abroad studying more particularly the domestic architecture of the countries visited. The winner will be required to send back sketches and measured drawings of his work. It is hoped that the time is not far distant when there will be several such scholarships which will afford an opportunity for the talent among our young designers to develop.

"BLAH RELIEF"

Dear Editor:

Like the estimable pen pusher who wrote in to you last month about the Civic Center Plan, I, too, am an humble draftsman. I am also a member of a struggling Architectural Club. At least it seems to be doing some lusty struggling right now. There was a time there for a while when I thought the old thing had gone fluey, but the new officers have not only announced some policies, but are starting to carry them out. I attended the first meeting under the new president. There were about sixty fellows there. We had some entertainment, a delicious Dutch supper (I learned afterwards that the cook was born in the Fiji Islands), and a fine talk by Julian Garnsey. It was the most enjoyable evening I've had at a Club meeting for six months. I came to the meeting from a sense of duty to the Club, but if all the meetings are going to be like that one, I'll be there every time, and I'm going to bring my gang.

You fellows who have lost interest can take courage from my experience and come, too, and do your bit to get things to going.

Excuse me, Mr. Editor, I got excited up there in that last sentence and forgot I was writing this letter to you and not to that bunch of back-sliding pirates who ought to turn out to Club meetings.

Sincerely, C. W. S.

Are You Interested in Birds?

If so you will receive a beautiful colored picture of a California bird if you will send your name and address to

SOUTH MOULTON COMPANY
301 Bank of Italy Building
Los Angeles, California

FOR SALE

In Montecito, Santa Barbara's exclusive suburb, a charming Norman-French cottage of eight rooms and entrance hall (three master bedrooms, two baths; two maids' rooms and bath), double garage; unit system of heating. Convenient to Miramar Hotel and bathing beach and to private school. Lot 100x150 feet, attractively planted. More ground available if desired. For further information address owner, Miss C. M. Taber, 1519 Bath Street, Santa Barbara, California.

DANA BARTLETT
PAINTINGS OF CALIFORNIA
STUDIO GALLERY, 101 S. VIRGIL AVE.,
DREXEL 5552 LOS ANGELES

El Paseo Patio

Lunch Out of Doors or Dine
at
"EL PASEO"
23 E. de la Guerra St.
Santa Barbara

DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS
SANTA BARBARA

THE LOVELY SHOPPING STREET IN SPAIN

A delightful shop in an old Spanish Mansion

Hand Made—Rush Seated Mexican Chairs, $3 to $10

Hand Loomed India Wool Druggets

Write for Booklets

ROBERT L. LEWIS
Studio 5 at 11 E. de la Guerra St.
Santa Barbara, Calif.

EL PASEO SERENADERS
PLAY
OLD TIME MELODIES AND SONGS
DURING DINNER
AT
EL PASEO

For Special Engagements—12½ W. Corrillo
Loring Andrews—E. C. Peters—Vences Los Kedrina

MARINA FLINT
Studio 114 on Tea Room Balcony
Lamp Shades
Kimonos and Chinese Negligees
Made to Order

EL PASEO SPORT SHOP
MRS. CHARLES O'DONNELL LEE, JR.
Sport Clothes, Hats, Evening Gowns
Children's Clothes
Studio 30, de la Guerra Studios

B. CROFTON ATKINS
Pipe and Tobacco Shop
And Men's Imported Clothing
Studio 29, de la Guerra Studios

SPUNWOVEN
"THE GYPSY SHOP"
Hand Fabrics
BETH AND IAN M. WOLFE
Studio 32, de la Guerra Studios

ELEANOR JOHNSON
Studio for the Voice
Suite 103, de la Guerra Studios

SANTA BARBARA ART CLUB
No. 15 E. de la Guerra Street
Free Exhibition of Paintings and Etchings
Open Daily 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.
Paintings and Etchings for sale

TECOLOTE
Bookshop and
Lending Library
New and Standard Books
25 DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS
SANTA BARBARA

Community Arts Association
SANTA BARBARA
SCHOOL OF THE ARTS
FRANK MORLEY FLETCHER, DIRECTOR
GRAPHIC, DECORATIVE AND PLASTIC ARTS —
DRAMA, MUSIC, DANCING
Semester October-May. Summer School six weeks July-August
Address 916 Santa Barbara Street, Santa Barbara, Calif.

El Paseo de las Flores
Distinctive Flower Merchants

The Same Blue Bird Limousine Taxi Service
Which we are giving in Montecito is now
Available in Santa Barbara
The Same Familiar TELEPHONE
50-50 (Fifty-Fifty) 50-50
Smart Motor Cars of All Types With or Without Drivers

THE MOST BEAUTIFUL CHURCH OF THE YEAR

FREDERICK KENNEDY, Associate Architect with CARLETON M. WINSLOW, Architect

THE problem of building a beautiful and satisfactory edifice in which to worship was solved by the First Baptist Church of Pasadena by retaining a young, well trained and competent local architect to represent them in choosing an architect experienced in church building, and to superintend the work. Mr. Frederick Kennedy came to us from M. I. T. at the call of C. I. T. and is the only representative in California architecture which that important local technical school has given us. The excellence of his judgment in calling Mr. Carleton M. Winslow, is published to all in the building itself. The fine tower can be seen from every section of the city and its dominating beauty shames the skyscapers and gives delight to the multitudes who pass by.

May we not hope that "California Tech." will soon gather together in one course, the evident interest of our best architects and its own splendid engineering equipment to the mutual profit of both professions and the increased beauty of our bridges and our towns? Pasadena certainly needs a School of Architecture.

MEMORIAL WINDOW, FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH, PASADENA, DESIGNED DEC. 1925 BY GEORGE M. CARPENTER.

THE INTERIOR WOODWORK OF THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH AT PASADENA

ALTHOUGH our native building materials are cement-stone and clay-products, we shall always use fine woods for finish and interiors. The planing mill of any community is a very vital center and source of inspiration to the home maker; in fact, it is sometimes the only source of design. John Craincroft, head of the binding department at our printer's, planned and built his own home at odd moments, using the doors and windows he bought at a mill for the basic measures of his original facade. If the doors and window frames were in good proportions and multiples of these dimensions were used throughout the building, he could hardly have selected a safer method of design for an amateur. His house is doubtless in much better taste than the gimcracks concocted to catch the seeker of the latest style in bungalows. Styles will change and the gimcracks be vacant; but good proportions will always be good.

It is therefore of importance that the establishment of the local planing mill and manufacturing company be based on good design and a feeling of responsibility to the community in which it grows up. This feeling is found in the Pasadena Manufacturing Company, established in 1887 and owned by George W. and L. R. McKesson who did most of the interior finish of this church and made the organ case of oak. Their general mill work takes on the excellent design of responsible architects who make the designs and specifications given them and thus the whole community may trust them in the matter of proportions, design, and good taste in fine woodwork and cabinet work. The paneling of quarter-sawed oak superbly fitted and finished, the beautiful doors into the organ loft and Mr. Winslow's delightful designs throughout the details were executed by this firm. For the wood carving they employed the Innes Brothers, craftsmen trained in their native Scotland, where they did exhibition work in lordly castles and public buildings. The beauty of this work can be seen by visitors to the church, beautiful both inside and out and a benediction to the town in which it stands.

The making of the doors is an art in itself. This art must be modified to suit the climate and exposure to a southern sun. At the Pasadena Manufacturing plant we were shown doors in the making. Doors that will stand the strong and trying sunlight on the south side of a house. In order to prevent warping and shrinking the doors here made are built up out of the various woods dried and cured to their particular needs. The core is made of strips glued together so that the grain in each piece alternates with the next; and if there is any pulling, each strip will counteract the pull of the one next to it. Thus making a door that in the long experience of this firm is best fitted to stand the elements. Expert workmanship for architects to call upon is here in reliable measure and the layman too may take advantage of it.

Kentucky Hand-Quilted
Comforters and Robes at the
Eleanor Beard Shop
Elizabeth B. Parsons, Director
Community Playhouse Patio
41 South El Molino Avenue
Pasadena Phone Terrace 5790-J

J. R. BRAGDON & CO.
Real Estate and Insurance
15 So. Raymond Ave., Pasadena

Charming, Colorful
KNIVES, FORKS & SPOONS
direct from Paris especially imported for the up-to-date hostess. $5 for six of either in Coral Red

Leaf Green
French Blue
Lapis Blue
Pale Amber

$5 for six of either

The latest model and best quality made in France to-day. Gold metal blades, ivorine handles. Order now from—

MRS. F. M. CARLETON
21 East 55th Street
New York

An interior at the Ojai Country Club

The Cheesewright Studios, Inc.
Decorators and Furnishers
PASADENA CALIFORNIA

PORTABLE TYPEWRITERS
WITH STANDARD KEYBOARD
Also All Makes Sold, Rented, Repaired, Exchanged
Parker Typewriter Co.
25 Years Experience
25 N. Marengo Pasadena

GATES
GRILLES
VICENZA STONE
FOUNTAINS
BENCHES
FIGURES
FURNITURE
—:—
Chapwoods
ITALIAN HOUSE
6908 HOLLYWOOD BLVD.
HOLLYWOOD
GR 1349

Allen's Water Gardens

We specialize in the construction, planting and care of Water Gardens. Consult us before you build that Pool and and have it correct in every detail. Now is the time to plant Water Lilies, for early spring blooms. Our Collection is the finest in the world.

Visitors Welcome at the Gardens
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE
EAST HOLLYWOOD, CAL.
3304 Rowena Ave., Phone Olympia 5816

Landscape
Designing and Planting

The beautiful gardens of Southern California which we have created are evidence of our ability to design and plant your own grounds properly.

A reliable firm of thirty-eight years' experience in Southern California.

EDWARD H. RUST
NURSERYMAN
1625 Bank St. Colo. 997
So. Pasadena ELliot 2639

Terrace 5485-W
FAULKNER'S
THE LINEN SHOP
HOUSEHOLD and FANCY LINENS
HANDKERCHIEFS, MONOGRAMS
314 East Colorado St. Pasadena, California

LAUNDERERS DRY CLEANERS
ROYAL LAUNDRY CO.
461 South Raymond Colorado 67
Pasadena, California

QUALITY SERVICE
THE ELITE
DRY CLEANERS AND DYERS
Plant: 797 So. Fair Oaks Ave.
Colo. 1349 Pasadena, California

"The Gate to Healthful Beauty"
CORLANE
Marinello System
F. O. 1648 570 East Colorado St.
Pasadena
Opposite the Presbyterian Church

Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes
TROY LAUNDRY
In Business for Twenty Years
Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146 Alhambra 243-J

T. W. Mather Co. Inc.
PASADENA, CAL.
Dry Goods
Women's & Children's
Wearing Apparel
Colorado Street at Marengo

"UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST"

The CALIFORNIAN HOTEL

MANAGEMENT H. WINGATE LAKE

FRESNO, CALIFORNIA

A modern, model Hotel devoted to sincere hospitality and dedicated to California's Guests

THE LOGICAL STOPPING PLACE IN THE SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY FOR ALL POINTS, WHETHER YOU TRAVEL FOR BUSINESS OR PLEASURE.

EUROPEAN PLAN
250 ROOMS - 250 BATHS
$2.50 PER DAY AND UP
ALL OUTSIDE ROOMS

★ ★ ★

GOLDEN STATE LIMITED

SOUTHERN PACIFIC LINES

East

via • • •

Golden State Route to Chicago

Rock Island

None faster; every travel luxury planned for comfort. Through sleepers direct to St. Louis Minneapolis

St. Paul • • Kansas City
Des Moines Memphis
—and many other eastern points

It's the delightful Golden State Route • • • the line of low altitude.

Also Golden State Express and Californian

Southern Pacific Lines

Ticket Offices: 212 West 7th Street. 1147 South Broadway. Main Floor Pacific Electric Building, 6th and Main. Station—5th and Central. Phone MEtropolitan 2000.

GLENDALE 106 N. Brand
HOLLYWOOD 6768 Hollywood Blvd.
LONG BEACH 156 West Ocean
OCEAN PARK Trolley Way
PASADENA 48 E. Colorado

Beauty in Terra-Cotta

SHAPED with soft-flowing contours and of majestic size, these graceful terra-cotta urns—styled after the Italian Renaissance—match perfectly in texture and color the gray Bedford limestone of the first story of the Biltmore Hotel Los Angeles (Schultze & Weaver, Architects). Eight of these urns were used, and, placed on pedestals at the second-story balustrade, they serve to soften the severer lines of the building's design. They are over six feet in height.

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.

LOS ANGELES OFFICE: NEW PACIFIC FINANCE BUILDING, 621 SOUTH HOPE STREET
TROPICO PLANT: GLENDALE, LOS ANGELES COUNTY

MISS HARKER'S SCHOOL
FOR GIRLS
Palo Alto -:- -:- -:- California
"The Home of Stanford University"
Outdoor life all the year round. One hour from San Francisco. College Preparatory and Special Courses. Separate residence for girls from 5 to 14 years. Catalog on request.

KENWOOD HALL
Resident and Day School for Girls. Sub-Primary through High School. Open throughout the year.
Directors: Ruby Mildred King, Grace Baylor Bobbitt.
Tel. WAshington 1612 675 So. Vermont Ave., Los Angeles

An Ideal School for Young Women
Cumnock School
COLLEGE WORK IN THE FOLLOWING COURSES:
Vocal Interpretation of Literature

Literary Appreciation	Voice and Diction	Short-Story
Public Speaking	French	Dancing
Dramatics	Story Telling	Psychology
	Journalism

Art and Art Appreciation
An accredited High School in Class A preparing for Western and Eastern Colleges and Universities.
HELEN A. BROOKS, Director
5353 West Third Street Los Angeles
WHitney 3427 —TELEPHONES— WHitney 7311

NEW HOME
OF
PACIFIC MILITARY ACADEMY
Culver City, California

Boarding and Day School. Fireproof Buildings. Completely Equipped Laboratories. Grammar and High School. Enrollment limited.

For Catalogue Write Mrs. Loughan or telephone Culver City 3294

The Art of
Norma Gould
Authentic Dances—Pantomime
Eurythmics
Ballroom Department—Louise Kramer
Special Course for Professional Dancers
Phone or write for information
460 N. Western Ave. HEmpstead 3530

Urban
Military Academy
23rd YEAR
A good summer camp is an essential part of every real boy's education. Urban, with the most completely organized camp in the West offers a worthwhile summer in the High Sierras. Fishing, Swimming, Riding, all sports. Membership limited. Experienced staff. Enroll now. For information, see Secretary, Wilcox at Melrose. Los Angeles, California. HEmpstead 7602.

The Westlake
School for Girls
333 South Westmoreland Avenue
Residence and Day School
Lower School, College Preparatory, Junior College
Fully Accredited
Departments of Art, Music, Home Economics
JESSICA SMITH VANCE FREDERICA DE LAGUNA
Telephone DRexel 0052

A COURSE IN THE APPRECIATION OF ARCHITECTURE

THE RELATION OF HOUSE TO GARDEN

By KATHERINE BASHFORD, Landscape Architect

FORTUNATELY the phrase, "the relation of the house to the garden," has taken on a new significance. No longer does it conjure up its sister phrase, "the tying of the house to the ground." The architecture of today grows naturally from the soil, springing up with strong, graceful lines that need no blurring base planting to hold them down.

There has been of necessity a revision in the technique of landscape architecture, influenced first by the crystallization of the modern tendencies in architecture, and fostered by the very general co-operation of the architect and the landscape architect.

With the common desire of giving to the client a home possessing all the charms of livableness both inside and out, the architect realizes fully the necessity of bringing the garden into close relationship with the house, while the landscape architect thinks in terms more architectural and less purely horticultural.

The walled garden, the patio, the living terraces have all made for a common meeting ground. And while the landscape architect may—in proper places throughout the grounds—indulge in all the delights of color schemes, seasonal effects, and the love of plants for themselves, close to the house he chooses thoughtfully, selecting for type, for texture, for form, putting in his shapes frankly and definitely, always dominated by the keynote of the best in modern architecture—simplicity.

AN OFFER OF FREE DESIGN

Editor's Note:—The seventh division of Miss Gere's outline for the study of Architecture is called The Importance of The Garden and has been discussed from the standpoint of the Architect and the landscape architect in March. But the presence of The Garden Club of America—in session at Santa Barbara, April 12 to 16 for its Thirtieth Annual Meeting suggested a further discussion and a wider view of the whole subject this month. We therefore present in our leading article a symposium on this honorable profession of landscape architecture, compiled by the secretary of the A. S. L. A., and contributed to this Course of the Federation of California Woman's Clubs by the Secretary of the Local Chapter, Mr. George D. Hall of the firm of Cook and Hall, Landscape Architects and City Planners.

Mr. Slaymaker's article continued on these pages teaches by example—better than precept—the difference between the East and the West in gardening.

Miss Katherine Bashford, Landscape Architect, Pasadena, has written a short note on the subject, and her charming gardens, for example that of the Bourne Estate on Lombardy Road, illustrate Miss Gere's "shadow patterns on white walls" as well as what Miss Bashford calls "silhouette planting."

There are two reasons for the change in the outline as first published. First: There has developed in the minds of many who are studying architecture a desire for knowledge as to the standard of good architecture in the multitudinous erection of small houses. Mr. Reginald Johnson has promised to give us a continuation of his short article in the February number. Here the architect announces his standard to be "the standard of beauty and line, proportion, texture and color," which he considers the only standard of criticism.

This standard of good architecture lies behind and beneath all so-called "styles." They are founded upon it if they are good; they violate it if they are bad. Style changes, but the standard of beauty in the elements of style lies too deep for change, it is the outcome of the growth of civilizations, the evolution of good taste.

We have stopped, therefore, at this point in our program and will study the ordinary domestic residence of the present day. Mr. Reginald Johnson will take up in detail the elements of beauty which may be made to exist in our homes of today, and will show in several articles what may be evolved by line and proportion, shadow and sunlight, color and texture in the small or Universal home. Second: Mr. Charles Henry Cheney, whose work at Santa Barbara and at Palos Verdes has made his article on City Planning especially to be desired, will write it during the coming summer; and the course as outlined, will be completed within the year.

In pausing to concentrate the attention of Club Women of California upon the Universal home and its elements that make for Beauty we feel that the course is answering a very pressing demand for help that is vitally needed in every residence district and town. This space will, therefore, be given next month to consideration of the beauty which may be realized in a mass of good small houses, such as we find all over Los Angeles County in ever increasing numbers.

Let us take Pasadena as an example. In what does its beauty consist? Surely there is no hesitancy in pointing to the residence streets rather than the the shopping district at present.

Miss Mabel Watson, Chairman of the Art Section for the Shakespeare Club of Pasadena is starting a movement in that city to have a continuous exhibit of architect's small houses in a down-town room and to help in every way to supply good designs for small houses to contractors and builders.

Mr. Clifford Truesdell, Chairman of the Small House Committee of Architects has signified his willingness to co-operate with the Women's Clubs in this matter.

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND offers to do its bit by furnishing free of charge a good architect's design to any plan sent in by its subscribers, for a house costing less than five thousand dollars. The plans, made by the prospective builder and the elevations made by the architect's committee, will be published in the magazine.

The character and situation of the lot for which this house is planned, should accompany the plan. Address California Southland, Pasadena, or call at 305 Braley Bldg., So. Raymond Avenue.

A GARDEN UNDER LATH (Continued from Page 14)

the masses of every kind of begonia, both the types that grow upward and those that hang from the baskets, the wistaria depending from the cob-webby rotunda dome, all the various kinds of planting materials combine to form a rare sight. A color scheme has been carried out ranging from white to pinks and lavenders, thence into yellows and oranges light and dark in the lower gardens. The thousands of chinks in the endless rock walls are filled with mosses and ferns.

There is space only to mention the invisible glazing of the entire ocean-side of the Lath House, the glazing of the roof over the tea garden, the use of numerous specially designed and carefully located redwood benches, all of which conduce to a feeling of comfort and liveableness. The tea room is furnished appropriately in Japanese wicker with some splendid old Chinese tea jars and a service house adjacent to the Lath House contains a kitchen fully equipped, even to the Spanish peasant pottery tea-service, napkins, and the like.

An altogether unpredictable pleasure as one enters the "Garden under Lath," on a sunny day, is due to the amazing shadow patterns and effects that lie over the interior. As the sun moves around, it casts these in daily rotation here and there, in bewildering illusion.

THE ROTUNDA OF THE LATH HOUSE WITH ITS TWO OPEN GARDENS.

LANDSCAPE ARCHITECTURE (Continued from Page 10)

a competent landscape architect also, any more than there is any reason why a painter should not do so; but ars longa. And the simple fact is that the instances are few in which both fields are well covered. The infrequency of a successful union of these two professions in the same individual is rather surprising, in view of the closeness and frequent overlapping of their fields and the vagueness of the boundary which separates them. It is surprising, notwithstanding the bigness of the range of technical information required for each of the professions. And I believe this infrequency is partly due to a radical difference in the point of view which is normal to the two professions, a difference which is apt to be inborn in different individuals, but which is clearly emphasized and cultivated by differences in the general run of problems which are presented to the architect and the landscape architect respectively.

Normally, the architect deals with materials which he is required to shape into a result that shall be perfect, complete and final, as it leaves his head—a thing expected to remain thenceforth substantially unchanged until its day is done.

Normally, the landscape architect deals with materials which he is required to shape into a kind of organism that grows and changes, and, with the aid of those who control it, continues for an indefinite time constantly to readapt itself to new factors of its envrionment. A normal, healthy-minded architect rebels at the necessity of waiting for growth in landscape work. He is impatient to "get his effect" at once, and he wholly fails to grasp that the aim in most landscape work is not a single fixed "effect," conceived as immutable, but in reality only instantaneous. The normal aim is the whole sum of effects, as seen through the whole life history of living design.

THE ARCHITECTURAL RECORD. November 1918. p. 457. The Work of Olmsted Brothers. By John Taylor Boyd, Jr. Part I.

The name of Frederick Law Olmsted means in landscape architecture what the name of Charles F. McKim means in architecture. For just as the designs of McKim—bold in conception and exquisitely perfected in details—helped determine the course of architecture in its recent quick development of twenty-five years, so also over a generation earlier the parks and grounds laid out by Olmsted set standards that are largely the basis for landscape work today.

LAKE ARROWHEAD LODGE
E. K. HOAK, Managing Director.
Mile High—American Plan—Open All Year
Reservations made at 319 Van Nuys Bldg. Tel. VA. 0959, or direct to Lodge. Call Lake Arrowhead Main 1. Rates, $7.00 a day and up, including meals and room.
Dinner Dance Every Saturday Night.

SCULPTOR OF SILVER
FOR THE TABLE OF THE BRIDE
PORTER BLANCHARD
BURBANK :: :: :: CALIFORNIA

The Girls' Collegiate School 34th Year
NEWLY LOCATED IN THE COUNTRY
Boarding and Day School. Accredited East and West. Out-Door Life a Reality. 50-acre estate. All sports. Saddle Horses. New Buildings. Italian type. L. A. Office, "Ask Mr. Foster" Information Service in Robinson's Dept. Store at Seventh Street and Grand Ave., Tel. BR 4701.
Glendora, Calif. Miss Parsons and Miss Dennen, Principals

Westridge
A COLLEGE PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS. ACCREDITED.
Primary, Intermediate and Academic Departments.
MARY L. RANNEY, AMIE C. RUMNEY, Principals.
324 Madeline Drive, Pasadena, California Telephone Wakefield 5276

The Elliott School for Girls
Residence and Day School.
Ideal Home Life Character Building
Superior Educational Advantages. Sub-Primary through Eleventh Grade.
Martha Collins Weaver, M. A., Principal. Pico Blvd. at Grammercy Place.
EMpire 5347

The... RAYMOND
PASADENA
Southern California
WALTER RAYMOND
Proprietor
ARTHUR E. SAFFORD
Manager

Golf course on its own grounds.

PLANT WILD FLOWERS THIS YEAR
COMBINE BEAUTY WITH ROMANCE
Your choice of two separate packets, one containing 12 species in separate packets, and the other a mixture of over 20 varieties.
EACH $1.00 POSTPAID
THEODORE PAYNE
2969 Los Feliz Boulevard Los Angeles, California

THE BATCHELDER TILES
BATCHELDER-WILSON COMPANY

We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

2633 Artesian Street
LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

The Lotus People

By FAIRFAX PROUDFIT WALKUP

Photographed from colored sketches by Albert Hiller
(To be Continued)

Illustrated by M. V. Oates

THE oldest display of coquetry in dress is presented by the Sphinx. For some seven thousand years she has been setting her cap at the world. The folds of the headdress are a bit frayed, and the face under the cap is somewhat scamed by time; a mere fleck of paint remains on the right cheek; yet the charm of this mysterious individual persists, and men, even the Caesars and Napoleons, bow low before her.

This recognition is only natural. Egypt has a perennial allure; it is so unescapably true that "age cannot wither her, nor custom stale". She has the distinction of being the oldest country in the world—and the youngest. She is the oldest, since her civilization dates back authentically to 4241 B. C. She is the youngest because, each year, she is re-invigorated, her life essence recharged, by the inundation of the Great River. "The Gift of the Nile" Herodotus called this land, long ago; a gift that is renewed each birthday. Is not this the perpetuity of Youth?

Sir George Rawlinson likened Egypt to a lotus with a crooked stem. The cup of the flower is the Delta, bending over into the Mediterranean. The stem is the sinuous line of the Nile, without a single tributary branch along its thousand miles of length.

PRINCE HATSU AND THE PRINCESS NEFRA

It is no wonder that the people in this narrow, isolated land were a reserved race, withdrawn unto themselves. It is no wonder that life acquired a distinct outward form, a fixed rule and order. Had not Egypt put on the cerements of immortality when the rest of the world was in swaddling clothes? There is a certain sophistication that comes of being "with yesterday's seven thousand years." It is the unmistakable air of the aristocrat of Time.

To such an aristocrat, freedom or carelessness in person or dress would be distasteful. Tradition gave the standard. Yet this very stability of fashion has a certain freshness. A thing that never changes cannot grow old.

Today, a few weeks may bring in a revolution in the shape of a sleeve or the length of a skirt. In Egypt, style in the days of Cheops the pyramid builder was identical with that of the time of Cleopatra, the Ptolemy. Costume was as satisfactory as it was undeviating. Why change what had proved pleasing, simple, and adequate? There is a contentment that comes from long-acquired wisdom. This passive complacency did not, however, prevent their feeling a distinct esthetic delight in each new manifestation of traditional taste. It is perhaps akin to the ardor with which devotees chant their daily prayers, interminably addressed to the same god, in a dawn lighted by the same sun, or a dusk descending with the same obliterating regularity.

This joy of re-creation gives to the costume of the Egyptians that artistic spontaneity which redeems it from monotony. Due to their geometrically-trained minds, the line of dress is simple and exact. Unnecessary use of material is discouraged. Whatever fullness there is, is focussed at the front. Thus ensues that economy of effect, which is nevertheless embellished with great wealth of color and richness of jewelled ornament. The cloth itself is the simple product of the Nile-drenched fields—the fibre of the cotton or the flax. The colors are the elementary but glowing spectrum of the world about them—green of the trees, blue of the sky, red and purple of the setting sun, yellow of the noonday, orange of the dawn—and brown of the Nile's muddy stream. The jewels bedecking the straight bodies are flecks of hidden fire, captured and held precious by Man as his tribute to the beauty of the world.

In the "Book of the Dead"—that delightful collection of sprightly genre-scenes from daily life—one may see Egyptian men and women as they really lived. One may read, on the unfolding papyrus, the pictured account of the overlord receiving his rents, in grain, cattle, and thr commodities of the time. There is an informality about these contemporary descriptions that is far more convincing than the puff-praises of official recorders. It takes a bigoted Egyptologist to believe the royal scribe, Pentaur, who solemnly depicts his great master, Rameses, scattering, single-handed, ten thousand Hittites and twenty-five hundred chariots!

Fortunately, there is no need for such exaggeration in dress. On the contrary, the details are scant in the extreme. But they are also very clear.

The little Princes Nefra*, whose activities one may view on the unfolding scroll, has no perception of the scantiness of her garb. She has that wholesome and naive indifference to exposure which is not wholly the result of a warm climate; in essence, it may indicate the most genuine modesty. She appreciates the smooth bronze of her body which is being softened with palm and lettuce oil by the deft fingers of the maid.

A single abbreviated nether garment fulfills all foundation requirements of dress. Far more attention and time is expended on the touching up of the face. The cheeks are tinted, the lips carmined, and the eyes outlined with elongated curves of kohl, the corners reaching to the temples. With an ivory bodkin the princess herself applies the black unguent which the maid holds ready to her hand, in a tiny alabaster box. So ancient is the modern vanity box—its age out of all proportion to its size—or need!

A pair of triangular earrings, with gold and crystal pendents, are next donned. Then the wig—a blue one—is adjusted, so that the small plaits, weighted at the end with golden balls, fall with precision to right and left of the face, with a proportionate mass pendent behind. Since the princess bedecks herself for a lover's tryst and not for an affair of state, she eschews formal headdress, contenting herself with a single pink lotus blossom drooping forward over her forehead.

Next comes the choice of dress. From a beautifully carved chest of ebony and ivory, the maid lifts a folded mass of citron tissue. (Silk was unknown to the Egyptians until quite late in their history; but the "byssine linen" was famous for its fine texture. The town of Chemmis, in northern Egypt, wove a cloth that measured five hundred threads to the inch! It was from this place that Solomon ordered much of his household linen. Poor man, he must have needed a vast supply!)

Carefully the maid unfolds the garment. It is a simple rectangle woven in one piece, in width about forty inches, and about eighty-eight inches in length. The lower edge of the length is bordered with heavy gold fringe. There are two ways of adjusting the skirt. The top may be drawn together, the two pieces about a half yard apart, taken in hand and twisted, one crossed over the other, and tucked inside. This brings the fullness to the front in unstudied lines. The more precise way—which the princess uses—is to draw taut the cord which threads the top of the skirt, allowing the folds to fall in front in fine, regular pleats as if goffered. Perhaps the linen is stiffened a bit. After the pleats are adjusted, the cord is passed again around the body and usually knotted in front.

Over the shoulders, a smaller rectangle of the same soft linen is arranged. This rectangle measures about twenty-four by fifty-four inches. The upper corners are twisted until they form a thick cord; then these twisted cords are knotted just below the breast. Thus the material, though a straight rectangle, gives the effect of a draped circular shawl. This is due to the twisting and knotting process; which knack, with the adjustment of all fullness to the front of the figure, are the two cardinal secretas of all Egyptian toilet. The straight, narrow tunic has no secret adjustment; it simply overlaps.

The princess next chooses the really decorative detail of her costume. This is the wide, circular collar, without which no real elegance can be achieved. It may be made of cotton, linen, or leather; that which the maid fastens (at the back, beneath the wig), is of linen stiff with an intricate pattern of glass beads, precious stones, and gold. Reds, blues, greens and yellows are introduced into the design, which is bordered with the popular lotus; yet there is a pleasing smoothness of effect. The collar rests low, over the shawl, hiding the twist of the knot in front.

Bracelets of gold and lapis lazuli, obsidian,

THE KING AND MAID OF HONOR

chalcedony, and malachite, adorn the slender arms and wrists; while numerous rings—scarabs, serpents, hieroglyphic seals—cover the fingers and even the thumbs. On the feet are slender sandals of gold cloth with jewelled rosettes. The Egyptians were proud of their finely fashioned feet; "Cinderella and the Glass Slipper" is a favorite story retold over and over again on the tomb scrolls.

The maid, who so attentively serves her mistress, is dressed in the simple, straight tunic similar to those the princess herself often wears; but the texture of the material is coarser for the maid's garment. The colors, too, are cruder, arranged in the diagonal stripes which one may see on the tunics of kings, in bas reliefs, and in the round. The tunic reaches just below the breast, and is confined by a simple belt, or girdle, around the waist. It is held over the shoulder by one strap, sometimes two. Being a favorite of her mistress, the maid no doubt wears one of her discarded beaded collars.

*The names of the group described are fictitious, to avoid placing the costumes in any one era.

...No Woman

is smarter than her gown . . . and no gown is smarter than a FLORNINA model

FLORNINA
95 South Los Robles
Pasadena, California

Let Your Initials Gleam in Rhine-stones

One letter $5.50; Two, $6.50; Three, $7.50.

THE newest vogue at fashion resorts here and abroad — wherever smartness is a keynote, you see them.

Straight letters or monogram, with safety catches.

Coulter Dry Goods Co
FOUNDED IN 1876
Seventh Street at Olive

Pasadena's

Only Shop featuring

GOWNS for LARGE WOMEN

Sizes 38 to 56 Exclusively and the half sizes

"Characteristic of Gentlewomen"

Schaffer
566 E. Colorado St.
—opposite Presbyterian Church—at Madison

HOMESPUN SPORTS COATS

Hand woven on our own looms by expert designers

Specialists in all Hand loom materials—

Handwrought Silver and Pewter

Ideal for Wedding Gifts

HEWSON HAND CRAFT STUDIOS

2508½ W. SEVENTH STREET
LOS ANGELES

602 E. COLORADO STREET
PASADENA

Lenz HAT Studio

643-645 East Colorado St.
Pasadena, Cal.
Near the New Community Playhouse
Phone Fair Oaks 573

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

MONTHLY BULLETIN

"All for Service—And Service for All"

OFFICERS:
MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President
MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President
MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, Sec. Vice-Pres.
MRS. ERWIN P. WERNER, Third Vice-President
MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Vice-Pres.
MRS. JAMES REED, Secretary
MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treasurer.
MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

5604 De Longpre Avenue, Los Angeles

CALENDAR

April 6th, 10:45 a. m.—Meeting of the Board of Directors.
April 6th, 12:30 p. m. — Round Table Luncheon. Speaker, Elinor Glyn.
April 12th, 10:30 a. m. Meeting Day Nursery Committee.
April 13th, 10:45 a. m.—Meeting of the Executive Committee.
April 14th, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Good Samaritan Committee.
April 20th, 10:45 a. m.—Meeting of the Executive Committee.
April 27th, 10:45 a. m.—Meeting of the Executive Committee.
April 28th, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Good Samaritan Committee.

HANCOCK BANNING MEMORIAL HOSPITAL BED ENDOWMENT

ON March 4, 1926, $5000 was presented to the Children's Hospital Society for the endowment in perpetuity of a bed for the Tiny Tims who will come and go through the years. Following is the report of the Hancock Banning Memorial Committee presented by its Chairman at a special meeting at the Community House, March 2nd.

As you perhaps know, the idea of this Tiny Tim Endowment Fund was conceived by our President, Mrs. Banning, in 1919. Starting in a small way, really by just a penny box in the League's offices in the old Coulter Building on South Broadway, Mrs. Banning's great desire was to endow a hospital bed for a child at some future date. The sources of revenue have been varied—numerous pennies, an occasional gift from an interested friend of Mrs. Banning's, money derived from film locations designated to this fund by the property owners, and through the Alice Elliott Memorial Flower Fund. Through all these seven years, little by little the fund has been growing. And now the plans of the committee are to make it a perpetual fund, so that in years to come the Assistance League may have as an evidence of their motto "All For Service and Service For All," numerous hospital beds throughout the city, endowed with only one thought in mind, the relief of some suffering child.

The Committee's desire is to have this living, growing endowment reach out to relieve the suffering of our little citizens, whom fate has placed in the world without adequate means to strengthen and heal their physical ills. There is no work which demands so much untiring effort as that of healing, saving and encouraging in every way the children, for upon them and their fitness for life our whole future depends.

The League's desire is to have the sources of revenue for the endowment as varied as possible. First, there is the Alice Elliott Memorial Flower Fund. Miss Elliott was the first Recording Secretary of the Assistance League. She gave of herself unsparingly, and so at her passing Mrs. Banning proposed as a Memorial to her the following plan, that those who desire to do so could, instead of sending flowers at the time of a friend's passing, make a contribution to the Alice Elliott Memorial Flower Fund, which in turn is placed in the Tiny Tim Hospital Bed Endowment Fund. The Assistance League itself contributed to this fund as a Memorial to our distinguished ex-President, Woodrow Wilson, and as an expression of affection for our Board mother, Mrs. McAdoo.

Another way individuals may give to this fund is through contributions of old gold and silver to our Melting Pot. During the Red Cross Shop days it was my privilege to have charge of the same kind of a melting pot. When I tell you that in eighteen months we turned into some $3000 these bits of silver and gold, you can understand why we are still carrying it on. It is a great satisfaction, I know, to realize that the old mirror back, the useless gold watchcase or jewelry mounting may be turned into a bandage, a bottle of medicine, or a dainty bit of food to ease the day of some dear little sufferer. And then, too, we ask for pennies. The number of pennies accumulated during the year by any one of us and contributed to this fund will help materially toward the completion of the amount necessary for the endowment of a second bed.

Added to these sources, a substantial amount has come in through property owners listed in our Film Location Bureau, designating rentals from such locations to the Endowment Fund. Here is a great opportunity for the co-operation of our friends to be of great assistance: First, by allowing their own places to be used as locations, or by securing for us other desirable locations. And now the plan is that this fund shall be open to any and all who may desire to give to it in memory of a loved one. Any amount anyone may desire to give will be so gladly accepted and the name enrolled in the fund and in our memory book.

When the privilege was given to you to contribute to this fund and help its completion to the amount of $5,000, our desire was to express our deep affection for our dear Mrs. Banning and our high regard for Mr. Banning, and our sincere friendship for both, by naming the first endowed hospital bed from the Assistance League the "Hancock Banning Memorial." We had then in the bank some $2,000. The rest has been contributed by ninety-five individuals, whose names are here inscribed in our memory book.

Of Mr. Banning I can say, and I know that you will agree with me, "all that he came to give, he gave and went again—grace, excellent courtesy, a brightness on the face and airs of high memory. No man less proud than he, nor cared for homage less, only he could not be far off from happiness." And because he could not be far off from happiness, our gratification is great, that we can now carry this happiness to some child by dedicating to his memory a bed in the Children's Hospital of Los Angeles, to be named the "Hancock Banning Memorial." To know that the first bed endowed by the Assistance League from its Tiny Tim Fund, a part of the League's work so dear to the heart of Mrs. Banning has been dedicated to Mr. Banning, will ever give to us all a feeling of high satisfaction.

Respectfully submitted by your committee.

Mrs. Ada Edwards Laughlin, Chairman.
Mr. D. C. MacWatters,
Mr. E. N. Martin,
Mrs. R. D. Shepherd,
Mrs. Roy Jones,
Mrs. Charles Jeffras,
Mrs. James Reed.

ONE OF A SERIES OF DELIGHTFUL VANISHING LUNCHEONS IN STUDIO TEA ROOM OF THE COMMUNITY HOUSE. Photographs by Margaret Craig, Los Angeles

GLIMPSE OF CORNER OF LA RAMADA—A SETTING FOR AL FRESCO LUNCHEONS IN THE SPRING.

THE DAY NURSERY

The Day Nursery was built to accommodate fifty children and it has been doing splendid work in Hollywood, but we find it doesn't meet the demands. Many of the working women of Hollywood are connected with the studios, necessitating night work. Under the present conditions we cannot keep children over night, in consequence of which mothers are forced to leave their children without proper care.

Old World Charm in Your Garden

Replica of an Early Spanish Jar

Original Found Among the Ruins of an old Mexican Estate

Number 400

ITALIAN TERRA COTTA COMPANY

Manufacturers of terra cotta garden furniture in all styles of architecture

1149 MISSION ROAD LOS ANGELES

YOUR HOME tells the irrefutable story of yourself. Is it as up-to-the-moment in style as your clothes or your car? Barker Bros. displays the very latest style trends in home furnishings. If your home lacks some of these 1926 features, you will find it easy to supply your needs here—for values are greater than ever and prices lower.

BARKER BROS.

Complete Furnishers of Successful Homes

SEVENTH STREET, Flower and Figueroa

Hope Ranch Park

A Dream Come True

In Santa Barbara, California

A new community of highly protected estates and homes is building in Santa Barbara. Where Cabrillo in 1543 found Indian villages grouped along the ocean front and about a lovely lake, a dream of years is materializing.

The clear, fresh springs now feed one of the most beautiful lakes in the Southland. Miles of roads are built. Bridle trails wind through canyons and over hilltops. Two miles of private beach border the Pacific. Water unlimited is flowing through conduits. Fruit trees are planted. About the lake has been developed one of the most sporty and picturesque golf courses in all the West. A field for polo is set aside near by.

The rolling hills, covered with ancient oaks which stood centuries ago, are becoming dotted with homes in California's most charming style. Their windows frame mountain, lake, valley and ocean views that are world famous.

Hope Ranch Park is a vision realized. It came first to Cabrillo. It has come now to people foremost in America's varied life.

Purchasers of estates and homesites in Hope Ranch Park already include artists, writers, an amateur golf champion, officers of several of the country's largest corporations, bankers, lawyers, a Major General—people whose freedom to choose is world wide and whose choice is Hope Ranch Park.

Every visitor to California, who plans a home in this sunny Southland, should know Hope Ranch Park.

Know it for historic association.

Know it for its sheer beauty and balmy climate.

Know it for its golf course, its lake, its unlimited water, its swimming beach, its bridle paths, its mountain and ocean outlook, its lovely homes.

Know it as a basis of comparison.

To know it is to love it.

Correspondence is invited and visitors will be welcomed.

SANTA BARBARA ESTATES, INC.

9 WEST CARRILLO STREET

SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

PEOPLE OF IMAGINATION
who are beginning to find Spanish, French, and Italian furnishings a little conventional and monotonous are turning to the other side of the Mediterranean for bits of exotic color which, while they blend well with a South European background, give it a touch of novelty and distinction.

THE SOUKS OF TUNIS
in the patio of the Pasadena Community Playhouse

Decorating and Finishing Exclusive Furniture

W. G. Pesenecker

Interior and Exterior Painting
34 North Broadway
Phone Col. 5656 Pasadena, Calif.

Paul H. Vauchelet
Lighting Fixtures.
Andirons Console Tables
Metal Work
1530 North Western Ave ~ Holly 2669
Los Angeles ~ California

Unique in its Atmosphere

Each morning a refreshing shower. A joy at forty miles an hour.

Golden State Limited

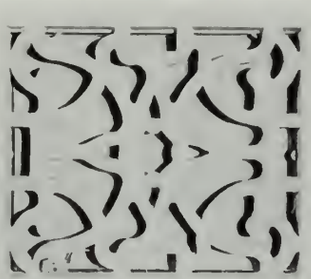
East

The luxurious and congenial environment of an ocean liner translated to railroad travel.

Rock Island
SOUTHERN PACIFIC LINES

A "comfy" lounge for women planned. A kind of traveling "no man's land."

Leave Los Angeles 12:01 p.m. [via Southern Pacific]; San Diego 10:45 a.m. [via S.D. & A.]; arrive Chicago 10:00 a.m. third day [via Rock Island].
Thru Pullman daily from Santa Barbara 8:00 a.m. [via Southern Pacific].



For tickets, reservations personal service, call on
Southern Pacific City Ticket Office, 937 State St., Santa Barbara, Calif., Phone 243; or address B. F. Coons, General Agent, Rock Island Lines, 609 Van Nuys Bldg., Los Angeles, Calif.

Visit
An Old Fashioned Garden
and choose your
Trees, Shrubs, Perennials and Herbs
Orders filled with thoughtful care
Nosegays made to please you.

McAFEE GARDENS
An Old Fashioned Garden
640 No. San Gabriel Blvd.
The Broadway Garden
Broadway and Encinitas
SAN GABRIEL, CALIFORNIA

The Assembly Tea Room
The In and Out-of-Town House of Los Angeles serves
LUNCHEON, TEA AND DINNER
INCIDENTALLY
The Very Choicest Food
Special Sunday Dinner 5 to 8
644 South Flower St., Los Angeles
Phone VAndike 7177

Aluminum Plaster-Flush Registers for Hot Air Furnaces

The Beauty and Artistic Design of Terra Cotta made Durable and Practical by an aluminum casting — finished to match your interior.

Designed and Executed by
Pasadena Gas Appliance Co., Inc.
901 E. Colorado Street
Pasadena Fair Oaks 9393

WE offer for investment of Personal or Trust Funds sound Securities returning highest rates consistent with safety.

WILLIAM R. STAATS COMPANY
Established 1887
Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds
311 East Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIF.
Los Angeles San Diego San Francisco

Bernays

EXHIBITION OF OIL PAINTINGS
ARTHUR HILL GILBERT
March 29 to April 10, inclusive
CALIFORNIA WATER COLOR SOCIETY
April 12 to 26, inclusive
FINE ARTS — ETCHINGS — FRAMING — NOTT-SHOOK HAND LOOMS
2501 W. 7TH ST. LOS ANGELES
(At Carondelet Street)

The Palace of Versailles

The Ultimate in Period Pianos

The Ultimate in Period Pianos

All the daintiness of a Du Barry, the charm of a Maintenon, the grace of a Pompadour has been transported from the Courts of French Romance into the Versailles Model and combined with the incomparable beauty of Stieff Tone.

To own this instrument is to possess the atmosphere of the French Courts

RICHARDSON'S Inc.
Victrolas ~ Radios ~ Pianos
730 WEST SEVENTH STREET
LOS ANGELES CALIFORNIA

STIEFF

Master Piano-Forte Builders Since 1842

Palos Verdes Estates—"Where your Home is your Playground"

Palos Verdes Estates

LANE MORTGAGE BUILDING, EIGHTH AND SPRING STS.
LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

JAY LAWYER
Gen. Mgr.

BANK OF AMERICA
Trustee

Four and a half miles of the fairest shore line in California is dedicated in perpetuity to the use of the people of Palos Verdes—protected both against business encroachment or private ownership.

Every modern city convenience in one of the Southland's best scenic locations—

REPORT OF THE GARDEN CLUB OF AMERICA

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

Interior of the Rotunda, Los Angeles Public Library. Julian E. Garnsey, Mural Painter.

No. 77 May, 1926 25 Cents

CALIFORNIA'S HOME AND GARDEN MAGAZINE

Jade Incense Burners
Libation Cups Temple Jars
Vases Bowls

Objets d'art of rarest beauty and decorative value.

Gump's
S & G Gump Co. 246-268 Post St. | San Francisco California

Dance!

at the

Ambassador

Cocoanut Grove

to the Entrancing Music of

COCOANUT GROVE ORCHESTRA

Under the Leadership of Ray West

SPECIAL NIGHTS Every Tuesday

COLLEGE NIGHTS

With Dancing Contest every Friday.

Tea Dances

every Saturday at 4:00 in the Fiesta Room, Tea Service $1.00

Paul H. Vauchelet

Lighting Fixtures.

Andirons Console Tables
Metal Work

1530 North Western five ~ Holly 2669

Los Angeles ~ California

Visit
An Old Fashioned Garden
and choose your
Trees, Shrubs, Perennials and Herbs

Orders filled with thoughtful care

Nosegays made to please you.

McAFEE GARDENS

An Old Fashioned Garden
640 No. San Gabriel Blvd.

The Broadway Garden
Broadway and Encinitas

SAN GABRIEL, CALIFORNIA

Old World Charm in Your Garden

Replica of an Early Spanish Jar

Original Found Among the Ruins of an old Mexican Estate

Number 400

ITALIAN TERRA COTTA COMPANY

Manufacturers of terra cotta garden furniture in all styles of architecture

1149 MISSION ROAD LOS ANGELES

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertainments, etc., for the calendar pages are free of charge and should be received in the office of California Southland, Pasadena, at least two weeks previous to date of issue, the 10th. No correction can be guaranteed if they are received later than that date California Southland is published monthly at Pasadena, California. One dollar and twenty-five cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be changed as many times as desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the change is made.

Entered as second class matter, July 28, 1919, at the Post Office at Pasadena, California, under act of March 3, 1879.

Clubs

VALLEY HUNT CLUB, PASADENA:
The announcements for May include:
Bridge Luncheon, 1 o'clock, Monday, the 3rd.
Bridge Tea, 2:30 o'clock, 10th, 17th, and 25th.
Evening Bridge, 8 o'clock, 21st.
Sunday evening suppers discontinued for the season.
Opening May 2nd, a special Club Luncheon will be served every Sunday from 12 to 2 o'clock.

ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB, PASADENA:
The afternoon bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been discontinued for the season, but tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged, followed by tea.
Table d'hote dinner served in dining room every Sunday from 12 to 3 p. m.

LOS ANGELES COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.
Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 .p m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month.
Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturday during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.

MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday in each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Dancing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday.
Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.

LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week, Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal.
Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL COUNTRY CLUB:
A dinner dance is arranged for the third Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a. m., and not before two p. m.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB, SANTA BARBARA:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A recent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a special luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served.

Where the Treasures of a Collector May Be Purchased as Gifts

A. Schmidt & Son

For Fifty-six Years

IMPORTERS OF ANTIQUE AND MODERN SILVER AND Sheffield Plate, Fine China and Glass

2320 W. Seventh St., Los Angeles

391 E. Colorado St., Pasadena

Boston New York Washington

PALOS VERDES GOLF CLUB:
Offers an eighteen hole, all grass, seaside course, delightful for all the year play.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Lunch and dinner served every day.

PASADENA GOLF CLUB:
Wednesday is Ladies' Day, with cards and mah jongg from two to four-thirty, when tea is served.
Dinner will be served on Sunday from five-thirty to seven-thirty. The usual luncheon and dinner service will prevail through the week.

Music

THE PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA OF LOS ANGELES, W. A. Clark, Jr., founder, Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor, closed the seventh orchestral season with the presentation of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, at the Shrine Auditorium, last month. This was a notable musical event, the full orchestra appeared, with a chorus of two hundred voices; the soloists included Claire Dux, Helen Marsh, Edmund Johnson and Royal Dadmun. There is a possibility that next season the Saturday night concerts may be changed to Thursday nights in the regular winter series. The advisory board is securing an expression of opinion in regard to this from the regular subscribers and music lovers in general. In any event the afternoon performances will be given on Friday. The symphony concerts for next season are scheduled to open, barring the proposed change in date, October 22 and 23, continuing two concerts bi-weekly to April 22 and 23. The bi-weekly Sunday afternoon concerts will extend from October 31 to April 24.

THE LUBOVISKI TRIO, Calmon Luboviski, violin; Misha Gegna, 'cello, and Claire Mellonino, pianist, will appear in a concert at the Ebel Club Auditorium, Tuesday, May 4.

HOLLYWOOD COMMUNITY ORCHESTRA, conducted by Jay Plowe, and numbering fifty players, announces a second concert for May 7.

AUDITORIUM ARTIST SERIES, George Leslie Smith, manager, announces the engagement of the following artists for next season: Louise Homer, contralto; Mary Lewis, soprano; Albert Spalding, violinist; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone; Kathryn Meisle, contralto; Florence Austral, dramatic soprano; Alexander Brailowsky, pianist; Elschuco Trio, Charles Hackett, tenor, and the Ukrainian National Chorus.

THE OJAI CHAMBER MUSIC FESTIVAL of last month was patterned after similar events in Pittsfield, Mass., and in Washington, D. C., conceived and carried out by Mrs. F. S. Coolidge of Boston. Frank Jefferson Frost made the festival possible in Ojai, with the collaboration of Mrs. Coolidge. Albert Huybrechts of Belgium, was awarded the prize for the best quartet submitted, with honorable mention of Arthur Farwell of Pasadena, and Jean Rivier of Paris. Mr. Farwell was the only American to be mentioned, out of seventy who entered manuscripts. His quartet is called "The Hako" and was inspired by an ancient ceremony of the Pawnee tribe.

L. E. BEHYMER in announcing events for the season of 1926-27, Tuesday and Thursday evening Artist Courses, includes Chaliapin and his company; Rosa Ponselle; Schipa, Galli-Curci, Garveure, Russian Symphonic Choir, Tosca Seidel, Mario Chamlee, Claussen, Mordkin Ballet, Grainger, Isa Kremer, and as alternatives, Maier and Pattison or Zimbalist, Lhevinne or Cortot, Mero or Gabrilowitsch, and probably Jeritza.

HOLLYWOOD BOWL ASSOCIATION announces that prior to beginning the fifth season of "Symphonies under the Stars" a dedicatory benefit will be given. The regular concert season opens July 6. Emil Oberhoffer will conduct during the first two weeks. Sir Henry Wood, who directed the Hollywood Bowl orchestra in four concerts, will again be a guest conductor for the third and fourth weeks of the season. William van Hoogstraten, is another visiting conductor, and Alfred Hertz, the pioneer conductor of the Bowl orchestra, will close the summer series. The Bowl concerts, as in former years, will be held on Tuesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:30.

THE LOS ANGELES TRIO, May MacDonald Hope, founder, Sylvian Noack and Illya Bronson, gave the final concert of the eighth season in Los Angeles, April 29. All the concerts of this winter have been most successful and have filled the Music Room of the Biltmore with appreciative audiences.

THE CIVIC BUREAU OF MUSIC AND ART is rapidly developing a department of industrial music equaling that of any other center. Miss Antoinette Sabel is the executive director of the Civic Bureau, and both State and National chairman of Industrial Music of the Federated Music Clubs.

AN EISTEDDFOD FEATURE is that the winners of the Los Angeles contests will compete with the winners of other district Eisteddfods; the final contests to take place in Los Angeles, May 14 to 22, opening with college glee club contests.

SAN FRANCISCO MUSIC WEEK, May 2 to 8, will include programs every day and evening at the Civic Auditorium, while musical events will be held generally throughout the city.

HOLLYWOOD BOWL OPERA will precede the summer symphony concerts. The Metropolitan success, "Coq D'Or," will be given June 21, and on June 22 a double bill consisting of "Petrouschka" and Charles Wakefield Cadman's Indian opera, "Shanewis". These performances will be under the joint direction of Gaetano Merola of San Francisco and L. E. Behymer.

MARCELLA CRAFT, after studying in Europe and singing for several seasons in the Munich Opera, is returning this month for a visit to her mother in Riverside. A civic reception is planned in her honor.

LOEW'S STATE THEATER, Los Angeles, has been offering very worthwhile concerts at noon on Sundays, preceding the regular performance. The orchestra is enlarged for these concerts, and members of the Fine Arts Club frequently appear as soloists. The Opera Octet of Los Angeles made its first public appearance at one of these noon concerts early in April. These members of the Los Angeles Grand Opera Association Chorus, drilled by Spadoni and Richard Hagemen, are rapidly making a place for themselves in the musical field.

FRIEDA PEYCKE, after a five months' world tour, is at home and has reopened her studio on South Figueroa street, Los Angeles. A new collection of her "musically illustrated readings" is eagerly anticipated.

THE AMERICAN GUILD OF ORGANISTS will hold the fifth general convention in Buffalo, N. Y., June 1-2-3. This occasion will mark the thirtieth anniversary of the founding of the Guild.

CHARLES WAKEFIELD CADMAN'S unpublished operetta, "The Maid of Niagara," is scheduled for a first production by the senior glee clubs of the Los Angeles High School, about the middle of the month, under the direction of Verna C. Blythe.

Pomona College, Claremont

THE MUSIC AND DRAMA PROGRAM for the month of May in Claremont and vicinity will be opened by the annual Women's day on May 1 and the presenta tion of the May Masque, "Hansel and Gretel", by a cast of over 100 girls. The Masque will be presented in the Greek theater at 4:15 p. m.

On the nights of May 7 and 8 the Pomona College men's glee club presents its annual home concert, featured by an original presentation of an early California scene in which Friars, Indians and early settlers take part. The concerts will be given in Bridges Hall of Music at 8:15.

Under the direction of Reginald Pole, nationally known actor and former director of the Pilgrimage Play of Hollywood, Henry IV will be presented as the annual Pomona College Shakespearean play at 8:15 p. m. in Bridges Hall of Music, May 14. The play is the sixth number on the Music and Drama course.

Pomona College symphony orchestra, directed by Ralph Uniacke, presents its only concert on the local campus May 21 at 8 p. m. in Bridges Hall.

A number of recitals by music department students and faculty are scheduled for the month on Mondays, May 3, 10, 17, 24, and 31 and on Thursday, May 27. All of the recitals are open to the public and are given in Bridges Hall of Music at 7:15 p. m.

S. C. Evans will speak on the Boulder dam project in Holmes Hall at 7:30 on the night of Thursday, May 20.

Gamma chapter of Phi Beta Kappa will hold its initiation and banquet at Pomona College Saturday, May 22.

Whittier Day will be observed on the Pomona College campus Thursday, May 13. Friends of the college resident in Whittier will spend the day on the campus visiting classes and hearing of development plans for the institution.

University of California Southern Branch

FRIDAY, April 30, Junior Prom at the Hotel Huntington.

Wednesday, May 12, Associated Students assembly with Frederick Warde as the principal speaker.

May 20-21-22, Performances of annual Greek Play in Millspaugh Auditorium by Drama classes of the University. "Alcestis," by Euripides.

Friday, May 28, Associated Students Assembly. Last of year.

Sunday, June 6, Baccalaureate Service in Millspaugh Hall. Bishop Stevens of St. Paul's Cathedral officiating.

Thursday, June 10, Class Day Exercises on the new site of the University at Westwood with Dr. Moore speaking and program arranged by prominent students of the graduating class. Presentation of class gift. Tree-planting ceremony, with Frank Balthis, president of class, officiating. Senior Ball in the evening.

Friday, June 11, The Sixth annual Southern Branch Commencement. (Approximately 300 graduates.)

The

Serendipity Antique Shop

PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

Southern California has attained a nation-wide reputation for the achievements of her architects the past decade. Here climate and wealth combine to give free hand to a group of brilliant young artists.

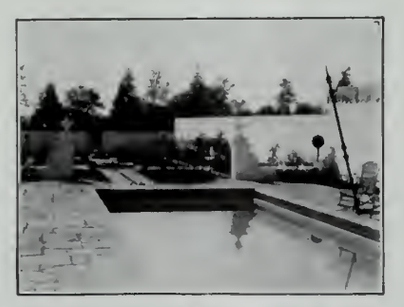
Nowhere are homes more beautiful, or settings more perfect. But all the artistry and skill of architect and landscape gardener fall short of ultimate perfection without the informed co-operation of the interior decorator.

Sensing something of this need, THE SERENDIPITY ANTIQUE SHOP has, within the year, added a fully equipped department of

INTERIOR DECORATION

This department gives fullest co-operation to the Architect while it meets the specific requirements of each individual client.

Telephone Terrace 3509
Cable Address "Serendipity"
Bentley Code



London Agency
G. C. Beresford
20 Yeoman's Row

BRADFORD PERIN, Proprietor

WESTERN TILE AND MARBLE COMPANY, INC.

Bathrooms and Accessories

Tile Garden Pools

Fountains and Benches

Importers of Spanish, Mexican and Italian Tiles

Show Rooms 386 South Raymond Ave., Pasadena
Telephones: Fair Oaks 3157; Terrace 3158

Eleanor and . . . .

Hollingsworth Beach

French and Italian Arts

630 East Colorado Street

Pasadena,

California

Mills College, California

THE SENIORS of Mills College, California, are presenting as their annual May Pageant this year, "The Land of the Vanished People," a theme written by two members of the senior class. The pageant will be presented Saturday afternoon, May 14, as a part of the Commencement Week program. The two seniors whose pageant was chosen in the competitive themes offered are both Californians, Miss Harriet Schneider of Berkeley and Miss Virginia Brown of Los Angeles. "The Land of Vanished People" centers about Indian Mythology and Mexican lore. These annual festivals, held on the Mills College campus during the spring are presented on the shores of Lake Aliso, the campus lake, a particularly beautiful and artistic setting, for the small body of water is surrounded by tall eucalyptus trees and spreading oaks mirrored in the waters of the lake. The trees, the high sky line, the paths and road ways, the broad platform built out over the water, and the use of the water itself, make the setting ideal for the thousands of spectators seated on the opposite shore from the players. As the pageant is given in pantomime, there are no sounds save the strains of the orchestra, which is concealed behind shrubbery.

Sixtieth Annual Commencement, April 28 to May 17, 1926:

April 28, Wednesday—Concert, presentation of Original Compositions by students in Theory of Music, Lisser Hall.

April 30, Friday—Concert, interpretation of Classical Compositions by students in the department of Music, Lisser Hall.

May 13, Thursday—College Picnic, Lantern Pilgrimage, auspices Class of 1928. Students, alumnae, faculty, and trustees welcome, Prospect Hill.

May 14, Friday—President's Breakfast for the seniors, President's Garden; Class-Day Exercises, The Oval; Registration of Alumnae, Mills Hall; Alumnae-Senior Luncheon; College Dinner, Hotel Oakland.

May 15, Saturday—Alumnae Meeting, Toyon Hall; Alumnae Parade, The Oval; Alumnae Luncheon, Alumnae Hall; Senior Pageant, "The Land of the Vanished People," Lake Aliso; Senior Ball, Alumnae Hall.

May 16, Sunday—Reunion Class Breakfasts; Baccalaureate Sermon, the President of the College, Lisser Hall; Organ Recital, Mr. and Mrs. Carruth, Lisser Hall; The President's Open House.

May 17, Monday—Sixtieth Annual Commencement. Speaker: The Right Reverend Walter Taylor Sumner. Luncheon, Warren Olney Hall, for faculty, trustees and alumnae; Mills Hall, for students, seniors, and their guests.

Occidental College

WALTER E. HARTLEY, leading organist on the Pacific Coast, as newly announced head of the department of music which is being established at Occidental College, is selecting members of a staff who shall offer a strong course at the Eagle Rock campus next fall. Edith Dykstra Hartley, his wife, will assume direction of the Occidental Hillside Theater and expects to bring such events to the charming bowl as shall build up a cultural reputation for the verdure-staged open air auditorium.

Occidental college events for May include the institution of the Phi Beta Kappa, Gamma Chapter, May 12, when the public is invited for the address of Dean Henry R. Hatfield of the University of California at Alumni Hall in the evening; the Faculty Women's Club tea for senior women May 28; the Junior-Senior banquet May 28 and Memorial Day Vesper Services in the College Chapel May 30.

Occidental College invited friends to be present at the exercises in commemoration of Founders' Day, Wednesday, April 21. The service of the candles took place in Alumni Hall, at 2:30 o'clock, followed by the Founder's Day address and the announcement of gifts at 3:00 o'clock. At 4:00 o'clock there was a reception in Eldridge Fowler Hall in honor of the alumni and friends, and at 6:00 o'clock the Founders' Day banquet was given in the commons.

University of Southern California

HERBERT ADAMS GIBBONS, lecturer and writer on international affairs, honorary professor at the Army War College at Washington, D. C., editorial advisor of The Century Company, and president of the Persia Society of America, is to come to the University of Southern California as a visiting professor for the 1926 Summer Session. "The Italian Reorganization from Mazzini to Mussolini" is one of the three lecture courses to be conducted this summer by Dr. Gibbons, who lived in France throughout the five years of war and peace negotiations. "The Near East" is a second history lecture course to be conducted by Dr. Gibbons, and a seminar on "Forms of Representative Governments in Europe" is also to be headed by the noted international authority. Among the books in the field of diplomacy authored by Dr. Gibbons are "The New May of Europe," "Europe Since 1918," "France and Ourselves," "The New Map of Asia," "Reconstruction of Poland and the Near East," "Paris Reborn," "The Blackest Page of Modern History."

Garden Pottery For the California Home

California Garden Pergola with Terra-Cotta Garden Pots

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO.

LOS ANGELES OFFICE: 621 SOUTH HOPE STREET
TROPICO PLANT: GLENDALE, LOS ANGELES COUNTY

Low Fares Back East

Effective May 22

Summer Excursion Roundtrip to—

Chicago - - - - - - - - $90.30
*New York - - - - - - - $151.70

Atlanta, Ga. - - -	$113.60	Montreal, Que. - - -	$148.72
Atlantic City, N. J. - -	153.34	Minneapolis, Minn. - -	91.90
Boston, Mass. - - - -	157.76	New Orleans, La. - - -	89.40
Dallas, Tex. - - - -	75.60	Niagara Falls, N. Y. - -	124.92
Des Moines, Iowa - -	81.55	Oklahoma City, Okla. -	75.60
Jacksonville, Fla. - -	124.68	St. Paul, Minn. - - - -	91.90
Kansas City, Mo. - - -	75.60	St. Louis, Mo. - - - -	85.60
Memphis, Tenn. - - -	89.40	Washington, D. C. - -	143.12

Similar reductions to many other places. Return limit, October 31.

Four Scenic Routes—Famous trains daily direct to eastern cities with convenient connections to all points

SOUTHERN PACIFIC LINES

Ask about Southern Pacific's new Great Circle Tour

—around the United States for but a few dollars more than the roundtrip direct route fare to New York.

Southern Pacific Lines

C. L. McFaul, Assistant Passenger Traffic Manager
Los Angeles, Calif.

The lighting fixtures for the California Security Loan and Trust Company were designed and made by

WILKINSON-SCOTT COMPANY
Established 1888
Colorado 346 Pasadena 176 East Union St.

LOS ANGELES MUSEUM OF HISTORY, SCIENCE AND ART, Exposition Park: The Seventh Annual Exhibition of the Painters and Sculptors of Southern California will continue through May. This is the annual open art show held by the Museum to which all California artists are entitled to send their work. In addition to the paintings and sculpture a few miniatures are shown.

Ivan Mestrovic, one of the great sculptors of the present time, a native of Jugo-Slavia, is showing during the month a collection of his wood carvings, bronzes and marbles. Mestrovic is a powerful creator, whether it be in low-relief carving on wood, in full relief carving in marble, or high relief molding in bronze. He is very simple, very elemental, and one feels instantly the sincerity out of which his work springs. In addition to the sculpture there are drawings by the artist, which add interest to the exhibition.

Collection of Chinese porcelains and brauzes, known as the A. Burlingame Johnson collection, has been installed in the room in the new wing of the building constructed for it, and was opened to the public last month. This group of porcelains is probably the largest and most important single collection in the country. To the student this collection will afford opportunity for comparative study of the glazes, colors and shapes of porcelains in the Sung, Ming, Kung-he and Yung-Ching periods, many specimens being from the Imperial collection, naturally represent the highest achievement of the potters. In addition to the porcelains, there are bronzes, embroideries and robes. The Johnson room opens from the Harrison Gallery.

SOUTHWEST MUSEUM, Los Angeles, announces that the third annual Exhibit of Landscape Architecture and Garden Sculpture will be held in the Casa Adobe of the Southwest Museum, 4603 Pasadena Avenue, from May 10 to June 10, under the auspices of the Pacific Coast Chapter of the American Society of Landscape Architects and the Sculptors Guild of Southern California. The main classifications are: City Planning and Parks; Subdivisions; Country Club Development; Institutional Development; Residential Development; Garden Sculpture; Area Models. Photographs will also be shown illustrating creative work of the Landscape Architect. The space allottment Committee is as follows: Charles G. Adams, Chairman, Landscape Architect; Major George W. Gibbs, Jr., Landscape Architect; Wilbur D. Cook, Landscape Architect; Maud Daggett, Sculptor; Roger N. Burnham, Sculptor.

IN THE CANNELL AND CHAFFIN GALLERIES in Los Angeles the retrospective exhibition of the works of Hovsep Pushman will remain until May 8th. This affords an opportunity for art lovers of Southern California to secure an example of the consummate skill of Pushman's gems of his still life and his unrivalled depiction of Nubian and Oriental figures.

Beginning May 10th, the galleries will place on exhibition a group of selected paintings by fifteen of the leading artists of Southern Califorain. In putting on this exhibition every effort has been made to offer to art lovers of Southern California the best and most representative examples of the recent work of these several painters. Each canvas has been selected not only for its own particular charm and power, but for its individual expression as a picture suitable to the home, together with its appeal to the critic and connoisseur. There will be two sizes shown either one of which is delightfully proportioned to home requirements.

STENDAHL ART GALLERIES, AMBASSADOR HOTEL, LOS ANGELES, will continue the William Wendt exhibition, which is giving so much pleasure and is so successful from the point of sales, through the first half of May. During the last half of the month, opening the 15, the work of Edgar Payne will be shown.

THE PRINT ROOMS, Hollywood, according to a recently established policy, will show the work of an artist for one day and one evening only. Under this arrangement the desert scenes and landscapes of Mrs. Mary Maison will be shown May 8. The Print Rooms have recently added to their valuable collection of prints a rare Rembrandt, which will be shown during May.

AINSLIE GALLERIES, second floor, Barker Bros., Los Angeles, is a branch of the well known Ainslie galleries of New York. During May a group of California artists will exhibit in the larger gallery, while in one of the smaller galleries the European landscapes of Burse Miller will be shown, these are new, not previously exhibited. The exhibition of architectural photography will continue to May 8. One gallery is always given to the work of Eastern and European artists. Ainslie exhibits only oil paintings.

THE PRINT ROOM of the Cannell and Chaffin Galleries will display colored etchings by Simon, one of the foremost of the French etchers. The etchings cover a wide range of territory, from Prague to Morocco, from Paris to Amsterdam. The Parisian ones are brilliant bits of metropolitan life, transferred to paper by the talent of Simon.

BILTMORE SALON, Biltmore Hotel, Los Angeles, will continue the exhibition of the work of Jack Wilkinson Smith through May 19. From the 19 to the 24 Frank Tenney Johnson will show recent paintings, and from the 24 to June 7, the work of Thomas E. Hunt will contrast his Eastern and his Western things.

THE WILLIAM WENDT EXHIBITION at the Stendahl Galleries, Ambassador, Los Angeles, has given everyone an opportunity to know the work of this famous American, through this and only large and really representative show he has ever held in California. The book published by the Stendahl galleries co-incident with the show carries sixty-five reproductions of the work of Mr. Wendt and makes a very valuable volume.

BERNAYS, 2501 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles, is showing the work of Daisy Hughes during the first half of May, while the last half will be given to a Thumb Box exhibition of the work of Raymond Nott.

THE PICTORIAL PHOTOGRAPHERS, at least a group of them, exhibited very interesting work at the Public Library in Hollywood recently, showing the unlimited possibilities of the camera when used understandingly, with a mind back of it and an imagination. The artists exhibiting were Margaret Craig, William A. Clark, Viroque Baker, Ernest M. Pratt, Fred Archer, Philip R. du Bois, Ernest Sheehan.

AARON KILPATRICK is planning a return visit to old Mexico to add to his sketches and paintings in that locality he found so delightful.

CLYDE FORSYTHE, accompanied by Mrs. Forsythe, is in New York for a six weeks' visit.

KATHERYN LEIGHTON is making a short visit to New York before planning her vacation trip, which is always filled with work.

F. TENNEY JOHNSON is at work on the murals which he is doing for the Carthy Circle theater in conjunction with Alson Clark.

THE BILTMORE SALON has added an unusually interesting Remiagton to their collection.

HELEN WHISTLER, after a six month's stay in Arizoaa and New Mexico, is again in charge of the galleries of the Biltmore Salon.

PASADENA ART INSTITUTE, Carmelita Gardens, Pasadena, will show, as usual, the work of Pasadena artists in one room, aaother room will be filled with the paintings of Maurice Braun, and Nell Walker Warner will show in another gallery. Philip Matzinger, Joha Christian Smith, and A. Franquinet will exhibit in the remaining rooms, during the month.

THE SCULPTORS' GUILD OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA has issued invitations to the opening, Saturday evening, May first, at eight o'clock, of an exhibit in the Assembly Hall, Eighth Floor, Chamber of Commerce Building, Los Angeles, Twelfth Street between Broadway and Hill. Exhibit open daily except Sunday from May first to thirteenth, between the hours of ten and five.

XVIth, XVIIth and XVIIIth Century

French, Italian, English and Spanish Furniture

Lamps, Venetian Glass, Prints and Paintings

Exhibition of Selected Paintings by Fifteen Leading Artists of Southern California in our Los Angeles Galleries, opening May 1st.

Cannell and Chaffin, Inc.

397 East Colorado St.
Hotel Maryland, Pasadena

720 W. Seventh St.
Los Angeles, Calif.

The Arts and Crafts Society of Southern California

SPANISH GARDEN FETE given by Mrs. A. B. Smith and Mrs. C. L. Powell at the home of Mrs. Smith, 227 South Lucerne Boulevard, Sunday afternoon, May twenty-third, 3 to 6 o'clock.

The membership drive is on. Mr. Follett, the shop manager, will supply circular letters explaining the purpose of Arts and Crafts, to send to your friends. Your co-operation is needed to increase the membership and enlarge the scope of the Society activities.

A $5000 prize for the best landscape in oil depicting Texas wild flowers is offered by The Art League of San Antonio, Texas. For further information apply to Mrs. Henry Drought, president of The Art League, San Antonio, Texas.

Announcements

PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYERS announce programs for the month: May 3 to 8: "A Soul for Mary Jane," a fanciful play, an adaptation from Hans Christian Anderson. This will be preceded by a curtain raiser, a Chinese play, "Amaranth." May 13 to 22: "The Potters" by J. P. McEvoy. Matinees on Saturday only.

DR. JAMES A. B. SCHERER has assumed the directorship of the Southwest Museum. Dr. Scherer was president of Throop College, Pasadena, for twelve years, and under his rule it grew into the California Institute of Technology, an institution of unquestioned standing.

THE CITIZENS' ART COMMITTEE, Los Angeles, with headquarters in the Biltmore, is planning to raise money by popular subscription to purchase the Stillwell art collection for the city of Los Angeles.

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA, announces the regular monthly Round Table Luncheon will be held in the Studio Tea Room at the Community House on Tuesday, May 4, 1926,

El Paseo Patio

Lunch Out of Doors or Dine

at

"EL PASEO"

23 E. de la Guerra St.

Santa Barbara

MARINA FLINT

Studio 114 on Tea Room Balcony

Lamp Shades

Kimonos and Chinese Negligees Made to Order

B. CROFTON ATKINS

Pipe and Tobacco Shop

And Men's Imported Clothing

Studio 29, de la Guerra Studios

TECOLOTE

Bookshop and Lending Library

New and Standard Books

25 DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS

SANTA BARBARA

DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS SANTA BARBARA

THE LOVELY SHOPPING STREET IN SPAIN

EL PASEO SERENADERS

PLAY

OLD TIME MELODIES AND SONGS

DURING DINNER

AT

EL PASEO

For Special Engagements—12½ W. Carrillo

Loring Andrews—E. C. Peters—Vences Los Kedrina

SPUNWOVEN

"THE GYPSY SHOP"

Hand Fabrics

BETH AND IAN M. WOLFE

Studio 32, de la Guerra Studios

ELEANOR JOHNSON

Studio for the Voice

Suite 103, de la Guerra Studios

Community Arts Association

SANTA BARBARA SCHOOL OF THE ARTS

FRANK MORLEY FLETCHER, DIRECTOR

GRAPHIC, DECORATIVE AND PLASTIC ARTS — DRAMA. MUSIC. DANCING

Semester October-May. Summer School six weeks July-August

Address 916 Santa Barbara Street, Santa Barbara, Calif.

EL ENCINO

On Coast Highway, Montecito, Calif.

Luncheon

Afternoon Tea

Supper

Limited Number of Over Night Guests Accommodated

Hand Made

Mexican Glass, Pottery and Furniture

India Drugget Rugs

ROBERT L. LEWIS

Studio 5 at 11 East de la Guerra

Santa Barbara, California

Miss Chloë Kubert

DANSEUSE

Lessons by appointment

101 de la Guerra Studios

SANTA BARBARA ART CLUB

No. 15 E. de la Guerra Street

Free Exhibition of Paintings and Etchings

Open Daily 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Paintings and Etchings for sale

El Paseo de las Flores

Distinctive Flower Merchants

The Same Bluebird Limousine Taxi Service

which we are giving in Montecito is now

Available in Santa Barbara

Smart Motor Cars of all types with or without Drivers

The same familiar Phone Number

50-50

Our new low rate includes ONE TO FOUR PERSONS

Mt. LOWE

"Earth has no finer view to show."

Mt. LOWE TAVERN and Cottages
Enlarged and Improved

at the terminus of this World-Famous Trip afford a most delightful retreat for a long or short sojourn at reasonable rates

5 Trains Daily at convenient hours - from Main St. Station Los Angeles

$2.50 Round Trip Rate

For information and Reservations apply

Pacific Electric Ry.

Information Bureau Phone MEtropolitan 100-TRinity 3661

HOTEL GREEN

A well ordered Residential and Tourist Hotel of peculiar excellence. Open all year. Moderate rates. Apartments by the month.

The Green Tea Pot
A Convenient Restaurant
CHARLES B. HERVEY, Proprietor

La Solana

A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue.

Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day.

Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St.
Pasadena

KIEVITS GALLERIES
Vista del Arroyo Hotel, Pasadena
European and American Paintings

A FEW COMPLETE FILES OF CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
May now be secured by those who wish to bind them or for libraries. 72 numbers for $7.50 postpaid. A discount of $2.00 will be given for any set not requiring No. 3.

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - - Editor and Publisher
ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - - Associate Editor

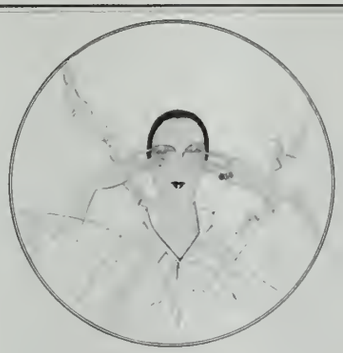
No. 77 MAY, 1926 Vol. VIII



CONTENTS

	PAGE
THE ROTUNDA OF THE NEW LIBRARY, LOS ANGELES.....Cover Design (A Rendering of the Mural Painting of Julian E. Garnsey)
SOUTHLAND CALENDAR.....Ellen Leech	3, 4, 5, 6
THE HISTORIC MERCED.....Edith R. Thomas	9
HEADQUARTERS FOR THE GARDEN CLUB OF AMERICA.....	11
THE REPORT FROM SANTA BARBARA.....E. B. Bissell	12
RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS.....Louise Morgrage	14
THE ART OF JULIAN ELLSWORTH GARNSEY.....	15
DOWN THE STREET IN SEARCH OF BEAUTY.....	16
SOUTHLAND OPINION	18-19
JUNIOR LEAGUE AND AMATEUR HORSE SHOW.....	20
SPORTS AT CORONADO.....	21
LOS ANGELES CHAPTER A. I. A.....H. O. Sexsmith	22
SAVING THE GOLDEN EGGS.....Theresa Homet Patterson	24
BULLETIN OF THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB.....	23
MUSIC AND ART IN LOS ANGELES.....	25
EL ENCANTO HOTEL, SANTA BARBARA.....	27
THE CALIFORNIA COTTAGE TYPE.....Richard Seares	28
THE ARTS AND CRAFTS—TEXTILES.....Natalie White	29
THE LOTUS PEOPLE.....Fairfax Proudfit Walkup	30
ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.....	32
NOTES FOR CONNOISSEURS.....Saxe Brainerd	34

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.

Copyrighted, 1926, by M. Urmy Seares

Subscription price $2.50 per year, $1.25 one half year
RALPH B. URMY, JR., ADVERTISING MANAGER
MAIL ADDRESS: CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
Mrs. D. B. Sebastian, Box 296, Hollywood, National Representative
Advertisers desiring information concerning space or rates may call Fair Oaks 7034 for Publisher's Office
During Press Week, 24th to 30th, call TRinity 1501

The Los Angeles

Elizabeth Arden Salon

with

J. W. ROBINSON CO.

LOS ANGELES

UNDER the direct management of Miss Arden and her New York staff, and offering the same specialized treatments which have made Miss Arden's other salons internationally known.

Seventh Floor

WORLD CRUISES

Extraordinary Itineraries New Zealand and Southern Hemispheres.
Here for your convenvenience.
Book now for Winter Cruises.
Information and Reservations on all Round the World and Mediterranean Cruises.

C. J. Jones Steamship Agency
372 East Colorado Street
Pasadena, California

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Italian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

CLARENCE C. KNIGHT
REALTOR
"Worth While Homes"
112 East Figueroa St. Phone 105
Santa Barbara, California

The Mansfield Studios

Interiors designed and executed—Embroideries—Textiles

Pasadena WAshington 3473

Altadena Office Under Direction of Mrs. Samuel Lee Bierbauer
Colo. 2015

PORTRAITS
BY
PHOTOGRAPHY

Charles S. Seabolt
26 No. Los Robles Avenue,
Pasadena, California
Opposite Maryland Hotel
Terrace 6712

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

THE HISTORIC MERCED

By EDITH R. THOMAS

PERHAPS no other part of California retains such romance and wealth of tradition as that along the Merced river just where it emerges from the Yosemite Valley. Its first authentic history dates back something less than a century; but in that time it has been fought for, bled for, litigated for, and died for. Today, however, a graveyard quiet—broken only by the rumble of passing trains, and of course the never-ceasing song of the Merced—pervades the seventy miles of canyon where all this excitement took place.

Nurtured by the glaciers and snows of the high Sierra, whose waters find their way into the Yosemite by simply tumbling over the cliffs, some of which are half a mile high, is it any wonder that the Merced enters the outside world with a song on its lips? There is no wild outburst of jubilee as one might expect as it dashes and foams over its rocky bed, but its tones subdued to a minor key fascinate as if by enchantment. And its sprayless foam, sinking back constantly upon itself, but furthers the impression already gained, that it is the bearer of a secret. It is not very wide, the Merced, nor yet for the most of its course deep. One might traverse its course for long stretches on protruding boulders, without as much as wetting one's feet. And then again, where the rock walls of some narrow gorge straighten its meandering course, its fascinating light green waters will reach a depth of twenty feet. Its panorama of dun-colored slopes, dotted with the dark-green of black oak, juniper and manzanita, is no longer left solely to wandering prospector or aborigine to enjoy, for one can read its history and catch the portent of the Merced's song, from the train windows in passing.

After having traversed a rolling stretch of country whose olive, fig and grape orchards vary the scene, the river's course becomes more tortuous. And as we ascend towards its source, little by little its rumble takes on an insistent ring which soon supercedes all other sounds around and you catch yourself listening, ... listening. The habit becomes fixed with the increasing distance. Presently you are lulled into a state of dreamy repose. Idly you watch the hills crowd down upon the river as if with a protective right. Their tawny sides, bristling with tip-tilted angular rocks and sawtooth ridges here and there buttress the stream with perpendicular rock walls that have to be spanned by cable bridges to enable isolated homesteaders to cross. Another turn in the road discloses the fact that these hillsides have been defaced by the hand of man in the none too distant past. For scattered over their scarred and battered slopes to the right are old brick chimneys and delapidated mine-workings that breath an air of '49. Indeed it was right here along these selfsame slopes and rocky gorges that the "Forty-niners," up to the number of fifteen thousand, were encamped at one time. Today the naked hills hem in a scene fraught with naught but desolation and silence.

Silence, did I say? Why, the whole canyon is peopled with shades of the past! Up and down the old water conduits that parallel the stream for miles along the hillside, they go. Around the dilapidated mills, sluices and gravel dumps in the river bed, you can see them. And at one poor, old, roofless, windowless shack that still shows signs of having been protected in the heyday of its calling—it was a stronghold for gold—by iron doors and shutters, you glimpse tragedy.

AFTER LEAVING THE YOSEMITE VALLEY THE BRIGHT WATERS OF THE MERCED RIVER FLOW DOWN TO CALIFORNIA'S GREAT CENTRAL VALLEY, BETWEEN ALDERS AND OAKS AND A DEEP FOREST UNKNOWN TO THE ARID REGIONS TO THE SOUTH OF TEHACHEPI

Pause a moment before its crumbling remains. What hope, joy, despair and utter dejection its very presence must have evoked: In that ghostly tide that surges to and flows from its door, the life history of each individual there is depicted on his face. The self-satisfied rugged miners whose sheer power of will has made them Bonanza kings, and none the less easily recognized than the ones whose lack of that force has left them failures. And see the conscious-stricken, bent, old man that has just been turned from the bank! Nothing is left for him but to begin again with his pan. Yesterday the world was his; and wife, daughter, mother and the rest about to set forth on the highway to join him. Bah! he is only one of a myriad that now loom up before us; men who lost their all to the camp wolves; the professional gamblers who battened and fattened off the hard-working miner.

If you listen now you can also hear the faint echoes of strenuous picks and shovels, coming from down there by the river where dripping, dirty, perspiring forms come and go as though irristibly drawn by the force of unchecked earthly desires. In their eager search for the yellow flakes of gold, tons and countless of tons of gravel are being sluiced off into the river. Long-toms, cradles, gold-borers, pans and wing-dams are again requisitioned to their use. Ditches are dug, aqueducts constructed through canyon and gorge, and great streams of water turned into monster flumes to do service in laying bare the bedrock where nature has been generous enough to make it accessible.

What fiery visions, both by day and night, must have lured on this multitude, to have made them dig, sweat and labor as men have seldom labored voluntarily before! What god was this that manifested and caused them to leave home, family and all they held dear and follow him? Was it the same that had lured the Spaniards to these shores? The god that had enticed Balboa to the Pacific, Cortez to Mexico and Pizzaro to Peru? Was his this same gleaming aura that had served as a beacon light to explorers and exploiters alike in that none too distant past? It would seem so. And that here again he had chosen to reveal himself in his old alluring form and man had again fallen into the snare. The sordid farce of it all! That man should have sold his very life and all that was dear to him, for a glimpse of that shining robe.

Maybe in this world, where we know nothing happens by chance, this was but one of the Creator's ways of sorting the wheat from the chaff. A fire test of character; a golden mill through which the crude ore was to be tried. That many upon many fell off to the left, the heart-breaking records of '49 reveal. But be it to man's credit in this purifying stage of his career, the right hand was even better represented. For was it not out of this right hand material that God saw fit to found this Golden State? And the Merced, the river of mercy, flows on—murmuring of the heroic past.

VERNAL FALLS WHERE THE MERCED RIVER COMES INTO YOSEMITE VALLEY. ONE OF A SERIES OF EXCELLENT VIEWS OF CALIFORNIA'S SCENIC SPOTS, TAKEN BY FREDERICK W. MARTIN, PASADENA, CALIF.

THE FIELD OF THE LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT

A continuation of the discussion begun in the April number.

Quotation taken from speech by Mr. Burnham at dinner given in his honor in the Madison Square Concert Hall on March 25, 1893.

Each of you knows the name and genius of him who stands first in the heart and confidence of American artists, the creator of your own parks and many other city parks. He it is who has been our best adviser and our common mentor. In the highest sense he is the planner of the Exposition—Frederick Law Olmsted. No word of his has fallen to the ground among us since first he joined us some thirty months ago. An artist, he paints with lakes and wooded slopes; with lawns and banks and forest-covered hills; with mountain-sides and ocean views. He should stand where I do tonight, not for his deeds of later years alone, but for what his brain has wrought and his pen has taught for half a century.

IN THE ANGELUS FOREST RESERVE, ON THE SUMMIT OF MT. WILSON

Reproduced in the May, 1925, issue of The Architectural Forum (p. 288), a portion of the A. I. A. Convention Daily for Wednesday, April 22, 1925. Quotation taken from article entitled "Town Planning and Landscape Exhibits Impressive Feature—Beautiful Examples Shown of This Important Work."

The exposition is rich in its exhibits of what is regarded as landscape architecture proper. No better work in this field has ever been done than that for Boston's park system, work which transformed commonplace areas into a park system of great beauty; other fine work is that done at Graceland Cemetery, Chicago, where landscape architecture has triumphed over the ugliness of a piece of flat Illinois prairie.

Art Out-of-Doors (Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer) (1900 edition). Chapter: The Artist; p. 357.

I think that no individual success achieved on these Fair-grounds will be so fruitfully instructive as Mr. Olmsted's. Every visitor will see that, despite the practical character of the enterprise, artists were needed to manage it; he will see that when architectural works are in question the ground-plan is of primary importance; and also that in preparing it the architect requires the help of the landscape-architect. The example set by the organizers of the Fair in employing Mr. Olmsted at the very outset, and the enthusiastic recognition of his help expressed by all the artists of other kinds who have worked at the Fair, ought to bear immediate fruit all over the country, among private owners of domains wide or narrow, as well as among architects and public officials.

Town Planning Conference (London, 1910) Transactions. p. 436, 437. Chapter: Public Parks and Gardens—Their Design and Equipment. By Thomas H. Mawson, Liverpool University, Liverpool,

Boston's park system is already famous, being the most complete of any in America. It includes the greatest civic park in the world—that of the Blue Hills, third only to the great Yosemite and Niagara Falls Parks, which are deservedly described as international. Its several parks comprise all the various characteristics of pleasing scenery that Nature can show—forest, seashore, rocky and pastoral hills, and the valleys and banks of four rivers. Within eleven miles of Beacon Hill there are 15,000 acres of parks and twenty-five miles of parkways.

In the design and equipment of public parks and gardens, the most fatal mistake is the failure of municipal authorities to recognize the claims of landscape architecture. I believe I am correct in stating that (speaking for England) our public parks, which contrast so unfavourably with our private gardens, are almost entirely the work of amateurs.

Amateur garden-designers have accomplished much and given many useful lessons to the professors of the art, but not without effort, travel, study, and, above all, a genius for fine gardening. Unfortunately, such enthusiasts seldom find employment in laying out public parks.

In this connection it is interesting to note that in the permanent plans for the Hollywood Bowl now being carried out by the Allied Architects Association, this, the highest authority in Los Angeles, has provided for consulting landscape architects in the development of our unique concert hall among the open hills in Hollywood.

THE HOSPITALITY OF THE HUNTINGTON IS SYMBOLIZED BY ITS SUNNY OPEN CHARACTER AND THE BROAD SWEEP OF THE WELL PLANTED HILL SIDES TO THE SOUTH.

HEADQUARTERS FOR THE GARDEN CLUB, PASADENA

THE HUNTINGTON HOTEL, CALIFORNIA

WHEN all the tourists in the world have come to California and decided to live there, that favored state will still need great hotels. Therefore the Huntington, having become acclimated and indigenous has announced its program as an all-the-year-round hotel and will remain open all summer.

This, its first summer, will be made especially interesting by the building of a large swimming pool near the tennis courts and the Japanese garden. New bungalows also are demanded by the winter guests for the coming season; and there is much planning to be done by the resident manager, Mr. Stephen Royce that this the only Linnard hotel in Pasadena, may fill its destiny as a center for Californa sports and gay summer parties for the coteries of young people who find themselves at home in its pleasant ball room and lobby.

There is an air of gracious quiet about this hotel which is partly the result of its situation on its hilltop in the midst of Oak Knoll gardens. Less busy than a down-town hotel, less obvious in its effort to entertain the guests with elaborate programs and parties, the Huntington seems to the Easterner more like the hotels of the Atlantic Coast. All the intricate service and schedule which are the functions of a fine hotel move on smoothly and without apparent effort; and the best cuisine ever established in Pasadena expertly waits upon its guests, who know a good cuisine and will come far to show their appreciation of it.

Past masters in the art of encouraging the tourist and winter colony, the hotels of southern California have easily found themselves as all-the-year-round hotels and the Huntington is the last of Pasadena's hotels to make the change. It has long been the favorite of the younger set as well as the restful retreat of the older.

College proms find its long corridors delightfully commodious and many a beautiful dance has been enjoyed by fraternity and sorority on the excellent floor of its handsome ball room.

Each generation has its favorite for tournaments and swimming contests. This year it is the Huntington which at the end of the most successful winter season it has ever had, finds itself unable to close it doors or like Aladdin's palace to disappear from the limelight.

Cool weather prolongs Pasadena's season; the schools do not close until later. Trees judiciously planted may be moderating the dryness of a semi-tropical climate, and altogether Pasadena, with the Huntington open, will add to its fame the new reputation as a summer resort where horseback riding and mountain hiking vie with tennis and swimming and motor trips to the beaches making everything all-the-year round as a matter of course.

THE STILLWELL

Talk made by Mr. Leonard Schultze of the architectural firm of Schultze and Weaver of New York at the luncheon given by the Southwest Museum to launch the work of acquiring the great Stillwell art collection for the people of Los Angeles.

I HAD the extreme pleasure last spring of spending an hour with Dr. Johnson and Mr. Phillips, inspecting the collection of various art objects gathered together by Dr. Stillwell. You have heard the description of this collection. One cannot help but be impressed with the catholicity of taste displayed in its selection.

This is a most delightful and interesting lot of paintings, carvings, brocades, metal work and similar objects, and in looking at it with the eyes of an amateur and not a connoisseur, I could not help but feel the wonderful opportunity that it gave to form an adequate foundation for a museum of the type which I feel Los Angeles should be provided with. Its acquisition would mean the start of a splendid institution with a very adequate representation of Rennaissance art along many and varied lines and would give the opportunity for establishing in Los Angeles the type of art museum which is seriously needed for the advancement of the community.

It may be interesting to know the number and varied lines of industries located in this great growing southern city which would be extremely bettered if there were some collection and some facilities provided for particular study by the men and women employed along lines of endeavor which are now seriously handicapped for the lack of proper consulting material. The function of an art museum is not, as I see it, simply to provide charming works of art for the edification of casual visitors, but to provide such material along varied lines as will assist, in their study, men and women whose daily lives are spent in the endeavor to accomplish artistic results in the course of their daily work. There are, at this time, located in the City of Los Angeles, certain industries which are in need of an institution of this kind as sorely as a chemist needs a laboratory. To enumerate a few of them, I will mention the ornamental iron workers, electric fixture designers, interior decorators, modelers, sculptors, painters, architects, draftsmen, textile designers, pottery and clay product designers, the large number of motion picture artists and decorative painters.

A PAINTING BY FAVAI, IN THE HUNTINGTON GALLERY OF JULES KIEVITS. RECENTLY PURCHASED BY AMBASSADOR FLETCHER

This institution should be located where it would most centrally serve this large number of people, who should have the benefit of daily access to its collections. It should provide, in connection with its regular work, schools of applied art for the education of men and women, along the lines mentioned above. Such schools are naturally outgrowths of the work of an institution of this character, and the success of these schools means the greater success of these various industries, and a city that provides such facilities naturally provides for its greater artistic development.

I feel that the proper growth of the community can only be arrived at through education, not alone grammar school, high school, and usual collegiate courses, but through education along lines of artistic endeavor. You have today so many various manufacturing establishments which are limited in the character of their production by insufficiency of the means of study provided that it seems wrong to permit this condition to persist, and I trust, as one deeply in sympathy with the growth of this city, that it will be possible to establish an institution of the kind that will overcome this great lack.

COLLECTION

Most of the skilled artisans and craftsmen who are employed in this country are men of foreign birth who have had their training on the other side. In other words, our work is being done by a group of soldiers of fortune, who have come here and have given us the benefit of the education and training which they have received abroad. We have passed immigration laws which make it almost impossible at this time to increase this staff of really wonderful artisans, and we are in the position today that unless we provide the facilities and the training to develop young men along these lines, in a few years we will not be able to do as good work as we are accomplishing today, which is not any too meritorious. Progress in America can come only from education. This institution should be so broad in its scope that it will provide not alone paintings and sculpture, but it should show adequate presentations of the various periods of furniture, interior decoration, textiles, carvings, metal work and all possible lines of art. This is accomplished by the greater museums of Europe, especially so by the Louvre in Paris, where every branch of artistic endeavor has its particular niche.

We cannot expect to approach these larger and older institutions, but we can provide for purposes of study many fine examples representing the real types of painting, sculpture, furniture, etc. It is not possible that all art or architectural students can go abroad to secure the training that they require, and it behooves us to provide for the great mass of people facilities which will permit them to develop in their studies. In many cities, the municipalities, feeling the need of an institution of the character that we are discussing, have provided land and buildings, and even endowments for their proper maintenance and development. I do not know whether that would be possible here, but it would be most desirable.

For this reason it is felt that the acquisition of the Stillwell collection will be a start in the right direction.

THE REPORT OF THE GARDEN CLUB MEETING

ERVANNA BOWEN BISSELL

EDITOR—GARDEN PAGES

FOR months Nature lovers have been saying, "Oh, to be in Santa Barbara when April comes! Oh, to be there when the East meets the West in gardens!"

Over three hundred members of the Garden Club of America came together, saw each other, and conquered the fatigue of travel and of preparation by the joy of companionship with each other among new plants and flowers.

The Thirteenth Annual Meeting opened on April 13th with club headquarters at El Mirasol Hotel. After official registration and some committee meetings, the members motored to the canyon garden of Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Eaton, Rivo Rivo, walking from there to see the green theatre in Mrs. H. E. Bothin's Piranhurst.

Luncheon was served under the trees at El Mirador, the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Mitchell, Jr. It was a barbecue of Spanish food served by Spanish girls in quaint costume. One ate to the sound of Spanish music by Spanish players. A bit of fiesta transplanted from early days.

SERVING AT THE BARBECUE.

The Ludington and Gillespie gardens were next visited, driving through Mrs. H. H. Potter's grounds to Casa del Hererro, the new Spanish home and garden of Mr. and Mrs. George F. Steedman. The members all gathered for tea at Pompeiian Court, the home of Mrs. Ralph Isham, president of the hostess club, to enjoy its garden and the adjoining one of Mr. and Mrs. Harry K. Elston.

The Annual Dinner was held that evening at the Montecito Country Club. The handsome dining room, with its lofty ceiling, made a stately setting for the tables decorated with tall candles and large clusters of white lilies. The bright gowns of hostesses and guests gave needed color to a charming scene.

In the club drawing room pictures of field flowers were shown. Moving pictures well named! One sat to watch the petals of shy plants unfold; to see them open to bees and butterflies, then wither and die—a life history begun and finished while the clock was striking.

Wednesday morning, in the same club, was held the Annual Meeting. Mrs. John A. Stewart, Jr., presided and was re-elected for the ensuing year. Mrs. Samuel Sloan, who had been president for five years, until her resignation a few months ago, was warmly greeted by the large audience, and also the honorary president, Mrs. J. Willis Martin.

Mrs. Ralph Isham extended a cordial welcome, which was graciously accepted by Mrs. William A. Lockwood, a vice-president and director of the G. C. A. Mrs. Harold I. Pratt, the secretary, gave a mot interesting account of the year's activities. Various chairmen reported on their work—Conservation, Billboards and Roadsides, Admissions, Library, Memorials, Flower Shows, Visiting Gardens, Special Plants, Slides, etc. The treasurer, Mrs. William Rand, gave assurance that moneys had been spent wisely. Mrs. T. H. B. McKnight aroused enthusiasm over her Bulletin report and was tendered a hearty vote of thanks and a gift of books in appreciation of her brilliant editing of the club's magazine, The Bulletin.

SOLANDRA GRANDIFLORA THE BEND IN THE ROAD.

The members visited the garden of Far Afield, Mr. and rMs. H. C. Chatfield-Taylor, on their way to lunch at Las Tejas, Mrs. Oakleigh Thorne's garden. Under blue and white marquees the guests were seated at tables with apricot-tinted covers, with blue and salmon and orange flowers for decorations, which harmonized with the garden's colors—blues and yellows in varying shades.

A tour of town gardens, including the Ripley, Whitelaw, Hodges, Draves, Baylor, Frothingham, Hazard, Boardman Smith, and Bissell gardens ended with tea at Casa Santa Cruz, Mrs. Bernard Hoffman's Spanish house and garden. The visitors wrenched themselves away from the lovely sunset views because of the lure of a wonderful display of wildflowers at the Museum of Natural History. Mrs. Rowland G. Hazard, assisted by Miss Caroline Hazard, offered their guests tea in the Museum's charming patio.

A California dinner at El Mirasol, arranged by Mrs. Charles W. Dabney, followed by a talk on reforestation, closed the second day's doings.

Thursday morning the visitors met at Miraflores, the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Percival Jefferson. The dignified approach to the house, with its shrub- and tree-lined driveway, the delightful charm of the rose-garden, with its old Italian seats and tables, and the harmony of color prevailing everywhere, made this a perfect beginning of the day. The Spanish garden of Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Heberton were open and the visitors passed through them to El Cielito, Mrs. DeWitt Parshall's garden of almost perfect planting—a garden of vistas, of pictures, wherever you turn.

Leaving Arcady, three hilltop gardens were next visited.: Pepper Hill, Miss Gwethalyn Jones' garden of lovely colors and sweeping views. Graholm, the native planting of shrubs and wild flowers made by the David Grays. A walk through the Ryerson garden and then away to tea at Cuesta Linda, Mr. and Mrs. E. Palmer Gavit's garden of unusual planting. This is a garden for botanists, too, so many rare shrubs and trees grow here. It is a place in which to learn to know exotic flora amid beautiful surroundings.

The Spanish dinner in the patio at El Paseo was a trip to the life of long ago. We, who live here and own all of this spot which eyes can see, were delighted that our

In Eastern flower shows they compete for prizes.

Twice the Secretary of The Garden Club of America, Mrs. Harold I. Pratt has won the gold cup for spring bulb planting.

MATILIJA POPPIES BLOOMING ON THE HILLSIDE OF SERRANIA. A PHOTOGRAPH BY B. M. OSBORNE.

Solandra grandiflora of tropical climates. "The Bend in the Road"—Mrs. F. Willis Kelly's garden of views—spread upon a pergola a gorgeous banquet set of Jamaican gold plate, evidently in honor of the Garden Club of America.

In our Southland we do not strive for cups; we grow them instead! And grow them by the score, those lovely Copa de Ora eastern friends loved El Paseo too. Madam Alma Real sang delightfully her songs to the accompaniment of guitars played by Spanish troubadours, and a Spanish dancer added the last ultra note.

There, waiting daily to drink the visitor's health, the Solandra held aloft her golden goblets brimming with the sun's fire.

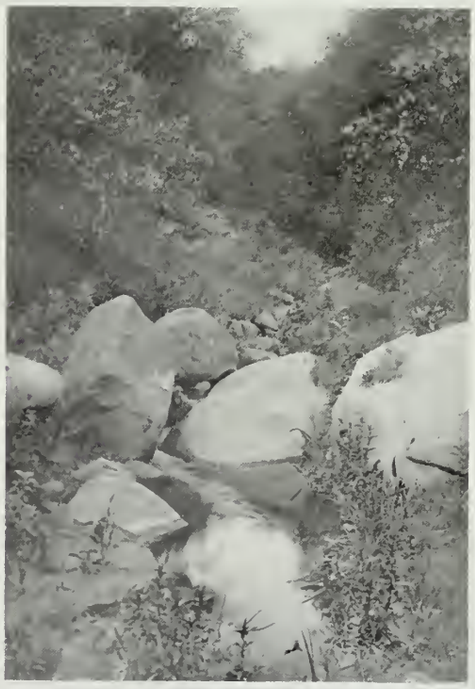
Friday morning was left to go wherever one chose and meet for luncheon with Mrs. Edward Lowe at El Eliseo. Jade green tables, spread in the formal garden, decorated with baskets of mixed flowers and surrounded by women in gay sports clothes, made a picture on the green lawn not soon to be forgotten.

The afternoon was spent at Solana, where the Frederick Forrest Peabodys live surrounded by sunshine in a home set on a hill. Mrs. Mary Stewart's garden, Il Brolino, charmed the visitors with its look of old Tuscany—a garden hidden in an orchard. Through the Carrington and Hall gardens, both damaged by our cloudburst, we went to the Toro canyon home of Mrs. H. F. Knight, where acres of wild flowers and native shrubs looked as if they belonged to the mountains which towered back of them. In Nature's garden we closed the Thirteenth Annual Meeting of the Garden Club of America.



At Illahee—
the garden of
Mrs. George
Choate Kendall—
the rock-bordered pool has a natural aspect, although the planting shows
man's hand.
The Italian cypresses and the Japanese lantern suggest an artificial treatment which the sedums, the water hyacinths and native plants help to balance.

FROM Pasadena to San Francisco there has arisen a new interest in gardening. Garden owners have viewed their gardens through new eyes—their visitors', seeing beauties and defects unnoticed before. California has three garden clubs affiliated with the national organization: Pasadena, Santa Barbara and Piedmont, with a fourth soon to make a quartet.

The geographical location of these clubs makes it possible for them to contribute something new to the horticultural world. Not by trying to "copy fair our past" as eastern gardeners, but by adapting our former experiences to these Pacific Coast conditions.

Nature has done much for us. We are inclined to take credit for her achievements. The great Apostle's caustic comment to the Galatians: "Ye did . . well, who did hinder you?" might be applied to us as workers in gardens.

Through these pages which lead "Within Garden Gates," we hope in the future to praise ourselves less and by constructive criticism help each other more. We shall say it with pictures—pictures which will suggest improvement and appraise or condemn our garden planning.

The Garden Club of America was especially interested in little gardens cared for by their owners.

It is to those who are learning "to garden finely" that this department hopes to make its appeal.

The sight of water in a garden
is always refreshing.

The use of water,
whether in pools or fountains, should conform to its surroundings.

This pool at Serrania—the home of Mrs. H. F. Knight—lies in the canyon garden.

Wild grasses grow among the rocks. Ceanothus blooms shake their blue petals on the water's rippled surface.
The boulders lie where Nature flung them. Man comes only to admire.

At El Cielito—that "little heaven" of a garden belonging to Mrs. De Witt
Parshall—

This pool is centered from the east terrace

and balanced by brick paved walks which converge beyond the flowered parallelogram.

the pool is delightfully formal, even to its reflections

of the palms which tower above the pillars.

The lines,
although hidden by blossoming
plants, ever suggest the carefully executed details of an artistic design.

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

ADOBE DAYS

By SARAH BIXBY-SMITH, The Torch Press

Stories of olden times in places where we live delight the imagination of most of us. Especially is this true here in California, where we never tire of reading accounts of the gorgeous Spanish period, whose glittering brilliancy makes us forget entirely that there is as well an Anglo-Saxon background. Mrs. Bixby-Smith has made this the theme of her pleasing and quiet little volume "Adobe Days," wherein she records with a most engaging serenity, her memories of Los Angeles, and its neighborhood, in the eighties and nineties, not so far back indeed, but the striking contrasts between the then and now give us a convincing illusion of antiquity.

This lady's talents are well adapted for this sort of writing, for she has a fine sense of values, restraint, and a manner of unaffected simplicity. There is a touch of poetry too, in the charming little idyll, she has made out of the account of her childhood experiences during those long, dreamy, langourous summer days, which she was wont to spend on the ranches Los Cerritos and Los Alamitos, and as a result those attractive old adobes will be viewed by many a sightseer, who cares for landmarks.

MONDAY MORNING

By PATRICK HAMILTON, Houghton Mifflin Co.

This diverting novel contains an adroit study of the mental processes of an English youth, just setting up in life, and the tale of his experiences in and out of love, at the puppy stage. Such enthralling day dreams flit continually through his mind, such towering castles in the air does he construct, that were he himself not there to fill the void, no hero magnificent enough could be found to fit the settings. It is all screamingly funny, until perchance the reader does a little thinking, whereupon he becomes somewhat subdued at the woeful aspect lurking beneath a surface undoubtedly rippled with light laughter. This type of human nature is universal, we know it all too well, it is a reason why the lives of men of genius, furnish us with perennial themes of absorbing interest. For our hero, is only another version of the sensitive and innately noble human soul, crying in the wilderness of commonplace surroundings for the beautiful ideal of his dreams.

THE SUNGAZERS

By HENRY H. KNIBBS, Houghton Mifflin Co.

This extravaganza has an essence so fresh, so buoyant, so virile, that it fairly sets the reader, metaphorically speaking, to pirouetting on a light fantastic toe, or making verses, his own if possible, otherwise spouting those that other folks have made. It makes him feel like "April's here," or the way he does when he hears the eastern bluebird warbling in the early spring. All this because Mr. Knibbs, in his novel called "The Sungazers," has piped a lay in prose, through the medium of a hobo, if you please, and a fine upstanding man, at that, as his tale discloses. His name is Bill and he has a pal called Bob, a college youngster, who feels that hobo pull, and can tell the world about it in verses, filled with the joyous abandon of youthful spirits, and adventures yet to come. There is still another pal, who has a yearning poetic soul, hidden under a fat and middle-aged exterior, which has to be content with yearning merely, like the most of us. This is Alosius, who has made millions in manufacturing pickles, instead of making pennies in writing poems.

These three and all of us, go rollicking sportively through those "Great Open Spaces" of the Southwest, Arizona and down into Mexico and have the grandest and most glorious adventures, all told with a twinkling naivete, by Bill himself. Read this and renew every ounce of youth there is remaining in your system, for it will make even the most confirmed pessimist forget that the world is altogether vile. In fact he will be all for faring forth at once upon the open road to happiness and joy.

SARAH BIXBY-SMITH, AUTHOR OF "ADOBE DAYS"

SPRING FICTION

Houghton Mifflin Company

This is the season, when some people like to read and not to think. Clean light fiction is demanded in the summer time, even by the intellectually inclined. From the following list of novels, a reader now and then may find one admirably suited for passing away some idle hours.

Arthur Chapman has written an historical novel about old Fort Laramie and called it "John Crews" after its immaculate hero. This author has been stealing some of Zane Grey's thunder. "The Deep Seam," by Jack Bethea describes life around the mining regions of Alabama. His human nature is decidedly "off," but his scenery is good, and his story leaps like a deer from page to page. In the "Fire of Spring," Edward Noble has dealt thoughtfully albeit a trifle ponderously with the deadest of dead issues, votes for women in England in the period just before the war. It contains an illuminating characterization of those militant females.

HARRY NOYES PRATT, PRESIDENT OF CALIFORNIA WRITERS' CLUB, AND CONTRIBUTOR TO "WEST WINDS"

In his preface to "The Lion's Skin," Mr. Sabatini apologizes for a work he considers immature. He has done worse than this however. It is a tale of England and the Jacobites, and has action and the usual color of all his romances. "Mr. Ramosi," by Valentine Williams, is constructed according to the most rigid formula for mystery tales of adventure. Yet it is entertaining, and moreover has caught genuine atmosphere in its Egyptian scenes, which have much charm. "Herbs and Apples," by Helen Santmyer Hooven, is the tale of a young girl's life done by the fine tooth comb method, a little of which goes a long way. In "Confident Morning," Arthur Stanwood Pier, while often banal and inane, makes his characters act like well bred people instead of murderers and thieves.

KELLAR'S ANNA RUTH

By ELSIE SINGMASTER, Houghton, Mifflin

Since the days of Jane Austin, supreme mistress of this method of portraying life, women have excelled in it, and Miss Singmaster is no exception. With assured and calm omnipotence, she controls the affairs of her characters in this story of a small town in Pennsylvania, with a heroine beautiful but dumb, as the focus of attraction. It is done, as smooth as silk, very natural, and makes an absorbing story.

LITERARY LANES AND OTHER BYWAYS

By ROBERT C. HOLLIDAY, George H. Doran Co.

In a few of the articles making up this volume, Mr. Holliday might be regarded as lightly literary, since he records an inconsequential fact or two about well known writers. But mostly we call him very practical indeed. A young man for instance, in doubt about his future, might read this brisk and jaunty paper on the publishing of text books, and decide that somewhere in the honeycomb of departments making up this business, should be the very place for him. Other articles offer still more suggestions for choosing a career, where art for art's sake does not count as much as art for bread and butter's sake, or what is far better, cake.

WEST WINDS

By MEMBERS OF THE CALIFORNIA WRITER'S CLUB, Harr Wagner Company

Ina Coolbrith, in a very graceful and finished foreword to this anthology of verse, tells us that this club is composed of publishing writers, bent on helping others to attain literary success. So generous and kindly a spirit, might in the very beginning cause us to look with favor upon what this book has to offer in the way of poetry—all short poems, some of which have previously appeared in various periodicals. We find them admirably conceived, with an infinite variety of the stuff that dreams are made of, while more or less uniform as to poetic quality, and decidedly conventional in form. The uniformity is due doubtless to careful and expert selection, in order to avoid those sharp contrasts which would detract from the aesthetic enjoyment of the whole.

MAN AND WEATHER

By ALEXANDER MCADIE, Harvard University Press

"The best-laid schemes o' mice and men, gang aft a'gley," is true enough, and many times the reason therefor is the weather. And as for putting down the mighty from their seats, and exalting them of low degree, that process of human readjustment has been accomplished more than once, by means of the vagaries of the weather. In "Man and Weather," a clear but brief treatise of this new science of Aerography, Mr. McAdie has called attention to famous instances in history, where weather conditions have changed the course of men and empires.

The weather of course cannot be controlled or altered. Man will do much toward usurping the powers of the Almighty, but as yet he does not aspire that high. But by means of what he is learning in Aerography, he is undertaking to foretell weather conditions far enough ahead, so that those persons likely to be adversely affected, may be enabled to make adequate preparations against loss of life and property. We notice in particular a chapter on lightning, how to avoid, as much as possible, danger from its strokes. Aerographists might confer a great benefit here in California, could they devise some method to prevent lightning flashes from aiming at oil tanks, the two recent conflagrations here from this cause having amounted to a loss of about twenty million dollars. And now it has happened for the third time, in a month.

SKETCH FOR DECORATION OF THE CHILDREN'S ROOM IN THE NEW LIBRARY BUILDING, LOS ANGELES. THE WALLS OF THIS ROOM WILL BE COVERED WITH PAINTINGS FORMING A CONTINUOUS FRIEZE BETWEEN BOOKCASES AND CEILING DEPICTING TWELVE SCENES FROM SIR WALTER SCOTT'S ROMANTIC NOVEL, "IVANHOE." THESE PICTURES, EXECUTED BY MR. A. W. PARSONS, WORKING IN COLLABORATION WITH MR. GARNSEY, WILL BE ILLUSTRATIVE IN CHARACTER RATHER THAN FORMALLY DECORATIVE, IN ORDER THAT THE CHILDREN, FOR WHOM THEY WERE PAINTED, MAY EASILY UNDERSTAND THEM, AND MAY FIND THEIR FAVORITE CHARACTERS FROM THE BOOK. AROUND THEM ON THE WALLS OF THEIR OWN ROOM. THE CEILING IS IN THE COLOR OF OLD WOOD, WITH NORMAN PATTERNS, AND THE WALL OF THE ALCOVE IS IN THE SAME PERIOD.

THE COLOR PLATES AND THE ART OF JULIAN E. GARNSEY

OUT of the widely diversified interests which are gathering together in one united whole to form the new public library of the city of Los Angeles we have taken first for presentation that portion which is now under way in the building itself. No better opportunity to observe the relation of beauty to building and construction was ever offered us. We shall have plenty of time to live with the beauty of this building as we use the books that will be placed therein and avail ourselves of its perfect modern appliances; now, we may see it grow.

That beauty is a vital part of construction is shown most emphatically in our buildings of steel and concrete. We may go behind that statement and reiterate today what has been said throughout the history of art,—that beauty must exist in the soul, the imagination of the artist before it can be set on a pedestal before the world.

Concrete, that drab, inert material which in itself has no beauty, can be formed by man to express his highest ideals. And yet, so lacking is it in any intrinsic power to delight the eye, that it offers no help to the incompetent and frankly exposes to the world the vacuity of mind in those who, having no beauty in their souls, essay to build in avarice, and crowd our cities full of ugliness.

Rising sturdily on its pedestal—the old normal school hill—in the center of this city which has just begun to crystalize about its centers of activity, the library of Los Angeles has been called the far west monument to Bertram Goodhue, its architect.

When the scaffolding is removed and the tile-layers have finished their work on the dome, the exterior will be photographed by every good camera in town, and tourist kodaks through the yeasr will carry the beauty of its form, the ideas of the architect everywhere.

Concrete, and the uplifting force of steel construction springing up to make an skeleton frame work, these are the bare instruments of mankind's expression and in this age they hold up to view the spirit of the race as it builds.

Seek then for the beauty of this building in its form, its sturdy unity of purpose and its fine scorn of sham or artifice. Never will it pall upon you, but as the years go by, its firm integrity, its intellectually designed and carefully brought out proportions will make a standard so sure and an influence so true that lesser building will be continually discredited and fall away to be replaced by better things as the newer generations rise and build.

What shall we expect to find then when we enter during the finishing construction days of this great jewel casket, formed to hold the printed thoughts of our great, conglomerate race history?

No wonder that our young mural painter whose sketch, prepared for the decoration of the great dome is on the cover this month, desired to study most profoundly the architectural design before he essayed to decorate its walls.

Mr. Carleton E. Winslow, associated with Mr. Goodhue in this beautiful building and representative of the firm on this coast is the interpreter, the one to whom we all must turn for a full understanding of the building and its fulfillment of a purpose nobly conceived by the Board of Library Commissoners and the Librarian. When our photographs are taken and the architect's designs can thus be presented, we shall relate this, the most important part of the story in detail. Just now we can take only a minor part of Mr. Winslow's interpretation through the decorative painter's words and the intricacies of his most subtle art. Julian E. Garnsey, born and raised in New York City, and trained in such work on important buildings throughout the country, has for five years made Los Angeles his permanent home. He was chosen in open competition from among six contestants as the one who had best solved the problems presented in the new building.

Mr. Garnsey inherits his talents by direct descent, for he is of the second generation in his chosen profession. He began as a boy of fourteen in the employ of his father, Elmer E. Garnsey, at the Minnesota State Capitol, holding stencils for painters who were later to be his own men. In preparation for his life work, he secured a grounding in the fundamentals of architecture at Harvard University and at the close of the course received the coveted Phi Beta Kappa key. For two years he studied in Paris, Italy, Egypt and Greece, and returned home to assist his father in the decoration of the Wisconsin and Iowa State Capitols, the St. Louis Public Library, New York Custom House, Guaranty Trust Company of New York, and other public and private commissions. At the outbreak of the Great War he was sent to France in 1917, joined the famous First Division, A. E. F., and after two years returned as Captain of Field Artillery. In his button-hole today, he wears the red and green ribbon of the Croix de Guerre. Since coming to Los Angeles Mr. Garnsey has decorated some twenty-five banks, the Automobile Club of Southern California, the Second Church of Christ, Scientist, the Standard Oil Building, the Library of Fullerton College, the Bridges Art Museum at San Diego, Mary Pickford's house and other houses, the Fairfax High School Auditorium and the Union Pacific Depot at Ogden, Utah.

Mr. Garnsey is full of enthusiasm for the big job undertaken by him. "A great honor has been paid me," he said, "in this opportunity to assist in beautifying this monumental building, built by and dedicated to the people of Los Angeles.

"My theory of color decoration is not a new one,—it is as old as the Pyramids. I believe that decoration of any kind must carry forward the conception which the architect has already expressed in the design of the building. It must hold to that line however rich it may be. It must not be a new conception, whatever merit such a new thought might have, because the goal of all engaged in creating a building is Unity. The architect is the guiding mind,—therefore the decorative painter's work must seem to be the architect's mind working through the painter's.

"The Rotunda will, of course, be of primary importance. Its form is that of a Greek cross, roofed by a vault on pendentives which has twenty-four leaves or facets. This is a particularly handsome form for decoration. My scheme, following closely the architect's thought, will include long rays of silver and gold darting down from a rich central circle. Connecting the rays will be bands of alternate blue and yellow, the blue being dotted with gold stars. Below the rays a field of grey-green and grey-violet, recalling tiles laid in herring bone pattern, will extend to an intricate interlaced border in color and gold which will bind the vault together at the level of the supporting arches. The under sides of these arches and their adjoining barrel-vaults will be covered with interlacing bands and running patterns which will further accentuate their fine architectural effect."

Found in a quaint studio in the old Bryson Building, surrounded by colorful sketches of executed and projected work, Mr. Garnsey made an appointment to show the writer the Mural work now going on the library itself the following week.

Climbing over the inevitable debris of construction we entered the new building and went first to the central rotunda where the work was going on. High up on the intricate scaffolding the men who are carrying out the scheme were perched, trying different colors and taking directions for changes from Mr. Garnsey, who often uses a megaphone to carry his voice up into the great dome.

Snappy and brilliant are the colors placed so far from the floor of the rotunda; sparkling is the effect caused by that juxtaposition of pure tones, each enhancing the other in a way which only an artist born can encompass in such a colossal scheme. Softly all the sparkling colors of the dome decoration melt into the neutral tone of the walls as the eye travels down again to the floor where the tile again takes up the firm placing of tone against tone.

Many devices were thought out to gray the decoration in certain spots so that one sees into the paint and realizes the concrete's massive strength behind it holding up the floors above.

When all is finished and photographs are taken we shall endeavor to give in more detail the historic side of these delightful decoratons which Mr. Garnsey has so successfully incorporated in Bertram Goodhue's western monument. M. U. S.

DOWN THE STREET IN SEARCH OF BEAUTY

A DARING thing has been done in Pasadena in the erection of a basilica of pure Spanish type on the main business street. It is the building of the California Security Loan Corporation on Colorado street near Garfield, the secondary axis of Pasadena's new civic center on the north.

Erected in 1926 this beautiful building will stand as an example of the height of the period in which the desire to restore Spanish art and architecture become paramount in this land which was once called "New Spain."

New Spain may well be the term applied to our newest architecture in southern California, for this is no expression of the ideas of building brought with them to Pasadena by the Indiana Colony which founded this city on the poppy covered mesa.

No ruins of the Spanish occupation stood where Pasadena now stands. The old mill of the San Gabriel Mission padres, now a charming feature of San Marino is the nearest building. There is, to be sure, an echo of Spain's nomenclature in the word Pasadena, which tradition says is "Indian." But we had no "Indians" here when Pasadena was founded fifty years ago excepting those tribes which were taught by the Spanish and whom we now dismiss with the general term "Mexican." If Pasadena were one of our beautiful names inherited from the Spanish occupation, would it not have been Pasadero, the place of the pass—from the San Gabriel Valley to the San Fernando Mission? Just so we have the names "Pescadero," place of the fish, "Atascadero," place of adobe mud.

But Pasadena's first half century has passed. Her name and fame are not a part of Spanish history. No more purely American population is found on the continent than that which has just built a Spanish basilica on Colorado street. It is a flower of our California Renaissance plucked from the countries colonized by Spain and placed by young California in this far west garden of the Western Reserve.

Wallace Neff, the architect, is a young Pasadena man. I doubt if he has ever been in Spain. The elements of Spanish architecture can be studied on this continent and I know that he has been to Cuba and probably in Mexico. The construction is by the C. P. Day Corporation, as sound as the New England foundation of American Independence can make it, organized and built up by C. P. Day, a Massachusetts man of colonial ancestry and integrity. The men behind the building are the officers of the California Security Loan Corporation, whose object is to build up the city they have for thirty-five years helped to establish. President, Arthur W. Byrne; Vice-President, James Clarke; Secretary-Treasurer, Archibald J. Morris; Assistant Secretaries, B. W. Rankine, and B. M. McDonald; Directors, Oscar Freeman, A. L. Hamilton, Lucius E. Jarvis, Carl P. Hotaling.

When the scaffolding was still standing and the protection to pedestrians hid the lovely facade, we saw the name of the construction engineers and contractors—C. P. Day Corporation, and above it the professional card of the architect — and passed on knowing that something good would be the outcome of that combination. Later on, standing in the showrooms of the Tudor shops which forms the Cheesewright Studios across the street, we got a fine view of the unveiled monument and recognized what an addition of pure beauty has been given to Pasadena's down town district. To the artist who built the Cheesewright Studios and who has done so much to introduce beauty into the stern pioneer homes of Pasadena this bank across the street is pure joy to look at. Consulting decorators, for this building, the Cheesewright Studios have chosen the tile and furnished the interior, cooperating with the architect as only those who know where to find beauty in the archives of the past can do.

The blue tile of the Talavera Importing Company which has its depot in the Cheesewright Studio has, in this building, set the pace in Pasadena for outside and inside work in highly glazed tile. Made in Mexico kilns, these tiles and tile panels are coming to the Talavera Company in constantly increasing shipments as our architects

RESERVED AND EXQUISITE ARE THE LINES OF THE DOORWAY ENCLOSING A BEAUTIFUL IRON GRILL AND FLANKED BY BLUE TALAVERA TILE

TAPESTRY AND FURNITURE FROM THE CHEESEWRIGHT STUDIOS

INTERIOR OF THE BANK LOOKING NORTH TO INVESTMENT DEPARTMENT.

THE ENTRANCE GRILL FROM THE INTERIOR

comply with the demands of their clients for the atmosphere pertaining to Spanish architecture.

For patio and fountain, for garden walks and niches, these tiles are used by Californians with great enthusiasm; for they express the joy and gladness of our climate and our out door life. Here Talavera tile are used on the stairs as well as around the entire main room and upon the main facade.

The tile were laid by Z. B. Galloway whose office and display rooms at 95 South Wilson Avenue, Pasadena, show every kind of tile in the market and guarantee their being properly laid.

The architect and the consulting interior decorators have worked in such sympathetic cooperation that a building and interior of unusual unity is the result. The pattern of the tile is a distinct motive in form and color and finds an echo in the hangings in the directors' room and at the openings above the entrance. Handsome old world designs in the furniture, made at the Cheesewright studios make us proud of local craftsmanship and the ceiling of timber proves that art still our own.

The mind of the architect has here unusual opportunity. His beautiful designs for iron grill and appropriate hardware furnish Pasadena a museum of fine workmanship well worth visiting for the study of their beauty alone. Every time you open the iron door to enter notice the design of the door handle and those of the doors at the right. Fitted to the hand it still delights the connoisseur of crafts and makes one ask its origin. West and Company at 45 South Raymond Avenue are architects' hardware men distinctively and designs by our leading architects often greet the eyes of those who, enjoying the game of picking out their own hardware go there for the large stock of patterns from which to choose. The beautiful hanging lamps and lanterns were executed by Wilkinson-Scott, the hardware is West's.

CALIFORNIA has published few books; her markets are too far away. But when the book lover comes to California sans his favorite library and sans winter evenings to read in, California will publish a book expressly for him.

PANELLED WOODEN DOOR, TILE AND LANTERN

The host of The Garden Club of America, when they entered Arcady at Montecito presented each member with a beautiful record of the flowers and shrubs of that lovely bit of California; and for their delectation also their Pacific Coast correspondent published a book of Santa Barbara Gardens which will be treasured both East and West.

Flowers of unperishable beauty grace each chapter as the author, Ervanna Bowen Bissell walks with the reader in stately measure through these Montecito and Santa Barbara gardens. Each is the garden of a friend beloved for some trait or characteristic; each calls out from the author a loving comment or quaint memory. The illustrations are selected with great care and supplement well the charm and delightful arrangement.

(Glimpses of Santa Barbara and Montecito Gardens, by Ervanna Bowen Bissell. Press of the Schauer Printing Studio, Inc., Santa Barbara.)

THE ART OF THE CHEESEWRIGHT STUDIOS COLABORATING HAS ENABLED THE ARCHITECT, WALLACE NEFF, TO ACHIEVE UNITY OF DESIGN

TALAVERA TILE FORM THE RISERS TO THE MEZZANINE AND REFLECT THE LIGHT FROM THEIR GLAZED SURFACES

SOUTHLAND

Marriage

AT their monthly round-table luncheon, the members and guests of the Assistance League of Southern California were treated to a talk on marriage by Elinor Glynn. Presented by Mrs. William de Mille, mistress of the Round-table, who has just returned from a visit to England, Mrs. Glynn was introduced as the mother of two lovely young English matrons whom Mrs. de Mille praised as models of our best modern civilization. Good mothers, training their children in the best manner and methods that the world today has to offer, themselves athletic, rosy and rougeless, they take their place in the best trained nation of modern times, and make their own intellectual contributions to the world as well.

Elinor Glynn rose to speak to those leading women of Los Angeles in no flippant mood. What she had to say took but a few moments, but was packed with the wisdom of a woman who has seen the world and has stored her mind with the results of clear thinking. Calmly she looked out of wise eyes upon her alert audience in that upper room. Calmly she considered her subject. She did not drool of love, nor argue for affinity. She spoke like a Britisher on the institution of Marriage, which, she said, has for its existing reason the perpetuation of the race.

From this standpoint she analyzed man as endowed with certain impulses and characteristics which the women of today should understand and meet with intelligence. "Man is attracted through the eye, woman by sentiment," said this wise mother of daughters. The essential urge which is placed in human life to further its continuance is found in the man.

If not endowed with such desire to perpetuate her kind, woman is endowed to preserve and control the kind of a race she shall bring forth in the future. Hers is the intellectual privilege of calm study and direction. The speaker's distinctive contribution to the thought of the day was this deliberate assumption that modern, trained womankind is capable of meeting the problems connected with marriage and finding a way to preserve it in general as well as in each individual case. She must realize that it is harder for a man to have an eye single to one woman than it is for woman to be true to one whom she has surrounded with her endowment of sentiment. She must know that the work of preserving the nobility of marriage, individually and collectively, is hers primarily—if not publicly. She should ask no questions, but should apply her whole intellect to the work of finding a way out of her false position wherever man has failed to do it for her.

The Ethics of Advertising

SOME months ago we were inspired to repeat a conviction which is one of the foundation stones of this journal and has been expressed in its pages many times. Space and the Garden Club's coming crowded it out, but recent stirrings in the heart of the world's business have brought it to the top of the barrel again, and here it is:

Between the seller and the buyer, two classes of people to whom advertising is of use, per se, there has grown up a profession of advertising service, having its own ethics; and a trade called "publishing."

Old, and honorable as the profession of publishing has become in the hands of such people as the MacMillans, the Putnams and the Danas, it has no strict board of control in America and is weighted down by its own muddy skirts where it has misused its income from advertising. To correct this evil the associations of publishers have asked for stringent rules in the Post Office Department, which guards the gate to circulation and distribution; and the selling of space under false pretenses is forbidden and legally controlled in all cases of publications entered as second class matter at the Post Office. But what of the thousands of personal "publishers" who have set up for themselves and who offer their wares to the unwary buyers of space in their personal house organs? Their name is legion. They pester the merchants; they press their way into every office; they dissipate the advertising funds of every great house which fears to antagonize its best customer in the guise of a solicitor. They promise that which they cannot guarantee—the patronage of the small group they assume to represent. They are jobbers taking the money of the advertiser and handing it to the printer who leaves for them a small commission on which to live or for their pet charity. In contradistinction to the professional advertising counsellor who studies the product of his client and who knows the whole field of journalism and the distribution of every legitimate publication in it, these jobbers have absolutely nothing of service to offer the merchant. They are either working exclusively for themselves or are asking the merchants to pay the printing bills of some group publication utterly uninteresting to the general public and therefore as personal a thing as their church or club house, their new hats or their Christmas presents. They form an unnecessary group of people who are using advertising and degrading its use as a medium between those who have something to sell and those who wish to find it. If they could be swept off the earth in one moment advertising would not suffer as a profession and merchants would lose no sales.

Roadside Advertising

UNTIDY roadsides, added to butchered hillsides, have so ruined the view from our local boulevards that we may well study what other states are doing in this matter. Organized opposition to the roadside advertising abuse is developing in various parts of the United States according to "Old Spanish Trail" officials. That organization has a Department of Beautification with Mrs. Henry Drought at the head, and the advertising nuisance is one of their points of attack. Sixteen truckloads of signs have been removed from the Old Spanish Trail between San Antonio and Boerne, and that road now offers a welcome relief from the irritating medley of sniper's signs on fences and trees. The billboards on private property still offend the traveler but, Old Spanish Trail officials state, property owners are agreeing to keep billboards off their lands. Mrs. F. W. Sorell of San Antonio is the chairman of the local County Council and Mrs. J. T. Smith, chairman, committee on advertising signs. With them in the work are numerous other active women. The highway officials helped in removing the roadway signs. The women built up sentiment, they personally called on numerous property owners and obtained signed authorizations to remove signs from private lands.

San Antonio officials fell in step and thousands of signs along the city streets were removed. "Within a few minutes we would have a truckload of them," the inspector in charge stated. San Antonio has an ordinance requiring a $15,000 bond and a license for erecting signs and this ordinance, it is stated, will hereafter be enforced. Helotes, a settlement of four buildings, 17 miles from San Antonio, caught the spirit and organized a community club with about forty members from the surrounding country and cleared signs from six miles of road and are still busy at that and other improvements, for the spirit of improvement seems to follow naturally after clearing the roadsides of the advertising nuisance.

According to a bulletin from Old Spanish Trail Headquarters, nearly 2,000 signs have been removed this season from the Adirondack Park, New York, thanks to a new law and active committees. In Massachusetts a constitutional amendment, carried by the largest majority given any of the proposals submitted, reads: "Advertising on public ways, in public places and on private property within public view may be regulated and restricted by law." Massachusetts now licenses billboards from year to year. The billboard agents pay for preliminary examinations, and pay $50.00 annual license. The cities are authorized to pass local ordinances for further regulations not in conflict with state regulations. So effective is this proving, it is reported very few licenses are being taken out, and that billboard men have already allowed permits to elapse for some 3,000 billboards. The right to license or tax billboards has been held proper because the advertising derives its value from the travel on the roads. It is argued that building regulations, zoning regulations and regulations against nuisances on private property are in force and that regulating billboards is no different in principle. Massachusetts bases her licensing of billboards on the established law that nuisances on private property may be corrected or abated.

OPINION

In Minnesota signs valued at millions of dollars were torn down pursuant to a law of 1923 authorizing the highway commission to clear the roadways. It was stated 100 billboards were found on one section of 10 miles—an average of 10 to the mile. The committee of the Minnesota Federated Women's Clubs made this significant statement to the Legislature: "Signboards mar the State's beauty; they are a menace to public safety; their owners do not pay taxes commensurate with their incomes; they are state beneficiaries, because without state highways they would have to go out of business; they tend to lower neighboring property values; they shut out light and air from buildings in congested districts, and increase fire hazards."

It is said the Kansas City Merchants' Association secured the co-operation of their own merchants to take billboards down. Ohio reports signs and even rural mail boxes largely removed from the roadways. Connecticut fixes a fine up to $50.00 and 6 months in jail for putting signs on private property without consent or on the public roads, and requires a license for signs of more than four square feet on private property.

Paris has recently invoked the ancient Code Napoleon to restrict electric signs in the Place de l'Opera, and cablegrams state French Senators of the Basque and the Norman coast country had introduced bills modeled on the Massachusetts law to protect their beauty spots. The municipalities control billboards within city limits in England, France, and also some South American countries, but it seems the highways and countryside of Europe so often commented on for their beauty are now threatened with desecration. The Youth's Companion says many big concerns in England have abandoned billboard advertising because public sentiment was against it and "that their gain in goodwill was immediate."

Burton Holmes is authority for the statement that Italian scenery is kept free from disfigurement by billboard advertising. Commenting on this the Boston Post says quite correctly, the billboards and signs offend more people than they please, and harm rather than help promote sales. The Dallas News says France started the habit of tree planting and beautifying about the time Columbus discovered America, while Americans have recklessly destroyed trees and now threaten to make the roads an "intercity alley between two walls of billboards."

The General Federation of Women's Clubs representing 5,000,000 women have their national committees working for the abolishment of the abuse. In Texas at the recent State Federation meeting representing 50,000 women, action was taken to proceed actively against the abuse.

The National Committee on Restriction of Outdoor Advertising has secured the promise of the following corporations to restrict their advertising to commercial locations: Fisk Tire Company, Kelly-Springfield Tire Company, B. F. Goodrich Rubber Company, Hood Rubber Company, Ajax Rubber Company, Kirkman & Son (soap manufacturers), Pillsbury Flour Mills Company, Washburn Crosby Company (Gold Medal Flour), Mountain City Mill Company (Orient Flour), Champion Spark Plug Company, Ward Baking Company, Dodge Brothers, Fleischmann Company, Indian Refining Company, Inc., Gulf Refining Company, Sun Oil Company, Standard Oil Company of California, Standard Oil Company of New York, Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, Cluett, Peabody & Company, Inc., International Harvester Co., Inc.

Over forty organizations throughout the United States are now co-operating to restrict outdoor advertising. The Old Spanish Trail is the first highway organization to organize definitely for highway beautification. Other highway organizations have followed with similar movements. In 1923 the women met with the Old Spanish Trail Convention at New Orleans and planned that this should be the women's work while the men were building the roads. Numerous committees of women, state organizations and local councils along the Old Spanish Trail are now developing the work. New Orleans organized a Planning and Zoning Commission and proceeded at once against the billboards and the candidates for office who plastered trees and fences with their political placards. Clearing the roadsides is a first and necessary step to an attractive road or street.

A survey of advertising laws and restrictions throughout the United States has been made by this Old Spanish Trail Department of Beautification. "Some states," according to H. B. Ayres, the O. S. T. Managing Director, "make it a misdemeanor to put signs within the roadway, some have heavy fines, some make it a prison offense. Six states have passed laws the past two years, but effective laws and removals from private property are just getting started. Several states have given the highway commissions power to remove billboards from private property where by obstructing the view they are likely to cause accident. A number of states report agitation increasing for stronger laws. When it is recognized these signboards derive all their value from the travel on the roads that are costing the people millions of dollars the right to tax them, license them, or abolish them must be granted. Engineers give the best that is in them to lay out these new roads for scenic beauty; the money is spent that the people may enjoy that beauty; the billboard people must not be allowed to spoil the purposes of this big investment. Highways of beauty will never be possible until this advertising nuisance is stopped."

Finding God—Within Us

MANY followers of Jesus and many critics of His teachings have conceived that the character derived from Him is a stunted and truncated type which flings itself away in self-abandoning and self-scorning altruism. The fact is, on the contrary, that the paradox of sacrifice indicates the only way of deliverance from the stunted and truncated life. Nothing shuts in a life and shuts out satisfaction and joy like the self-considering temper and the self-centered aim. Such a life, though it may seem to itself self-developing, is in fact self-deceived. Instead of growing richer in its resources, it finds itself growing poorer. The more it cultivates itself, the more sterile it grows.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

What, then, is my duty, cries out, in grave perplexity, this life which finds itself rent by opposing motives—to develop myself, or to deny myself; to hear the command of Jesus bidding me invest my talents prudently, or to hear His other command bidding me sell all I have, take up my cross and follow . . . Jesus meets the issue with His paradox of sacrifice. There is, He teaches, no such schism in life between gain and loss, self-cultivation and self-abnegation, the finding of life and the losing of it. The field of duty-doing is not a battlefield where duties to one's self contend to duties to others; it is a field where human life like other living things is growing; and growth by its very nature, means transmission, expansion, the giving of the root to the stalk, and of the stalk to the flower—a loss which is gain and a death which is life. In short, when Jesus announces the paradox that to save life is to lose it, and that to lose it is to save it, He is transferring to conduct the general law which the process of Nature had disclosed to His observant eye.

PEABODY.

THE JUNIOR LEAGUE AND ITS WORK AT LOS ANGELES IN THE HOME FOR CONVALESCENT CHILDREN

DICK BULLIS, SON OF MR. AND MRS. CHARLES GARDNER BULLIS OF LOS ANGELES. MRS. BULLIS IS THE PRESIDENT OF THE JUNIOR LEAGUE.

AND THE ANNUAL AMATEUR HORSE SHOW AT THE FLINTRIDGE RIDING CLUB A TWO DAY BENEFIT PERFORMANCE

THE half of the world which is being referred to as the younger generation, in at times rather disagreeable tones, has been accused of many things, of faults and foibles in words of one and many syllables but to few of them has the sin of idleness been ascribed. In fact their over-powering energy seems to be the source of the most of their follies. But when this same energy is well applied it has accomplished marvels, and one of these worthwhile accomplishments is the Junior League, which, formed in New York about twenty-five years ago for the assistance of the less fortunate half of the world, now sponsors groups of young women throughout the country each carrying through some plan for the benefit of humanity.

In Los Angeles the League for Convalescent Children, organized just a year ago was formed along the same lines as the New York organization with the intention of ultimately becoming a part of the Junior League, which ambition has now been realized much to the gratification of each member, as it is an honor not easily attained. Up to this time California has had only two branches of the Junior League, one in San Francisco and one in Santa Barbara, as the applicants must show the value of the work they are doing, and the young women composing the group must be representative of the best the community has to offer.

When a city has grown to the unbelievable extent of Los Angeles within a period totally inadequate to such growth, there must necessarily be loose ends in many directions, which often means families in need of assistance, of children suffering for the lack of attention. Sensing this need the work of the Los Angeles League was the establishment and maintenance of a home where children might be received and cared for, upon their dismissal from a hospital, through the period of convalescence, as many homes could not offer the proper care for the children either through ignorance or frequently because the mother was away from home earning a living for the family.

The organization was formed with thirty-five members, who secured the house in Los Angeles at Lucas and Ingraham streets and fitted it up for the care of fifteen children, which is all the size of the house will permit and for this reason each member is now bending every effort toward the realization of a larger home.

The energy of these debutantes and young matrons did not merely create the home in its entirety but keeps it going and supports it. A home to house fifteen children, each requiring attention in its groping towards health, necessarily demands the service of many pairs of hands but in this case the only paid hands are those of the nurse and cook. The latter supplies the bodily sustenance for the small inmates, the nurse watches the diet, the temperature, and such medicine and dressing as may be needed, while all the cleaning, sweeping, dusting and careful arranging, which imparts the atmosphere of a real home is done by the sponsors of the institution. Each member gives two hours a week, required by the terms of the League, and as much more time as is necessary to produce the desired results. By this means the home is supported by the least expenditure possible, and yet with every comfort for the children.

MISS CATHERINE VAN WART, DAUGHTER OF DR. R. M. VAN WART, AND GRAND-DAUGHTER OF MRS. J. A. VAN WART OF NEW ORLEANS. THE VAN WARTS MAKE THEIR SUMMER HOME AT HOTEL DEL CORONADO. MISS VAN WART IS A SKILLFUL YOUNG RIDER AND WAS A RIBBON WINNER AT THE SAN DIEGO SHOW LAST AUTUMN

The routine house work is apportioned to various members, while others take turns in assuming charge during the afternoons, from one to three, when the children sleep and rest, and from three to five when they exercise and play. It must give every member a thrill of the deepest gratification to see the glow of returning health on the cheeks of these small sisters and brothers and to be greeted not only with radiant smiles but with such a wholehearted invitation to "Come play, oh, do come play!" as was given by a dear little brown-eyed boy on the occasion of a recent visit to the Home.

Now the league issues the same invitation to the world, and to our own neighborhood especially, as during June, the eleventh and twelfth, the annual Amateur Horse Show at the Flintridge Riding Club will be given as a benefit for the League that a larger home may be obtained and more children taken care of.

The evening of the eleventh, following the afternoon show, a dinner will be given in the club house, and on Saturday, the twelfth, a show will be held both morning and afternoon, and a luncheon served. Some of the best known horses on the Coast are entered for the show, including a number from the Hellman stables.

We all like horse shows, there isn't a more exciting game in the realm of sports than polo, and it is likely this show will include at least a chukker, and altogether the two days will offer, not only pleasure to the onlooker but bring the blessing of health to many children. Do come!

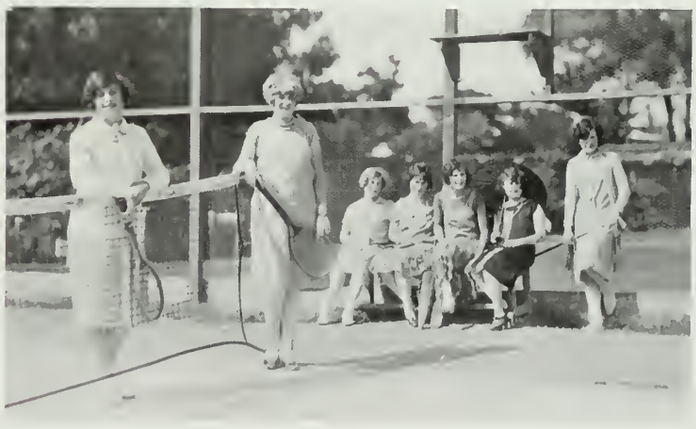
The officers of the League are Mrs. Charles Gardner Bullis, president; Miss Katherine Thomas, vice president; Mrs. Thomas Weeks Banks, treasurer; Mrs. Van Buren Jarvis, secretary; Mrs. Loren Hillman, recording secretary. Mrs. Thomas Weeks Banks is head of the Horse Show Committee.

THE TRAILS FROM THE FLINTRIDGE CLUB BRANCH IN EVERY DIRECTION AND LEAD TO OPEN ROADS, CANOPIED LANES AND, BY MANY WINDING TURNS, TO THE MOUNTAIN TOPS, INCLUDING UNCOUNTED VISTAS OF SHEER BEAUTY.

SPORTS FOR THE DEVOTEE AND THE CASUAL

WITH THE CLOSE OF THE TOURNAMENT AT CORONADO POLO RECEDES INTO THE DISTANCE ON THE SPORTS HORIZON BUT WILL AGAIN TAKE ITS PLACE IN THE SUN. WITH THE OPENING OF THE NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP MATCHES AT MEADOWBROOK NEXT SEPTEMBER

SPORTS! Rarely has there been a season when sport offered so much of interest to the innocent bystander. Polo, as the season shortened, was the outstanding interest up to the concluding tournament at Coronado, where the First Cavalry from Fort Bliss, Texas won the Junior Championship cup, again proving the wisdom of the Government in making an appropriation to cover the expense of the Army and Navy teams.



"THE TIVA," OWNED BY C. W. STOSE, AND FLYING THE BURGEE OF THE SAN DIEGO YACHT CLUB, WILL MAKE THE LONG TRIP TO HAWAII IN THE SAN PEDRO-HONOLULU RACE, LEAVING THE BREAKWATER AT SAN PEDRO AT NOON, JUNE 12

On practically every golf course the gallery followed favorites through tournaments, and read with interest the outcome of heralded foursomes. Several of the golf clubs followed a suggestion that the clubs as a whole play tournaments, not merely a few picked players but the entire membership. And as if to show how far this community idea may spread, almost simultaneously a foreign dispatch announced the return of a very old type of sport in Russia. This being nothing more than a trial of strength—a boxing or wrestling match on a large scale—where in whole villages engage in a battle of force against another village. A selected body of picked men proceed against an equal number of rivals and the result is accepted as final, at least for a year. Fists are the only weapons and the Marquis of Queensbury rules are woefully disregarded, the marquis probably being a stranger.

In the midst of all these sporting events some statistician rises to remark that the only realm of sport in which women have risen to pre-eminence is that of the water; she has gained an equality with the male swimmer and bids fair to outdistance him. Proving, probably, that they are true daughters of Neptune, expurgated mermaids, as they would surely refuse to be known as fish, poor or otherwise.

All sportsmen know that the fishing season is now open but perhops they don't all know that Coronado offers a sport known as sighting, seeking, you might say, snitching the smelt. Those small, silvery denizens of the sea come in on the sands in shoals as if anxious to become naturalized at certain seasons, then discovering too late the uncharitableness of the world, in a flurry of mind and matter make every effort to return to the deep. This attainment is rendered more difficult by the humans which infest the beach in an effort to detain them for a beach supper or an early breakfast in which they will participate as insiders. But they never accept the invitation willingly, and it is an agile seeker who secures a sufficient quantity. For which reason it is listed as a sport, and one which offers the guests of the Hotel del Coronado yet another novelty to add to their list of unusual pleasures enjoyed in this ever delightful hotel.

THE PLEASANT COURTS AT HOTEL DEL CORONADO ARE ALWAYS POPULAR WITH THE YOUNG VISITORS. RIGHT TO LEFT: MISS DOROTHY HOUSTON, MISS DORIS OSMUN. SITTING: MISS CATHERINE GUTHRIE, MISS WINIFRED PARKER, MISS EVELYN SAMPLE, MISS SARI ALLEN AND MISS VALERIE TRIMMER, OF GLENDALE

FOLLOWING A GAME AT THE CORONADO COUNTRY CLUB IS A PLEASURE SCENICALLY AS WELL AS A SPORTING EVENT. THIS DELIGHTFUL COURSE EXTENDS FROM SAN DIEGO BAY ALONG THE SPANISH BIGHT TO THE PACIFIC. IN THE BACKGROUND MAY BE SEEN A HANGAR AND THE TOWER OF THE ADMINISTRATION BUILDING OF THE NAVAL AIR STATION ON NORTH ISLAND. PHOTOGRAPHS BY TAYLOR STUDIO

The tennis tournaments have closely followed one another, the interest rising to highest pitch with the tourney in France, when our Helen Wills met the French champion, Suzanne Lenglen.

Another long distance yachting race will claim attention next month. The San Pedro-Honolulu race calls to the deep-sea sportsman of the Coast and at least twelve boats have answered.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A. MONTHLY BULLETIN

OFFICERS
DAVID J. WITMER, PRESIDENT
C. E. NOERENBERG, VICE PRESIDENT
EDGAR H. CLINE, SECRETARY
WINCHTON L. RISLEY, TREASURER

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH,
Editor

DIRECTORS
H. C. CHAMBERS
DONALD PARKINSON
ALFRED W. REA

PLAGIARISM AS A FINE ART

FIVE nationally known architects were asked to discuss precedent as applied to architectural design. Southland has already printed two of these addresses in this bulletin and as they have aroused much interest on the part of those desiring information on the trend of American architecture, we herewith print the first installment of the paper by Walter R. B. Wilcox who was classed as the progressive eclectic of the five men. Professor Wilcox is now in charge of the department of architecture at the University of Oregon. He is a Pacific Coast man having lived many years in Seattle. This will lend an especial interest to his words.

What is the Use of Precedent Doing to American Architecture?

Discussion of architectural precedent—its use or misuse, has gone merrily on since time out of mind. If it be futile to expect that it will ever end, at least one may hope that architectural design may sometime more certainly justify the one and suffer less from the other. Such outright copying of others' work, in whole or in part, as American architects do, would condemn its perpetrators as plagiarists, were it paralleled in other forms of art. Yet the practice wins high praise, and begets a naive wonder on their part that the public lacks interest in its results. Even mild objection to it seems to stir apprehension in the minds of those who put unfailing trust in the use of motives and details invented, or copied in turn, by architects of other periods of the world's history.

Architecture and the profession of architecture would, I believe, win greater authority and command greater popular interest if this apprehension were quieted—if the work of architects who deny the authority of formal precedent, was judged with sympathy; if it might be thought to aim for the same goal as that of their critics—that goal which is pleasing form, proper use of materials, fitness of ornament, harmony of color, appropriate scale, dignity, simplicity, and convincing character.

I know of none who disregard precedent in its explicit forms, who has not felt the thrill and been inspired by the beauty of the great architecture of the past, nor of that of alien races; none that has not sought therein the secret of fair proportions, delicacy, power, unity, quaintness or grandeur, and has not striven to vitalize his own work with those qualities—but in such a way that they shall speak of his own time, rather than of ages past.

They have courage, who undertake a new expression, which, since unfamiliar, they are aware is little likely to be gladly received by those with whom popularly accepted judgments customarily rest. They support a great purpose, who, recognizing "the simple force of need as an element of beauty," attempt an architecture that will, as they think, more truthfully, if not more beautifully, interpret our own thoughts and aspirations.

Perhaps, a free and easy borrowing from other's work does more accurately portray our present bent. We find little time in which to perfect our deeds. We are slaves to haste and imitations, and strangely confuse the superlative with superiority. We seem to admire big things, swift things, loud things, elaborate things. That, after all, may be an unconscious expression of our national genius, whereas any other practice may be but prophecy of a changing spirit. Suppose we consider our general habit and judge how, in other relationships, it might be regarded.

Reasoning from analogy has obvious defects as a mode of argument. It seldom is convincing. But sometimes, it awakens reflection as closer logic will not. Are the analogies between architecture and painting, architecture and sculpture, music or poetry, close enough to impress us with a proper sense of what freedom in architectural design might be like?

SOUTH FRONT OF THE CALIFORNIA SECURITY LOAN CORPORATION RECENTLY BUILT ON COLORADO STREET NEAR GARFIELD, PASADENA. WALLACE NEFF, ARCHITECT. THIS PHOTOGRAPH AND OTHERS OF THE SAME BUILDING ON PAGES 16 AND 17 ARE BY ALBERT HILLER, PASADENA.

Would not one more apt be found in a field of creative effort hedged about by limitations similar to those which surround architecture, limitations inherent in the nature of the nature of the product.

Architecture, unlike painting, sculpture, music and poetry, seeks an aesthetic expression of a practical condition. Whatever the limitations of mediums used in forms of art other than architecture, the artist is bound by none other, external to himself. His art is an expression of emotion, calculated to awaken an emotional response. But while architecture may awaken an emotional response, it must give expression to a practical idea—must solve a practical problem—must meet requirements of a utility. To arrest attention, even where habit has not already dulled preception, an analogy taken from a fresh field—one where the requirements of utility hamper the artist—may be more likely. For the purpose, appropose the analogy of the automobile.

THE PAWNSHOP, CITY OF MEXICO. ONE OF A LARGE COLLECTION OF MEXICAN PHOTOGRAPHS TAKEN BY OSCAR MAURER IN MEXICO MANY YEARS AGO. SOME OF THEM APPEARED IN SOUTHLAND IN THE ISSUE OF OCT.-NOV., 1919.

About 1895, the automobile manufacturer—all unconsciously, no doubt—was holding fast to precedent. He was producing the "horseless carriage" after the pattern of the narrow box buggy. Much difficulty had been met in adapting it to mechanical power, as the speaker has reason to suspect, because a client used to take him to ride in one of the first "marvels of the age" brought into the State of Vermont. The engine—steam—was under the seat, and apprehension was felt, when flashing along country roads at the terrifying rate of twenty miles an hour, lest the newfangled affair blow up. Frequent examinations were made to see that the fuse plug had not become congealed because of some undiscovered properties, high temperatures.

Manufacturers, however, almost immediately became aware of the absurdity of harboring difficulties of their own making, by clinging to precedent in the matter of vehicular form. They ceased attempts to adjust motors to inconvenient spaces in existing types of vehicles and began to build automobiles of shapes that would better accommodate them. They let form follow the essential functions of the new vehicle—a motor receptacle and a passenger conveyance. They produced new types of vehicles to meet changing conditions of life.

Early designs were not free from just criticism, and improvement in motors was accountable for a large part of the public's interest, but with standardization of mechanisms, persuasion rested more and more with appearance. Today, while mechanisms have well nigh reached perfection, the artistic evolution of the automobile has been no less surprising. In large measure, it has become an aesthetic expression of a practical utility.

To be Continued in the June Bulletin

THE CIVIC CENTER

The citizens of Los Angeles are not yet aware of the fact that we are not building our new City Hall in conformity with any adopted Civic Center Plan. The County has adopted the Allied Architects Plan which was endorsed by the Chapter but the City Council has refused to consider this or any other plan. The City Hall is being placed where a few councilmen and the mayor want it placed and Los Angeles is to repeat the stupid blunder that dozens of other cities have made; building its civic buildings hit and miss without conformity to any scheme. The newspapers are all talking about our new Civic Center but we can have none until the County and the City come to some agreement as to the placing of the buildings in the area set aside for that purpose. The discussion as to the height of the new City Hall is a very secondary question compared to the proper placing of that building so that it may have an adequate setting and be made to harmonize with the great plan for the entire group.

The Architects for the City Hall will design a beautiful building of which we will all be proud but unless it finds its proper place in a well studied group plan it will only increase a hundred fold the difficulties of future city planners who will endeavor to untangle the traffic and circulation problem being made through the shortsightedness and selfishness of some of our present councilmen. It is a shame that the great newspapers of Los Angeles have been so weak kneed regarding this situation. They all know of its existence but have all chosen to ignore it. If the public generally knew that the City Hall is being placed without thought as to its relation to future buildings in the Civic Center, the demand for a proper plan would be so insistent that the Council could not longer willfully ignore it as they are doing at present.

THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

MONTHLY BULLETIN

OFFICERS

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH, PRESIDENT
CLIFFORD A. TRUESDELL, VICE PRESIDENT
C. R. JOHNSON, SECRETARY
PAUL R. WILLIAMS, TREASURER

DIRECTORS

JULIAN GARNSEY, DIRECTOR
J. E. STANTON, DIRECTOR
H. C. CHAMBERS, DIRECTOR

NEW MEMBERS

We are happy to announce the election of the following men to membership in the Club. We bid them a most cordial welcome and hope that some one of the Club's activities will be found congenial to them so that they may have a chance to do their part in the Club's upbuilding.

C. K. Hazen
Maurice Trapet
George C. Snyder
James M. Hitchcock
Austin Whittlesey
Sam S. Neighbors
Robert H. Wiese
Kemper Nomland
Donald B. Worster
Donald W. Baird.

Please remember that the dues of the Club have been reduced to five dollars which includes the Southland Magazine. If you know any who ought to be signed up go after them. We are planning to offer a water cooled ruling pen to the fellow who gets the most new members.

FISHING WITH A LONG LINE

The March number of the Forum Magazine contains the most surprising collection of small houses from Southern California. A former saloon keeper and at present, "City Builder" has broken into the architectural sanctum and under the name of a professor of architecture at the University of Illinois who acts as sponsor, he has several of his choicest "one every sixty minutes" variety published with full discription. Ye Gods how long must we stand this? Dear Chapter member look at the March Forum and finish this tale for me. My heart is too full to go on. Only a Henry Davis could do it justice.

"BLAH RELIEF"

The following is the third installment under the above heading. We passed up one month because no one in the Club seemed to have any steam to let off. Or perhaps if they did have, they were a little timid about having their comments classed as "Blah." Well, anyhow here is one from the Club president. He doesn't seem to care how we class his remarks just so he has a chance to make them.

Dear Overworked Editor:

In a few moments of respite from pushing the Master Drawing Pencil (Eldorado) may I help you and incidentally myself and the Executive Committee of the Club by writing a short letter to the Club members who havn't yet waked up to the fact that they are missing some good times by refusing or neglecting or failing to give the Club their support.

ENTRANCE TO PATRIOTIC HALL. ETCHING BY LEROY SHERWOOD. BUILDING DESIGNED BY THE ALLIED ARCHITECTS OF LOS ANGELES

The Executive Committee has a vision of bigger things for the Club than have ever been attempted but they are unwilling to start them until they feel the strength of the membership behind them. Eighty men turned out for the meeting at the Johnathan Club. It was a fine meeting with plenty of pep in the program, thanks to Paul Williams and the office of John Austin, but there should have been at least 125 men present. Are we setting too high a standard? We don't think so.

I seek this opportunity to thank the fellows present for the fine manner in which they came through with their half dollars on the assessment to cover the debt inherited by the present administration of the Club. With this money and the kind offer of our host of the evening we are now clear of all incumbrances and you fellows who were not assessed can breathe easier, or if your conscience hurts, you can forward your four bits to the treasurer. I've never been present when he turned down any money.

I feel that the success of the Club for the year more or less depends upon the April meeting which is to be held April 27, after this letter goes to press. The meeting is to be the housewarming meeting in the new Club quarters at Eighth and Union. We will know after that meeting whether the Executive Committee made a mistake or not in providing a real home for the Club activities. Committees to help run the new quarters and the new activities will now be appointed. There was no need of a committee until there was something for a Committee to do. If every man will work when he is asked to do a job we will make a success of this thing in spite of the pessimists who have been saying it couldn't be done.

Sincerely,
H. O. SEXSMITH.

CLASS IN ARCHITECTURAL RENDERING AND WATER COLOR

This bulletin is beginning to sound like the announcement of subjects for a young ladies seminary course but we can't help it. We are going to give you chaps no chance to say that "there is no use in being a club member anyway, they never do anything" F. Tolles Chamberlin, well, why should we say any more? Anyhow he has agreed to take a class of Club members in the above named subject and about two days after this notice appears there is going to be a waiting list. The class will cost the same as the others we have named above. Some of you are probably asking why all this educational activity? There are a lot of fellows who want to raise the standard of their work and who can't afford to go to college. Why shouldn't the Club help them if it can. That is what it is for. If you fellows will back us we will make this one of the best architectural night schools in the country.

THE LIFE CLASS HAS STARTED

At our last club meeting the president announced that a life class would be started at the Club quarters as soon as twenty men were registered to take the work. The list was filled within a week, which is an indication that many fellows have just been waiting for some one to "start something." The class met the instructor Mr. Hamilton Wolf on Thursday evening, April 15, at the Atelier smoker at which time Mr. Wolf outlined the plan of work for the class and announced that it would meet Tuesdays and Thursdays from seven to nine. The class will be limited to twenty Clubmembers and the fee will be fifty cents a night. A waiting list has already been started and any men who are interested are advised to apply at once either to the Secretary of the Club or to either Massier of the Atelier.

Mr. Wolf is an artist of some prominence. He was at one time for several years head of the department of painting and designing at the University of Washington and is now teaching in the Chouinard School of Arts. He has but recently returned from a world tour of painting and sketching in out of the way places. In his portfolios are some charming studies made in northern Africa and in the South Sea Islands. He doesn't know it yet but we are going to ask him to exhibit some of them at the Club rooms during the week beginning May tenth. We are sure that Mr. Wolf's class is going to be a popular one with Club members and that his consent to help us will mean much toward the upbuilding of the Club.

CLASS IN STRUCTURAL MECHANICS

Last month we announced that arrangements were being completed for the starting of a class in mechanics. We are now privileged to announce that ths class wll be under the instruction of Mr. J. W. Ludlow, former Port Engineer at the Los Angeles Harbor. Mr. Ludlow is now professor of engineering at the University of Southern California. The fee for this class will be fifty cents for each two hour class. It is planned to meet twice a week. The problems will be intensely practical being confined largely to the direct application of engineering theory to the every day problems of office practice. About six men have already registered for this class without any publicity being given to it. The class will start as soon as the list is complete.

J. A. FLAWS COMPANY
Landscape Contractors
5105 SUNSET BOULEVARD
LOS ANGELES

This company was formed for the express purpose of catering to the contractual requirements of Landscape Architects and Architects.

PORTABLE TYPEWRITERS
WITH STANDARD KEYBOARD
Also All Makes Sold, Rented, Repaired, Exchanged
Parker Typewriter Co.
25 Years Experience
25 N. Marengo Pasadena

DANA BARTLETT
PAINTINGS OF CALIFORNIA
STUDIO GALLERY, 101 S. VIRGIL AVE.,
DREXEL 5552 LOS ANGELES

Landscape
Designing and Planting

The beautiful gardens of Southern California which we have created are evidence of our ability to design and plant your own grounds properly.

A reliable firm of thirty-eight years' experience in Southern California.

EDWARD H. RUST
NURSERYMAN
1625 Bank St. Colo. 997
So. Pasadena ELliot 2639

Are You Interested in Birds?

If so you will receive a beautiful colored picture of a California bird if you will send your name and address to

SOUTH MOULTON COMPANY
301 Bank of Italy Building
Los Angeles, California

QUALITY SERVICE
THE ELITE
DRY CLEANERS AND DYERS
Plant: 797 So. Fair Oaks Ave.
Colo. 1349 Pasadena, California

Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes
TROY LAUNDRY
In Business for Twenty Years
Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146 Alhambra 243-J

LAUNDERERS DRY CLEANERS
ROYAL LAUNDRY CO.
461 South Raymond Colorado 67
Pasadena, California

HILLER'S STUDIO
Official Photographer for California Southland
49 East Colorado Street
Pasadena, California
Albert Hiller Phone, Fair Oaks 155

Terrace 5485-W
FAULKNER'S
THE LINEN SHOP
HOUSEHOLD and FANCY LINENS
HANDKERCHIEFS, MONOGRAMS
314 East Colorado St. Pasadena, California

KEEPING THE GOOSE THAT LAYS THE GOLDEN EGGS

By THERESA HOMET PATTERSON

At West Lake Park I was tossing some food to the divers, when Lady Mallard walked out and took it first hand. Looking about for the men of the family I found them with heads tucked under wings stuffed and baking on the bank. Two Mallards swam up within three feet of each other when each dipped his bill and flipped the water and kept repeating much as the wrestlers sprinkle salt on their small arena. The Pelican then came into center stage, looking as much like a camel as a bird. He pounded the water with his great wings sending it up like a geyser. He shook his tail and then lifting his wings high, fanned the air. With bill open wide enough to swallow the moon there was a demonstration of neck contortions. The act finished, he humped himself to shore. The Swan seeing a moving picture machine swam right over with matchless grace and poise and honored me by eating from my hand .

The Muscovies which, like the white Pekins, are domesticated, are identified by the scarlet in which the eyes are set extending down onto the nose. They, with the Mallards, nest around the Lake.

A VERY CHOICE BUILDING SITE.

The White Pekin wears a coquettish curl—a matrimonial furbelow which passes with the emotion. The Baldpate has a broad green band on side of head in contrast to the Pintail which has a white band extending up from the breast. The Candian Goose has a white choker running under the chin and ending over his ears. Think of having his Majesty unafraid. Why can't we have more places before it is too late where this diminishing race of wild ducks and geese can be safe and lose its fear? A hunter who had bagged sixty ducks in one day said, there was no limit where he hunted—they wanted to get rid of them.

Conclusions drawn from a single feeding ground would be misleading. To find more birds than formerly in a locality would not mean that that species was increasing. They are being driven from old haunts by increasing population, and often by the needless drainage of lakes and marshes. New maps show that seven thousand lakes, rivers, and streams have disappeared in this country, due largely to the destruction of our forests. As our water supply depends upon the trees, so trees depend upon birds for their life. Gene Stratton Porter made a bet that a tree could not live two years without birds. Two trees were screened in April, and on July 8th neither tree had a leaf left, all devoured by the unchecked increase of their enemies.

It would be interesting to know just what takes place in a duck's mind, led by that Divine instinct to return to certain locations, when finding the lake it left has disappeared or the rushes in which it is ready to nest are gone. It might be akin to that of the French refugees returning after the war to desolation. The home instinct in birds and animals is so strong that they no doubt suffer from nostalgia. Like Californians and unlike the French, they like a new house, but do not change the locality, as banding has proven, unless forced to do so by conditions.

In destroying locations we are not simply robbing the birds but robbing ourselves of a source of happiness and health. One of our scientists is recommending the study of birds as a cure for illness. He claims they have a psychic effect. It would be a hardened soul who would not respond to the expression of joy in birds' songs, their grace and lightness and absorbing ways. To listen to their music is to throw open the windows of the spirit and let joy in and depression out. Birds give one the feeling of lightness and youth, and many of their ways are interesting and funny enough to make one forget everything but the toothache. For instance, a Towhee hopping up and scratching back with both feet, sending the crackling leaves in every direction; a humming bird using a leaf cup for a bath tub, or preening his feathers in dew; his aeronautics for the winning of madam, and the fashioning of that exquisite nest so small, so soft; and when it comes to a humming bird feeding the young there isn't anything else in the world as funny. Watch the California carpenter pound the acorn into the hole he has just chiseled out, gossiping all the time with his family; the blue jay covering his extra food with grass when he is too lazy to bury it; the song sparrow singing in the rain; the row of young birds on the clothes line when mother is coming. It is to laugh; and hasn't someone said laughter is the best medicine.

With yesterday's scarless mountainsides becoming today's villa ites, and the subdivider's harvest replacing last year's orange crop, and the shores of our lakes dotted with the cottages of country clubs, the need of having more bird preserves and saving land for parks is apparent. The Meadow Lark, which was always ready with his clessing, will find few nesting sites if southern California keeps the present pace. How much our highways will lose when he vacates. There ought to be a meadow dedicated to the larks every few miles, as an investment yielding the largest returns in optimism and cheer.

The parks, to attract many of the birds, must be kept wild, or planted after nature's plan, that they may have hiding and nesting places. It is such parks that satisfy us as well as the birds; for, as Hudson says: "We are all of us at times hermits at heart." Not since the days of George Washington's youth can man be trusted with an axe. Down in Friendship Forum we fried our bacon to the tune of Jenny Wren. But this lovely wild nook had to be improved, and the hollow tree in which the wren had nested had to be cut; the grape vines on which the boys and girls swung were taken down; the old sycamore that leaned low so the children could scamper up and down its back was taken away. The bushes and vines that came out close so that the birds hadn't far to venture for crumbs from our table—they were cut; the path which was so secluded, winding; the cool green shrubbery and ferns, will hereafter have such sentiment as is furnished by wild oats, and the thicket by the stream where the hermit thrush found hiding is cleaned out. The man who was working there was pleased with the improvement and hadn't noticed the ferns he was trampling.

Every garden can be a miniature bird preserve, if it is provided with water and such trees, shrubs and flowers found among our most ornamental ones as will furnish feed, shelter and nesting sites. A brush pile with some vines over it is a perfect bird haven. Deed to the birds a mass and they will repay you in the coin of health and happiness.

Birding is a sport that comes right to the door or window, or it will lead afield, giving all the exercise of golf in following the elusive form, identifying the song of searching for the nest so wisely concealed. It is a great game sufficiently thrilling without gambling.

A DELIGHTFUL GROUP OF HOUSES, SET AROUND A LITTLE COURT LIKE A VILLAGE. ALL DESIGNED BY J. WILMER HERSHEY, PASADENA, CALIF.

BUILDING BEAUTY INTO BUSINESS

Groups of houses giving unity to a suburb or a little neighborhood in the development of our new western cities form a profitable kind of investment if they fill a real want. Our astute realtor knows this and also the kind of client he must satisfy. Wise indeed is he if he also realizes that while styles may change and pass, beauty is universal and will never grow out of date but will increase in value as the population grows in appreciation of good architecture. There is much leisure in California for study; and the women's clubs of the state have taken up the appreciation of art and architecture as a serious course. Inadequate homes, badly built and lacking in good proportions will no longer satisfy and builders must seek better designs or learn the rules of good proportion themselves as did the master builders of colonial times.

Meanwhile when we find houses that besides being well built and practical give pleasure to the eye because of the sheer beauty of their design, we seek the architects who designed them and limit our patronage to those who can put beauty into building whether it be a home, an office building or a shop.

Glimpses of beauty here given show the work of J. Wilmer Hershey whose charming sketches made in the drafting room of Architectural Advisory Committee at Santa Barbara delighted all his associates in the stress and strain and inspired much of the beauty now incorporated in the rebuilt Estado or State street.

That commercial buildings can be made to embody beautiful design, Mr. Hershey has proved at Santa Barbara and in the charming Norwic village cottages shown at the top of the page. That handsome stores attract trade the world has learned but lately. More and more is the demand for business blocks of attractive architecture growing, and the time is coming when the mere addition of stucco will not satisfy the craving for good looking streets in our cities and towns.

Men who have studied the town as a whole and can conceive of the design in relation to other existing houses must be the ones to express in California architecture the lore of beauty which is so persistent in this state.

In the apartment house on the left, Mr. Hershey has solved for the owners of apartment houses a problem that has prevented many from building economically, this form of income property. Beautiful in proportions and fenestration, it is a distinctive addition to any street.

A HANDSOME APARTMENT HOUSE DESIGNED BY J. WILMER HERSHEY
A DOUBLE HOUSE AS GOOD LOOKING AS A PRIVATE HOME.

THE WA-WAN CLUB, HISTORY AND LANDMARKS

[Part of a talk given by (Mrs. W. H.) Jessie Calhoun Anderson, at Wa-Wan Club History and Landmarks Program.]

It seems to be the fashion to announce some startling discovery in the personal records of George Washington. Many dreadful unjust things have been said about him by lovers of wickedness, but up to this time, I do not know of his being accused of going to a moving picture show and taking his wife and her friends. But two items in his private ledger prove this to have been the case. They are: "For taking ladies to ye Microcosm, £1.8," and "For taking ladies to ye Microcosm, £1.4."

The Microcosm exhibited, as advertised in the New York Gazette, "an amazing variety of moving figures, and scenes, diversified with natural beauties, operations of art, of human employments and diversions, all passing as in real life."

It was built by the late ingenious Mr. Henry Bridges of London; who, having received the approbation and applause of the Royal Society, and afterwards made considerable additions and improvements, so that the whole, being now completely finished, is humbly offered to the curious of this city, as a performance which has been the admiration of every spectator, and proved itself by its singular perfections, the most instructive as well as entertaining piece of work in Europe. Its outward structure is a most beautiful piece of much complicated workmanship, composition of architecture, sculpture, and painting.

INTERIOR OF SPANISH HALL IN APARTMENT

The inward contents are as judiciously adapted to gratify the ear and eye and understanding.

Shows all the celestial phenomena, the nine muses, Orpheus in the forest, a carpenter's yard with various branches of the trade, a delightful grove wherein are birds flying and many other motions.

And lastly, is shown the whole machine in motion, when upwards of 1200 wheels and pinions are in motion at once. And during the whole performance, it plays several fine pieces of music on the organ and other instruments, both single and in concert, in a very elegant manner.

'Tis hoped, as the machine cannot be moved without a very considerable expense, and loss of time, and its purposed stay here very short, that gentlemen and ladies will be as expeditious as convenient.

The art and craft of moving pictures waited for over a century and a half, the inventions of photography, electrical appliances, and the celluloid film reel, for development, and is only just now, after nearly two hundred years, beginning to take up agan, the idea which the "ingenious Mr. Henry Bridges of London" originated, of the delightful and manifold possibilities of moving pictures as a method in education; to quote his own words: "the most instructive as well as entertaining."

T. W. Mather Co. Inc.
PASADENA, CAL.

Dry Goods

Women's & Children's

Wearing Apparel

Colorado Street at Marengo

FOR LEASE
at
CARMEL HIGHLANDS
Monterey County, California

A beautiful housekeeping studio. Situated on a rocky coast amid pines and with a trail to a private beach. Delightful climate and a glorious outlook. House consists of one large studio living room with bath, kitchenette and garage. Electric range and water heater. Huge fireplace. Wonderful terraces and an outdoor grill. A place of refinement, beauty and seclusion. Well furnished. Reasonable rates for long term tenant of discriminating taste. For details address

E. H. TICKLE
Carmel Highlands Inn
Carmel, California

"The Gate to Healthful Beauty"
CORLANE
Marinello System
F. O. 1648 570 East Colorado St.
Pasadena
Opposite the Presbyterian Church

PASADENA

Larger Sizes
but Slenderizing
and Distinctive

Gowns for Gentlewomen . . . . . .
Frocks for the larger sized Miss . . . .
A Department for rebuilding gowns . .

Schaffer
566 E Colorado St.
at Madison
GOWNS for LARGER WOMEN

MEMORIES OF MUSICIANS

By J. K. Seneca

RADIANT memories of last season are Jeritza—the only one of all who has brought laughter as well as rapture; Ponselle, superb vocally, but lacking in taste and the finer sensibilities; and the accomplished Hempsel, whose small, delicious speaking voice, addressed to her adorers in gentlest reproach and delicate farewells, one still can hear,—almost a fairy's vocie, like the silveriest little bell. Amongst this year's radiant memories will be Elly Ney, whose husband, William van Hoogstraten, conducts the Portland Symphony Orchestra. The famous sculptor and deeply interesting woman, Elizabeth Ney, whose statues of its pioneers and soldiers are the pride of Texas, was descended from marechal Ney, "next to Napoleon the most heroic figure of his time." Whether or not Elly Ney can trace her descent as clearly, it is yet so strongly suggested by her art and personality that one is fain to believe it true. Of this great and splendid lineage one would expect characters of originality and strength, impetuosity and boldness. These indeed seemed the qualities of Elly Ney's art when I heard her in New York a few years ago, not long after her first coming to America. Remembrance of the audience's instant response and surrender, and of the great hall seemed to fill with ka glow of eager happiness, has made her brief name ever since associate of the spirit of joy.

The afternoon opened gloomily. Outside, over the city's lovely ruined hills, raineloud drifted. Inside, the sight of a half empty auditorium drowned anticipatory pleasure in acute sympathy for the artist. One felt miserably ashamed of Los Angeles, until one persuaded oneself that apart from lately flooded streets, and Sunday afternoon inertia, there must have been deficiency in preparation, and consequent unawareness of their good fortune that kept people away. Over the stage a meagre cold top light shone bleakly on the back curtain's chilly clouds and dispirited shapes, down to the hard greyness of the floor, whereon obtruded an unseemly chair arrayed in cushions. There were no warming footlights. Though indeed one did not desire the crimson glare that lent to portions of Gigli's gentle countenance an appearance of the acutest stage of sunburn. From the orchestra roof, its arching gold unlighted, dangled irrelevantly the little ventilator streamers, their trivial flutterings always out of time with the music. Surveying that bleakness, memory came of a New York debut. The stage very softly lit; shadow-filled spaces; the light falling richly on the player's green blue draperies, and edging in gold and brown wildness of her hair.

PORTRAIT OF MRS EUGENE D. WILLIAMS OF SOUTH PASADENA, BY MAX WIECZOREK.

The hearts of those present seemed to go out to Elly Ney in their welcome. Somehow came the comforting knowledge that to this artist the audience's sympathy was of far more important than its size. Aware of our delight she was yet alone with her music.

A RECENT PORTRAIT BY WIECZOREK OF JAY B. MILLARD, PRINCIPAL OF THE VIRGIL JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOL. PRESENTED TO THE LIBRARY BY THE TEACHERS IN THIS HIGH SCHOOL.

The world within and without began swiftly and blissfully to change. What was narrow and petty in oneself that disliked discord, and was intolerant and fastidious dissolved in genial warmth and love. Joy, one knew again, was as profoundly part of life as sorrow. Shadowing and thinly stirring in the sad, empty spaces were there not listening, approving spirits? One pitied so those absent ones—trivally amused; immersed in the spirit-devastating pages of the Sunday newspapers. . . deprived of their bright happiness!

" . . . The great heart of the music that is burning to be expressed." Her words . . . was not the waiting soul of beauty satisfied? Through the dull air of that concert hall streamed not the eternal affirmation of Art to man's doubting spirit? . . . Diviner destinies. Beyond this hurrying litle life—something that must be true.

New delight came after the close—riches heaped on riches!—with the revealed personality of the artist. A joyous ardor; a smile full of warm liking for her fellows; and, momentarily, in the dark sensitive changing eyes, a deep heart—stirring sweetness. In that moment still wrapped in the transfiguring radiance of her music, mingling genius with a purely human loveableness, and so twice blessing us, she seemed indeed amongst the most beautiful human beings one had encountered. One likes to imagine that this quality of endearingness may be also part of her heritage. The face of Marechal Ney, the idol of his countrymen, has more charm than that of Napoleon's other great Marshals—at least as their portraitists saw them. And Schopenhauer, whose bust she modelled, said of the young Elisabeth Ney, greatniece of the marechal, that she was "lovable."

STATEMENT OF THE OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, CIRCULATION, ETC., REQUIRED BY THE ACT OF CONGRESS OF AUGUST 24, 1912, OF CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, PUBLISHED BY M. URMY SEARES, AT PASADENA, CALIFORNIA, FOR APRIL, 1926.

State of California, County of Los Angeles.

Before me, a Notary Public in and for the State and County aforesaid, personally appeared M. Urmy Seares, who, having been duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that she is the editor and manager of California Southland, and that the following is a true statement of the ownership, management, circulation, etc., of the aforesaid publication, for the date shown in the above caption; that the name and address of the publisher, editor and manager is M. Urmy Seares, Pasadena; that the owner of said publication is M. Urmy Seares; that there are no mortgages, bondholders, or other security holders, owning or holding one per cent of the bonds, mortgages or other securities of California Southland. Sworn to and Subscribed before me this first day of April, 1926.

JOHN R. BRAGDON, Notary Public.

My commission expires November 7, 1926.

EL ENCANTO—ENCHANTMENT

By KEITH BRAINERD

FROM the hills behind Santa Barbara the eye looks down across the expanse of white walls and red roofs, holds its gaze a moment in an attempt to pierce the veil which lightly shrouds the channel islands, and then loses itself utterly in the blue sea of forgetfulness, the blue Pacific, stretching from the shores of Eden to the edge of the world. Lost in a world of blue—a Ceruleous world that devours the sight until the eye is wearied from giving. Vacuous, dazed, exhausted, from the edge of the world the eye returns, wave by wave, from trough to crest, from crest to trough, to be caught at last by a white cupped hand and cast back to the sands of Eden. The sands glitter in the glare of the sun, the breakers attack and retreat, attack and retreat, the islands shimmer and weave new veils of sunbeams and mist, and the blue Pacific, like a great chord from an organ, rolls away and away toward the rim of the cup, to the shores of Oblivion, where no eye may ever follow. No eye but the eye of the mind, and that in its fantastic flight finds on the shores of Oblivion only discarded dreams and nameless memories—memories of green hills and eucalyptus groves, of darting birds and nodding flowers, of enchanted gardens in the hills of Santa Barbara.

As we climb toward the end of a winding road up into those hills behind Santa Barbara we come to El Encanto, where we loose our fancies and leave them free to wander where they will. Off they go to the ends of the earth, prying into forgotten corners, climbing crumbling stairs, only to return at last, one by one, and settle down there beside us in that garden of enchantment. Enchantment! That sprightly but elusive lady who is ever just beyond our reach—beckoning, calling, luring us irresistibly on, ever promising to wait for us just over the brow of the next hill. We top the hill, but we are never quite fast enough, for the lady is gone, leaving only her jeweled footprints, and the echo of her passing. Yet, with each succeeding hill, the grass is a little greener, the trees a little more friendly, the silence a little softer. Some spots she passes quickly, in others, she lingers, wandering softly about, weaving her spell of gossamer fantasy. Into the air she tosses the dust of idle daydreams, and on the grass she sprinkles the potion of blissful sleep. Of the sunbeams she fashions a golden canopy, and rain-drops filtering through become molten silver. Under the spell, the birds forget to scold and remember only their songs. Even the crickets chirp in tune.

Great eucalyptus trees draw long and shadowy finger-prints across a golden canopy, beneath which Dame Enchantment rests. Little brown cottages are scattered about her, but they cannot frighten her away, for they are hidden from her sight by the deep-piled scent of flowers. Secure, at peace, she dreams away the softly-spoken hours, caught and held in the spell of her own weaving. El Encanto!

COTTAGES REACHED BY FLOWER-BORDERED WALKS ARE A PART OF EL ENCANTO'S HOSPITALITY AT SANTA BARBARA

FLOWERS IN MASSES OF SIMPLE COLOR SCHEMES UNDER THE EUCALYPTUS CHARM THE GUESTS OF THIS HOTEL

SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.
H. G. CHASE
(Established 1903)
Real Estate and Rentals
1012 State St. Phone 125

PAINTINGS OF THE WEST
STENDAHL GALLERIES
OF THE PACIFIC COAST
The Ambassador Hotel—Los Angeles Hotel del Coronado—San Diego

Kentucky Hand-Quilted Comforters and Robes at the
Eleanor Beard Shop
Elizabeth B. Parsons, Director
Community Playhouse Patio
Pasadena Phone Terrace 5790-J
On July 15, at El Paseo Sport Shop, Santa Barbara

GATES
GRILLES
VICENZA STONE
FOUNTAINS
BENCHES
FIGURES
FURNITURE
—:—
Chapwoods
ITALIAN HOUSE
6908 HOLLYWOOD BLVD.
HOLLYWOOD
GR 1349

fabriano shop
"By the Tall Sycamore"
Sixty South Catalina, at Green, Pasadena
Fine Imported Hand Loom Papers
For correspondence, etching, engraving, printing, poster work and fancy wrapping.
Designing, Printing, Engraving
Imported and Domestic Handmade Gifts
Wakefield 4082

J. R. BRAGDON & CO.
Real Estate and Insurance
15 So. Raymond Ave., Pasadena

A new, popular edition of
SMALL HOUSE DESIGNS
Published by the
Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara, California.
Price $1.50 Postpaid

Antiques
JOHN W. CONDIT
Dealer in rare old pieces selected from private homes. Specialist in the proper restoration of heirlooms.
199 S. Fair Oaks Ave., Pasadena
Telephone Terrace 0315-W

MISS HARKER'S SCHOOL
FOR GIRLS
Palo Alto -:- -:- -:- California
"The Home of Stanford University"
Outdoor life all the year round. One hour from San Francisco. College Preparatory and Special Courses. Separate residence for girls from 5 to 14 years. Catalog on request.

KENWOOD HALL
Resident and Day School for Girls. Sub-Primary through High School.
Open throughout the year.
Directors: Ruby Mildred King, Grace Baylor Bobbitt.
Tel. WAshington 1612 675 So. Vermont Ave., Los Angeles

The Girls' Collegiate School 34th Year
NEWLY LOCATED IN THE COUNTRY
Boarding and Day School. Accredited East and West. Out-Door Life a Reality. 50-acre estate. All sports. Saddle Horses. New Buildings. Italian type. L. A. Office, "Ask Mr. Foster" Information Service in Robinson's Dept. Store at Seventh Street and Grand Ave., Tel. BR 4701.
Glendora, Calif. Miss Parsons and Miss Dennen, Principals

Westridge
A COLLEGE PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS. ACCREDITED.
Primary, Intermediate and Academic Departments.
MARY L. RANNEY, AMIE C. RUMNEY, Principals.
324 Madeline Drive, Pasadena, California Telephone Wakefield 5276

The Elliott School for Girls
Residence and Day School.
Ideal Home Life Character Building
Superior Educational Advantages. Sub-Primary through Eleventh Grade.
Martha Collins Weaver, M. A., Principal. Pico Blvd. at Grammercy Place.
EMpire 5347

SCULPTOR OF SILVER
FOR THE TABLE OF THE BRIDE
PORTER BLANCHARD
BURBANK :: :: :: CALIFORNIA

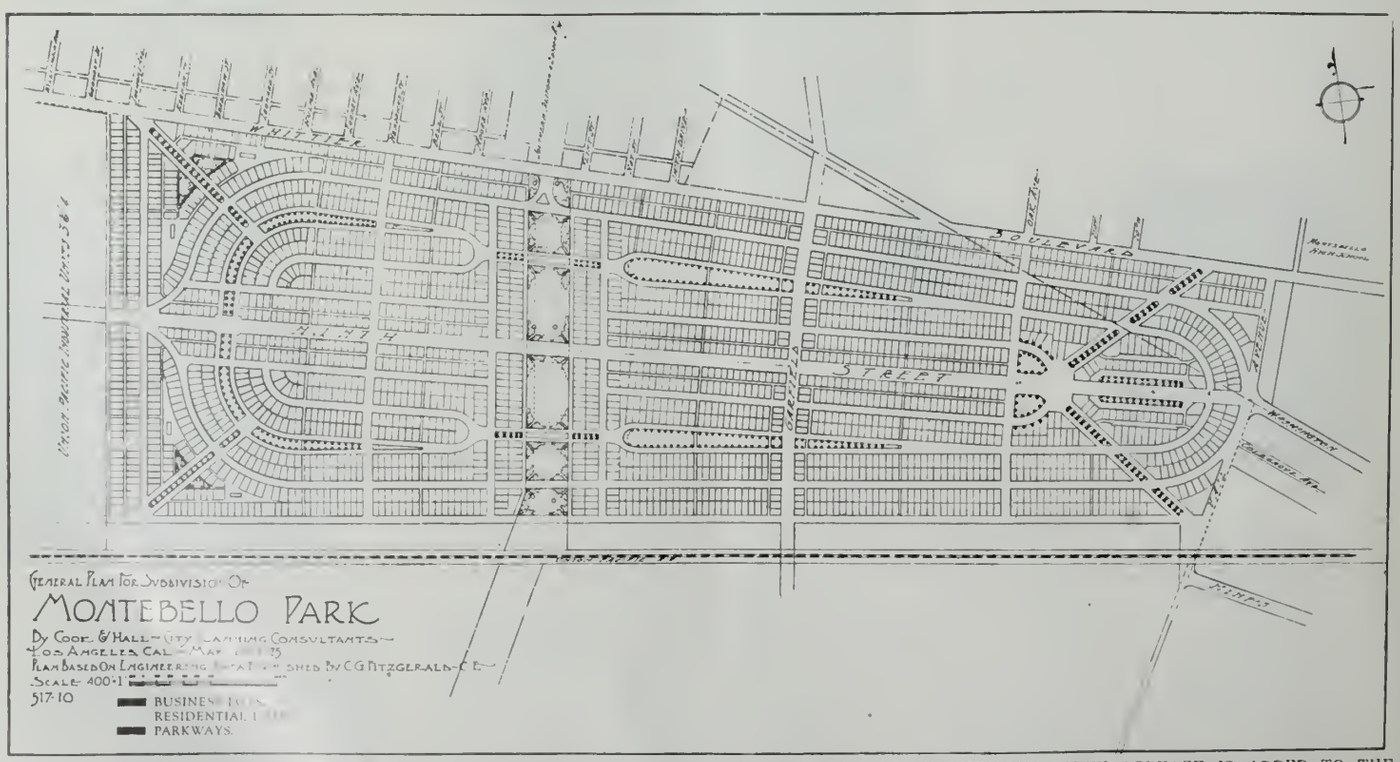
A COURSE IN THE APPRECIATION OF ARCHITECTURE

OUR subject for this month is town planning, leaving the subject of city planning for another time. For the small town or subdivision is more within our scope than is the planning or rather replanning of Los Angeles and other large cities which have been built on the old checkerboard plan, without thought of contours or convenience, or economic value of land.

The trained landscape architect is perforce a planner of up-to-date subdivisions. He has studied the cities of the world; he knows what modern engineering can do; his job is to take all the knowledge which has been gained by the experience and mistakes of the past and to use that expert knowledge in preventing mistakes in the future.

The accompanying plan gives more lots to the acre, more value to the surrounding territory and incalculably more value to each homesite because it looks the disadvantages of an industrial site squarely in the face, parks the power line district, leaves ample grounds for schools and pleasure parks and gives to every little homesite the advantages of boulevards set at an angle and all the other elements of beauty afforded by the most expensive suburban tracts.

The unit in the subdivision, however, is the house itself. Every club in every town can see to it that good units are built there. The following article, written at the request of Miss Pearl Chase, Secretary, S. B. C. A. A., was published in the Better Homes Week supplement to the SANTA BARBARA PRESS of April 25, 1926. It gives a brief but trenchant analysis of the elemental factors to be considered in the application of early Californian architecture of domestic type to modern needs. Mr. Richard Seares was for the past ten months employed by the Architectural Advisory Committee of Santa Barbara in the rehabilitation of State street after the earthquake and the articulation of the new code.



Santa Barbara has led the way by proving that good design can be made obligatory in any city code. Palos Verdes has gone farther and proved that ugliness can be excluded from new towns and suburban districts. Palos Verdes has a highly paid jury of architects. Santa Barbara has an addition to its city inspector's office. Pasadena plans to act through the Woman's Clubs and volunteer architectural advisors. Any town can pool its ideas in an exhibition of good architect's photographs and designs.

THE BUNGALOW IN SPANISH STYLE

By RICHARD SEARES

THE small house on San Andreas owned by Mrs. Larson is an excellent example of the successful use of the Spanish style in the design of a modest house. The most casual passer-by will agree to its charm and perhaps it will even stimulate in him a mental picture of a proposed home of his own. Yet woe to his visionings, unless he lingers and studies long enough to analyze the subtleties of this apparently simple form of construction. Indeed, in its very simplicity lies its attraction. Nothing has been added to it without due reason. Consequently, it in no way gives the impression of pretension to qualities which it does not have. By this we mean that the openings have been logically and economically located, and ornament is used very sparingly, and then only to soften the lines and to direct the eye to the most interesting parts.

It should be more widely realized that houses as small as this are unable to wear ornament for its own sake alone. The point in which so many builders fail lies in their method of constructing from the utilitarian aspect alone leaving the idea of ornament as a secondary consideration. By the time they are ready to think about ornamentation they have missed the only allowable chances to use it; namely in the shape of the building itself, in the harmonious relation of the openings to that shape, and in any economical originality in treating spots of interest. In short, a small house will be found most pleasing if considered as an ornament in itself instead of a medium for superfluous decoration.

TOWN PLANNING IN THE LOS ANGELES METROPOLITAN DISTRICT IS LARGELY A MATTER OF SUBDIVISIONS. NEW ACREAGE IS ADDED TO THE CITY OR INDUSTRIAL DISTRICTS SPRING UP AND WORKERS WANT HOMES NEARBY. THIS PLAN FOR A NEW SUBDIVISION BETWEEN RAILROAD TRACKS AND POWER LINES ALONG EAST NINTH STREET SOLVES MANY PROBLEMS. COOK AND HALL, CITY PLANNING CONSULTANTS

The suitable use of color is another essential factor in making the most of the possibilities. Mrs. Larson's house with its warm tile roof and orange trim is well set off by the cool green of the planting at the front. Had it been impossible to provide this planting, it would have been necessary to employ some shade of green or blue on the woodwork in order to form a balance with the warm mass of roof color. Muddy colors are unfavorable. Pure tones, of whatever shade, used against a near white plaster give the sparkle and life that is required. Many builders attempt to obtain an effect by the use of a highly tinted stucco. This indeed will attract attention, but unfortunately will not hold it. The eye is stunned by the amount of color and is rendered unable to find or at least appreciate the interesting details. Furthermore, a very light surface gives the best contrast for the heavy shadows under the eaves and in the deep reveals at the openings. This play of light and shadow should not be overlooked, as its proper use gives character to the design. Even on the bare walls alone shadows must be considered. Slight unevenness in the texture of the surface gives very pleasing shadow effects when the sun is nearly in line with the wall. Sand or dash plaster finishes look hard and monotonous. Spotty "jazz" finishes, like strong colors, are out of place. They attract more attention than they deserve and soon tire the eye with their unchanging obviousness. The primitive workman slapped mud onto the walls of his adobe and worked it as smooth as he could by eye, using his bare hands and crude trowels. This surface when white-washed, caught the shadows in a pleasing way which never happens with elaborate, mechanically produced textures.

The exterior walls of the house under discussion are of adobe laid on a continuous concrete footing. The latter serves a twofold use: tying the building together and at the same time holding the adobe walls above the ground, away from moisture which might work up and weaken them. The thickness of adobe walls provides good reveals at windows and doors giving an impression of solidity and of coziness within. It must never be forgotten that we are following a type of design that was developed in masonry and adobe. Care must be taken that construction in wood frame and plaster shall be so executed that from the standpoint of appearance there might be safe and sound masonry under the stucco. Thin arches and walls, distorted brackets and shallow or missing reveals all advertise the deception and spoil the picture.

The old adobe buildings built here in the early days were made of simple materials used economically and thoughtfully. The construction was sincere. It is this sincerity and simplicity mingled with sentiment that makes them admirable. Many of these had floors of dirt, packed hard. Whether of dirt or tile, the floor level was never much above the ground, particularly in small buildings. Today our wooden floors are raised two or three feet to provide ventilation. This, of course, raises the roof line and in small houses the ungainly effect spoils the proportion. To overcome this Mrs. Larson laid floors in cement and tile a few inches above the ground. The resulting lack of entrance steps, combined with the low roofed open porch at the front, extends an air of invitation to the visitor. Casement windows, dividing the windows into small panes, suggest shelter and seclusion much more than large sheets of glass in double hung windows ever could.

Little need be said of the floor plan further that that it is compact and economical. The layman finds little difficulty in appreciating a good plan. It is the problem of how to form a fitting house over a good plan that puzzles him.

ARTS AND DECORATION

TEXTILES — By Natalie White

THE story of the beginning of the textile art might, like the fairy tale, commence with "Once upon a time," for nothing is known concerning the date of the origin except that it took place long, long before man began to keep records of any sort. It must have been while skins and grasses were worn as a protection against the wind and cold, and a little before the time that utensils and stone implements were first used. For at the dawn of the earliest era of the stone age men were making mats, baskets, nets, and rude fabrics of sinews of animals, strips of skin, flax, hemp, wool, bast of linden, fiber of palm and cocoa-nut trees and various wild grasses.

Upon looking back at this prehistoric period the idea of the passage of time is lost to such an extent that the great step from crude skins and grasses to the beautifully woven web of silk or linen seems the matter of a moment. Something which occurred, perhaps, with the waving of a magic wand, rather than the slow and laborious process of hundreds of years which it must have been.

The development may not have come by magic, but it seems as romantic as any fairy tale that the spider's web, the bird's nest, or the caterpillar's cocoon may have given man his first idea of interlaced work. Or that nature might have been man's first teacher. For the interlacing of the palm leaves by the wind, or the interwoven fibrous matter which covers the trunk of the palm trees might well have served as an example for his first endeavors toward weaving.

The idea may have come in all of these different ways, because it seems to have sprung up independently in widely separated sections of the country at about the same time, for textiles of great beauty which must have been woven thousands of years before Christ have been found among the earliest ruins of Peru, Mexico, and Egypt and in the cave dwellings of New Mexico and Arizona.

Some of the most interesting discoveries are those of the Lake Dwellers in Switzerland. In the winter of 1853-54 the weather was very cold and so very dry that the water in the Alpine lakes of both Switzerland and northern Italy receded so far back that the people living near by saw evidences of ancient dwellings, built on poles. Excavations were made and village after village was unearthed from the mud of centuries. Here among the ruins were found fragments of knitted and woven materials of both flax and wool which are the earliest known specimens of the textile art. Also small bundles of flax fiber both raw and twisted into threads of various thickness. Some were made into ropes and nets and baskets.

By the beginning of the bronze age rude spindles and looms were used very similar to those in use today. While at the dawn of history wool, cotton, flax and silk were woven with great skill, and were even ornamented and dyed.

An Ideal School for Young Women

Cumnock School

COLLEGE WORK IN THE FOLLOWING COURSES:

Literary Appreciation — Vocal Interpretation of Literature — Voice and Diction — Short-Story
Public Speaking — French — Dancing
Dramatics — Story Telling — Psychology
Journalism
Art and Art Appreciation

An accredited High School in Class A preparing for Western and Eastern Colleges and Universities.

HELEN A. BROOKS, Director

5353 West Third Street — Los Angeles
WH itney 3427 —TELEPHONES— WH itney 7311

Urban Military Academy
23rd YEAR

A good summer camp is an essential part of every real boy's education. Urban, with the most completely organized camp in the West offers a worthwhile summer in the High Sierras. Fishing, Swimming, Riding, all sports. Membership limited. Experienced staff. Enroll now. For information, see Secretary, Wilcox at Melrose, Los Angeles, California. HEmpstead 7602.

NEW HOME
OF
PACIFIC MILITARY ACADEMY
Culver City, California

Boarding and Day School. Fireproof Buildings. Completely Equipped Laboratories. Grammar and High School. Enrollment limited.

For Catalogue Write Mrs. Loughan or telephone Culver City 3294

The Art of

Norma Gould

Authentic Dances—Pantomime
Eurythmics

Ballroom Department—Louise Kramer

Special Course for Professional Dancers
Phone or write for information

460 N. Western Ave. HEmpstead 3530

The Westlake School for Girls
333 South Westmoreland Avenue

Residence and Day School
Lower School, College Preparatory, Junior College
Fully Accredited
Departments of Art, Music, Home Economics

JESSICA SMITH VANCE — FREDERICA DE LAGUNA
Telephone DRexel 0052

Continued from April number.

Illustrated by M. V. Oates.

Photographs by Albert Hiller.

Authentic Egyptian costumes, worn in "Pharaoh's Daughter," presented by Pasadena Community Players.

THE PEOPLE OF LOTUS LAND

By FAIRFAX PROUDFIT WALKUP

MEANWHILE, the Prince Hatsu has arrived with his retinue. He is a stalwart young man, with fine, sensitive features. He wears a short, simple linen kilt about the loins. It is gathered up in folds, confined by the belt in front; the overlapping end might have been left straight, or cut diagonally across the front. Over the tunic is worn the royal girdle, with its hanging geometric ends edged with a row of the sacred Ureus. Had he been hunting, or just returned from battle, he would have worn, in addition, the triangular bronze or gold shield, pendant from the girdle. He would also have carried a bow and a quiver of arrows—warlike implements whose usage was learned from the Hittites. On his head would have rested a scaled metal helmet, as protection against the foe.

But, as befits a young gallant going a-wooing, he has laid aside all warlike garments, retaining only the leather corslet which, with its painted wings of the god Horus, well become his splendid chest. In his hand is a curved walking stick of ebony, ivory, and gold; and his sleek black wig is bound with the fillet of the sacred serpent. A lock of hair, curved at the end and encased in gold, hangs over his left cheek. It is the insignia of the heir-apparent, similar to the Spanish title of the "Infanta." The lock is, of course, false, as all men shaved the head, except when in mourning. Sandals of red leather adorn his feet. With boyish bravado, he has retained one bit of warlike suggestion. On the sole of each sandal is painted the picture of a bearded Asiatic—testimonial of his ability to trample his enemy under foot!

While the youthful lovers recline on the gaily decorated barge, fanned by slaves wielding long plumes of ostrich and golden-threaded palms, the King holds audience in the palace. The throne on which he is seated displays the emblem of the sacred scarabaeus. With outstretched wings, the little insect holds within its paws the orb which symbolizes eternal life, the rebirth of man throughout the ages. The King himself, so stately in his robes, is only another incarnation of the Pharaoh who has ruled in unbroken succession through so many centuries. His close-wrapped tunic of deep blue linen falls to his feet, which are encased in gilt sandals. Over his shoulders is the mantle of authority—the rectangular cloak, deep purple in color, which, like the shawl of the princess, is knotted up under the regal collar. This cloak, in its rectangular form, was adopted by the Greeks of the fourth century, B. C. It was later used by the Romans, about 200 A. D., who, however, preferred a circular lower edge to the garment.

CHALDEAN AND PERSIAN VISITING ENVOYS.

On the King's head rests the sacred crown of the Pharaohs—the pschent, or double crown, of Upper and Lower Egypt. It is a combination of the white crown of Thebes, or Upper Egypt, and the red crown of the Delta, or Lower Egypt, whose capital was Memphis. One may see this crown on most of the colossi, notably the Ramesseum at Thebes.

The King wears a straight, narrow, square-cut beard about four inches in length. As with the wigs, the beards, too, are false. For ordinary men, they measured two inches in length; for the gods, they are curved at the end. In some of the tomb paintings, the kings are shown with curved beards. This is to indicate their ascendancy to godship after death. Only priests and slaves went beardless.

One of these priests stands behind the King, in the shadow of the throne. He is the High Priest of the Temple of Isis: if the truth were known, he wields more power than the King. His cheeks are smooth, but they mask the secrets of eternity. A tight skull cap hides his shaven head. A shirt with short, tight sleeves covers the upper part of his body, while a modest apron swathes the lower limbs. Over this is hung a wide linen robe, with a slit for the head. Wool was taboo, the priests considering it unclean. A cloak of the warmer material, it is true, might be worn out of doors, but it must be laid aside before entering the sacred portals of the temple. It is this same shrinking from wool (which, they believed, engendered worms) which led them to wrap their mummies in cotton or linen bands.

The priests were, indeed, a cleanly lot. They bathed twice a day, and twice each night, and shaved the whole body, including the head, every third day. Under these circumstances, it seems that they might have worn wool with impunity—no chance for the insects to breed!

Advancing to pay homage to the King, come merchants from Nubia, with heaped up trays of the nut gold that give their land its name. From Abyssinia come emissaries of the Queen—perhaps the ancestor of the lovely Sheba. From Chaldea and Babylonia come richly robed, black-bearded men, seeking the secrets of the Egyptian engineers in exchange for their rare and precious silver. Slaves, in scant cotton loin cloths, speed noiselessly here and there—the same slaves whose nameless progenitors, in countless hordes and with endless agony had made possible the pyramids. Soldiers, with triangular shields, spears, and scaled helmets, keep guard along the walls.

(To be Concluded)

A PRINCE OF EGYPT.

A PRIEST OF KARNAK WITH ASSISTANT PRIESTS.

ATTENDANT TO PRINCE.

The Assembly Tea Room

The In and Out-of-Town House of Los Angeles serves
LUNCHEON, TEA AND DINNER
INCIDENTALLY
The Very Choicest Food
Special Sunday Dinner 5 to 8

644 South Flower St., Los Angeles
Phone VAndike 7177

PASADENA CORSET SHOP
HELEN B. FORD
A Complete Line of Robes, Negligees, Bed Jackets, Lingerie, Handkerchiefs, and Novelties.
308 E. Colorado Street Fair Oaks 3388

FLORNINA

95 South Los Robles
Pasadena, California

. . . . where the best of New York, Paris and London have been selected for a discriminating clientele

GOWNS
NEGLIGEES
LINGERIE

Boudoir
Accessories

Coats for Street and Evening

YOUR CAR

For Calling
For Shopping
For the Theatre
For Business
For Pleasure

Buick, Chrysler, Dodge and Ford
Open and Closed Cars

For Hire Without Drivers
at a Low Cost per Mile

Scott Auto Rental Company

161 W. Colorado St., Pasadena. Wakefield 8181

LITTLE FOLKS' SWEATERS . . $2.95

Knitted of soft wool zephyr—with V neck-lines; saucy little ducks or chickens are woven across the fronts. Sizes 2 to 6 years.
Shown in tan, Nile, blue, pink, yellow and white.

Coulter Dry Goods Co.
FOUNDED IN 1878
Seventh Street at Olive

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

OFFICERS:
MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President
MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President
MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, Sec. Vice-Pres.
MRS. ERWIN P. WERNER, Third Vice-President
MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Vice-Pres.
MRS. JAMES REED, Secretary
MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treasurer.
MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

MONTHLY BULLETIN

"All for Service—And Service for All"

5604 De Longpre Avenue, Los Angeles

CALENDAR

May 4th, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Board of Directors.

May 4th, 12:30 p. m.—Round Table Luncheon. Speaker: Mr. Thomas Patten. Subject, "Today."

May 10th, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Day Nursery Committee.

May 11th, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Executive Committee.

May 12th, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Good Samaritan Committee.

May 13 to June 3rd—BUILDING FUND CAMPAIGN.

May 18th, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Executive Committee.

May 25th, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Executive Committee.

May 26th, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Good Samaritan Committee.

MAY 13TH TO JUNE 3RD!!!

A call to all members of the Assistance League to rally in a concerted effort to solve at one time all the building problems of the League has been made by the President, Mrs. Hancock Banning. Mobilization of the full strength of the League membership in a short and carefully planned campaign has been decided upon by the Board of Directors. The dates, May 13th to June 3rd, have been selected. The Community Chest has given its approval to the campaign as being vitally needed, and has alloted this time period. The funds are to be used to build a larger and more modern Day Nursery and at the same time meet the needs of our other growing departments by building an adequate Community House, or by remodeling or adding to our present quarters.

The effort is not to be a drive or a general public campaign, but rather a quiet appeal among selected friends of the League, who it is anticipated will contribute substantial support to the imperative building fund needs of the organization. There will be no house to house canvassing or other "Drive" features. The entire appeal is to be placed on a basis of friendly interest.

In asking the full support of every member and friend of the League in this program, the Board of Directors emphasize the following facts, which decided them in undertaking an immediate campaign to finance all the building needs;

(a) The offer of $25,000 from Mr. Raphael Herman must be met before January 1, 1927, in order that plans may be drawn and the building erected for the Day Nursery in the time specified by Mr. Herman.

(b) Because of the Community Chest campaign, which supplies the maintenance needs of the League, a campaign in the Fall is out of the question.

(c) Because the Community House is in dire need of repairs and has been entirely outgrown it was decided to combine the building programs of both the Day Nursery and the Community House, thus eliminating a second appeal which would have been imperative within the next year.

Proving that good business demands such a need the officers of the League point to the fact that the Community Chest has placed its approval on the campaign. Only four building fund campaigns have been allowed its member agencies since the Chest was organized in 1924. Every member of the League is urged to come forward at this time with an offer of services to help to insure the success of this venture.

GOOD SAMARITAN

Whether you believe in Fairies or not we know of some who do, and none more than the little cripple boy whom the Good Samaritan has taken under its wing. Through one of the Committee members, a friend has become interested and is sending a $50.00 check monthly. Grateful as the boy is for this assured income for his mother and himself, he is more than delighted with the prospect of becoming practically self-supporting by taking subscriptions for all magazines and by receiving a commission from a friendly shop on the sale of radios, orthophonic Victors, all records, music, etc. The Committee asks that you all take your magazine subscriptions through him and interest your friends as well. He, also, has the agency for Hawaiian jams, jellies and preserves—guava, pineapple, poha—real South Sea delicacies you would all be glad to serve. Send your orders through the office, HEmpstead 5133.

From the Orient has come the most appreciative letter from the physician for whom the Good Samaritan secured the post of Ship's Physician on one of the big liners. Having broken under the strain of day and night work, winter and summer, in one of our northern states, he had sought to reestablish himself in our milder climate. The very climate which he sought, however, made his services somewhat superfluous. Failing to find an opening he waited until all funds were gone before asking for assistance. The light and pleasant work aboard ship has restored his health and has made it possible for him to move his family West.

When such good can be accomplished by finding employment for worthy men and women, surely your patience will not be tried if we ask you over and over again to let us know of any openings and to tell your friends of this branch of our work.

THE MOTOR CORPS TO THE RESCUE

So many are the calls from all departments of the League for machines that the Motor Corps has been reorganized under the leadership of Mrs. T. H. Dudley. Daily "the carriage waits without" at 9:30 a. m. ready to take Day Nursery children to and from the clinic, to call for bundles for the Thrift Shop, to shop for the Shut-In or call for her finished products, to take a case worker on a Good Samaritan call, to take a convalescent to the doctor, or the cripple for a ride. Serving with Mrs. Dudley on this committee are Mrs. Gertrude Seaver, Mrs. McNeal Swasey, Mrs. Lewis Hauser, Mrs. Sidney Wailes and Mrs. W. P. Severence.

THRIFT SHOP

Where do the old clothes go and are they serving as good a purpose as they would if donated to our Thrift Shop, where the working mothers find whole outfits at a price within their means, where the Movie Extra finds the costume which enables him to secure a few days work, and the boy who is working his way through school finds the suit he so sorely needs. When packing away your winter things will you give us all you can spare. There is a buyer for everything you send, no matter how useless it may sometimes seem to you. A call to the office will bring a member of the Motor Corps to your door.

ARTS AND CRAFTS

Both the shop in the Community House and the one downtown (839 S. Flower) have made special efforts to encourage those working in the Arts and Crafts. The beautiful handwrought silver, which forms one of our finest displays, has won the admiration of all who see it. Recently we filled an order for all the flat silver for one of the season's most popular brides. The graceful old-fashioned serving fork and spoon has answered many of us the problem of what to send for a gift. Near our silver is a very fine collection of batiques—scarfs—lamp throws—hangings, etc., and next in order, we believe, is the exquisite handembroidered lingerie from Rome. There is not space to tell you all, but we do urge you to make a tour of inspection.

FILM LOCATION BUREAU

Many of the larger film companies have recently launched programs which will keep them busy until late in the fall. This is wonderful news for us, as well as the many local charities which benefit by the money earned through this department. Already our calls for locations have greatly increased. Daily, however, we lose chances to earn money because we cannot supply many of the types of houses, estates, etc. requested by the film companies. You need have no hesitancy in asking your friends to list their homes with the Location Bureau now; for, under the present system of careful supervision the entire time a company is working on an estate, there has been general satisfaction among the owners. If each League member secures one or two listings our earning capacity will be much, much greater.

FASHIONS A LA PARIS

All old timers will remember that the Terrill Shop set the style for Southern California and that to be really chic was to have a Terrill gown. Our own Miss Emeline Terrill, Chairman of our Downtown Shop, is none other than the designer of the Terrill gowns. It is most opportune to have a letter from Miss Lou Terrill, who is now in Paris, giving Spring fashions direct from the Champs Elysee. These letters are to come monthly and to be posted on the Bulletin Board in the Downtown Shop. The following is Miss Lou's first letter:

Paris, March 22nd, 1926.

Yesterday, March 21st, was the first day of Spring and was heralded by the bluest of skies, the most glorious sun and the coldest wind that one could imagine, but despite the cold all feminine Paris donned new Spring clothes and went forth to greet the Spring. For the last few weeks the shops have been getting gayer and gayer, showing everywhere a perfect riot of color—greens of every shade, Hyacinth blue, going into a Royal blue, many purples and shades of rose—actually no sombre shades and very few browns. There were a few manish suits in beige or a mixed beige, which with a hat of the same fabric, you could count had originated at 'Chez Molyneaux.' There were many Spring coats worn, which had quite a cape effect forming the shoulders, but not covering the center of the back. One in deep Hyacinth blue had a little georgette dress 'plisse' underneath, both over the knees. With this ensemble was worn a small hat well down over the ears, but with a brim rolling up slightly from the face—of a wonderful shade of blue purple, the shade so hard to describe. Gray fox furs, shoes and hose (the latter almost invisible) completed a lovely costume. Another coat and hat by Paul Poiret has created quite a sensation, the coat of lizard suede, cut very straight, was trimmed in square pattern with cubist design of bright colored leathers. The small hat worn with this was "Vieux Rose" suede with a perfect riot of 'cubists cubes' in all shades from the green of the coat to purple. It was stunning, and speaking of cubists designs, the new hose have long lines of 'cubes' in rainbow colors up each side of the leg, while the shoes are made entirely of the highly colored three-cornered pieces of leather. Paul Poiret is responsible. He has a wonderful place on the Champs 'Elysee Rond Pont, and he shows wonderful house decorations—screens, cushions and the like in the same cubist craze, but it is good looking.

There seems to be a little tendency to return to the well loved "Etimine" of a few years ago and new forms of silk jersey are shown in many well known houses, but the keynote of fashion today is a bright beautiful color—any color not harsh and it must be ones color. It is quiet now, being the Lenten season, but am sure I can tell you more in my next.

LOU TERRILL BEGG.

Pernays

EXHIBITION OF OIL PAINTINGS

DAISY HUGHES

Interiors and Landscapes of Abroad—May 8 to 22

RAYMOND NOTT

Pastels—May 22 to June 5

FINE ARTS — ETCHINGS — FRAMING — NOTT-SHOOK HAND LOOMS.

2501 W. 7TH ST. LOS ANGELES

(At Carondelet Street)

WE offer for investment of Personal or Trust Funds sound Securities returning highest rates consistent with safety.

WILLIAM R. STAATS COMPANY

Established 1887

Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds

311 East Colorado St.

PASADENA, CALIF.

Los Angeles San Diego San Francisco

HOMESPUN SPORTS COATS

Hand woven on our own looms by expert designers

Handwrought Silver and Pewter, Ideal for Wedding Gifts

HEWSON HAND CRAFT STUDIOS

602 E. Colorado St., Pasadena

2508½ W. Seventh St., Los Angeles

Spring Comes~

.... and with it a feeling of change and unrest. Furnishings that made the home rich and luxurious for winter seem heavy and drab in the brightness of the new season. Especially beautiful SPRING STYLES in home furnishings are being shown now at lower-than-ever-prices.

BARKER BROS.

Complete Furnishers of Successful Homes

SEVENTH STREET, Flower & Figueroa

Unique in its Atmosphere

Each morning a refreshing shower. A joy at forty miles an hour.

Golden State Limited East

The luxurious and congenial environment of an ocean liner translated to railroad travel.

A "comfy" lounge for women planned. A kind of traveling "no man's land."

Rock Island — Southern Pacific Lines

Leave Los Angeles 12:01 p.m. [via Southern Pacific]; San Diego 10:45 a.m. [via S.D. & A.]; arrive Chicago 10:00 a.m. third day [via Rock Island].

Thru Pullman daily from Santa Barbara 8:00 a.m. [via Southern Pacific].

For tickets, reservations personal service, call on

Southern Pacific City Ticket Office, 937 State St., Santa Barbara, Calif., Phone 243; or address B. F. Coons, General Agent, Rock Island Lines, 609 Van Nuys Bldg., Los Angeles, Calif.

THE SOUKS OF TUNIS

Announce

the opening of a new branch

IN THE BEVERLY ARCADE

450 BEVERLY DRIVE

BEVERLY HILLS

(At the left of the big palm and the tiled staircase)

Aluminum Plaster-Flush Registers for Hot Air Furnaces

The Beauty and Artistic Design of Terra Cotta made Durable and Practical by an aluminum casting — finished to match your interior.

Designed and Executed by Ohrmund Brothers

Pasadena Gas Appliance Co., Inc.

901 E. Colorado Street

Pasadena Fair Oaks 9393

Decorating and Finishing Exclusive Furniture

W. G. Pesenecker

Interior and Exterior Painting

34 North Broadway

Phone Col. 5656 Pasadena, Calif.

NOTES FOR CONNOISSEURS

In artistic things, we have paid many tributes to our mechanical age, but there seems to be nothing that we bemoan quite so much as the relegating to a distant and overcast background of the skilled worker with his hands. Speed, that destroying angel of all artistic work, has pushed him into a dark corner and tied his hands, leaving him to fume and fret, accomplishing nothing. In no field do we feel the loss so poignantly as in the field of jewelry. When we consider the work of the old craftsmen, masters in gold and silver and precious stones, and then think of our present accomplishments, we begin to realize just how far backward we have gone. Where today do we find the fineness of workmanship, the originality of design, the simplicity without stupidity, which marked those earlier pieces? Where can we find workmen who will take the time to even attempt such work? For example, consider the making of cameos and intaglios. The rare, the unusual ones are old, almost invariably of several generations past. What modern would be sufficiently inspired to make an amethyst cameo of the Morillo Madonna? Yet, I saw one the other day in Pasadena, in the shop of James Cini. Mr. Cini told me that in all his experience as a collector of rare stones it was the only one he had ever seen. Originality in workmanship; what we lack today. That started me looking for other unusual cameos in Mr. Cini's rather remarkable collection. I found a Lapidor cameo and an emerald cameo, both very rare. There was a jasper cameo. Then, there were odd intaglios in sardonyx, aqua marine, topaz, tiger stone, even in shell. Quaint, curious, but infinitely lovely bits; conceived and executed by artists. What shall we do when all our old jewelry is lost or broken?

Mr. Bradford Perin, of the Serendipity Antique Shop, seems to be forever conceiving new ideas for increasing the attractiveness of his shop and for rendering greater service to his patrons. Novelty does not enjoy an over-prominent place in the antique business, but Mr. Perin carries out his innovations so cleverly that we cannot be other than delighted with them. First, it was putting rare Cuenca tile in the ceiling of his Spanish rooms. The effect was delightful. Then, he began the hazardous undertaking of converting priceless old china into table lamps. Horrors! But no, each piece gained a purpose, and lost none of its individual charm. Now, instead of furnishing a full-sized room to show another style of interior treatment he builds a room of a size such as might be in a child's playhouse, and furnishes it completely, draperies, pictures, tables and chairs, even rugs; all antique reproductions reduced to scale. This method gives a much more distinct and concise impression of a room treatment as a whole than does the method usually followed, and as such, is a definite step forward.

By the way, Mr. Perin has a remarkably fine composite Chippendale dining room set.

SAXE BRAINERD

THE BATCHELDER TILES

BATCHELDER-WILSON COMPANY

We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

2633 Artesian Street

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Choose your own architect from the representative styles shown in "California Homes" by California Architects. Price $1.00.

Address: ELLEN LEECH,

544 So. El Molino Ave Pasadena, Calif.

Garden Entrance
The Octagon, Washington, D.C.

At the Octagon House — Home of the American Institute of Architects—are gathering this month the delegates from every State to discuss and define the Problems of the Architectural Profession as a National Congress of Architects.

Through the guidance of the Institute, by its Code of Ethics and its defined principles, the Service of its Members is rendered more effective and productive to the people.

By the
Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles

The Finest Period Pianos Built

The famous WELTE-MIGNON reproducing action may be had in the various models of Stieff Pianos

RICHARDSON'S INC
Victrolas ~ Radios ~ Pianos
730 WEST SEVENTH STREET
LOS ANGELES CALIFORNIA

STIEFF

Master Piano-Forte Builders Since 1842

Business Building Seen Through the Trees at Palos Verdes

Palos Verdes Estates

LANE MORTGAGE BUILDING, EIGHTH AND SPRING STS.
LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

JAY LAWYER
Gen. Mgr.

BANK OF AMERICA
Trustee

To catch a glimpse through the trees of this building which houses the Palos Verdes Administration Offices is to realize how perfectly architecture may be made to conform to natural surroundings.

A home in Palos Verdes permits of living as Nature intended.

STATE LIBRARY

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

From a painting by Maurice Braun — San Diego, 1910

CITY AND BAY OF SAN DIEGO

SOME CENTERS OF ART IN CALIFORNIA AND CALIFORNIA'S NEW ARCHITECTURE
ART IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND THE CLUBS

No. 78 June, 1926 25 Cents

CALIFORNIA'S HOME AND GARDEN MAGAZINE

The Westlake
School for Girls
333 South Westmoreland Avenue
Residence and Day School
Lower School, College Preparatory, Junior College
Fully Accredited
Departments of Art, Music, Home Economics
JESSICA SMITH VANCE FREDERICA DE LAGUNA
Telephone DRexel 0052

Marlborough School for Girls
Boarding and Day School Accredited to Eastern and Western Colleges
5029 West Third Street
36TH YEAR
ADA S. BLAKE, Principal

An Ideal School for Young Women
Cumnock School
COLLEGE WORK IN THE FOLLOWING COURSES:
Vocal Interpretation of Literature
Literary Appreciation — Voice and Diction — Short-Story
Public Speaking — French — Dancing
Dramatics — Story Telling — Psychology
Journalism
Art and Art Appreciation
An accredited High School in Class A preparing for Western and Eastern Colleges and Universities.
HELEN A. BROOKS, Director
5353 West Third Street Los Angeles
WIlitney 3427 —TELEPHONES— WHitney 7311

MISS HARKER'S SCHOOL
FOR GIRLS
Palo Alto -:- -:- -:- California
"The Home of Stanford University"
Outdoor life all the year round. One hour from San Francisco. College Preparatory and Special Courses. Separate residence for girls from 5 to 14 years. Catalog on request.

KENWOOD HALL
Resident and Day School for Girls. Sub-Primary through High School. Open throughout the year.
Directors: Ruby Mildred King, Grace Baylor Bobbitt.
Tel. WAshington 1612 675 So. Vermont Ave., Los Angeles

NEW HOME
OF PACIFIC
MILITARY ACADEMY
Culver City, California

Boarding and Day School. Fireproof Buildings. Completely Equipped Laboratories. Grammar and High School. Enrollment limited.
For Catalogue Write Mrs. Loughan or telephone Culver City 3294

The Girls' Collegiate School 34th Year
NEWLY LOCATED IN THE COUNTRY
Boarding and Day School. Accredited East and West. Out-Door Life a Reality. 50-acre estate. All sports. Saddle Horses. New Buildings. Italian type. L. A. Office, "Ask Mr. Foster" Information Service in Robinson's Dept. Store at Seventh Street and Grand Ave., Tel. BR 4701.
Glendora, Calif. Miss Parsons and Miss Dennen, Principals

Westridge
A COLLEGE PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS. ACCREDITED.
Primary, Intermediate and Academic Departments.
MARY L. RANNEY, AMIE C. RUMNEY, Principals.
324 Madeline Drive, Pasadena, California Telephone Wakefield 5276

Norma Gould School of the Dance
announces
SUMMER COURSES FOR TEACHERS, PROFESSIONALS AND CHILDREN
Authentic Dances — Pantomime — Eurythmics
Special Feature—Fundamentals of Toe, Waltz Clog and Ballroom Dancing
July 5-August 13, 1926
Scholarship Awarded
460 N. Western Ave. Send for Catalog
HEmpstead 3530

The Elliott School for Girls
Residence and Day School.
Ideal Home Life Character Building
Superior Educational Advantages. Sub-Primary through Eleventh Grade.
Martha Collins Weaver, M. A., Principal. Pico Blvd. at Grammercy Place.
EMpire 5347

Urban
Military Academy
23rd YEAR
A good summer camp is an essential part of every real boy's education. Urban, with the most completely organized camp in the West offers a worthwhile summer in the High Sierras. Fishing, Swimming, Riding, all sports. Membership limited. Experienced staff. Enroll now. For information, see Secretary, Wilcox at Melrose, Los Angeles, California. HEmpstead 7602.

Bernays
2501 West Seventh Street
Los Angeles, California
GALLERIES—PICTURES—FRAMING
Visitors Welcome

FINE PAINTINGS
STENDAHL ART GALLERIES
AMBASSADOR HOTEL LOS ANGELES

SCULPTOR OF SILVER
FOR THE TABLE OF THE BRIDE
PORTER BLANCHARD
BURBANK :: :: :: CALIFORNIA

This Is the Year to take an Arabian Lantern to your summer home, while they are still a novelty. Its gay colors and unique shape will be a constant delight.
On Sale Only at
The Souks of Tunis
In the Patio of the Community Playhouse, Pasadena
and
In the Arcade, 450 Beverly Drive, Beverly Hills

IN A BEAUTIFUL NEIGHBORHOOD AT SANTA BARBARA

LOOKING DOWN THE STREET TOWARD THE WEST

THE BACK YARDS ARE DELIGHTFULLY RETIRED

Two of these New Houses for Sale
Also Several Lots

MRS. J. OSBOURN CRAIG DESIGNED THESE HOUSES

A DELIGHTFUL SPIRIT OF CALIFORNIA HOMES

THE HOUSE ON THE UPPER TERRACE IS FOR SALE

NEAR the Mission Santa Barbara, and circling around its wide fields before the beautiful south front, is a group of houses lately built in the most approved Santa Barbara methods. All the charm of color and old world detail which Santa Barbara has lately learned to use in her buildings has been drawn upon to make a delightful neighborhood in this choice situation.

Unwilling to leave this, the most Californian of the city's residence sections, to be spoiled by careless building, the owner of the property —which occupies several blocks running up the hills along a little canyon,—planned a group of houses to be up-to-date in every particular and engaged Mrs. James Osbourne Craig to make the designs.

When two such women consult to make houses which people will want to live in we may be sure of the success of the project. Mrs. Andrews, the owner and builder has studied house keeping conditions in Santa Barbara and has embodied in these livable houses the results of years of experience in beautiful home-making. Mrs. Craig, has carried on the traditions of California's colonial houses so well understood and expressed by Mr. Craig in his short career as the architect who started the Santa Barbara renaissance.

It is not enough to know how to build a house in modern style and convenience; one must know how to plan it for the climate and living conditions in Santa Barbara. Everyone of these houses has its out-door living spots and garden courts in retirement. Each has a water softener and other up-to-date accessories.

Without being too intimately placed, the houses have a neighborly atmosphere and a distinctive beauty of trees and street fountain.

THE HOUSE ON THE TERRACE CROWNS THE LITTLE STREET

EACH TERRACE OF THIS HOUSE SHOWS NEW BEAUTIES

FITTED TO THE HILLSIDE AND VERY LIVABLE

FOR PRICES
AND PARTICULARS
ADDRESS
MRS. J. A. ANDREWS
MISSION RIDGE
SANTA BARBARA

Or ask your agent in
Santa Barbara

FOUNTAIN ON THE TERRACE

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertainments, etc., for the calendar pages are free of charge and should be received in the office of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, at least two weeks previous to date of issue, the 10th. No correction can be guaranteed if they are received later than that date. CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, California. One dollar and twenty-five cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be changed as many times as desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the change is made.

Entered as second class matter, July 28, 1919, at the Post Office at Pasadena, California, under act of March 3, 1879.

Clubs

VALLEY HUNT CLUB, PASADENA:
The formal season at the Valley Hunt Club closed with May, after which time no programs are arranged. The tennis court and swimming pool offer the outdoor attractions during the summer, and individual parties, both afternoon and evening, are arranged as desired.

ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB, PASADENA:
"Unattached players will be glad to know that the Annandale Golf Club is now open to summer members as in previous years at special summer rates. The course is in excellent condition and will not be torn up with new work this summer."
The afternoon bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been discontinued for the season, but tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged, followed by tea.
Table d'hote dinner served in dining room every Sunday from 12 to 3 p. m.

LOS ANGELES COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.
Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 .p m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month. Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturday during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.

MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday in each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Dancing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday.
Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.

LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week, Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal. Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL COUNTRY CLUB:
A dinner dance is arranged for the third Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a. m., and not before two p. m.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB, SANTA BARBARA:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A recent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a special luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served.

PALOS VERDES GOLF CLUB: Offers an eighteen hole, all grass, Sea Side course, delightful for all the year play, open to residents and their guests. Lunch and dinner served every day. Tea and informal bridge may be enjoyed every afternoon.

ENCINO COUNTRY CLUB, VAN NUYS:
Buffet dinner dances every Wednesday evening.
Ladies Golf Thursday mornings.
Thursday a special luncheon is served, followed by bridge. Afternoon Tea 4:30.
Luncheon and dinner served every day.
Special luncheons, dinners, teas and bridge parties may be arranged for as desired.

NEWPORT HARBOR YACHT CLUB:
Saturday, June 5—Semi-annual meeting, 8 p.m.
Saturday, June 12—Marions, snow birds and bay sloops, 2 p.m.
Sunday, June 13—Performance handicap and star class (ocean course) 2 p.m.
Saturday, June 19—Carnival hop. Open house for other yacht clubs.
Sunday, June 20—Speed boat race (176 cu. in. class) 10 a.m., speed boat race (151 cu. in. class) 11 a.m.
Saturday, June 26—Marions, snow birds and bay sloops, 2 p.m.
Sunday, June 27, Performance handicap and star class (ocean course) 2 p.m.

Where the Treasures of a Collector May Be Purchased as Gifts

A. Schmidt & Son

For Fifty-six Years

IMPORTERS OF ANTIQUE AND MODERN SILVER AND
Sheffield Plate, Fine China and Glass

2320 W. Seventh St., Los Angeles

391 E. Colorado St., Pasadena

Boston New York Washington

Music

HOLLYWOOD BOWL ASSOCIATION announces the Grand Dedicatory opening festival for June 22, which celebrates the completion of the first unit of the million dollar improvement plans in the Bowl. From the directors the following officers were recently elected: Allen C. Balch, president; C. E. Toberman, 1st vice president; F. E. Keller, 2nd vice president, and A. J. Verheyne, treasurer. The Music Committee, which acts in an advisory capacity to the Board of Directors, includes Carolyn Alchin, Mrs. Alice Coleman Batchelder, Mrs. Blanch Rogers Lott, and Mrs. Joseph Zuckerman. Charles Wakefield Cadman is the Chairman. The regular concert season will open July 6.

"SHANEWIS," the Cadman opera, and the "Scheherazade" ballet, will form a program of exceptional interest at the Hollywood Bowl, June 24 and 27. Tsianina, the Indian soprano, will appear in the title role, singing in English. Rafaelo Diaz, Marjorie Dodge, Vernice Brand, Oskenonton, Indian baritone, and other well known singers make up the cast. Theodore Kosloff assumes the leading part in "Scheherazade," assisted by Vera Fredova and a ballet of a hundred and fifty. The orchestra will be made up of players from the Philharmonic under the direction of Gaetano Merola.

THE PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA OF LOS ANGELES, W. A. Clark, Jr., funder, Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor, at the close of a brilliant season announced that next season, owing to popular demand the symphony concerts will be given on Thursday evenings instead of Saturday evenings, making the symphony pairs Thursday evenings and Friday afternoons. The season will open October 21-22.

THE GLENDALE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, J. Arthur Myers, conductor, will give the fifth and closing concert of the season at the Glendale Tuesday Afternoon Club Auditorium, June 14.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY OF SAN MATEO COUNTY has announced a program of eight outdoor symphony concerts, opening Sunday afternoon, June 12, with Nicholai Sokoloff, directing. Other visiting conductors will be Ossip Gabrilowitsch, Henry Hadley and Alfred Hertz.

THE SMALLMAN A CAPELLA CHOIR, under the direction of John Smallman, while on tour last month appeared three times in San Francisco, to large audiences. It is announced that the choir will appear with the Pilgrimage Play during the summer.

REDLANDS COMMUNITY MUSIC ASSOCIATION will open the third season of Bowl concerts, June 22, giving two concerts a week for twelve weeks.

RAYMOND HARMON, pleasantly remembered as the tenor soloist of the Pasadena Presbyterian Church, is again in Los Angeles after two years' study in Italy and France.

THE LONG BEACH PHILHARMONIC COURSE, L. D. Frey, manager, announces the tentative program for next season, to include Galli-Curci, Tito Schipa, Julia Claussen, the Russian Symphonic Choir, the Cherniawsky Trio, and Maier and Pattison.

THE CALIFORNIA FEDERATION OF MUSIC CLUBS, during the recent convention in Santa Monica chose Mrs. J. J. Carter unanimously as their nominee for the $5000, achievement award of the Pictorial Review for the American woman who, by individual effort, proves democracy in art to be possible in America.

ORGANISTS OF THE PACIFIC COAST will meet in convention in Pasadena during the latter half of the month.

WHITTIER COMMUNITY CHORUS, under the direction of Ralph Petty, will present the sacred oratorio "The Elijah" at the High School Auditorium, June 1. John Claire Monteith takes the title role, and Mrs. Claribel Patten Wallace and Miss Lucile Gibbs are soloists. Among the local soloists are Howard L. Hocket, head of the department of vocal music at Whittier College, and Miss Gladys Miller of Whittier.

ABBIE NORTON JAMISON was elected president of the California Federation of Music Clubs during the recent convention at Santa Monica.

LUCILLE CREWS of Redlands has been awarded the Pulitzer $1500 scholarship for this year. The works that won the award were a sonata for viola and piano and a symphonic elegy for orchestra, "To the Unknown Soldier." Lucille Crews is Mrs. Charles Marsh, wife of the head of the music department of the University of Redlands. Mrs. Marsh also won the prize offered by the State Federation of Music Clubs for the best composition by a California composer, with her one act opera.

Art

LOS ANGELES MUSEUM OF HISTORY, SCIENCE AND ART, Exposition Park. The students of the Otis Art Institute will hold the annual exhibition of the work of the year, June 15 to July 15, in the large gallery. In the smaller galleries and in the Print Rooms the exhibitions are: Tiffany collection of Coptic textiles; Paintings by Warren Wheellock; Sculpture by Arnold Ronnebeck; Water colors of desert flowers by Mrs. John Wilmot Estill; A showing of sketches of travel in France and America by Francis William Vreeland and new block prints by Franz Geritz.

SOUTHWEST MUSEUM, Los Angeles: Permanent Art Collection.

AT THE CANNELL AND CHAFFIN GALLERIES in Los Angeles, 720 West Seventh St., the exhibition of recent work by fifteen of the leading artists of Southern California will be extended for a fortnight—the show ending June 12th. No recent California show at the galleries has created such interest among art lovers. Each artist is represented by two paintings—in sizes suitable for the home. The artists exhibiting are Maurice Braun, Haldane Douglas, John Frost, John Gamble, Arthur Hazard, Frank Tenney Johnson, Aaron Kilpatrick, Barse Milier, Edgar Payne, Hanson Puthuff, Jack Wilkinson Smith, Elmer Wachtel, William Wendt and Orrin White.

BILTMORE SALON, Biltmore Hotel, Los Angeles: A one man show by F. Tenney Johnson, first half of the month. This show includes the original sketches made for the murals and the curtain which Mr. Johnson did for the Carthay Theater. Also a one man show by Thomas L. Hunt to continue to June 21. In this exhibition Mr. Hunt shows the Massachusetts coast and the Maine country in contrast with the California coast, around Carmel, also the California desert. A general exhibition will fill the galleries the last half of the month.

STENDAHL GALLERIES, Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles: The Edgar Alwin Payne exhibition of paintings from Europe and the High Sierras will continue through June 15. From June 15 through the 30, new work by Joseph Kleitsch will be shown. In the third gallery Ruth Wadler will show California landscapes contrasted with Eastern things.

BERNAYS, 2501 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles; Thumb-box pastels by Raymond Nott throughout the month.

KATHERINE LEIGHTON is again in Los Angeles after a trip to the East, during which she made a tour of the galleries.

WILLIAM WENDT AND AARON KILPATRICK are on a visit up the northern coast, more or less a prospecting tour for the location of interesting sketching places.

THE ARTS AND CRAFTS SOCIETY OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA announces The Arts and Crafts Shop has been moved to a more central location, 644 South Flower St., Los Angeles, in the Assembly Tea Rooms. Although at present the space is small, an opportunity is offered for expansion. Mr. Follett is still in charge. The present location will make it more convenient for all to patronize the Shop. The Annual Membership Meeting and election of officers will be held Saturday evening, June 12, at 6:30 o'clock in the Assembly Tea Rooms, 644 South Flower Srteet. Dinner will be served promptly, $1.25 a plate. Attendance is urged. Mail reservations before June 10th to Miss Juanita Coombs, 3527½ Whitehouse Place, Los Angeles, Cal.

THE ART DEPARTMENT of the Los Angeles Public Library, both the present members and the Alumni, met at luncheon in the Assembly Tea Rooms, 644 So. Flower Street, Los Angeles, May 28.

THE PAINTERS OF THE WEST have decided not to have a summer show but will concentrate their efforts on an exhibition during the winter.

XVIth, XVIIth and XVIIIth Century

French, Italian, English and Spanish Furniture

Lamps, Venetian Glass, Prints and Paintings

Exhibition of Selected Paintings by Fifteen Leading Artists of Southern California in our Los Angeles Galleries, opened May 1st and will continue through June 12.

Cannell and Chaffin, Inc.

397 East Colorado St.
Hotel Maryland, Pasadena

720 W. Seventh St.
Los Angeles, Calif.

FINE ARTS GALLERY OF SAN DIEGO, Balboa Park: Following unusually interesting shows in May, including etchings by Goya, paintings by Ettore Tito, and studies by the New Mexico painters, during June, July and August the gallery will hold its summer exhibition of the work of the artists of southern California, including the work of the local San Diego Art Guild. Until October, Mr. Preston Harrison is generously lending his private collection to be shown to the San Diego public. Reginald Poland is the director.

CHARLES RUSSELL has recently completed the frieze in the Indian room, known as the "Wigwam" in the home of Edward Doheney, in Chester Place, Los Angeles. The story runs around two sides of the large room, depicting incidents of the earliest historial interest in California, showing the cutting out and branding of cattle from the big herds, the old stage coach, prospectors, packers and pack horses in camp, and at intervals the animals,—an antelope stalked by a cayote, a huge grizzly bear, and the black tail deer. An amazingly interesting piece of work.

J. HARVEY McCARTHY did Los Angeles and the West a great service in the advancement of art in selecting Alson Clark, F. Tenney Johnson, and Henry Lion to produce works of art for the decoration of the Carthy Circle Theater. Mr. McCarthy intends the theater to be representative of the early days of California, thus offering colorful and romantic subjects to the artists. Frank Tenney Johnson did the curtain and the two murals flanking the proscenium. The curtain shows the arrival of the Donner party at Donner Lake, while the two murals depict prospectors and Indians respectively, each in a Sierra setting. The series of paintings by Alson Clark are on the ground floor promenade and on the mezzanine; one of these is an immense canvas showing San Francisco Bay in 1849. Another painting by Mr. Clark shows the founding of Los Angeles by Governor Felipe d'Neve in 1781, others the raising of the American flag at Monterey, and the arrival of the first train at Truckee. The fountain, with its beautiful female figure is by Henry Lion, as are other, smaller things. Dwight Gibbs is the architect.

ERWIN H. FURMAN, LLOYD L. LOVELAND and CARL H. BREUCKNER, formerly with the Biltmore Art Gallery, announce that they have removed to the Print Rooms, 1748 Sycamore Avenue, Hollywood.

CANNELL AND CHAFFIN GALLERIES, 720 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles, are planning to have a return exhibition of the work of Ettore Tito, the great Italian painter.

WILLIAM RITSCHEL, N. A., was in Los Angeles in May, en route to his home in Carmel after another visit to the South Seas. Mr. Ritschel claims to have found in Bali, an island off the south coast of Java, the most beautiful spot of any in his tour of the world.

MRS. EVYLENA NUNN MILLER has sold a picture to the Secretary of the Foreign Division of the National Young Men's Christian Association. This picture is to be presented to the new Chinese Y. M. C. A. Building in San Francisco.

IN THE PAINTERS AND SCULPTORS EXHIBITION at Exposition Park in May the following awards were made:

The Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Preston Harrison prize for the best work of art in the exhibition, irrespective of subject or medum, was awarded to Charles Reiffel for "Mountain Ranch." The Minnie Tingle Memorial prize went to Anna Helga Hong for "Hosten I Norge." An Honorable Mention for figure painting was given to Clarence Hinkle for "The Treat,"—for landscape to Aaron Kilpatrick for "In Old Mexico." An Honorable Mention was also given to Margaret Bruton for "Carmel Valley" (a four panel screen). In sculpture an Honorable Mention was given to Althea Ulber for "Greeting the Morn." In miniature painting to A. A. Moripal for "Portrait." The Jury of Awards was composed of Wm. Wendt, Reginald Poland, Director of the Fine Arts Gallery of San Diego, and Roscoe Shrader.

DOUGLAS PARSHALL, accompanied by his mother and sister, has gone to Europe for the summer.

ARTHUR HAZARD is planning an Eastern trip to include Provincetown.

CHARLES RUSSELL and Mrs. Russell have returned to their home in Great Falls after spending the winter in Hollywood.

IN THE BOOKPLATE ASSOCIATION INTERNATIONAL exhibition the William H. Burnham prize was awarded to Edwin H. Blashfield, American mural painter, for his design to be used in the library of Leland Stanford University.

WEST COAST ARTS INC. announce, the Sixth Annual Meeting of the West Coast Arts Inc., was held in the studios of Mrs. Dell Meadows on Saturday, May 8th. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Evylena Nunn Miller, President; Mary O. Everett, First Vice President; Susie M. Daudo, Second Vice President; Isabella F. Campbell, Treasurer; Elsie Palmer Payne, Recording Secretary; Ruth Larimer, Corresponding Secretary.

Announcements

PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYERS announce programs for the month: June 3 to 12, "Why Marry" by Jesse Lynch Williams; June 17 to 26, "Minnick" by Ednah Ferber and George S. Kaufman.

PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE ASSOCIATION will hold the annual meeting June 17, in the Playhouse at 5:00 p. m., concluding the business with the unveiling of the tablet in the Patio. At six o'clock a plate dinner will be served in the Recital Hall, and later the members will attend the opening of the play, "Minnick."

THE DRAMA LEAGUE OF PASADENA announces the series of Community dances in Tournament Park will open early in June. Mrs. Henry Godfrey has consented to act as Chairman. On her committee are: Mrs. Charles P. McCullough, Miss Eleanor Bissell, Mrs. Robert A. Millikan, Mrs. Frank H. Sellers, Mr. and Mrs. Jerome C. Gripper, Miss Flora Harper, Miss Mary Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Loveland, Mrs. Karl Kieling.

THE SPRING FROLIC OF THE SORPTIMISTS CLUB was presented in the Music Room, Biltmore Hotel, May 25, 12 noon. Arranged and produced by Dr. Della H. Hubbard, assisted by Club Members:

At the outset Dull Care was routed by Laughter and Jingle Bells, and with the Breaking of the Ice at the Old Swimming Hole the fun was on, and continued to grow with the burlesque of a Director's Meeting in Pantomine, a Collegiate Camouflage, the tragedy of Little Red Riding Hood, the very Bad Boy, and hearing the truth from a member from Station H-O-T A-I-R. The Press is still blowing about the prizes awarded by Margaret D. Reordan. Mrs. Bertha K. Landes, Mayor of Seattle, charter member of the Seattle Soroptimist Club, was the guest of honor.

Pomona College, Claremont

COMMENCEMENT WEEK opens Thursday, June 10, with a recital by seniors in music. Friday, June 11, is Class Day featuring a class breakfast, Vesper service, class program, dinner and the Commencement play, "The Romancers", in the Open-Air theater, at 8:15 o'clock, directed by Lucille Welch-Lewis.

Saturday, June 12, is Alumni Day, opening at 10:30 a. m. with an alumni parade and program followed by luncheon. The afternoon includes a musical program, annual meeting of the Alumni Association, reunion of the women's and men's glee clubs and the alumni banquet at 6 p. m. in the college gymnasium. Following the banquet there will be a half-hour of music by the glee club chorus and an alumni dance. Baccalaureate Day is Sunday, June 13, with the service in the Open-Air theater at 6:30 p. m. Dean Ernest J. Jaqua, acting president of Pomona College, will deliver the address.

Commencement exercises will be held Monday, June 15. The day's program opens at 10:30 a. m. with a recital in Bridges Hall by faculty in the department of music; the senior class luncheon at noon, followed by the president's reception in the patio of Bridges Hall at 4:00 p. m., the academic procession and graduation exercises in the Open-Air theater at 6:30 p. m. The Commencement address will be delivered by Robert Charles Denison, D.D.

Pomona College regular session closes officially on June 14 and on June 21 the summer session opens at the campus division at Claremont, the mountain division at Bluff Lake in the San Bernardino Mountains, and the coast division at Laguna Beach. Summer session classes begin on June 22. On June 26 summer school students will hold an excursion to San Juan Capistrano and Laguna Beach.

Occidental College

COMMENCEMENT events nt Occidental College, Eagle Rock, will largely be open to the public attendance, several programs from June 3 to June 7 being of unique interest. "Phoenician Maidens," translation of the play by Euripides presented with singing and dancing choruses on the verdure stage at Hillside Theatre, will open the activities on the evening of June 3. Seniors will be honored at the reception given by President and Mrs. Remsen D. Bird on June 4. Alumni are arranging a program June 5 with athletic events in the afternoon, a baby show and an evening banquet.

Dr. Robert Freeman of Pasadena, trustee of Occidental, will deliver the baccalaureate address at 7 o'clock Sunday evening, June 6, in the Hillside Theater on the campus. Class Day will be held June 7 with presentation of gifts, pictures and colors by seniors in Alumni hall at 10 a. m. Seniors will be hosts to the public at the luncheon at the College Commons.

Dr. James A. B. Scherer will deliver the student address at the commencement program at 7 o'clock Monday evening, in the Hillside Theatre. Degrees will be conferred upon one hundred and ten students by President Bird. Announcements of college expansion plans are expected.

CONVENTIONS and conferences are held under the most ideal conditions in Pasadena.

We will gladly co-operate with you in making your arrangements.

PASADENA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE
100 SOUTH RAYMOND AVE.

(Write for our illustrated booklet)

Ideas

THOMPSON ADVERTISING COMPANY
307 BRALEY BLDG., PASADENA.

Eleanor and . . . .
Hollingsworth Beach
French and Italian Arts
630 East Colorado Street
Pasadena, California

University of California Southern Branch

SUNDAY, June 6, Baccalaureate Service in Millspaugh Hall. Bishop Stevens of St. Paul's Cathedral officiating.

Thursday, June 10, Class Day Exercises on the new site of the University at Westwood with Dr. Moore speaking and program arranged by prominent students of the graduating class. Presentation of class gift. Tree-planting ceremony, with Frank Balthis, president of class, officiating. Senior Ball in the evening.

Friday, June 11, The Sixth annual Southern Branch Commencement. (Approximately 300 graduates.)

This year, for the second time, the University of California, Southern Branch, has carried away the first prize for the best essay submitted to the Phi Beta Kappa Contest which is open to all Universities and colleges in Southern California. And it is interesting to note that the same person won the first prize for the two years—though names are withheld when papers are submitted. The winner of the prize this year and last, is Mrs. Ethel Myles. This contest is conducted to further undergraduate interest in the value of the essay as a method of self-expression, and also to encourage a deeper study into the problems of the day.

University of Southern California

ANNOUNCEMENTS for Commencement Week: Wednesday, May 26, Senior Chapel; Sunday, May 30, Baccalaureate Sermon, 4 p.m., Los Angeles Coliseum; Monday, May 31, College of Music Commencement, 8 p.m., Bovard Auditorium; Thursday, June 3, Recital, School of Speech, "The Tempest," 8 p.m. Bovard Auditorium; Friday, June 4, Ivy Day Ceremonies, Southern California campus, 3 p.m.; Friday, June 4, Graduation Exercises, University High School, Auditorium, 8 p.m. (Bovard); Saturday, June 5, President's Levee, 2 p.m. to 3:30 p.m.; Saturday, June 5, Commencement Exercises, Los Angeles Coliseum, 4 p.m.;Saturday, June 5, Alumni reunion dinners, 7 p.m.

The College of Music announces a Summer Master Class in Organ Playing to be conducted by Charles M. Courbin to be held in Bovard Auditorium, University of Southern California, Los Angeles, June 7 to June 26.

School Announcements

WESTLAKE SCHOOL FOR GIRLS:
June 1—Dinner given by the Domestic Science Department honoring principals and members of the faculty.
June 2—Recital by Miss Roberts' pupils.
June 3—Recital by pupils of Mr. Carl Leslie Marsh.
June 4—Intermediate Program and Tea.
June 6—Baccalaureate Vesper Service—Junior College House.
June 7—Junior College Commencement Exercises and Reception.
June 7—Senior Play, "Monsieur Beaucaire," Gamunt Auditorium, 8:00 p.m.
June 8—Poet's Day Luncheon.
June 9—Commencement Exercises of the College Department, 11 a.m.
June 9—Alumnae Banquet, 1 p.m.

CUMNOCK SCHOOL:
June 1—11 a.m., Recital, Music Department. 8:15 p.m., Recital, Seniors of the Expression School.
June 2—11 a.m., Class Play, Eighth Grade. 3:30 p.m., Graduate Recital, Expression School.
June 3—8:15 p.m., Commencement Exercises.

ELLIOTT SCHOOL:
Summer School June 15 to August 15.

GREENWOOD SCHOOL:
June 18—Commencement and Annual Speech Day.

NORMA GOULD presents professional dancers and students in an Evening of dance with the Julius Bierlich Symphonic Ensenble. All members of Los Angeles Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra. Saturday, June 19th, 8:15 p.m. at the Philharmonic Auditorium.

MARLBOROUGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS:
Commencement Exercises, June 17—At 4:30 p.m., Dr. William B. Munro of Harvard University, and lecturer at the University of California, Southern Branch, will give the address.
Wednesday, June 16—The Senior Class and Faculty Advisers, Miss Anna Beckley and Miss Lavinia Stinson, will be guests of Miss Ada S. Blake the principal, at luncheon. Mrs. Luther Drake, former principal and Mrs. Eugene Overton will be guests of honor.
Wednesday evening, June 16—The Glee and Drama Clubs will give a program for the Seniors, in the Patio. Old English Folk Songs will be sung, and "The Forresters" will be presented by the Drama Club under the direction of Mrs. Helen W. Brueckner.
Friday evening, June 19—The Senior Class will be the guests of Miss Blake at the annual dance given in their honor. The class officers will assist in receiving.

(Continued on Page 34)

El Paseo Patio

Lunch Out of Doors or Dine
at
"EL PASEO"
23 E. de la Guerra St.
Santa Barbara

DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS
SANTA BARBARA

THE LOVELY SHOPPING STREET IN SPAIN

EL PASEO SERENADERS
PLAY
OLD TIME MELODIES AND SONGS
DURING DINNER
AT
EL PASEO

For Special Engagements—12½ W. Corrillo
Loring Andrews—E. C. Peters—Vences Los Kedrina

for Graduation Gifts

Necklaces
Bracelets
Pearl Beads

and many other suitable objects dear to the feminine heart on this momentous occeasion.

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Italian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

ELEANOR JOHNSON
Studio for the Voice
Suite 103, de la Guerra Studios

EL PASEO SPORT SHOP
MRS. CHARLES O'DONNELL LEE, JR.
Sport Clothes, Hats, Evening Gowns
Children's Clothes
Studio 30, de la Guerra Studios

Miss Chloë Kubert

DANSEUSE

Lessons by appointment

101 de la Guerra Studios

Kentucky Hand-Quilted Comforters and Robes at the
Eleanor Beard Shop
Elizabeth B. Parsons, Director
Community Playhouse Patio
Pasadena Phone Terrace 5790-J
On July 15, at El Paseo Sport Shop, Santa Barbara

SANTA BARBARA ART CLUB
No. 15 E. de la Guerra Street
Free Exhibition of Paintings and Etchings
Open Daily 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.
Paintings and Etchings for sale

Hand Made Mexican Chairs
of Pine
With Rush Seats
Priced from $4.00 to $10.00
Are exceedingly well adapted to California
Also
Hand Woven Wool Druggets
from India
Priced from $3.00 to $75.00
Sizes 2 ft. x 3 ft. to 9 ft. x 18 ft.
Write for Booklets on Druggets or Chairs
ROBERT L. LEWIS
Studio 5 at 11 E. de la Guerra, Santa Barbara

OLD BOOKS PRINTS

TECOLOTE BOOK SHOP

New and Standard Books
25 DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS
SANTA BARBARA

Community Arts Association
SANTA BARBARA SCHOOL OF THE ARTS
FRANK MORLEY FLETCHER, DIRECTOR
GRAPHIC, DECORATIVE AND PLASTIC ARTS — DRAMA. MUSIC. DANCING
Semester October-May. Summer School six weeks July-August
Address 916 Santa Barbara Street, Santa Barbara, Calif.

The Same Bluebird Limousine Taxi Service

which we are giving in Montecito is now

Available in Santa Barbara

Smart Motor Cars of all types with or without Drivers

The same familiar Phone Number

50-50

Our new low rate includes ONE TO FOUR PERSONS

Mt. LOWE

"Earth has no finer view to show"

Mt. LOWE TAVERN and Cottages
Enlarged and Improved

at the terminus of this World-Famous Trip afford a most delightful retreat for a long or short sojourn at reasonable rates

5 Trains Daily at convenient hours - from Main St. Station Los Angeles

$2.50 Round Trip Rate

For information and Reservations apply

Pacific Electric Ry.

Information Bureau Phone MEtaio-TRinity 3661

AUTHORS & AUTHORS'

agents are invited to submit book-length material to

The Guild Santa Barbara

HISTORY BIOGRAPHY FICTION
TRAVEL SCIENCE ART

Acceptable material will be published on the usual royalty basis without expense to the author

129 EL PASEO DE LA GUERRA
SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

Translations from the Spanish are particularly welcome

La Solana

A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue.

Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day.

Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St. Pasadena

A FEW COMPLETE FILES OF CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

May now be secured by those who wish to bind them or for libraries. 72 numbers for $7.50 postpaid. A discount of $2.00 will be given for any set not requiring No. 3.

KIEVITS GALLERIES
Vista del Arroyo Hotel, Pasadena
European and American Paintings

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - - Editor and Publisher
ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - - Associate Editor

No. 78 JUNE, 1926 Vol. VIII

CONTENTS

	PAGE
CITY AND BAY OF SAN DIEGO.....Cover Design (From a painting by Maurice Braun)
SOME SOUTHLAND PREPARATORY SCHOOLS.....	2
DOMESTIC ARCHITECTURE IN SANTA BARBARA.....	3
SOUTHLAND CALENDAR.....Ellen Leech	4, 5, 6
EL PASEO AND THE DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS.....	7
BALBOA PARK, SAN DIEGO.....	9
PLANTING, BY PAUL THIENE, LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT.....	10
A SONG IN THE FOG.....Theresa Homet Patterson	11
RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS.....Louise Morgrage	12
CITIZENS WE HONOR, AND WHY.....	13
UP THE GREAT VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST.....	13
THE CALIFORNIAN AT FRESNO.....M. Urmy Seares	14
AN HOTEL BY RAFAEL LAKE, ARCHITECT.....	15
WITHIN GARDEN GATES.....Ervanna B. Bissell	16
TRACKS AND TRAILS.....C. H. Benjamin	18-19
SPORTS AFIELD.....Ellen Leech	20-21
MONTHLY BULLETIN, A. I. A.....H. O. Sexsmith	22
THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES.....	23
MEMORIES OF VISITING ARTISTS.....Jessica Kate Seneca	24
THE LATEST THING FROM NEW YORK.....	25
THE COURSE IN APPRECIATION OF ARCHITECTURE.....	26
THE LOTUS PEOPLE.....Fairfax Proudfit Walkup	30
THE CHILDREN'S DAY NURSERY, A. L. S. C.....	32

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.

Copyrighted, 1926, by M. Urmy Seares

Subscription price $2.50 per year, $1.25 one half year
RALPH B. URMY, JR., ADVERTISING MANAGER
MAIL ADDRESS: CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
Advertisers desiring information concerning space or rates may call Fair Oaks 7034 for Publisher's Office
During Press Week, 24th to 30th, call TRinity 1501

The Los Angeles

Elizabeth Arden Salon

with

J. W. ROBINSON CO.

LOS ANGELES

UNDER the direct management of Miss Arden and her New York staff, and offering the same specialized treatments which have made Miss Arden's other salons internationally known.

Seventh Floor

WORLD CRUISES

Extraordinary Itineraries New Zealand and Southern Hemispheres.
Here for your convenvenience.
Book now for Winter Cruises.
Information and Reservations on all Round the World and Mediterranean Cruises.

C. J. Jones Steamship Agency
372 East Colorado Street
Pasadena, California

Antiques

JOHN W. CONDIT

Dealer in rare old pieces selected from private homes. Specialist in the proper restoration of heirlooms.

199 S. Fair Oaks Ave., Pasadena
Telephone Terrace 0315-W

PORTRAITS
BY
PHOTOGRAPHY

Charles S. Seabolt

26 No. Los Robles Avenue,
Pasadena, California
Opposite Maryland Hotel
Terrace 6712

SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.

H. G. CHASE

(Established 1903)

Real Estate and Rentals

1012 State St. Phone 125

J. R. BRAGDON & CO.

Real Estate and Insurance

15 So. Raymond Ave., Pasadena

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

BALBOA PARK, SAN DIEGO'S CENTER OF ART

CITY building, as understood today, must provide something more than good business and commercial opportunity, school, churches. There must be healthful recreation centers, quiet places where there can be freedom from too much noise, where beauty can sooth, inspire and relax. In other words, there must be parks of easy access, great open spaces where trees offer shade, where pools reflect the sky, where residents and visitors can go and find a place to play or study, as they prefer.

Such a park is Balboa, San Diego, which has arisen like magic from the canons, ridges and hills located in the very heart of this city by the sea. When it was decided to have an Exposition here in 1915, these barren hills began to bloom forth with every sort of tree, ornamental or fruit, flower and shrub, native or naturalized, because of peculiar fitness to this region. Great bridges were thrown over the canons, buildings built after the memory of Spain rose on either side of wide avenues shaded by lofty trees, tropical in character. With surprising speed orange and lemon groves were blooming, shrubs of infinite variety banked the driveways, beds of dahlias flamed in sunny fields, cactus grew on rocky slopes, begonias and primroses found the tropical shade and moisture they liked in an immense lath house, pansies filled an arched patio, fountains played and little paths led to pergolas and comfortable quiet seats.

Balboa is now the third largest park in our country and bids fair to have one of the finest zoos in the whole world, for there is ample space for elephant and tiger, birds and small mammals of every kind and an exceptional chance to give each creature just the den or cage most like its own choice in the wilds would provide. There are caves for bear to hide in, tall trees for monkeys to climb and large cages for birds to fly about in freely and find the nesting site most desired.

Balboa Park is used by the people, not just driven through swiftly. The buildings once occupied by the Exhibition are now given over to various groups of people who make them headquarters for all sorts of study and development. There is the Natural History Museum where the birds and animals of the county may be seen, skillfully mounted, and Mr. Abbott has special days for taking visitors on walks about the Park and through the back country to study the birds and flowers. And there are also free lectures and nature pictures every Sunday.

One of the old Fair buildings is the home of the San Diego Floral Society. Another, now called the Yorick Theater, is the home of the San Diego Players and they seek to discover and develop local dramatic talent. The old Hopi Village is now the Boy Scout Headquarters, an ideal spot for this work. The Pepper Grove is given over to the Girl Scouts. There is a splendid Municipal Building where exhibitions of all sorts are given, and a wonderful out-door organ with comfortable seats for hundreds of people. Lately one of the old buildings has been torn down to be replaced by a magnificent Fine Arts Gallery, given to the city of San Diego by Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Bridges.

AT THE SAN DIEGO EXPOSITION, BALBOA PARK FORMED A BEAUTIFUL SETTING FOR HANDSOME BUILDINGS AND THE PLANTING HAS SET A STANDARD WHICH HAS INFLUENCED THE ENTIRE STATE. PHOTOGRAPH AND PLATES BY COURTESY OF PAUL THIENE, LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT.

Within the great spaces of this park for the leisure and education of the people, is the splendid group of High School buildings with its new Auditorium and the great Stadium just beside it, the Roosevelt Junior High School, the Naval Base Hospital, tennis courts, and in fact everything that goes into the making of a park enjoyed by old and young alike.

For sixteen years Mr. J. R. Morley has had charge of the planting of this park. Frank P. Allen has worked with him and for four years in preparation for the Exposition Paul Thiene, well known for his fine work around Pasadena and Beverly Hills, gave able assistance. Mr. Morley has a collection of shrubs and trees that attract botanists from all over the world who come with eager interest and open note book, to glory in the tropical and semi-tropical plants which make San Diego so beautiful. In a lagoon near the Botanical Building is a lotus pool where three kinds of sacred lilies lift their pink bloom above the water. Near it is a large pool where twenty-one varieties of Nympheas float upon the still waters that reflect the surrounding buildings, making a picture of memorable beauty.

The eucalyptus ficifolia flames along driveways, fushias like vines fringe Spanish arches, poinsettias glow around the great organ all winter, attracting the admiration of many visitors. There is a fine rose garden, and at the base of the Peristyle is a wonderful display of Los Angeles roses which reach special perfection each spring.

But there is little worth in mentioning in detail all the things that go into the making of this park. The wise men who have created it know somewhat of the secret of miracles, and if one wishes to gain a new understanding of "Revelations," let him walk quietly along the paths of Balboa and become aware of the spirit brooding there.

THE LILIES STANDING IN MASSES BELOW THE LILY-LIKE TOWER

Maurice Braun's Cover

OUR Color Plates this month come from San Diego, and represent—through the eyes and skill of that city's leading artist, Maurice Braun—a universal emotion.

This is California! Inhabited to be sure, along the water front of an inland bay, but a picture full of the joy of life, the bounteous sky and thrilling climate of the land everyone loves on sight.

"City and Bay of San Diego" is not only a record of the size of San Diego in 1910 but has the unique historic significance of being one of the very first landscapes that Mr. Braun ever painted.

Maurice Braun has arrived among America's most highly esteemed artists of his age because of constant hard work in his studio and a native power to express universal beauty in local color.

Wherever he paints he manages to record that in the landscape which stirs the heart of the layman who loves it. Thus his art becomes, as all art should be, the expression of the artistic emotions of the whole people: thus the artist fulfills the destiny which civilization since its beginning has set aside for its favored talented sons and daughters. M. U. S.

MASSED CLOSE TO THE BUILDINGS THE DIVERSIFIED TREES, SHRUBS AND FLOWERING PLANTS FORMED PICTURES OF INFINITE BEAUTY. PAUL THIENE, LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT.

FACADE OF THE NEW ART GALLERY. TEMPLETON JOHNSON, ARCHITECT.

A VIEW FROM MOUNT WILSON LOOKING TOWARD MONROVIA PEAK WITH SNOW-CAPPED SIERRAS TO THE NORTHEAST. FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY FERDINAND ELLERMANN OF MOUNT WILSON OBSERVATORY, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA.

A SONG IN THE FOG

By THERESA HOMET PATTERSON

AFTER one of us had waited years for the trip, a big, enveloping, all inclusive cloud picked our day to rest upon Mount Wilson, that mile high mountain, selected as the sunniest and starriest for the world's greatest observatory! Clouds romping over June blue or lingering breathless in opalescent sunset or flaming with morning fire are nature's grandest, though commonest, pictures. Perhaps one is moved even more by their beauty in looking down upon them as they run and tumble, disintegrate and re-form into all sorts of fanciful shapes, or closing ranks shut out the earth, giving in mischievous manner a peek hole now and then. Grandest of all is it when cloud meets cloud with flash of steel in deafening combat. That "distance lends enchantment" was spoken of clouds. To be immersed in one is to be brought up cabang with one's own ill temper.

The little air-tight stove in the cabin roared defiance at the cold and gloom. There was a penetrating, soul-numbing cold abroad and it took courage to go out. With such impenetrable fog one might step off, but what of it? Discomfort leads to recklessness.

Out of the fog came a song—quiet, calm, contented,—strangely in contrast to my state of mind. The path was narrow; it was steep below; I moved quietly toward that song. Out of the mist a clump of oak took form and then a bird. He was so singularly at peace and satisfied with his lone lot as he mingled his work and his song, peering carefully in and out of the oak blossoms, showing no fear if he sensed my presence at all. Ten seconds elapsed between the songs, which came "gently as the rain falleth" from no sense of duty but as an expression of some inner peace deeper than mere joy. Neighbor of the telescope, he did not have to fathom space nor fuss about his creation, or the age of the world. His world that tree—or another—his work, destroying its enemies. With back gray as the day, breast of pure white, he might have seemed an animated portion of the cloud but for the striking emphasis of black and white alternating on head and throat—an exquisite bit in feathers. In name he was only the Black Throated Gray Warbler—in reality he was an alchemist, changing a gray, raw, viewless day into one long to be remembered for its song—"Oh, the little more and how much it is." He was singing, not to be heard of men but rather as if he had entered into his closet. His song is thin, high-pitched, but of great sweetness, concluding with rising inflection, with merest suggestion of the Hermit Thrush.

Up in front of the hotel the little quaker Juncos and Chipping Sparrows with mahogany caps were startled—so easily startled but are right back—by two deer which come regularly to feed, but not without cautious watching. The click of a door latch sent them bounding over the wall, soon, like the Juncos, to return. One quail stood at attention, two—three—four—with spiffy plumes! They seemed to grow rounder as they ate and when they could not swallow another kernel they looked at what remained and dreaded to straighten. Attention, march—and four knights disappeared in the fog. With evening a sprightly wind came up and whisked the clouds away. Except for the cold which was taking possession of my bed, I would have broken my promise rather than rise to see the day break. As it was I heard it. The air was full of crackling sounds that came from somewhere between me and the fading stars. The ground was frozen as we took our shivering way to that thrillingly narrow path from which the earth leaps both ways into canyons deep where night still held vigil. The robin was first to call out "cheer a lee," Waking response came from near and far. In a twinkling the air was full of bird songs. From the tops of the great pines with voice full and clear the Grosbeak began broadcasting. Beside the path was a chipmunk half awake. A Chickadee, hoarse, (and what wonder) attempted his cheery lay while his brother chanted a refrain like a priest in the temple. From those dead giants which lean out over abysses the Ash Throated Flycatcher was calling 'come here," when just to look there would make one dizzy. His is the high note at Paul Smith's, in the Adirondacks, where he reminds people in no sub rosa voice to "Pay here." His clear, far ringing song is suited to majestic mountains, to echo across canyons. Does he live up to it? Is he never frivolous? Is he always aloof and alone? If there were insane asylums for birds would he figure largely with sheepherders and farmers wives from the remote ranches? Watching for sunrise on this eerie height, held on by nothing more comforting than space and eternity, seemed a fitting situation for moving pictures or future nightmares—but not for me and I crept back to a tree which though small was material. If the Ash Throated laughed it was to himself. Far below in the dark stillness the Canyon Wren's song flowed down the scale like liquid music. Such a little bird with such a big song. It is entrancing—one of nature's rarest gems in majestic setting.

The Crested Jays were policing as usual, with possibly some respect for the time and the place. Their good looks help to modify our ideas of their manners and morals.

Beyond us was a great sea of mountain waves, their blue mist tinged with the pink of the eastern sky. Back of us lay the scintillating bejewelled "Crown of the Valley" and the cities on to the sea, an inverted heaven twinkling with a million man-made stars.

The song of the Wren Tit came from the mountain sides, but the main concert was in where there were more trees and protection if less view. The little Warbler had moved over to greet the sunrise with a song. Passing the bird bath we found it frozen solid, and four boys who had slept in a wind protected corner were in much the same condition.

It takes the Purple Finch to tell how joy cometh with the morning. His warble just bubbled joy all over that mountain top! Space could not have too many of such songs released to break, perhaps, upon some shore of Mars.

I came upon the dearest baby talk as the little topsy-turvy birds were taking breakfast. Mother sang the sweetest ever, "Chick a dee dee" with all its variations, as she trailed the babies from oak tassels to lilac. The last light had gone out; the ocean of fog covered the valley, dashing its spray high against the mountain shore, flowing up the canyons as the sea rose. West of Pasadena cloud islands floated in among the mountains and grew in size. The fog swept on like an invading army which no human hand nor sword could stay. Voices began to descend the trail. As we waited for the bus a pair of Grosbeaks came down; she fed, but he wouldn't risk it. One bird puzzled me; I could not see his colors. Then as if he knew it he flew over leaving a trail of Bluebird notes. We had seen Saturn with its rings and attending moons and a new star cluster which is so ridiculously old; but best of all was a song in the fog.

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

CONFESSIONS OF AN ACTOR

By JOHN BARRYMORE, Bobbs Merrill Company

Mr. Barrymore is decidedly a versatile man, for his delightful "Confessions," prove that he can write most entertainingly, and all concede that he can act. In addition the substance of this little volume makes it known, that he once could draw and paint. For in the very beginning this talented member of an eminent theatrical family, had not the slightest desire to go upon the stage, whither every known inducement was urging him, but rather, most passionately wanted to paint and illustrate. Fate knew very well where he belonged, and that he would get there in the end, but in the meantime, let him struggle, playing as it were a game of cat and mouse, and during this time, if we are to believe this blandly engaging gentleman, he occasionally did not eat. Very harrowing of course, however a tale set forth with such gay good humor, brings forth no tears, but instead every sign of cheerful mirth, from the much diverted reader.

To Mr. Barrymore, life itself seems to be a comedy (they say it often is to those who think) but his art is a very serious matter. The comment here on the parts he has played with so much eclat in recent years, and the discussion of the plays as well, is witty, and vastly intelligent. In fact the whole book fairly crackles with a sort of crisp vitality. This actor is justly famous for his superb artistry, both upon the stage and screen, yet this appears to be no cause to him for self-adulation, indeed he seems utterly unspoiled by the winning of success. In the past now and then things may have gone most horribly wrong for him, but on the whole the gods have been extremely kind, to one who surely is the sort of person the French call "sympathique."

JOHN BARRYMORE'S LATEST PHOTOGRAPH. COURTESY OF BOBBS MERRILL COMPANY

TOWARD THE FLAME

By HERVEY ALLEN, Doubleday Page & Company

For several years preceding the armistice, "the great calamity," was the chief topic of conversation, while directly afterward, for a time, it was never mentioned. But interest in the greatest cataclysm of history, will not down, and now that some people at least, can bear to look upon the smoking ruins, war books of every sort are coming along in numbers. Among them is a very remarkable volume. Hervey Allen's "Toward the Flame," which deserves to be read for many reasons, but mainly because it is a most absorbing tale, revealing the truth with a convincing clarity.

The author of this story was a lieutenant in the Twenty-eighth National Guard, who about the middle of August, 1917, was ordered to make an attack with his platoon on Fismettes, a little hamlet across the Vesle from Fismes. The narrative deals with the six weeks preceding this attack, and describes with powerfully graphic detail the life of the men, as they marched at broken intervals from Chateau Thierry on the Marne up to Fismes upon the Vesle, whence the attack was made.

Through some method, known only to himself, for his style is effortless, Mr. Allen has contrived to make this vividly startling record, appeal to the mind far more than to the heart. However nothing is left out, it is all there, except the author's personality. It is not Hervey Allen's Story, but the story of how men made war, at a time when humanity was supposed to be at the peak of civilization. Here is material indeed for one to read and ponder.

OUR TIMES

By MARK SULLIVAN, Charles Scribner's Sons

This volume represents an extremely novel and dynamic method of writing popular history. Its spectacular features are particularly effective, because of their well calculated appeal to the very people who at one time or another, were taking part in the panorama unrolled with such singular distinction in its pages. Mr. Sullivan shows shrewdness, and has the appearance of being a "live wire" as a journalist so to speak, who has a penetrating knowledge of every psychological nook and corner of the public mind and consciousness. His perspicacity is plainly evident in the method he employs of twanging on the strings of the harp of memory, for the ringing vibrations result in pleasurable and electrifying thrills instead of the poignant regrets, so often connected with recollections of the dead and buried past.

Courtesy of Life Copyright 1926 by Charles Scribner's Sons

ONE OF THE NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS, IN "OUR TIMES", SHOWING OUR VARIED INTERESTS, "WHEN WE WERE VERY YOUNG", AND SHOWING HOW A. B. FROST EXCELLS IN DRAWING THE RURAL TYPE

"Our Times," is the first volume of a series designed to reconstruct the life and events of the quarter century, just ended. It contains a record of the years, 1900-1904, in preparation for which there is considerable skirmishing about in the now mueh epitheted nineties. The profound study and research shown in these pages should make this work a valuable reference book for persons in later years, who for any purpose are dealing with this period of our history. Its estimates of political leaders and certain conditions, are most significant, made as they are by a keen and comprehending observer, who was on the spot. It is invigorating and energetic journalism, a rattling good newspaper story, of the way life went on Main Street, U. S. A., a generation ago.

SO YOU'RE GOING TO ENGLAND?

By CLARA E. LAUGHLIN

Houghton Mifflin Company

Of course you are. No one with the price of transportation in his pocket can read Miss Laughlin on anywhere, and not set forth at once to go there. For she is the ingratiating lady, who in a manner all her own, as soft as velvet, can wheedle Europe's undying past into parading itself before us, in all its pristine glory. She it was, who recreated those frail but fascinating people, who made Paris for centuries, the only place to live and die in, even though the dying happened before the Lord intended, as it mostly did. Subjected to her understanding scrutiny, Italy's baekground emerged in all its momentous significance to the cultured world. And now here she is in England, and simply more adorable than ever. To read her book is to be there on the spot, so definitely shaped do these objects old in story and scenes so richly reminiscent become, when lighted up with the rays of her glowing imagination.

Miss Laughlin bids fair to become an institution, which all may worship, and none may imitate. Such gifts as hers, are rare indeed, and each of these inimitable books as soon as issued, shows that "age can not wither her, nor custom stale her infinite variety," and here's hoping that Shakespeare said this about a lady half as nice. But this rhapsody must cease, and we beg to inform the public, that "So You're Going to England," is practical as well as inspiring, with many expert suggestions for making trips and helpful advice about seeing England, with a motor car.

THE GOAT SONG

By FRANZ WERFEL, Doubleday Page & Company

The Theatre Guild of New York City, proclaims its intention of producing intelligent plays in an intelligent manner. This is very laudable indeed, only some of the plays selected are anything but intelligent to the general public, especially when a continental drama is chosen like the "Goat Song," staged this past winter, the action of which takes place in the Slavic countryside, near the Danube, something over a hundred years ago. The theatrical critics gave it the highest praise, and one went so far as to acclaim Franz Werfel, the greatest living dramatist, on the basis of this play and one other, "The Sweiger."

However it may appear on the stage, "The Goat Song" is decidedly unpleasant to read, and most perplexing to understand. One practical business man, with a taste for reading, called it "mystic apple sauce in a Balkan setting." But it can be judged by no realistic standards, for its symbolism is most involved. The civilization of continental Europe, old, weary and worldly wise, has come to realize how many mysterious and utterly inexplicable forces exist in life, and seeks to interpret them in what are often very puzzling symbols. The Guild explains here, that the invisible human monster, the motive of the play is Pan, the God of Nature, who is ever on the spot to overturn established order anywhere in the world whenever it gets too oppressive to be endured.

NIZE BABY

By MILT GROSS, George H. Doran Company

These hilarious sketches show life as it goes, on the different floors of an "appotament houze," in New York City. It is comedy, but very subtle comedy, and the treatment of the foreign born, getting Americanized, is most sympathetic. The cream of it is at the top, where, "momma" gets "nize baby" to "itt opp all de farinna so momma'll gonna tell him about de hare wit de tuttis."

CALIFORNIA CITIZENS WE HONOR AND WHY

PASADENA'S fame, gained by the great hotels which still make her the ideal place for conventions or other assemblies, has come to rest more definitely upon the three notable institutions which have been established near or in the city. The attraction of these three institutions, the Observatory, the Technical Institute and the Huntington Library is perhaps less popular than the hotels; and yet that attraction is a permanent and powerful factor in building up the city. Quality is, to be sure, more evident in the population attracted by educational surroundings than is quantity, but Pasadena, with her sister cities of the south of California, has reached a point—long ago attained by San Francisco and the bay communities—where mere mass of population is not the chief desideratum. If we are to clothe, shelter and feed the people who are hastening hither to enjoy unusual advantages, we have a right to demand space in which to do it properly, and a high quality of citizen to begin with. Men and women selected by the hardships of "the covered wagon" founded this state; those who had risen by their own efforts in competition with their fellows in the country's business carry on this tradition as builders of the fine new metropolis of Los Angeles and its surrounding communities in the Southland. We cannot afford to advertise for population, we must insist that the quality of our maintained mode of living shall be the selective force and magnet which draws the few more citizens needed.

Such quality lies in the notable institutions which have chosen Pasadena as their location. Many reasons lie back of this choice; but in the history of each we find one of Pasadena's citizens preeminent and his fine judgment the leading factor. George E. Hale, founder of the Observatory and now its honorary Director and chief inspiration, is also an active trustee on the Board of The California Institute of Technology, and is notably one of the self-perpetuating trustees of The Huntington Library. Mr. Hale's remarkable organizing ability has placed him very high in the position of honor he holds in the National Academy of Science—advisor to the United States in all scientific matters—and his contributions to the advance of modern science have gained recognition in every part of the civilized world.

WALTER S. ADAMS, DIRECTOR OF THE MOUNT WILSON OBSERVATORY, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA. DR. ADAMS' SPECIAL WORK OF INVESTIGATION IS CARRIED ON MAINLY WITH THE SPECTROSCOPE.

As a resident of Pasadena, for over twenty years, Mr. Hale has not failed to support every worthy sign of growth in the right direction and has made a distinct record for himself in the plan of a proper civic center now being carried out by the city in its new library, city hall and auditorium.

In order to devote his time to research work Mr. Hale has built himself a private observatory and laboratory and spends much of his time there or in Washington, D. C.

As chief executive at Mount Wilson Observatory, Santa Barbara street, Pasadena, Mr. Walter S. Adams has taken his place and is now in the East attending to the duties which rest upon an officer of the Carnegie Institution at Washington, of which the Mount Wilson Observatory is a part.

Mr. Adams has made his chief record of research work with the spectroscope—now the key which unlocks the universe for mankind. As director of the Observatory he is genial, and anxious that the interested public shall be given every opportunity to gain a knowledge of the work of the great plant whose offices are in Pasadena, where exact information for visiting the various departments of the work may be obtained by telephone. No one wishes to interfere with the important work of the Observatory and therefore many do not know that visiting days have been provided and some one delegated to show considerate inquirers whatever is interesting to the layman or student of astronomy.

On the mountain top are many instruments in constant use by a trained staff. These instruments, even the great hundred-inch reflector, are chiefly huge cameras planned to take photographs of the stars and their spectra, or of the sun by means of a selected portion of its light.

It therefore stands to reason that the gallery of photographs taken forms the chief object of interest to outsiders and a view of the instruments in the day time is as satisfying, although less dramatic than one at night.

Mount Wilson has often been confused with Mt. Lowe, where a small refracting telescope is placed by the Pacific Electric Railroad at the top of its funicular. This, while very attractive to tourists, will never be confused with the extensive plant of the Observatory by any citizen of Pasadena who can pronounce the word "spectroscopy."

UP THE GREAT VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST

PROFESSOR BUWALDA, in his first popular lecture in Pasadena at California Institute of Technology, became somewhat facetious because, as a geologist, he was asked to talk on "Earthquakes" in The "Current Events" Lecture Course. He explained, in the same tone of voice that the strains in the earth's crust (caused, some say, by the pressure of the sea and the weight of debris brought down by uncontrolled floods every winter; or, as others suggest, by the tons of humanity crowded into this corner of California during the last few decades and the escape of so much oil, hot air and gas in the South) have been for many tens of years pushing the slice of earth on which is Los Angeles, northward; while the slice on which San Francisco is built is moving slowly southward. "In time," said the speaker, "these two great Pacific cities may become suburbs of each other!"

Certain it is that the earthquake, caused by the most recent release of that strain, halfway between the two cities, has, besides adding greatly to the beauty and fame of Santa Barbara, brought the north and the south more closely together in sympathy and understanding as they met in Santa Barbara to rebuild in new beauty that most Californian of all California towns.

But California is not a mere strip of coast line. The state comprises within its boundaries 158,360 square miles, one hundred thousand more than has Florida.

This is why the exodus to Florida of so many of our erstwhile boosters is gratefully commented upon in California as the Southland inhabitants become acclimated and settle down to helpful development in the industries and the commerce of the Coast.

CATTLE ON A SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY RANCH. FROM A PHOTOGRAPH TAKEN BY MR. LAURENCE MACOMBER.

The map of THE NATION'S BUSINESS, in that clear-eyed journal of the United States, has elongated the "white spot" worn so jauntily by the younger city in years gone by, to include San Francisco and the whole coast line between; and thus in looking at the Western field the Atlantic States treat the two cities as one.

The Century Dictionary's map of "California, Southern Part," shows San Francisco clinging to its upper margin, so CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND feels itself justified in treating everything south of the thirty-eighth parallel as a part of its legitimate field. This includes The Yosemite, which is directly east of San Francisco and directly north of Santa Barbara.

To reach The Yosemite one should motor north over the beautiful Ridge Route to Bakersfield, that well-oiled door to The San Joaquin through which has entered the vested interests from the South.

On the meridian running through the Yosemite and a point near Santa Barbara is Fresno, an old California city situated geographically very near the center of the whole state. It is now the young metropolis of the south part of California's great inland valley, just as Sacramento is the metropolis of the northern part; and Fresno has been known to make a claim for the Capitol of the state because of its central position. But because of its abundance of water from great northern California rivers, the Sacramento Valley will holds its advantage until Southland energy, which created the Mulholland aqueduct, takes hold of the Marshall Canal Plan and makes the great rivers of the Sierra Nevadas: Kings and Kern, Kaweah, San Joaquin, Fresno and Merced, to enter another, greater aqueduct and supply the south with sufficient water, making the great plains of the southern San Joaquin Valley to blossom as it passes through.

JOHN B. MILLER, PRESIDENT OF THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA EDISON COMPANY, LOS ANGELES.

Unseen forces are binding more and more these great tracts of land south of 38° together. Power lines pool their interests, and Amador County feels the pulse of Ventura as factories draw on High Sierra supplies. The railroads are the great arteries, the courteous conveyors, the teachers of fire and flood control to millions who have lately come to California and know not the danger of dry grass in summer or the peak of a dry river's flood.

Thus the travel, leisurely by motor or from hotel to hotel along the railroads, is educating a prairie people to live in California's mountainous coast country; and all the experience of pioneers from Siskiyou to San Diego is at the command of all the state through the great state University, founded in 1854 and honoring great names of men from Yale and Harvard who laid a foundation of fine culture and renowned research which has remained unshaken, and which now sustains the hungry multitude that swarms the corridors of its Southern Branch.

FELIX S. McGINNIS, PASSENGER TRAFFIC MANAGER, SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

THE CALIFORNIAN AT FRESNO---AN ACHIEVEMENT

RAFAEL LAKE, ARCHITECT

UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST is a slogan significant of the hospitality of The Californian Hotel at Fresno. This unique sense of service to its guests greets them at the southern side of the Ridge Route and speeds them on their way rejoicing. For, if one reverses this trip on California's choicest highways, the bay breeze which cools at night the great level stretches from Carquinez to Le Bec does him no good. Driving up the Valley, this breeze makes the warmest day endurable and never is the heat like that of the Imperial Valley or even the San Gabriel's inland towns.

One arrives by train at night. For Fresno is the middle point on every schedule; and The Californian, like the moon-faced heroine of "The Mikado," "lights up well."

Situated in the heart of one of California's great orchard and farming districts, this metropolitan hotel pays the inhabitants of the San Joaquin, and the throngs of tourists and motor parties who visit Fresno, the compliment of the most modern ideas in hotel architecture and an excellence of perfect appointment that carries its own message to those who "know how."

ONE MAY ARRIVE AT THE CALIFORNIAN AT NIGHT, AND FIND A CORDIAL WELCOME.

No student of home economics, of interior decoration, of modern improvements in ventilation, circulation or service can ever give to his subject half the intensive research that an up-to-date hotel must give to its building and furnishing. At the Californian much of the surprising and comprehensive up-to-date atmosphere is created by the attentive and instinctive alertness of H. Wingate Lake, under whose management The Californian has launched an unusual career.

Built much on the same general plan as the Los Angeles Biltmore, The Californian is equally convincing in its ability to serve its guests, no matter how exacting their demands. Always it seems to have thought out beforehand every possible demand or emergency, and knowing California better than do so many later arrivals now touring this country, the management has anticipated their desires and has planned for their comfort more fully than they could have done themselves.

Fresno is the hub from which radiate many excursions into the High Sierras, The Yosemite, the Hetch-Hetchey, and it is also a thriving city full of busy men: the oil men, the fruit men, the cattle men, and now the realtors.

Conventions galore bring the North and the South together in conference, and handsome homes and business blocks are rising rapidly. Learned in the way to live most comfortably in the heat that ripens fruit, dries raisins and figs or raises cotton, the planters of the San Joaquin know also how to appreciate a fine hotel. Prosperous they are and continually promise to be more so. No longer do the orchardists hesitate and waver in their choice of fruit or products. Thorough study of the soil conditions and of the market has been made by Ralph P. Merritt and his co-workers and diversified farming, intelligently divided throughout the most suitable territory will now result in greater evenness of profit and superb control of interests, both community and individual.

The building of this metropolitan hotel in Fresno is symbolic of California's unique country life, which more and more demands all the comforts of city living and all the freedom of the open ranch or farm. The architect, Mr. Rafael Lake, has embodied here the best in California's new architecture and has created a handsome, stately interior after the best traditions of the past.

The Lobby of the Californian Hotel, Fresno, California. Rafael Lake, Architect, Fresno and Los Angeles.

A VIEW OF THE CITY OF FRESNO, CALIFORNIA, FROM THE BELVEDERE OF THE CALIFORNIAN HOTEL. RAFAEL LAKE, ARCHITECT.

FROM THE LOBBY SHOWN ON THE OPPOSITE PAGE ONE ENTERS A STATELY DINING ROOM WHERE THE MENU IS AS EXCELLENT AS SUCH HANDSOME SURROUNDINGS DESERVE. RAFAEL LAKE, ARCHITECT, FRESNO, CALIFORNIA AND LOS ANGELES

A DELIGHTFUL BREAKFAST GRILL ROOM SHOWS A MISSION ATMOSPHERE, LESS FORMAL THAN THE MAIN DINING ROOM. FROM THE BELVEDERE ON THE CALIFORNIAN HOTEL, ONE LOOKS OUT OVER THE CITY AND THE GREAT VALLEY OF THE SAN JOAQUIN. TO THE SOUTH ARE THE MOUNTAINS ONE CROSSES ON THE RIDGE ROUTE, TO THE EAST THE HIGH SIERRAS AND TO THE WEST THE COAST RANGE THROUGH WHICH ONE MAY PASS TO THE COAST BY WAY OF COALINGA OR PACHECO PASS.

WITHIN GARDEN GATES

ERVANNA BOWEN BISSELL, EDITOR, GARDEN PAGES

El Hogar is the Spanish home and garden of Mr. and Mrs. Craig Heberton, Montecito, California

From the patio of El Hogar, One looks down the flower-bordered walk to the seat sheltered by Italian cypress and eucalyptus trees. Beyond them tower the Coast Range Mountains.

The sunset seat at El Hogar, Montecito

THE OLD WELL HEAD AT IL BROLINO, A TUSCAN GARDEN IN CALIFORNIA, PHOTOGRAPH BY BLANCHE M. OSBORNE

IN SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA EXAMPLES OF THE FORMAL GARDEN

IL BROLINO LOOKS TO BE IN FAR TUSCANY WITH ITS CITRUS GROVES AND OLIVES. BUT THE EUCALYPTUS SAYS, "NAY, NAY! I AM CALIFORNIA"

IL BROLINO IS THE NAME FOR LITTLE ORCHARD WHICH SURROUNDS THE ITALIAN HOUSE AND GARDEN OF MRS. MARY STEWART, MONTECITO, CALIFORNIA

SOUTHLAND

Womanhood

MEN who guard their daughters are without doubt the finest symbols of our highest civilization. Strength is there in that symbol, faith in the future of the race, doggedness that reminds one of the British fleet guarding the Channel in the night. For, what the race has gained in scientific methods of living, in grace and beauty, in fine intellectual attainment, in all that men live for and work for in the world of physical well being or spiritual accomplishment is embodied in the daughters of today.

In his son a man may realize some of his unattained individual ambitions or he may not. Sons must be themselves and carry on the progressive things of their own generation; but in his daughters a man may, if he give time to their training express all that he wishes to contribute to the race as a whole. In them he now is able to see the beauty and fineness of life which he necessarily discarded when he battled for his place in the world, in them he may develop all the longed-for intellectual and social talents which he regrets as neglected in himself. For daughters properly raised by men who know the world-taught all which they should know to make them wise as helpmates and mothers—and yet guarded from the coarsening contacts of life, are the images of their father's finer selves. They express in the declining years of his life that which he has been able to attain in race ideals.

Women who have thus associated with wise men are found to have that sense of honor which men have sometimes thought impossible in women. Instant selection of the best, the true, and the lasting in value is their heritage, together with as immediate discarding of the ineffectual, the things which will not keep in the cupboard of the race.

Through the camouflage of cigarette and superficial manners these girls of today may be hidden from their knights. But, if to the manor born themselves, these knights will find their proper mates and there will continue to survive a race of men who guard their daughters, holding them symbolic, as they are, of all our race has gained in our evolution, during eons of the past, from savagery.

Tracks and Trails

IN THESE days of boulevards and motor cars, with the mad rush from town to town, at speeds limited only by the mandate of the traffic officer, one is apt to forget that there are modes of travel not dependent on electricity or gasoline and affording time for leisurely contemplation of the landscape. The motorist, with one eye on the traffic and the other on the speedometer, does not notice mountains or canyons. The passengers in the tonneau look but see not, other than a cinematic view blurred by the speed.

As we may no longer hope for the rambling coach or the slow-footed nag, we must perforce go afoot, if we expect to appreciate the scenic surroundings of our itinerary. It is true that there are some, even now, who ride a-horse-back and follow the bridle trails through the arroyos and over the foot-hills, but these are the favored few, who have abundant leisure and a good bank account.

There is probably no stretch of country more favorable for the pedestrian on this side of the globe, than southern California. The variety of scenery, mountain, mesa, desert and sea-shore, the equable climate which favors walking on most days of the year, the numerous roads and trails in every direction, all these tempt to walks-a-foot. One must not forget the motor-busses which set out hourly from Pasadena and carry the wouldbe walker to where the trail begins.

The nomenclature of walking is more or less peculiar to this region, for one does not walk, he "hikes," and the way is not a path but a "trail" or a "fire-break." On occasion, it may be even less than a trail. I once followed a ranger along a mountain-side for two miles to where a trail was building, and the ranger stopped to remark that "This is not a trail, it is just a track" a definition in which I heartily concurred.

In order fully to appreciate hiking, the hiker must have some object in view other than the desire to cover so much ground. Walking merely from a sense of duty and in search of exercise is, at best, a drab and monotonous undertaking.

A sincere love for wild life, either plant or animal, is a good stimulus. More or less familiarity with birds and flowers and practice in identifying them will make any walk interesting. A knowledge of our native trees, their habits, foliage, bark and general characteristics will furnish occupation for eye and mind, while the upheavals of geologic strata and the gorges cut out by water afford good material for study. If you add to all these study of the artistic side of Nature and a certain ability to reproduce form and color, you have an incentive that will carry you far. This last gives you a better faculty of observation and a keener eye for what is really worth seeing. A careful study of any scene, with a view to painting, will reveal many characteristics of rocks and trees, of water and sky, which otherwise might have escaped notice.

The gradual change in the colors of plain or mountain from spring to fall and from fall to spring, the shapes of trees as modified by wind and weather, the slope and contour of rocks due to geologic changes, become familiar to the artist as a matter of course.

And so let us equip ourselves with bottle and bag, with umbrella and staff, and set upon our travels. We shall soon learn to economize in our equipment, as even an extra sketch pad becomes a burden on a mountain trail. A canvas bag slung over the shoulder, contains colors, brushes and paper; an aluminum flask on the other side holds water for both painting and drinking; the umbrella and its staff serve as a walking stick, while a few sandwiches in the jacket pockets and a small thermos bottle of hot coffee will create a diversion at the noon hour.

Canvas shoes with rubber or composition soles and canvas leggings or puttees make walking safe and comfortable. In winter time a woolen vest or sweater, to wear under the coat when one is not walking, is a necessary precaution.

And now that we are booted and spurred, whither shall we ride? In warm weather, or when the canyon trails are closed, the seashore is always available. The beach at Laguna, the sand dunes at El Segundo and the palisades of Santa Monica intrigue artist and hiker alike.

The barren mesas just beneath the foothills have the charm of the desert without its terrors, and furnish crisp foreground studies of cactus, yucca and agave to frame the opal masses of the hills beyond.

Or it may be that you choose to tramp up the Arroyo Seco from Busch Gardens to the canyon entrance, five or six miles away. Here you have again the cactus and yucca standing out against a mountain background. You see many flowers, lupines, chia and sun-cups. Anon you flush a covey of quail, who disappear as suddenly as they emerged. You almost step on a tiny cottontail, or you see across the trail a gray streak with a blur of ears, which you know to be a jackrabbit. One day, as I was busily sketching in the upper arroyo, sudden staccato of sound aroused me from my absorption and I saw a jack coming directly towards me, closely followed by a dog. Evidently half blinded by fear, the rabbit hardly saw me and shot by so close as to touch my arm. The next minute the dog had his prey and the incident was closed.

At noon, beneath the shadow of a live oak, the sketch is laid aside and coffee and sandwiches console the artist for his failure or stimulate him to new endeavor. Be it success or failure, he has had his reward in the walk and all that the walk implied. Sunshine, color, fresh air and enough physical weariness to make him appreciate the comforts of his bungalow.

While one has hiked on mesa or in arroyo, he has had his eyes on the mountains (I will lift mine eyes unto the hills), and soon the urge to climb becomes irresistible. Perhaps, in his modesty, he begins with the hills of San Rafael or the Verdugo mountains. On San Rafael he may follow the narrow trails made by surveyors and rangers, or he may turn to the newer roads and trails built by the power company. He does not climb very high, but he gets a new view point and the distant mountains become ever more attractive.

OPINION

Should he choose Verdugo, he will be introduced to a different highway, the fire-break. Travel on one of these winding stretches of bare soil has its drawbacks. Confined as they are to the crests of the ridges and spurs, they have a disconcerting way of climbing up steep ascents where one's foothold is precarious and one's breath intermittent. They have this advantage over the more leisurely trail, that they take you where you wish to go in a brief time, and, as they always top the ridge, you have entrancing views of canyon and valley and distant mountains, from start to finish. Perchance you overtake a ranger at lunch time and then accompany him for an hour or two on his patrol. He is always good company and glad of a companion, but he does not encourage smoking.

The view from the top of Verdugo surpasses that from many a higher range. Its comparative isolation, with the San Fernando valley on one side and La Canada on the other, opens up wide stretches of brown mesa checkered with green patches of fertility and bounded by the Santa Monica hills towards the south and the high crests of the Sierra Madre range on the north.

All this hiking is merely a preliminary to the attack on the main range. From Pacoima on the western edge to San Antonio twenty miles east, there is a constant succession of canyons, big and little, butteressed at intervals by the main spurs of the Sierra Madre range. And such a variety! Some narrow like Millard's, some opening into wide valleys like San Gabriel, some long and winding as in Arroyo Seco, some short like Monrovia, some dry as the proverbial bone, and some carrying a rivulet which, in the rainy season, may be a torrent.

It is interesting to explore the canyons by the lower trails along the streambeds, but in many of them the route is so shut in by cliffs and foliage that one can see but little beyond the immediate foreground. More cheerful and stimulating are the higher trails along the upper edges of the canyons. These wind and twist along the sides of the rocky spurs which outline the canyon and ever trend upward. For the most part they ascend by easy grades and are of a safe width. In spots, it is true, a recent wash may have obliterated the path, and some of the turns around the promontories seem narrow to the novice.

There is one sandy path barely a foot wide across the head of a wash near the summit of San Gabriel Peak, which insists that you rivet your attention on the trail, gazing not on the giddy slide leading down hundreds of feet to the canyon below, or at the towering ledges above. And the new trail across the east face of San Gabriel, at the head of Eaton Canyon, while safe enough, has a giddy outlook.

As you climb the upper trails, you have at all times an uninterrupted view of the everchanging panorama of canyon, cliff and distant ranges. Sketching on these upper ranges is difficult enough to be interesting. Comfortable seats are rarely found ready-made and must be prepared. If the view-point selected is on a sandy slope, one must "dig in" and get secure seat and foot-holds, as well as a shelf for the color-box. Even then, woe to you, unlucky one, who drops a brush or a tube of color and watches it as it rolls and tumbles merrily down the incline.

If the chosen spot is on a narrow trail, you may sit with your feet hanging over the edge, or you may build up a seat of flat stones brought sometimes from long distances. The umbrella also has its problems, especially if you expect a pack train along presently. Somehow all these difficulties and discomforts stimulate one and you are apt to get a livelier sketch than when sitting at your ease on a comfortable bank. Temperature as well as topography has its disadvantages, even in this friendly clime. Whether it be the hot sun or the sandy plain which dries your paper and burns your neck, or the snow banks and chilly winds of a mountain peak in January, "It will get you,, if you don't watch out." In judging an out-door sketch, some of these drawbacks should be allowed for.

A noonday lunch eaten on the sumit of a high mountain is an occasion to be remembered. Let us assume that you have a thermos bottle with some hot coffee, for a mountain top is apt to be chilly and the most entrancing view is dimmed by an absolutely cold lunch. We will pick out a spot that commands a good outlook and also one whose curves are contormable. We unwrap the sandwiches, chip the shell of the egg and put the doughnuts where we can see them. Then we adjust ourselves to the terrain and begin our meal.

Perhaps we are looking out over the San Gabriel valley and the eye wanders from the soft, swelling outlines of the foothills, over the fertile plain, a checkerboard of orchards and meadows, to the misty outlines of the coast. Lest we forget that we are in a dry country, the yellow, winding strip of the San Gabriel wash compels our notice, as it zigzags from side to side and finally loses itself in the mist and fog of the Pacific. Or, perhaps, it is one of those rare days when the fog lifts and we see the twin peaks of Catalina as cool silhouettes against the warm sky, just fringing the golden line which is the ocean.

If we are facing east or north, we have a sterner picture. In front the sharp ledges and chaparral-covered slopes of the nearer mountains, and beyond, the lavender and blue of San Antonio edged with white. If it is a clear day, we glimpse far away the clean-cut outlines of San Bernardino and San Jacinto, like white clouds against a sky of cerulean blue. And we are glad we came.

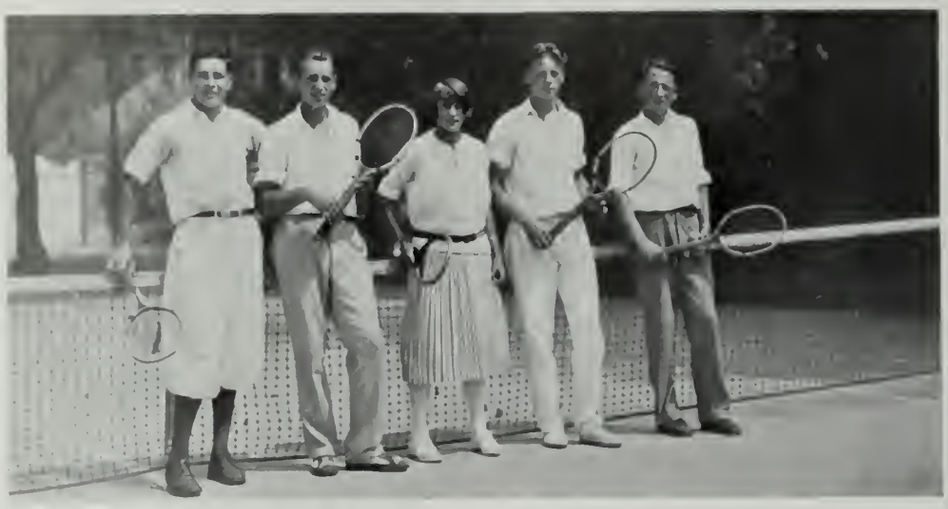
Resting our eyes with a shorter range of vision, we see the flash of purple and white, as a mountain swallow glides over the depths of the canyon, while the querulous note of a jay on a nearby ledge tells us that he is hungry and would share our lunch. A canyon wren peeps out of a crack in the rock and eyes us warily while we eat. We finish our lunch, crumple up the waste papers and tuck them in a crevice, but we are careful to leave a few crumbs and fragments for the jay and the wren.

As we wend our way homeward down the tortuous trail, the westering sun casts long shadows across the canyon and brings out in sharp relief all the lesser spurs and ravines. We find the downward way pleasant, for it leads to home and friends and supper, but we are glad we came. And that night we sleep soundly but not so heavily as to obscure dream visions of shores and canyons "which never were on sea or land."

C. H. Benjamin.

Songs of the Spirit—I. Wild Mustard

St. Matthew, XVII, 20



"Faith as a grain of mustard seed." Behold
These slender shoots adorned with yellow lace,
That give to meadow folk a hiding place,
And mounting far to blue heights manifold,
With dainty patterns from Earth's wondrous mold,
Deck the calm sky with such a witching grace
That feathered warblers fly to their embrace
And charm bright boughs with chants of liquid gold.

"The least of all the seeds." Why should I doubt?
Why should I not all jeers of Fortune flout?
"Nothing shall be impossible." I learn
This lowly lesson, common plant, from thee:
Thou dost with highest hope forever yearn,
Despised, yet undiscouraged, even as He!

Clarence Urmy.

TOWN AND COUNTRY CLUBS AND FUNCTIONS

Of All the Clubs of Southern California There Is Not One More Interesting Than the Town Club of Pasadena. Known as the Valley Hunt Club. It is Perfectly Proper to Conjure Up Visions of Red Coats, Prancing Steeds and Straining Hounds at the Words, As That Is the Background on Which It Grew, and While It Is Not Now the Center for a Riding Group It Offers a Meeting Place for Congenial People, and Provides the Younger Members with a Much Appreciated Plunge, and With Excellent Tennis Courts, Two New Ones Being Added This Spring

Photographed by Albert Hiller

MRS. ROY BAYLY AND MR. I. GRAHAM PATTINSON, MEMBERS OF THE FLINTRIDGE RIDING CLUB. MRS. BAYLY HAS JUST RETURNED FROM PARIS, WHERE SHE WAS THOROUGHLY CONVERTED TO THE MERITS OF THE SIDE SADDLE, AND TO THE SUBTLE ALLURE OF THE PARISIAN HABIT. MR. AND MRS. BAYLY AND MR. AND MRS. PATTINSON HAVE ENTRIES IN THE AMATEUR SHOW.

Mrs. Reginald Johnson, with Her Favorite Mount, Lady Rincheart, an Entrant in the Amateur Show at the Flintridge Riding Club, June Eleven and Twelve

Ruby Bishop, Janie Sharp, and Jimmie Fullerton, Are Usually in Attendance at the Classes of the Flintridge Riding Club and May Be Counted Upon to Appear in the Children's Entries of the Amateur Show, Held June 11 and 12 as a Benefit to Enlarge the Home for Convalescent Children, Established by the Junior League of Los Angeles

The Dinner Served in the Pleasant Clubhouse the Night of the 11th, Following the Afternoon Show, and the Two Shows of Saturday, the 12th, Both Morning and Afternoon, With an Outdoor Luncheon, Under the Friendly Oaks, Make Up a Delightful Social Program, to Which Is Added All the Zestful Joy of a Good Horseshow.

Photographed by Margaret Craig

On the golf course at Flintridge, Mrs. Leslie Coffin and Mrs. Lynn Reynolds discussing scores, stars and probabilities. Golf interest centered at Santa Barbara during the last half of May with the inauguration of Santa Barbara Golf Week for which the Montecito, La Cumbre, and Ojai Valley Country Club officials arranged a program offering every inducement. Practically every club in southern California was represented. The schedule opened at Ojai, May 11, and closed at La Cumbre, May 16. The social features included a golf dinner for men and women at Montecito Country Club, a dance at La Cumbre Golf and Country Club, and buffet supper; dinner dance at Montecito, and a final Spanish barbecue luncheon at La Cumbre. And Golf assumed special interest when, after twenty-two years of effort, an American, Jess Sweetser, won the British Amateur Championship

THIS MONTH, JUNE 2-3, ON THE ST. ANDREW'S COURSE, THE EIGHT LEADING AMATEURS OF AMERICA, INCLUDING GEORGE VON ELM OF RANCHO GOLF CLUB, LOS ANGELES, WILL ENGAGE BRITAIN'S REPRESENTATIVES IN THE FOURTH COMPETITION FOR THE WALKER CUP.

THE "CALIFORNIA" MAY BE COUNTED UPON TO FURNISH INTEREST ON THE DATES SET ASIDE FOR THE RACES OF THE SPECTACULAR LITTLE R BOATS FOLLOWING THE INITIAL RACE TO AVALON

The Patricia and the Aloha. The former owned and sailed by Pierpont Davis, and sporting a new rig this year, won the fourth race of the Spring series, resulting in a tie with Alert III for first place, thus sustaining her reputation

SCHOONERS AND YAWLS OF THE CALIFORNIA YACHT CLUBS, WHICH WILL HELP MAKE YACHTING HISTORY DURING THE 1926 SEASON, INCLUDING THREE ENTRANTS IN THE TRANS-PACIFIC RACE, SAN PEDRO TO HONOLULU, SAILING JUNE 12. THE MOLLILU, OWNED BY MILTON HESSELBERGER, L. A. Y. C., THE TERA, OWNED BY C. W. STOSE, S. D. Y. C., THE IDALIA, OWNED BY DR. E. R. PARKER, S. F. Y. C. AND WHICH FINISHED SECOND IN THE TAHITI RACE LAST YEAR. THE ELOISE, OWNED BY COMMODORE JOHN C. PIVER, WAS ALSO IN THE 1925 TAHITI RACE. SIR THOMAS LIPTON HAS SENT FROM ENGLAND A BEAUTIFUL CUP AS THE PRIZE FOR THE WINNING CRAFT

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A. MONTHLY BULLETIN

OFFICERS
David J. Witmer, President
C. E. Noerenberg, Vice President
Edgar H. Cline, Secretary
Winchton L. Risley, Treasurer

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH,
Editor

DIRECTORS
H. C. Chambers
Donald Parkinson
Alfred W. Rea

PLAGARISM AS A FINE ART

THE following is the second installment of an address given by Professor Walter R. B. Wilcox of the University of Oregon at a recent convention of the American Institute of Architects in Washington, D. C. The address was one of five given by nationally known architects and deals with the use of precedent in architectural design. Mr. Wilcox has been classed as a "progressive eclectic." His words as a Pacific Coast man should be particularly interesting.

WHAT IS THE USE OF PRECEDENT DOING TO AMERICAN ARCHITECTURE?

(Continued from the May number of the A. I. A. Bulletin)

Are not the positions of the designers of automobiles, and of buildings comparable? As of old, buildings are shelters for man's activities; but these are not the same as those which engage the races of people long gone. They had houses, temples, and tombs, as we, but they did not have our schools, libraries, hospitals, banks, factories, nor our commercial buildings. As for houses, temples, and tombs, probably only the last were used in the way we use them.

How are creators of the two things viewing their respective problems? One might ask "how has the architect regarded the problem of automobile design? No doubt, many of us remember, how, a few years ago, an automobile manufacturer held a competition for the design of a car body and sent programs to architects throughout the country. I imagine many an architect tried his skill at producing a design which would be an improvement upon existing models. I imagine, also, that none who tackled the problem gave a moment's thought to historic types of vehicles. However excellent he may have thought many ancient vehicles to be, he would have felt that to attempt adaptation of old types of conveyance to requirements of the modern automobile, would be an experiment disappointing the manufacturer and without interest to the public. He would have realized that what was hoped for was the NEW thing, not an old thing made over to fit a new idea. That, I sometimes am driven to think, is what the public hopes of architecture—a fresh expression, not reiteration of an old one; and that too, however willing it may be to grant a greater beauty to the old forms.

Had the designers of automobiles proceeded as most of us designers of buildings do, they would have done one of two things; either, they would have cast about for models of vehicles of shapes and spaces to accommodate seats, steering gear, and engine, or they would have chosen for their intrinsic beauty and tried their ingenuity upon arranging the mechanism to fit a chosen model. The outcome of either process probably would have resembled results obtained by architects following such practices — an asortment of historic styles, each copied with such care that it would have been but a reminder of something else, not a fresh creation answering a new condition of life.

Let us assume that the automobile designer from 1895 on, had thus pursued his object. Fresh from the triumph of his first creation —the horseless carriage—let us assume that he had turned his back upon the future and delved in the past. What might have been his viewpoint today? As an attempt to find an answer to the question, may I describe an imaginary visit to an automobile plant that might have been.

On exhibition, were a number of vehicles of historic design. They were advertised as the last word in automobiles. Among them were vehicles which looked for all the world like old Roman and Etruscan wagons, Italian barouches. German carriages, French landaus, English coaches, Irish jaunting carts — all sorts. A salesman was explaining the difficulties met with in adapting a splendid renroduction of a Greek chariot to the necessities of an automobile; how concealment of the motor, and provision for an invisible third wheel to take the weight born by tongue and horses in the original, were strokes of genius. To objection of a possible customer, that an arrangement, which required one to stand while driving, was uncomfortable, the salesman replied that although a seat would be a convenience, integrity of design prescribed its use—that reputation for scholarly design was of too great value to be jeopardized by violating precedent.

ENTRANCE GATE, HOUSE OF WINCHON L. RISLEY, ARCHITECT

Lacking knowledge of vehicular precedents the customer assented perforce, but complained that a fellow would feel awkward driving the thing around dressed in business or golf clothes—that "he'd have to wear a tunic!" With a semblance of patience the salesman tried to reassure him by saying that surely there was no more reason for such a feeling than that a man who mounted the steps of the Sub-treasury in Wall Street should feel the necessity of donning a toga to escape a sense of conspicuous inconsistency. The customer turned listlessly to examine another model.

The incident reminded me of the answer of an architect of a large city library, to suggestion by the board of trustees that a closed space over the main vestibule be provided with windows — that introduction of windows at that place would utterly ruin "his" design, a reproduction of the hexasteyl porch of the Erectheum. Having only uncertain knowledge of historic architecture, the trustees naturally were stumped, but I can imagine that the whole race of architects were damned in the thoughts, if not in the speech of members of the board of trustees.

Elsewhere a salesman was praising an adaptation of a coach of the Empire. He admitted that the step was inconveniently high, the springs too much in evidence, and the diameter of the wheels needlessly great, but argued that "consistency of design" outweighed such objections. A bystander noticing a pleasing bit of ornament on another car, intimated an inclination to ask if the device which had struck his fancy could be incorporated into the Empire design. With apparent condecension, the salesman explained that, while its form seemed not inharmonious, since the device did not appear until later, its use would be an anacronism seriously detrimental to the reputation of the designer—especially among his fellow designers—and that strict adherence to precedent in the smallest detail was the rock upon which that reputation had been built. He was quite sure that upon reflection, the importance of such consistency would be apparent.

Evidently the questioner was embarrassed. He blushed and his eye wandered off around the room. Suddenly it lighted up. "What's that vehicle?" he asked with interest. "Oh," answered the salesman, with a faintly patronizing accent, "that is a purely utilitarian vehicle—just a car—no real design to it—just a practical affair." But the customer had become alive with interest. With some hesitation he remarked: "Of course I know nothing about vehicular architecture, but you know I LIKE that. It strikes me as a sensible contrivance, and I don't see why it isn't a good looking car. You know—THAT is something I can understand." With feigned interest the salesman smiled and questioned, "Yes?"

I remembered I had heard similar remarks from sensible people about architecture, and I had a notion that the customer meant just about what they meant, when they had said that sort of thing about buildings, namely, that he knew nothing about historic vehicles; just as they meant that they knew nothing about historic buildings. He had notions of what constituted a good looking car as our clients have notions of what constituted a good looking building; and like the latter he would have been alive to considerations of form and proportion, whereas he went dead over a matter of history.

The salesman left his customer to find what satisfaction the latter might have in the conversation of a mechanic who had studied cars in the making. I was interested to observe his changed manner. He seemed free to express himself. He plied questions and the mechanic explained what he called "the nice points of design;" the proportion of height to length, the position of the wheels in relation to the body, the shane of the engine hood and driver's canopy; how, not only did they meet every practical consideration, but were shaped and joined in a way to make a "beautiful car." So he went on and the man who knew nothing about vehicular architecture seemed to understand him and become more and more interested.

I was cogitating upon this when the salesman, noticing me unattended, approached, and as if he sensed a sympathetic spirit, remarked by way of introduction, that people knew nothing about art—that they knew only what they liked. "We've got to educate the public," he said, "that's the only way it will respond to a cultured taste."

SHADES OF HECTOR!

Once more the students in architecture at U. S. C. have given their best to provide an entertainment for the members of the Chapter. We won't disgrace those who failed to attend by naming them out. In fact it was fortunate for the remainder of us that they didn't come. The patio at the new architecture building was crowded. Tables were arranged on three sides of the sunken garden.

Students in soiled smocks and moist foreheads were running about hanging light fixtures, arranging spot lights, and doing the hundred last minute jobs in preparation for the guests. The place radiated enthusiasm. Every fellow was doing his best to make the party a success; evidence of the good spirit which must exist between faculty and students.

A Denishawn dancer tripped on the grass in abbreviated costume creating aesthetic folds in a long filmy scarf. The boys behind the spotlights had their work cut out to keep up. The encore was vigorous but the lady smilingly declined to return. There was dew on the grass probably.

The playlet written by professor Baldwin is where the "Hector" title of this squib enters. The play was something about the loves of Helen of Troy. We won't soon forget the dusky slave girl who played the "heavy" role.

The blackest chimney sweep in Grimm's fairy tales was a ravishing blonde compared to her. And as to figure! Well, she would have no chance in the chimney sweep business. Helen's musical voice and langorous gestures still linger in our memory as does Professor Baldwin's sandy beard.

We've said enough. Let those who missed it take note and be present next year.

THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

MONTHLY BULLETIN

OFFICERS

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH, PRESIDENT
CLIFFORD A. TRUESDELL, VICE PRESIDENT
C. R. JOHNSON, SECRETARY
PAUL R. WILLIAMS, TREASURER

DIRECTORS

JULIAN GARNSEY, DIRECTOR
J. E. STANTON, DIRECTOR
H. C. CHAMBERS, DIRECTOR

WUXTRA! !
NOTICE EXTRAORDINARY
THE LOS ANGELES ARCHITECTURAL CLUB ANNOUNCES
A MODEL PARIS GREEN PRIZE COMPETITION

For all members in good standing, Jess
Stanton and the poet laurate,
And proposes as the subject
"An Entrance to an Architectural Club"

THE Architectural Club is now in its new home at 1548 West Seventh Street. The present entrance was designed by an X-Ray Chiropractor who could locate the cause of your ailment without asking a question. This famous triumphal arch is to be treated (practically without the "Chiro") for architectural indigestion, disintegration and deterioration, which treatment is the subject of this competition.

A measured drawing has been made after two attempts. (On the first attempt Remp's Night & Day Garage was measured by mistake—adv.) The architectural brains of Los Angeles is called upon therefore or "what have you" to compete as individuals to make nothing into something or vice versa. We want an entrance fresh as sparkling springtime sunlight, or as our dear poet would say ——— ——— (deleted by censor)—architecturally correct—one that will bring credit upon ourselves as artists. A classic some place defines architecture as "Frozen Music" —students, draftsmen, architects freeze yourselves—make this a rhythmic masterpiece that will live from generation to generation and back again.

—30 Prizes—

First prize $15.00 offered by the Gardner-Payne Company. A glorious reward for doing yourself and your club a good turn.

Second prize $5.00 in money offered by Lloyd Rally. The other 28 unmentionables will be let out free.

To the one who wins this competition will come fame, fortune, and a trip to San Bernardino. But, seriously now, fellows, for $1,098.00 more you can get to Paris and back.

Required for the problem, a ..... sketch, size ....x...., ... paper, at ..... scale, rendered in ..... Fill in the blanks yourselves to fit the demands of your inspiration, or write a poem about it—as you will. The scheme is to include the treatment of the passage to the second floor entrance as well as the front wall. — And remember—It's your own club money you're spending—so go easy. The club reserves the right to reject any or all schemes—or equal.

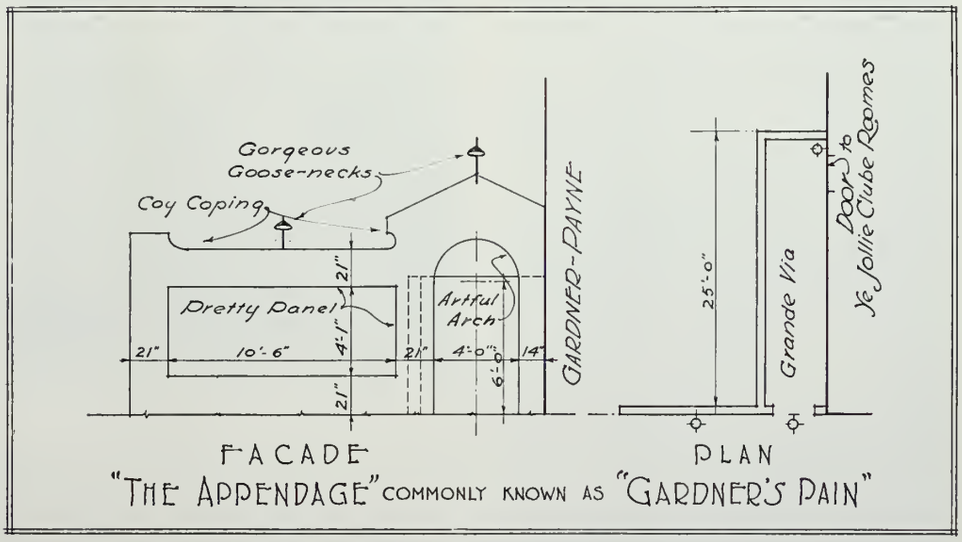
AN ETCHING BY BENSON (CANNELL & CHAFFIN)

The problem will be judged! Oh! My, yes! By a jury comprised of the committee, the participants, the non-participants, the club members, the profession, the public, and the City Council! Please enclose your vote with the sketch.

Drawings must be in not later than June 20 but until 4:00 a.m. that night will be considered the same day. Must be delivered anonymously, but in case of raid don't give your right names. All identifications will be disclosed before the awards are made, and the prizes awarded to the men in the office of the judges whether they submit drawings or not. Deliver your drawings to our president at 415 Bank of Italy Bldg., or Gardner-Payne at the Club Quarters, 1550 W. Seventh street.

NEW MEMBERS

THE following men have been elected to Club membership since our last bulletin was published. We welcome them most heartily and urge them to find a job to do in the Club and to get busy at it. Some of them are old members coming back and for their renewed interest we are particularly happy as it indicates to the club officers that a new spirit of interest in the Club is awakening. Here they are: Percy Park Lewis, Eugene Layman, Charles J. Casper, Byron Kimball, Paul J. Cartwright, Edward Mussa, C. E. Morrison, Harold Walker.



Last month we offered a water cooled ruling pen to the fellow who brought in the most new members. There were no takers for our kind offer. This month we offer a pair of diamond set vanishing points in ebony box.

ANOTHER WANDERER

OUR faithful secretary, C. R. Johnson, has left for New York to sail for points unknown. He expects to be abroad about three months and will visit Italy, France and England. Lucky Dog! Bon voyage! old man. We will miss you, but are happy that you can go.

DAVIS TRAVELING SCHOLARSHIP

THE first set of drawings turned in on the Davis Scholarship Competition have set a high standard of excellency. The prize was won by Rowland H. Crawford who is now studying at Pennsylvania. His solution and and that of F. E. Morehead were both thoughtful scholarly designs. It would have been a difficult problem as a judge to decide between them. There were several other solutions which would have been worthy of much more mature men. The problem was a very difficult one and called for a vast amount of study and laborious drawing which did not appear in the drawings. As Mr. Morehead remarked "They learned a lot even if they didn't win the prize." Get up and fight 'em again boys. It makes the stuff that architects are made of.

"THE APPENDAGE" COMMONLY KNOWN AS "GARDNER'S PAIN"

THE LINE CUT ABOVE REPRESENTS THE "SECOND ATTEMPT AT A MEASURED DRAWING FOR THE PARIS GREEN PRIZE COMPOSITION"

J. A. FLAWS CO.
Landscape Contractors

This company was formed for the express purpose of catering to the contractual requirements of Landscape Architects and Architects.

4151 BEVERLY BOULEVARD
Telephone WAshington 2495
LOS ANGELES

Because She Loves Beautiful Things!
Hispano-Moresque Tile
Glazed, handmade, enchanting.
Wherever decorative tile is desired.
Bring the GLAMOUR AND ROMANCE of the MEDITERRANEAN to your CALIFORNIA HOME.
Harry C. Hicks Studio
4283 Beverly Blvd. Los Angeles, Calif.
Phone GR 4013

DANA BARTLETT
PAINTINGS OF CALIFORNIA
STUDIO GALLERY, 101 S. VIRGIL AVE.,
DREXEL 5552 LOS ANGELES

Landscape
Designing and Planting

The beautiful gardens of Southern California which we have created are evidence of our ability to design and plant your own grounds properly.

A reliable firm of thirty-eight years' experience in Southern California.

EDWARD H. RUST
NURSERYMAN
1625 Bank St. Colo. 997
So. Pasadena ELliot 2639

Are You Interested in Birds?

If so you will receive a beautiful colored picture of a California bird if you will send your name and address to

SOUTH MOULTON COMPANY
301 Bank of Italy Building
Los Angeles, California

QUALITY SERVICE
THE ELITE
DRY CLEANERS AND DYERS
Plant: 797 So. Fair Oaks Ave.
Colo. 1349 Pasadena, California

Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes
TROY LAUNDRY
In Business for Twenty Years
Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146 Alhambra 243-J

LAUNDERERS DRY CLEANERS
ROYAL LAUNDRY CO.
461 South Raymond Colorado 67
Pasadena, California

HILLER'S STUDIO
Official Photographer for
California Southland
49 East Colorado Street
Pasadena, California
Albert Hiller Phone, Fair Oaks 155

"The Gate to Healthful Beauty"
CORLANE
Marinello System
F. O. 1648 570 East Colorado St.
Pasadena
Opposite the Presbyterian Church

MEMORIES OF VISITING ARTISTS

By JESSICA KATE SENECA

[Continued from May Issue]

CECILIA HANSEN, with her Stradivarius, playing the 'Ciaconna' of Vitali, and Eurydice's song . . . The instrument alone could have moved one to adoration . . . Her wondrous hands . . . her wondrous heart and mind . . . Awe of the invisible Spirit behind instrument, and player, and music . . . One was aware in oneself of a faint worshipfulness . . .

Her playing left one exquisitely unhappy, with a sense of something never to be gained: of inaccessible mountain summits, faintly flushed with dawn or sunset, inexpressibly fair, but forever unreachable. More than ever weighed upon the spirit the brutality of the world, one's own incapacities, the obtuseness and insensitiveness of others. One had been rapt away to a vision of loveliness perfected, and came back filled with hopeless yearning.

Anna Case left a gracious memory, doing most things so beautifully, and seemingly of so kind, so generous, so radiantly beneficent a spirit that one liked to think of her as a representative American singer. Of Lashanska one recalls a most lovely voice indeed, and delicate artistry, but too home-keeping a heart, and spirit unwinged. Helen Stanley so brought home the enchantment of certain songs, that I slipped her program under my pillow, hoping that in dreams that loveliness might return.

(Both Case and Stanley showed a lack of consideration for their audience in using a piano that advertised itself in glaringly large letters all the evening in competition with the performer;—an intrusion of the crudely commercial into the places of high art most offensive to the taste.)

Was it because only part of Sigrid Onegin's recital could be attended that with a regal

ARTHUR FARWELL, DEAN OF AMERICAN COMPOSERS FROM ORIGINAL AMERICAN

splendour of sound produced with marvelous facility, there seemed lacking sometimes refinement, restraint, sincerity—and the deeper enchantments?

Matzenauer's voice, in its lower range, takes one into a purely earthly paradise . . . violet-blue twilight. Dark trees massed broodingly, and glimmering flowers, tranced and still. No faintest wind awakening. The lingering, last, softest rose and purple of the vanished sun . . . and her voice, in its divinest low tones, flowing on and on through the rapt silences . . . whilst all one's being was transformed, and new rich life streamed into one's veins from those dark waves of flooding sound . . . After Matzenauer one looked through tears at the material world.

One wants Elena Gerhardt to sing none but the noblest songs. At its finest her singing induces a profound tranquility of spirit, as though after the troubled emotions of the day one had passed into a world where all was granted and secure. The extraordinary, magnetic eyes—blue fires in the pure whiteness of her face—alone would evidence her spirit's rarity.

In that first breaking on the expectant silence at the beginning of a recital which sometimes gives the clearest impression of quality, amongst all the voices of this season none is recalled more fresh, more softly lovely, than Elena Gerhardt's.

CHARLES WAKEFIELD CADMAN, ONE OF AMERICA'S FOREMOST COMPOSERS

Elly Ney can bring joy—of the heart and spirit; Matzenauer a pure, sensuous joy; and Gerhardt, peace.

* * *

Delicate flutings; sweet accomplished—emptiness. A lightness of soul that tended to spread gloom and cheerlessness within. The Venetian, Toti dal Monte, brought little of the glamour of that once familiar city, with its rose-misted isles a-dream on silver green lagoons; its then deserted Lido strewn with the little curled sea-horses, brown and stiff—creatures that alive are of the tenderest grace; its scarlet and black funerals in pearl-white seafogs . . . And at the grave soul beneath its glimmering surface—nothing. The gentler gaieties of its carnival a little expressed her who assumed in aspect the pleasantest traits of a people—in their own country—perhaps the most charming in Europe.

With a charm enbowered in worldliness, and, above the warm, strong curves of her face, eyes perhaps a little weary of sacrifice,—the unremitted sacrifice that art exacts—Cyrena von Gordon brought a flickering happiness. And if these were things to be forgiven, how could one but forgive, with Cyrena's rich, warm voice singing "The Old Road" right down into one's heart? This was the Cyrena we had waited for.

One felt with Myra Mortimer the satisfaction of all but one's finest needs; an enjoyment deep, but never enraptured; aware of the absence of magic, subtlety, and contagious passion. Yet, though with no haunting memories,

Terrace 5485-W
FAULKNER'S
THE LINEN SHOP
HOUSEHOLD and FANCY LINENS
HANDKERCHIEFS, MONOGRAMS
314 East Colorado St. Pasadena, California

no ecstatic response, for how much of shining excellence, of grave reverent beauty had one to give thanks! Her dress of black velvet, against the blackness of piano, lent itself curiously well to mental pictures. Into its softness and huelessness the eye sank at first restfully; then stimulated to the seeking of visionary accompaniments to the music no white and filmy garment could have borne. There was the Schumann gipsy thief. How one revelled in his woes, wishing them increased and multiplied so that the singing voice in which they were so glowingly enfolded and conveyed, the thrilling hands of von Bos upon the piano, might not have stayed so soon! One saw the bronzed figure of the gipsy crouched beside that black velvet solid and compassionate, the gleam of gold in his clutching hand, and on his naked shoulders blood, and from his black wild eyes the streaming tears.

Golden indeed was your stealing, O long ago brown gipsy lad! And crimson-rich your bright blood's flowing! And silvern the sharp rain of your tears! Crimson and gold and silver of which was wrought this beauty for the world.

"Three Fishers Went Sailing" brought visions of those little North Devon fishing villages,—green wooded combes threaded pearl-like with the tiny white climbing cottages,—where Kingsley wrote the poem, and where such tragedies were once so common. On that soft black background one saw another picture—"The Hopeless Dawn." A cottage room in the grey light of breaking day; the girl-wife's figure flung along the floor with face hidden on the knees of the old mother who peers down for comfort at the big family Bible open beside her; a guttering candle on the table spread with the simple evening meal—for one who did not come; and, outside the window the sea just beginning to quieten after a night of angry turmoil . . . The intensest poignancy was not conveyed.

Last, sweetest, revealing an as yet ungiven loveliness—Claire Dux.

. . . Her voice moved delicately and surely upon its shining upward path, whereon the light grew ever brighter and more bright, until it ended in a note whose touch upon one's soul was as though a little door just opened into heaven—and shut again . . . White-glimmering like a star at dawn. O loveliest and purest! . . . From such human notes as these men might have first conceived the singing of celestial beings.

Like Hansen's violin, this art, this singing that touched, in moments, perfectness, left one in unrest, aware of exile, glimpsing some far-off place of final exquisite reconciliation and appeasement.

Though this singer bore, too, earthlier delights.

STYLES FROM NEW YORK

At the left an original Bergdorf-Goodman evening gown of mauve taffeta with a corsage of red roses at the waist line. Worn by Miss Linn Voorhees, Famous Players Company. At the right is shown a sports frock. Skirt of jade green crepe de chine with blouse effect of white hemstitched sleeves and exquisite neck bow of finely pleated crepe with green jewel ornament. Worn by Miss Doris Freeman. Original frock from Miss Stickney.

Below: The smart women of Paris and New York have sponsored the wearing of a variety of transformations. Glossy white hair is in great favor. As worn by Alice Laidley (Mrs. John Harriman) of the Famous Players Company, this coiffure is the last word in correct style. Transformation from Manuel of New York and Paris.

T. W. Mather Co. Inc
PASADENA, CAL.

Dry Goods

Women's & Children's

Wearing Apparel

Colorado Street at Marengo

PORTABLE TYPEWRITERS

WITH STANDARD KEYBOARD

Also All Makes Sold, Rented, Repaired, Exchanged

Parker Typewriter Co.

25 Years Experience

25 N. Marengo Pasadena

MISS ALICE BRADY WEARING ONE OF THE NEW BERGDORF-GOODMAN COAT MODELS. THE LEOPARD SKIN IS MOST EFFECTIVE ON THIS LONG, SLIM, BLACK COAT

A COURSE IN THE APPRECIATION OF ARCHITECTURE

The Santa Barbara Plan

IT IS not the policy of this magazine to publish examples of "before and after" pictures. There are, all around us, enough buildings which lack every element of the beauty which architects are prepared to furnish when called upon. But the architectural sections of this journal have no room for the ugly and commonplace. Beauty, too, is all around us, sometimes hidden by the commonplace buildings around it, sometimes neglected in the office of architects who are artists first, and builders, by request only. We are, therefore, selecting examples of great movements in building, and giving our readers, and students of architecture in the Federation of Women's Clubs of California, pictures that will help to explain the tremendous urge for better architecture which is finding its most explicit demand in the art sections of women's clubs on this Coast.

The exception to our general policy which we present on this page is, therefore, excusable and is used because it is an example of what is occuring constantly all over the country today.

Santa Barbara has added to her everlasting reputation for having the highest class of citizenry at command of her city government when that changeable part of any city has sense enough to use it. Just before the "late unpleasantness" of a year ago, Santa Barbara's best citizens had prepared a new city code which not only embodied the best modern ideas which scientific research has recorded for the benefit of up-to-date cities, but went that scientific ideal one better and introduced into the code of the city a standard of good taste in architecture. This had never been done before. Never before, in the United States at least, had a city inspector's office been given power to hold up a contractor's job until he could be given architectural assistance if his drawings showed that he needed it. Through all the months of reconstruction, therefore, every plan that came into the inspector's office was scrutinized not only for defects in wiring or plumbing, not only for objectionable features which might offend the nose, but for those things which ignorant builders who know not the first principles of design are constantly perpetrating and thrusting upon the business streets of our cities to the detriment of neighboring property and the degradation of public taste.

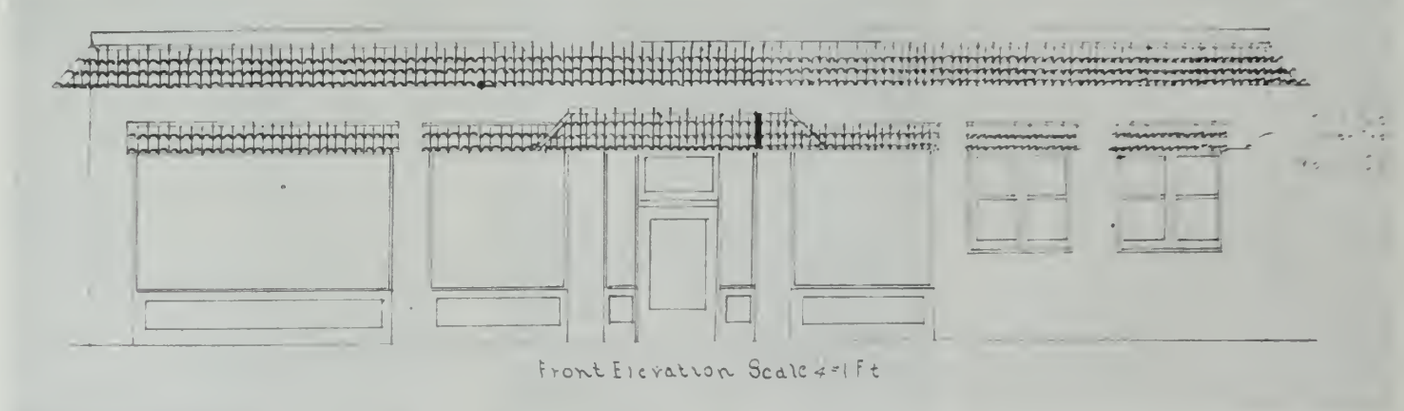
Santa Barbara has thus proved that it can be done; and even if that city reverts to the old "Gringo" style of architecture and fails to establish the name of "Estado" on her main street as a sign of good faith with those who have looked to her for leadership, she nevertheless has set the pace and other cities are imitating her beauties and stealing her prestige and may still outdistance her in true California architecture.

No art is ever without its incompetent imitators. Concrete blocks imitate stone and tin imitates concrete blocks. When the Spanish style was seen to be in demand the exploiters of building invented a tin tile and a tin style and turned out "Spansh architecture" by the yard.

But tin ruffles on a cornice and tin aprons over badly proportioned doors and windows do not make a bandbox "Spanish." True Californian architecture consists in building out of local material a good house which is adapted to the climate, and "builders and designers" who sell "art-chee-tect-chure" by the yard cannot imitate good building without doing good building. What Santa Barbara taught us is: To ask someone who knows.

THE subjects so far treated in the course outlined by Miss Gere, Associate Professor of Art in the University of California, Southern Branch, have been Creative Design Versus Tradition, by Mr. Myron Hunt, in the A.T.A. Bulletin, (Sept. and Oct. numbers of SOUTHLAND); Residential Architecture, by Mr. David Witmer now President of The Los Angeles Chapter A.I.A. (Nov.) Help for Homebuilders by Sumner M. Spaulding (Dec.); Proportion in Architectural Design by Mr. Fitch Haskell (Jan); The Element of Line in Architecture by Mr. Reginald Johnson (Feb.)

Then the Importance of the Garden was emphasized by our important visit to California of The Garden Club of America and we devoted the March, April and May numbers to that, with articles by Mr. Myron Hunt, Miss Bashford, Mr. Slaymaker, and Mrs. Elmer J. Bissell's Garden Pages.



In May we also began again the study of the Californian Domestic Architecture in an article written for Better Homes week in Santa Barbara by Mr. Richard U. Seares, now associated with Mr. J. Wilmer Hershey in the building of beautiful homes and commercial buildings. Mr. Hershey's unusual talent for design was used extensively in the rehabilitation of Santa Barbara after the earthquake and a sketch by him appears on this page.

In this issue Mr. C. H. Cheney of the University of California, The Beaux Arts, Paris, France, and now of Palos Verdes—contributes the following on:

TOWN AND CITY PLANNING

California Southland, Pasadena, Calif. April 23rd, 1925.

The State of Massachusetts has honored California by publishing the enclosed leaflet in which I thought your readers would be interested because it holds up a great project near Los Angeles to all the cities of Massachusetts as a model to work to. Thus the effete East at last acknowledges that there may be some culture, learning and amenities of life in the Far West. Sincerely yours, C. H. CHENEY.

THE UPPER PICTURE IS JUST ANYBODY'S DRAWING TO SHOW WHAT SPACE IS TO BE COVERED BY THE BUILDING YET SOME PEOPLE STILL TRY TO BUILD LIKE THAT! THE LOWER ONE IS A SKETCH MADE BY J. WILMER HERSHEY FOR THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE WHEN THAT REMARKABLE EMERGENCY BODY WAS FUNCTIONING IN SANTA BARBARA. ITS BEAUTY AS A DESIGN SHOWS WHAT WE LOSE BY NOT EMPLOYING AN ARTIST, FOR BEAUTY IS JUST AS ATTAINABLE AS UGLINESS, AND COSTS LESS.

THIS IS THE PRIZE HOUSE IN SANTA BARBARA BETTER HOMES WEEK, IT WAS DESIGNED BY AN OWNER FROM HER STUDY OF LOCAL CONDITIONS.

THE LEAFLET FROM MASSACHUSETTS

This little article is reprinted as an object lesson, a suggestion worthy of consideration in every one of its aspects. It may serve as an excellent guide to every planning board that is in doubt about what to do, or that thinks it has nothing to do.

This development, it will be noted, is a private one, so arranged that future owners may not ruin all that has been done for the good of the community. Control in this way, even to the design of the buildings, points clearly to what all places will have to do if the prevailing medley of uses and design is ever to be overcome. The art jury is legally established because the entire area is group-controlled instead of being left to private whim and private profit,—yet great profits are sure because the value of a home depends upon its value as a home and not upon its value as a pile of building material.

The scheme offers an example of zoning when zoning should be done at the start. That is all the more reason why older places should be zoned at once. With proper regulations in regard to any present uses which do not conform unscrambling may be brought about, gradually, as soon as the buildings have served their time.

Note particularly the planning for school plants. This scheme promotes efficiency, economy and permanency. Instead of sticking in fragments of a school plant here and there, on sites unsuited because of location and size, sites are selected in advance, when they may be secured at the price of farm land, where they will best serve their purpose, and in areas great enough to meet the needs. This method, which should prevail everywhere, offers a solution to one of the most interesting and important problems facing our planning boards and school committees.

The ocean shore park, embracing four miles out of a total of twelve miles of all the water-frontage, is in marked contrast with the usual method of waking up too late, after all the water-front has been appropriated by industry or by private homes, to the permanent exclusion of the people from a heritage which should be theirs for all time.

EDWARD T. HARTMAN,
State Consultant on Housing and Planning, Massachusetts.

Reprint from the Survey of October 15, 1925. By permission.*

WHILE much has been written and little done, on this side the water, about the garden suburb (which is not, of course, the same thing as a garden city) a town-planning project at the southwest corner of the Los Angeles Metropolitan District has been quietly developing many of the European garden suburb ideas. Palos Verdes, near Los Angeles harbor (but not inside the city limits), is in many ways assured of a better environment—more open space, better recreation areas, more careful control of architecture—than can be found elsewhere in the United States except to a limited degree in such established districts as Roland Park, Baltimore; Forest Hills, Long Island; or St. Francis Wood, San Francisco.

In size and location the site is exceptional. A ranch of sixteen thousand acres (twenty-five square miles) was acquired in 1913 by the Frank Vanderlip Syndicate, which thus became the sixth owner in succession from the original grant of the King of Spain. It lies on a peninsula of rolling hills which jut out into the Pacific toward Catalina and the Channel Islands, and boasts more than twelve miles of sea coast, bays and inlets.

The first part of the tract to be developed is the 3,200 acres that lie along its western and northern fringe. This initial development is financed in comparatively small amounts, through the Palos Verdes Trust, by some five thousand participating owners, about two thousand of whom have bought homesites at reduced rates as underwriters.

The plan has been permanently and legally established by the filing of subdivision maps and restrictions which fix not only the streets system, with its carefully thought out scheme of major traffic routes, parkways and contoured roads, but also zoning and complete protective restrictions for practically the whole of the first 3,200 acres.

Unlike the English garden cities, Palos Verdes is not planned as a self-contained industrial and residential unit. It was conceived primarily as a suburban residential district for a metropolitan area which now contains perhaps two million people. The zoning done by restrictions therefore reserves over 90 per cent of all lots for single-family dwellings. Local business centers consist of a few lots each, surrounded by a small group of apartment and house-court sites; necessary stores, garages, service stations and the like are being located in a few compact blocks. The number and kind of these buildings is strictly limited, and the community controls their architectural design.

All building, in fact, is safeguarded in the interest of the amenities by a restriction, governing the use of all property, which sets up a permanent art jury to pass on building plans. This board, legally constituted and including a representative of the lot owners, must approve not only proposed buildings, but fences, walls, plantings and other improvements before they can lawfully be constructed. An endowment of $300,000 has been set up to finance the expenses of this jury so that owners can be advised without cost to them. Definite standards of architecture have been established; in most parts of the Estates these require the use of a type appropriate to the southern California climate—its predominant features being walls of light-hued plaster and tile roofs. No billboards or general advertising signs can be erected anywhere in the Estates: the few necessary store and business signs are subject to review by the art jury.

By planning so large a tract at a time, it was possible not only to group residence and shopping districts into convenient community units—the store points being approximately two miles apart—but to make exceptional provisions for open spaces and recreation. Every mile across the property about ten acres has been set aside for an elementary school-playground-park unit; every two miles twenty-five acres for a junior high school and children's ball fields; every three miles forty acres for a senior high school and community playground. A 213 acre park and golf course, with grass greens, fairways and club house, complete, has been deeded to the community for permament recreation use; together with four miles of ocean shore park and about two hundrd acres of additional parks and gulches, linking up with paths, roads and bridle-trails, all parts of the property.

Title to these rests in the Palos Verdes Homes Association, which was incorporated as non-stock, non-profit community organization to bridge the gap that usually occurs in a new section between the time of its settlement and the incorporation of a city government—a gap which is full of embarrassing possibilities for those whose interest lies in prompt and continuous operation of community service. This association, in which every building site has one vote, has power to interpret and enforce all the restrictions attached to the property and to collect an annual maintenance tax which is created in the restrictions by a recurrent annual lien. This tax, which must never exceed the city tax rate within the Los Angeles municipal limits, is used for the upkeep of recreation sites, street planting, parks, and the like, and for the general benefit of all property owners. The association already holds title to more than six hundred and fifty acres of public land. It should act as a permanent nucleus for common activities of all sorts.

The restrictions which govern the use of property are in force until 1960 and are to be automatically extended for twenty-year periods thereafter unless modified by a majority vote of those who then own property. They may, however, be modified locally as to zoning, set-backs and the like if the proposed changes have the approval of the community association and of the owners of two-thirds of the area within three hundred feet of the site in question.

Construction began in Palos Verdes in 1923. During the past two years nearly three million dollars has been spent on roads, water mains, gas and telephone service. Enough water has been developed to take care of thirty thousand people and more is available. The first arcaded business building in Malaga Cove Plaza was recently completed and occupied. More than four hundred thousand dollars of new building permits were issued by the Community Association between November 1, 1924, and August 15, 1925. The ideals of the garden suburb, elaborately pre-planned, are being carried out; Palos Verdes is building for permanency.

Old World Charm
in Your Garden

Replica of an Early Spanish Jar

Original Found Among the Ruins of an old Mexican Estate

Number 400

ITALIAN TERRA COTTA COMPANY
Manufacturers of terra cotta garden furniture in all styles of architecture
1149 MISSION ROAD LOS ANGELES

A SECTION OF THE MURAL WORK ON THE WALLS OF THE CHILDREN'S ROOM OF THE PUBLIC LIBRARY OF LOS ANGELES. THE WALLS OF THIS ROOM WILL BE COVERED WITH PAINTINGS FORMING A CONTINUOUS FRIEZE BETWEEN BOOK-CASES AND CEILING DEPICTING TWELVE SCENES FROM SIR WALTER SCOTT'S ROMANTIC NOVEL, "IVANHOE". THESE PICTURES, EXECUTED BY MR. A. W. PARSONS, WORKING IN COLLABORATION WITH MR. GARNSEY,, WILL BE ILLUSTRATIVE IN CHARACTER RATHER THAN FORMALLY DECORATIVE, IN ORDER THAT THE CHILDREN, FOR WHOM THEY ARE PAINTED, MAY EASILY UNDERSTAND THEM, AND MAY FIND THEIR FAVORITE CHARACTERS FROM THE BOOK, AROUND THEM ON THE WALLS OF THEIR OWN ROOM. THE CEILING IS IN THE COLOR OF OLD WOOD, WITH NORMAN PATTERNS, AND THE WALL OF THE ADJOINING ALCOVE SHOWS A PAINTED DRAPERY OF THE SAME PERIOD

THE LIBRARY AND THE ART OF JULIAN E. GARNSEY

By M. URMY SEARES

CROWDED out of these pages last month, the description of some of the rooms in the new library building in Los Angeles is continued here.

Mr. Julian E. Garnsey, mural painter, was chosen to decorate the interior under direction of Mr. Carleton M. Winslow, Associate Architect with the late Bertram Goodhue, and was interviewed in his Los Angeles studio. Near him was a desk, given to his father, Elmer E. Garnsey, by Augustus St. Gaudens thirty years ago, and shelves of books, ceiling-high, filled with illustrations in color of the great decorations of the past and cases containing thousands of photographs which permit reference to the classics of architecture from which architects draw their inspiration. On a table were eighty sketches in water-color made during his latest journey through Italy and Spain last summer.

"As a result of the devoted service of the Board of Library Commissioners and the Librarian, and the skill of their architects," said this artist, "the citizens will have at their disposal a unique building, wonderfully adapted to its purpose and especially remarkable in view of the relatively small appropriation available. My part of the work is the easiest of all, for I have only to follow a pace already set.

"With that point of view and with a clear indication, in the case of the Library, as to what the architects thought would be proper decorative treatment, my problem was simply to amplify their idea throughout the building. We have here a massive, simple structure of most honest, straight-forward design. It is practically a concrete monolith. The construction is entirely visible. Real beams are seen doing their work, unhidden by hung plaster ceilings. In this form of construction, by the way, Los Angeles leads the world. Since my decoration must be no less simple and straight-forward, it is restricted to geometrical ornament, the forms of which are older than history itself, but which may be combined in new and interesting ways. Its object is to emphasize the construction of the ceilings, to show which members are doing the work and to mark centers of interest by spots of more elaborate design and color.

"I am using then, color in small, brilliant touches which, when regarded as a whole, will melt into a tapestry-like field. It will be used in the traditional ways, for each color has its proper place, determined by immemorial usage, and the weight of color values and intensities must he calculated for the work they have to perform, just as the steel and concrete materials are calculated.

"The style of ornament will not be historically consistent, for the reason that the building itself cannot be placed in any historic style. It has elements of many styles, fused together in an harmonious new creation. So the ornament will recall Renaissance, Roman and Byzantine precedents, combined in new ways and adjusted to each other.

"The effect of the decoration will not be such as to impress the visitor as the most important thing in the building. It will keep its place in the scheme of things, for my object is the room, the whole room and nothing but the room. This is particularly necessary in that the walls will all be of a warm grey-white, for the better reflection of light and my decoration will be confined to the ceilings. If the visitor is struck first with the handsome appearance of the room as a whole and secondly with the fact that the ceilings are decorated, I shall be happy."

From room to room on our visit to the library we went noting the masterly way in which the mural painter had made the decoration a part of the concrete ceiling instead of merely slapping the paint on as a surface substitute.

"The Art, Music and Teachers' Rooms," said our guide' "will allow somewhat freer treatment, owing to the construction of their ceilings, which have beams at wide intervals supporting large panels which apparently give strength to the beams and the ornament will be concentrated in fields in the centers of the panels."

Where the ceilings are lower they have been plastered and the weight of concrete so near our heads has been lightened by delightful color combination. One can but wish that the reading room might be supplied with an extensible chaise longue for each student of the reference books on art so that one might lie down to read and at the same time contemplate the ceilings so carefully considered by the artist. Here is a lovely old-rose pink and near it just the right green-blue to bring out their mutual loveliness. There, the concrete construction shows through and in another room the impress of the wooden forms, which held the liquid concrete while it set, has been made the most of. Like the petrified forests of California's mountains the artifical stone has held for our delight the intricate pattern of grained lumber and the artist has grasped this opportunity to add a natural beauty to concrete ceilings so commonplace when left entirely unadorned.

THE Art Center, 65 East 56th Street, New York City, which was founded five years ago, by exhibitions and competitions and lectures aims to bring closer together art and industry. The campaign slogan is "To Develop Art in Use," and the goal of the campaign is $750,000.

The Art Center is made up of seven constituent societies: The Art Alliance of America, the Society of Illustrators, the Art Directors Club, the American Institute of Graphic Arts, the New York Society of Craftsmen, the Pictorial Photographers of America, and the Stowaways.

The income from the new endowment is to be used to carry out a specific expansion program planned to meet the urgent needs of the organization. The chief features of the expansion program are to keep the galleries open on Sundays and holidays and in the evening, so that the general public and especially those who are at work in the industrial world may have every opportunity to visit the exhibitions; to award each year a $3,000 individual Purchase Prize for the single object exhibited which contains the highest qualities of beauty, and a group award of $5,000 each year for the exhibition made by a group or firm which shall show the highest beauty of arrangements, the best workmanship and the most complete applicability to reproduction by mechanical means. Other objects for which the income will be used are to make available notable exhibitions of American and foreign origin; to broaden the scope of the Art Center Bulletin, a monthly magazine published by the constituent societies; to stimulate art activities in educational institutions, and to establish a lectureship on art and industry.

Tile for Everlasting Beauty

Genuine importations of Spanish, Italian, African, and Mexican tiles always in stock, as well as a complete line of American made tile, also foreign and domestic marble.

Mantels and sections of floors, walls for baths and other rooms in white and colors are kept on display. We also make tile fountains for gardens.

Z. B. GALLOWAY

95 S. Wilson Ave., Pasadena Terrace 5516

THE BATCHELDER TILES

BATCHELDER-WILSON COMPANY

We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

2633 Artesian Street

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

TWO ILLUSTRATIONS FROM "PICTURESQUE PASADENA"

The use of the California live oak in the gardens of the Southland of California is growing almost universal as the new population lives with this noble tree and learns to love it. As picturesque as the ilex of Minorca, it responds to care and grows rapidly when watered in our dry summers.

Californians revel in masses of bloom. The cult of the single, perfect rose is scarcely known among those who have grown up in fields of lupin or on mesas covered with golden poppies. Prodigal in all things California gives bountifully to those who cultivate her soil.

Continued from May number.

Illustrated by M. V. Oates.

Photographs by Albert Hiller.

Authentic Egyptian costumes, worn in "Pharaoh's Daughter," presented by Pasadena Community Players.

THE PEOPLE OF LOTUS LAND

By FAIRFAX PROUDFIT WALKUP

AT A SIGNAL, rich carpets are spread, and the Princess and her lover advance to the throne. For this formal occasion, Nefra has put on a dress of gold tissue. On her head is the golden partridge, with gleaming emerald eyes and blue-tipped wings. The crown of Isis rests above it, and surmounting the crown is the tall red disk, supporting two feathers, and the gilded horns of Hathor, the Cow-goddess.

The young Prince Hatsu has wrapped a red cloak in diagonal folds about his body, and upon his head has been placed the wide, heavy-plumed and many-disked crown of Amen-Ra. In his right hand he carries the loop of gold, the Ankh, symbol of eternity; this same hand which so lately had been engaged with the fingers of the little princess!

QUEEN MERRHIS, REIGNING SOVEREIGN OF EGYPT, AS PORTRAYED BY HELEN JEROME EDDY IN ALLISON GAW'S PLAY, "PHARAOH'S DAUGHTER."

The High Priest makes a sign; the King arises, and the crowd parts, to let the royal party proceed to the temple. The privileged few disappear inside the sacred portals; the larger multitude remains without, listening to the faintly echoing voice of the priest intoning the sunset prayer. "How manifold are thy works!" comes the message to the Sungod, Ra, "Thou hast made the distant heaven, in order to rise therein . . . Dawning . . . shining afar off . . . returning . . . "

"Returning" . . . This is the secret of Egypt; the metempsychosis that outlasts Time . . . So many cycles they have lived, that differences vanish, like irregularities in a far perspective. So it comes naturally that the garments of men and women are very little different, the one from the other. Hatshepsut, the Queen Elizabeth of Egypt, found it an easy matter to assume man's garb, even to the false beard. Brother and sister, even mother and son, saw family ties as insignificant details of existence, and calmly intermarried for the propagation of the royal line. Only the symhols of the Gods were left unaltered, through the ages; symbols so long ago adopted that their meanings, for the most part, were forgotten. These persisted, unchanged,—the Elemental Unknowables.

Elie Faure has said of Egypt, "She let the sand mount up around her and the weariness of life slowly covered her heart . . . She had lived enclosed . . . she remained enclosed, shut up like her temples, her kings. . . The whole of her ten thousand monotonous years . . . is contained in the single sigh which the Colossus of Memnon exhales at sunrise."

"At sunrise" . . . This, and not darkness, is Egypt's eternal moment. . . . So she will ever be marked, by the fresh finger-tip of dawn . . . .

Cleopatra

The barge she sat in, like a burnished throne,
Burned on the water. The poop was beaten gold;
Purple the sails, and so perfumed that
The winds were love-sick with them . . . For her own person,
It beggared all description: she did lie
In her pavilion-cloth-of-gold of tissue—
O'er-picturing that Venus where we see
The fancy outwork nature. On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With divers colored fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool,
And what they undid, did . . . Her gentlewomen, like the Nereides,
So many mermaids, tended her in the eyes,
And made their bends adornings . . . From the barge
A strange invisible perfume hits the sense . . .
Rare Egyptian! . . .
Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale
Her infinite variety . . .

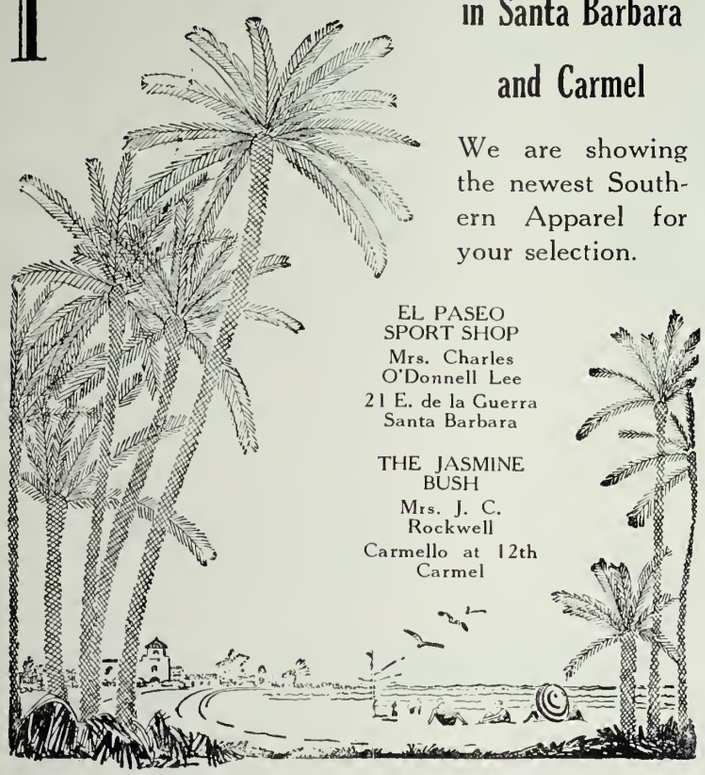
—William Shakespeare.

"ALCESTIS" AT THE SOUTHERN BRANCH, U. OF C.

THE Pacific Coast is a place where extremes meet. One should not be surprised, therefore, to see classic Greek Drama in Hollywood. Yet there is no more fit setting than California for this reproduction of an art which had its birth in the land of olive groves and sea-tinctured breezes.

The University of California, both at Berkeley and the Southern Branch, is one of the few remaining centres that has been active in preserving the classic tradition of the Greek stage. Due to the meticulous training of Miss Evalyn Thomas, the Southern Branch has each year given a drama of Eschylus, Sophocles or some other Greek dramatist. This year, Euripides' "Alcestis" was chosen. It is a moving tale of self-sacrifice on the part of the wife for her husband. Leslyn McDonald, as the beautiful and noble heroine, gave a performance which retained all the dignity of the classic role, and yet moved the heart by its pathetic appeal. There was a quality of lyric tenderness in her voice; her slender, delicately draped figure had the sensuous charm of Praxiteles' Artemis.

Sanford Wheeler, as Admetus, the King, gave a virile and engaging interpretation. He, too, charmed by the resonant quality of his voice. Indeed, it is this quality which made the performance unusual. Perhaps, in this day, one almost forgets the beauty of the spoken word; pantomime has so captured the fancy that the world is almost wholly a dumb show. But the voice is, after all, one of Man's most precious possessions; it is an echo of the thought of God. Speech that is mellifluous is near to celestial harmony.



That a university of undergraduates can so satisfactorily recreate the classic beauty of the past, points to more than an academic interest. It proves that the youth of today with all their fierce intensity of living, their emphasis on individual expression and momentary enjoyment are yet sincerely appreciative of the heritage of the past. They recognize great art, and are capable of reproducing it in all reverence and sincerity. For this reason, and for the thrill of its pure tone quality, the "Alcestis" was not only interesting,—it was inspiring.

FAIRFAX PROUDFIT WALKUP.

FLORNINA
95 South Los Robles
Pasadena, California

To Our Friends in Santa Barbara and Carmel

We are showing the newest Southern Apparel for your selection.

EL PASEO SPORT SHOP
Mrs. Charles O'Donnell Lee
21 E. de la Guerra
Santa Barbara

THE JASMINE BUSH
Mrs. J. C. Rockwell
Carmello at 12th
Carmel

Four Routes East

—go one way and return another if you wish

Southern Pacific Lines offers four great scenic routes to the East. Each has a distinctive appeal.

Sunset Route—San Francisco, Los Angeles, New Orleans. Three trains daily, including the world-famous Sunset Limited. Connections at New Orleans with Southern Pacific steamship for New York (meals and berth included in your fare).

Golden State Route—Los Angeles to Chicago direct, none faster. The luxurious Golden State Limited—two other trains daily.

Overland Route, Lake Tahoe Line—San Francisco to Chicago—the transcontinental aristocrat "San Francisco Overland Limited" and two other trains daily.

Shasta Route—California to Portland, Oregon, Seattle, Washington; and east over northern lines. The fast Shasta Limited and three other trains daily.

Low Roundtrip Fares
effective throughout the summer season.
Return limit October 31.

Ask any Southern Pacific agent about fares, reservations, schedules, etc.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC LINES

Southern Pacific Lines

C. L. McFAUL, Assistant Passenger Traffic Manager
Los Angeles

Sports Dresses $18.50 to $25.00

THE marvel is that such pretty and becoming frocks should be so moderately priced. And when you see them you will want two or three; short-sleeved models or those with full-length sleeves; smartly tailored and youthful—for misses and small women who wear sizes 13, 15, 17, 14, 16 and 18. Shown in all the delicate summer shades.

(Third Floor—Sportswear—Coulter's)

Coulter Dry Goods Co
FOUNDED in 1876

Seventh Street at Olive

For Women of Tall Figure these gowns have been selected

Individual in Character
Moderate in Price

SIZES
38 to 56
Including Half Sizes

Schaffer GOWNS for LARGE WOMEN

566 E. Colorado Opposite Presbyterian Church Pasadena

fabriano shop

"By the Tall Sycamore"
Sixty South Catalina, at Green, Pasadena

Fine Imported Hand Loom Papers

For correspondence, etching, engraving, printing, poster work and fancy wrapping.

Designing, Printing, Engraving
Imported and Domestic Handmade Gifts

Wakefield 4082

SMALL HOUSE DESIGNS

Published by the
Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara, California.
Price $1.50 Postpaid

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

OFFICERS:
MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President
MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President
MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, Sec. Vice-Pres.
MRS. ERWIN P. WERNER, Third Vice-President
MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Vice-Pres.
MRS. JAMES REED, Secretary
MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treas.
MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

BABY BONDS

THE most attractive investment offer on the market today is the $75,000 Baby Bond issue of the Assistance League of Southern California for the financing of the building of a new, modern, fire-proof Day Nursery Building. Regular dividends are guaranteed in better babies and increased happiness. The bonds are unsalable but the dividends will never stop. You don't have to bother about clipping coupons. Payment on the bonds may be spread over a period of twelve months for the convenience of the investor.

Friends of the League who may be expected to give in rather substantial amounts will be offered this opportunity to meet the building fund needs of the League. The board of directors has concluded that at least $75,000 is immediately needed to accomplish the following imperative undertakings:

1. $25,000 to match and make available the $25,000 offered by Raphael Herman on a contingent, time limit basis for the erection of a new modern, fire-proof Day Nursery building.

2. At least $8,000 to complete the furnishing of the new Day Nursery (a portion of the furnishings having been pledged).

3. $5,700 to clear up the indebtedness which is now due on our property.

4. From $12,000 to $15,000 to make imperative repairs and alterations to the Community House, including new plumbing, a rodent-proof foundation, new roof, etc.

5. A sufficient amount to build an addition to the Community House in the form of shops extending out to De Longpre Avenue in order to relieve the unbearably overcrowded conditions and to provide suitable quarters for the Thrift Shop, Woman's Exchange, Film Location Bureau, Social Service Department, and other departments which are now handicapped for lack of space.

The Assistance League makes this appeal for more and better working equipment feeling that the request for support of this Baby Bond issue is fully justified by the work that has been accomplished in the past year, while all departments were handicapped by lack of space and equipment.

COMMUNITY CHEST PERMIT: The Assistance League receives its maintenance needs (above earnings from profit-making departments) from the Community Chest. The Community Chest does not raise the building fund for its member agencies, but it does control their building fund activities and only permits campaigns when building needs are absolutely imperative. During the two years of the Chest's existence only four agencies have been granted permission to appeal to the public for building funds. After investigation of the League's needs the Community Chest has granted permission for the Assistance League Appeal.

SOCIAL SERVICE COMMISSION APPROVAL: The Los Angeles Social Service Commission has voted its approval of the appeal. Commenting upon the approval of the Commission, Dr. E .E. Haring, its president, said: "This decision was reached after a thorough investigation of the Assistance League. We are convinced that its welfare work is of the highest type and that its program of social service is sound."

GEE! HE AIN'T HEAVY—HE'S MY BROTHER

By WILL R. HILL

Mister, what ye lookin' at?
Think I'm tired and all of that?
Can't ye see the stones is goin' to hurt his feet?
He's barefooted, I got shoes
And it's hotter then the duce
For him if he has to walk along the street,
Makes no difference 'bout the weather
Me an him must go together,
And he knows I ain't agoin' to drop him nuther,
When we git there he will be
Standin' long the side of me,
Ah, no mister, he ain't heavy; he's my brother.

Let ye take him for a while,
Why, it's only half a mile
Till we get to where the grass is soft and green,
Then ye ought to see im run,
Gee! we'll have a lot of fun,
Me and him the bestest time ye ever seen,
I am big and tall and strong
And I like to have him 'long
'Twont be long that I will have to pack him nuther
'Cause some day he's goin' to grow,
Then we won't go half so slow,
Ah, no, mister, he ain't heavy; he's my brother.

Maybe I could get there quicker,
If I just would let him flicker
And would set him down and leave him here behind;
But he needs me, I ain't goin'
To run away 'cause he is growin'
And 'il hold me back, No, sir, I ain't that kind;
It's a lot of fun to hold him
In my arms and once I've told him
I would take him, why, I will somehow or tother
See, he's laughin', not cryin',
And I ain't a half tryin'
Go'wan, mister, he ain't heavy; he's my brother.

ONE YEAR'S ACCOMPLISHMENTS

35 children cared for each day in the Day Nursery.

450 family relief cases affecting approximately 1000 individuals, of whom 360 were children, were handled by the Good Samaritan Department.

152 persons were secured employment, many permanent positions.

200 shut-ins were carried a measure of happiness through gifts and visits.

150 visits were made to soldier's hospitals with many gifts of food delicacies, tobacco, clothing, etc., for the disabled veterans who are not receiving government compensation.

Thousands of needy men and women are enabled to purchase clothing from the Thrift Shop at low prices.

Hundreds of women were aided by the sales of their needlework or other handicraft through the Women's Exchange.

$15,337.21 was earned by the revenue-producing departments and expended in purely charitable activities.

$5,571.68 earned by the Film Location Bureau, was turned over to other recognized charities.

WHAT SUCCESS MEANS

The success of this appeal means the extension of charity and welfare activities to a large number of needy children and families who cannot now be served as efficiently as they should be because of lack of space and equipment.

NO SUCH DREAM AS THIS HAUNTS THE MOTHER WHOSE LITTLE ONE IS SAFELY CARED FOR IN THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE DAY NURSERY, 5508 DE LONGPRE, HOLLYWOOD.

The Assembly Tea Room

The In and Out-of-Town House of Los Angeles serves
LUNCHEON, TEA AND DINNER
INCIDENTALLY
The Very Choicest Food
Special Sunday Dinner 5 to 8

644 South Flower St., Los Angeles
Phone VAndike 7177

WE offer for investment of Personal or Trust Funds sound Securities returning highest rates consistent with safety.

WILLIAM R. STAATS COMPANY

Established 1887
Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds

311 East Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIF.
Los Angeles San Diego San Francisco

Unique in its Atmosphere

Each morning a refreshing shower. A joy at forty miles an hour.

Golden State Limited East

The luxurious and congenial environment of an ocean liner translated to railroad travel.

Rock Island — Southern Pacific Lines

Leave Los Angeles 12:01 p.m. [via Southern Pacific]; San Diego 10:45 a. m. [via S. D. & A.]; arrive Chicago 10:00 a. m. third day [via Rock Island].
Thru Pullman daily from Santa Barbara 8:00 a. m. [via Southern Pacific].

For tickets, reservations personal service, call on Southern Pacific City Ticket Office, 937 State St., Santa Barbara, Calif., Phone 243; or address B. F. Coons, General Agent, Rock Island Lines, 809 Van Nuys Bldg., Los Angeles, Calif.

A "comfy" lounge for women planned. A kind of traveling "no man's land."

HOMESPUN SPORTS COATS

Hand woven on our own looms by expert designers

Handwrought Silver and Pewter
Ideal for Wedding Gifts

HEWSON HAND CRAFT STUDIOS
602 E. Colorado St., Pasadena
2508½ W. Seventh St., Los Angeles

YOUR HOME tells the irrefutable story of yourself. Is it as up-to-the-moment in style as your clothes or your car? Barker Bros. displays the very latest style trends in home furnishings. If your home lacks some of these 1926 features, you will find it easy to supply your needs here—for values are greater than ever and prices lower.

BARKER BROS.

Complete Furnishers of Successful Homes
SEVENTH STREET, Flower and Figueroa

Choose your own architect from the representative styles shown in "California Homes" by California Architects. Price $1.00.
Address: ELLEN LEECH,
544 So. El Molino Ave Pasadena, Calif.

Aluminum Plaster-Flush Registers for Hot Air Furnaces

The Beauty and Artistic Design of Terra Cotta made Durable and Practical by an aluminum casting — finished to match your interior.

Designed and Executed by Ohrmund Brothers

Pasadena Gas Appliance Co., Inc.
901 E. Colorado Street
Pasadena Fair Oaks 9393

Decorating and Finishing Exclusive Furniture

W. G. Pesenecker

Interior and Exterior Painting
34 North Broadway
Phone Col. 5656 Pasadena, Calif.

GATES
GRILLES
VICENZA STONE
FOUNTAINS
BENCHES
FIGURES
FURNITURE
—:—
Chapwoods
ITALIAN HOUSE
6908 HOLLYWOOD BLVD.
HOLLYWOOD
GR 1349

Southland Calendar Events of the Year

THE FIRST BIENNIAL INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF GIRL GUIDES AND GIRL SCOUTS ever to be held in the United States opened in May at Camp Edith Macy, 35 miles from New York. More than 150 women delegates representing 39 nations from the Argentine to Liberia and including such remote countries as Finland, Latvia and China met May 11th to May 18th in the first world camp of women to be established in this country. Girl Scout and Girl Guide leaders from the interior of these countries made the long journey to the United States. Some came on mule and camel back, others by sled in Norway and still others by carriers in Africa. The unusual encampment was directed by Mrs. Jane Deeter Rippin, American national director of the Girl Scouts. The foreign delegates arrived in this country on May 5th and made a brief tour of Boston, Washington and other points of interest before joining the American delegates in Camp Edith Macy at Briarcliff Manor. The occasion marked the dedication of the camp, which was given to the Girl Scouts by Mr. V. Everit Macy in memory of his late wife, for many years Chairman of the national executive board of the Girl Scouts. The camp consists of 281 acres and adjoins Camp Andree, the national Girl Scout camp.

California Security Loan Bank Wallace Neff, Architect

The Cheesewright Studios, Inc.
Decorators and Furnishers
PASADENA CALIFORNIA

THE CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL, Los Angeles, held open house from ten to four on April 5th, 1926, to celebrate their Silver Anniversary. It was the twenty-fifth anniversary and friends of the hospital were invited to bring their silver tokens of appreciation. Tableware for the hospital, silver money for the building fund, old silver to be sold—all of these to make their Silver Anniversary memorable.

The demands upon the hospital have grown during the twenty-five years of its existence in proportion to the growth of the city of Los Angeles and its suburbs—for the Children's Hospital serves Southern California. It is the only general hospital for children south of Tenachapi.

Since the inauguration of the Community Chest, which furnishes funds for maintenance of the hospital, the members of the Board of Managers have been able to concentrate their efforts on the problems of providing additional beds and other hospital facilities to care for the many helpless and afflicted children who are being turned away because of lack of beds. During the past two years almost as many children have been turned away as have been admitted to the beds of the hospital.

A plan for financing the building of a new one-hundred bed wing and a new nurses' home has been arranged and Mr. Lee A. Phillips has been appointed chairman of the Building Committee. Mr. Lester H. Hibbard, architect, is drawing plans with the assistance of Dr. R. G. Brodrick, hospital expert of San Francisco.

AS we go to press the inviation comes from the trustees and faculty of California Institute of Technology for Commencement Exercises of the Institute, Thursday, June 10, 1926, 4:30 o'clock on the campus.

Los Angeles General Hospital, Acute Building

There has never been as close an approach to perfect architectural service as in this hospital where every department has been jointly studied by special medical and architectural experts.

Complete co-ordination of medical knowledge and architectural skill here proves again that the association of men of ability must result in a greater benefit to the client.

ALLIED ARCHITECTS ASSOCIATION OF LOS ANGELES

Illustrated: RCA Loudspeaker Model 104 with Radiola 28

Quality of tone—quality with volume—the permanent quality of the eight-tube Super-Heterodyne ....with single control and no batteries!

RCA

RCA Radiola

MADE · BY · THE · MAKERS · OF · RADIOTRONS

RICHARDSON'S INC
Victrolas ~ Radios ~ Pianos
730 WEST SEVENTH STREET
LOS ANGELES CALIFORNIA

AUTHORIZED
R. C. A. DEALER

RICHARDSON'S INC
Victrolas ~ Radios ~ Pianos
730 WEST SEVENTH STREET
LOS ANGELES CALIFORNIA

The Entrance Plaza at Palos Verdes

Palos Verdes Estates

JAY LAWYER
General Manager

BANK OF AMERICA
Trustee

LANE MORTGAGE BLDG., 8TH AND SPRING STS., LOS ANGELES
TELEPHONE VANDIKE 2481

This sea-girt suburb, once the domain of the haughty dons, is now decked with artistic homes and sunlit gardens. Here one finds ideal living conditions—a natural beauty spot—one of California's choicest seaside locations.

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

SUMMER TIME IS THE ONLY TIME WE HAVE FOR BOOKS AND CAMPING AND TO DREAM OF THE HOUSES WE BUILD

The Sherman Rose House, Monterey From a Painting by Percy Gray

Courtesy of A. M. Robertson

OLD MONTEREY, THE FIRST CAPITAL OF CALIFORNIA HAS PRESERVED ITS FINE COLONIAL HOUSES, SO WELL ADAPTED TO CALIFORNIA'S LIFE

No. 79 JULY, 1926 25 Cents

CALIFORNIA'S HOME AND GARDEN MAGAZINE

The Westlake
School for Girls
333 South Westmoreland Avenue
Residence and Day School
Lower School, College Preparatory, Junior College
Fully Accredited
Departments of Art, Music, Home Economics
JESSICA SMITH VANCE FREDERICA DE LAGUNA
Telephone DRexel 0052

An Ideal School for Young Women
Cumnock School
COLLEGE WORK IN THE FOLLOWING COURSES:
Vocal Interpretation of Literature
Literary Appreciation — Voice and Diction — Short-Story
Public Speaking — French — Dancing
Dramatics — Story Telling — Psychology
Journalism
Art and Art Appreciation
An accredited High School in Class A preparing for Western and Eastern Colleges and Universities.
HELEN A. BROOKS, Director
5353 West Third Street — Los Angeles
WHitney 3427 —TELEPHONES— WHitney 7311

NEW HOME
OF PACIFIC
MILITARY ACADEMY
Culver City, California

Boarding and Day School. Fireproof Buildings. Completely Equipped Laboratories. Grammar and High School. Enrollment limited.
For Catalogue Write Mrs. Loughan or telephone Culver City 3294

Norma Gould School of the Dance
announces
SUMMER COURSES FOR TEACHERS, PROFESSIONALS AND CHILDREN
Authentic Dances — Pantomime — Eurythmics
Special Feature—Fundamentals of Toe, Waltz Clog and Ballroom Dancing
July 5-August 13, 1926
Scholarship Awarded
460 N. Western Ave. Send for Catalog
HEmpstead 3530

Bernays
2501 West Seventh Street
Los Angeles, California
GALLERIES—PICTURES—FRAMING
Visitors Welcome

SCULPTOR OF SILVER
FOR THE TABLE OF THE BRIDE
PORTER BLANCHARD
BURBANK :: :: :: CALIFORNIA

Marlborough School for Girls
Boarding and Day School Accredited to Eastern and Western Colleges
5029 West Third Street
36TH YEAR
ADA S. BLAKE, Principal

MISS HARKER'S SCHOOL
FOR GIRLS
Palo Alto -:- -:- -:- California
"The Home of Stanford University"
Outdoor life all the year round. One hour from San Francisco. College Preparatory and Special Courses. Separate residence for girls from 5 to 14 years. Catalog on request.

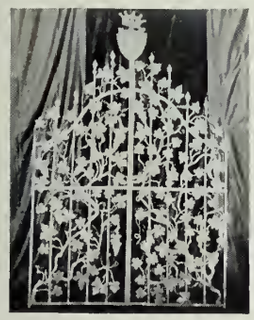
KENWOOD HALL
Resident and Day School for Girls. Sub-Primary through High School.
Open throughout the year.
Directors: Ruby Mildred King, Grace Baylor Bobbitt.
Tel. WAshington 1612 675 So. Vermont Ave., Los Angeles

The Girls' Collegiate School 34th Year
NEWLY LOCATED IN THE COUNTRY
Boarding and Day School. Accredited East and West. Out-Door Life a Reality. 50-acre estate. All sports. Saddle Horses. New Buildings. Italian type. L. A. Office, "Ask Mr. Foster" Information Service in Robinson's Dept. Store at Seventh Street and Grand Ave., Tel. BR 4701.
Glendora, Calif. Miss Parsons and Miss Dennen, Principals

Westridge
A COLLEGE PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS. ACCREDITED.
Primary, Intermediate and Academic Departments.
MARY L. RANNEY, AMIE C. RUMNEY, Principals.
324 Madeline Drive, Pasadena, California Telephone Wakefield 5276

The Elliott School for Girls
Residence and Day School.
Ideal Home Life Character Building
Superior Educational Advantages. Sub-Primary through Eleventh Grade.
Martha Collins Weaver, M. A., Principal. Pico Blvd. at Grammercy Place.
EMpire 5347

Urban
Military Academy
23rd YEAR
A good summer camp is an essential part of every real boy's education. Urban, with the most completely organized camp in the West offers a worthwhile summer in the High Sierras. Fishing, Swimming, Riding, all sports. Membership limited. Experienced staff. Enroll now. For information, see Secretary, Wilcox at Melrose, Los Angeles, California. HEmpstead 7602.



FINE PAINTINGS
STENDAHL ART GALLERIES
AMBASSADOR HOTEL LOS ANGELES

THE SOUKS OF TUNIS
announce
the opening of a new branch
at 29 Paseo de la Guerra
Santa Barbara

MARGARET CRAIG
Architectural Photographer

GATES
GRILLES
VICENZA STONE
FOUNTAINS
BENCHES
FIGURES
FURNITURE

—:—

Chapwoods
ITALIAN HOUSE
6908 HOLLYWOOD BLVD.
HOLLYWOOD
GR 1349

SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

SAN YSIDRO RANCH

California's Famed Foothill Resort Unharmed by Earthquake.

Nestled in the foothills among the Orange Groves, overlooking Valley and Sea. Elevation 600 feet. Furnished Bungalows, 2 to 7 rooms. Central Dining Room. Electricity, hot and cold water. Surf-bathing, Tennis, Horseback Riding. Six miles from Historic Santa Barbara, two miles from ocean and country club. Moderate rates. For Folder, address San Ysidro Ranch, Santa Barbara, California.

MT. WILSON STAGE LINE

The Mt. Wilson Observatory and the hotel and cottages on the summit of the Sierra Madre Mountains may be reached by excellent motor stages driven by experienced drivers. For information call the Union Stage Depot, 55 South Fair Oaks Avenue or Colorado 2541. Free tickets for Friday nights at the Observatory must be secured at 813 Santa Barbara street, Pasadena.

Santa Maria Inn

SANTA MARIA, CALIF.

A HOME-LIKE INN, upkept with home-like neatness for the convenience of wayfarers.

Every room with bath. Halfway between Los Angeles and San Francisco on the Coast Highway.

Write or telegraph for reservations.

The Mansfield Studios

Interiors designed and executed—Embroideries—Textiles

Pasadena WAshington 3473

Altadena Office Under Direction of Mrs. Samuel Lee Bierbauer
Colo. 2015

PORTRAITS
BY
PHOTOGRAPHY

Charles S. Seabolt
26 No. Los Robles Avenue, Pasadena, California
Opposite Maryland Hotel
Terrace 6712

KIEVITS GALLERIES
Vista del Arroyo Hotel, Pasadena
European and American Paintings

The Cheesewright Studios, Inc.

Decorators and Furnishers

PASADENA CALIFORNIA

Landscape

Designing and Planting

The beautiful gardens of Southern California which we have created are evidence of our ability to design and plant your own grounds properly.

A reliable firm of thirty-eight years' experience in Southern California.

EDWARD H. RUST
NURSERYMAN

1625 Bank St. Colo. 997
So. Pasadena ELliot 2639

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertainments, etc., for the calendar pages are free of charge and should be received in the office of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, at least two weeks previous to date of issue, the 10th. No correction can be guaranteed if they are received later than that date CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, California. One dollar and twenty-five cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be changed as many times as desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the change is made.

Entered as second class matter, July 28, 1919, at the Post Office at Pasadena, California, under act of March 3, 1879.

Clubs

VALLEY HUNT CLUB, PASADENA:
The formal season at the Valley Hunt Club closed with May, after which time no programs are arranged. The tennis court and swimming pool offer the outdoor attractions during the summer, and individual parties, both afternoon and evening, are arranged as desired.

ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB, PASADENA:
"Unattached players will be glad to know that the Annandale Golf Club is now open to summer members as in previous years at special summer rates. The course is in excellent condition and will not be torn up with new work this summer."
The afternoon bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been discontinued for the season, but tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged, followed by tea.
Table d'hote dinner served in dining room every Sunday from 12 to 3 p. m.

LOS ANGELES COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.
Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 .p m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month.
Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturday during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.

MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday in each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Dancing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday.
Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.

LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week, Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal.
Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL COUNTRY CLUB:
A dinner dance is arranged for the third Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a. m., and not before two p. m.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB, SANTA BARBARA:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A recent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a special luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served.

PALOS VERDES GOLF CLUB: Offers an eighteen hole, all grass, seaside course, delightful for all the year play, open to residents and their guests. Lunch and dinner served every day. Tea and informal bridge may be enjoyed every afternoon.

ENCINO COUNTRY CLUB, VAN NUYS:
Buffet dinner dances every Wednesday evening.
Ladies Golf Thursday mornings.
Thursday a special luncheon is served, followed by bridge. Afternoon Tea 4:30.
Luncheon and dinner served every day.
Special luncheons, dinners, teas and bridge parties may be arranged for as desired.

NEWPORT HARBOR YACHT CLUB:
Friday, July 2, Ladies' first bridge luncheon, 12:30 p.m.
Saturday, July 3, Marions, snow birds and bay sloops, 1 p.m., star class sloops (bay course) 2 p.m., Independence Day ball, 8 p. m.
Sunday, July 4, Bang and go back race, 10 a.m., yacht review, 2 p.m.
Monday, July 5, Cruiser race (ocean course) 10 a.m., marions, snow birds and bay sloops (first heat Smith trophy) 1 p.m., performance handicap and star class (ocean course) 2 p.m.
Friday, July 9, 16, 23, 30, Ladies' bridge luncheon, 12:30 p.m.
Saturday, July 10, Marions, snow birds and bay sloops (second heat Smith trophy) 1 p.m., informal dance, 8 p.m.
Sunday, July 11, Speed boat race 176 cu. in class) 10 a.m., speed boat race (151 cu. in. class) 11 a.m., star class (bay course) 2 p.m.
Saturday, July 17, Marions, snow birds and bay sloops (third heat Smith trophy) 1 p.m., informal dance, 8 p.m.
Sunday, July 18, Performance handicap and star class (ocean course)
Saturday, July 24, Marions, snow birds and bay sloops (final heat Smith trophy) 1 p.m., mid-summer sailors' ball (everyone in costume).
Sunday, July 25, Star class (bay please) 8 p.m.
Saturday, July 31, Informal dance, August 1 to 8, Sixth annual regatta of the Southern California Yachting Association.

Music

HOLLYWOOD BOWL SUMMER SYMPHONY CONCERTS open July 6 to continue through August 28, on Tuesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:30 o'clock. Five famous guest conductors will appear during the season, Sir Henry Wood, Willem von Hoogstraten, Eugene Goossens, Emil Oberhofer, and Alfred Hertz. This is the fifth season of these "Symphonies under the Stars."

CHARLES WAKEFIELD CADMAN'S opera, "Shanewis" and Theodore Kosloff's ballet production, "Sheherazade" delighted immense audiences in the Hollywood Bowl on the evenings of June 24 and 28. This was the Western premiere of the Cadman work, which was received with enthusiastic applause, and Mr. Cadman was presented with a laurel wreath from the California Federation of Music Clubs. Gaetano Merola, conductor, was given an ivory baton inlaid with gold. At the close of the opera Mr. Behymer announced that next season three operas by Americans would be produced at the Bowl, Cadman's "Witch of Salem," Victor Herbert's "Natoma" and the Crocker-Redding opera, "Fay-en-yah."

GLENDALE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA ASSOCIATION has elected Mrs. A. H. Montgomery, past president of the Tuesday Afternoon Club, as their new president, to succeed Mrs. Daniel Campbell.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MUSIC MERCHANTS, said to be the largest music trades organization in existence, at the recent convention in New York elected Edward H. Uhl president. Mr. Uhl is president of the Southern California Music Company, Los Angeles.

LAWRENCE TIBBETT has returned to his Los Angeles home, 1550 Fairfax Avenue for his vacation. Before Mr. Tibbet returns to New York to fulfill his contract with the Metropolitan Opera Company he will give a recital at the Philharmonic Auditorium, under the direction of L. E. Behymer.

ARTHUR FARWELL is directing the large chorus which will form a part of the Pageant of Liberty to be given in the Coliseum, Los Angeles, July 5.

THE HOLLYWOOD BOWL with its increased seating capacity, broad cement walks, new double stage on a concrete base, constructed to roll on steel tracks, permitting the arrangement of one while the other is in use, makes a vastly different Bowl in point of arrangement and permits of more ambitious productions. The opening event in the improved bowl was given June 22. Four celebrated conductors, Walter Henry Rothwell, Modest Altschuler, Adolf Tandler, and Pietro Cimini directed the Holly-

Safeguard Winter Furs in Bullock's Storage Vaults

YOU are practicing poor economy if you are not preparing to guard your valuable winter furs against the moth. Moth balls, tar bags, anti-moth preparations are careless methods of protection. Why?

Because even if your furs are not eaten away, they lose their natural oils so that the skins are left dry and easily broken.

Bullock's Scientific System is a dry process. Your furs are stored in vaults in which the air is continually purified before being placed there, garments are given expert inspection and brushing.

FUR SECTION Bullock's Broadway—Hill and—Seventh THIRD FLOOR

"One o'Clock Saturdays"

Where the Treasures of a Collector May Be Purchased as Gifts

A. Schmidt & Son

For Fifty-six Years

IMPORTERS OF ANTIQUE AND MODERN SILVER AND Sheffield Plate, Fine China and Glass

2320 W. Seventh St., Los Angeles

391 E. Colorado St., Pasadena

Boston New York Washington

wood Bowl Symphony orchestra in four numbers; Marcella Craft, soprano, and Leonida Coroni, baritone, were vocal soloists. The Hollywood Bowl Piano Ensemble, with twenty-four pianos, was an unusual musical pleasure. And Ernest Belcher's "Phantom of the Opera" ballet was a beautiful production. Joana and Louis Leschin, gifted children, were piano soloists.

THE ARTLAND CLUB announces the discontinuance of the series of concerts by Tandler's Little Symphony, owing to the fact that some of the Tandler players belong to the Hollywood Bowl Orchestra, also because the club feels the Bowl makes sufficient provision for orchestral music during the summer.

REDLANDS COMMUNITY MUSIC ASSOCIATION opened the third season of Bowl concerts with a recital by Marcella Craft, and a talk on Cadman's "Shanewis" by Ethel Graham Lynde. The season runs for twelve weeks and two concerts a week will be given.

THE ALHAMBRA COMMUNITY SING ASSOCIATION has chosen D. L. Scott as president; R. D. Wickham, first vice president; George H. Willis, second vice president; Miss Ethel Blackburn, secretary; O. H. Sipple, treasurer; Mrs. Nettie Drown, historian.

JOHN McCORMACK has announced his intention to spend at least three months in Los Angeles, on his return from the Orient, arriving early in July. Mr. McCormack opened the new Imperial Theater in Tokio, and gave three additional concerts in that city.

HOLLYWOOD BOWL ASSOCIATION, through Allan C. Balch, president, has announced the appointment of Mrs. Leiland Atherton Irish as the head of the summer concert committee. Mrs. Irish has served in executive capacities with various musical clubs and interests and is particularly well qualified for this chairmanship.

THE WOMAN'S SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA at the annual meeting recently elected the following officers and directors: Mrs. Otto Neher, president; Miss Daisy Walters, vice-president; Mrs. Elsie R. Lewis, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Clarence B. Hamrick, treasurer, and Mrs. H. C. Underwood, Mrs. Walter Wessells Mrs. Hilda Beswick and Mrs. Beatrice Ricketts, directors.

MR. AND MRS. JOHN CLAIRE MONTIETH are entertaining with a reception and garden party at their studio, 625 S. Virgil Ave., Los Angeles, the evening of July 1st, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Yeatman Griffith.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by Richardson's of an achievement of special importance to all music-lovers, in the recording, in its entirety, of the famous Dvorak Symphony, "From the New World," performed by the Philadelphia Orchestra under the baton of its distinguished conductor, Leopold Stokowskl.

Art

LOS ANGELES MUSEUM OF HISTORY, SCIENCE AND ART, Exposition Park: In the large gallery the exhibition of the work of the students of the Otis Art Institute will continue to July 15. Examples of work in classes and mediums are grouped with advantage to the visitor, studying the character of courses offered by the Institute. Tiffany collection of Coptic Textiles; paintings and sculpture by Warren Wheelock; sculpture by Arnold Rohnebeck, will be continued through the 15th. During the last half of the month a loan exhibition will be held, through the generosity of local people; canvases of old masters as well as of contemporary artists will be shown.

SOUTHWEST MUSEUM, Los Angeles: Exhibition of permanent collection.

CANNELL AND CHAFFIN, 720 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles, are showing in their galleries an important exhibition of examples of the work of masters of the Seventeenth to Twentieth Centuries. Among the artists included in the collection are Sir Henry Raeburn, Sir Peter Lely, Sir Godfrey Kneller, Adolphe Monticelli, Antonio Mancini, John Singer Sargent, Abbott H. Thayer, Albert P. Rider, Frank Duveneck, Jean Louis Forain, Francis Cotes, Ignacio Zuloaga, Charles Harold Davis, George Bellows, Emil Carlsen, Ettore Tito, Frank Brangwyn, Sir Joshua Reynolds and William Morris Hunt. The exhibition will continue to July 10th. The last half of the month, the work of Frederick M. Grant of Chicago will be shown, consisting of decorative paintings, some of them being prize winners. This is the first time Mr. Grant has exhibited in Los Angeles.

THE BILTMORE SALON is showing a study—5 by 18 feet—of "The Last Supper" painted by Arthur Merton Hazard, formerly of Boston, Massachusetts, which will hang in the inner gallery for two weeks beginning July 1. The composition, except for the arrangement of the figures, is similar to the canvas by Leonardo de Vinci. The research was made by a well-known Boston clergyman who spent several weeks gathering the detail—the position of the figures—the properties—the exact costuming and the character of the disciples.

O' Hara, Livermore & Arthur Baken

Decorators and Furnishers—Antiques

522 Sutter Street, San Francisco

644 E. Colorado Street, Pasadena, Calif., Terrace 2175

Ideas

THOMPSON ADVERTISING COMPANY

307 BRALEY BLDG., PASADENA.

Eleanor and . . . . Hollingsworth Beach

French and Italian Arts

630 East Colorado Street

Pasadena,

California

PRINT ROOMS, Hollywood; A general exhibition of prints, etchings, ancient and modern.

THE OTIS ART INSTITUTE, Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles, announces the following awards were made to students by the faculty in the annual exhibit: Huntington assistance prize of $100 to George Stanley, for sculpture and design. Yearly scholarships were awarded to Andrew G. Aldrin, Phyllis Shields and G. D. Richmond. Scholarship special prizes of $25 each went to Muriel Schian and Ruth Miller. Bivouac Art Club prizes of $25 each were awarded to Ruth Bennett, Esther King, Dorothy Dowiatt, Kitaro Uetsugi, Frances Levine and E. M. Owens. The prize of $5, given by the Bivouac Art Club for work done in the children's Saturday class, was awarded to Louise Oliver. The Bivouac Art Club was organized among the students for mutual benefit as well as social enjoyment.

STENDAHL GALLERIES, Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, will show through the month the work of the Painters and Sculptors Club.

BERNAYS, 2501 West Seventh Street at Carondelet, Los Angeles, will show selected examples of the work of California artists during the month.

STONE INTERNATIONAL GALLERIES, Monrovia, have chosen and placed on view their special summer exhibition of contemporary art, including oils, watercolors and etchings, chosen from both Europe and America, the east and west.

KANST ART GALLERY on Mulholland Drive, Hollywoodland, always has an exhibition of paintings by well known California artists, as well as Eastern and European painters.

ANNETTA SAINT GAUDENS spent the winter at Ontario, California, at the Chaffee Junior High School. Among the miniature portrait statuettes she did was one of Dr. Aurelia Reinhardt, president of Mills College, also president of the American Association of University Women.

THE JOHN W. MITCHELL GALLERY OF FINE ARTS in Coronado was opened last month to the members of the Fine Arts Society of San Diego, with a reception and musical. Since the death of Mr. Mitchell, whose greatest interest lay in this collection, Mrs. Mitchell has carried on her husband's work, completing the gallery and arranging the pictures and sculpture.

ARTHUR MILLIER is forming summer classes in etching, drypoint and water color, to be held in the La Crescenta studio.

NEILE ORDAYNE has recently completed the portrait of W. P. Jeffries, president of the Jonathan Club, as a commission from the fellow-members.

DOUGLAS DONALDSON will hold summer classes in color, design and interior decoration at the Donaldson Studio on Melrose Hill, Hollywood, from July 5 to August 5.

DAN SAYRE GROESBECK who, with Mrs. Groesbeck has been spending several weeks in Hollywood, recently exhibited a new group of etchings at the Print Rooms, 1748 Sycamore Avenue, Hollywood.

THE BILTMORE SALON will show Geofrey Holt's watercolors during the entire month.

JOHN FROST is sketching at Mammoth Lake in the High Sierras, collecting material for his fall exhibition at Stendahl's. He finds the region very paintable and, incidentally, the fishing excellent for this artist is an ardent fisherman.

KATHERINE J. HUNLEY is sketching and painting this summer in Santa Monica, varying her custom of going to Arizona for material. Mrs. Hunley recently sold one of her large desert sky paintings, "Into the West," to the Senior Class of the University of Redlands, as a class gift to be hung in the new Library building. Mrs. Hunley is an active member of the California Art Club.

DANA BARTLETT found June a most successful season having sold five pictures in that month. "The Blue Hill," shown at the Los Angeles Museum, was sold to a school. His "Moonlight, Capistrano Mission" was shown last month at the Anderson Galleries, New York, and is now on exhibition in Boston.

ARTHUR HILL GILBERT has been painting in the High Sierras around Mammoth Lake, and joined John Frost there.

Announcements

PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYERS announce programs for the month: July 1 to 10, "In the Next Room," a Mystery Play in Three Acts, by Eleanor Robson and Harriet Ford. July 15 to 24, "The Youngest," by Philip Barry, author of "You and I." July 29 to August 7, "Caesar and Cleopatra" by George Barnard Shaw. Matinees are given on Saturdays only.

HOLLYWOOD STUDIO CLUB is now open and operating in the new home, 1215 Lodi Place at Lexington. In this new building with almost unlimited capacity and facilities the committee feels it will be able to accomplish many of the plans dreamed of but not brought to fruition in the old home. The Studio Club is operated as a residence club for young women of the motion picture profession and a limited number in other professions.

THE EDGEWATER CLUB, Santa Monica, opened the club building for a preview June 14, 15 and 16.

EDGAR J. CHEESEWRIGHT, accompanied by Mrs. Cheesewright and the two children, left for New York in June, whence they will sail for Liverpool. While in England Mr. Cheesewright will devote his time to the purchase of fabrics, antique furniture, and rare old Tudor paneling to fulfill several large residence commissions. Mr. Cheesewright will also visit the Continent and possibly Italy and Spain to secure other beautiful and unusual things for his collection. They will not return before September.

DUGALD STEWART WALKER, under the auspices of the Pasadena Center Drama League of America, gave a series of six lectures in the Recital Hall of the Community Playhouse, June 24 to 30. The subjects of his lecture-lessons were, Story Telling, Playing with Children, Putting on a Play, Staging a Production, Acting: Getting the Spirit, Rehearsals, Performance, Stage Speech, Outdoor Productions with Lighting.

SCHOOL OF THE ARTS, Santa Barbara, Frank Morley Fletcher, Director, announces an eight weeks' course in Practical Design and its various applications to Home Crafts will be given during the Summer School, July 6-August 28. Mrs. Esther I. Julian will give the course in Design, and Miss Evelyn Boushfield will give instruction in Home Crafts and will have general management of the workshop. The crafts undertaken will be as follows: Modelled papier mache, for decorative purposes and theatrical properties; painted and carved woodwork; Gesso (the Italian method of modelled ornament in relief, for picture frames, etc.); tooled leather; batik; basket work. For further information regarding these and other courses offered by the School of the Arts for the Summer, address Mrs. Jeanne Auge, 916 Santa Barbara Street, Telephone 843.

THE SECOND ANNUAL CALIFORNIA DAHLIA SHOW, to be held in Santa Monica at the Municipal Auditorium, September 1st to 4th, inclusive, promises to be an exceptionally interesting event. Leading commercial growers of Southern California and local amateurs are rapidly taking all available space. A Garden Club devoted especially to Dahlia culture is proving a great asset. An ample prize list has been prepared for the Show and the Dahlia garden contest and many prizes have been donated.

GENERAL FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS, Mrs. John D. Sherman of Colorado, president, announced at the close of the eighteenth biennial convention, held in Atlantic City last month, that the 1928 convention will be held in San Antonio, Texas. The biennial council, made up of the directors, department chairmen, and one delegate from each of the state federations, will convene in Grand Rapids, Mich., in 1927.

Pomona College, Claremont

UNDER the auspices of Pomona College summer session a program of concerts, dramatic productions and lectures is announced for members as well as for residents of Claremont and Pomona Valley. The series of twilight concerts for July are: July 5, 7:30, in the Open-Air theatre, Geneva Moremen, soprano, and the Lyman Singers; Warner Bentley, John Mangold, Raymond Moremen, and Blackwell Smith. July 12, 7:30, Bridges Hall, Florence Duvall, violinist, assisted by Malcolm Davison, 'cellist and Leslie Maloche, pianist. July 19, 7:30, Open-Air theatre, Florence Dodge Russell, soprano and assisting artists. July 26, 7:30, Bridges Hall of Music, recital by faculty and students of the department of music. All of these concerts are open to the public without charge, but a silver offering will be taken.

Two plays will be presented during the summer session by the recently organized El Camino Community Players, directed by Reginald Pole, noted actor: "The Great Awakening" by Arnold Bennett, Holmes Hall, July 2 at 8 o'clock, and the second play, in the Open-Air theatre, July 28, at 8 o'clock.

An exhibition of mountain photographs of the Himalayas, Caucasus and Sierras collected by the Sierra Club will be held in Rembrandt Hall under the auspices of the summer session from July 1 to 30.

A series of addresses have been arranged for the summer session assemblies on July 7, 14, 21 and 26 in Holmes Hall. The assemblies are open to the public. Karl W. Gehrkens, nationally known music authority and editor of School Music, will speak on the 14th, and Samuel G. Inman of New York, Latin-American authority, will speak on the 26th.

Excursions arranged for the summer session include an excursion to Hollywood Bowl and the Pilgrimage Play on July 9, and a trip to Mt. Wilson Observatory, July 16 and 17.

The summer session will close July 30, with the post session opening August 2 and lasting until August 20.

Announcing

to

Santa Barbara

an Advanced Display of Bathing Suits—Bathing Ensembles (suit with matching cape)—Negligees and Correct Frocks for Sports Wear to be Held

July 7th to 14th

El Paseo Sports Shop

21 DE LA GUERRA

SANTA BARBARA

Under the Supervision of Mrs. Chas. O'Donnell Lee

Louise Brown Hollister

head of Flornina establishment will receive you personally during first three days of the display.

FLORNINA

95 South Los Robles Avenue at Green

Pasadena California

Get this book today!

Where to go this Summer

We will help you plan your vacation. Call or write for Outing Resorts—useful vacation guide. Many other helpful booklets and complete travel information easily available to you.

Profit by low summer fares and fast, comfortable service to Pacific Coast playgrounds and to the East. Visit San Francisco, Santa Barbara, Santa Cruz, Del Monte, Lake Tahoe. Yosemite, Pacific Northwest. Save money by going by train.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC LINES

Southern Pacific Lines

C. L. McFAUL

Asst. Passenger Traffic Manager

Los Angeles, Calif.

MRS. A. S. C. FORBES has resigned the chairmanship of California History and Landmarks, Los Angeles district, California Federation of Women's Clubs after nineteen years of devoted service. Mrs. Florence Dodson Schoneman has been appointed to succeed Mrs. Forbes as chairman of California History and Landmarks for the coming year.

FRIDAY MORNING CLUB, of Los Angeles, give an interesting story in the new year book of the past year in the new clubhouse, and of a bank balance of $19,000. The officers for 1925-26 are: President emeritus, Mrs. J. A. Osgood; president, Mrs. Oliver P. Clark; first vice president, Mrs. Charles G. Stivers; second vice president, Mrs. Charles F. Turner; recording secretary, Mrs. William Waller Slaydin; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Charles F. Burnell; treasurer, Mrs. Carrie S. Greene. The directors are: Mrs. Charles Lincoln Benham, Mrs. William Kirtley Chambers, Mrs. Everett B. Latham, Mrs. Elmer Random Misemer and Mrs. William A. E. Noble.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON CLUB of Glendale at an impressive meeting in June installed the following officers: President, Mrs. Claude G. Putnam; vice president, Mrs. C. W. Houston; second vice president, Mrs. A. A. Bassett; recording secretary, Mrs. H. C. Vandewater; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Edwin F. Heisser; treasurer, Mrs. H. S. McCormack; and directors, Mrs. Stephen C. Packer, Mrs. A. M. Hunt, Mrs. T. H. Hudson, Mrs. Homer D Lockwood and Mrs. E. S. McKee. This is the first time that a president has been elected for a two year term, and the retiring president, Mrs. A. H. Montgomery, arranged an impressive ceremonial, assisted by the Woman's Chorus of the club, under the directorship of Hugo Kerchoffer.

MEMBERS OF THE EBELL CLUB, of Los Angeles, are perfecting plans for the new clubhouse, working out branches for their philanthropic work and adding new lines of interest even during the vacation period. Mrs. William Read is the president, and the new members of the executive board are: Mrs. Samuel E. Farcat, chairman of Rest Cottage; Mrs. Julian E. Garnsey, chairman of Scholarships; Mrs James C. Ernst, treasurer; Mrs. Lyman C. Stookey, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Grantland S. Long, chairman of architecture for the new building.

SHAKESPEARE CLUB of Pasadena announces the officers for the coming year: Mrs. Joseph H. Dorn, president; Mrs. John Franklin West, first vice president and chairman of departments; Mrs. A. J. Wingard, second vice president and chairman of publicity; Mrs. J. W. Morin, third vice president and chairman of program; Mrs. Harry Van Sitters, recording secretary and chairman of public affairs; Mrs. William A. Spill, recording secretary; Mrs. William A. Cochrane, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Frederick Gillmor, treasurer; Mrs. R. C. Olmsted, auditor; Mrs. W. N. Van Nuys, membership chairman.

WA-WAN CLUB, Los Angeles, at the recent annual meeting elected the following officers: Mrs. William E. Mabee, president; Frances Arnold Greenwood, first vice president; Margaret Barbrick Gillette, second vice president; Ella Duffield, third vice president; Corrine Dodge, fourth vice president; Mary Teitsworth, recording secretary; Letitia Williams, financial secretary; Mrs. Clark Ryan, corresponding secretary; Pearl Ferry-Boyd, treasurer; Helen Chute Dill, auditor; Mrs. W. H. Anderson, parliamentarian; and Anne McPherson, federation secretary.

LONG BEACH EBELL CLUB Recently elected officers are: President, Mrs. W. H. Spratt; first vice president, Mrs. Charles Ross; second vice president, Mrs. Burr A. Brown; third vice president, Miss Beulah Peck; recording secretary, Mrs. Stuart Chapman; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Fred Metzer; financial secretary, Mrs. James K. Reid; federation secretary, Mrs. Earl Burns Miller; treasurer, Mrs. Frank Blair; auditor, Mrs. Charles A. Wiley; parliamentarian, Mrs. J. Robert Poor; curator of departments, Mrs. Walter Case; general chairman of standing committees, Mrs. Sumner Davis.

LOS ANGELES SOROPTIMIST CLUB elected the following officers to serve during the ensuing year: Mrs. Mae Carvell, president; Mayme V. Matthay, vice president; Frosta W. Paisley, treasurer; while the directors are Amelia Johnson, Alberta Gude Lynch, Agnes Woodward, Monette Todd, Anna M. Bergeron and K. Anthenette Foster. This club organized four years ago was the third of its type in the country and is composed of professional women and women who either own or are heads of departments in various lines of business. The first president was Oda Faulconer, the second Mary Jean Henley, and during the third and fourth years Gertrude Maynard served the club. A luncheon meeting is held once a week in the Music Room of the Biltmore Hotel, with interesting programs, and at stated times the members show what they are doing in their professions and in their business.

WOMEN'S ATHLETIC CLUB, Los Angeles; the board of directors to serve a second term include Mrs. Robert J. Burdette, Mrs. Ada E. Laughlin, Mrs. Joseph F. Sartori, Miss Florence A. Williams, Mrs. Florine H. Wolfstein.

El Paseo Patio

Lunch Out of Doors or Dine
at
"EL PASEO"
23 E. de la Guerra St.
Santa Barbara

DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS
SANTA BARBARA

THE LOVELY SHOPPING STREET IN SPAIN

Etchings of the West
EDWARD BOREIN
No. 17 de la Guerra Studios

SPANISH ANTIQUES
OLD ADOBE ART SHOP
Elia Taylor Mabel Steinman
No. 16 de la Guerra Studios

PICTORIAL PHOTOGRAPHY
J. WALTER COLLINGE
No. 15 de la Guerra Studios

THE SOUKS OF TUNIS
Tunisian Rugs, Blankets and Leather
No. 29 de la Guerra Studios

EL PASEO SERENADERS
PLAY
OLD TIME MELODIES AND SONGS
DURING DINNER
AT
EL PASEO

For Special Engagements—12½ W. Corrillo
Loring Andrews—E. C. Peters—Juan Cota

Miss Chloë Kubert
DANSEUSE
Lessons by appointment
101 de la Guerra Studios

Kentucky Hand-Quilted Comforters and Robes at the
Eleanor Beard Shop
Elizabeth B. Parsons, Director
Community Playhouse Patio
Pasadena Phone Terrace 5790-J
On July 15, at El Paseo Sport Shop, Santa Barbara

ART LEAGUE
OF
SANTA BARBARA
No. 15 E. de la Guerra Street
Free Exhibition of Paintings and Etchings
Open Daily 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.
Paintings and Etchings for sale

Hand Made Mexican Chairs
of Pine
With Rush Seats
Priced from $4.00 to $10.00
Are exceedingly well adapted to California
Also
Hand Woven Wool Druggets
from India
Priced from $3.00 to $75.00
Sizes 2 ft. x 3 ft. to 9 ft. x 18 ft.
Write for Booklets on Druggets or Chairs
ROBERT L. LEWIS
Studio 5 at 11 E. de la Guerra, Santa Barbara

OLD BOOKS PRINTS

TECOLOTE
BOOK SHOP
New and Standard Books
25 DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS
SANTA BARBARA

Community Arts Association
SANTA BARBARA
SCHOOL OF THE ARTS
FRANK MORLEY FLETCHER, DIRECTOR
GRAPHIC, DECORATIVE AND PLASTIC ARTS —
DRAMA. MUSIC. DANCING
Semester October-May. Summer School six weeks July-August
Address 916 Santa Barbara Street, Santa Barbara, Calif.

The Same Bluebird Limousine Taxi Service
which we are giving in Montecito is now
Available in Santa Barbara
Smart Motor Cars of all types with or without Drivers
The same familiar Phone Number
50-50
Our new low rate includes ONE TO FOUR PERSONS

Mt. LOWE

"Earth has no finer view to show."

Mt. LOWE TAVERN and Cottages
Enlarged and Improved

at the terminus of this World-Famous Trip afford a most delightful retreat for a long or short sojourn at reasonable rates

5 Trains Daily at convenient hours - from Main St. Station Los Angeles

$2.50 Round Trip Rate

For information and Reservations apply

Pacific Electric Ry.

Information Bureau Phone ME 1400-TR 3661

HOTEL GREEN

A well ordered Residential and Tourist Hotel of peculiar excellence. Open all year. Moderate rates. Apartments by the month.

The Green Tea Pot
A Convenient Restaurant
CHARLES B. HERVEY, Proprietor

La Solana

A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue.

Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day.

Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St. Pasadena

EL ENCINO
On Coast Highway, Montecito, Calif.
Luncheon Supper
Afternoon Tea
Dinner Served on Order
Limited Number of Over Night Guests Accommodated

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - Editor and Publisher
ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - Associate Editor

No. 79 JULY, 1926 Vol. VIII

CONTENTS

	PAGE
A PAINTING OF THE SHERMAN ROSE ADOBE BY PERCY GRAY (Courtesy of A. M. Robertson, San Francisco) Cover Design
MOUNTAINEERING, A MODERN SPORT.....Ernest G. Bishop	9
WITHIN GARDEN GATES.....Ervanna B. Bissell	10-11
RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS.....Louise Morgrage	12
DRAMA AT COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES.....	13
CITIZENS WE HONOR AND WHY.....	14
THE INCURABLE OPTIMIST.....Vera Sadieoff-Goldman	14
THE DECORATION AND FURNISHING OF THE STUDIO CLUB.....	15
CASTLES IN SPAIN AND THEIR COLORINGS.....	16
THE WHOLE COUNTRY LEARNS OF BETTER HOMES..Pearl Chase	17
THE SOUTHWEST MUSEUM.....James A. B. Scherer	18
THE ALLIED ARCHITECTS' ASSOCIATION.....M. U. S.	19
THE KNIGHT OF THE GOLDEN SONG (Poem)....Clarence Urmy	19
SPORTS FOR THE SUMMER MONTHS.....Ellen Leech	20
BULLETIN OF THE LOS ANGELES CHAPTER.....H. O. Sexsmith	22
THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES.....	23
COSTUME ON THE CONCERT STAGE.....J. K Seneca	24
SLEEP (A Poem).....Eleanor Hoffmann	25
THE MUSICAL CENTER OF SAN FRANCISCO—THE FAIRMONT....	25
THE COURSE IN APPRECIATION OF ARCHITECTURE.....	27
GREEK COSTUME.....Fairfax Proudfit Walkup	30
ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.....	32
THE BRANCH LIBRARY IN PASADENA.....G. A. Diehl	34

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.

Copyrighted, 1926, by M. Urmy Seares

Subscription price $2.50 per year, $1.25 one half year
MAIL ADDRESS: CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
Frank B. Guernsey, 307 Braley Bldg., Pasadena, will act as Advertising Counsel to space buyers in this magazine, and also offers a complete advertising service.
Advertisers desiring information concerning space or rates may call Fair Oaks 7034 for Publisher's Office
During Press Week, 24th to 30th, call TRinity 1501

The Los Angeles

Elizabeth Arden Salon

with

J. W. ROBINSON CO.

LOS ANGELES

UNDER the direct management of Miss Arden and her New York staff, and offering the same specialized treatments which have made Miss Arden's other salons internationally known.

Seventh Floor

Round the World Cruises
$1250.00 and up
Mediterranean Cruises
$600 and up

Agency for all tours and cruises. Here for your convenience. Let us arrange your reservations.

C. J. JONES STEAMSHIP AGENCY
372 East Colorado St., Pasadena
Phone Terrace 8026

Antiques
JOHN W. CONDIT

Dealer in rare old pieces selected from private homes. Specialist in the proper restoration of heirlooms.

199 S. Fair Oaks Ave., Pasadena
Telephone Terrace 0315-W

AUTHORS & AUTHORS' agents are invited to submit book-length material to

The Guild Santa Barbara

HISTORY BIOGRAPHY FICTION
TRAVEL SCIENCE ART

Acceptable material will be published on the usual royalty basis without expense to the author

129 EL PASEO DE LA GUERRA
SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

[Translations from the Spanish are particularly welcome]

Sun Kissed
Ocean Washed
Mountain Girded
Island Guarded

SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

Furnished houses for rent of all sizes and prices in Santa Barbara and Montecito. Properties of all kinds for sale. Literature and maps free. Live in "The Home Paradise of the World." Communicate with
H. G. CHASE, Santa Barbara, Calif.

Gifts for Her

Necklaces
Bracelets
Pearl Beads

and many other suitable objects dear to the feminine heart.

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Italian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

MOUNTAINEERING—A MODERN SPORT - - - By ERNEST G. BISHOP

IF you are one of those fortunate enough to have the leisure and desire to journey on foot over the winding ways of our mountainous Angeles Forest, you will hear from time to time thunder-like reverberations breaking sharply the utter silence, and echoes rolling back from canyon after canyon. Glacing in the direction of the disturbance, you observe columns of dust rising upward along the course of deep cuts gashed in the mountain sides. Another look reveals a cluster of tents standing where a short time ago a solid expanse of thorny chaparral held sway.

The engineer is conquering the wilderness, a region of sharp, upjutting points, sheer cliffs, and jagged rock outcrop that might be described by John Muir as "the most tumbled-up lot of mountains that he had ever gotten into." Across this territory automobile roads are being constructed. One of these highways, when completed, will extend from La Canada to Lancaster, over the mountains to the desert. This road is being built by the Edison Company in order to carry its power lines across the mountains. When the road is finished, it will be deeded to Los Angeles County and will be maintained as a part of the county highway system.

Another automobile road under construction is a continuation of the Mt. Wilson toll road, beginning at the end of the toll road on Mt. Wilson and following the general direction of the trails that wind leisurely over ridges and around canyons into the pine and cedar groves of the Angeles Forest hinterland.

Both of these engineering projects are of great significance. In the mountains of the Angeles Forest, close to our doors, is a wealth of scenic beauty that due to inaccessibility might just as well be in Canada or Mexico. To be sure, there are good foot trails that traverse the entire region; but hardy indeed is the wanderer who is able not only to negotiate the distance but also carry food and blankets for the journey through a region much of which is far from camps or resorts or even shelter of any kind. Pack and saddle animals, of course, make the undertaking less hazardous and fatiguing; but think of the motorist enjoying at his leisure the magnificent panoramas and sweeps of deep canyons, parklike groves of conifers, and wooded crests independent of pack or other burdens.

Modern life geared to higher and higher speeds requires relaxation and recreation to offset the increasing high tension. The new highways open up an all-year playground unsurpassed for scenic charm and beauty, where rest and quiet may be enjoyed. Why motor the long distance to the Sequoia groves or to the Yosemite? A few hours from home or office, and you will find yourself in a recreational wonderland of which few indeed are aware.

Those familiar with the anterior slopes of the Sierra Madre only, seemed obsessed with the idea that the entire mountain area is a region of dense and forbidden jungles of stunted brush growth. This conception is entirely erroneous, for beyond the first range there is plenty of evidence to the contrary. Consider, for instance, Barley Flats situated upon the high ridges of the second range, and soon to be traversed by the highway starting on Mt. Wilson. Flats is a misnomer to be sure, for little of the ground is level; but here there is no underbrush. Instead there are park-like groves of "sky-stretching" yellow pines, Coulter pines, silver firs, and incense cedars. Across the canyon of the upper Tejunga, beyond Barley Flats, begins the real conifer belt of the Angeles Forest, a place bearing the trite but appropriate name of Pine Flat. Here the yellow pine predominats, magnificent specimens of heroic proportions and vast spread. Here the ground is a series of plateaus at slightly different levels. Close to the log structure of the Pine Flat Ranger Station is a boxed-in spring of cool, refreshing water.

From Pine Flat the trail follows a canyon beautiful in its sylvan setting that trends northward. Eventually the trails leads out upon a flat shaped like a half moon. This is Chileo, noted for its fragrant groves of incense cedar and open meadows. Upon Chileo are two or three cabins of which but one is occupied any considerable portion of the year. This is the home of Lew Newcomb, humorously styled "the Mayor of Chileo.'

For thirty-five years Mr. Newcomb has spent part of each year at his camp on Chileo. Some years ago I met one of his old friends and asked him what Mr. Newcomb did for a living. "Lew doesn't work; he just lays up," was the rejoinder. Continued on page 34.

THE WOODED FLATS OF OUR MOUNTAIN PLAYGROUND—THE ANGELES FOREST. PHOTOGRAPH BY THE AUTHOR.

WITHIN GARDEN GATES.

ERVANNA BOWEN BISSELL

EDITOR, GARDEN PAGES

THE Pacific Coast is developing a type of garden peculiar to itself. Because of variations in climate and situation it is possible to grow plants not found in colder countries. Native flora mingled with flora from different parts of the world produce unusual effects. Each section has particular advantages whether north or south along the coast.

Seattle is richly endowed. Although situated thirteen parallels above Santa Barbara, many of the same shrubs grow in both places. Rain is abundant and snow a rarity. The Japan current tempers the climate until it resembles England far more than lower Newfoundland in the same latitude.

Sunnycrest, the James D. Hoge house in the Highlands designed by Mr. Carl F. Gould, is a striking example of old world feeling. With its Gothic gables it might be on the hills above Plymouth harbor or on the coast of Cornwall. But there, no white-capped mountains rise across the water, or islands dot the bay.

W. A. GREEN RESIDENCE. RISLEY, ARCHITECT

CARL F. GOULD, ARCHITECT. SUNNYCREST, THE HOME OF JAMES D. HOGE, ON THE BLUFF OVERLOOKING PUGET SOUND

The formal garden opening from the library brings thoughts of Greece although the northern firs are growing outside the walls. It is this sense of strong contrast which brightens the sometimes jaded eye of the critical gardener.

Surely this summer home of Mrs. Frank H. Osgood must be in New England. It seems the twin of the old Lee house in Brookline, without the elms. But for the Madrona trees which shade the box borders, it is an old time garden. You can, almost, smell the clove-pinks that grandmother grew. There is perfume, too, in the Madrona's botanical name bringing back the beloved Mayflower, Arbutus (wrongly called.) This Arbutus tree adds Menziesii to distinguish it from others of the Heath family.

Behind the door's brass knocker are rooms filled with old mahogany and furnishings which create a perfect New England setting. It is a Colonial house magically moved west by the art of Mr. Clipstom Sturgis, its architect.

It is only when one turns to look across the beds of bulbs and pansies that New England fades and Mount Rainier lifts its white crown. To the west stretches Puget Sound with the snow-capped Olympic range beyond.

Mrs. Trafford-Huteson's Hilltop Lodge has a garden where form is almost obliterated by bloom; a riot of lovely bloom the year round. The owner specializes in annuals and sheets of forget-me-nots grow as if the blue sky had dropped down between the tall trees.

A COLONIAL HOUSE MAGICALLY MOVED WEST BY THE ART OF MR. CLIPSTON STURGIS, ARCH.

Northcliffe is the Highland home of Mrs. C D. Stimson. There is a perfection in the garden which again emphasizes the English climate. The turf grows thick and green, the shrubs are rare and beautiful Azalias bloom in profusion. And the native firs preserve always the look of wooded land on some great estate.

Mrs. Robert P.

THE GARDEN AT HILLTOP LODGE
HOME OF MRS. TRAFFORD-HUTESON, WHERE FORM IS ALMOST OBLITERATED BY BLOOM

CARL F. GOULD, ARCHITECT. A ROCK-GARDEN IN THE CITY'S MIDST
GARDEN OF MRS. ROBERT P. GREER, SEATTLE

Greer's garden adjoining her city home has preserved within the boundaries of a town lot the charm of half-tamed nature. The use of native stone and the planting among it; the dripping water caught in a rock-bound pool; the stepping-stones and tiny bridge illustrate the Seattle gardener's possibilities.

This Spring when M. Henri Correvon, the great Swiss naturalist, spent a day in Santa Barbara, he enchanted his audience with his pictures of dry-wall gardening. How we sighed for the climate, the moisture, to help us grow plants to cover our more than abundant boulders, with such drenching bloom. Thanks to a gracious hostess, it was my good fortune to sit beside M. Correvon at dinner. How he talked about Seattle! About her wonderful opportunities to make her city a vast rock-garden.

THE TERRACE AT NORTHCLIFFE
THE HIGHLAND HOME OF MRS. C. D. STIMSON, SEATTLE

Given dry walls as a necessity to hold the banks; given stone in abundance, moisture too, what more is necessary but work and seed? And that is earily found in home nurseries, or from the Buchart gardens or Carl Purdy's in Ukiah.

The Tenth Commandment deals with covetousness It forbids the coveting of people and possessions. I can't remember, though of anything said about coveting your neighbor's opportunities. Even at the risk of crumbling the edges of the tables of stone I do covet, as a gardener, Seattle's chance to make her public walks and her private grounds one unique rock garden.

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

THE SACRED TREE,
by LADY MURASAKI,
Translation by ARTHUR WALEY,
HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY.

Here is Prince Genji again, whom so many readers followed with amazement, while he trailed with languid elegance, through his numerous and highly amorous affairs, in a former volume, and once more we note the striking contrast between the very rarefied aesthetic atmosphere of the court of Japan, in the year 1000, and the crude conditions in Europe at the same period. This youthful and voluptuous sybarite now appears to be a little more restrained, poises perhaps on his butterfly wings to drink nectar from fewer flowers, but still finds enough of them to keep him very busy. Reading these books turns one into an animated question mark. We know exactly what the Lady Murasaki thought about Genji. She thought he was just too exquisitely killing for words, and naturally, she made the court appear to agree with her opinion. But what did it really think one would like to know. Evidently our suave and fickle gallant had to conduct his affairs somewhat secretly, and the western mind gets the giggles, even though appreciative of the poetic quality of the tale, when Murasaki naively relates with the most apparent sympathy, how disturbed Genji was when his whims happened to be interfered with; and how he thought "if I only had some convenient building, where I could house these friends of mine, and be able to keep an eye, not only on them, but on any babies that might chance to get born, how much simpler life would be." Is it possible that Genji was a figment only of the imagination? Mr. Waley, in his brief preface, tells us that it is all one long novel, but he does not tell half we want most grievously to know.

SUMMER FICTION,

Again we are constrained to speak of fiction, the kind to be read in summertime with no risk of brain fag. From E. P. Dutton, comes "If Today Have No Tomorrow," by Olive Gilbreath. This is a tale of a certain set in the Russian aristocracy during the revolution of 1917, a theme thus far avoided by all kinds of writers. "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread," is one thing we might say of Miss Gilbreath's treatment of a subject, so full of events, each one stupendously dramatic. But anyway she has made a brave attempt.

"The Nest," by Anne Douglas Sedgwick, Houghton Mifflin is a collection of short stories most competently done in the manner of Henry James, although in no sense an imitation. "Wild Heart," by Isabelle Sandy has been translated from the French acceptably by Charles Miner Thomson. It is a simple and poignant tale of the peasants who live on the borderland between Spain and France. "O Genteel Lady," by Esther Forbes, is a first novel by a very young woman, we are told. The heroine who lived and managed her diverting affairs in the fifties, in the vicinity of Boston, and incidentally on a trip to Europe, seems very 1926 in viewpoint. Miss Forbes wrote this we know with a twinkle in her eye. In "Flapper Anne," Corra Harris has given her conception of a modern girl, accompanied by plenty of moralizing on the state of flapperism in general. We doubt if it presents the flapper's viewpoint, but there will be no misconception about what Mrs. Harris thinks.

From D. Appleton and Company comes "The Spirit of Menlo," by Earl Reed Silvers, a story for rather young boys, about a youth terribly afflicted with an inferiority complex. Probably this is the way to cure it. Frederick A. Stokes Company, send "Barbara of Telegraph Hill," by Stella G. S. Perry, a girls' story with the scenes laid in San Francisco, full of the Pollyanna spirit which reigns supreme on all its pages.

THE WORLD'S CLASSICS,
THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS.

This house is issuing these volumes in a uniform pocket size, in fairly good type, on thin opaque paper. Among the latest, are Stevenson's "Kidnapped," and "Catriona," combined, and "Treasure Island." "Catriona" has been sometimes called "David Balfour." Another volume is Dickens' "Old Curiosity Shop," one of his most popular tales. There is also "The

COLIN CAMPBELL CLEMENTS, AUTHOR OF "PLAYS FOR PAGANS."

Letters of Samuel Johnson," a selection, which has an instructive introduction. "Humphry Clinker," by Tobias Smollett, although written in 1770 is still vastly readable, and valuable to those seeking information about the mode of life in England at that time.

PLAYS FOR PAGANS,
by COLIN CAMPBELL CLEMENTS,
D. APPLETON AND COMPANY.

SEA PLAYS,
Edited by COLIN CAMPBELL CLEMENTS,
SMALL MAYNARD COMPANY.

"Plays for Pagans," contains five short plays, of which the first, entitled "The Haiduc," is by far the most ambitious. Its scenes are laid in the Carpathian Mountains, among the peasantry, and the theme concerns the mystical character of the traditional hero of Roumania. Mr. Clements spent three years traveling in this region, after the war, therefore he can be trusted to know the atmosphere, but he has not conveyed it to us in his play, with any notable significance. It is interesting but not forceful. On the whole Mr. Clements does not introduce the mystical element into his plays, with any conspicuous degree of success. In "Yesterday," and "Spring," which are exquisite little gems of playlets, he writes piquant, sprightly charming dialogue, very easy, natural and delightful. This same statement applies also to the dialogue in "Four Who Were Blind," until the introduction of the mystic character. His realism is most convincing, but his mystical element seems metallic, and handled in a rather mechanical fashion.

The volume of "Sea Plays," contains short plays, dealing with some phase of marine life, selected by Mr. Clements, and prefaced by him with brevity, but a most engaging wh sicality. Some of these plays are impressive, but one at least in decidedly unintelligible to those not adept at unraveling symbolistic riddles.

THE MIND OF JOHN KEATS,
by CLARENCE DEWITT THORPE,
THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS.

BETWEEN THE OLD WORLD AND THE NEW,
by M. P. WILLCOCKS,
FREDERICK A. STOKES COMPANY.

That phenomenon, John Keats, whose body died at twenty-five, but whose spirit will never die, is ranking now with Shakespeare in universal appreciation. "The Mind of John Keats,' is the result of ten years spent in studying the evidences of Keats' thought life, as it is disclosed in his poems. It is surely an important book for the students of Keats, of whom probably there is a surprising number, for no one who reads those immortal odes to a nightingale, and a Grecian Urn, can remain indifferent to this magnificent genius. A genius, "which, 'like Shakespeare, who could do men's mind with ease' had the capacity to lose himself completely in detached contemplative, penetrative absorption in the world and men; this was the secret of his achievement." A lifetime of comprehension not only of Keats but of the unfathomed depths of life underlies the writing of this sentence. Keats' poetry read in connection with this volume, will repay the student manyfold.

"Between the Old World and the New," contains a series of literary studies of the masterminds of modern times, written with the idea of tracing a line of evolutionary thought through the course of this period in our literature. Under "Three Prophets of the Will," are essays on Goethe, Balzac and Shelley. Carlyle, Eliot, Thackeray, Trollope, Dickens, and Tennyson represent "The Victorian Mind," while "those who escaped," are the Brontes, Browning and Meredith. "The Wreckers," are Ibsen, Tolstoi, Turgenev, Tchehov, and France, while listed and analysed as "builders" are, Butler, Dostoevsky, Whitman, Carpenter, and Thomas Hardy. The material in the book is stupendous, ideas most worthy, but the presentation lacks an imaginative quality that would make it far more readable.

GARDEN MAKING,
by ELSA REHMANN,
HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY.

In the springtime, garden books of any kind prove ever welcome, but this volume is valuable at any time and in any place, because it deals with the artistic phase of constructing gardens. Its author is a successful landscape gardener in the east. Of course garden lovers like to express their own artistic individuality in their landscaping, but from this volume, many will draw suggestions, which may give them ideas in addition to their own. The helpful substance of the book is much enhanced by the large number of fine illustrations, of gardens, constructed by Miss Rehmann herself and other landscape artists.

BLACK SUNLIGHT,
by EARL ROSSMAN,
THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS.

This adventurer has described herein in a capably journalistic fashion, his experiences, while spending a winter at an Eskimo settlement north of Nome, for the purpose of taking moving pictures. It gives a good idea of how those strange people live and think. In a preface, Stefanson, seems to object to any grumbling about conditions in those frozen wastes, but that of course is decidedly what makes the account so interesting. A traveling Pollyanna is something to avoid in books at least.

TEXT BOOKS.

From the Macmillan Company, comes "The Speech Arts," a textbook of oral English, by Alice Evalyn Craig, teacher in the Polytechnic High School of Los Angeles. Also there comes from Harr Wagner Company, "A Study Guide for Problems in American History," by Lena A. Ely, and Edith King, teachers in the Central Junior High School, and Martin Stormzand of the University of Southern California.

PEARL,
by SISTER MADELEVA,
D. APPLETON AND COMPANY.

This volume contains a discussion and interpretation of "Pearl," a poem composed in the Midland dialect, about 1370, and published first by Richard Morris, in 1864.

FORTUNE'S YELLOW,
by EVELYN SCHUYLER SCHAEFFER, CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS....

This is a lively tale with all the "fixings," and the heroine is sixty-eight. To be sure there is a youthful assistant heroine, but she really is not necessary, for the older lady is perfectly capable of carrying the load alone. The human failings delineated in this book of fiction, may lack subtlety in their treatment, but they are perfectly true to type. The change of attitude, brought on by sudden wealth is either a melancholy, or a diverting spectacle, depending on how one views it.

THE DRAMA AT COLLEGE AND UNIVERSITY

University of Southern California included in the Commencement Exercises, as in the past, a Shakespearean drama, the choice being "The Tempest," including spectacular ocean and storm scenes. Delightful characterizations of Ariel, Caliban, the Nymphs and Spirits were given.

The Spring program of the second annual Apolliad included the fantasy, "Princess in a Tower," with Man-in-the-Moon, Harlequin and Columbine playing leading parts.

Pomona College, Claremont, sponsors an annual Shakespeare play in the Cambridge-Oxford method, eliminating stage settings and effects almost entirely, an occasional suggestive chair, table or bench is supplied. The reproduction shows Falstaff and Dame Quigley.

University of California, both at Berkeley and Los Angeles present each year a play from one of the great Greek dramatists. This year at Los Angeles the play chosen was Euripides' "Alcestis," and proved an interesting and inspiring production, under the direction of Miss Evalyn Thomas. The role of Alcestis was assigned to Leslyn MeDonald while Admetus was played by Sanford Wheeler.

INSTITUTIONS AND CITIZENS WE HONOR

THE beautiful Huntington library, built by Myron Hunt for Mr. Henry E. Huntington to house the Huntington collection of books, is not a public library in the ordinary sense. It is, to be sure, near Pasadena in San Marino, but is not a part of this city. For the use of research students its books may be studied by obtaining permission from the Librarian over the telephone. The famous "Blue Boy" and others of Mr. Huntington's splendid collection of old masters are not in the library, but belong on the walls of Mr. Huntington's home, situated in the same estate at San Marino, but not a part of the Library.

That great nerve system of any city—the telephone, is, indeed, the main means of entre to any of Pasadena's attractions. One may wander about until fatigued beyond expression and find nothing but beautiful residences on beautiful streets and a few fine buildings rising in the center of town. But take the telephone book in hand. Call up the public offices, the Chamber of Commerce, the Public Library, the banks or the hotels and that fine hospitality developed by long years of tourist

THE WEST WING OF THE PASADENA HOSPITAL. ARCHITECTS, MYRON HUNT AND H. C. CHAMBERS

Henry H. Sherk, M. D., beloved physician and surgeon of Pasadena, whose death in June left the whole city desolate.

CITIZENS WE HONOR AND WHY

service will be found at the disposal of any guest or visitor.

The California Institute of Technology with Arthur Fleming, President of the Board of Trustees and Dr. Millikan at the head of its Faculty, Dr. Arthur Noyes, head of its Chemistry Department, ranks with M. I. T. in many ways, although its distance from the environment of Boston has still to be made good by Pasadena in exchange for all the interesting lecturers, great poets and literati which the Institute brings to California and shares with the fortunate communities which lie within the sphere of its sane and wholesome influence.

Pasadena has, however, made good in the matter of proper care of its citizens in sickness. The great number who come to Southern California for the benefit of its climate and outdoor life must be reckoned with when a municipality plans its public and semi-public buildings. The Pasadena Hospital is not a municipal department, but it correlates its work with the health department and the emergency service of the city. As a non-profit institution established by devoted citizens and maintained by fees and the contributions of grateful patients and their families, this modern, up-to-date hospital is the crown of a system of clinics and dispensary that Pasadena is more genuinely proud.

Upper right: Charles D. Lockwood, M. D., organized the Ambulance Corps in Pasadena and serves the city as attending physician and surgeon at the hospitals.

Photographs and information by courtesy of the Pasadena Star-News

Center: John Dunlop, M. D., called, as a skilled orthopedic surgeon, to serve in the British Army in Oxford, London, Edinburgh, Liverpool and Aberdeen, under Sir Robert Jones, in 1917, he returned to the United States, April, 1919, to live and serve in Pasadena, California.

of than any other semi-civic asset this city has. Here the greatest physicians of the country come as visiting consultants; and here the experts of our own rich field of medicine serve their home town in quiet faithfulness that leaves no time for personal aggrandizement or public display. The hospital has now enlarged its scope and usefulness to the sick and injured by an efficient service department for helping those who have not the means to enter a hospital. All of the best physicians and surgeons are thus able to give of their skill and knowledge in consultation to those who have hitherto despaired of first-class aid. There is no better way by which the citizens and winter visitors in Pasadena can show their appreciation of the tireless work of our physicians and surgeons, than by definitely and generously giving to the fund which supports this vital service which everyone may need at any time.

What patriotic work can anyone do to equal the service of the skilled surgeon? How fortunate Pasadena was, for example, in the circumstance which brought to this city and its hospital such a mender of broken bodies as Dr. Dunlop, who rendered on New Year's Day, 1926, and for months afterward, such a service to her citizens as will never be forgotten and which has made his name a household word. Support of a hospital and use of first-class clinics are the two intelligent ways in which the educated laity of any city may do its part toward having a healthy home town.

THE INCURABLE OPTIMIST

By VERA SADICOFF-GOLDMAN, M. D.

IT is Sunday, a day of rest and peace. My family, sensing my need of a little silence, have gone about their various and varied affairs and left me at my desk. Even Tom, the cat, is sunning himself outside my window. The ticking clock is the only sound heard. All this quiet after a hectic week,—the tremendously complex week of a woman carrying on, as an individual in a profession,—as a wife and mother. Has it occurred to you that the life of the modern woman is comparable to a Kirmanshah rug, so great is the intricacy and complexity of design, so rich and varied its coloring?

Yesterday, after a long day, I climbed the stairs to "Hillside House." Laboring up just ahead of me was Giacomo, the composer. We finished the climb together and entered. The afternoon sun was casting a luminous glow over the gracious charm of my room. Every object was touched and given life. The blues and greens, the henna and violet of draperies and ornaments seemed fused in a crucible of gold. It was the hour I adore in the room I love best. And Giacomo, with the soul of an artist, felt the beauty and peace of it all. Slowly he relaxed on a sofa, in the west window, lighting a big cigar. I sank down opposite him and heaved a sigh of satisfaction and relief.

"It is a good world to be in," I said, with that total lack of originality characteristic of the pre-dinner hour. He looked at me speculatively and appraisingly and then, with his usual unexpectedness he took me to task.

"Your cheerfulness is as impossible and inartistic as would be the introduction of a china cat on a silly pillow into this room," he said. I took exception to the analogy. "Is it not rather like the placing of a fragrant mass of peonies and cornflowers, gladiolas and roses at that window," I ventured mildly. He disregarded me.

"All this comes from living in California," he continued, unperturbed. "The climate is too mild, too soothing. The result is that even you have been softened by it. You have become the incurable optimist."

I was speechless. For the first time in my experience I was forced into a defence of the hopeful attitude. In place of the usual "Cheer up, things are not so bad as they seem," I was forced to respond to, "Why are you so beastly cheerful?"

(Continued on Page 26)

THE STUDIO GIRLS CLUB HOUSE---HOLLYWOOD

TIERNEY AND COMPANY, DECORATORS AND FURNISHERS JULIA MORGAN, ARCHITECT

SUNSHINE and soft, clear coloring greet the visitor to the Studio Club in Hollywood. The strength of concrete construction is there also; and the great rooms, built round a court, speak of service and home life for the hundreds who will use them. But by the wizardry of his versatile art, the decorator has so touched the gray coat is set here and there; and although little color seems to be used, it greets one where it is needed.

Cheerful figured hangings balance the uniformly figureless carpets and graceful chairs dot the room—to be set back easily for dancing.

The walls show little room for pictures

HOLLYWOOD STUDIO CLUB COMMITTEE OF THE NATIONAL BOARD OF THE Y. W. C. A.

Mrs. Arthur S. Heineman, Chairman; Mrs. Cecil B. de Mille, Building Chairman; Mrs. Willsie Martin, Secretary; Miss Cora L. Tatham, Building Secretary; Mrs. John S. Sanders, Treasurer. Mrs. Ella King Adams, Mrs. W. F. Callander, Mrs. Samuel Goldwyn, Mrs. Jesse Lasky, Miss Mary Pickford.

Advisory Committee: Mr. George G. Greenwood, Mr. J. B. Irsfield, Mr. Chas. H. Christie. Club Director: Marjorie Williams

THE RECEPTION ROOM AND AUDITORIUM OF THE STUDIO CLUB, OF HOLLYWOOD, CALIF. TIERNEY AND COMPANY, DECORATORS of natural concrete forming the bare walls that cheerful color dominates without surfeiting; and sunshine fills the air of the whole interior.

In the halls and entrance lobby Mr. Tierney has gained a glorious effect of sunlight even on a gray day by golden color in curtains and hangings. Answering this glow of golden light he has set at intervals the old blue of shadows in settle and painted chairs.

The witchery of corresponding colors are best understood by such an artist who has delved deep into their philosophy and their effect on the people who are to live under their benign influence. Sorrow and sadness, inevitable in human life, seem to flee away when the doors of this hospitable home are opened and the fortunate occupants are enfolded in its great wings. Hearty is the welcome of the commodious reception hall where parties are given or groups receive their friends.

This handsome room is uncluttered and restful. The warm grey of the walls is broken, and given depth by its undulating surface. The ceiling lights are not hidden, but form an adornment of flat ornament and frosted glass.

Its unusual arches are left unadorned and strengthful, excepting for long lines of red and robin's egg blue of the intalios. A subtle, old-rose pink or the youthful red of an old hunting and only the very best should be hung upon them; for tastes differ in so large a family and what one likes may be unhappy for another. Reading lamps and mirrors, and Della Robbia plaques are in their proper places and their beauty is sufficient for the most exacting.

Through the corridors to the library and diningrooms one may wander still made happy by this old Venetian red that decorates the walls in subtle places. Painted furniture in the writing alcoves, reed chairs of soft blue, or a handsome Florentine frame on a mirror answer the longing for pure beauty that lies dormant in every girl.

A CORNER IN THE STUDIO CLUB, 1215 LODI PLACE AND LEXINGTON AVENUE, HOLLYWOOD TIERNEY & COMPANY, FURNISHERS AND DECORATORS

The ceilings are exceedingly lovely. In the library the impress of the forms of wood which held the impressionable concrete are left and no attempt is made to disguise it but color is added discretely and with the skill which marks the work of Tierney and Company.

Working with the architect as he did in the more elaborate decoration of the Woman's Athletic Club by Allison and Allison, Mr. Tierney has proved that decoration goes deeper than mere surface and that when the decorator is allowed to make the furnishings and pieces which he uses, he can create interiors that are beautiful pictures in themselves.

This club center and residence for girls and women of the motion picture industry was opened in May of this year. Through the sale of the property formerly occupied a fund for the new building was obtained. The new situation, just north of Santa Monica Boulevard seems especially fortunate and Miss Julia Morgan, California's Beaux Arts Architect has here built one of her most beautiful buildings for woman's use.

IN THE LIBRARY THE SAME CHEERFUL, SUNNY SCHEME OF COLOR IS REPEATED WITH VARIATIONS

THE HOUSE AMONG THE LIVE OAKS. HOME OF MR. AND MRS. E. B. WHEELER, ALTADENA. DESIGNED BY J. WILMER HERSHEY, PASADENA

CASTLES IN SPAIN AND THEIR SUBTLE COLOR

BELIEVE as one may with the architects of the present, who say we have gone too far with precedent, there is still danger that we may go too far in the other direction. Young men and women who are growing up in California away from all that the race has stored up in knowledge of design which pleases the cultivated taste are in danger of merely repeating the progress of other ages because it is unknown to them. One must know all that has been done before he can be sure he is original.

The obligation of those who "know how" is first, to formulate the general laws of beauty in architecture, and then to apply those laws to local materials and local conditions. A young architect, trained in all the Beaux Arts learning of the profession both in America and in Europe, comes to California with an open mind and unencumbered conscience. He studies conditions with a fresh eye. He seeks out the indigenous buildings at Monterey and scattered around in other places along El Camino Real. Then he builds a Californian house for his clients who are Californians and intend to spend their lives in California. This house will be beautiful, whether large or small, because its lines and mass and fenestration are in good taste and good proportion and not because it copies the past in style or taste of Mediterranean countries.

Mr. Garvin Hodson, the Beaux Arts man referred to, has built such a Californian house in Pasadena. All who are born and brought up in California recognize it as good and beautiful, though they may not know one "style" from another.

Another man from the Atlantic Coast, Mr. J. Wilmer Hershey, trained in the storied lore of architecture at Carnegie Institute of Technology and gifted beyond the ordinary in powers of discrimination in color and form, has given to Santa Barbara through his months of critical designing for contractors and builders applying to the Board of Review for permission to build, a standard of good taste in commercial structures that will last while that city continues to build.

These fundamentals of good taste in structure are now being applied by Mr. Hershey to the town of San Clemente where he is building the administration's buildings and is consultant for the town as a whole.

This new growth of Californian design is the outcome of our own study of Spanish and Italian architecture, but it is not plagiarism.

What architects are expected to do for a new country is just that: to supply good proportion, good massing, good placing of openings, good lines to the roof—anything else is mere building, which while necessary to be mastered, is not the whole of art and architecture.

The Venetian Room at Cannell and Chaffin's, Los Angeles

The Color in this room is an offering of consummate taste and beauty

Fine lines in the art of olden times give inspiration for home makers who are building Italian and native or Spanish houses

A SECRETARY OF COMMERCE TAKES A HAND AT "HOMES"

Part of an introduction to a Housing Pamphlet, written by Herbert Hoover, President, Better Homes in America.

MAINTAINING a high percentage of individual home-owners is one of the searching tests that now challenge the people of the United States. The present large proportion of families that own their own homes is both the foundation of a sound economic and social system and a guarantee that our society will continue to develop rationally as changing conditions demand.

A family that owns its home takes a pride in it, maintains it better, gets more pleasure out of it, and has a more wholesome, healthful, and happy atmosphere in which to bring up children. The home-owner has a constructive aim in life. He works harder outside his home; he spends his leisure more profitably; and he and his family live a finer life and enjoy more of the comforts and cultivating influences of our modern civilization. A husband and wife who own their home are more apt to save. They have an interest in the advancement of a social system that permits the individual to store up the fruits of his labor. As direct taxpayers they take a more active part in local government. Above all, the love of home is one of the finest instincts and the greatest of inspirations of our people.

Today, in the period of post-war recovery, when our National productivity is increasing, we have the opportunity to make definite progress in the right direction. Moreover, the development of the automobile has given a great impulse to suburban life and an increasing possibility of home ownership. Happily, a large section of the people is awake to the problem, and an increasing number of business groups have publicly acknowledged their responsibility and interest in it. They realize that unnecessary barriers that may encompass a man determined to own his home are hindrances to good community spirit and to good business. They see that taking a neighborly interest in developing sound financing and other machinery for the use of home-seekers, and insisting on the observance of honest, straightforward methods by those who deal with home-seekers is not paternalism but good business and good citizenship. It is the "square deal"—and it is not only right but essential that the cards should not be stacked against the home-seeker.

A HOUSE IN PASADENA DESIGNED BY J. WILMER HERSHEY. ONE WHO HAS INSTINCTIVELY THE ARCHITECTURAL GIFT OF DESIGN IS NOT BOUND BY ANY ONE STYLE OF ARCHITECTURE

SET AMONG INDIGEOUS TREES THIS HOUSE IS TRULY CALIFORNIAN BECAUSE IT IS THE RESULT OF THOROUGH STUDY OF THE SITE COUPLED WITH THOROUGH KNOWLEDGE OF BUILDING AND A NATIVE TALENT FOR DESIGN. BUILT BY J. WILMER HERSHEY, CONSULTANT IN DESIGN FOR ARCHITECTURAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE AT SANTA BARBARA AND MR. OLE HANSEN AT THE NEW SPANISH TOWN OF SAN CLEMENTE, CAL.

SANTA BARBARA BETTER HOMES DEMONSTRATION HOUSE NO. 1

By PEARL CHASE

AN excellent example of the successful use of Spanish style in the small home. It is called "La Recuerda," in remembrance. It is the eighth that its owners have built for a home and investment. The plan was drawn in detail by the wife. It was built under the husband's direction. It has real charm, though unpretentious and simple. The exterior walls are adobe laid on a continuous footing, reinforced with steel. Interior partitions are of lath and plaster, to save floor space. The floor plan is compact, the room arrangement good and economical. The small patio court is an attractive feature. Built-in bookshelves on either side of the fireplace and triangular corner cupboards in the dining room would be a useful addition. The position of the doors in the screen porch should be arranged and it should be made larger for convenient use as a home laundry.

This little home attracted much attention, for very many were interested in the problem of furnishing the small Spanish type house on a limited budget. The total cost of the furniture and furnishings was $1163.25. The lot was valued at $1900 and the house and improvements of the grounds cost an additional $5547.25. As the house was exhibited during Better Homes Week, it represented an investment of $8600. The itemized cost of the house and the furnishings of this and other demonstration houses was printed in the Santa Barbara Guide Book for Better Homes Week and proved of interest and value to the many thousands who visited them.

The living room has comfortable and convenient furniture; an upright piano is in one corner. The open beamed ceiling adds character to the room.

The unusual charm of the little dining room lies in its simplicity and the gaiety of its furnishings. The India Drugget rug is linen color with a dark green border. The furniture is a soft green, complemented by the terra cotta curtains, broad-edged in black. The chairs, peasant china and green favrill glass, came originally from Mexico. Under one of the two side windows there is a convenient serving table.

(Continued on Page 29)

THIS IS THE SITTING ROOM OF THE PRIZE HOUSE IN SANTA BARBARA'S 1925 CAMPAIGN. FOR ILLUSTRATIONS OF THIS YEAR'S SEE PAGE 29

SOUTHLAND

The Southwest Museum As An Educational Institution

THE modern American museum is first of all an educational institution. It supplements our general educational system at two points: sharing honors with the university in increasing knowledge through scientific research, and assisting "the grades" by bringing large numbers of pupils into direct contact with typical and inspiring examples of nature or art, scientifically exhibited and sympathetically interpreted.

By maintaining contact with youth the museum itself is rejuvenated and kept throbbingly alive as if by a constant transfusion of young blood. The astonishing vitality of one of the greatest of American museums is largely due to the fact that six million school children pass through its portals every year—receiving direct instruction otherwise unobtainable—while still other millions of both youths and adults use an extensive system of loan exhibits, as well as an immense motion-picture service, genuinely educational.

Thus a museum and its clientele, the public, may and should react on each other to mutual advantage. Henry Fairfield Osborn goes so far as to characterize the instruction imparted by the American Museum of Natural History, over which he presides, as "an antitoxin for most of the educational poisons of the day." Even the cave boy, he contends, had advantages which our boys have ceased to enjoy.

He was surrounded on all sides by vibrant nature, full of inspiring and wonderful phenomena which filled him with reverence and awe. His father and mother, at least in the Cro-Magnon period, carefully instructed him, not only in flint-making, but in the rudiments of art. Even in the far more remote eolithic times, the stern master which we now designate the "Struggle for Existence" was ever by the side of the boy and girl—compulsory education took this primeval form. But in our large modern cities (Professor Osborn maintains), in the press, and in the minds of teachers who depend upon the press, civilization has reared a Frankenstein which shuts out the direct vision in inspiration of nature and banishes the struggle for existence. Thus the two masters of the eolithic boy and the cave boy have quietly vanished. The great function of the American museum is to bring back to life these two masters; to restore the vision and inspiration of nature (and of equally inspiring primitive art) as well as the compelling force of the struggle for existence. On restoration of the privileges enjoyed by the cave boy and on coming for the first time into direct vision of the wonders and beauties of the world, not only boys and girls, but men and women, young and old, feel a thrill which they may never have experienced before. They discover in themselves latent faculties of which they had not the least knowledge, latent predispositions and tastes which gradually come to the surface of consciousness, new ambitions to enter the struggle for existence in science, in literature or in art. This is not guesswork. It is a record of actual experiences, not only of boys and girls but of adults. Artists and designers (for example) affirm that all the wonders of classic art and design have not aroused them as have well-arranged exhibits of the works of prehistoric man and of the primitive races.

The unique opportunities of the Southwest Museum as an educational institution are suggested not only by its very name and the purpose to which it was originally dedicated, but, above all, by its fortunate geographical site. It is on the fringe of the great area wherein one of the two original cultures of man sprang up. Much the earlier of these two primeval civilizations sprang up in Egypt or Babylonia, near the land-bridge that connects Africa and Eurasia, that land-bridge of which a narrow span is the Isthmus of Suez; and spread thence both eastward and westward The only other independent human culture, according to such eminent scholars as James Henry Breasted, was developed several thousand years later, on or near the land-bridge connecting the Americas, of which a span is the Isthmus of Panama; and spread thence both southward and northward. We modern Americans of course derive our civilization from earlier sources, that is, from Egypt and Babylonia and Crete and Greece and Rome, and finally across the Atlantic. But the aboriginal Americans, who came here from the Far East before the light from the Near East had as yet reached their home land, evolved a civilization of their own, whose achievements are now exciting afresh the admiration and amusement of the world as more and more of its relics come to light in "the Egypt of America," Yucatan.

From this second civilization source the Mayan culture spread not only southward, to be developed by Aztecs and Incas, but northward as well; growing fainter with distance, it is true, but never breaking a well-established connection. This point is, "the Southwest" is related to a vast Pacific area extending from California to Chile, and the Southwest Museum was founded to explore and study any part of that whole vast region, and thereby to enrich the store of our knowledge of man.

As the Southwest Museum now returns to its original purpose, it concentrates its attention on the following educational programme:

Subject: The Science of Man, especially as revealed in his art.

Field: The Southwest and its related areas.

Methods: Scientific research, especially by means of expeditions under the most competent leadership; and popular exhibitions not only scientifically arranged, but sympathetically interpreted to both children and adults.

Means: Money—a great deal more than we have.

Proceeding back up the line of this programme of concentration, it may well be believed that the necessary means will be forthcoming when it seems to be justified by its end. If we seek to do one good thing thoroughly, better than it is done anywhere else, and if we make it perfectly plain that we are placing only masters in charge of our research, then there is reason to think that the big brains and great hearts that have already done so much for the Southwest will do at least one thing more. They will help the Southwest to fulfill the wisest of all the precepts of the Greeks—"Know thyself"—by unlocking to its children its underground treasure-house of knowledge with the master-key of modern anthropology, which is nothing less than the Science of Man.

JAMES A. B. SCHERER.

The Allied Architect's Association

OVER thirty years ago Los Angeles was being settled by pioneers from the Western Reserve, which in turn had been settled by colonial families from Connecticut and other New England states. Pasadena was then the "Indiana Colony." Its public library had been built by citizens, who declined the assistance Mr. Carnegie was then offering. They built it themselves and it was the center of their intellectual activities.

Los Angeles, too, had its library building. The present City Hall was built for that purpose. Above the average in looks, it stood among two-story office buildings and dominated the commercial center of the city in its early years.

Then came the speculators and exploiters of California's native beauties. They "boosted" everything; they brought millions of people to the coast as "tourists"; they built a town of skyscrapers, hit or miss, on top of the handsome little city. The library was soon submerged, and with it went the intellectual life of the city. The library building was used for politicians who ran the government. Contractors and builders swarmed around it. Although we were all the time knowingly building a great metropolis for posterity, we had no intelligent plan; and the word "architect" was practically unknown to us.

Eight years ago, when this journal—conceived in war time and pledged even then to architecture—began its work of education, the architect's name was never mentioned in the daily newspapers. Only the rich owner, the advertising real estate dealer who sold the property, or the contractor, who also advertised, were featured in the story of the great growth of Los Angeles. Size, not good looks or intelligent coordination, was our continual boast—to the amusement and gaiety of nations.

OPINION

In 1922 California Southland was publicly thanked by the Executive Committee of the Southern California Chapter of the American Institute of Architects, through its President, for having set a "high standard of architecture" before the public.

Still Los Angeles as a city had no architect, her civic buildings were to be knocked down to the lowest bidder.

The founding of the Allied Architects Association has entirely changed this stupid and unpatriotic condition in Los Angeles. The city now has this great body of experts working as business men to give their "home town" the finest architecture of the century in civic buildings—for practically all of the great municipal buildings of greater Los Angeles are yet unbuilt. Never again in this city can good building and good architecture be ignored. "A city set on a hill cannot be hid." The fight for righteousness and good design has been won, and our obligation to this patriotic body of expert architects and engineers can never be discharged.

No matter who builds the City Hall now, it has got to be good and it can not be too good for California. By the fight which has been made, the attention of all California has been called to the demand for good architecture and professional probity in high places, and once Californians are aroused to their civic duties they leave no stone unturned to find out the truth concerning their public servants.

Because of the conditions then existing there was organized in Los Angeles in the first week of July, 1921, the association of architects of southern California which was incorporated under the Laws of the State of California as the Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles: a co-operative association not for profit, but to provide the municipal, county, state and national governments an opportunity of obtaining the combined cooperation of many architects in order to achieve a high expression of architecture in public buildings.

The plan of this organization is this: The architects so associated as allies and co-workers, offer the civil authorities a method of securing the best of architecture in public structures at an expense to those authorities for the collective services no greater than the cost of the services of an individual architect, and with the utmost assurance that the buildings will be built with the greatest economy.

The association has no capital stock; the rights, interests, privileges and liabilities of every member are equal and no member can have or acquire a greater interest therein, nor be subject to greater liability, than any other member. A member is without interest in the assets of the association other than that conferred by his membership; on the termination of membership for any reason, all rights and interests of the member in the assets of the association cease and revert to the association. Any gains the organization may make will be principally expended in those things that will be of aid to all architects in their professional duties, such as to provide a comprehensive architectural library, meeting rooms and educational facilities for draftsmen. It is intended that only the most nominal gains will accrue to the membership.

Membership in the association is by election and is open to those architects who are in sympathy with the idea of the association and the opportunity it offers them to give public service. The by-laws so express this point: "Any architect who, because of his ability and qualifications has advanced the art and profession of architecture and thereby is especially fitted to render professional services for public welfare, is eligible as a member of this Association." Every member of the association is a member of the American Institute of Architects, and every member of the Southern California Chapter A. I. A., was invited to join and aid in the splendid patriotic movement.

A statement by the Board of Directors includes the following:

The talented designers who have been educated to know and understand the good in architecture and to express it and who too infrequently have the opportunity to function on public work, will be afforded such an opportunity through this Association. The member whose qualifications most fit him for the work in hand will function principally on that work, and thus every member will be able and expected to contribute his greatest ability to the work of the Associaion.

The practical, as well as the aesthetic, side of the professional work is fully provided for. The Association gives its most experienced minds to exercise the business and executive functions and to care for the structural, mechanical, electrical, architectural, sanitary and supervising problems. Its carefully rounded out membership gives, in every branch of architectural work, a collective service that private individual, firm or corporation cannot obtain at any price.

The touch of the individual is necessary to all architectural design and to every art; without it there is no life or interest. This Association provides that this touch shall never be lost because it provides that some individual member shall always control and direct the final architectural expression of the problem, but always under and subject to the criticism of his co-workers.

Such is the plan, idea, purpose and procedure of this Association of Architects. It is the hope of this group of co-workers that if each of them gives his full ability to the work of his Association and so to the public which it serves, without hope of receiving adequate pecuniary compensation therefor, that there will be injected into civic affairs a new force and a new idea of public service.

Four years of practice have proven that the fundamental idea and principles of the Association are sound and constructive and that it can function practically and efficiently as an organization to render architectural service and set a world standard for architecture in Los Angeles, in which it has carried out over fifty commissions.

M. U. S.

Songs of the Spirit. II.

The Knight of the Golden Song

Behold, there went a Singer forth to sing,
With eyes of faith, the lip of dew, the heart of spring;
Filled with a gospel to the strayed and lost,
Fanned by the ancient wind and fire of Pentecost;
A Singer on whose head the holy blade
Had lately been bestowed in solemn accolade,
Of hope and joy Truth's glad evangelist,
He clasped a lute set with a single amethyst.

Behold, there went a Singer forth to sing,
Crowned with the chrism of Love, the minstrel of a King;
The herald of a creed that wielded power
When life was golden-tuned and knighthood was in flower;
His tiding and the burden of his song:
"To honor women, help the weak, and right the wrong!"
Far down the world rang out his clarion note,
A rare-red ruby gleamed and trembled at his throat.

Behold, there went this Singer forth to sing:
"Hear ye the God-given message that to you I bring;
Revive the ancient rule, the law once feared,
Which sire delivered unto son, and son revered!
Let Purpose once again her scepter wield,
Be 'Dirigo ad astra' graved on every shield,
And strike forever from the files the ban
That what is deadly sin for maid is right for man!

Behold, there went this Singer forth to sing
A canticle that made the world's wide border ring:
"Young men, young maids, I say to you arise!
Lo, see the daybreak gild with hope the eastern skies;
Your hour is come! Truth's mighty, bended bow
Shall speed its arrows to the vitals of each foe,
The pebble Courage, set within your sling,
Shall slay the giant Self, and Love be crowned King!"

—Clarence Urmy.

TOWN AND COUNTRY CLUBS AND FUNCTIONS

Since the very first days of the Flintridge Riding Club all the Junior members have considered it their own and love every portion of it. They are always interested attendants at every horse show and were especially delighted to find that the show last month, sponsored by the Junior League as a benefit for the Home for Convalescent children, had netted such a considerable sum. As this means enlarged quarters for the Home and the possibility of extending to many more children the comforts and aids to health so earnestly desired for them by the League members. These young members of the club, Ethel Johnson, Eleanor Fertig, Willametta Keck, and Joseph Johnson never miss any of the Horse Shows

While Helen Wills, American champion, was eliminated by illness from the English tennis tournaments, the California team, Mary K. Browne and Elizabeth Ryan defeated Mlls. Leuglen and Vlast at Wimbledon in the doubles. While perhaps not such a victory as we would have welcomed in the singles, yet it is the first time the famous Suzanne has been eliminated from anything at Wimbledon and we are especially proud that native born Californians administered the defeat.

Margaret Virginia Rogers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Travis Rogers. One of the clever young riders of the Southland, who enjoys the bridle trails in San Diego's Balboa Park and Coronado's "Silver Strands," and a serious entrant in the horse shows

Golf in all its phases held our attention throughout June, with America making such an enviable record, through the winning of the British Amateur Championship by Jess Sweetser at Muirfield, Bobby Jones retaining the Walker cup at St. Andrews and winning the open championship at St. Anne's, we almost lost sight of great events in other lines of sport. The victory of Bobbie Jones was especially sweet as he is the first amateur American golfer to win the Coveted title.

With golf attracting so much attention it is only natural to find not only the links crowded but the miniature golf courses receiving every attention, and it is only to be expected that these four sisters from Gothenburg, Sweden, recent visitors at Hotel Coronado, should enjoy a game on the miniature course on the hotel grounds. Left to right Misses Inga, Lillie, Ruth and Lucile Brynteson, daughters of Mr and Mrs. John Brynteson

Diamond Head,Oahu, lost nothing of its calm, majestic poise although the cynosure of all yachting eyes during the recent San Pedro-Honolulu yacht race, won by Don Lee's Invader, with the Poinsettia second, and the Teva third. Yet, after all, perhaps the grim old head did nod a trifle, otherwise how did one mariner mistake the outline of Koko Head and anchor there, thereby losing the race

The Poinsettia, Mariner and Invader have announced they will race back to San Francisco. The next event of greatest interest is the Regatta to be held in August at the Newport Harbor Yacht Club, for which a wonderfully interesting and entertaining program has been arranged. Members of all the clubs of the State are anticipating the best regatta of any Season.

George von Elm, California amateur entry, who tied with Walter Hagen for third place in the British Open Championship at St. Anne's, when Bobby Jones won the crown, June 25.

Mrs. A. E. D. Trabue, recently re-elected chairman of the Women's Auxiliary of the Southern California Golf Association, whose membership embraces Mrs. Gregg Lifur, of the California Club, who won the Southern Championship, and Mrs. George M. Lewis, of the Los Angeles Club, the winner of the State title

DEL LORD HAS ENTERED HIS FAST SPEED BOAT, MIDGE II, IN THE NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIPS AT LOUISVILLE TO BE HELD THIS MONTH ON THE MISSISSIPPI, WHERE SHE IS EXPECTED TO HOLD A RECORD OF AT LEAST FORTY-FIVE MILES AN HOUR. EYRE POWELL PRESS SERVICE.

SAILS WERE A VERY VITAL PART OF THE YACHT RACE, DOWN TO HONOLULU, AS ALL BOATS AGREED TO SEAL THE MOTORS, ACCEPT HANDICAPS AS FIGURED, AND SAIL ONLY BY THE GRACE OF THE WIND. RAY CHAPIN SEEMS TO BE SEEKING THE LAST POINT OF VANTAGE

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A. MONTHLY BULLETIN

OFFICERS
DAVID J. WITMER, PRESIDENT
C. E. NOERENBERG, VICE PRESIDENT
EDGAR H. CLINE, SECRETARY
WINCHTON L. RISLEY, TREASURER

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH,
Editor

DIRECTORS
H. C. CHAMBERS
DONALD PARKINSON
ALFRED W. REA

PLAGIARISM AS A FINE ART

THE following is the concluding installment of an address given by Professor Walter R. B. Wilcox of the University of Oregon at a recent convention of the American Institute of Architects in Washington, D. C. The address was one of five given by nationally known architects and deals with the use of precedent in architectural design. Mr. Wilcox has been classd as a "Progressive Eclectic." His words as a Pacific Coast man should be particularly interesting.

"WHAT IS PRECEDENT DOING TO AMERICAN ARCHITECTURE?" CONCLUSION OF ADDRESS BY WALTER R. B. WILCOX

WE are doing much in the way of education, but is a slow process—there should be still more publicity. Articles on the h story of Art and Vehicular Architeeture by leading designers, appear in the technical journals, but, unfortunately, they seldom reach those outside of the business. Some get into the popular magazines, and we are trying to get the newspapers to pr.nt articles on the subject—going into the origin of wheeled vehicles. I don't know when wheeled vehicles did first come into use, but archeologists have gone into the origin of their evolution from the days of prehistoric Man, and their writings are a valuable contribution to popular education. They touch interestingly upon vehicles of Assyria and Egypt—though, as a matter of fact, we haven't been able to make much use of their designs. Somehow, Egyptian models don't seem to fit into our idea of things. One clever chap did make a sensat.on with an adaptation of one of King Tut's funeral sleds, but it was only a "stunt."

"Of course, these writers 'stress' Grecian Art—the classic period, when Art reaehed the highest point in human history. An adaptation of a Grecian model is always good. The public generally knows that, even though it may not appreciate its fine qualities. It is really surprising, that designers experiment with other styles, when they know they cannot surpass what the Greeks did."

He paused for breath, or because he had summed up the situation. I was beginning to wonder if it were the public that needed the education, but noticing models, designs for which, obviously, were obtained elsewhere, I said: "I see that you don't confine yourselves strictly to Greek models?" "No—No." he replied, "our designers are gaining great facility in adaptation. They are finding 'inspiration' in vehicles of all old countries. Of late, a pretty free use is made of protoypes from anywhere—except the Orient. That's another case like Egypt; we don't seem to understand Orientals. Their old vehicles were beautiful, but their art was their own, and we don't seem to assimilate it as we do that of the Europeans."

Here my informant launehed upon a new phase of the subject. "There was a time not long ago, when designers were sharply divided upon the question of adaptability of historic styles to modern uses. Some argued that Romanesque vehicles were best adapted, while others, a little later, championed the Renaissance—chiefly, the Italian. That latter, finally, eonvinced those who were supposed to know about vehieular architecture that that particular period surpassed all others in that respect. Since then there has been a strong trend toward Gothic motives—they surely did good work in those days! Just now, opinion seems to be universal, that as long as a designer is "consistent"—doesn't mix his precedents—he can, if he is able, produce a really artistic design in any of the styles." After a pause, he added, "now and then' a man does something 'original', but he doesn't get very far. Few are interested—many contemptuous—and, well; it costs so much to produce an original design, that few manufacturers can afford to have their men undertake such experiences."

"The cost of designing, today, in the crush of competition, is somethi'ng to be considered.

POMONA COLLEGE HAS, IN ITS MUSIC HALL ONE OF THE MOST BEAUTIFUL COLLEGE BUILDINGS IN THIS COUNTRY—MYRON HUNT, ARCHITECT

That is one reason, I suppose, why Greek and Roman work is so highly regarded—especially the Roman—by the manufacturers. You know—there was a celebrated Italian designer of the Renaissanee—Lavigno, by name—who became so infatuated with vehicles of ancient Rome that he made measurements of all he could find. From these measurements he produced four or five average types and made draw.ngs of them, and today they are published in cheap and convenient form. Manufacturers and designers couldn't get along without a copy of that work. Knowing the style of the four or five to be used, a job ean be handed over to a subordinate, who refers to the proper drawings and obtains the exact proportions of all parts of the proposed model—relative thickness of wheel-spokes to diameter of hub, width to thickness of t.re, size, shape and place of every decoration—each style had its own particular kind of ornament and a particular place for it to go, you see. It's a great book for manufacturers—and for designers, too—why, just come with me."

He led the way to a large room in which men were at work over drafting tables. "These men," he said, "have been specially educated as vehicle designers. They have had four or five years training in vehicular design based upon historic precedent. Some have spent two or three years abroad studying originals. Their education—wh.ch is now thoroughly standardized upon the historic basis—begins w.th a thorough study of that very book, and it makes them of almost immediate service to a manufacturer.

On the tables were scattered about photographs of all kinds of vehieles. Men were to be seen scrutin zing them, copying bits of ornament, or some larger motive, or faithfully reproducing the entire design of a vehicle shown in the photograph. Noticing my interest, my guide said: "I want to show you our library." We entered a room furnished w.th tables, and surrounded by aleoves filled with books and portfolios. "We have hundreds of volumes and thousands of photographs of historic vehicles. It gives us quite an advantage over some of our competitors. Then we have quantities of illustrations of contemporary adaptations of old veh.cles by designers in ther establishments. These illustrations appear in our trade journals and are very useful—gives us an idea of what our eompetitors are doing and prevents them from getting very far ahead of us." "You mean," said I, "that you appropriate the designs of other factories?" "Oh, yes, they all do that. The publications illustrate the design of every new vehicle of importance that appears. Many illustrations appear in all the journals, so they accumulate rapidly. But the publishers are in business to make money and they have to run about the same stuff as their competitors. Manufacturers supply the photographs, because, naturally, they like to have their work as widely advertised as possible—it is good for their own business."

"I suppose 'original work' as you call it, is also published?" I inquired. "Oh, yes, occasionally. But since manufacturers are not interested in the work of an original genius—can't afford to make use of it, in fact—the publisher regards its publication as a waste of valuable space in his journal." "It is all very interesting," is all I could find to say. "It is," finished my salesman-friend. "It is—but despite all this educational publicity, the public does not apprec'ate the Art of vehicular design—it isn't interested. If we could only get the history of vehicular architecture introduced into the lower grades—." But here my friend was called away and I found myself wandering aimlessly on the street, reflecting upon what I had seen and heard. I wondered if he had h't upon the remedy for the deplorable situation.

In elosing this crude analogy, I want, if possible to escape misunderstanding. I offer it as an instigator of reflection. I know that we cannot get fine wine from empty casks. I know that the best wine is the product of long fermentation therein of the richest juices from the fruit of the vineyard, in which abides the essence of its flavor. As for architecture—its loveliest, most glorious examples, I be l eve, will be a product of a freed imagination guided by deep insight into the spirit which has imbued the great Art of the world, in whatever field—rather than of adherence to explicit forms, will, in more general terms, be a product of that culture which Matthew Arnold, as you may recall, defined as a "pursuit of our total perfect'on by means of getting to know, on all matters that most concern us, the best which has been thought and said in the world; and through this knowledge, turning a stream of fresh and free thought upon our stock notions and habits, which we now follow staunchly but mechanically, vainly imagining that there is a virtue in following them staunchly which makes up for the mischief of following them mechanically.

THE FLIRTATION, A PAINTING BY MAX WIECZOREK, LOS ANGELES

THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

MONTHLY BULLETIN

OFFICERS

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH, PRESIDENT
CLIFFORD A. TRUESDELL, VICE PRESIDENT
C. R. JOHNSON, SECRETARY
PAUL R. WILLIAMS, TREASURER

DIRECTORS

JULIAN GARNSEY, DIRECTOR
J. E. STANTON, DIRECTOR
H. C. CHAMBERS, DIRECTOR

THE JUNE MEETING

IT was a happy thought which came to the mind of Mr. Hargrave of the B. B. Bell Company as he sat listening to our silver tongued presiding officer tell about how hard it is for the Executive Committee of the Club to provide interesting entertainment for this bunch of pirates. Mr. Hargrave was sitting on a hard seated folding chair at the time the idea occurred to him. It was the occasion of the first meeting of the Club at its new quarters in the Gardner-Payne Building. We suspect he was thinking of the big easy chairs in the B. B. Bell show rooms and was wishing some of their padding was between his bones and the slats of the folding chair. At any rate he struggled to his "dogs" and announced that B. B. Bell and Company, designers and makers of beautiful lighting fixtures, were just pining away for a chance to act as hosts for the June meeting of the Club. Well, it was all signed and sealed so quickly that when friend Hargrave came to he looked just a bit bewildered. At any rate we met at the Mary Louise Tea Room and had one of the best dinners we have had in a long time and from there we strolled down the street to the Bell Studio where a short business meeting was held. After which the fellows broke up into small groups and either talked or wandered around looking at the hundred and one beautiful pieces of metal work, furniture, and lighting fixtures with which the place is filled. The work of Mr. Cluft, head designer for Mr. Bell was in evidence on every side. The place is full of his personality. His ability coupled with the ideals of craftmanship upheld by the entire firm under Mr. Bell's direction, has made possible the results for which this firm is noted.

A bright fire was burning in the big fire place and an orchestra was playing a catchy air as the fellows strolled in. The atmosphere was ripe for a pleasant evening of solid conversation. The soft lights, the fire, the music all had their affect and all the fellows seemed to fall in with mood for talking. Many of the world's weightiest problems were disposed of before the party broke up. The Club is indebted to B. B. Bell and Company for one of the most pleasant evenings it has had this year.

WE GO CALLING

The Executive Committee of the Club were having their usual weekly noon meeting. The ever present question of how to get more fellows to pay their back dues, was tabled as impossible of solution (at least until the next meeting), and the treasurer was glancing at his watch wondering if that client would wait until he got back to the office. Some one said, "What are we going to do for our meetings during the summer months?" Someone suggested that we provide inspection trips on Saturday afternoons to various notable pieces of architecture. The idea seemed to take and as a result a trip was arranged for Saturday, June 12th. The house visited was the Eisner residence being completed by Gordon B. Kauffman. The house is located at Sixth and Miurfield Road. The Club is greatly indebted to Mr. Kaufman for his ready co-operation in the scheme and we wish to thank him publicly as we have already done privately.

THE WHEELER HOUSE, ALTADENA. DESIGNED BY J. WILMER HERSHEY, WHO GAVE OF HIS SKILL AND GENIUS AS CONSULTANT IN DESIGN TO THE SANTA BARBARA ADVISORY COMMITTEE REBUILDING ESTADO STREET

The plan of the house is interesting in that it is a satisfactory and rather ingenious solution to a complicated circulation problem. The site is not large for such a pretentious house but it is so skillfully arranged that there is no sense of being cramped. The garden is a charmed spot with its pool and pergola and low walled terraces on several levels. From the pergola the view of the house is faintly reminiscent of the Pazzi Chapel. Mr. Thiene, who landscaped the house, has created a noble work and has done the most with play of leafy shadows upon house and garden wall.

The house itself is more Italian than Spanish and more Gordon Kauffman than either. The main entrance motive, which is in cast stone, is particularly vigorous in scale and detail and has several new "kicks" to it which are refreshing to the jaded appetite of a "Front Entrance Detailer." The entrance Hall, the Banquet Hall, Living Room, and Patio had a particular appeal and many of us have found ourselves returning repeatedly for another look at all of them. The main stairway was done in cast stone with the upper rail in wrought iron; a pleasing combination in this case. It was interesting to note how Mr. Kauffman had varied the plaster texture at the stairway walls to tie the scale of the stairway into the finer detail of the hall. Tile was used profusely throughout the house with fine affect. The hand of Jess Stanton was apparent in much of this work. Right here let us mention that Jess is going to put Southern California on the map in the tile industry in the next few years or we miss our guess.

The house was visited by about a hundred members of the Club and their friends. There were many ladies present and they were most welcome. Every one thoroughly enjoyed the opportunity to study the work of Mr. Kauffman and his associates and we hope that we behaved with such circumspection that he will let us come again some time.

SUMMER MEETINGS

It is the intention of the Executive Committee to provide two inspection trips each month during the months of July and August. It is thought that this will give many fellows a chance to see the work of other offices than their own and will benefit not only the draftsmen but indirectly, the architects for whom they are working. These inspection trips will probably take the place of the usual monthly meetings. There is, however, a little scheme in the wind for an outdoor meeting sponsored by one of the big building material manufacturers. Further announcement of this trip will soon be forthcoming, WE HOPE.

Inspection Trip Saturday, June 26th.

A trip has been arranged to a house by Roland Coate and a church by Allison and Allison. Further report on this trip will be given in the next bulletin of the Club. We go to press too early for a report this time.

THE ATELIER

Word has reached us that the remodeling of the Club quarters has been completed so that the Life Class under Hamilton Wolfe can now work without interrupting the fellows in the drafting room. Both groups are now happy. The Life Class still has an overflow attendance and a goodly number of fellows took the last Beaux Arts Esquisse, "An Open Air Theatre."

PORTABLE TYPEWRITERS
WITH STANDARD KEYBOARD
Also All Makes Sold, Rented, Repaired, Exchanged
Parker Typewriter Co.
25 Years Experience
25 N. Marengo Pasadena

For a limited time only
Orders for Copies
of
DAWSON'S
"The Birds of California"
will be taken and filled by
SOUTH MOULTON COMPANY
306 Scripps Building
San Diego, Calif.

Prepare Your Estimates From Reliable Figures
Send for the 14th Edition New Building Estimates Hand Book by Arthur.
SCIENTIFIC BOOK CORPORATION
15 East 26th St., New York

Good Tile Lasts Forever
ARGHITECTS building for the FUTURE who have seen the TILE OF OTHER DAYS REALIZE this.
Spanish and Tunisan Designs
Ask your TILE CONTRACTOR about
Hispano-Moresque Tile
Harry C. Hicks Studio
4283 Beverly Blvd.
GR 4013
Los Angeles California

SIGNIFICANCE OF THE CONCERT ARTIST'S GARB

By JESSICA KATE SENECA

THE Americans carried off the honors in dress among the artists of the two auditorium series this last season;—as regards beauty, if not in other essentials.

Ideally, concert stage attire consorts so well with the artists's personality and surroundings, is so devoid of independently moving adjuncts that may carry on a movement opposed to that of the music, subdues itself so to the expression of varying moods, that it is unobtrusive. Concentration on sound, the essential thing in a concert hall, is lessened by vivid appeals to the eye.

Most of these requirements were ignored by Anna Case. Her French gown of pale rose, so narrowly constructed as to induce the sense of constraint, carried a big pink gauze bow extending from her ear to the hem. The warm and tender hue itself expressed something of Anna Case; but the dress was too exciting sartorially, and, together with the singer's incompletely assimilated lessons in dramatics, also of Paris, distracted attention from the real interest of the evening. The striking mode did not lend itself to the expression of varying emotions. Through all the changing moods of sad and gay, and passionate songs, one was conscious of the presence, entirely extraneous, of a clever Paris frock The ghost of a modiste sat complaisant upon the platform.

The commercial spirit entered with Cyrena van Gordon, who had her dress advertised on the program—a prominence legitimate only where dress is an essential part of the proceedings. One has interest in knowing who makes Raquel Meller's costumes. Like her sister artists, Case and Stanley, Miss van Gordon used a self-advertising piano. One wonders if these vulgarities of advertisement are to be the distinction of the American-born artist?

Her gown had an appropriate beauty and expressiveness, and was in harmony with the singing of great songs. In general effect, its freely flowing length of pure filmy white was given outline and intensity by a lower bordering of dark fur, making a significant curving line that balanced her handsome black head far more effectively than the usual pair of unhuman, sharply pointed shoes. It swayed in lovely lines as Cyrena, with a free stride, came magnificently on in her splendid height. She was a divinely tall person.

Not artistically significant, nor expressive of her art, but agreeable was the effect of warmth and elegance achieved by Hulda Lashanska, with massed darkness of hair, and rich dull reds and deep creams—and sashes tied perversely in front A chilly inelegance pervaded the attire of Toti dal Monte, who appeared in a dress that seemed all grey glittery glassy dangles, like a chandelier, with a very large pale-tomato colored flower close up against the full peony blossom of her attractive countenance.

On her first appearance here having worn the usual white summery attire, with gauzy sleeves that prettily bewinged her in the little wind of her swift exits, one was surprised a week later by Elly Ney's second appearance in wintry garb of rich-colored, betrained velvet, with a golden scarf. The reason for this was revealed at the end. Behind the scenes was Elly Ney, her hair in a dark cloud about her—a storm-cloud with soft fringy edges—and that resistless, love-inviting look with which she had just parted from a rapturous audience. A slim and agile young man, of charmingly polite address, who turned out to be her local manager, Mr. Raymond Brite, appeared in concerned enquiry. Whereupon Elly Ney held aloft a small elegantly shaped phial filed with some bright rose-pink liquid, and declared joyously that she "took it three times a day!" Announced thus in that delightful voice, thus uplifted in those magical fingers, its brilliant hue against her darkly ardent face, one might have guessed it to be some distillation of life's joy she held there. . . . From this glorified medicine bottle one learned that the 'perfect climate' had not behaved well to her, and that she had had a chill, increased by the continued rain.

FROM A WATER COLOR SKETCH OF A SERIES OF COSTUMES, BY J. K. SENECA.

Myra Mortimer, the new American contralto, was another garbed in velvet, betrained, and of unrelieved black. With her black hair and her stillness in singing, the result was to almost identify her with the black piano behind her, which from the point of view of un ty of effect and no distracting accessories was so far good. Her broad pale face had not yet learned the tricks of flirting with an audience. The effect was indeed of an un-American and almost touching solemnity! Her accompanist, Conrad v. Bos's visage, gen-

HILLER'S STUDIO
OFFICIAL PHOTOGRAPHER FOR
CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
49 EAST COLORADO STREET
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
ALBERT HILLER Phone, Fair Oaks 155

"The Gate to Healthful Beauty"
CORLANE
Marinello System
F. O. 1648 570 East Colorado St.
Pasadena
Opposite the Presbyterian Church

Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes
TROY LAUNDRY
In Business for Twenty Years
Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146 Alhambra 243-J

LAUNDERERS DRY CLEANERS
ROYAL LAUNDRY CO.
461 South Raymond Colorado 67
Pasadena, California

T. W. Mather Co. Inc.
PASADENA, CAL.
Dry Goods
Women's & Children's
Wearing Apparel
Colorado Street at Marengo

SAN FRANCISCO WOMEN ACKNOWLEDGED TO BE THE BEST DRESSED ON THE CONTINENT MEET AT THE FAIRMONT HOTEL FOR MANY AFFAIRS BOTH SOCIAL AND MUSICAL.

ial, eonvivial, and faintly jocose, emerged ruddily from this blackness, the brightest spot on the stage. The black tail of her gown eame submissively round the eorner behind her, seemed to stretch itself in line with the piano, and lie waiting for her to go, like a good little dog. Trains seem rather a mistake on the coneert platform. Voluminous ones, accompanying a slow and stately walk, may be imposing. But a rather narrow and detached train, loping along on a bare stage after a figure in a rapid exit is slightly eomic. (One remembers Elly Ney suddenly and impulsively pieking hers up, either dissatisfied with the way it was eoming along, or dubious about the floor, and going off so, unceremoniously . . . having left forgotten a long scarf adorning the chair back, and a little handkerchief tossed impetuously into the yawning recesses of the pianoforte.) Even the Ameriean soprano, Helen Stanley, whose appearance denoted the most intelligent and elaborate consideration of detail, had some sort of floor trailer on one side of her richly patterned gown, whose general effect of golden bronze was so admirably in harmony with herself and her surroundings.

The appellation of "Venus" and "Goddess" applied by eye- thrilled erities to Cecelia Hansen, make her attire of interest to her public. Her dress of very pale eorn-colored satin had in front some adjunct whieh dangled a little distraetingly. One wanted her not in assertively shimmering satins, but as that lovely young Saint Cecilia she eould have looked; in a simple long pure white dress; her fair hair not prisoned in hard artificial waves, out of harmony with the flow of the musie; and no rosy cheeks. Artists of the spirit should be always pale. And for that Saint Cecilia effect she smiled too much. Her playing was at times of that charaeter that one hardly expeeted her to look pleased when we applauded. She was altogether, perhaps, exquisite enough to be able to deal a little in aloofness.

Elena Gerhardt's softly glimmering grey beaded dress seemed too eonventional, but was not wholly inexpressive. An uneharacteristie note was the band half way round of dark grey fur—abrupt and gloomy. Two large flowers hung at the side, whose faint rose-mauve tones seemed to caress eompanioning hues—her skin's lovely fairness, and the dusk blue of her eyes—wonderful eyes, that held the concentrated life of a dozen ordinary pairs. Charm, unobtrusiveness, submissiveness to altering moods, characterized Matzenauer's white lacey gown, but she derided this harmony of effect by introdueing the obnoxious detail of a large brown and yellow feather fan.

A PORTRAIT BUST BY CADORIN, SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA.

There is a certain hardness and ins stence about too glittering a concert stage garb which is against the conveyal of emotion. Claire Dux's white and crystalline dress, with its daneing s.lveriness, lightly swinging, brightly gleaming, one might not have approved on another. But, though showing a little of that disintegration of personality that comes from the habitual surrender to the adoration of multitudes, there was about Claire Dux herself, her art, her spirit, a shining something that seemed able to assimilate this external brilliancy and make it seem indeed almost a symbol of what was within.

SLEEP

I.

Quietly like the paws of cats in grass,
Quietly like the mist and yellow fog,
Quietly like the darkness and the dew,
Quietly like the creeping vines in trees,
Quietly like the wings of moths at dusk,
Quietly wilt thou come at last, O sleep.

II.

I have set a golden snare for sleep,
Baited with the quiet count of sheep.
Sleep draws near on cautious paws,
Sniffs the tainted air, withdraws,
Wild and hard to catch and keep—
Is sleep.

III.

Then I try the gentle sound of rain,
And again
Sleep draws near
Till aware of the snare
Flies in fear.

IV.

Suddenly I grow aware of the light
Sleep has been my captive through the night;
But not sheep nor sound of rain
Brought her then nor will again.
Wild and hard to catch and keep
Is sleep—
Harder still to drive away
With the day. —Eleanor Hoffmann.

THE MUSICAL CENTER OF SAN FRANCISCO, THE FAIRMONT

CROWNING Nob Hill where the "Nabobs" of San Francisco built their finest houses, the Fairmont Hotel now takes its plaee as host to the eity and its visitors. Here meet the musieal elubs of the Bay District for program or eonference; and here are held the notable funetions for whieh San Francisco is famous.

The Fairmont itself is a stately building, rising in terraces from Powell Street and dominating the hills from the bay. To the thousands who cross from the Oakland side, its handsome, storied strueture seems to send out a eordial weleome to the city; and from its great dining room one may view the sweep of the inland waters from the Golden Gate past Alcatraz and Yerba Buena to the southern harbor where ships from the frozen north and from the south seas meet to exchange their cargoes in friendly commerce.

The ball room on the terrace—pictured below on the oceasion of a costume ball—is being enlarged to make a great convention hall, larger than any other similar room in the eity. Out to the very edge of the balustrade of this famous terrace garden the new room will extend under the arehitectural direction of Mr. Myron Hunt, arehitect for the Linnard Hotels throughout their wide and extended serviee.

Thus, as in the medieval palaces of Europe, the people as a whole have inherited the places of bonanza kings and princes. And the rulers of republies—the people themselves—now enjoy the heritage of California made possible to them by the energy of those pioneers of the Paeific who built the railroads and founded the eity by the Golden Gate and built their home on Nob Hill.

A resume of the weekly program at the Fairmont Hotel shows the use which the people of San Francisco make of its beautiful rooms devoted to entertainment. In true spirit of fine hospitality, this patrieian among the hotels of the coast serves society without ostentation or visible effort.

Its fine orehestra alone draws the lovers of music to its concerts on Sunday evenings in the lobby; and the Red Room, the Florentine Room, the California Room and the Gold Room are engaged regularly by musical clubs, Kiwanis, Children's Hospital meetings, dancing elasses or lunches of Methodists from some city parish.

On the Terrace floor will be given a danee by some college class or local club, while in the California Room the Federation of Women's Clubs of the city and eounty of San Francisco will meet to consider Americanization in all its perplexing phases.

Truly the Californians themselves have taken possession of Nob Hill at the Fairmont! The Bertola Assembly of California Women, native daughters and leaders in all that forms the distinctive life of Californians, makes the Fairmont its meeting place and center for entertainments and has thus set the approval of the eity upon this popular, tourist hotel.

ON THE TERRACE OPENING OFF THE BALLROOM OF THE FAIRMONT HOTEL IN SAN FRANCISCO. PARTICIPANTS IN A COSTUME BALL POSED FOR THE PHOTOGRAPHER, WALTER SCOTT, SAN FRANCISCO.

(Continued from Page 14)

Giacomo, contrary to what one might reasonably expect from him, living as he does in a world of dreams, insists that life in its present aspects and in its future possibilities is without hope. "The rich somberness of your soul, the beauty of your temperament is overlaid by the frothing effervescence of gaiety," he continued. "It is discordant." For a moment I was without response. And then suddenly my defence came to me.

My eye fell on a pile of magazines, pamphlets, reprints, brochures. They had been accumulating for a week or two and now demanded reading. Picking one up at random I turned to my good friend. "Shall I read to you," I asked. He looked surprised. "It is a medical journal and I should not understand it," he said. "I will translate the medical terminology into simpler and more understandable form," I promised. "Perhaps an hour or two of this will convince you that while life is tremendously difficult, it is magnificently hopeful." I opened my journal at the first article.

"Progress in the Treatment of Skin Diseases," I read. "Please note the first word—'Progress.' In medicine progress is inevitably bound up with hope, with relief. It may even connote happiness."

The name of the author of the article brought to mind a quiet, earnest worker. I had met him at one of the meetings of the American Medical Association and was deeply impressed by his sincerity. The author recalled the fact that some twenty or twenty-five years ago, our entire equipment in the treatment of all diseases manifesting themselves in the skin, consisted of a dozen or so drugs. The oldest joke in the profession was a classification of all diseases of the skin into those treated by sulphur salve, and those treated by zinc salve. At the present time the modalities, or means at our disposal, for treating diseases of the skin number twenty-one, of which drugs form one. The author lays particular stress on the value of the Roentgen-Ray, or the X-Ray, as it is commonly known. He goes into a lengthy discussion of two diseases of the skin, in which the outlook ten or fifteen years ago was utterly hopeless as to life. I very carefully emphasized and re-iterated the names of the two diseases for my listener so that he would not forget them. They are Mycosis Fungoides and Pemphigus.

"The X-Ray has changed the status of the victim of Mycosis Fungoides from a hopeless, bedridden sufferer to a more or less ambulatory patient, whose chief concern should be that the management and supervision of his disease be in the hands of one who understands Mycosis Fungoides, with all its vagaries, and who is an expert in the use of the Roentgen-Ray in the treatment of the disease."

For the pitiful victims of Pemphigus, hope now lies in the use of certain drugs. You have heard of leprosy, Giacomo, its utter hopelessness is stressed in Biblical references and in other forms of literature. Long strides have been made in the treatment of leprosy, with certain products of chaulmoogra oil. In patients presenting early and benign lesions (manifestations of disease) we are looking forward toward actual cures."

I glanced over the technical discussion and resisted the temptation to read the whole aloud to my listener. The author goes on to give a number of miscellaneous citations to indicate the modern trend and progress in the treatment of skin diseases. I gave Giacomo the highlights of the article and let it go at that.

"Is it not significant," I asked him, "that this man, concentrating into a few pages, years of experience with suffering humanity, years of work, years of study, can end on a note of hope in a chord of progress!"

The second article dealt with Erysipelas. The author reminds us that Erysipelas was first studied by Dr. Fehleisen in 1883. Here I was forced for a moment to stop my reading. The thought of Dr. Fehleisen brought his image to my mind. He had been a good friend. I recalled the splendidly handsome, white-haired old man, his English still tinctured by the speech of his native Germany. I remembered his unfailing appearance at the hospital every day. He worked one day; death interrupted the full schedule of the following day; this included an operation at eight o'clock in the morning. Dr. Fehleisen, after prolonged research, had found the cause of Erysipelas to be a micro-organism or germ, to which the name Streptococcus Hemolyticus was later given. His work for thirty years was followed by the work of many observers. In that time we learned that Streptococcus Hemolyticus was of various types or strains; that these cause such varied affections as Erysipelas, Scarlet Fever, Septicemia, or blood poisoning, etc. The author states that it was not until the fall of 1924, that with the help of various of his colleagues whose names are carefully given, the writer was able to immunize a donkey and later a horse, against the specific streptococcus causing Erysipelas, and to make a serum to combat the disease. A group of sixty patients had been treated with the serum, the case histories are given and in conclusion the author states that "the results obtained strongly suggested that the serum possessed therapeutic, that is curative, value when administered in the early stages of the disease, and in adequate doses."

I turned to Giacomo. "You are a man possessed of creative capacity, of imagination. Do not these qualities help you to visualize these patient workers in their laboratories and hospitals? Does not the faith, the hope which makes it possible for them to carry on, communicate itself to you? Do not the forty years of work begun by my revered friend, Dr. Fehleisen, mean something in lending to life hope, meaning, even cheerfulness, if it so please you to term it?"

I turned the page to an article on the use of glucose and insulin in the treatment of Vomiting of Pregnancy. "To make you understand this, Giacomo, you must know that a certain definite amount of sugar must circulate in the blood. You know, of course, that an excess of this causes a disease called diabetes. But it is not generally known that a diminution of blood sugar causes very serious symptoms. The liver cells store sugar in the form of glycogen. If for some reason the liver cells do not store glycogen, they may maintain their activity by storing fat, which eventually may result in fatty degeneration of the liver. The use of glucose (grape sugar) in this condition was first advocated in 1920. The physicians and research workers interested, held that 'while the causation of the nausea and vomiting of early pregnancy was still an unsolved problem, there was no doubt that the mother was suffering from a carbohydrate (sugars and starches) deficiency, on account of the sudden demand for glucose on the part of the developing embryo(child). If the mother's diet was rich in carbohydrates, there should be little or no toxemia, that is poisoning; but if the diet was deficient in this regard, the needs of the embryo were met by a depletion of the glycogen or sugar of the maternal liver.' The excessive demand of the embryo lead to a fatty replacement in the cells formerly storing glycogen, and later to a fatty degeneration if the deficiency was not corrected. Consequent on the impaired liver function, and the resulting toxemia (poisoning), there developed an acidosis, (production and circulation of acid substances in the body) an increased demand for carbohydrates and an intolerance for food. Hence the mother fed on her own tissues and a vicious circle was established."

The author goes on to state that in the series of cases treated by glucose and insulin the maternal blood sugar was uniformly low before beginning treatment. This explanation of the cause of Vomiting of Pregnancy was followed by the use of glucose and later glucose and insulin were used in the cases treated. I glanced through the details of the methods of administering remedies, the case histories, and then read the conclusion, as follows:

"It appears justifiable to conclude that this method of treatment is of decided value and constitutes a definite advance over the methods formerly employed for the relief of patients suffering from the toxemic vomiting of pregnancy."

We hastily skimmed over an article dealing with cardio-vascular (heart and blood vessel) reactions in athletic and non-athletic girls. Two hundred girls were studied in summer camps, pulse and blood pressure records during rest and activity were carefully noted and tabulations made. The results are suggestive and helpful to those who are engaged in supervising the physical activities of girls.

Turning the pages quickly, I glanced through some highly technical articles. I did not wish to bore my friend, but an article on enlarged tuberculous glands causing symptoms simulating asthma intrigued him. The importance of making a diagnosis in these cases was stressed, because they are highly contagious and should be differentiated from true asthma which is not ordinarily communicated to others.

Further on, a physician reports the recovery of a seven weeks' old infant suffering from meningitis; the specific serum was used in treatment. Within sixty days the little patient contracted pneumonia and recovered completely from both infections without complications. Nine months later the condition of the patient was reported as being normal.

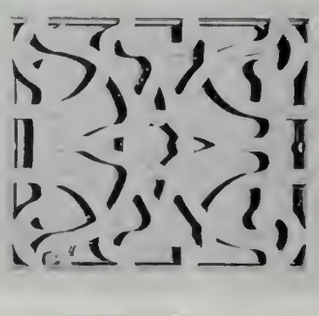
I glanced through the reports of current medical literature, American and foreign, without further comment.

Giacomo continued smoking his huge, brown cigar. I laid the journal on the table. His eyes were dreamy, as if he were hearing strange harmonies.

"Write me a symphony," I asked. "Your composers have written of the soldier on the battlefield; they have in music re-created the din, the exaltation of victory in battle. Now you must tell us through your own form of expression of this more magnificent fight, this capturing of more elusive forces ranged against mankind. This, which I have just read to you, is the recounting of glorious adventure, the slaying of dragons more hideous, more terrifying than any visioned by the most sensitive child. I never read medical literature without a sense of mounting excitement and stimulation. To read it is to build hope and life and cheer, and so I plead guilty to hopefulness, to gaiety and to joy, my friend. If I have made you understand all this, you will write the symphony of the winning fight between man and the enemies of man, the Symphony of Hope and Exultation."

VERA SADICOFF GOLDMAN, M. D.

[Readers of this article who find questions arising as to terminology or subject, are requested to formulate their questions and mail them to the Editor. Opinions as to the value of this column are also invited.—The Editor.]



Tile for Everlasting Beauty

Genuine importations of Spanish, Italian, African, and Mexican tiles always in stock, as well as a complete line of American made tile, also foreign and domestic marble.

Mantels and sections of floors, walls for baths and other rooms in white and colors are kept on display. We also make tile fountains for gardens.

Z. B. GALLOWAY

95 S. Wilson Ave., Pasadena Terrace 5516

Aluminum Plaster-Flush Registers for Hot Air Furnaces

The Beauty and Artistic Design of Terra Cotta made Durable and Practical by an aluminum casting — finished to match your interior.

Designed and Executed by Ohrmund Brothers

Pasadena Gas Appliance Co., Inc.

901 E. Colorado Street

Pasadena Fair Oaks 9393

A COURSE IN THE APPECIATION OF ARCHITECTURE

TOWN and city planning has been called by Miss Gere, in her outline for this course, "The Architect's Greatest Problem." It is indeed the greatest problem that Southern California has to study and solve with dispatch. For architects seldom have an opportunity to plan a town. That work is done by realtors before the architect is called in. Gridiron streets are laid out, boulevards are lined with commonplace shops and all chance for a beautiful village is lost before architects have anything to say about it. A town which grows naturally, with a village store and postoffice for its center, will often grow beautiful at the same time; but a town that is forced by subdividers who wish to realize on their investment is commercialized from its birth and never gets over it.

THIS IS A CARPENTER'S COLONIAL HOUSE, OF THE DAYS WHEN CONTRACTORS STUDIED PROPORTION, IN OLD MONTEREY. IT IS NOT SPANISH BUT AMERICAN BORN. THE INDIGEOUS ARCHITECTURE OF CALIFORNIA.

There is a way to plan a town so that its public buildings will be aqually convenient for all who live within the circle of its influence. This plan must be worked out by men and women who are willing to think the thing through from the first. Study of European cities and towns where our own race has lived longest show the paths which men have made, in going to and fro, crystalized into streets along the river bank or the sea shore or centering in a town plaza or village green where sports are enjoyed and pleasant, shady seats make gossip possible.

Certain towns built in California within the last half century show signs of thought in their plans. Corona is a circle, Orange has a very definite plan and gains beauty as its develops.

Notable to a degree are the new towns laid out by experts at Palos Verdes. We are indeed fortunate in having this fine example of what to do with a subdivision, right before us daily. How anyone can venture to lay out a subdivision or new town without going first to study this stupid subidivisions trailing along a boulevard that should be left to one side unhampered by local traffic are constantly being added to the sum of our sins in thoughtless building.

THIS LITTLE TOWN OF OJAI HAS GAINED MUCH REPUTE BY HAVING A BEAUTIFUL ARCADE ON EACH SIDE OF ITS ONE STREET, WHICH TRAILS OFF INTO THE COUNTRY DELIGHTFULLY. IT IS USED AS A TOWN CENTER BY HAPPY SUBURBANITES IN THAT BEAUTIFUL, CITYLESS VALLEY.

THIS VIRGIN LAND HAS BEEN PLANNED TO HOLD FIVE TOWNS, DREAMED COMPLETE IN THE MIND OF SOME ARTIST BEFORE THE GROUND IS BOKEN. PALOS VERDES ESTATES, CALIFORNIA.

Palos Verdes has planned five towns and when one buys a lot on a business street he buys a facade to go with it. Thus the plaza or street is made harmonious instead of a hit or miss conglomeration.

Below is a map of this peninsula—the turning point on our Coast and, we hope, in our town planning.

Notable, too, is San Clemente, a town now being laid out on the Coast below San Juan Capistrano by Mr. Ole Hanson, who studied the work being done by the reconstructionists of Santa Barbara and decided to buy a tract of unoccupied land and there lay out a town to be made from the beginning in harmonious architecture.

He chose the stucco or Spanish style because that is the logical house to build here where we have no forests. Then he invited the Consultant in Design of the Committee on Reconstruction in Santa Barbara, Mr. J. Wilmer Hershey, to give the benefit of his experience and talent to building a week-end town at San Clemente which should have the great advantage of being planned in the beginning to be rightly constructed instead of having to suffer an earthquake before it changed its building code to suit California conditions.

Houses make a town, no matter how well it is planned to begin with. We are, therefore, extending this course to study the indigeneous architecture of California, in the hope that the example of the women of Santa Barbara will be followed by all the Women's Clubs of California and the study of the elements of beauty in architecture be made the foundation of all their study of art and architecture in the coming year. This course has proved so profitable to the contractors and builders who are using it that it will be continued for another year.

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA
College of Agriculture
Division of Landscape Design
Berkeley, California
June 11, 1926.

California Southland, Pasadena, California.

Gentlemen:

In the March number of th's year I noted an article of appreciation by Myron Hunt. I was particularly interested in Mr. Hunt's ideas of cooperation with Landscape Designers, and I should like to commend him personally for his broad-minded attitude. I trust you may be able to send this or a copy of it to him that he may know that his work as well as ideas of cooperation are appreciated by others who seek the finer things in art.

I wish also to commend the staff responsible for the fine articles published in the California Southland. We have copies at the University Library as well as in the department, and several have expressed their appreciation of the splendid material offered.

I expect to be in Southern California during my vacation period this summer, and will endeavor to visit your office during the next three weeks.

Very truly yours,
Signed H. W. SHEPHERD,
Assistant Professor of Landscape Designs.

The Assembly Tea Room
The In and Out-of-Town House of Los Angeles serves
LUNCHEON, TEA AND DINNER
INCIDENTALLY
The Very Choicest Food
Special Sunday Dinner 5 to 8
644 South Flower St., Los Angeles
Phone VAndike 7177

THE TEA GARDEN OF EL ENCINO, ON THE COAST HIGHWAY MONTECITO, CALIFORNIA

Schaffer GOWNS for LARGE WOMEN
566 E. Colorado Opposite Presbyterian Church Pasadena

COURSE IN ARCHITECTURE CONTINUED

Mrs. Peters has asked that bibliography be published; and we therefore print this list of books to be found at The Rapid Blue Print Company, Los Angeles. We also again remind our readers that the Library of the A. A. A. in the Citizens Bank Building, Fifth and Spring Streets, Los Angeles, is open to them for reference uses.

1. The Beautiful Necessity.....by Bragdon
2. Elements of Dynamic Symmetry.....by Hambridge
3. Vignola, Esquie
4. The Elements and Theory of Architecture, 4 vols.....by Gaudet
5. First Book of Architecture, Doors and Windows.....by Paladio
6. Indication in Architectural Design.....by Varon
7. Elements of Form and Design in Classique Architecture.....by Stratton
8. Classic and Renaissance Architecture.by Buhlmann

Trusting that this list is what you desire, we remain
Very truly yours,
RAPID BLUE PRINT COMPANY,

SANTA BARBARA BETTER HOMES DEMONSTRATION HOUSE

Miss Pearl Chase, to whose eminent organizing powers is due much of the success of The Better Homes Week in Santa Barbara, has kindly consented to send a monthly report of the progress made in Santa Barbara, and we welcome the opportunity to give this interesting page to our readers of this column.

IN THE 1926 CAMPAIGN JUST FINISHED THIS HOUSE WAS CALLED DEMONSTRATION HOUSE NO. 1. IT WAS PLANNED BY THE OWNER WHO HAS BUILT SEVERAL HOUSES IN SANTA BARBARA AND WHO CLEVERLY TOOK NOTICE OF ALL THE BEAUTIFUL DESIGNS WHICH HAVE BEEN GIVEN TO SANTA BARBARA BY THE ARCHITECTURAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE WORKING UNDER THE NEW CODE

FLOOR AND PLOT PLAN. THE LOT WAS 50 x 107. WITH GREATER DEPTH A SPECIAL SPACE COULD BE DEVOTED TO THE CHILDRENS' PLAY YARD AND TO THE VEGETABLE GARDEN. THERE ARE FOUR FRUIT TREES IN THE BACK YARD AND ARTICHOKES, RHUBARB, PARSLEY, CARROTS AND BERRY BUSHES ARE EFFECTIVELY PLANTED IN THE BORDERS

Decorating and Finishing Exclusive Furniture
W. G. Pesenecker
Interior and Exterior Painting
34 North Broadway
Phone Col. 5656 Pasadena, Calif.

BETTER HOMES DEMONSTRATION WEEK,---SANTA BARBARA

By PEARL CHASE, Chairman Better Homes Committee

(Continued from Page 17)

The front bedroom is cheerful and comfortable. The chiffonier, rocker, arm chair, dressing table and bedside table were painted a charming green to match the bed. The tones of the India Print spread are softly blended. They are emphasized by the gold and blue in the pottery, curtains and framed magazine prints.

The children's bedroom is especially attractive. All the furniture seems particularly appropriate, from the toy drawers and little chairs to the low play table whose legs fold up so that it can be slipped into the closet or under the bed. On each side of the room were fascinating fairy tale pictures. One advantage of leaving the walls untinted is found to be that finger and pencil marks are easily erased with the light use of sand paper. The narrow beds were made at the mill from a picture.

The little patio brightens the outlook from the living room and proves an attractive addition to the house when entertaining. It serves as well as an outdoor sitting room and play place for the children. The chairs are terra cotta color with waterproof cushions, painted oilcloth to be sure. The garden flowers are mostly blue, orange and yellow. Morning glory, delphinium, lobelia, aegeratum, and Australian bluebell, marigolds, calendulas, corieopsis, helichrysum, and nasturtiums.

Knowledge, taste and good sense in building and furnishing a small home, is increasing steadily, but there is still widespread need of improvement.

Important factors in the education of home makers are the special courses in the schools and clubs, woman's and home and garden magazines and their advertisers and the Better Homes in America movement.

In many rapidly growing communities, particularly in California, the trial and error method seems popular. Houses are frequently sold and there is opportunity and inducement for men and women to try their hands at building again and again.

The great majority of houses of moderate cost, say under $8000, are built from designs found in books of house plans, of variable quality. The furnishings are provided from the assortment of the local stores. There is always need to choose carefully and then plan wisely for the inevitable changes required in order to fit the house to the lot and its environment.

The final test of the good taste of the owners is the choice of hardware, the texture of the plaster walls and the color scheme, both inside and outside the house. It is here, as often as anywhere else, that they fail to secure satisfactory results.

FRONT BEDROOM. THE FURNITURE IS PAINTED GREEN, AND THERE ARE TONES OF GOLD AND BLUE IN THE CURTAINS, PICTURES AND IN THE INDIA PRINT ON THE BED

DEMONSTRATION HOUSE NO. 1. LIVING ROOM. THE FURNITURE IS OAK WITH A DULL FINISH. WROUGHT IRON FIXTURES AND LAMPS ARE EFFECTIVE. THE TAPESTRY ON THE TABLE, THE BRASS CANDLESTICKS AND BOWLS GIVE A GOLDEN ACCENT. THE ROOM IS MOST COMFORTABLY ARRANGED WITH THE SOFA BETWEEN THE TABLE AND THE FIREPLACE

DEMONSTRATION HOUSE NO. 1. THE PATIO OPENING FROM THE LIVING ROOM PROVIDES PLEASANT ACCOMMODATIONS FOR PIGEONS, GOLD FISH AND PEOPLE. THE FLOWERS ARE CHIEFLY GOLD, YELLOW AND BLUE

CHILDREN'S BEDROOM. THE FURNITURE IS A RICH, DARK BLUE, AND ROSE IS INTRODUCED IN THE BEDSPREADS AND FRILLED CURTAINS. A BUREAU, BOOKSHELF AND FAIRY TALE PICTURES COMPLETE THE FURNISHINGS

DINING ROOM, GAY WITH ITS SOFT GREEN PAINTED FURNITURE, TERRA COTTA COLORED CURTAINS, AND MEXICAN CHINA AND GLASS

The Classic Fold

By Fairfax Proudfit Walkup

Illustrated by M. V. Oates

FREEDOM sprang, like Athena, full grown from the mind of the Greeks. When one crosses the "tideless sea" of the Mediterranean, one leaves behind the heavy masses of Egypt. One leaves those temples, whose gigantic columns the arms cannot embrace,—those temples whose gods dwell, some of them, underground. The gods of the Greeks dwell on the mountain-top; and from these fair heights they do not hesitate to descend and mingle with mankind.

There is a clean wind, "a wild hill air, as if Pan were there, that sounds on the Argive sea." And indeed, in the groves of Greece, where maidens toss their bright veils in a dusk of dancing, one can still hear the pipes of Pan, "when spring comes tripping on the breeze."

Egypt was described, as being shaped like a lotus; she is drugged with the nepenthe of her own monotony. Greece, however, is shaped like a hand, a very graceful hand, that laves its sensitive fingers in the blue waters of the Mediterranean.

It is quite natural to find this grace and freedom reflected in every sweeping fold of Grecian dress. It is caught in the rhythmic line of the Winged Victory of Samothrace; it swathes the dignity of Sophocles. One speaks of the gods of Greece; but the people themselves have achieved immortality.

Phidias probably felt this when he adorned the walls of his perfect Parthenon with the imperishable figures of Athenian men and maidens, for they were worthy of being admitted to the presence of the most-high.

What a joyous procession it is, in festival garb, that comes to bring its offerings to Pallas! Here is a youth, curbing his restive steed. It might be young Pericles himself, in all the impetuosity of first achievement. He wears a short tunic—the Ionic Chiton. The word, meaning "a linen garment," was brought to the Aegean shores by the Phoenicians—those same Phoenicians who introduced the alphabet,—thus laying the lines for future controversies! The tunic (which has its modern replica in every fashion magazine) is a very simple garment. In fact, that which the young Grecian wears is only a rectangle of cloth, woven in one piece—about six feet wide and three and a half feet long. When this is doubled around the figure, it reaches just above the knees. It is fastened on both shoulders, though usually only on the right shoulder, leaving the left breast bare. A girdle confines it at the waist. It is such a garment the Amazons wear.

Over this Ionic chiton (usually of white, with a border), the youth might wear a chlamys, or short cloak, of wool. The chlamys also is a rectangle, about seven feet by three. It was fastened securely on the right shoulder, covering the left arm and hand. The Apollo Belvedere wears one, loosely draped around the left arm. Not only the gods, but the men also, often forgot to wear the chiton underneath!

Let us turn to the group of maidens, whose deft fingers have woven the chiton of fine linen and gold threads, the presentation of which is the occasion of this great festival. It is not often that the women of Greece have the opportunity of appearing in public; and, womanlike, they take full advantage of the situation! In the procession, one may see young maidens, in the soft Ionic Chiton, quite like that which their brothers wear, but wider and longer, and draped more carefully about the figure.

This chiton of soft, fine linen, measures twice the width of the maiden's outstretched arms, from finger tip to finger tip. It is a little longer than the length from shoulder to ground, to allow for a slight blouse at the waist. This garment, so simple (for it, too, like all Grecian garments, was woven in one piece), derives its charm from the grace and cleverness with which it is adjusted. To attain the effect seen on the Themis of Rhamnos, it was necessary to pin the material on each shoulder, allowing a bit more for the front, so that it droops in pleasing grace across the chest. Then, at regular intervals down the arm, to the elbow, brooches hold together the front and back, forming a sleeve, with interstices. But this would be bulky, did not a girdle hold this fullness in its proper place. This girdle, could be adjusted in three ways. First, it could be knotted around a high waist line. Second, it could be looped over the shoulders, and then knotted around the waist. It is thus seen in the statue of the Charioteer of Delphi. Third, it could be crossed over the breast, and then wound round the waist. This is the manner chosen by most of the maidens.

If the maidens did not wish the sleeved effect, they could wear the Ionic Chiton in a narrower version, without sleeves. Although the two sides might be pinned directly together, allowing no ends, as seen in the figures of the Three Fates, it was more usual to allow a bit on each side, which fell in graceful folds down the side of the waist, front and back. The girdle may be used in any of the three fashions, with all modes of dress.

CARYATID IN DORIC CHITON

The older men seen in the frieze, wear the long Ionic chiton, with or without sleeves. But the philosophers and sages, as evidence of their scorn of all adornment, wear only the Himation. This is a large cloak, used by both men and women,—always by women when appearing in public. It is a rectangle measuring some twelve or fifteen feet long, and about five or six feet deep—depending on the height of the wearer. Like the smaller chlamys, it was often of fine wool, colored, though it might be of linen, for summer wear. It was woven with a border, and further adorned with embroidery of gold or silver threads. The borders used were scrolls, or the so-called Wall of Troy, or other conventional designs. The Greeks were very fond of color, and did not adopt pure white garments till after the age of Pericles. They liked to sprinkle the groundwork of the dress with a design of stars, or small flowers.

Though Sophocles, or Euripides, with their one-piece garment, thus evaded much unnecessary toil, they were not exempt from certain obligations of taste; for good breeding was shown in the adjustment of the himation. First, one end was thrown over the left shoulder, until it almost touched the ground in front. Then the material was passed around the back, and over the right arm. It is here that the individual taste of the wearer was shown. It might be draped around, both ends drooping toward the ground, like a plain shawl. Or it might be drawn over the head, like a mantilla, and the right end left loose, or cast over the left shoulder. It is thus that Agamemnon is shown, as he advances to the sacrifice of Iphegenia. The right end might be thrown negligently over the left forearm, hanging down behind. There were seven different ways of adjusting the himation. Socrates, and other sages, usually threw the right end over the left shoulder, leaving a little pocket-like pouch for the right arm, so that the hand could be free. It was a mark of good taste to cover the left hand but of very bad taste, to cover the right hand! Though they had no etiquette books in those days, they knew "what was what!"

Plato tells many amusing stories of Socrates, who, in spite of his simplicity, did not eschew a certain sprightliness in dress, when going to a banquet. He put ribands about his hair, even if the himation he wore was threadbare; and sometimes he even wore sandals. This latter was quite unusual, for Socrates' hardihood was famous. Once, so Alcibiades recounts, during a campaign to the north of Greece, when all the other warriors wrapped their feet in felt and fleece against the bitter cold, and wore extra clothes, Socrates, in his single himation, walked barefooted on the icy roadways, and stood the cold better than the ordinary soldiers—who, however, "looked daggers at him!" Humanity doesn't change much!

There is another style of dress, worn by the women in the festival procession. This was the Doric chiton—such as one sees on most of the statues of Athena, of the Caryatidae, and of the Vestal Virgins, to mention a few instances. The Doric chiton differs from the Ionic in the fold which falls over, front and back, something like a bib. The Doric chiton, also, was very often of wool; it seems, in fact, to be the style adopted for the colder months, though it is worn at other seasons as well. It is usually narrower than the full Ionic—the measurements being from elbow to elbow, when the arms are outstretched. But the depth of the garment is much greater than the Ionic—instead of being only a trifle more than the height of the wearer, it is at least eighteen inches, often more, longer. If eighteen inches, the bib will fall just a bit above the waist line, as seen in the figure of the Caryatid. A simple girdle confines the waist. But, in the Dresden Pallas, for instance, the overfold is at least twenty-four inches, reaching to the hip line. This is an especially graceful style, as the edges of the material fall together in ripples down the side, giving a very charming effect.

It must always be borne in mind, too, that the Grecians allowed a little more of the material to blouse over either hip, giving a downward—curving line to the waist; this slight, crescent-shaped bulge is called the kolpos. It is quite necessary in order to get the classic effect.

(To be Continued)

WE offer for investment of Personal or Trust Funds sound Securities returning highest rates consistent with safety.

WILLIAM R. STAATS COMPANY
Established 1887
Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds

311 East Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIF.
Los Angeles San Diego San Francisco

Unique in its Atmosphere

Each morning a refreshing shower. A joy at forty miles an hour.

Golden State Limited East

The luxurious and congenial environment of an ocean liner translated to railroad travel.

Southern Pacific Lines — Rock Island

Leave Los Angeles 12:01 p.m. [via Southern Pacific]; San Diego 10:45 a.m. [via S.D.&A.]; arrive Chicago 10:00 a.m. third day [via Rock Island].
Thru Pullman daily from Santa Barbara 8:00 a.m. [via Southern Pacific].

For tickets, reservations personal service, call on
Southern Pacific City Ticket Office, 937 State St., Santa Barbara, Calif., Phone 243; or address B.F. Coons, General Agent, Rock Island Lines, 609 Van Nuys Bldg., Los Angeles, Calif.

A "comfy" lounge for women planned. A kind of traveling "no man's land."

"UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST"

The CALIFORNIAN HOTEL
MANAGEMENT H. WINGATE LAKE
FRESNO, CALIFORNIA

A modern, model Hotel devoted to sincere hospitality and dedicated to California's Guests.

THE LOGICAL STOPPING PLACE IN THE SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY FOR ALL POINTS, WHETHER YOU TRAVEL FOR BUSINESS OR PLEASURE.

EUROPEAN PLAN
258 ROOMS - 258 BATHS
$2 PER DAY AND UP
ALL OUTSIDE ROOMS

HOMESPUN SPORTS COATS

Hand woven on our own looms by expert designers

Handwrought Silver and Pewter
Ideal for Wedding Gifts

HEWSON HAND CRAFT STUDIOS
602 E. Colorado St., Pasadena
2508½ W. Seventh St., Los Angeles

Beautiful Garden Pieces
in
Sculptured Terra Cotta

Italian Terra Cotta Co.
W. H. Robison
1149 MISSION ROAD
Opposite County Hospital
Phone Lincoln 1057 Los Angeles

NO. 121—TALMAGE VASE

Dance!
at the
Ambassador
Cocoanut Grove
to the Entrancing Music of
COCOANUT GROVE ORCHESTRA
Under the Leadership of Ray West

SPECIAL NIGHTS Every Tuesday

COLLEGE NIGHTS

With Dancing Contest every Friday.

Tea Dances
every Saturday at 4:00 in the Fiesta Room, Tea Service $1.00

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

OFFICERS:
MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President
MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President
MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, Sec. Vice-Pres.
MRS. ISAAC HAMPSHUR JONES, 3rd Vice-Pres.
MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Vice-Pres.
MRS. JAMES REED, Secretary
MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treas.
MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

COMMUNITY HOUSE AND DAY NURSERY

1506 De Longpre
Hollywood
Telephone HE 5133

CALENDAR

July 6, 10:30 a.m.—Meeting of the Board of Directors.

July 6, 12:30 p.m.—Round Table Luncheon, Mrs. Alma Whitaker, speaker.

July 7, 10:30 a.m.—Meeting of the Good Samaritan Committee.

July 13, 9:30 a.m.—Meeting of the Day Nursery Committee.

July 13, 10:30 a.m.—Meeting of the Executive Committee.

July 20, 10:30 a.m.—Meeting of the Executive Committee.

July 21, 10:30 a.m.—Meeting of the Good Samaritan Committee.

July 27, 9:30 a.m.—Meeting Day Nursery Committee.

July 27, 10:30 a.m.—Meeting of the Executive Committee.

TO the many friends and League members who have so generously purchased Baby Bonds the Board of Directors expresses its sincere appreciation.

Final returns are not yet in for our Building Fund Campaign. A report now would be discouraging, for we have not yet raised enough to meet our minimum requirements. We feel that the time for preparation was rather short, but that before this time our message has reached many who are interested in our work and who will send in their pledges during this month. Surely we cannot fail to raise the full amount for such a worthy cause. If you have not sent in your "Baby Bonds" do so at once that the Day Nursery may render even greater service by extending its scope.

It is felt by all who know of the work of the League that our Building Fund appeal should not be confined to Los Angeles for our work is not sectional. Through our Woman's Exchange we have been able to help many in the cities and towns surrounding Los Angeles; and through our Location Bureau we have earned money directly for outside charities, particularly for several in Pasadena. This is the opportunity for our many friends in Southern California to put their stamp of approval on our work.

A NOVEL DONATION

One very good friend of the League's not only has given a generous subscription to our Building Fund, but has also donated a full-bearing avocado tree, from the sale of which we should realize a considerable sum. The League also, will receive a 20 per cent commission on other trees and shrubs of this estate which we are able to sell. This is not only a chance to secure some very beautiful trees but also to help swell our fund. Tell your friends and neighbors of this opportunity.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN

The wonderful growth of the Good Samaritan work is splendidly exemplified in its children's summer camp activities. Last year thirty-four youngsters were sent to enjoy for two weeks all the pleasures of out-door life amid entrancing mountain scenes. This year more than a hundred will have the same privilege. The first party of twenty-five has already left for the mountain camp. There the children will spend two weeks; then another party will be taken, and so on at fortnightly intervals during the summer vacation.

Careful provision has been made for the comfort and pleasure of the little charges. A playground director will have charge of recreations. There will be hikes, camp fires and all the other amusements that go with summer outings in the mountains. A competent nurse will be on duty at all times. There will be an abundance of good, wholesome food and a plentiful supply of real cow's milk.

Just think what this will mean to the poor kiddies who have heretofore always spent their holiday on the city streets with all their besetting dangers! The children will be transported both ways without charge and only the children of the worthy and needy will be chosen to make up the parties. This camp is conducted by another one of the Community Chest agencies, which through its co-operation opens to the League another channel of service.

SWEET GIRL GRADUATES

It is a real pleasure to have the privilege of contributing to the joy of school girls on their graduating day—one of the epochs in the lives of most. The Good Samaritan had this privilege recently. Some of the girls studied hard to attain the goal of their ambition and after school worked to earn money to continue their studies. Their earnings were barely enough for this purpose, so that there was nothing left to buy suitable dresses for the commencement exercises. The Good Samaritan cheerfully came to their aid and without the knowledge of any but the girls' and their mothers supplied dresses and shoes and stockings similar to those that the more fortunate of their classes were having. One of these girls so helped led her class in honors. All the girls expect to earn enough during vacation to repay the League.

THE DAY NURSERY OF THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA READY FOR DESSERT AT THE HEAD OF THE TABLE. PHOTOGRAPH BY COURTESY OF THE FOX STUDIOS.

MOTOR CORP SERVICE

If the members of the League who so generously give of their time to the work of the Motor Corps could hear and read all the nice things that are said and written about them they would feel in no small measure repaid for their sacrifices. The Good Samaritan could scarcely function without the cars so generously placed at its disposal by committee members and the Motor Corps, which executes many of its missions of mercy—whether it is an emergency call from the Day Nursery, a collection to be made for the Thrift Shop, or whether to take a convalescent to a doctor, or a cripple for a ride, there are always cars available. And best of all the angels of mercy feel privileged in being permitted to do their "bit" in this way.

FILM LOCATION BUREAU

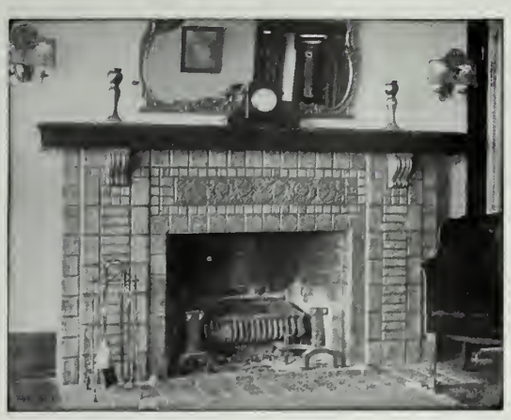
Here in Southern California there is just about every type of home and garden that can be conceived; but unfortunately all of them have not been placed at the disposal of our Location Bureau. Here is where our members can help us by inducing their friends to list their property with the League for use by the producing companies. League members can assure their friends that their homes and gardens will be under the most careful supervision all the time a company is using them. Thus far under our present system there has been general satisfaction expressed by property owners.

MAGIC WANDS AND CARPETS

Our Woman's Exchange is not an ordinary shop—almost every article has a tale to tell. No one would suspect that one of the 'hooked rugs' which adds its bit of color to the shop is literally a magic carpet—and yet it will provide the means of a much needed vacation. While some of the dainty baby bonnets and cunning booties are earning money for a new wheel chair. The life of some inner tubes were not ended when they no longer could serve their original purpose. In the clever hands of one of our shut-ins they were converted into attractive beach utility bags which literally "smile at miles" for through their sale in our shop, the dear old lady has saved almost enough money to buy a ticket to Florida where is a happy home with her daughter.

REAL ANTIQUES

You will find on display in our branch shop —830 S. Flower, a really choice collection of antique furniture. We are indebted to Meyer & Di Segni Studio for the privelege of displaying and selling this furniture and in this way earning money to enlarge our work.



A MODERN CINDERELLA

The cotillion to which our Cinderilla went was part of a movie set, and the favor was a very welcome pay envelope. The slippers which made it all possible were purchased from the Thrift Shop; a really nice pair of slippers which "just fit." The happy Cinderella was heard to say, "It's not so bad to be in someone else's shoes some times."

"We live in deeds, not years; in thought not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on a dial.
We should count time by heart-throbs. He most lives
Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.
And he whose heart beats quickest lives the longest:
Lives in one hour more than in years do some
Whose fat blood sleeps as it slips along their veins,
Life is but a means unto an end; that end,
Beginning, mean and end to all things—God.
The dead have all the glory of the world.
—Browning.

THE BATCHELDER TILES

BATCHELDER-WILSON COMPANY

We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

2633 Artesian Street

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Choose your own architect from the representative styles shown in "California Homes" by California Architects. Price $1.00.
Address: ELLEN LEECH,
544 So. El Molino Ave Pasadena, Calif.

Coulter's Annual July Blanket Sale

Continues throughout the month of July; offering savings available at no other time of year on first-grade Bedding (only) of all styles.

Remember, Coulter's sell no "seconds"!

Coulter Dry Goods Co
FOUNDED in 1876

Seventh Street at Olive

SKETCH OF HOLLYWOOD BOWL

The opening of the new Hollywood Bowl in June, 1926, marks the first step in the realization of a great project; a garden of music in Southern California.

It is the beginning of a plan to found among the hills, a spot of supreme beauty, where the music lovers of the world may gather in their pilgrimage.

The setting, designed by the Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles, adds the subtle beauty of architecture to the charm of nature in a sublime symphony of the arts.

ALLIED ARCHITECTS ASSOCIATION OF LOS ANGELES.

(Continued from Page 9)

A perennial stream of water, rising from a mass of bracken fern on the mountainside above the camp, flows through the center of the Newcomb place, sustaining dense jungles of willows and groves of cedars.

Past Newcomb's, one trail leads to the top of the range, turning eastward and crossing in due time Buckhorn Flat, a timbered, ferny nook made musical by singing waters hurrying downward and outward to the dusty reaches of the desert. A trail to the left of Chileo leads up to a somewhat level expanse known as Horse Flats, an old grazing ground. From this section the trail tops the ultimate ridge, follows a canyon winding leisurely downward, and crosses Pinyon Flat. This latter place, dry as summer's dust, is the habitat of a large stand of pinyon pines. Beyond extend treeless hills billowing outward towards the sands of the deserts.

In all this vast expense of timbered flats, deep canyons, and jagged cliffs, an area of at least 100 square miles, few indeed are the human habitations. There are a few miners' cabins scattered widely about, but besides Newcomb's there are in all this wide solitude only two permanent dwelling places,—Coldby's situated in Coldwater Canyon, a tributary of the Tejunga, and the Loomis Ranch, located in upper Alder Creek below Mt. Pacifico. Both are homes of hospitality where food and lodgings may be obtained by the wanderers of the high hills.

Colby's specialize not in learned blacksmiths but in college-bred cooks. Some years ago the cook was a mechanical engineer who had studied at home and abroad. The present cook, Joe Argay, informed the writer that he was a graduate of the University of Vienna.

Colby's have twenty-five acres of canyon bottom under cultivation, fruit being the main crop; Captain Loomis tills small plots of ground and also extracts small amounts of pay dirt from his gold diggings. Both ranches have to depend on the sturdy pack animal to freight goods in and out of their mountain fastnesses.

The new highways will make it possible for many to climb the mountains, whereas few are able to scale them now. In a short time the automobilist will be able to reach the heart of the mountain lands without toil or fatigue. The adventurer whose pulse is quickened by the world of beauty around him need not be content to admire only what he can see from the main highway. Parking his machine, his base of supplies, beneath wide-spreading conifers, he can strike off on foot to explore "fresh fields and pastures new,"—The Tejunga Narrows, Mt. Gleason, Mt. Pacifico, Mt. Waterman, and other delightful places. So let us remember that our playground of the near future will be the mighty reaches of this mountain wonderland.

RECENTLY FINISHED IS THE HANDSOME NEW LIBRARY BY MARSTON, VAN PELT AND MAYBURY, ARCHITECTS, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

THE HILL AVENUE BRANCH OF PASADENA'S PUBLIC LIBRARY

By GEORGE ANTON DIEHL (Member of the Library Staff)

ONE of the most attractive buildings erected in Pasadena, California, during the past year is the branch library, situated on the corner of Hill Avenue and Green Street. It supersedes the inadequate little building formerly known as East Branch and, owing to its new location, bears the name of Hill Avenue Branch.

A bond issue of $50,000 was voted in January of 1924 to provide grounds and building for the new branch library. This appropriation was employed to the best possible advantage, and the combined efforts of those who were responsible for its expenditure have produced one of the most beautiful branch libraries in the country. It covers half a block of ground which is being planted with the choicest of ornamental shrubbery, and the site commands an unobstructed view of the mountains. The building is of Colonial design, constructed of hollow tile covered with white plaster and finished with a red tile roof. Marston, Van Pelt and Maybury are the architects.

A pleasing effect has been achieved in the approach to the front entrance by a wide brick walk corresponding in color to the roof. The walk widens at the entrance into a low porch which is flanked on either side by wrought iron lamps. At the vestibule, there are double doors of leaded glass set into a frame of handturned wood, and glass side lights.

The main part of the interior is divided into three unbroken sections which open into each other and give the impression of spaciousness. These consist of a reading-room for adults, thirty-six by twenty-three feet; a space for charging-desk, book-stacks, pamphlet and picture filing-cases and index-table; and a boys' and girls' reading-room, thirty-six by twenty-nine, near the front entrance. A charming fireplace adorns the far end of this room, while floor lamps and cozy chairs add comfort to the adult reading-room. Oak of driftwood gray hue was used in woodwork and furniture in this part of the building, and monk's cloth hung from wrought iron rods for window draperies.

One of the very distinctive features of the library is a patio which may be entered through French doors from both adult reading-room and boys' and girls' room. It is enclosed on three sides by outer walls of the building and on the fourth by a garden wall. Large avacado trees lend it shade, and a pergola extending the length of one wall, partially sheltered by a low coping and overhead beams, forms a delightful out-of-doors reading-room.

In order that the work and supervision of the library may be accomplished most easily, the work-room is located so that the charging-desk can be watched while work is being done there. The telephone is located in this room, and lights and the unit-system furnace are controlled by switch-boards within easy reach of the librarian's desk. Closed cupboards and roomy shelves line the walls and a convenient place is provided for mending. Deliveries are made from the outside entrance, and all books and magazines are prepared in this room before being taken to the shelves for circulation.

Ivory colored woodwork and chintz draperies lend a cheerful atmosphere to the rear of the building which is reached by a doorway at the end of the boys' and girls' room and from the delivery entrance. The greater part of this space is devoted to staff quarters, janitor's closet and a stairway to the basement. There is also a club-room for story-hours and other meetings which is so arranged that additional seating capacity may be obtained by throwing open double doors to staff-room, hall and outside pergola.

Hill Avenue Branch is in close proximity to an active business district and adjacent to the High School. It has a capacity for 20,000 books and owns at present nearly 11,000. It serves more than 10,000 people. An increase in circulation of over 15,000 has been gained during its first year of service in the present location and the reading-rooms are constantly used.

INTERIOR OF BRANCH LIBRARY, BY MARSTON, VAN PELT AND MAYBURY

The Palace of Versailles

The Ultimate in Period Pianos

All the daintiness of a Du Barry, the charm of a Maintenon, the grace of a Pompadour has been transported from the courts of French Romance into the Versailles Model and combined with the incomparable beauty of Stieff Tone.

To own this instrument is to possess the atmosphere of the French Courts

RICHARDSON'S INC
Victrolas ~ Radios ~ Pianos
730 WEST SEVENTH STREET
LOS ANGELES CALIFORNIA

STIEFF

Master Piano-Forte Builders Since 1842

"La Venta" at Palos Verdes—reminiscent of the Old Spanish Mission—overlooks ocean, valley and distant Santa Monica mountains

Palos Verdes Estates

JAY LAWYER
General Manager

BANK OF AMERICA
Trustee

LANE MORTGAGE BLDG., 8TH AND SPRING STS., LOS ANGELES
TELEPHONE VANDIKE 2481

Distinctive both in architecture and in the view it commands, "La Venta" (built by the Project) is the centre of much of the social activity of this charming seaside community.

To live in Palos Verdes is to find health and happiness.

PACIFIC GARDENS, FROM SEATTLE DOWN THE COAST

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

"SUNLIT ARROYO" FROM A PAINTING BY SAM H. HARRIS, LOS ANGELES, REPRODUCED BY COURTESY OF "THUMB TACK"

No. 80 AUGUST, 1926 25 Cents

CALIFORNIA'S HOME AND GARDEN MAGAZINE

O' Hara, Livermore & Arthur Baken

Decorators and Furnishers—Antiques

522 Sutter Street, San Francisco
644 E. Colorado Street, Pasadena, Calif., Terrace 2175

"GOOD ARCHITECTURE" Out Next Month
(Another Supplement to California Southland)

Choose your own architect from the representative styles shown in "California Homes" by California Architects. Price $1.00.
Address: ELLEN LEECH,
544 So. El Molino Ave Pasadena, Calif.

Tile for Everlasting Beauty

Genuine importations of Spanish, Italian, African, and Mexican tiles always in stock, as well as a complete line of American made tile, also foreign and domestic marble.

Mantels and sections of floors, walls for baths and other rooms in white and colors are kept on display. We also make tile fountains for gardens.

Z. B. GALLOWAY
95 S. Wilson Ave., Pasadena Terrace 5516

Aluminum Plaster-Flush Registers for Hot Air Furnaces

The Beauty and Artistic Design of Terra Cotta made Durable and Practical by an aluminum casting — finished to match your interior.

Designed and Executed by Ohrmund Brothers

Pasadena Gas Appliance Co., Inc.
901 E. Colorado Street
Pasadena Fair Oaks 9393

Detail study for the Macy Street Bridge.

The principal aim of the Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles is to advance the Art of Architecture.

Supplying the City of Los Angeles with Architectural Designs and Suggestions for Bridges and Viaducts is one of the many services of the Association performed for the Public without compensation.

ALLIED ARCHITECTS ASSOCIATION
OF LOS ANGELES

Santa Barbara Fiesta--August 26-27-28

A Feria de Los Paseos

Among the permanent pleasures of Santa Barbara may be counted El Castillo, that charming home of such individual shops. The building was designed by Wythe Blaine and Olsen with H. C. Peterson as associate, and is owned by E. J. Peterson of The Peterson Studio. It conforms so perfectly with the neighboring buildings, the

Community Arts Street Fair

Lobero Theater and that perfect group known as the de la Guerra Studios. That the details might lack nothing all the decorative tile used on the building was imported from Spain, while the tile over the entrance arch comes from Turkey. The roof tile is hand-made, hard burned and was furnished by Gladding McBean

Paseo Carrillo to Paseo del la Guerra

Entrance to the Street Fair, the land of unfailing delight may be made through the flagged pathway leading from East de la Guerra street to the studios, then through El Paseo, and along a winding path, skirting the booths, across Canon Perdido, for the nonce—The Land of China, thence around the Lobero Theater to Lobero Lane, through Callejon by El Castillo to Carrillo street. Or one may enter from Carrillo as one pleases, following Callejon and reversing the above order.

To the varied pleasures and unsurpassed charm of Santa Barbara's Fiesta, this year adds another touch of the old world in La Feria de Los Paseos, literally but not so musically known to us as a Street Fair. The most enticing sights and sounds lead to exploration and with each advance the lure grows ever stronger. At the outset are strolling musicians and others serenade us all along the way. A gypsy is greeted with glee and a glamourful fortune told, then comes a peddlar with his cart, heaped high with gleaming wares, to serve the eye and the appetite, especially one with a most intriguing confection from Sicily of a succulent sweetness. On either hand are gorgeously decorated booths from which are dispensed delights and charms as yet undreamed.

Now we reach Lobero Lane and the dancing section! Even this pleasure cannot dim the urge to seek just beyond the corner, when suddenly the shores of China flame forth, the land of the magnificent dragon, where you revel in the gorgeous burst of color. One never takes a guide book when on a real adventure, so you don't need an itemized account of every thing in store for a visitor but don't fail to go, go every one of the three days and store up enough happiness to last for three years.

For the very young there are burros to ride, games to play, and a chance to display their very own pets in a "Pet Animal Show." Not only do the burros serve the children as steeds but they patiently trot up and down, in and out, with their packs of varied character—food stuffs, toys and novelties, each one gayly bedecked as to head stall, and with tinkling bells to add to the pleasing sounds and merriment of the days. Nor do they envy the magnificent steeds entered in the Big Parade on Estado.

During the Fiesta not only Youth but every taste will be served. Drama is supplied at the Lobero Theater, where the "Romantic Young Lady" will appear the evenings of the 26 and 28. This is a Spanish play by Martinez Sierra, a charming comedy, with a setting in modern Madrid, directed by Frederick McConnell of the Cleveland Playhouse.

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertainments, etc., for the calendar pages are free of charge and should be received in the office of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, at least two weeks previous to date of issue, the 10th. No correction can be guaranteed if they are received later than that date. CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, California. One dollar and twenty-five cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be changed as many times as desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the change is made.

Entered as second class matter, July 28, 1919, at the Post Office at Pasadena, California, under act of March 3, 1879.

Clubs

VALLEY HUNT CLUB, PASADENA:
The formal season at the Valley Hunt Club closed with May, after which time no programs are arranged. The tennis court and swimming pool offer the outdoor attractions during the summer, and individual parties, both afternoon and evening, are arranged as desired.

ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB, PASADENA:
"Unattached players will be glad to know that the Annandale Golf Club is now open to summer members as in previous years at special summer rates. The course is in excellent condition and will not be torn up with new work this summer."
The afternoon bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been discontinued for the season, but tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged, followed by tea.
Table d'hote dinner served in dining room every Sunday from 12 to 3 p. m.

LOS ANGELES COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.
Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 .p m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month.
Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturday during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.

MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday in each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Dancing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday.
Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.

LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week, Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal.
Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL COUNTRY CLUB:
A dinner dance is arranged for the third Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a. m., and not before two p. m.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB, SANTA BARBARA:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A recent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a special luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served.

PALOS VERDES GOLF CLUB: Offers an eighteen hole, all grass, seaside course, delightful for all the year play, open to residents and their guests. Lunch and dinner served every day. Tea and informal bridge may be enjoyed every afternoon.

ENCINO COUNTRY CLUB, VAN NUYS:
Buffet dinner dances every Wednesday evening.
Ladies Golf Thursday mornings.
Thursday a special luncheon is served, followed by bridge. Afternoon Tea 4:30.
Luncheon and dinner served every day.
Special luncheons, dinners, teas and bridge parties may be arranged for as desired.

NEWPORT HARBOR YACHT CLUB:
August 1 to 8, Sixth Annual Regatta of the Southern Californa Yachting Association.
August 7, Balboa Tournament of Lights, 8 p.m.
August 13, 20, 27, Ladies' Bridge Luncheon, 12:30 Noon.
Saturday, August 14, Marions, snow birds and bay sloops, 2 p.m., informal dance, 8 p.m.
Sunday, August 15, Speedboat race (176 cu. in. class) 10 a.m., speed boat race (151 cu. in. class) 11 a.m., performance handicap and star class (ocean course) 2 p.m.
Saturday, August 31, Star fleet ball.
Saturday and Sunday, August 21 and 22, International star class regatta.
Saturday, August 28, Marions, snow birds and bay sloops (bay course) 2 p.m., informal dance, 8 p.m.
Sunday, August 29, Performance handicap and star class (ocean course).
Friday, September 3, Final ladies' bridge luncheon, 12:30 p.m.
Friday, September 4, Labor Day ball.
Saturday, Sunday and Monday, September 4, 5, and 6, Stag cruise to Catalina Island.

CORONADO COUNTRY CLUB:
The third annual A. B. Spreckels Amateur Golf Tournament will be played August 25 to 28 inclusive. The tournament is open to all amateur golfers who are members of recognzed golf clubs affiliated with an association.

Where the Treasures of a Collector May Be Purchased as Gifts

A. Schmidt & Son

For Fifty-six Years

IMPORTERS OF ANTIQUE AND MODERN SILVER AND Sheffield Plate, Fine China and Glass

2320 W. Seventh St., Los Angeles

391 E. Colorado St., Pasadena

Boston New York Washington

Art

LOS ANGELES MUSEUM OF HISTORY, SCIENCE AND ART, Exposition Park: George Wesley Bellow's Memorial Exhibition, and the loan exhibition from private collections will continue to September thirtieth. This collection includes canvases of old masters as well as contemporary artists.

SOUTHWEST MUSEUM, Los Angeles: Exhibition of permanent collection.

CANNEL AND CHAFFIN, 720 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles, are showing in their galleries the paintings of Frederic M. Grant to August 14. This is the first showing of Mr. Grant's work in Los Angeles. A comprehensive, general show will be arranged for the last half of the month.

THE BILTMORE SALON will show during the month an exceedingly interesting collection of small paintings and sketches by Western artists, all new things, not shown heretofore, and modcrate in price.

BERNAYS, 2501 West Seventh Street at Carondelet, Los Angeles, has arranged a summer exhibition of paintings and colorctchings.

STONE INTERNATIONAL GALLERIES, Monrovia, is continuing the special summer exhibition of contemporary art, including oils, water colors and etchings.

KANST'S ART GALLERY on Mulholland Drive, Hollywoodland, is showing a collection of paintings by California artists, as well as by Eastern and European painters.

THE PRINT ROOMS, Hollywood, an unsurpassed collection of etchings and engravings, including good examples of the works of Rembrandt, Whistler, Durer, Millet, Corot, the Italian engravers, the French impressionists, and modern American and European etchers.

THE WILSHIRE GALLERIES, Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles, are showing paintings and color prints, with an occasional etching.

PASADENA ART INSTITUTE, Carmelita Gardens, has arranged a special summer exhibition including paintings by the Pasadena Society of Artists, paintings by David Tauszky, water colors and oils by Loren Barton, a collection of water colors and pastels loaned by Mrs. H. A. Everett, and a collection of paintings loaned by Mrs. Charles Gildehaus.

THE FREE LANCE ART LEAGUE announces a change in name of the League and it will hereafter function as the Los Angeles Art League. The corresponding secretary is Dr. D. Challis Faust, 2223 Glover Place, Los Angeles, who will receive applications and give desired information.

The Westlake
School for Girls
333 South Westmoreland Avenue
Residence and Day School
Lower School, College Preparatory, Junior College
Fully Accredited
Departments of Art, Music, Home Economics
FALL TERM BEGINS SEPTEMBER 29TH
JESSICA SMITH VANCE FREDERICA DE LAGUNA
Telephone DRexel 0052

An Ideal School for Young Women
Cumnock School
COLLEGE WORK IN THE FOLLOWING COURSES:
Vocal Interpretation of Literature
Literary Appreciation — Voice and Diction — Short-Story
Public Speaking — French — Dancing
Dramatics — Story Telling — Psychology
Journalism
Art and Art Appreciation
An accredited High School in Class A preparing for Western and Eastern Colleges and Universities.
HELEN A. BROOKS, Director
5353 West Third Street Los Angeles
WHitney 3427 —TELEPHONES— WHitney 7311

PACIFIC MILITARY ACADEMY
(Absolutely Fireproof)
Grammar and High School Departments
For Catalogue write
Commandant, P. O. Box No. 308, Culver City, Calif.
Telephones: Los Angeles—EMpire 6022
Culver City 3294

Norma Gould School of the Dance
announces
SUMMER COURSES FOR TEACHERS,
PROFESSIONALS AND CHILDREN
Authentic Dances — Pantomime — Eurythmics
Special Feature—Fundamentals of Toe, Waltz Clog and Ballroom Dancing
July 5-August 13, 1926
Scholarship Awarded
460 N. Western Ave. Send for Catalog
HEmpstead 3530

THE WILLIAMS SCHOOL
for Handicapped Children
449 North Madison Avenue, Pasadena, California
For the benefit of exceptional children who vary from the average type to a moderate degree; for those who are practically normal, except in time and variance of their development.
To each pupil is offered the educational essentials for his utmost development and the further stimulus arising from competitive and associate companionship. Admission may be obtained at any time for both day and boarding pupils. For full particulars address
BEATRICE MICHAU WILLIAMS, Director

SCULPTOR OF SILVER
FOR THE TABLE OF THE BRIDE
PORTER BLANCHARD
BURBANK :: :: :: CALIFORNIA

Marlborough School for Girls
Boarding and Day School Accredited to Eastern and Western Colleges
5029 West Third Street
36TH YEAR
ADA S. BLAKE, Principal

MISS HARKER'S SCHOOL
FOR GIRLS
Palo Alto -:- -:- -:- California
"The Home of Stanford University"
Outdoor life all the year round. One hour from San Francisco. College Preparatory and Special Courses. Separate residence for girls from 5 to 14 years. Catalog on request.

KENWOOD HALL
Resident and Day School for Girls. Sub-Primary through High School.
Open throughout the year.
Directors: Ruby Mildred King, Grace Baylor Bobbitt.
Tel. WAshington 1612 675 So. Vermont Ave., Los Angeles

The Girls' Collegiate School 34th Year
NEWLY LOCATED IN THE COUNTRY
Boarding and Day School. Accredited East and West. Out-Door Life a Reality. 50-acre estate. All sports. Saddle Horses. New Buildings. Italian type. L. A. Office, "Ask Mr. Foster" Information Service in Robinson's Dept. Store at Seventh Street and Grand Ave., Tel. BR 4701.
Glendora, Calif. Miss Parsons and Miss Dennen, Principals

Westridge
A COLLEGE PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS. ACCREDITED.
Primary, Intermediate and Academic Departments.
MARY L. RANNEY, AMIE C. RUMNEY, Principals.
324 Madeline Drive, Pasadena, California Telephone Wakefield 5276

The Elliott School for Girls
Residence and Day School.
Ideal Home Life Character Building
Superior Educational Advantages. Sub-Primary through Eleventh Grade.
Martha Collins Weaver, M. A., Principal. Pico Blvd. at Grammercy Place.
EMpire 5347

Urban
Military Academy
23rd YEAR
A good summer camp is an essential part of every real boy's education. Urban, with the most completely organized camp in the West offers a worthwhile summer in the High Sierras. Fishing, Swimming, Riding, all sports. Membership limited. Experienced staff. Enroll now. For information, see Secretary, Wilcox at Melrose, Los Angeles, California. HEmpstead 7602.

FINE PAINTINGS
STENDAHL ART GALLERIES
AMBASSADOR HOTEL LOS ANGELES

GREENWOOD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
5928 Franklin Avenue, Hollywood
Select Resident and Day School
Lawns, Tennis Courts, Outdoor Swimming Pool. Special advantages in music, under Mrs. Elsa Spencer.
Principals:
Mrs. M. Greenwood, Newnham College, Cambridge
H. F. Greenwood, A. B., Corpus Christi College, Cambridge
Telephone HOlly 2886

THE SAN DIEGO GALLERY OF FINE ARTS will continue the exhibition of the work of Southern California artists throughout the month. Six prizes were awarded: the Purchase Prize of $500 went to Cartaino S. Scarpitta for a marble bust of Miss Ellen Scripps. The First Prize of $100 was awarded Conrad Buff for his landscape painting, "Desert Hills." The Second Prize went to Katherine H. Wagenhals for the oil painting, "In the Park." The special first and second prizes in water color went to Karl Yens for his "The Pascha," and to Gertrude L. Little for her miniature, "Girl with a Parasol." A special prize was awarded to James T. Porter for his bronze "Portrait Bust of a Young Man."

AINSLEE GALLERIES, Barker Brothers, Los Angeles; Exhibition of American and European paintings.

LAGUNA BEACH ART ASSOCIATION has completed the purchase of the site for the new art gallery and Myron Hunt has submitted his plans for the building. The July exhibition of the association was an interesting one.

THE ARTS AND CRAFTS SOCIETY OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA has closed the shop but will continue to foster and promote the appreciation of handwork of those who work in the true craftsman spirit. The Society will pursue an educational program, sponsoring lectures and meetings with informative talks, and will hold exhibitions with honorary rewards.

PAINTERS AND SCULPTORS CLUB held an exhibition of unusual interest at the Stendahl Galleries, Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, during July. Among the members exhibiting were John Frost, Hanson Puthuff, Arthur Hill Gilbert, Haldane Douglas, Karl Yens, Leland Curtis, Fitch Fulton, D. B. Stuber, Henry M. Richter, Walter M. Chever, Edgar Alwyn Payne, and Max Wieszczorek. Finn Frolich was the only sculptor exhibiting.

KATHERINE LEIGHTON is sketching and painting in Glacier National Park again this summer.

ARTHUR HILL GILBERT is getting an exhibition together to forward to Macbeth's.

WILLIAM WENDT and AARON KILPATRICK are continuing their sketching trip through the High Sierras.

EDGAR PAYNE has also gone into the high mountains for sketching and painting material.

E. HODGSON SMART entertained with an Artists' Evening at his studio in the Post Bldg., 3305 Wilshire Blvd., last month. Two new Los Angeles portraits were shown, as well as paintings from the Royal Academy, London, The Salon, Paris, and the National Gallery, Washington.

ROGER NOBLE BURNHAM and Mrs. Burnham are spending the summer months at Laguna Beach.

ART LEAGUE OF SANTA BARBARA opened an exhibition of paintings and tapestries in July which will continue to August 28th. Among the artists exhibiting are Colin Campbell Cooper, John M. Gamble, Fernand Lungren, Frank Morley Fletcher, Oscar R. Coast, William L. Otte, Howard Russell Butler, Edward Borein, Lilia Tuckerman, Edward T. Jewett, Dudley S. Carpenter, and Alexis Podchernikoff.

EDWARD BOREIN attended the Rodeo at Salinas in his constant search for new sketching material among the cattle, horses and horsemen.

DAVID ANTHONY TAUSZKY is again occupying the studio at 371 Arroyo Terrace and is doing some very interesting landscape work. His ambition is to paint California sunlight as it is, and to that end he is using pure pigment, applied with every size and kind of palette knife.

Music

HOLLYWOOD BOWL SUMMER SYMPHONY CONCERTS will continue through August 28, on Tuesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:30 o'clock. Willem van Hoogstraten, conductor of Portland Symphony, will conduct the Bowl concerts, August 3, 5, and 6, to be followed by Eugene Goossens. Alfred Hertz will conduct the final concerts of the season.

THE MORMON TABERNACLE CHOIR appeared in the Hollywood Bowl, July 28. The ensemble included more than two hundred highly trained mixed voices, and eighteen soloists.

THE SMALLMAN A CAPPELLA CHOIR of forty mixed voices is a special feature of this, the seventh annual season of the Pilgrimage Play, given nightly, except Sunday, in the Hollywood Hills. This beautiful unaccompanied singing dates back to earliest history, "a capella" meaning literally "chapel style," and is peculiarly appropriate to this sacred drama.

"THEATER OF THE STARS," the popular woodland theater at Fawnskin, Big Bear Lake, is continuing the concerts of the summer season.

FEDERATED CHURCH BROTHERHOODS of California announce the presentation of a musical pageant, "Down in Alabam," under their auspices, at the Shrine Auditorium, Los Angeles, Aug. 27.

Glorious Colors Run Riot in These New Silks for Fall

Our silk counters, heaped with the new fall arrivals, are a feast of color and design It seems that every conceivable shade must be represented here, from the elusive "cloud tones" in the georgettes and chiffons, to the vivid gleam of Mephisto red, crushed violet and glacier green in flat crepes and taffetas. This display is an inspiration to the home dressmaker, and should give her pleasure in planning her Fall garments.

Coulter Dry Goods Co
FOUNDED IN 1878

Seventh Street at Olive

FAMED ROUND THE WORLD

". . . in America we take the

Sunset Limited"

In Paris and wherever world travelers gather the Sunset Limited is well known. It is recognized as offering the most in transcontinental travel in the United States.

World travelers know the Sunset Limited's colorful route of historic and romantic interest—daily from San Francisco and Los Angeles, through the picturesque Southwest and Old South to New Orleans; then by train or by Southern Pacific steamship to New York (meals and berth included in the fare).

Known also to experienced travelers are Sunset Limited's refinements of service—it's handsome observation and club cars, comfortable lounge rooms and shower-baths; its ladies' maid, barber, valet; and its dining cars that specialize in typical southern and western dishes.

Southern Pacific

C. L. McFAUL, Asst. Pass. Traffic Mgr., Los Angeles

SANTA ANA MUNICIPAL BAND, under the direction of Cianfoni, opened the season of summer concerts early in July at Birch Park. This band ranks among the best in Southern California.

KATHERYN COFFIELD, director of the Seven Arts Society of Long Beach, will present Richard Bonelli, Chicago Civic Opera baritone, in recital the 17th. On September 17th, Kathryn Meisel, contralto of the same organization, will appear. These concerts will be given at the Municipal Auditorium.

ARTLAND CLUB announces that following the close of the Sunday concerts by Tandler's Little Symphony, the Sunday afternoon music at the Club will consist of solo appearances by various artist members.

JOHN SMALLMAN opened the Smallman School of Music at the Pacific Palisades last month, and is planning to present the oratorio "Elijah," with a community chorus as a closing concert, August 15th.

GLENDALE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA has secured Modest Altschuler as orchestra conductor. Mr. Altschuler is the founder and was for years the conductor of the Russian Symphony Orchestra and has many plans for the advancement of the Glendale organization.

THE PERSINGER STRING QUARTET, founded in 1916 and known as an integral part of the Chamber Music Society of San Francisco, will hereafter be known as the Persinger String Quartet of Santa Barbara and make that city its home. The Quartet is composed of Louis Persinger, violinist; Louis Ford, violinist; Nathan Firestone, violist, and Walter Ferner, violon-cellist, and is noted for the smoothness, precision and vitality of all performances. In addition to the series of chamber music concerts which the Quartet will give during the winter in Santa Barbara, there will also be a series of three symphony concerts in January, February and March and an Artists' Series, presenting Ossip Gabrilowitsch, Tito Schipa, Rosa Ponselle, Efrem Zimbalist, and Hans Kindler.

LUCILE CREWS MARSH, the first woman to win the Pulitzer prize in music, which was awarded to her symphonic poem, "To the Unknown Soldier," was honored by its presentation in the Hollywood Bowl last month, under the direction of Emil Oberhoffer.

HENRY EICHHEIM will conduct at the Hollywood Bowl on Saturday, August 7, on which program will be played one of his latest compositions, "Chinese Legend."

Mr. Eichheim is a distinguished composer-violinist with a background of twenty-odd years in the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The last twelve years of his life has been devoted to the study and assimilation of Oriental musical motives. Mr. Eichheim's compositions have been played by nearly every first rank Symphony Orchestra of the world (he has conducted the Los Angeles Orchestra some four times in his own compositions), and he is now engaged in writing compositions for Stokowski of the Philadelphia Orchestra, for Koussivitzki of the Boston Orchestra, and Alfred Hertz, San Francisco Orchestra.

ALICE COLEMAN BATCHELDER, pianist, with the co-operation of the Pasadent Community Playhouse Association, will present a series of eight Coleman Chamber Concerts in the Community Playhouse, during the season of 1926-27, Sunday afternoons, at four o'clock, beginning in October.

THE PACIFIC COAST DIVISION OF THE AMERICAN UNION OF SWEDISH SINGERS held its biennial singing festival in Oakland in July. Los Angeles was chosen for the next convention and festival to be held in 1928. The organization was founded in 1905.

LOS ANGELES GRAND OPERA ASSOCIATION is perfecting plans for the third season, which opens with the presentation of "Samson and Delilah," October 4 in the Shrine Auditorium, Los Angeles. Then follow in balanced, contrasted repertoire, the operas "Il Trovatore," by Verdi. "Barber of Seville" by Rossini, "Martha" by Flotow, "La Tosca," "Aida" by Verdi, "Die Walkuri" by Wagner, "Rigoletti" by Verdi, "Madame Butterfly" by Puccini, "Faust" by Gounod, and "La Traviata" by Verdi. A season of two weeks, beginning Tuesday, October 4, with two Saturday matinee performances and a final performance on Monday, October 18, has been arranged. There will be opera on Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday of the first week, and on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday and the following Monday the next week. All performances will be in the Shrine Auditorium. The complete repertoire of the Association shows a brilliant personnel of operatic stars for each opera of the eleven to be presented. The singers have been chosen for their respective parts according to roles held in previous operatic performances. All minor roles are to be filled from the ranks of the chorus, as chorus members only will be given an opportunity to try for these minor roles. Through the staging of the operas in the new Shrine Auditorium, which has a seating capacity of more than six thousand it is possible to offer grand opera in Los Angeles at the lowest price heretofore attempted in this country.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYERS announce unusually interesting programs for the month:

To August 7, "Caesar and Cleopatra" by George Bernard Shaw; August 12 to 21, "The Great God Brown" by Eugene O'Neal; August 26 to September 4, "Pygmalion," by George Bernard Shaw. Matinees are given on Saturdays only.

GILMOR BROWN, director of the Pasadena Community Playhouse, will spend his vacation, beginning in August, in studying the latest developments in the dramatic world of Europe, as he will visit the British centers of drama as well as those of the Continent. Maurice Wells, associate director of the Playhouse, will accompany Mr. Brown.

IRVING PICHEL, director of the Berkeley Little Theatre, will be the guest director at the Pasadena Community Playhouse during the absence of Gilmor Brown. Mr. Pilcher will direct the Community Arts Players, at Santa Barbara, next season.

LOBERO THEATER, Santa Barbara, will present the "Romanic Young Lady," August 26-27-28, under the direction of Frederick McConnell, director of the Cleveland Playhouse.

"OLD SPANISH DAYS" is the title under which Santa Barbara presents her Fiesta, three days of delightful entertainment, opening August 26 and continuing through the 28. All of her friends are invited to come and to come in costume, as all the hosts and hostesses will wear the Spanish colors and styles and every mode of charming entertainment will be found.

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA announces the regular monthly Round Table luncheon will be held in the Studio Tea Room at the Community House, at 12:30 p. m. Madame Elinor Glyn will give a most interesting talk on "Russia," touching characters in some of her recent writings, August 5th, 9 p. m., on the Parrot Porch of the Ambassador.

PILGRIMAGE PLAY, now in the seventh annual season, is given every night at eight, except Sundays, in the open-air theater in the Hollywood Hills, at the junction of Cahuenga and Highland avenues. Reginald Pole portrays the role of the Christ; Helen Jerome Eddy assumes the part of Mary, the Mother. Jessie Arnold is the Mary Magdalene, with Montague Shaw, William Raymond, Belle Mitchell, Raymond Manion, Oscar Briggs, and Wharton James appearing in the cast.

POMONA COLLEGE CALENDAR

FOLLOWING the close of the Pomona College summer school on the Claremonth campus, at the Laguna Beach Marine Laboratory and also at the Pomona College camp in the mountains, the first annual post session of the summer school opened August 2d with two or three courses offered by college faculty members. The post session will close August 20th.

Pomona College regular winter semester's work opens on September 17th.

One of the most coveted of recent architectural commissions in Southern California has been awarded to Gordon B. Kaufmann, prominent Los Angeles architect, by the Scripp's College for Women board of trustees. Mr. Kaufmann has been given the commission to handle the achitectural plans for the first building, a women's dormitory, to be erected this fall and for subsequent buildings.

It is the plan of the board of trustees of the new institution that Scripp's College for Women will be constructed along Spanish-California designs, which will harmoniously fit into the architectural plan of Pomona college buildings.

WOMEN'S CLUBS

FRIDAY MORNING CLUB officers for the season of 1926-27 are as follows: President, Mrs. Charles F. Turner; first vice-president, Mrs. John J. Abramson; second vice-president, Mrs. Myron Westover; recording secretary, Miss Therese Levy; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Charles Lincoln Benham; treasurer, Mrs. Carrie S. Green; directors, Mrs. Martin G. Carter, Mrs. Richard Stanley Davis, Mrs. Caroline B. Eager, Mrs. Everett B. Latham, Mrs. Elmer Random Misemer.

TUESDAY MUSICAL CLUB of Pasadena has elected the following officials for the season of 1926-27: Mrs. George T. Judd, president; Mrs. Leon Eliel, first vice-president; Mrs. Henley Bussing, second vice-president; Mrs. Edward H. Mitchell, recording secretary; Mrs. Desmond Williamson, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Harry D. Pyle, treasurer, with Mrs. Maurice McLoughlin (re-elected) as the program chairman for the year.

THE RUSKIN ART CLUB now own their own club house, a building of concrete of mission type, built around a patio, at the corner of Plymouth and Eighth Streets, Los Angeles. Miss Pansy Whitacre is the president.

BUSINESS WOMEN'S CLUB held the installation dinner in the new club house, 975 South Hoover street, Los Angeles, last month. The newly elected officers are: Miss Ethel Jackson, president; Miss Maude Gardenshire, first vice-president; Miss Edna Edholm, second vice-president; Miss Camilla Mairs, third vice-president; Mrs. Hulda Wurts, treasurer; Miss Mildred Roberts, auditor, and Miss Bertha Pratt, secretary.

The Cheesewright Studios, Inc.

Furnishers and Decorators

Pasadena, California

LAKE ARROWHEAD LODGE
E. K. HOAK, Managing Director.
Mile High—American Plan—Open All Year
Reservations made at 319 Van Nuys Bldg. Tel. VA. 0959, or direct to Lodge. Call Lake Arrowhead Main 1. Rates, $7.00 a day and up, including meals and room.
Dinner Dance Every Saturday Night.

Bernays

2501 WEST SEVENTH STREET
LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

GALLERIES—PICTURES—FRAMING

Visitors Welcome

Eleanor and . . . .
Hollingsworth Beach
French and Italian Arts
630 East Colorado Street
Pasadena, California

PLAYWRITING CLASS of the Pasadena Center of the Drama League of America will meet with Mrs. Lawrence Keck, of South Pasadena, this month.

VAN NUYS WOMAN'S CLUB held the annual dinner, with installation of officers in June and announced a program of work to include the remodeling and enlargement of the clubhouse. Mrs. Estelle Moehn is the new president, Mrs. B. R. Holloway retiring after two years of service.

LOS ANGELES ADVERTISING ASSOCIATION is the new name of the former Woman's Advertising Club. The following officers will serve for the coming year: President, Mrs. Gertrude Maynard; vice president, Kate Brew Vaughn; secretary, Gladys Harvey Knight; treasurer, Ruth Patterson. The board of directors is composed of Ruth Stonier, Edith James, Florence Schindler and Rosalind Bates.

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL WOMEN'S CLUB held the seventh annual convention of the southern district in Anaheim in June. Mrs. George L. Winters of Uplands was elected president.

WEDNESDAY MORNING CLUB, Los Angeles, announce the following new executives: President, Mrs. H. L. Snow; first vice president, Mrs. Frank E. Wilmot; second vice president, Mrs. E. J. Kee; third vice president, Mrs. Robert Stanton; treasurer, Mrs. E. Q. Bowden; recording secretary, Mrs. A. S. Brunger; financial secretary, Mrs. Arthur Champlin; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Marian Phillips; board of directors, Mmes. Mary Pech, Arthur M. Olson, Louise Schulmann, F. W. Rottger, F. R. Galbraith, Cassius D. Blair and Frank O'Brien.

JUNIOR EBELL CLUB, of Los Angeles, covers a variety of interests during the year: Mrs. Dudley Frank, president, announced chairman of committees as follows: Mrs. Loren Babcock, assisted by Mrs. Lawrence Overell, benefits; Mrs. George Orme, assisted by Miss Doris Graves, card parties; Mrs. Lombard Smith, assisted by Mrs. Georgia Toolen, courtesy; Mrs. S. Kendall Gibson, assisted by Mrs. Fred Turner, dances; Miss Pauline Fischer, assisted by Mrs. Georgia Wustum, decoration; Miss Alice Warmbath, assisted by Mrs. Richard E. Letts, drama; Mrs. Albert Niblo, drama workshop; Miss Eva Ellen Haight, assisted by Mrs. Terrill Stevens, fashion shows; Mrs. Lombard Jurden, assisted by Mrs. James A. Donlon, posters; Mrs. Edmund Jackson, assisted by Miss Orris Cook, programs; Miss Carol Botsford, special programs; Miss Louise Ley, publicity; Miss Margaret Ross, assisted by Miss Betty Wheat, social welfare; Miss Dorothy Cooke, assisted by Miss Margaret Anderson, junior gifts; Miss Alice Nelson, assisted by Miss Suzanne Watson, telephone; Mrs. Dale Bacheller and Mrs. Howard Cote, tickets.

McDOWELL CLUB OF ALLIED ARTS, Los Angeles, announce the following election of officers: Mrs. Ralph aughlin, president; Mrs. Susan Funk, first vice president; Mrs. A. C. Miller, second vice president; Miss Christine De Vitt, recording secretray; Mrs. W. B. Albertson, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Leonard Roberts, treasurer, and Mrs. Emelia Goldsworth Clar, Mrs. Inez Harvout, Mrs. Dixie Gray and Miss Clara C. Wood, directors.

WOMAN'S PRESS CLUB OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA installed the new officers at a garden party in June: Mrs. Nellie Graham Sinclair re-elected presldent; first vice president, Leetha Journey Probst; second vice president, Elsie Noble Caldwell; secretary, Rena Bowling; corresponding secretary, Helen Vaughn; treasurer, Rose Baruch; auditor, Hester Moffatt; historian, Emma Seckle Marshall; directors, Mary Clough Watson, Clara Spalsing Ellis and Emily Wright.

LOS ANGELES CENTER, DRAMA LEAGUE OF AMERICA, announces the following officers for the ensuing year: Mrs. W. E. Silverwood, president; Mrs. Beatrix Duane, first vice president; Mrs. W. M. Williams, second vice president; Dr. J. Fraser Barbrick, treasurer; Miss Bird Sundy, recording secretary; Mrs. Kate McBride, corresponding secretary; Mrs. J. B. Stearns, Mrs. Robert Leland Gillespie and W. R. McDonald, executive directors; L. E. Behymer, Maurice Brown, Frayne Williams, Sigurd Russel, Margaret Barbrick Gillette, Mrs. Herbert Peery, Mrs. Ellspeth MacNeil, Mrs. A. H. Perdue and Cora Mel Patton, advisory board.

PASADENA CENTER, DRAMA LEAGUE OF AMERICA, announces the following officers will serve during 1926-1927: President, Mrs. Charles P. McCullough; first vice president, Mrs. Howard W. Wright; second vice president, Miss Eleanor M. Bissell; third vice president, Mrs. J. C. Gripper; recording secretary, Miss Louise Crawford; corresponding secretary, Miss Elizabeth Connor; treasurer, Karl A. Kieling. Members of the board are: Mrs. H. C. Barrell, Gilmor Brown, Mrs. Alson S. Clark, Clinton Churchill Clarke, Mrs. Harry Coleman, Miss Hildegarde Flanner, Mrs. L. Van Horne Gerdine, Mrs. A. Dwight Gibbs, Mrs. Henry Godfrey, Mrs. George E. Hale, Mrs. George R. MacMinn, George B. Maxwell, Mrs. Robert A. Millikan, Mrs. Samuel B. Morris, Mrs. William B. Munro, Mrs. Desaix Myers, Mrs. Frank H. Sellers, Mrs. H. I. Stuart, Mrs. J. S. Torrance, Miss Louise West, Mrs. F. B. Wetherby and Mrs. Walter S. Wright.

Mt. LOWE

"Earth has no finer view to show."

Mt. LOWE TAVERN and Cottages
Enlarged and Improved

at the terminus of this World-Famous Trip afford a most delightful retreat for a long or short sojourn at reasonable rates

5 Trains Daily at convenient hours - from Main St. Station Los Angeles

$2.50 Round Trip Rate

For information and Reservations apply

Pacific Electric Ry.

Information Bureau Phone MEtropolitan 4100 - TRinity 3661

HOTEL GREEN

A well ordered Residential and Tourist Hotel of peculiar excellence. Open all year. Moderate rates. Apartments by the month.

CHARLES B. HERVEY, Proprietor

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Italian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

KIEVITS GALLERIES
Vista del Arroyo Hotel, Pasadena
European and American Paintings

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - - Editor and Publisher
ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - - Associate Editor

No. 80 AUGUST, 1926 Vol. VIII

CONTENTS

	PAGE
"SUNLIT ARROYO," A PAINTING BY SAM HARRIS.....Cover Design
SANTA BARBARA FIESTA	3
SOUTHLAND CALENDAR .....Ellen Leech	4-6
WINGS AND SURF .....Theresa Homet Patterson	9
WILLIAM RITSCHEL, PAINTER.....Christine Curtis	10
THE AMERICAN SCULPTOR, LENZ.....M. Urmy Seares	11
FAREWELL TO SPRING .....Anna Head	12
WITHIN GARDEN GATES .....Ervanna Bowen Bissell	12-13
THE INCURABLE OPTIMIST.....Vera Sadicoff-Goldman	14
THE TOWN DOCTOR AND HOW TO FIND HIM.....	14
RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS .....Louise Morgrage	15
AT THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.....President James A. Blaisdell	16
THE SOUTHWEST MUSEUM.....Director James A. B. Scherer	17
SPORTS AFIELD AND AFLOAT.....Ellen Leech	18
THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF ARCHITECTS....H. O. Sexsmith	20
THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES.....	21
RAQUEL MELLER .....Jessica Kate Seneca	22
A DELIGHTFUL FARM HOUSE BY ROLAND COATE, ARCHITECT...	23
BETTER HOMES IN AMERICA.....Pearl Chase, Editor	24
IN THE INTEREST OF THE LANDSCAPE ALONE.....	25
THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE BULLETIN.....	26
THE HOMES OF SAN CLEMENTE.....	27

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.

Copyrighted, 1926, by M. Urmy Seares

Subscription price $2.50 per year, $1.25 one half year
R. B. URMY, JR., Business Manager
MAIL ADDRESS: CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
Advertisers desiring information concerning space or rates may call Fair Oaks 7034 for Publisher's Office
During Press Week. 24th to 30th, call TRinity 1501

The Los Angeles

Elizabeth Arden Salon

with

J. W. ROBINSON CO.
LOS ANGELES

UNDER the direct management of Miss Arden and her New York staff, and offering the same specialized treatments which have made Miss Arden's other salons internationally known.

Seventh Floor

Round the World Cruises
$1250.00 and up
Mediterranean Cruises
$600 and up

Agency for all tours and cruises. Here for your convenience. Let us arrange your reservations.

C. J. JONES STEAMSHIP AGENCY
372 East Colorado St., Pasadena
Phone Terrace 8026

La Solana

A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue.
Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day.

Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St. Pasadena

Announcements Invitations

Fine
Printing
Embossing

Thompson Advertising Company
Frank B. Guernsey
Suite 307 Braley Bldg.
Phone Fair Oak 7034 Pasadena

Antiques
JOHN W. CONDIT

Dealer in rare old pieces selected from private homes. Specialist in the proper restoration of heirlooms.

199 S. Fair Oaks Ave., Pasadena
Telephone Terrace 0315-W

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

WINGS AND SURF

By THERESA HOMET PATTERSON

WE greet with pleasure and regret the new Coast highway upon which the beach towns are strung. It will be another Amalfi-Sorrento or Grande Corniche—but it bursts into the privacy of the shore birds. For them there will be no more strolling unobserved up and down the beach, no dreamy hours of safety on the sand. Many of them will seek new solitudes—seek, but will they find—while others will stand their ground; but we shall hardly see any of them except the Gulls mixing with the bathers on the sand.

California will build more stately mansions, drain more lakes and sloughs, subdivide more meadows, unroll more ribbon roads through valley and desert, open up the mountain fastnesses—but where is the charm to be—with our wild life gone? Everything will be cultivated and tame—everything but the sea. Maybe Byron was thinking of the birds when he said, "Man marks the earth with ruin—his control Stops with the shore."

The birds shuttling back and forth weave the land and sea together on the endless shore line. All through August and September the migrating birds will be dropping in from the breeding grounds from north and east, and in case of the Herman Gull from the south, trailing the young birds after them. Every day holds a surprise. Many will have shed the nuptial garments and appear in browns and grays making it hard to identify them, having to depend upon manners and location. Some are on the rocks, some on the sand, others are wave margins, many are riders of the sea, while some are ever on the wing.

The Western Gull is an all year resident. Bonaparte, the smallest of the family will be back in August. Herring California and Ring-billed, in September. The Gulls add such beauty to our coast that we do not dwell upon their code of morals which is, what's thine is mine. The California Gull is very valuable in destroying earth worms, grass-hoppers and rodents on his journeys inland. Eighteen come every morning to a certain point to be fed. They are eighteen individuals. One is lame, one is boss and the others look to see where he is before grabbing food.

The Terns are among our most traveled guests and royal guests they are too. It was the Arctic Tern who first discovered the North and South poles, and had there been any land would have nested there. As it is he goes up where the sun does not set for his nesting. After a few little non-stop runs of two thousand miles or so passing us well out at sea he winters in twenty-four hours of sunlight. He is embodied light, a winged joy with the sky for playground and the sea for food. Swallow-like with more than Swallow grace they turn all labor into play. They are exquisitely modeled with slender wing and forked tail; their color white shading into blue gray with black on the head. The Least Tern summers here. If I covet any ones wealth it is to buy the alkaline land back of Playa del Rey for the Terns and their friends the Avocets and Stilts.

One never knows what may appear. Today it might be the Man-O-War-Bird would dive for a fish or hold up a Pelican. They are

"TIME WRITES NO WRINKLE ON THINE AZURE BROW. SUCH AS CREATION'S DAWN BEHELD THOU ROLLEST NOW."
THE PACIFIC AT PALOS VERDES, CALIFORNIA.

the masters of air craft and high diving. Volition seems the invisible power by which the Grebe sinks and the Man-O-War lies on the air and the Gull rises, turns and advances—Hawks and Eagles the same. How can they go for such distances, and spiral, with no visible movement of the wing?

The Gulls hovering over the deck add so much beauty and interest that I am always sorry to see them "turn again home." Shearwaters, Fulmans, Petrels, Murrelets and Auklets are riders of the sea and enter into the joys of an ocean voyage. When I am by the sea it seems restless; when I am in it, it seems over-powering; but when I am on it I fall in with its moods and the rising and falling of the ship is like deep breathing.

Along the rocky shores may be seen the Wandering Tatler, Spotted Sandpiper, Black Turnstones, and by rare good fortune the Surf-bird. The Wandering Tatler must have been misnamed as he prefers to wander alone and how can he get anything to tattle that way? Oh, I suppose he makes it up, which gives it a human flavor. Their Plymouth Rock lining becomes white in winter. I trust they keep the white line over the eye which gives them such a wise look. The surf has no more terrors for them than it has for a cork. Being a wanderer without the love of locality that most birds have, the coast highway will not grieve him, but what about us? Goodbye little Only-kind-of-Tatler-that-we-like. The Cormorant, that inveterate fisherman, may happen along or the Spotted Sand Piper so common inland may come teetering onto the beach just to see how the salt water birds deport themselves. I guarantee he can't find one to out-teeter him. If that does not identify him his "peet-weet" will. The Turnstone wears a calico dress (which means spotted) orange shoes and stockings, his bill has an upward tilt to help in turning stones and he can also scratch for a living. The Black Turnstone is happiest where rocks and spray meet, but those with the black collar trip after the wave for their fresh meat. The Surf-bird visits such rocky head-lands as our picture shows. He has managed to keep his nesting ground a secret. The Godwits have slightly upturned bills for probing mud and sand.

We could set the clock in La Jolla by the low line of pelicans going north in the morning, south in the evening. What a humiliated complex they must have after all that has been said about their appetites. About August fifteenth the Sanderlings will arrive from Arctic regions shrouded in the mystery of migration. They must tap divine strength on those great stretches of sea without food when going to the islands. Storms, avalanches, glaciers, big bears and little Snow-birds, but they will be too much occupied to tell us about it; Oh, so busy tripping after each wave, snipping the sand fleas, turning back with the next wave so close to their heels that we try to help them hurry. If their feet can't make it the wing can. The rythmic repetition is fascinating and recommended to those who need to get interested in something. With a swirl of glittering white they are off down the beach. Among the friends of the Sanderling there is a small edition of the Kildeer whose course is run from birth to death in the sand. He has but one black collar and that does not meet. You will lose your heart to him at first sight. Though black and white mark his gray suit he is camouflaged in his sand and shell setting. The Snowy Plover runs and stops: runs and stops. Dawson's story of this little sweetheart ought to go down as a classic.

THE PACIFIC AT CARMEL. WM. RITSCHEL, PAINTER

The Hudsonian Curlews must think of the sea as a mother for they run to her when frightened. They go north in Wild-Goose formation. There isn't the same urge for any of the birds to hurry in their return but these Curlews certainly do hurry back to California, getting their nesting all over up on the Yukon before the tourists get there. They have long sickle bills but that is no reason for their being called Jacks! They will be abundant until October—when off they go. What sets the day? Think of having no packing and a group with but a single thought. A month later than the Jacks the Western Willet stops over on his way to Brazil. He has learned one cannot be too careful and is quick to give the cry of alarm. Dawson, with his almost uncanny observation of detail, speaks of the way Willets, with other shore birds, "after hauling in their sails, fold the wings with momentary deliberation." Be sure to take a bird book to the beach. It will give you an introduction to all the folks you may meet there.

PAINTERS AND SCULPTORS IN THE WEST

A MARINE BY WILLIAM RITSCHEL, AMERICAN PAINTER, NEW YORK, AND CARMEL-BY-THE-SEA, CALIFORNIA, SHOWN IN THE EXHIBITION OF MR. RITSCHEL'S PAINTINGS IN NEW YORK

WILLIAM RITSCHEL, CALIFORNIA'S PAINTER OF THE SEA

By CHRISTINE TURNER CURTIS

A GROUP of superb marines painted by William Ritschel, N. A., together with a sprinkling of South Sea studies made up one of the most bracing of the spring exhibits at the Milch galleries, New York City.

Exulting in those canvases of tossed blue-green Pacific, whose slosh seemed almost audible in the small exhibition room, California lovers breathed deeply as if scenting the coast of distant Carmel. For here it is, on a bold headland, that William Ritschel, after many years of wandering has built his home. Here, he is a familiar figure on the pale-brown jutting cliffs, looking off to the changing ocean which he loves in every mood.

The artist was born in Germany, but when he began to study art, his first thought was the sea, and he spent years of apprenticeship in Holland and along the fjords of Norway, where sky and water play a hundred symphonies of color in a single day, and where with a devout brush he tried to catch them all.

The result is an idiom of the sea which few marine painters have attained and which has brought William Ritschel high praise in Europe and America. He has exhibited in all the prominent galleries of the art centers of the world. Recently his "Glory of Morning," a gorgeous marine of the Carmel coast, was purchased by the most eminent collector in England after exhibition at the Royal Academy. At the spring showing of the National Academy in New York his "Enchanted Pool" attracted scores of admirers.

Mr. Ritschel has just returned from a trip around the world, for the purpose of observation and work. Among the striking records of this journey is his large canvas, "The Horses of St. Mark's." Grounded

"STAR DUST"
An ornamental statue in bronze, silver, and gold, which required thirteen different castings for the different metals used. Each casting required as much labor as to make an individual statue. So great is the skill required that it has been admitted by the jury on architecture display at the architectural and allied arts exposition. It is sixteen inches high. The female figure is in golden bronze, commonly called Russian bronze; the male figure is in Roman coin bronze of a reddish hue; the drapery is in silver. It required many months of labor to make for each different metal must be cast at a different heat, and all the work must be done by the same man. It is a splendid example of individual effort and is the work of Alfred David Lenz in mysterious blue shadows, the cold outlines of the great bronze horses cut sharply on the cloud-masses of a pallid sky, and seem to mount from a troublous earth in the serenity and immensity of upper air. Delicate studies of the sea life of the Southern Islands and the picturesque Islanders show another phase of the artist's versatility.

But it was, perhaps, to the colors of the moody green Pacific to which most visitors turned with thirsty eyes. For William Ritschel knows how to transfer the life of the ocean to his canvas, to snare the sidlings and chucklings of the waves, to catch the cool mist that blows from the tip of the combers, so that the vigor and scent of the ocean pour out from the paint.

THE HORSES OF ST. MARKS. A PAINTING BY WILLIAM RITSCHEL

THE AMERICAN SCULPTOR, LENZ

By M. URMY SEARES

ACROSS the bay from San Francisco, on the shore below Tamalpais and up the slopes of this wooded mountain, there are retreats among the trees where artists and nature lovers hide and rest, and dream.

One such cottage peeks out among the leafy boscage and from its little porch the view embraces wide stretches of the bay, with Alcatraz, Angel Island and the Contra Costa shore. Here dwelt for a season that forerunner of the American renaissance in sculpture, Alfred David Lenz, whose recent death has placed his works among the immortals of America.

For three reasons the works of this artist are to be called great. In conception there is within them that spiritual quality which, appropriating the universal knowledge of his age, enables the artist, the poet, the mystic to grasp and to record the highest thought of which the race is capable. From the swirl of nebulous matter there is flung off into sunlit space humanity itself as "star dust." The sweep of trailing glory, the uplifted faces, the eager manliness combined with tender femininity of this little statue bespeak a strong soul that had mastered universal truths.

But besides the mastery of life's mysteries, the poet, the artist must master his medium and know its every quality. This, to an unusual degree did Alfred Lenz in his studio at Flushing, New York.

Likened to the work of Benvenuto Cellini and greeted as so finely proportioned that it indicates a return to the sane and wholesome qualities of the Italian Renaissance, his spirited and graceful "Atlanta's Race" was pictured in The International Studio at the time of its exhibition in New York last year. In the possession of Mr. Allen Balch, president of the Hollywood Bowl Association, California, is a ring made for him by Lenz a few years ago. Tenderly modeled and wrought by the artist are two figures curved around the ring as though resting there after their flight into space.

THIS SPIRITED, GRACEFUL FIGURE IN BRONZE AND PRECIOUS METALS, DESIGNED AND CAST BY ALFRED LENZ, SCULPTOR, IS IN THE METROPOLITAN MUSEUM OF ART. PAVLOWA IN THE BUTTERFLY DANCE.

This sculptor was called at the beginning of this sketch a forerunner of the American Renaissance because he not only has the spiritual qualities of the poet and artist; not only does he accomplish his end in his chosen materials, but he has the third quality of greatness by which, delving deep into the art work of the past, working patiently for hours to discover new methods he has been enabled to put the vital modern energy of today into the learning of yesterday, to add to it instead of discarding it, and thus in his exquisite little statues, to "bring back to earth some long lost loveliness."

A California Wildflower

This charming flower is found among the dried grasses of the coastal region after most other blooms have faded; and has inspired several popular names as "Farewell to Spring" or "Summer's Darling." It has delicate, satiny rose-colored petals with bright carmine blotches at centre, its shaping showing relation to the Evening Primrose. Forty other species and varieties are described by Jepson in his new botany, varying in tints and markings. So, hardly any locality is without some form.

GODETIA AMVERNA, OFTEN CALLED "SUMMER'S DARLING" OR "FAREWELL TO SPRING." PHOTOGRAPH AND NOTES BY COURTESY OF MISS ANNA HEAD, BERKELY, CALIFORNIA

WITHIN GARDEN GATES

ERVANNA BOWEN BISSELL, EDITOR, GARDEN PAGES

LAVENDER ALYSSUM AND BLUE CONVOLVULUS COVER THE POOL'S COPING WRERE BIRDS BATHE AND PREEN THEIR FEATHERS ON THE FOUNTAIN'S RIM IN MISS JANE RAWLING'S GARDEN

WHERE are you going to spend your vacation? Instead of camping, fishing or lounging at the seashore, why don't you start on the trail of gardens? Not looking for any or every garden, but searching for the loveliest one. Going like a floral pilgrim on a Quest for the Ideal Garden. It is great sport. I know for I have just come back from one.

It was a long trail stretching into Alabama and the hanging gardens of Birmingham. The art of the Olmsteds has made the side of Iron Mountain a place of winding roads and artistic homesites. The native, igneous rock has been used for retaining walls, foundations and chimneys, striking a chord of color from pale buff through orange to deep brown. The steep banks are draped with honeysuckle, its yellow blossoms interwined with lavender vetch. Pink azalia grows wild and the flowering dogwood holds its white bracts against a background of oak and pine.

My trail wound north and westward across desert gardens planted with such varied color and on so vast a scale that human efforts seemed futile in comparison. I passed by frontier gardens that touched the heart. Little plots of ground where stunted plants struggled in poor soil and searing sunshine tended by some flower-loving woman in memory of her life "back home."

Following by motor a portion of the trail Lewis and Clark cut through the wilderness, I came to woodland gardens thick with bracken and clumps of white-plumed spirea—twin cousin to the greenhouse Astilbe. Lavender Gilia, bluebells and yellow coreopsis grew in the shade of Douglas firs. Sometimes a Veery's song rang from the covert of ferns and once, down by the brook, came the "witchety,witchety" call of the Maryland Yellow-throat.

Alas, there were acres of gaunt gardens where blackened trees still stood. Around them the ground was ablaze with fireweed, Nature's kindly flame that follows the torch.

There were wind-blown gardens in neglected fields where the blue cornflower and pink fleabane grew among the ripening wheat. In the hollows, pasture ponds were fringed with rushes that hid the red-winged black-bird's nest.

I rode for miles between roadside gardens where the blossoming weeds made gay the way. Blue chicory and Queen Anne's lace, patches of purple clover, countless yellow marigolds growing among the tansy's daisies and the dusty-white of yarrow. While always a meadowlark sang from some fence-post ahead.

I climbed the hills of Seattle where from many a lovely garden one caught glimpses of Mount Rainier rising ghost-like above the clouds. Or looking westward saw the Olympic Range,

ONE WAITS TO SEE THIS ADORABLE CHILD WADE AMONG THE LILY PADS. FIGURE BY MISS GRAVATH. MRS. MURRAY JOHNSON'S GARDEN POOL IN PIEDMONT, CALIFORNIA

GARDENS OF PIEDMONT, CALIFORNIA

"Those snowy mountains that like a string of pearls are bound
About that glowing sapphire—Puget Sound."

But trails must end and mine did on the hills above the Golden Gate. In the Piedmont gardens, it seemed as if I were nearing my goal. They have individual charm. To overcome Nature's obstacles seems to have brought out all man's ingenuity. Or shall I say woman's? In most cases it is the woman who plans and works her garden. Mrs. Waldron the garden club's president—has the joy of making a hillside garden where trees overhang the banks and a brook gurgles at the botttom. One envies her the chance to grow ferns, sedums, vines and other creeping plants among her rocks.

Mrs. Green's garden is like a gay rug, its grassy center bordered by lovely designs in color. Hollyhocks, delphiniums and giant pink mallows carry the floor pattern up until the whole seems living walls hung with flowered chintz. It is an out-of-door room loved and lived in.

Did you ever see a house which had slipped halfway down a hill and perched there in a garden blossoming above and below it? Look for Mrs. Mark Noble's. You walk down between blooming plants and shrubs, through the hall and out onto a terrace where pink climbing roses, mauve and blue flowers overflow the banks onto the paths and steps of the varying levels. Never have I seen more perfect Rosy Morn petunias since the days when these white throated, pink-rimmed beauties came to brighten our borders. I have blamed the California sun for the carmine color which dyed my plants. It is a joy to know that Hallewell keeps a pure seed-strain of clear white and pink.

WALL FOUNTAIN BY ENID FOSTER IN THE GARDEN OF MRS. ARTHUR TASHEIRA SURROUNDED BY BLUE FLOWERS LIKE REFLECTIONS OF BLUE SKY—AND THE BLUE WATERS OF THE BAY

MRS WALTER STARR'S GREEN CLOSE CIRCLED BY BLOSSOMING FRUIT TREES. LAVENDAR AND YELLOW IRIS WITH BLUE BANDS OF FORGETMENOT BORDER THE BRICK WALK

The rock-edged pool in Mrs. Murray Johnson's gardens chains your feet. You wait, moment by moment, to see the cunning child slide into the water to wade among the lily pads. Miss Cravath has caught the spirit of childhood and fixed it in the little figure sitting among the flowers.

In Miss Jane Rawling's garden you go by stepping-stones to the pool set in the green grass. The water drips from the fountain's shallow bowl into the basin below. Lavender alyssum and blue convolvulus creep among the iris and phlox, softening the hard lines of the cement coping. Birds come to drink and bathe, preening their feathers as they perch on the fountain's rim.

The lily pond is set flush with the brick wall in Mrs. Walter Starr's green Close. It is walled-in by a cypress hedge against which apple and pear hold their blossoming boughs. Underneath them rise stalks of lavender and purple and yellow iris, while blue forgetmenots fringe the borders. The taller trees are kept without this little garden and come in only by reflection below the water lilies' opening buds.

Mrs. Arthur Tasheira was the Piedmont Garden Club's first president. She has a blue garden, blue flowers in every shade and tone shimmering like the waters of the Bay under a California sun. But she not only grows pure color, she seeks purity of line and has brought unfading beauty in her use of this wall-fountain by Enid Foster. The figure's delicate loveliness is held in clear relief unmarred by planting. Nothing is allowed to hide its sculptured grace. Only the sun's shadow touches this exquisite work of a gifted artist.

One is much impressed by the design of Mrs. Moffat's garden. It is so admirably planned. From the house terrace the ground slopes to the east. Half-way down the central path, it is bi-sected by another one, and radiating paths meet, diverge, giving access to different levels. Flowers border the walks. Vistas open under drooping branches or are closed by well placed shrubbery. It is a garden of pictures, none more deftly wrought than the rose-garden. Tall velvety-crimson clusters are held above a ground cover of lavender and purple violas. In the sunshine, with half shadows cast by the trees or a passing cloud, this daring composition makes you catch your breath. Vibrating with color, it seems a stained glass window or an Oriental jewel set in greenish gold.

No, I did not find my garden ideal. The lure of the elusive is still strong. Soon I shall start again on my quest. Meanwhile I have brought back so many charming features that someday perhaps—who knows! I shall combine them into an ideal garden of my own!

MRS. JAMES K. MOFFAT'S ROSE-GARDEN AN ORIENTAL JEWEL . . . WHERE CRIMSON ROSES SPREAD VELVET PEDALS ABOVE A CARPET OF PURPLE AND LAVENDER VIOLAS, PIEDMONT, CALIFORNIA

THE INCURABLE OPTIMIST

By VERA SADICOFF-GOLDMAN, M. D.

IT IS June,—but the day is cool. A westerly wind makes me draw my wrap closer about me. The fog plays hide and seek in the tops of the tall eucalyptus trees, lazily drawing delicate chiffons before them.

I am with Ingrid in her garden. Ingrid is beautiful with rare beauty. It appears that the sun has hidden in Ingrid's hair and tinctured it with gold. It is gold tissue blowing about her face. Her skin, with the tiny freckles over the nose, has a hint of gold in its structure. Her blue eyes become melting, golden, when she speaks, for Ingrid rarely speaks of things inanimate. It is life that she is concerned with, and with life and all things having the gift of life, she has a boundless sympathy and understanding. The warm, melting look is in her eyes when she speaks of her tall, blond, god-like sons, of her husband who is sometimes ill, and sometimes weary. It is there as she uncovers the boxes, cans and jars with tiny seedlings struggling toward the light, and as she stoops to pat her three huge dogs.

Ingrid's garden is a series of surprises. Ingrid's terraces are so overgrown that each is isolated from the others. The wind does not penetrate the guarded quiet of this spot. Ingrid leads me to the highest terrace, along the narrowest of paths. "I will show you my bees," she says. I look at her with inquiry, and a little fear—I am ready to run. She reassures me. "It is so cold today, they will not fly. Poor things, I hate to have them get so cold," she says, pityingly. She lifts the cover of the hive and exposes the frames covered with bees. A few of the bees cling to her hand. Gently, lovingly, caressingly she puts them back on the frame. She lets me examine an empty frame. It is exquisite in its perfection, consisting of two rows of hexagon shaped cells on either side of a central partition. She explains the structure of the hive, replaces the cover and leads me into the house for coffee, with biscuits and amber honey in the comb. And as we sit and chat, Ingrid talks of the habits of her bees. Ingrid would be a splendid sociologist and economist, I think. She understands the social organization of the hive so thoroughly. But it is difficult to label Ingrid, to place her in a pigeon-hole. I remember that but a moment before it had occurred to me what a fine biologist she would make, and then dismissed that thought. The superb creature that Ingrid is, the product of Norse ancestry and life, needs no classification.

Ingrid talks of the worker bee, carrying on for the common good without one thought of individual profit or aggrandizement. Her imagination is stirred by the development of the queen-bee. When the bees need a queen in the hive, they feed the larvae food called "queen-bread." The larvae are given great care. Those that go to make a queen do not differ from the larvae that make a worker bee, but the food and care they get is different and better. They are "trained to be queens."

"On spring mornings I have gone to the hive and listened for the 'piping of the queen'", Ingrid tells me. "It is such a plaintive cry. Is it not sad to think that of all the queens, only one will live. The most beautiful, the strongest will sail into the sky and there find her mate. He must be well worthy of her gracious favor. The queen selects the drone that flies the highest, and whose buzz is the most musical. When she returns to the hive the queen is ready for her work of laying eggs, of populating her world, while the worker bees care for and feed the numerous young." As she talks, Ingrid refills my cup; she urges me to eat of her honey. "It is there for man's use," she tells me simply.

"Is it not, rather, for the use of the bees," I ask.

"No, there is enough for both bees and man, they make so much more than they need. It is so planned." Her faith is simple, direct, unquestioning. "I must take some to the babies of my neighbor."

"Yes, do," I urged, "nothing can be better for them." Ingrid looks at me questioningly. I bring forth a tiny pamphlet published by a pharmaceutical house. In it is a reprint of an article from the London Lancet, with interesting comment by the editor, on "Honey: Its Value in Heart Failure," by Dr. A. N. W. Thomas of Edinburgh.

"You see," I continue, "we live in the happy period where the 'old wives' empirical knowledge of what is beneficial to mankind, is being explained by definite scientific facts. We always knew that honey in some way was helpful; now we know the reasons why it is helpful." I turned to the article and read: "The bee takes the nectar from various flowers into its crop. There the nectar is digested by means of an enzyme called invertase, secreted by glands in the head and thorax of the bee. The honey is deposited in the hive but the conversion continues after it has been deposited." "You, Ingrid, in your personal experience have, no doubt, found that the honey which has been in the hive some time, is much better than the honey which has been there but a short time. It is thought that honey seldom gives rise to fermentation in the alimentary canal (stomach and intestines) since it is so rapidly absorbed there is little time for bacterial action. This makes it valuable in the feeding of infants and children. Honey has a value in stimulating peristalsis (action of the bowels) and digestion." After this digression I read on: "The main use of sugar in the body is to supply muscular energy. An instrument has been devised, called an ergograph, measuring the energizing effect of sugar on muscular effect. It has been computed that muscle in action can consume three and a half times as much sugar as muscle at rest. Starling found that a normal heart used up sugar at the rate of about four milligrams per gram of heart, per hour. If sugar, and pre-eminently honey, be the most potent fuel to provide energy for the muscles, should we not remember to give it for that all important and most vital muscle of all—the heart, which gets no physical rest; other muscles, yes, but, for the heart no respite—until the 'tale is told'."

The author goes on to say, that "in severe cases of malnutrition with heart weakness he has found honey to have a marked effect in reviving heart action, and keeping the patient alive. He has had further evidence of this in a recent case of pneumonia. The patient consumed two pounds of honey during the illness; there was an early crisis with no subsequent rise of temperature, and an exceptionally good pulse. Instead of depending on milk and beef extract, as is done in so many cases of fever, when the storage of sugar in the body is rapidly being used up, the author advised that honey be given for general physical repair and above all, for heart failure: and for reasons similar to those set out above, grapes constitute a valuable adjunct. Herbiverous animals thrive on clover, no doubt because of the nectar which is probably vitaminous in the white and red clover flowers." Dr. Thomas concludes his article with the Biblical injunction, "My son, eat thou of honey because it is good." Prov. 24:12.

The reading ended, I turn my attention to my rapidly cooling coffee. Ingrid looks at me gravely. "It is good to know this," she says, "I shall give my bees greater care, more time than before. We shall have more honey to build young human lives to sustain the old. I am so grateful to you. It is a joy to know the why and wherefore of things, to do our work with an intelligent understanding of its value in making life easier and better. It makes me more optimistic, happier," she continues smilingly.

"Yes, the constant reading, the contact with medical thought and medical progress has made an Incurable Optimist of me, too," I answer, as I rise to leave. And as I stand at the door bidding my hostess farewell, the gold of her hair becomes dispersed into a shining halo.

THE TOWN PHYSICIAN—THE CLINIC AND HOSPITAL

HAVE you called your town doctor? Let us hope that there has been no need to do so. Yet there is no more straight path to knowledge of what science and research can do to keep us healthy than the path which leads through our city hall with its emergency hospital.

Much credit is due Dr. Troensegaard, chief surgeon of the emergency hospital, for his organized method of handling the victims of the New Year's Day accident, and the whole force from boy and girl scouts through police, nurses and doctors.

Setting aside all idea of favoritism or personal acquaintance, one can, by a little study obtain a clear view of what the profession of medicine has to offer as a result of its hundreds of years of study, if he will stroll downtown and, entering the immaculate little wards, follow the course of a cure through the further medical care one may receive at our clinics, dispensary and the Pasadena hospital.

Pasadena offers an unusually fine opportunity to make this investigation and thus find out who are the real doctors and who are the quacks. The Pasadena Hospital, because of the devotion of its Board of Directors and its highly effective management, today leads in modern service.

The Pasadena Hospital Association is doing its utmost to reduce the cost of hospital service to the patient. Its yearly budget is framed to meet its expenses without profit.

There now exists in Pasadena a large field for hospital service to those to whom the actual cost of the service given is a severe hardship. The Pasadena Hospital is fully organized and ready to give ever increasing, efficient and sympathetic care to those patients and it can so give to a greater number, provided it is assured that any deficit arising from this extension of its work will be fully paid.

It is, therefore, asking the public it serves to act as guarantor of any possible deficiency arising from the work of the Pasadena Hospital Association for the current fiscal year, and calls on everyone supplied with this world's goods to pay to its treasurer his or her proportionate share of any such deficit.

The great field of scientific, medical and surgical knowledge is therefore open to everyone. The best surgeons and physicians all have access to everything that anyone of them knows or discovers. No substitute for a proper diagnosis is excusable when one lives in a city supplied with a health system such as this.

Dr. Stanley Black who as City Physician and Pathologist of Pasadena in the past set a high standard for the Profession of Medicine and inspired all who knew him

So desirous are his fellow seekers-after-knowledge to perpetuate his ideals, that they have furnished a meeting room in the new Professional building as a memorial to Dr. Black

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

ACOMA, THE SKY CITY

By MRS. WILLIAM T. SEDGWICK. Harvard University Press

The traveller on the comfortable Santa Fe Limited, winding through the barren wastes of New Mexico, finds it difficult to believe, that four hundred years ago, European adventurers, were exploring this colorful region, and associating in more or less hostile fashion, with the picturesque natives. It is territory with a wonderfully impressive and romantic background, a fact long since accepted by historical students, who have conducted their efforts at research therein accordingly. This work, we have before us, places its author among the most enthusiastic and thorough-going investigators, for in preparation for her subject, she has apparently consulted much matter unpublished, as well as published, on this most interesting region. The focus of her efforts is the pueblo settlement of Acoma, belonging to the Keresan nation. Situated about twenty miles south of the railroad station of Laguna, on an almost impregnable island mesa, seventy acres in extent, and rising about three hundred feet above the plain surrounding it, this remarkable Indian Village was seen first by Europeans, nearly a hundred years before the English settled Plymouth, Massachusetts.

All of this history is related by Mrs. Sedgwick very succinctly, with an instructive account, which naturally, like all late historical work, destroys more or less the traditions, which we grew up with, and which generally sooner or later get tossed unconcernedly into the historical rubbish heap. It has always been so pleasant to regard the Spaniards as cruel and self-seeking, and the Americans most philanthropic in the treatment of these pueblo Indians, but we surmise that Mrs. Sedgwick does not take any such comforting view of the American regime. However putting aside the question of opinions, any reader, even slightly interested in pueblo Indians, will find much worth while information in the pages of this book.

Courtesy of Courtenay Monsen. Photograph by Frederick Monsen.

AN UNUSUAL VIEW OF KATZIMO. FROM THE TOP OF ACOMA, NEW MEXICO. THIS IS A CORNER OF THE VIEW GIVEN OF THE CLIFFS OF ACOMA. ON PAGE 165, IN MRS. SEDGWICK'S BOOK, WHICH CONTAINS MANY ADMIRABLE ILLUSTRATIONS.

LILITH

By GEORGE STIRLING. The Macmillan Company

Poetry without fire, brilliantly hard, and cold like beautifully chiselled marble, is the kind Mr. Stirling has written in this dramatic poem entitled "Lilith". Our friend, the practical business man who gave a verdict on "The Goat Song", likens this poem to the resplendent frosting on a wedding cake he once saw displayed. However, he adds, that Stirling has included in his frosting, "far more than whites of eggs, and sugar, for there are some very beautiful passages in the poem". Which acknowledgment, coming as it does from a typical level-headed man of worldly affairs, is very high praise indeed.

The setting of "Lilith" is placed in the medieval age, that happy hunting ground of poets, in search of glamourous or symbolical effect. Lilith, the enchantress, eternally young, and always fair, so tempts Tancred, at different periods of his life, in youth, and later in middle age, that he commits unworthy deeds. When ultimately her seductive powers fail to allure him farther in his old age, she takes to reasoning, good sound logical reasoning too, but of course that fails as well. Surely this is the conception, that woman with her tricky wiles, has a baleful influence on man's sense of rectitude, an idea originated perhaps by Adam, when he said, "The woman tempted me and I did eat", and of which the essence is contained in the French saying "Cherchez la femme", whenever some man is discovered in a more or less distressing plight. Apparently, Mr. Stirling, as well as Adam, and the French, and doubtless many others, assumes, that the feminine lure is responsible for much of the crookedness going on everywhere, so upsetting to the peace and comfort of an otherwise fairly decent world.

GEORGE STIRLING, THE AUTHOR OF "LILITH"

As a poet, Mr. Stirling shows evidence of possessing much talent, but he occasionally fails in his craftmanship. He outlines his situations too sharply, neglecting that delicate shading so necessary for an artistic effect, and in the last scene, which heaven knows is founded on absolute truth, he makes an abrupt change from symbolical to realistic treatment, which somehow strikes the wrong key in the harmony of the poem. It takes colossal genius to depict the heart-breaking facts of life, truthfully, faithfully, and yet acceptably.

Mr. Edmund Vance Cooke must have been reading "Lilith," for he comes to the defense of womankind in a most unusual poem, entitled "Adam." It was published in the July Bookman, and quoted by The Literary Digest with the comment, "Sometimes an idea turned inside out, reveals a surprising fruitfulness of new thought." Here are the verses and our thanks to Mr. Cooke.

". . . She gave me of the tree and I did eat."
Gen. III. 12.

"The woman tempted me and I did eat"
Aye and the honest words I still repeat.
The woman tempted me. T'is no pretense
Nor need I vindication nor defense
There is no guilt nor innocence.

Lord God, I ask You! Why, these beasts can see!
She is a temptress and was meant to be!
She is the Fruitful one, Lord God, and she,
The Knowledge I have taken from your Tree.
The woman tempted me—and tempts me still!
Lord God, I pray You, that she ever will.

I take Your banishment without demur.
A fig for Paradise. You but confer
A hardier Paradise, henceforth with her,
My own sweet temptress—and my comforter.
And so I say again, for good or ill
The woman tempted me—and tempts me still.
Lord God I pray You that she ever will.

SOUTHLAND

A Crucial Day at the League of Nations

Reprinted in part from The Pomona College Quarterly Magazine

THE scene is set in the old, inadequate, severely plain Hall of the Reformation about a stone's throw from the shore of Lake Geneva. You saluted Mont Blanc as you came into the room where the representatives of forty-nine nations are gathered in the final session of the extraordinary meeting of the Assembly of the League of Nations. The Assembly itself occupies almost the entire floor of the building while press and people are crowded into every inch of space in the two narrow galleries which parallel the three sides. It is said that the meeting was to have been held in a more adequate theater but it was appointed here that all the former circumstances might surround the greatest event in League history—the admission of Germany.

It is the ninth day since the Assembly had its opening and only previous session. Then the enthusiasm had been beyond bounds as the newly elected President, Affonso Da-Costa of Portugal, felicitated the Assembly on the coming event. The old days and old attitudes were over. The face of Europe was toward the dawn. Then the Assembly had adjourned to await the advice of the Council which should come at any moment. A day—at most two—should complete the memorable transaction.

It is not essential to the outcome to recount the European differences which speedily arose in the League Council for they were resolved in due time and the final result sprang from other causes. Nevertheless these continental conflicts not only throw light on the European situation but it should be made clear that they served also to fan into still higher flame the keen feelings of expectancy and concern. At or after Locarno it appeared that Poland aspired to a permanent seat in the Council. At Locarno no particular stipulation had been made that the form of the Council should remain unchanged but Germany not unnaturally assumed that she was to join the League as it then existed.

But when the enlargement of the Council was proposed Germany objected to the change of the organization [!] To meet the difficulty Mr. Vandervelde, the Belgian delegate, proposed to resign his temporary seat that a Polish delegate might replace him, but to this France objected. The upshot was that two of the most valuable members of the Council, Dr. Unden of Sweden and Dr. Benes of Czechoslovakia offered to give up their temporary seats, Holland and Poland being substituted as thus presenting an equitable representation. This magnanimous offer was tentatively accepted and seemed to furnish a satisfactory compromise after long and heated days of perplexity.

However a change in the Council must be by unanimous consent of its members and when all the shifting had been accomplished, through a patience and persistence which certainly made a most hopeful phase of the situation, a new difficulty suddenly arose. As the price of her vote for Germany, Brazil demanded that her own temporary seat be made permanent. The Brazilian delegate announced that he was so instructed by his government and that he had no option. Cablegrams to the President of Brazil from many sources in both hemispheres either failed to find him or to change the situation. The impasse was final.

Such was the background of the final session of the Assembly and it is a tense moment when the president calls the body to order and announces that the Chairman of the Committee on Germany's admission will make his report. Somehow every one feels that all Europe is at attention as Sir Austen Chamberlain, finely-groomed English gentleman, steps forward and asks that the honorable delegate from Brazil be heard. The Brazilian representative presents a written statement. Until this moment there were many who believed that he would find some way of escape. He evidently realizes that he alone is staying the will of half a hundred nations for the paper trembles in his hands, yet he speaks with a ringing voice. The decision is final and irrevocable.

Then Sir Austen again takes the floor and in deliberate extempore speech, vibrant with suppressed feeling, expresses his regret that it is impossible to give Germany a permanent place on the Council at this time and since her request was based on this understanding that the whole question of her admission into the League must be deferred until the September meeting. He does not say it but every one is thinking that then the Assembly will elect a new panel of temporary seats and Germany will find her entree. Following Chamberlain comes Briand who is everywhere cheered as he appears in Geneva. In a thrilling and earnest speech he, too, affirms Germany's right to her seat, moves a vote of assurance to her on the part of the Assembly and expresses his joy in the reaffirmation of the Locarno pact which has been made at the suggestion of Germany.

Then follows three speeches of outstanding importance: Viscount Ishii, the reserved and impressive ambassador of Japan at Paris, suggesting that he should advise the Council, of which he is President, to appoint a commission to examine into the composition and method of election of the Council and report to the Assembly in September; M. Unden, so weak from recent illness that another read the speech, but whose appearance gave the opportunity of tremendous applause, and perhaps most important of all, M. Cabeleo of Paraguay courteously but definitely disclaiming the attitude of Brazil in the name of the other South American states.

Then in rapid succession world spokesmen of many nationalities follow each other in a brilliant procession: Motta, the able and vigorous representative of Switzerland; M. Loudon of the Netherlands; the stately, handsome and honored international nobleman, Fridtjof Nansen; M. Piip of Esthonia; the short, modest Chao-Hsin Chu of China saying in simple language some profoundly important things; and finally M. Mehdi Frasheri, the dark-skinned Albanian delegate, whose divergence from the proposed action was greeted with the longest and most enthusiastic applause. He was for direct action. He believed that the Assembly was superior to the temporary members of the Council; they stood in a different category from the permanent members. Might they not be recalled and the Assembly proceed to its purpose without delay? That he carried the enthusiastic impulses of the Assembly was obvious. It was a thrilling incident, this diffident, unfamed olive-hued representative of backward Albania speaking out alone the aggressive mind of the civilized world. But more conservative counsels, probably wisely, were to prevail.

Even in this hurried review we must stop to pay heed to the words of Chao-Hsin Chu, just mentioned. It is an open secret that China though aspiring to a permanent seat in the Council has not paid the regular dues. But the message was none the less weighty. First, in the further proposed development of the League it must not assume that the great military powers are ipso facto the dominant partners in the League. Such assumption could only operate to re-entrench militarism. Second, European affairs are vital but the League is an affair of the whole world. It should have its eyes on the whole world with equal devotion. If this political philosophy of the Chinese delegate may now be over-idealistic, it is nevertheless indisputable and these principles will be major axioms of the League which by the slow beating out of experience is sometime to eventuate.

At last the final moment comes. The session began at ten o'clock and it is now one. The Portuguese President calls the end of the debate and declares Briand's motion carried without opposition. He makes a closing address in French, assuming Germany's entrance in September and before the interpreter finishes the English translation the hall is empty and the drama is ended. JAMES A. BLAISDELL

Pres. of Pomona College, Contributing Editor "The Congregationalist"

OPINION

The Southwest Museum

IN planning its future work the Southwest Museum has asked this country's leaders in its line to act as an Advisory Council to The Southwest Museum.

Dr. John C. Merriam has consented to be chairman of this Advisory Council, and will soon arrive in Los Angeles to act in this capacity. He is president of the Carnegie Institution of Washington.

Dr. James H. Breasted, famous Egyptologist now in Chicago, will be the second member of the Council and a third scientific man will be named later.

Our field, vast as it is, is after all only the eastern shore of the gigantic "Pacific area," an area eloquently foreshadowed by President Lincoln's secretary of state, William F. Seward, as the theatre for the drama of man in the world's great hereafter. Like many another prophet, Seward spoke more wisely than he knew. Scientific students of history have now come to regard the Pacific Ocean not as a sundering gulf betwixt different races of men, but as the last of the "wet-ways"—in the phrase of Homer—in the long upward journey of man toward complete civilization, attainable only through a synthesis of culture and the intellectual solidarity of mankind.

Contrary to a general belief, the spread of man's culture seems to have followed the "wet-ways" rather than the roads of dry land. For example, the western beneficiaries of the earlier civilizational development, including ourselves, profited at first from the rivers: two rivers, on either side of the Africo-Eurasian land-bridge—the Nile and the Euphrates, with their rich alluvial valleys, which cradled man's very first culture.

Next to the river as our friend came the sea; when the wet-ways of the Mediterranean gradually so influenced the western man's view of the world that he called the whole earth, as he knew it, 'a ring of lands," an Orbis Terrarum encircling a single water-basin, on the inward-sloping rim of which, as on its islands, he cultivated the precious seeds of civilization transplanted from the valleys of the Nile and Euphrates.

Next after the sea came the ocean. The third day of our civilization dawned "when Caesar's galleys with oars, pine-built, from the Midland Sea, met the oaken sailing craft of the ocean-going Veneti,—" from which moment of dawn our day-star moved ever westward, until Columbus saw its moving and followed it across the Atlantic. By virtue of the discovery and settlement of this New World and of the flood of occidental culture that streamed across the Atlantic, that ocean itself ceased to be a great divide or an ultimate outland sea, but, like the Mediterranean and the old Aegean before it, became a connecting water-way between the United States of America and the disunited states of Europe; and, in turn, the Atlantic became also an avenue, "beyond its gates of Horn and Good Hope, into what might well seem at last a real ocean."

These are the chief successive scenes in the Drama of History, declares Professor Myres, of the chair of Ancient History at Oxford, who challenges the sundering power of the Pacific with the eloquently suggestive question—

Is not, after all, what seemed to be at last an outer sea, itself really landlocked like its prototypes? Have not the eastern and western halves of our Mercator's Projection served their turn long enough as coastlands of the Atlantic? Ought they not now, in fact, to be transposed, to be the inward-facing shores of a Pacific world?

Our own Roosevelt, discarding question-marks, used the exclamation-point in dealing with this same vital fact. A quarter of a century ago he exclaimed:

The Mediterranean era died with the discovery of America; the Atlantic era has now reached the height of its development, and must soon exhaust the resources at its command; the Pacific era, destined to be the greatest of all, is just at its dawn!

Like some stout Cortes silent upon a peak, our Southwest Museum sturdily faces the Pacific, holding its post as a sentinel and harbinger of a new era in man's affairs, of which the gigantic setting is the Orbis Terrarum engirdling this greatest of all midland seas, this wet-way connecting the world's hemispheres.

Anthropology, which is the Southwest Museum's subject, gives point to this suggestion of the essential solidarity of mankind by one of its most firmly established assumptions. So little is the Pacific Ocean a sundering gulf in the solidarity of mankind that authentic scholars quite generally agree that over the steppingstones of the Aleutian Islands or, still more probably, by way of the ice-floes of Behring Sea, came the aboriginal Americans out of Asia. In a great book on "The American Indian" Clark Wissler, for example, not only says flatly that "the Indian came here from Asia, at a relatively recent period," but adds that "the solution of our New World problem lies as much in the heart of Asia as in Mexico or Peru."

While the Southwest Museum cannot emulate the example of the American Museum of Natural History in sending expeditions into Asia, it is fortunately possible for us to establish friendly contacts with the Far East by means of its art. Through the warm sympathies of the late Director, Hector Alliot, assisted by Dr Norman Bridge, Mr. J. S. Torrance, Mrs Edwin Greble, and the Rev. Herbert E. House, the Southwest Museum already possesses a small but very choice collection illustrating the venerable civilization of China and the refinement of the arts of Japan.

This rare collection should be utilized not only to exemplify the civilization that developed in Asia after certain Asiatic wanderers had become the first Americans, but also to enlighten our darkness. Nothing so wounds oriental susceptibilities as our crass ignorance of Asia, and there is no better demonstration of oriental culture than its marvelous achievements in art. False words deceive the ear, but art speaks truth to the eye. Our Asiatic Hall should be used to enlighten our own people, and also to greet cultured oriental visitors with a finer touch of hospitality than that of mere banquets and banners. Wise men from the East, many of whom speak the language of Shakespeare and Washington, Milton and Lincoln, may perhaps be induced by this welcoming touch of their homeland to address our Museum public concerning oriental art, and interpret its message to us. Light will thus come to us out of the East, while a new warmth may touch the heart of the East as we throw off our "superiority complex"—a silly camouflage for ignorance—and give credit where credit is due.

JAMES A. B. SCHERER
Director Southwest Museum.

Songs of The Spirit—III

These songs will be published later in book form.

The Poet

What is it that this word-musician seeks
As up and down the World's long lane he roves,
While listening to harps in wind-swept groves,
Or gazing tear-dimmed on far mountain peaks?
Why does he haunt calm brooks and quiet creeks,
And watch the waters glide toward shell-strewn coves,
Or nightly stray, a shepherd to the droves
On Slumber Hill, where Rest her care bespeaks?

From poet-lyre he strives to draw a tune—
Some bliss-bound, age-forgotten, rhythmic rune;
The murmured cadence of an Eden day;
A melody of beauty and noblesse,
That shall in some sweet, tender, haunting way
Bring back to Earth some long-lost loveliness.

—Clarence Urmy.

SPORTS AFIELD AND AFLOAT:
REGATTAS, FIESTAS, GOLF AND POLO TOURNAMENTS

The motor boats were making history for themselves last month at the nineteenth annual regatta of the Mississippi Valley Power Boat Association. In the 215 hydroplane class, the General, owned by the Barnesons of Los Angeles made a record of 39.7 miles an hour. Little Star ranked second, and Midge II, owned by Del Lord of Los Angeles was third.

CARLETON BURKE, CAPTAIN OF THE MIDWICK TEAM, ON THE BALL, SAVING THE GOAL. WITH ERIC PEDLEY, ARTHUR PERKINS AND TED MILLER, CAPTAIN BURKE HAS AN ALMOST INVINCIBLE FOUR, AS THEY PROVED IN WINNING BOTH THE JUNIOR AND OPEN CHAMPIONSHIPS IN THE EAST, AND BID FAIR TO REPEAT THAT PERFORMANCE THIS FALL AT MEADOWBROOK. ELMER BOESEKE WILL PROBABLY PLAY WITH MIDWICK

Lord Wodehouse, who played with the Santa Barbara polo team last season until his return to England to enter the big matches there, has shipped his ponies back to the United States and will enter the games at Westchester with the opening of the Junior championship play this month

Yachting interest and yachting gossip practically encircled the world last month and this. First with the yachts racing from San Pedro to Honolulu, and then racing back again, with the Invader the victor both going and coming. Then closely follows two interesting regattas: The English enthusiasts gather at Cowes for their yachting week, August 2-7, when King George and Queen Mary make the "Victoria and Albert" their home, and the King races his "Britannia" every day. And here at Newport Harbor we have the Sixth Annual Southern California regatta, August 1-8. At Coronado last month the R-sloops raced over the twelve mile triangular course of Coronado for the "Times" cup, one of the oldest Pacific Coast Yachting trophies. The "Patricia" was the winner. Among the young people interested in all aquatic sports are Miss Mildred Landis, Philadelphia, Ernest Simpson, Los Angeles, Miss Winifred Parker, Glendale, Miss Janet Wigmore, Los Angeles, and Miss Sari Allen, Glendale, guests of Hotel del Coronado.

R-BOATS, STAR BOATS, SCHOONERS, YAWLS, AND MOTOR BOATS; YACHTS FROM THE ENTIRE COAST, HUNDREDS OF THEM, GATHER AT BALBOA AND NEWPORT FOR THE REGATTA IN AUGUST. THE FASTEST SLOOPS AND SCHOONERS WILL RACE, AND THOSE NOT SO FAST WILL HAVE JUST AS MUCH FUN IN ALL THE ENTERTAINMENT OFFERED

Trails along the cliffs as well as on the Beach into the baek country offer hours and days of delight to the members of the Palos Verdes Colony

Staff-Commodore Albert Soiland of the Paeifie Coast Yachting Assoeiation used his influenee, if not his sextant, in the decision to hold racing series, for deciding the champion R Sloop Skipper of the Paeific Coast, on the San Franeisco Bay, August 27-28, following the Paeific Coast Regatta. Ted Geary will represent the Seattle Yacht Club; Lester Stone, the San Franeicso Yaeht Club, and Ben Weston, Southern California

On the northern waters a heavy weather boat is neeessary, and Spaulding's "Debra," Reasseau's "Lady Gay," and Stone's "Rascal" have been selected for the race. The ultimate idea is to foster a similar series of raees in the East, to determine the leading skipper on the Atlantie Coast, and hold a national raee next year.

"OLD SPANISH DAYS," THE FIESTA WHICH SANTA BARBARA OFFERS HER GUESTS, AUGUST 26-27-28, CARRIES WITH IT THE HOSPITALITY OF EARLY COLONIAL TIMES. THE STREETS GLOW WITH COLOR, OUR HOSTS WEAR AUTHENTIC SPANISH COSTUMES, AND THE AIR IS FILLED WITH MUSIC

Frank Dolph, of Portland, Oregon, who won the Western Amateur Golf Championship at White Bear Lake, St. Paul, Minn., last month and first gained fame here as runner-up at Del Monte last September

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A. MONTHLY BULLETIN

OFFICERS
DAVID J. WITMER, PRESIDENT
C. E. NOERENBERG, VICE PRESIDENT
EDGAR H. CLINE, SECRETARY
WINCHTON L. RISLEY, TREASURER

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH,
Editor

DIRECTORS
H. C. CHAMBERS
DONALD PARKINSON
ALFRED W. REA

PLAGAIRISM AS A FINE ART

BELOW we publish the first installment of the fourth address of a series of five given before the American Institute of Architects. The five speakers were architects of national reputation. The one here presented is by an architect who is perhaps the outstanding exponent of the Gothic or Mediaeval point of view in architecture. His ideas on the subject of precedent and its value in architectural design should be interesting. The article will be concluded next month.

THE VALUE OF PRECEDENT IN THE PRACTICE OF ARCHITECTURE

Address of Ralph Adams Cram

IN THE words of the cautious Mediaeval Schoolman, "Distinguo", "The question is not one that admits of a categorical answer." "Value", where, when and to whom? All is relative, even Revelation, and wise men know it even before Einstein—about 2,000 years before, or earlier. Precedent was of little value to Anthemius or Tralles, to William of Volpiano and to Suger of Saint-Donis, but it was the stock in trade of the protagonists of the Pagan Renaissance. If civilization has unity, beauty, the spirit of adventure, joy in life and faith, one need not stop to think about precedents, or seek them out. Beauty and significance will pour into the world through the arts, and the artist (all free men then are artists) cannot help himself. If civilization is chaotic, ugly, fearful, unhappy and infidel, precedent will be called on at every juncture—but it will do little except add plausibility to artifice. If I have to create a monastery for Benedictine monks, precedent is what I must build on, but if the problem is a movie theatre, a Christian Science temple or a storage warehouse for confiscated "hooch', precedent is measureably ineffective as a stimulus.

I protest that the custom of the past, whether they did or did not rely on precedent, and how much or how little, have no bearing whatever at the present time. However varied the types and phases of civilization, they all hung together, they developed in a sense one from another, possessed actual identity in their sense of major values, from the time of the Pharaoh Akhnthan to that of the Emperor Charles V., but what we have had since is a new thing with neither resemblance nor relationship to what has gone before. If there was civilization in Egypt, Greece, Byzantium, Moorish Spain, the Middle Ages, the fifteenth century—and God knows there was—then we have it not, and if ours is a real civilization then there is a brand new creation brought into being by coal, steam, printing, gunpowder. Protestantism, new paganism and democracy. The question is not whether it is good or bad; it is different, lock, stock and barrel, and because it is so blazingly, so staggeringly different, it set itself apart from all history and must be dealt with de novo.

There have been eight great art-ephochs in the history of Europe, each the perfect expression of a civilization that varied in degree from the others but was always notable and sometimes supreme. In every case there were at rest these qualities I have already catalogued: unity, spirit of adventure, joy of life and faith. The present time is marked by the opposite of each one of these qualities. The result is spiritual, social and material chaos. In each one of the eight epochs I have named the creative artist was driven by the dynamic of his time to do wat he did and he needed to be taught nothing but his craft. He was not driven to deny the high gods or break the Ten Commandments in order to achieve "self-realization," he was modest enough to know that the same "self" was probably not worth expressing anyhow, and of slight interest to his fellows. He had a bigger thing to manifest and that was the corporate soul of the time. This was the impulse, the form followed by nature.

And now? Well, what have we for inspiration? What are the great, universal motive forces of society? Passionate desire (generally satisfied) to own an automobile, a victrola and a radio set. A deep yearning for the movies, jazz music and really good bootleg gin. In place of the beautiful gods of

YOUTH, ETTORE CADORIN, SCULPTOR
SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

Olympus and the kindly shy spirits of the woods, or of the Sacramenta and the splendid worship of the Catholic Church we have the Fundamentalists, the W. C. T. U. and Zion's Herald. Where once were argonauts and Crusaders and Conquistadors and merchant adventurers, are now big business, high finance, efficiency experts and advertising. The craft-guild and artist-guild have given place to the predatory trade union, the Rotary Club and Odd Fellows Hall. Congress and the State legislature and the city council and the ward boss have ousted statesmen and patriots and great leaders of men. Main Street triumphs over Thebes and Athens, Venice and Mont-

THE EAST FRONT OF THE SAN GABRIEL MISSION
(1776.) SAN GABRIEL, CALIFORNIA

Saint Michel and Bruges, while George F Babbitt sits in the high places of Pericles Dante and Sir Thomas More.

This sounds like an indictment, but I mea it for a description, and its object is the em phasizing of difference. Of course we plagiar ize, barefacedly, because at present there i little else we can do, and just because of thi difference that exists between our own tim and the others that have gone before. Ther is no longer any group of powerful influenc dominating society. There is not even or (if we except safe evasion of the Volstea Act) and it is out of these universal impuls that styles derive, not from the genius of or or more great artists. This I believe is al solutely true of architecture and measureab true of all the other arts. Is there any sty on earth prior to that of the Academic Re aisance that we can trace back to a specif creator? Great names gleam in each, but e ery one shines forth after the style, whatev it is, has reached its full development.

The reason is not far to seek. Art is, the second degree only, a medium of self-e pression, carrying to a certain extent betwe one art and another. Music, poetry and t drama are the most personal and the lea dependent on spiritual and physical enviro ment. Painting comes next, perhaps, but he the universal force takes greater contr Sculpture is in the next place, and last of comes architecture, the great art of co munal expression where the personality of t architect is of least importance and in ma cases a positive intrusion. I do not mean th here personality is of no moment; it is of gre t moment, but I do mean that in great arc tecture the architect must be rigidly sub dinated to the art, the art subordinated , and made expressive of, the time, or, if s happens now, there is no coherency in time, then to whatever spiritual force may e operating through the concrete thing the arc tect has to house, and so housing, manifest n visible form, beautiful, significant and insp ing. Plagiarism is condemned in masters f other arts and they generally refrain from t. The dear man who has started this trou e asks that it be condemned also in archite s, but I maintain that here also is a differe e, for the revelation of personality that is to able, nay, even desirable, in a Debussy a George Bernard Shaw, a Cezanne, an Am Lowell, is not a desideratum in the case of n architect. We do want to feel, rather unco sciously, the varieties of genius between, sy, the master-builder of Bourges and him of e ville Cathedral or Westminster Abbey, t only in subordination to the great force t at was driving society when these churches w re built, and to which the nameless. unchroni d builders bowed the head. So then, we h ve (from my point of view) two differences conditioning our problems: the complete loss of unity and driving force in our society, and he fact that the architect deals with an ar so great that it subordinates personality nd makes him dependent on this very unity, his irresistible driving force that we have los Stated so, the case seems rather hopeless, and yet we know it is not, for in spite of a garism—or is it because of it—we all k w perfectly well there is more realy good rchitecture being produced in America t ay than ever before, and far better than th of any other country in the world for the st 300 years. Evidently there is a fallacy s ewhere (I deprecate attempts to find it in my reasoning) and I think it lies just here. In spite of the fact of our heterogeneous e ate and the inadequacy of the personal equ on as a substitute for world forces, there do till remain enclaves of substantial unity, pote ial energies blurred to the sight of advert ng signs and silenced by the thunder of the or on, the demagogue and the "blurb," but ev ertheless real, potent, vital, and it is ese forces that are acting as of old to inspir the architect and make him a creator, or r her a channel of artistic revelation.

THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

MONTHLY BULLETIN

OFFICERS

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH, PRESIDENT
CLIFFORD A. TRUESDELL, VICE PRESIDENT
C. R. JOHNSON, SECRETARY
PAUL R. WILLIAMS, TREASURER

DIRECTORS

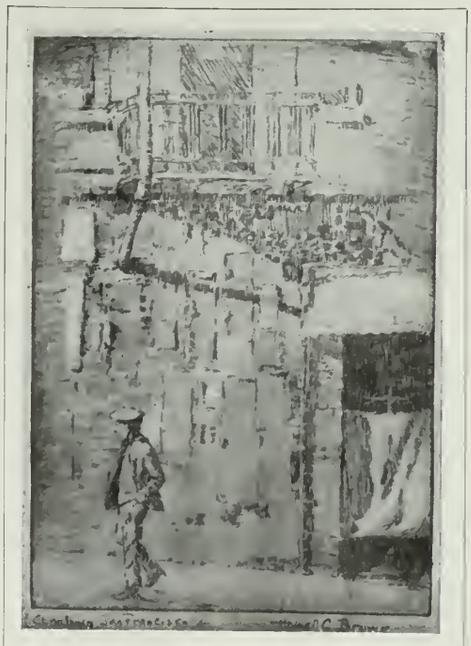
JULIAN GARNSEY, DIRECTOR
J. E. STANTON, DIRECTOR
H. C. CHAMBERS, DIRECTOR

LIFE CLASS DISCONTINUED UNTIL SEPTEMBER

Life Class has been discontinued at the Club quarters until September. Mr. Hamilton Wolf who acted as instructor has gone to Berkeley where he will teach in the College of Fine Arts at the University next year. His able work with us was greatly appreciated and proved of much benefit to the fellows who worked under him. The Club expects to continue the class in the Fall.

INSPECTION VISITS REVIEWED

The inspection visits held on the afternoon of Saturday, June 26, were well received. About seventy-five or a hundred Club members and friends turned out. The first building was the Jaques Vinmont house on Los Feliz Boulevard, Roland Coate, Architect. Mr. Coate's work is always inspiring and this house is no exception. The plan is most interesting in that it includes two patios, one of which contains a beautifully designed swimming pool. The life of the house is turned inward in the Latin manner and the entire scheme is admirably fitted for the climatic conditions of Southern California. The detail especially in the interior is most worthy of study. Many of the doors were especially interesting, having been made for Mr. Coate, by Marshall Laird. Mr. Peter Hall was the contractor. He and his foreman were both present at the job. We were happy to congratulate them on another job worthy of their unusual abilities.



The other building we visited was the Thirteenth Church of Christ, Scientist, a few blocks away. Allison and Allison were the architects. David Allison did us the honor of being present during the hours that the building was open to us. The architecture of the building is typical of the work of Mr. Allison and reminds one remotely of the Wilshire Congregational Church by the same firm. The building is done in reinforced concrete with a brown coat in a warm tone. The style is inspired by the Romanesque and the Italian Renaissance, yet it is neither. The personality of David Allison is in every detail. This is another way of saying that the best current architecture is no longer puristic but is a living, growing thing.

THE ART OF ARCHITECTURE A MONOLOGUE

One of our club members received a letter from the East recently. With explanations we publish excerpts from it here because it is so indicative of the progress of the campaign which architects are fostering to "educate the public." The house mentioned in the letter is a simple one story cottage of four rooms. If any Club member should read this who is devoid of a sense of humor, we advise him to read no further. Italics are ours.

Dear Sir:

"I happen to have purchased one of the books published by the Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara. I like better than anything else contained therein, the design you submitted. The floor plan you show does not quite adapt itself for the purpose I have in mind. While I could have this changed here, I would much prefer that you make the re-arrangement for me, if the cost is not too great. * * * * the fun begins. "I would like you to arrange your floor plan so that the living room be placed where your kitchen is now located. I would like to increase the size of the bed rooms to 12' x 15'. I would like to put two dormers into the kitchen part of the roof in order to be able to work out two bed rooms upstairs." This would have no very profound effect on the design, as any fair minded draftsman could see. "Stairs, of course, will have to be provided for to reach the second floor." Strange, but true, this is the traditional way to reach a second floor in a house which has no second floor previously.

CHINATOWN, AN ETCHING BY HOWELL BROWN

Here comes the prize item. "I do not wish to change the front appearance of the house any, although it may be necessary to change the height slightly in order to work out two bedrooms up-stairs. I would not like to break into the front elevation as you now have it, although a difference in size, if in the same proportion, would not matter." Wonder where he learned that patter about similarity in proportion.

"I would like the dining room alcove in the kitchen worked out in such a way that it would be reached from the hall without walking through the main part of the kitchen. I like the idea of the entry as you now have it." Score our first for that. "The dining room could be worked out in part of what is now the living room.

"The lot I wish to put this building on is 100 feet wide and I do not mind spending somewhat more than the estimated figure. Consequently, I would like the thing worked out to its best advantage rather than try to save the last penny possible. I * * * have a draftsman in my employ who could no doubt do all of this for me, but I like to give each man the benefit of whatever he happens to have created." We wish some clients of the slippery variety might read that. "Furthermore, I think you have a certain RUSTIC TOUCH in this picture which is very appealing." Roars from the other draftsmen when they read that. * * * *

Very truly yours,

COMEDY, TRAGEDY, OR PERHAPS SATIRE

It is reported that the Pot Boilers are planning on some new construction in connection with their "theater." A young architect approached them on the matter but was told that they needed no architecture, as they wanted something "simple." Perhaps a new definition for architecture could be worked out on these premises.

WHEEZE

Recently one of our local architects was approached by a worried client who informed him that he had noticed that the plans and specifications both called for joists and studs of Oregon Cedar. He wondered if that was not an unnecessary expense. The architect looked blank and asked to be shown this peculiar item in his plans. The client pointed to a spot on the floor plans which read "Joists above 2"x12"—16" o. c." and triumphantly remarked, "doesn't that say 2"x12" Oregon Cedar joists?"

COMPETITION WINNER

We are glad to report that our Club President won second prize in a recent Competition for the design of a concrete house. The Competition, which was open to certified architects only, was conducted by the Standard Concrete Construction Corporation of Los Angeles. About thirty drawings were submitted. Henry C. Newton won first prize and third prize went to C. R. Spencer. The drawings are on exhibition at the office of the Corporation, 701 Pacific National Bank Building, 315 West Ninth street.

Hispano-Moresque Tile
Colorful, Decorative, Interesting
made entirely by hand
Mexican, Spanish and
Tunisian Designs
Showroom
Harry C. Hicks 4283 Beverly Blvd.
GR. 4013
Los Angeles Calif.

Landscape
Designing and Planting
The beautiful gardens of Southern California which we have created are evidence of our ability to design and plant your own grounds properly.
A reliable firm of thirty-eight years' experience in Southern California.
EDWARD H. RUST
NURSERYMAN
1625 Bank St. Colo. 997
So. Pasadena ELliot 2639

PORTABLE TYPEWRITERS
WITH STANDARD KEYBOARD
Also All Makes Sold, Rented, Repaired, Exchanged
Parker Typewriter Co.
25 Years Experience
25 N. Marengo Pasadena

RAQUEL MELLER

By JESSICA KATE SENECA

ONE was at first faintly chilled. An initial ardour of expectancy worked up to an almost painful pitch by a nearly thirty minutes late curtain needed the appeasement of some indication of feeling on the other side of the footlights. There was none. A delicately tinted cloud, a suave loveliness of laces, borne towards us in quietest movement; and, looking out of it, black eyes calm with a consciousness of power.

One recalled years ago hearing Yvette Guilbert in a big hall from a seat so far back one could not even see her face clearly . . . Yvette's entering, rather slowly, in a plain black dress with a train . . . and, before she had uttered a sound, instantly yielding up one's soul to her, artistically speaking. With Raquel Meller one had not this immediateness of profound artistic trust. The spell worked differently. This was a woman, one became aware, of a supreme allurement. One was first affected by her movements, in the slow enfolding rhythm of the song; by her curious voice, curiously attractive. A thin sweet bodiless voice, more effortless than speech. One faintly endeavored to defer subjection to those dominating black orbs. It was not quite fitting, one felt, to purpose discovering the influences of a reported exquisite art, and allow oneself too instant and entire a subjugation to a most potent personal seductiveness,—able to keep no reserve of dispassionate observation.

Towards the end of the song, the singer looked with a long and intense gaze at her audience, with eyes luminous, mystical, of an unplumbed depth and darkness . . . She became suddenly estranged, and turned a proud, indifferent profile. Glanced again slightly. Drew her mantilla with childish wilfulness over her face so that we should not gaze so freely. Relented, and gave us again that long, intent, shining look, that said: "I mean that you shall love me!"

With their glowing joy, and lovely sorrows, pure starry lights, darkness of fires unholy and menacing, these eyes, a world in themselves, were thereafter the supreme part of the evening's entertainment.

Even though one knew she would soon appear again, her going left a sense of loss, uncomforted till that enchanting soul-illumined face returned. One was troubled by a consciousness of brief and flying time; of beauty —in those so swift and slight effects of hers —half-grasped, or wholly missed; of the uncertainty of the future. With painful frequency was one snatched from rapt observation of this being into a sort of peopled desolation where she was not. To suffer music that because it did not express her and her art, seemed tedious and irrelevant. To enforced contemplation of the theatre's dreadful decorations; the melancholy vacancy of high narrow arches at the sides; the garish blue and pink footlights, near which bobbed the black satin oval of the conductor's head; the stealthy incoming of the board of titles, sliding silently on and off the stage; (two or three printed details of each costume would identified the songs in a more graceful and interesting way); and to speculations as to whose erring taste had inspired the program girls' imitation of Raquel Meller's costume.

One willed to be left in shadow and silence —or murmur of music echoing only beauty— to keep those impressions one had received untouched, fresh as the rose-petals her little hand had shaken from their green calyx,— delicately, in a sweet rain, upon the bare stage floor.

Her songs had the most moving silences. As the clock sounded the first stroke of the fateful hour in "The Jailor's Daughter", a wondrous light came into her listening face, of high resolve and courage. One saw suddenly all the splendor of her spirit and her deed. Contrasted with that moment of intensest life was her lovely dying face in "El Relicario", where she showed us, exquisitely, the pale last helplessness of death. Out of the silences of "Fior del Mal" came sounds of hopeless seeking and despair. If there was music one could not hear it in that bitter quiet. Indeed, at all times when she was on the stage, one had but the most shadowy consciousness of any accompaniment. This song was acted more fully than the rest. Her black hair writhed in a sort of desperate wildness over her brow. In a sinister dark dress with yellow lines and a pocket out of which she fumblingly produced her cigarette and the matches she ineptly struck, she walked along the runway behind the orchestra, close to the audience, a figure shrouded in dark thoughts. The heels studded with brilliants belonged to Raquel Meller, not the street-walker. In other songs she had jewels no peasant would have worn. To some fair faces jewels are treacherous. But hers, in their hard and inexpressive glitter had no power—her eyes so outshone them, and her face illumined by the swift and subtle changes of the soul.

In "Ay! Cipriano!" the text did not suggest more than over-excitement from wine on Cipriano's part. Raquel Meller's swift pantomine indicated a definite stage of intoxication. One did not picture that fascinating damsel, with the odd delightful train of white ruffled muslin, toying with a really drunken lover. In utterest contrast to the stately and tragic Maja in the black mantilla, with strange tilted eyes, aloof, and faintly baleful, (but, oh, enchanting!), came suddenly and sweetly, with quick and eager step, someone we had not seen before. A young maid, her hair all put smoothly and shiningly back, soft rounded brow,—so good!—eyes dancing joyously; parted childish lips;—very eager to tell us something! O, the Darling! The audience applauded in responsive delight at sight of her. As "La Violetera", throwing her violets to the people, Raquel Meller mingled the child and the coquette, with mocking and beguiling ways. Masculine fingers held out a red flower. She cast it among her violets. A second man presented a flower. One would have been significant, but two—she took both, and dropped them casually inside her white blouse. Against her breast! O happy resting-place! The male portion of the audience applauded. But no! They must not be too intimate! She shook them carefully down— and patted the loose fold of her blouse where it hung over her skirt to assure herself and us they rested there. In the tiniest, swiftest side glance at the audience Raquel Meller intimated her opinion as to the unspeakable gaucherie of another individual inexplicably backward and delaying in accepting her so sweetly proffered violets. One recalled with a sort of wonder that it was from the Paris music hall, with its curious delight in the unclean, that this girl came, whose art was so untainted, whose appeals to the senses—and of such appeals she has an absolute command —were charged with beauty, and made part of the richness of life.

AT THE GARDEN PARTY OF THE WA-WAN CLUB, MRS. WILLIAM H. ANDERSON, WHO PLANNED THE DELIGHTFUL PROGRAM OF THE CLOSING MEETING OF THIS LEADER IN LOS ANGELES MUSIC

Her art seemed not a thing separate from herself, learned and disciplined, but part of the warmth, truth, delicacy, and naivete of her nature, imagining purely and beautifully. It seemed in itself less potent than her womanhood; or rather one would say her deepest art was to unfold the soul's beauty, the multiple fascination of woman. Its inspiration one could imagine to be the woman's desire for love,—the love of the multitude, surging, immense and unappeasable, that in fulfilment, more than the flame of dual passion, can yield joy that enfolds and sustains the soul. Permitting oneself the surmise, one may wonder if the something within her that is silent and aloof and mysteriously aware of power, may not be thus profoundly enfolded and sustained.

T. W. Mather Co. Inc.
PASADENA, CAL.
Dry Goods
Women's & Children's
Wearing Apparel
Colorado Street at Marengo

For a limited time only
Orders for Copies
of
DAWSON'S
"The Birds of California"
will be taken and
filled by
SOUTH MOULTON COMPANY
306 Scripps Building
San Diego, Calif.

Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes
TROY LAUNDRY
In Business for Twenty Years
Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146 Alhambra 243-J

LAUNDERERS DRY CLEANERS
ROYAL LAUNDRY CO.
461 South Raymond Colorado 67
Pasadena, California

HILLER'S STUDIO
Official Photographer for
California Southland
49 East Colorado Street
Pasadena, California
Albert Hiller Phone, Fair Oaks 155

A CHARMING FARM HOUSE BY ROLAND COATE ARCHITECT

IN THE May, 1925 number of this magazine were printed sketches and plan by the architect of this delightful ranch house, so closely fitted to our best California life. In describing the inspiration which led him to design this ranch house Mr. Coate there said:

"Isn't it still possible for us to capture some of the romance of the ranches with their low adobes reclaim something of the days of the ranches with theid low adobes surrounded by old pepper trees, showing glimpses of white-washed walls, broad, cool verandas and roofs of brick-red tile or hand split shakes? I believe that it can be done by looking back and studying the characteristics of these old houses of this southern country. Houses of straightforward, simple lines, showing unerring adaptability to the climate, were made of the materials at hand and furnished with the odds and ends from different sources, from Mexico and from around the Horn.

Moreover, there is a connecting link between the early California ranch-house and our present day. It belongs to this country and its associations have been inherited directly.

While driving inland one summer we came quite unexpectedly upon an old abode, several miles north of San Diego. We stopped and were very graciously invited in to see the house by the occupant, who was a newcomer from the east. He had brought with him a splendid collection of Colonial furniture and brasses. These pieces he had placed in the old house and although I did not see a single piece of Spanish furniture the result was one of perfect harmony. In trying to account for this I decided that the old ranch house was probably as closely akin to that furniture as to anything from Mexico or Spain. After all, the windows looked as though they might have been brought around the Horn in the early days, as was much of the material used in those old houses, I have been told.

Realizing that a ranch house cannot be built with great promise of success upon a fifty foot lot I have waited for the opportunity which has recently come my way to build such a house in its proper setting.

The patio is the outdoor Living Room, small compared with those of the old houses but providing the possibilities for outdoor color with the use of potted flowers and vines and with the tile pool or fountain in the center. It becomes the hallway of the house, as well as the outdoor room and makes possible a house plan of considerable economy.

THE USE OF THE PATIO IS FUNDAMENTAL IN THE LIFE OF A CALIFORNIA FAMILY. ROLAND COATE, ARCHITECT

A CHARMING FARM HOUSE DESIGNED FOR JAMES A. TWEEDY. BY ROLAND E. COATE, ARCHITECT

The Assembly Tea Room
The In and Out-of-Town House of Los Angeles serves
LUNCHEON, TEA AND DINNER
INCIDENTALLY
The Very Choicest Food
Special Sunday Dinner 5 to 8
644 South Flower St., Los Angeles
Phone VAndike 7177

WE offer for investment of Personal or Trust Funds sound Securities returning highest rates consistent with safety.
WILLIAM R. STAATS COMPANY
Established 1887
Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds
311 East Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIF.
Los Angeles San Diego San Francisco

THE NATIONAL HOME MOVEMENT

PEARL CHASE—Editor

THE ownership of a home, the feeling of independenee that comes with the possession of a bit of earth, are among the most powerful ineentives to high civie interest and usefulness . . . I greet you as the advance guard of the national home movement."

—PRESIDENT CALVIN COOLIDGE.

DEMONSTRATION HOUSE NO. 4, 20 JUNIPERO ST., SANTA BARBARA. FIRST PRIZE SMALL HOUSE COMPETITION, FIVE-ROOM CLASS, ADAPTED FROM PLAN NO. 62, COMMUNITY ARTS ASSOCIATION, BOOK OF SMALL HOUSE DESIGNS

THIS HOUSE BELONGS TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE SANTA BARBARA WOMAN'S CLUB

THE Santa Barbara Better Homes Week covered many interesting demonstrations, and its work is useful not only to other towns but to individuals who are looking for suggestions. The reeognition whieh Santa Barbara received from the Jury is bringing many inquiries to the committee which are in part answered by this series of artieles.

DEMONSTRATION HOUSE NO. 4—20 E. JUNIPERO ST.

Frame—Clapboard—Adapted by owner from Mr. C. Kruegl's plan shown in Community Arts Association book of "Small House Designs" No. 62. The plan was reversed and the length of living room and size of other rooms were increased. A door was added from front hall to bedroom.

The plan is conveniently arranged and all details are cleverly worked out.

A good example of what a comfortable and eharming, well arranged small house ean be. Advantage is taken of the fine outlook. The exterior eolor detraets from its best possible effeet.

The owners have furnished their home appropriately and effectively. It is a privilege to be permitted to visit it.

VIEW FROM LIVING ROOM INTO DINING ROOM. THE DOORS MAY BE CLOSED OR FOLDED BACK, AS IN THE PICTURE. THE CORNER CUPBOARDS WERE ESPECIALLY DESIGNED FOR THE ROOM, BUT CAN EASILY BE REMOVED. A DOOR ON THE LEFT OPENS INTO THE PANTRY, ONE ON THE RIGHT INTO THE HALL OF THE BEDROOM WING

LIVING ROOM. THE WALLS ARE A RICH CREAM. THE ROOM IS VERY LIVABLE, AS WELL AS ATTRACTIVE, AND PARTICULARLY WELL LIGHTED

THE FURNITURE IN THE GUEST ROOM IS OF THE EARLY COLONIAL TYPE. THE COLOR SCHEME IS WHITE, BLUE AND ROSE, AND THE EFFECT IS CHARMING

THE SOUKS OF TUNIS

announce

the opening of a new branch

at 29 Paseo de la Guerra

Santa Barbara

THE BATCHELDER TILES

BATCHELDER-WILSON COMPANY

We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

2633 Artesian Street

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

IN THE INTEREST OF THE LANDSCAPE ALONE

A COURSE IN CALIFORNIA DOMESTIC ARCHITECTURE

VARIETY has so marked the small houses of Southern California that it is necessary to classify them in order to talk about them intelligently. Twenty years ago this part of the California Coast was made famous in the literature of small house construction by the appearance of the bungalow. It seemed an appropriate house for this region, and its fame was its fortune. The very name "bungalow" was given to every kind of a small house built here.

But every house was not a bungalow then. Even the one-story houses were not all built on that plan. The bungalow is distinctively Californian in its use of the low-pitched, wide-spreading roof of the South Sea Islands on top of a one story, American plan. With plenty of room to spread out, in this country of wide spaces and large lots, the first comers to Southern California found that they could place a large house all on one floor and they spread and spread until only the bungalow roof was wide enough to cover them.

A true bungalow is just a roof spreading as a hen covers her brood at night.

The distinctive feature of the bungalow, therefore, is its low-pitched, spreading roof and the shade that it makes for shelter in summer as well as the capacity it has for filling the rain barrels with soft water in a land of little rain. Other houses, built as the owner had seen small houses built on the Atlantic Coast, had already begun to fill the town lots laid out in the early eighties before the bungalow of California was born. The cottage type—generally a story and a half—was universally the small house built. It is distinctively American built of shingles or clapboards—a frame house such as the merest carpenter's apprentice knew how to put up—and for which the mills made doors and windows by the score every year. It still survives the coming of bungalow, stucco and English gabled house. Dormers in the roof to make the half-story habitable for part of the year distinguish the American cottage type from the California bungalow type. It is generally found to be well built, better in construction than the bungalow because its contractor or builder knew how to build that kind of a house and there were no new ideas to mislead him from the straight path in which he had been trained. We build frame houses in California from tradition. In case of an earthquake only the brick chimneys fall and it is possible to get out of the way of that "act of Providence."

THIS IS WHAT THE ARTISTS OF SANTA BARBARA DID TO UNITE IN A PLEASING WAY THE THREE LITTLE FRAME HOUSES FOUND INTACT ON THE NEW PLOT OF THE SCHOOL OF THE ARTS. AFTER THE EARTHQUAKE HAD WRECKED THEIR OLD AND PICTURESQUE ADOBE BUILDINGS

The desire for "something different" seems to have been the chief motive in the selection of a small house style. But builders and contractors are lost when something different from what they are trained to build in their youth is demanded of them. The elevations should be very carefully worked out by someone who knows how to make plans after a good design. No architect or group of architects had time to help the contractors and builders develop new designs, at that era of our building in Southern California. And so the contractors and builders had to do it themselves. They are not to blame if these small houses are ugly and stupidly designed. The people demanded shelter, small, individual houses, "something different." So the contractors and builders sat up nights and scratched their heads and studied the Ladies' Home Journal plans and elevations and tried to change Eastern cottages into something new for California conditions and scenery. They did it. The face of the earth is covered with their efforts and since they were not trained in design, they built houses which are not good in design, however good they may be in construction.

This is the house that Jack and Jill from the East built when they came to California. The upper rooms are almost uninhabitable in summer.

There was only one design that they could safely build and be sure it was good. Some brave contractor started it and we began to have Colonial cottages in Southern California. All along the foothill boulevard in little towns we find them painted white and with classic columns at the porches.

For hundreds of years the Greek designers worked on those columns to perfect them for their own use and then they were measured and recorded for succeeding generations and succeeding races to use.

Master builders in America brought the carefully worked out proportions to America from England and the continent of Europe, where the Romans had distributed the precious records of what the Greeks worked out. So skillfully did the architects of the ages past work out the details of the Greek orders and so carefully did they record those proportions in marble that today in Southern California the only good thing we find in the thousands and thousands of small houses built in the last twenty-five years here are the charming remnants of classic colonial porches, door ways, or palladian windows, which trained carpenters know how to build because the proportions are written down by somebody else and are as free to all as is the climate of California.

Now, if the bungalow, which is simply a roof, is the kind of a roof we need in California and we can place it on top of walls that are mostly glass doors and windows, with white Colonial detail which even the mills can furnish in stock doors and windows we shall have a house that is good in architecture and will never go out of style or deteriorate in value because of its design. The beautiful pillars of Greece are ours to use and if we study to copy them faithfully we have made a safe and sure beginning in the one thing that matters, proportion in design.

So much for the house of wood alone. But the Roman era of concrete is upon us again, and beauty seems to have been thrown to the winds. There is hardly a small house among the hundreds that are now springing up all over hill and dale that has in it a single element of beauty. So we must ask the architects of the present to give us a new roof line for the stucco house and to help us with our proportions of the stucco house. Next month we will publish pictures of small details usable as small houses but taken from the large homes upon which our best architects have spent their best efforts and plenty of time.

Beautiful Garden Pieces
in
Sculptured Terra Cotta
Italian Terra Cotta Co.
W. H. Robison
1149 MISSION ROAD
Opposite County Hospital
Phone Lincoln 1057 Los Angeles

NO. 121—TALMAGE VASE

Decorating and Finishing Exclusive Furniture
W. G. Pesenecker
Interior and Exterior Painting
34 North Broadway
Phone Col. 5656 Pasadena, Calif.

OLE HANSON'S SAN CLEMENTE

BLUE sea, blue sky, a strip of sandy beach, and on the rolling hills above it, little cottages white as the foam of the blue-green waves but roofed with red tiles against a summer sun. Do you see the picture?

Half way between Los Angeles and San Diego, there is a long stretch of land that lies above the sea below Dana's Point. It is on the south side of the Boca de la Playa and west of San Juan Capistrano. For miles one motors down to Mexico between the fields of a great rancho that seems never to end. Thousands and thousands of people pass and repass on El Camino Real between wide fields of lima beans and young orange trees whose green rows run up hill and far away toward the Orange County mountains.

The great California ranches were like that, and few are left to yield the huge crops Americans must have if farming is their chosen occupation. Intensive farming seems to be discouraged in this land of great spaces, thousand-acre farms, and Spanish Ranchos still intact.

But just as every one had about given up wondering if this lovely stretch of California coast were ever to be open to those Californians who, working in the hot town all the week, long to own a cottage by the sea, up sprang this town of San Clemente on the shore just opposite the channel island of that name. Along the San Diego highway where it winds up hill, down dale, mounts sunny slopes and dips across lagoons that run into the sea, there rise the necessary business buildings, gasoline station, reservoir and power plant of a new seaside town, all dressed in white with roofs of cheerful red.

San Clemente takes the name of "Spanish Village" from the fashion of the day; but deep down in the heart of California lie the reasons for the pseudonym. Homes and business houses built of thick walls in frame and stucco, hollow tile or native bricks of clay are proved to be the most appropriate for the climate. The materials are ours and the form and color, mass and line are rapidly assuming a conformity to our landscape which completes the picture making man's occupancy of the land an added beauty rather than a detriment.

ON THE PICTURESQUE STAIR OF THE ADMINISTRATION BUILDING. DESIGNED BY J. WILMER HERSHEY FOR C. C. C. TATUM

All detriments to beauty in the landscape have been forbidden to enter San Clemente territory. For miles of this delectable land along the shore of the Pacific there will be no ugly signboards, no "hot-dog" stands, shacks or dirty leantos disfiguring the highway and the beach! Along the beach itself no circus or concession, no pike or peanut stand with gaudy colors calling to the passerby to disregard the beauty of fair Nature all around him, turn his back upon the sea and wallow in the common trough.

THE SAN CLEMENTE WATER WORKS. DESIGNED BY J. WILMER HERSHEY AND SET ON THE HILLS ABOVE THE STATE HIGHWAY TO SUPPLY WATER TO THE TRACT BELOW

Each man, each family has here a home for week-ends or for the years to come. Surrounding the children at their play, their school, their study or their pleasure time will be true Californian home conditions at a seaside town freed from the barker's raucous yell.

Halfway between big cities is the earthly situation of this little town, but halfway to Heaven is its spiritual atmosphere. Deep in the heart of every one there lie desires for something better than the ordinary beach has offered to our children and our better selves. Wise indeed has been the choice of what is good, made by a man who knows the people better than many of his forerunners in the art of building towns. Here at San Clemente the desire for beauty of surroundings may grow greater feeding on the natural beauty and the skilled effort of the architect to make this town as beautiful and as simple as are the land and sea.

A SEASIDE HOME-LAND

I think that in his fight for the home life of Seattle, Mr. Ole Hanson must have always sought and found in men the best that motivated them; and that from his own integrity he reached out a hand to give or take the best that men could offer or receive. He must have faith that this great mass of people who now motor over California searching for a home want really what is fine, and do not mean to grovel in the dust of ignorance.

At the town of San Clemente he has given the world this chance, and finer instincts are the entrance fees; good taste, the test. There are new units to be opened in the regular realtor's striking way.

A clubhouse has been begun, a bellevedere and swimming pool now occupy the drawing board. Every modern means of making life easy and beautiful is being installed.

Not only because this is the best place yet developed, should those who agree with Mr. Hanson as to what is fine in California come

A Decorative Panel in Lobby of Stillwell, Long Beach

Architectural Panels

Individually designed for clubs, hotel lobbies, fountains in courts and on garden walls.

Copies of Old Masters made for churches and mausoleums.

Samples Shown by Appointment.

Adelaide Belle Bowman

Artist-Designer

535 W. 3rd Long Beach — Phones 631-277

J. R. BRAGDON & CO.

Real Estate and Insurance

15 So. Raymond Ave., Pasadena come to San Clemente for investment and a home, but also because "Spanish Village" is the outward and visible sign of an inward grace, a love of the true and beautiful that guarantees the progress of our race.

"At Home in Summer"

The most pleasant place to be, if your home has the comforts, conveniences and beauties it should have in this year of grace, 1926.

Values at Barker Bros. make the furnishing of both out-door and in-door living rooms doubly advantageous right now.

BARKER BROS.

Complete Furnishers of Successful Homes

SEVENTH STREET, Flower & Figueroa

Schaffer

GOWNS for LARGE WOMEN

566 E. Colorado — Opposite Presbyterian Church — Pasadena

Phone TERrace 0127

Luncheon Tea and Dinner

at

El Patio Tea Room

COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE BUILDING

PASADENA, CALIF.

PORTRAITS

BY

PHOTOGRAPHY

Charles S. Seabolt

26 No. Los Robles Avenue, Pasadena, California

Opposite Maryland Hotel

Terrace 6712

The Mansfield Studios

Interiors designed and executed—Embroideries—Textiles

Pasadena WAshington 3473

Altadena Office Under Direction of Mrs. Samuel Lee Bierbauer Colo. 2015

El Paseo Patio

Lunch Out of Doors or Dine

at

"EL PASEO"

23 E. de la Guerra St.

Santa Barbara

DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS
SANTA BARBARA

THE LOVELY SHOPPING STREET IN SPAIN

El Paseo de la Guerra

Hand Made Mexican Chairs

of Pine

With Rush Seats

Priced from $4.00 to $10.00

Are exceedingly well adapted to California

Also

Hand Woven Wool Druggets

from India

Priced from $3.00 to $75.00

Sizes 2 ft. x 3 ft. to 9 ft. x 18 ft.

Write for Booklets on Druggets or Chairs

ROBERT L. LEWIS

Studio 5 at 11 E. de la Guerra, Santa Barbara

EL ENCINO

On Coast Highway, Montecito, Calif.

Luncheon Supper

Afternoon Tea

Dinner Served on Order

Limited Number of Over Night Guests Accommodated

Sun Kissed
Ocean Washed
Mountain Girded
Island Guarded

SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

Furnished houses for rent of all sizes and prices in Santa Barbara and Montecito. Properties of all kinds for sale. Literature and maps free. Live in "The Home Paradise of the World." Communicate with

H. G. CHASE, Santa Barbara, Calif.

Miss Chloë Kubert

DANSEUSE

Lessons by appointment

101 de la Guerra Studios

OLD BOOKS PRINTS

TECOLOTE BOOK SHOP

New and Standard Books

25 DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS

SANTA BARBARA

Community Arts Association

SANTA BARBARA SCHOOL OF THE ARTS

FRANK MORLEY FLETCHER, DIRECTOR

GRAPHIC, DECORATIVE AND PLASTIC ARTS — DRAMA. MUSIC. DANCING

Semester October-May. Summer School six weeks July-August

Address 916 Santa Barbara Street, Santa Barbara, Calif.

AUTHORS & AUTHORS'

agents are invited to submit book-length material to

The Guild Santa Barbara

HISTORY BIOGRAPHY FICTION

TRAVEL SCIENCE ART

Acceptable material will be published on the usual royalty basis without expense to the author

129 EL PASEO DE LA GUERRA

SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

Translations from the Spanish are particularly welcome

The Same Bluebird Limousine Taxi Service

which we are giving in Montecito is now

Available in Santa Barbara

Smart Motor Cars of all types with or without Drivers

The same familiar Phone Number

50-50

Our new low rate includes ONE TO FOUR PERSONS

SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

SAN YSIDRO RANCH

California's Famed Foothill Resort Unharmed by Earthquake.

Nestled in the foothills among the Orange Groves, overlooking Valley and Sea. Elevation 600 feet. Furnished Bungalows, 2 to 7 rooms. Central Dining Room. Electricity, hot and cold water. Surf-bathing, Tennis, Horseback Riding. Six miles from Historic Santa Barbara, two miles from ocean and country club. Moderate rates. For Folder, address San Ysidro Ranch, Santa Barbara, California.

Unique in its Atmosphere

Each morning a refreshing shower. A joy at forty miles an hour.

Golden State Limited East

The luxurious and congenial environment of an ocean liner translated to railroad travel.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC LINES — Rock Island

Leave Los Angeles 12:01 p.m. [via Southern Pacific]; San Diego 10:45 a.m. [via S.D.&A.]; arrive Chicago 10:00 a.m. third day [via Rock Island].

Thru Pullman daily from Santa Barbara 8:00 a.m. [via Southern Pacific].

For tickets, reservations personal service, call on Southern Pacific City Ticket Office, 937 State St., Santa Barbara, Calif., Phone 243; or address B.F. Coons, General Agent, Rock Island Lines, 809 Van Nuys Bldg., Los Angeles, Calif.

A "comfy" lounge for women planned. A kind of traveling "no man's land."

Santa Maria Inn

SANTA MARIA, CALIF.

A HOME-LIKE INN, upkept with home-like neatness for the convenience of wayfarers.

Every room with bath. Halfway between Los Angeles and San Francisco on the Coast Highway.

Write or telegraph for reservations.

"UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST"

The CALIFORNIAN HOTEL

MANAGEMENT H. WINGATE LAKE

FRESNO, CALIFORNIA

A modern, model Hotel devoted to sincere hospitality and dedicated to California's Guests

THE LOGICAL STOPPING PLACE IN THE SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY FOR ALL POINTS, WHETHER YOU TRAVEL FOR BUSINESS OR PLEASURE.

EUROPEAN PLAN
250 ROOMS-250 BATHS
$2.50 PER DAY AND UP
ALL OUTSIDE ROOMS

★ ★ ★

Dance!

at the

Ambassador

Cocoanut Grove

to the Entrancing Music of

COCOANUT GROVE ORCHESTRA

Under the Leadership of Ray West

SPECIAL NIGHTS Every Tuesday

COLLEGE NIGHTS

With Dancing Contest every Friday.

Tea Dances

every Saturday at 4:00 in the Fiesta Room, Tea Service $1.00

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

OFFICERS:

MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President

MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President

MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, Sec. Vice-Pres.

MRS. ISAAC HAMPSHUR JONES, 3rd Vice-Pres.

MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Vice-Pres.

MRS. JAMES REED, Secretary

MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treas.

MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

COMMUNITY HOUSE AND DAY NURSERY

1506 De Longpre
Hollywood
Telephone HE 5133

MONTHLY BULLETIN

"All for Service—And Service for All"

5604 De Longpre Avenue, Los Angeles

CALENDAR

August 3, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Board Directors.

August 3, 12:30 p. m.—Round Table Luncheon.

August 10, 9:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Day Nursery Committee.

August 10, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Executive Committee.

August 12, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Good Samirtan Committee.

August 17, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Executive Committee.

August 24, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Executive Committee.

August 26, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Good Samaritan Committee.

August 31, 10:30 a. m.—Meeting of the Executive Commitee.

BUILDING FUND CAMPAIGN

We have not yet gone over the top, but we have faith and know that we shall reach our goal. We must keep in mind that the gift of our present Day Nursery property came most unexpectedly, and again this recent pledge came when our need was great, unsolicited and unexpectedly. If Santa Claus came down our chimney once, he is liable to come again. Many of the League's friends who have been away during the Campaign are finding our letters upon their return, and are sending in their contributions.

We must remember that it has been faith and the feeling that we are filling a real need in the community that has given us courage to rise above what have at times seemed insurmountable difficulties. Our faith in our work and our faith in friends still continues—and we feel confident that at least the minimum amount to meet our building needs, will be raised.

DAY NURSERY MAINTENANCE

Of course, we are always mindful that our day to day maintenance needs are supplied by the Los Angeles Community Chest. No matter how expensive buildings we may build they would be like empty shells, but for the funds allotted to us from the Chest for the operation and upkeep of the Nursery.

An announcement of the workers for the Assistance League Division on this year's Community Chest will be made in September.

DAY NURSERY COMMITTEE

Mrs. Isaac-Hampshur Jones, Chairman of the Day Nursery Committee announces the following officers and sub-committees:

Mrs. E. Every McCarthy, Vice Chairman.

Mrs. John E. Maurer, Vice Chairman.

Mrs. Wm. Gibbs McAdoo, Vice Chairman.

Mrs. James Reed, Secretary.

Mrs. J. Warren Tatum, Treasurer.

House Committee—Mrs. John E. Maurer, Chairman.

Admissions Committee—Mrs. Chester T. Hoag, Mrs. Gurdon Wattles, Mrs. Eugene Hirsch.

USED FURNITURE

The Good Samaritan is helping to make self-supporting a crippled woman, who is just home from the hospital, by furnishing some rooms, which may be rented. It is wonderful what she has done already with some of the things we have sent her. Curtains have been dyed—chairs and beds painted—rugs mended and cleaned. Has any member a chest of drawers, a small table, a mirror or some pillows tucked away in the attic? It it a pleasure to help such a resourceful little woman.

MRS. ISAAC HAMPSHUR JONES, CHAIRMAN OF THE DAY NURSERY COMMITTEE

ORIENTAL RUGS

Repaired and cleaned by an expert. This man needs work, and has been recommended by League Members who have tried him.

DRAPERIES AND CURTAINS

If you are planning to have new draperies or curtains let us send you a woman who does excellent work at a very reasonable charge.

DAINTIEST OF LINGERIE

May be ordered from one of our Shut-ins—also beautiful initialing and monograming.

WILMINGTON UNIT

In addition to the relief work which we are doing in Wilmington, we are planning to develop a far reaching community program. A survey is now being made of the community needs and resources so that the Assistance League Unit there may join forces with the other agencies in Wilmington to initiate work which we hope will eventually lessen the need for relief. We have every reason to be proud of the place that the Assistance League holds in Wilmington, for this, our newest Unit, has made rapid strides.

THE WOMAN'S EXCHANGE

"The Little Brown Jug" and the "Old Oaken Bucket" may be heard most any day in our Woman's Exchange, for the latest fad in musical novelties are among our best sellers. They make most attractive birthday gifts for "Father."

SHIPS THAT PASS IN THE NIGHT

We have on display most attractive electrically lighted ships reasonably priced. These are really treasure ships for the entire profit is to be donated to our Day Nursery Building Fund.

QUILTS FROM THE KENTUCKY MOUNTAINS

Beautiful old fashioned quilts which are now so much in vogue may be ordered from samples which we have on display in both our shops. These quilts are made by Kentucky Mountain women, many of whom cannot read or write. By carrying on the handicraft of their ancestors, however, they are earning the money to educate their boys and girls.

A FIFTEENTH CENTURY CHEST

A rare old chest covered with needlepoint, wtih hand wrought hinges, may be seen at our downtown shop, 839 S. Flower St. If you have not seen the recent collection of antiques in this shop we urge you to make a special trip. We are more than fortunate in being entrusted with so many really beautiful articles.

THRIFT SHOP

Many mothers can manage the children's wardrobes by making over garments, but shoes cannot be made over. Hence, the call day after day for children's shoes. No matter how scuffed they are they will have some wear in them for the less fortunate kiddies.

Your sun-faded summer hats find a ready sale in the Thrift Shop. Light weight coats or wraps are in great demand. If you have one you are not going to use we know many who will be glad to have it.

THE LOCATION BUREAU

The Location Bureau reports two very busy months for June and July. The League has been called upon by a number of the largest companies to supply locations—notably among them being Fred Niblo's production of The Temptress starring Greta Garbo and Antonio Moreno, also the Corinne Griffith production of "Ashes." The more calls upon the Location Bureau, the more listings it needs. If each member would make himself a Committee of one to get a new listing for this month our income from this Department would be doubled.

STUDIO TEA ROOM

Under the chairmanship of Mrs. Roy Jones dainty buffet luncheons will be served daily during the remainder of the summer. Attractive afternoon tea service, also, is being given until 5 p. m.

The tea room is steadily increasing in popularity and numbers among its patrons many of the leading motion picture stars. The charming Anita Stewart is not only a regular patron of the tea room but is interested in the Day Nursery, and contributed generously to the Building Fund.

Plan to entertain your out of town guests at the League this summer.

Eighty-four Years of Progress

Moved by tradition to perpetuate the ideals of the founder of the House of Stieff—those who have followed have maintained a policy of exacting vigilance to maintain the standard of excellence—the result is that after eighty-four years the Stieff continues uninterruptedly to be as fine an instrument as can be built.

Beauty of case design, unequalled tone quality, gratifying responsiveness and lifetime service—this briefly sums up the promise that the Stieff Piano holds out to you. Ownership of this instrument is evidence of discriminating piano choice as well as appreciation of its decorative value.

A request will bring folder "B" which tells in detail the experience with Stieff Pianos of over two hundred artists, schools, conservatories, music schools, colleges and other institutions.

CHAS. M. STIEFF, INC.,

STIEFF HALL Established 1842 BALTIMORE

STIEFF

RICHARDSON'S INC
The Music Lovers' Shop
NOW - at 730 West Seventh St.

Off this Arcade are the Palos Verdes Post Office, Shops, Offices, etc.

Palos Verdes Estates

JAY LAWYER
General Manager

BANK OF AMERICA
Trustee

LANE MORTGAGE BLDG., 8TH AND SPRING STS., LOS ANGELES
Telephone VANDIKE 2481

This building was the first completed unit of the Malaga Cove business centre at Palos Verdes. Surrounding it is a tastefully landscaped plaza where flowering shrubs and plants are a riot of color the year 'round.

To live in this ideal seaside community is to realize something of the joy of living as Nature intended.

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

A House in Florida — Wallace Neff, Architect — Pasadena, California

THE SHUTTLE OF TRAVEL WEAVES A SUBTLE WEB THAT UNITES CALIFORNIA'S SOUTHLAND WITH THE EASTERN STATES AND MAKES IT A PART OF THE GREAT MIDDLE WEST

IT IS NOT SURPRISING THEREFORE, TO FIND OUR ARCHITECTS DESIGNING HOUSES TO BE BUILT IN FLORIDA AND INTRODUCING TO THE NATION THE USE OF CALIFORNIAN MATERIALS

No. 81 SEPTEMBER, 1926 25 Cents

Interior, Irving T. Bush House, Florida

The Cheesewright Studios, Inc.

Decorators and Furnishers

PASADENA CALIFORNIA

A Home on the Arroyo Bank Above Brookside Park

PASADENA

—a city of homes and flowers

Detailed information may be had at the

Pasadena Chamber of Commerce and Civic Association

1000 South Raymond Avenue

YOUR HOME tells the irrefutable story of yourself. Is it as up-to-the-moment in style as your clothes or your car? Barker Bros. displays the very latest style trends in home furnishings. If your home lacks some of these 1926 features, you will find it easy to supply your needs here—for values are greater than ever and prices lower.

BARKER BROS.

Complete Furnishers of Successful Homes

SEVENTH STREET, Flower and Figueroa

"GOOD ARCHITECTURE"

Choose your own architect from the representative styles shown in "California Homes" by California Architects. Price $1.00.

Address: ELLEN LEECH,

544 So. El Molino Ave Pasadena, Calif.

Tile for Everlasting Beauty

Genuine importations of Spanish, Italian, African, and Mexican tiles always in stock, as well as a complete line of American made tile, also foreign and domestic marble.

Mantels and sections of floors, walls for baths and other rooms in white and colors are kept on display. We also make tile fountains for gardens.

Z. B. GALLOWAY

95 S. Wilson Ave., Pasadena Terrace 5516

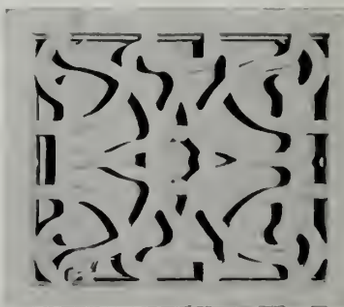
Aluminum Plaster-Flush Registers for Hot Air Furnaces



The Beauty and Artistic Design of Terra Cotta made Durable and Practical by an aluminum casting — finished to match your interior.

Designed and Executed by Ohrmund Brothers

Pasadena Gas Appliance Co., Inc.

901 E. Colorado Street

Pasadena Fair Oaks 9393

Hollywood Bowl

Art is the tangible expression of Man's soul, and whether Music, scuplture or Architecture, the difference is only in the vehicle used; the source of inspiration is the same.

Where all these expressions meet and harmonize as in the Hollywood Bowl, Art reaches its highest form.

The planning of this landmark of genius is one of the many achievements of the Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles.

The Hollywood Bowl

THE things which are dearest to us are the things which grow. That impulse to make two blades of grass grow where there was but one, is the very spirit of life; it keeps desire one step ahead of satiety. On this constructive creed has the great Southwest been built, and its institutions will be successful just so long as they continue to strive for the ultimate.

The Hollywood Bowl is one of those possessions of the people of California representing a great movement, an advance in better Art and healthier recreation. Never in this country has such a high standard of art been made so accessible to so many people.

It started with the most primitive accommodations; little more than a hillside for the activities of a great Auditorium. Each year came more people and more problems. To start a comprehensive program for the development of its property, the Bowl Association turned over the planning and designing to the Allied Architecte Association of Los Angeles last year. One of the stipulations of the program was a progressive plan and the contemplation of a limited amount of work each season. So the first years' accomplishments must of necessity meet those needs which were most practical and fundamental, and naturally the seating accommodations came first. For this the great hillside was regraded to give a pleasing contour and a greatly increased seating capacity. The seven miles of comfortable seats is a great improvement. One of the interesting problems was the necessity of preserving the natural charm of the setting without sacrificing the comfort, visibility and accessibility of a modern outdoor stadium. And so the important engineering features lie hidden under the ground. The graceful slope of the Bowl and the natural ground surface conceal a network of more than 70,000 cubic feet of concrete which permanently supports the new seats and banks. Also underneath the temporary superstructure of the stage is hidden a foundation and a lower level building for the ultimate handling of stage apparatus and accessories.

The Promenade, aisles and cross aisles have been planned to give the maximum amount of traffic with a minimum of confusion and interruption. The test of the first season has proved the layout to be entirely practical and effective and few changes will be made except on the surface treatment and embellishments. Most particularly do the paths, and in fact, the whole Bowl call for planting With this in mind, the seats have been banked and the aisles cut to a low level in order that the planting of the interior may be generous without obstruction to view. When the Bowl is surrounded by its border of green, when the splendid interior structure is softened by foliage masses and the permanent stage and settings are in place, its appearance will be as joyous to the eye as its music is to the ear. But even that is only a beginning in the plans to make a great center of culture for the people.

H. C. NICKERSON.

THE BATCHELDER TILES

BATCHELDER-WILSON COMPANY

We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

2633 Artesian Street

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

SCHOOL CALENDAR

TERM OPENINGS

ELLIOTT SCHOOL — September 20, 1926.

KENWOOD HALL SCHOOL for Girls. September 20, 1926.

URBAN MILITARY ACADEMY—September 15, 1926.

GIRLS' COLLEGIATE SCHOOL—September 30, 1926.

CUMNOCK SCHOOL — September 28, 1926.

GREENWOOD SCHOOL — September 15, 1926.

WESTLAKE SCHOOL—September 29, 1926.

MARLBOROUGH SCHOOL — September 22, 1926.

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertainments, etc., for the calendar pages are free of charge and should be received in the office of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, at least two weeks previous to date of issue, the 10th. No correction can be guaranteed if they are received later than that date. CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, California. One dollar and twenty-five cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be changed as many times as desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the change is made.

Entered as second class matter, July 28, 1919, at the Post Office at Pasadena, California, under act of March 3, 1879.

Clubs

VALLEY HUNT CLUB, PASADENA:
The formal season at the Valley Hunt Club closed with May, after which time no programs are arranged. The tennis court and swimming pool offer the outdoor attractions during the summer, and individual parties, both afternoon and evening, are arranged as desired.

ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB, PASADENA:
"Unattached players will be glad to know that the Annandale Golf Club is now open to summer members as in previous years at special summer rates. The course is in excellent condition and will not be torn up with new work this summer."
The afternoon bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been discontinued for the season, but tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged, followed by tea.
Table d'hote dinner served in dining room every Sunday from 12 to 3 p. m.

LOS ANGELES COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.
Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 .p m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month.
Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturday during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.

MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday in each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Dancing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday.
Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.

LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week, Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal. Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL COUNTRY CLUB:
A dinner dance is arranged for the third Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a. m., and not before two p. m.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB, SANTA BARBARA:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A recent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a special luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served.

PALOS VERDES GOLF CLUB: Offers an eighteen hole, all grass, seaside course, delightful for all the year play, open to residents and their guests. Lunch and dinner served every day. Tea and informal bridge may be enjoyed every afternoon.

ENCINO COUNTRY CLUB, VAN NUYS:
Buffet dinner dances every Wednesday evening.
Ladies Golf Thursday mornings.
Thursday a special luncheon is served, followed by bridge. Afternoon Tea 4:30.
Luncheon and dinner served every day.
Special luncheons, dinners, teas and bridge parties may be arranged for as desired.

NEWPORT HARBOR YACHT CLUB:
Friday, September 3, Final ladies' bridge luncheon, 12:30 p. m.
Friday, September 4, Labor Day ball, Saturday, Sunday and Monday, September 4, 5 and 6, Stag cruise to Catalina Island.
Saturday and Sunday, September 11 and 12, Auxiliary race around Catalina Island; schooners, ketches, yawls and sloops. Cruiser race around Catalina Island for Denny cup, under Vibert rules.
Saturday, October 9, Winners' ball, banquet, 6:30 p. m., presentation of trophies, 8:15 p. m., winners' ball, 9 p. m.
Saturday, October 30, Halloween party, banquet, 6:30 p. m., costume ball (everyone in costume, please) 8:30 p.m.
Saturday, December 4, Annual meeting of the membership. Election of officers and directors.
Saturday, January 15, 1927, Inaugural ball. Banquet, 6:30 p. m., presentation of officers, 8 p. m., dance, 8:30 p.m.

Bullock's Presents

R. F. Foster
International authority on Bridge

—Editor of Hoyle on Cards.
—Author of "Modern Bridge Tactics with 1926 Rules."
—Card editor of Vanity Fair.
—Inventor of "Double Valuation" and the "Eleven Rule."

MR. FOSTER will give a series of five Bridge Lessons in Bullock's Tea Room, at three thirty o'clock on the afternoons of September thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, sixteenth, seventeenth and on the morning of Saturday the eighteenth at ten o'clock. Tea will be served following each afternoon session.

Reservations for tickets may be made at Bullock's Information Desk, Fourth Floor Waiting Room, or in Bullock's Book Store, Hill Street Building.

Single Tickets, One Dollar and Fifty Cents
Series of Five, Seven Dollars and Fifty Cents
(Tables should be engaged at once as only a limited number are available)

Bullock's
Broadway—Hill and—Seventh
"One o'Clock Saturdays"

Art

LOS ANGELES MUSEUM OF HISTORY, SCIENCE AND ART, Exposition Park: George W. Bellows Memorial Exhibition: Loan Exhibition from Private collections: Paintings and Sculpture by Warren Wreclock (of Woodstock, N. Y.): Sculpture by Arnold Winthrop Ronnebeck; Screens by Robert Winthrop Chanler; Museum Collection of Paintings.

IN THE PRINT ROOMS

Costume Designs by Joseph Paget Fredericks, Japanese Prints, Etchings by Loren Barton, Margery Ryreson, and Anne Goldthwaite. Twice a month, on Thursdays, exhibiting artists give informal talks in the Print Rooms, at three o'clock. These Feature Thursdays have been very successful and will be continued. Information as to dates will be supplied at the Museum.

SOUTHWEST MUSEUM, Los Angeles: Exhibition of permanent collection.

THE BILTMORE SALON will show during the month the work of the Painters and Sculptors.

PASADENA ART INSTITUTE, Carmelita Gardens, announces an exhibition of studies of the Dance and Portrait Reliefs, (drawings and sculpture), by Katharine Beecher Stetson, beginning September 13th and continuing through October.

LELAND S. CURTIS will hold an exhibition during the month at the Pasadena Art Institute, consisting for the most part of pictures made in the higher parts of the Sierras in the dead of winter. Mr. Curtis made his sketching trips on skis as the snow was from ten to fifteen feet deep at an altitude of ten thousand feet.

THE LOS ANGELES COUNTY FAIR'S ANNUAL ART EXHIBITION will be held in the Art Building at the fairgrounds, Pomona, September 28 to October 2. Works eligible include paintings in oil, water colors, pastels and sculpture. Five hundred dollars in prizes will be awarded. Exhibits will be received at the Otis Art Institute in Los Angeles and the studio of Benjamin Brown in Pasadena until September 18 at 5 p. m. The jury of awards consists of Romilda Castruccio, Theodore B. Modra, John Hubbard Rich, Roger Noble Burnham and Merrell Gage. For further information write to Theodore B. Modra, Route 1, Ontario.

THE TWELFTH ANNUAL ARIZONA ART EXHIBITION will be held at the State Fair at Phoenix, November 8th to 13th, under the auspices of the Woman's Club of Phoenix. Prizes amounting to $695 will be awarded. Exhibits must be delivered to the Fine Arts Building in Phoenix by 5 p. m., November 2. Intending exhibitors should apply for entry blanks and conditions to Mrs. William K. James, East McDowell Road, Phoenix, Ariz.

THE PRINT ROOMS, Hollywood, an unsurpassed collection of etchings and engravings, including good examples of the works of Rembrandt, Whistler, Durer, Millet, Corot, the Italian engravers, the French impressionists, and modern American and European etchers.

Where the Treasures of a Collector May Be Purchased as Gifts

A. Schmidt & Son
For Fifty-six Years

IMPORTERS OF ANTIQUE AND MODERN SILVER AND
Sheffield Plate, Fine China and Glass

2320 W. Seventh St., Los Angeles

391 E. Colorado St., Pasadena

Boston New York Washington

Music

ADOLF TANDLER'S Little Symphony appears in concert at the Hollywood Bowl, Friday night, September 3. The twenty-four pianists who appeared at the formal openings of the Bowl season are featured in a piano ensemble. Soloists are Calmon Luboviski, violinist, and Marjorie Dodge, soprano. The Norma Gould Dancers form a delightful part of the program.

JOHN McCORMACK, the always delightful Irish tenor, gives a final concert at the Shrine Auditorium, Los Angeles, September 2, before leaving on his transcontinental tour. Mr. McCormack was a guest of the Bohemians during the recent meeting in the famous Bohemian Grove.

KATHRYN COFFIELD, director of the Seven Arts Society of Long Beach, presents Kathryn Meisel, contralto of the Chicago Civic Opera, at the Long Baech Auditorium, on the evening of September 16.

THE Hollywood Community Orchestra, Jay Plowe, director, announces a series of five concerts for 1926-1927 at the Hollywood Woman's Auditorium. The opening event will be in November and at each concert a solo artist will appear. The orchestra numbers sixty players, amateurs and professional musicians, and is sponsored and supported by Hollywood Woman's Club.

SUMMER Symphony Concerts at the Hollywood Bowl closed a most successful season, August 28, with Alfred Hertz conducting the final two weeks. Mr. Hertz was the pioneer conductor of the Bowl concerts, having conducted throughout the opening season, four years ago. Maud Allan, interpretative dancer, appeared with the orchestra August 20, and gave her dance interpretation of Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique Symphony" and Johann Strauss' "Blue Danube Waltz."

LONG BEACH Community Symphony Orchestra has appointed Ingwald Wicks, violinist, as director.

THE Long Beach Opera Reading Club, Dr. Frank Nagel, musical director, and Mrs. G. H. Galbraith, president, will hold the first program on October 7.

THE Euterpe Opera Reading Club announces that Roland Paul has been selected as musical director to succeed Alexander Bevani, who is leaving for a visit to Italy. Mrs. Elmer G. Mansfield is the founder and president of the organization and Mrs. Hector Geiger is music chairman.

LOS ANGELES Opera and Fine Arts Club opens the season, September 10, with a reception at the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, where the regular meetings will be held during the winter. The club plans include a series of programs on Sunday afternoons, followed by tea, at the Ambassador theater. Eleanor Waring Burnham will present a three-act English comedy on September 26.

THEATER OF THE STARS, Fawnskin, Big Bear Lake, has been increasingly popular throughout the summer. Several improvements have been made, including the substitution of a rustic bough-covered setting for the stage instead of the canvas enclosure.

WALTER HENRY ROTHWELL, conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, has returned from his Eastern trip and will open the eighth season of symphony concerts, October 21. Mr. Rothwell announces that Alfred Megerlin, formerly concertmaster of the New York Philharmonic, has been secured as first violinist. Other additions to the orchestra are Max Srbecky, fourth horn; C. F. Ruckel, contra-bassoon; Charles J. Bajus, second trombone.

THE MUSIC DEPARTMENT of the new Public Library, Los Angeles, has been assigned large and well lighted quarters on the second floor. This department contains thousands of books on musical topics, as well as books, scores and pieces of music. The management of this department will give information on current musical matters, will post programs, reports of concerts. A smaller room, off the main room of the department, sound proof, is supplied with a piano, which a patron of the library may use for twenty minutes in "trying over" music.

ALICE COLEMAN BATCHELDER, pianist, with the co-operation of the Pasadena Community Playhouse Association will present a series of eight Coleman Chamber Concerts in the Community Playhouse, season of 1926-1927, Sunday afternoons at four o'clock, beginning in October. The programs, as now planned, are as follows: October 24, 1926—Philharmonic String Quartet; November 21, 1926—Mischa Elman String Quartet; December 19, 1926—Luboviski String Quartet; January 16, 1927—de Busscher Wood-wind Ensemble; February 13, 1927—Philharmonic String Quartet; March 6, 1927—Persinger String Quartet, (formerly San Francisco Chamber Music Society); March 27, 1927—Luboviski String Quartet; April 17, 1927—New York String Quartet. Pianists—Olga Steeb, Percy Grainger, Alice Coleman Batchelder and Mildred Marsh. Baritone and Piano—Clifford Lott and Blanche Rogers Lott.

LOS ANGELES GRAND OPERA ASSOCIATION is perfecting every detail in the endeavor to present an unrivaled season of grand opera. This, the third season, opens with the presentation of "Samson and Delilah," October 4, in the Shrine Auditorium, Los Angeles. Following are the operas and the stars to appear in each: Samson and Delilah, October 4, with Homer, Marshall, Journet, Cotreuil; La Tosca, October 6, with Raisa, Cortis, Baklanoff, Defrere, Trevisan; Martha, October 7, with Dux, Rimini, Schipa, Trevisan, Marlo; Rigoletto, October 9 matinee, with Melius, Schipa, Rimini, Lazzari; Aida, October 9, Raisa, Meisle, Lindi, Baklanoff, Cotreuil, Lazzari; Traviata, October 11, Muzio, Cortis, Bonelli; Barber of Seville, October 12, Melius, Schipa, Rimini, Lazzari, Trevisan, Marlo; Madame Butterfly, October 14, Raisa, Meisle, Althouse, Bonelli, Rimini; Faust, October 16 matinee, with Dux, Meisle, Marlo, Althouse, Lazzari, Bonelli; Il Trovatore, October 16, with Raisa, Homer, Lindi, Rimini, Lazzari; and Die Walkure, October 18, with Alsen, Fitziu, Meisle, Althouse and Baklanoff.

Serge Oukrainsky of the Pavley-Oukrainsky ballet of New York, ballet master for the Paris, Buenos Aires and Chicago Opera ocmpanies, will direct the ballet. Ourkainsky will come to Los Angeles three weeks before the opening of the season bringing with him from New York three solo dancers and one premier dancer. With these, and dancers picked in Los Angeles, he will stage the ballets for the performances of opera scheduled. Oukrainsky will lead the work on the stage, doing a good bit of solo work. Elaborate costumes for the dances, similar to those used on the Continent, will be brought to the city by Oukrainsky. He plans to duplicate the colorful Oriental ballet bits from the operas "Samson and Delilah" and "Aida" just as they were given in the same operas in Paris last season.

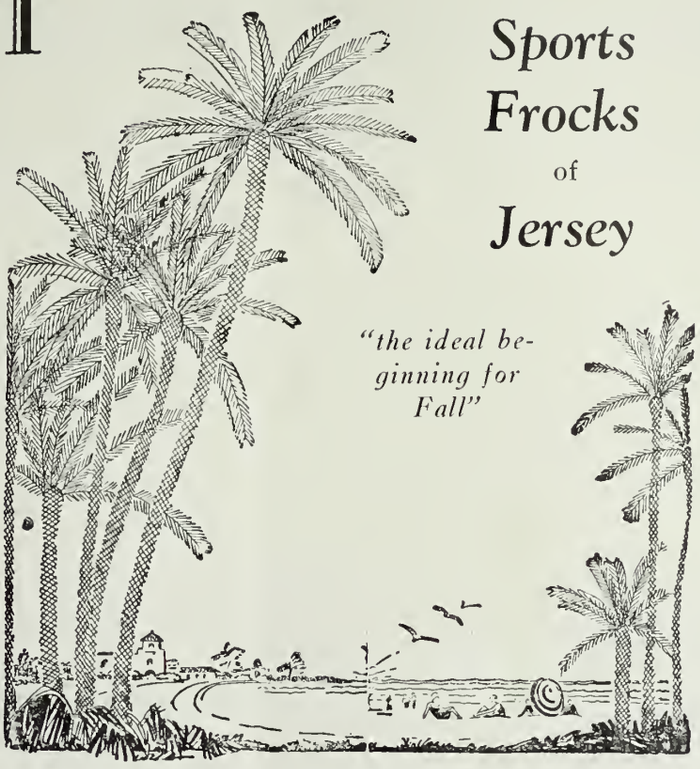
SAN DIEGO CIVIC OPERA ASSOCIATION, Buren Schryock, general director, announces a season of five operas in San Diego, opening with Verdi's "Rigoletto," October 2. "Carmen" is to be given Monday, October 4, "Traviata," the 7th, "Trovatore," the 9th, and "Gioconda," the 11th. The operas will be given at the new Russ High School Auditorium. Mr. Schryock announces that excellent artists have been engaged for the leading roles, among these being the coloratura soprano, Mme. Maria Caselotti, just returned to America from marked success in opera in Italy; Juanita Careta, coloratura soprano; Carlotta Rossi, dramatic soprano; Louise Caselotti, remarkable gifted young mezzo soprano; Yvonne Peugeot, contralto; Douglas Cole and Raymond Harmon, tenors, and Walter Dupre, baritone. San Diego will supply the chorus of forty voices, a large part of these being routined opera singers who have been singing Italian and French opera under Mr. Schryock's direction the past five years. The Ippolitov Ballet has been engaged for all the operas.

GAETANO MEROLA announces that he will direct three American operas at the Hollywood Bowl next June. They will be Crocker-Redding's "Fay-Yen-Fah," Cadman's "Witch of Salem" and Victor Herbert's "Natoma."

THE LOS ANGELES TRIO (Sylvain Noack, violin; Ilya Bronson, 'cello; May MacDonald Hope, piano) presented the final program of the Summer School Session of University of Southern California, at Bovard Auditorium, Friday night, Aug. 6.

Announcements

NORMAN KENNEDY is now completing the murals which he has done for the new Hollywood Chamber of Commerce building.



THE HOLLYWOOD CHAMBER OF COMMERCE Building will contain a permanent art exhibition, but made up of examples of the work of well known artists, and changed from time to time. The selection, hanging and placing of the work is under the supervision of the Commissioner of Fine Arts, the members being Ella Buchanan, sculptor, Paul Lauritz, E. Roscoe Shrader, Edouard Vysekal and Francis William Vreeland, painters.

AINSLIE GALLERIES (Barker Bros., 7th Street, Los Angeles), are showing paintings by well known American artists.

NEAR EAST RELISF has received a thousand dollars from Hon. Henry Morgenthau to be offered in prizes for posters, a poem and a slogan setting forth the appropriateness of Golden Rule Sunday as falling between Thanksgiving and Christmas. The former is the holiday of gratitude, the latter of generosity. Between them, on the first Sunday in December, falls International Golden Rule Sunday, the day when self-examination determines a practical expression on belief in international brotherhood through the giving of aid to orphans, under-privileged children and others destitute. $500 for the most compelling poster in any medium; $100 for the second; $100 for the third; $100 for the fourth; $100 for the most effective poem; $100 for the most telling slogan. In addition to the above, payment will be made for any other posters, poems and slogans that are found useful. Executive Committee, National Golden Rule Committee, is composed of the following: Albert Shaw, Cleveland E. Dodge, John H. Finley, Edwin M. Bulkley, William B. Millar, John R. Mott, Fred B. Smith, Daniel A. Poling, Miss Mary E. Woolley, Charles V. Vickrey, Arthur E. Bestor.

FLORNINA
95 South Los Robles
Pasadena, California

SANTA BARBARA
21 E. De La Guerra
El Paseo Sports Shop

Sports Frocks of Jersey

"the ideal beginning for Fall"

LAKE ARROWHEAD LODGE
E. K. HOAK, Managing Director.
Mile High—American Plan—Open All Year
Dinner Dance Every Saturday Night.
Reservations made at 319 Van Nuys Bldg. Tel. VA. 0959, or direct to Lodge. Call Lake Arrowhead Main 1. Rates, $7.00 a day and up, including meals and room.

Beautiful Garden Pieces
in
Sculptured Terra Cotta

Italian Terra Cotta Co.
W. H. Robison
1149 MISSION ROAD
Opposite County Hospital
Phone Lincoln 1057 Los Angeles

NO. 121—TALMAGE VASE

Eleanor and . . . .
Hollingsworth Beach
French and Italian Arts
630 East Colorado Street
Pasadena,
California

Mt. LOWE

"Earth has no finer view to show."

Mt. LOWE TAVERN and Cottages

Enlarged and Improved

at the terminus of this World-Famous Trip afford a most delightful retreat for a long or short sojourn at reasonable rates

5 Trains Daily at convenient hours - from Main St. Station Los Angeles

$2.50 Round Trip Rate

For information and Reservations apply

Pacific Electric Ry.

Information Bureau Phone MEtropolitan 100 - TRinity 3661

HOTEL GREEN

A well ordered Residential and Tourist Hotel of peculiar excellence. Open all year. Moderate rates. Apartments by the month.

CHARLES B. HERVEY, Proprietor

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Italian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

KIEVITS GALLERIES
Vista del Arroyo Hotel, Pasadena
European and American Paintings

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - - Editor and Publisher
ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - - Associate Editor

No. 80 AUGUST, 1926 Vol. VIII

CONTENTS

	PAGE
THE IRVING T. BUSH RESIDENCE.....Cover Design Reproduced from a painting of the Architect's Drawing by Norman Kennedy, Wallace Neff, Architect.
THE DEVELOPMENT OF ARCHITECTURE.....Reginald D. Johnson	7
THE CALIFORNIA HOUSE IN FLORIDA.....M. Urmy Seares	8-9
THE INCURABLE OPTIMIST.....Vera Sadicoff-Goldman	10
AMONG THE JACK PINES.....Theresa Homet Patterson	11-12
RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS.....Louise Morgrage	13
THE GARDEN TOURS.....Ervanna Bowen Bissell	14-15
SOUTHLAND OPINION..... BUSHIDO IN AMERICA.....Mrs. Frank A. Vanderlip THE SOUTHWEST MUSEUM.....James A. B. Scherer SONGS OF THE SPIRIT—AEOLIAN.....Clarence Urmy	16-17
SPORTS, NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL.....	18-19
THE DRAMA.....Ellen Leech	20
THE AMERICAN HOTEL ASSOCIATION'S EUROPEAN TOUR.....	21
THE A.I.A. PAGE.....Ralph Adams Cram	22
THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB BULLETIN.....	23
A HOUSE BY WITMER AND WATSON.....H. O. SEXSMITH	23
THE COTTAGES AT THE HUNTINGTON HOTEL.....	24
ENCOURAGING THE BUILDING OF BETTER HOMES....Pearl Chase	28
THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE BULLETIN.....	28
SOUTHLAND SMALL HOUSE SKETCH SERVICE.....	30

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.

Copyrighted, 1926, by M. Urmy Seares

Subscription price $2.50 per year, $1.25 one half year
R. B. URMY, JR., Business Manager
MAIL ADDRESS: CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
Advertisers desiring information concerning space or rates may call Fair Oaks 7034 for Publisher's Office
During Press Week, 24th to 30th, call TRinity 1501

The Los Angeles

Elizabeth Arden Salon

with

J. W. ROBINSON CO.

LOS ANGELES

UNDER the direct management of Miss Arden and her New York staff, and offering the same specialized treatments which have made Miss Arden's other salons internationally known.

Seventh Floor

Round the World Cruises
$1250.00 and up
Mediterranean Cruises
$600 and up

Agency for all tours and cruises. Here for your convenience. Let us arrange your reservations.

C. J. JONES STEAMSHIP AGENCY
372 East Colorado St., Pasadena
Phone Terrace 8026

La Solana

A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue.

Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day.

Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St. Pasadena

PORTRAITS
BY
PHOTOGRAPHY

Charles S. Seabolt

26 No. Los Robles Avenue, Pasadena, California

Opposite Maryland Hotel
Terrace 6712

Antiques

JOHN W. CONDIT

Dealer in rare old pieces selected from private homes. Specialist in the proper restoration of heirlooms.

199 S. Fair Oaks Ave., Pasadena
Telephone Terrace 0315-W

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

THE DEVELOPMENT OF ARCHITECTURAL STYLES IN CALIFORNIA

By REGINALD D. JOHNSON, F. A. I. A.

DURING the past forty years in California, or since the days of the so-called "ginger-bread" period, there has taken place a most interesting architectural development and search for architectural styles which are truly Californian.

The range in architectural styles as developed by this movement has been almost unlimited and surely no section of any country can equal in variety the attempts which we have made to solve this problem. We are still daily confronted with various examples of these efforts in design, ranging from the would-be cozy Chinese bungalow with its painted tin tile roof to the Mission garage with its all-important campanile.

While this development has often been painful to watch, it nevertheless has not been without interest, and now that we are apparently passing through the extreme jazz plaster and vari-colored shingle period there are indications on all sides that we are settling down to two more or less distinctive types, and the development of one general style is probably not far distant.

The two types which are at present most in evidence in our domestic architecture we will call, for the want of better names, the Mediterranean and the English. In both these types a very good deal of fine work is being done, work of which we are all justly proud.

No one can question the charm of the better examples of the Mediterranean style as developed by our local architects. No one who has at heart the interest of better architecture in California would wish to see this style replaced or discouraged in any way, and it is only to be hoped that this type will receive more support and will not be cast aside for some new style which may at first appeal somewhat to one's sense of novelty but which may have little else to recommend it to thinking people.

And now a word for the so-called English type, many excellent

A WOODLAND SCENE IN FLORIDA, BACKGROUND FOR THE BUSH HOUSE. WALLACE NEFF, ARCHITECT, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA. PHOTOGRAPH BY COURTESY OF CHARLES B. HERVEY, OF PASADENA, CALIFORNIA, AND OF FLORIDA, AND MEMBER OF MANY ORGANIZATIONS IN BOTH STATES

A HOUSE BUILT BY THOMAS O. LARKIN IN MONTEREY IN 1834, STILL IN POSSESSION OF A DESCENDENT. PHOTOGRAPHS TAKEN IN MONTEREY BY MRS. WILBERT MORGRAGE.

examples of which we see about us. This type has been developed by those people who believe that from the Anglo-Saxon point of view there has never been but one real architectural interpretation of the word "home," and that interpretation is the English or the Colonial, its Georgian offspring. These same people are well aware of the charm of the Spanish and Italian, and of the appropriateness of these styles to local usage, and the interesting question which we have to solve is "What style or type can be suggested for these people, who recognize the inappropriateness of the English in southern California but are not willing to forego its charm and livable qualities"? Can these two types be fused together and out of this fusion a new style developed which will satisfy at the same time those seeking the home atmosphere and charm of the English and still retain the romance of the Mediterranean?

Have we not before our eyes examples of early attempts along this very line of thought, attempts to combine the livable quality of the Georgian with the romantic quality of the Spanish? Are not the early California houses the indication of the source to which we should go in seeking the solution of this prblem? Those houses of Monterey, for example, built by the early settlers solved the question of a background for their American furniture and at the same time gave an indication of the possibilities of this type when used for the solution of problems susceptible to picturesque solutions.

If we study and analyze these early and often crude attempts we find that in place of the painted wooden exterior of New England we have the plaster wall, which of course from a practical and artistic point of view is better suited to our semi-tropical climate and vegetation. In place of the shingle roof we find the hand-made tile and the hand-split Redwood shakes, and in place of the severely plain New England silhouette we find the over-hanging balcony and informal outlines typical of Spanish work in the mother country and in her colonies.

If we are to develop a true California style of architecture let us see if we cannot retain the so-called Mediterranean style, which is now being so successfully developed, and for those who seek a somewhat different architectural atmosphere for their homes let us see if there is not in the architecture of early California a solution in another style which shall altogether harmonize with the so-called Mediterranean, but withal be distinctive, fitting, practical, and altogether livable.

NOTE: Examples of Mr. Johnston's recent work in the Mediterranean and early Californian styles will appear in coming issues of this magazine.

AN OLD MONTERY ADOBE, THE HOME OF MARCY WOODS, PAINTER.

THE COVER—THE WORK OF WALLACE NEFF, ARCHITECT

YOUNG Californians who have never left their native heath,—and there are many of them now, even in the Southland,—can know of Florida only through the windows of a house like this on our cover and by pictures of Florida scenery like that on page seven.

Built for Mr. Bush by a California architect, this handsome residence carries also a message to Florida from the craftsmen of California; for much of the material used in building it was transplanted across the continent, and the craftsmanship is all our own.

A GLIMPSE OF A FLORIDA LAKE SEEN THROUGH THE WINDOW OF THE DINING ROOM. THE FLORIDA HOME OF MR. IRVING T. BUSH, LAKE WALES. WALLACE NEFF, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA, ARCHITECT

THE DRAWING ROOM OF THE IRVING T. BUSH HOUSE AT LAKE WALES, FLORIDA. WALLACE NEFF, PASADENA, ARCHITECT. LIGHTING FIXTURES BY WILKINSON-SCOTT COMPANY PASADENA; PAINTING BY BLISS PAINT COMPANY AND HANGINGS BY CHEESENRIGHT STUDIOS PASADENA. PHOTOGRAPHS BY ALEXANDER, LAKE WALES, FLORIDA

Mr. Irving T. Bush has fostered art and architecture in many lands. His choice of Mr. Wallace Neff as architect for his home in Florida was a direct compliment to this Californian's development of the Spanish house in the Southland of the United States.

This is the fifth house which Mr. Neff has built on the Atlantic side of the country. As a result of the first efforts he realized that we on the Pacific Coast take our Spanish architecture more seriously, and train our craftsmen and contractors to do more permanent work. Our kilns have turned out beautiful tile which have become world renowned. Angula hand-made roofing tile and Mission floor tile have become household words; and Batchelder tiles have already made good on the Atlantic shores. Where it was not practical to export California materials, Mr. Neff used Florida woods, and plaster from nearer sources; but to do the work he asked The Cheesewright Studio to send their designer of wrought iron and their draperies; and The Bliss Paint and Paper Company of Pasadena, to send interior decorators and painters. As it was in the time of the building of the Gothic Cathedrals, the craftsmen of California are vitally necessary to the architect with whom they collaborate.

So skillful have Bliss painters become in getting the effect necessary for a Neff house in the Spanish style, so excellent is their craft that California may well send them abroad to represent her, just as she sends crack sportsmen to compete in the Olympic Games. The crafts will vital factor is a good design.

LOOKING ACROSS THE HALLWAY OF THE IRVING T. BUSH HOUSE, OF WHICH THE PICTURE ON PAGE 2 GIVES THE MAIN AXIS. THE TRIPLE SIDELIGHTS OF HAND WROUGHT IRON AND BRASS USED THROUGHOUT THE HOUSE ARE THE PRODUCT OF THE WILKINSON-SCOTT COMPANY OF PASADENA, CRAFTSMEN IN WROUGHT IRON AND CO-WORKERS WITH THE ARCHITECT, E. WALLACE NEFF, PASADENA only when our Estedfods take competition in daily work-a-day things seriously and place before the workers such an example as Bliss affords. In California's Better Homes Week, Santa Barbara has already taken first prize in a nation-wide competition, sharing it last year with Atlanta, Georgia, also a Southland State.

Mr. Neff is young. He has the advantage of a background rich in travel and study.

The first little picture of his work which appeared in public was that of his mother's kitchen in this magazine September, 1921. Since then he has designed about two hundred houses, no two alike yet all harmonious in beauty. In so short a time his original work has been the inspiration of countless copyists and has aroused the desire for beauty in the hearts of countless humble home builders. These have hung little brown balconies on their houses and have dared to leave undecorated a large expanse of plastered wall.

Mr. Neff's career as an architect may easily be covered by the last four years of California's building. His beautiful bank on the business street of Pasadena speaks eloquently of his versatility; but the great contribution which Wallace Neff has made to American architecture lies in the aggregate of delightful homes he has created for the delectation of rich and poor alike. To live in them is a joy forever; to watch them grow as they line a street or cluster together in beauty is to rejoice that California has architects to whom the most important vital factor is designed.

VIEW OF SAN FRANCISCO AND ITS BAY FROM THE HILLS. PHOTOGRAPH BY COURTESY OF CALIFORNIANS INCORPORATED, SAN FRANCISCO.

THE INCURABLE OPTIMIST

By VERA SADICOFF-GOLDMAN, M. D

HILLSIDE HOUSE is gaily attired to receive loved and honored guests today. Such a dear little house it is. Like a mischievous boy clinging by lean brown fingers and toes to the branches of a tree, our house is perched high up to see all it may see. Such things as our house looks upon—the bay glistening smoothly at our feet, the lighthouses, gray middle-aged rotund gentlemen by day transformed by a strange alchemy into twinkling coquettes at night; the enfolding, caressing majesty of the hills. The ships slowly moving past, great men-of-war in sober gray, fairy boats like housewives with market baskets in competent hands, the four-masted schooners just returned from Alaska with precious loads of furs, with romance and adventure in an evanescent cloak about them, and then the tiny yachts, not unlike the silver seagulls floating above them. It is such a blessed house, and today doubly blessed by the presence of good friends. For we are here to bid farewell to the doctor and his young wife. The lacework of vines screening the terrace of our house casts fleeting shadows on the faces of the two young people, changing and modifying their aspect, but unable to erase the earnestness, seriousness, sincerity and high purpose indelibly stamped there.

I had asked all their young friends. They had been children together and now were here to bid them farewell; Glen Wright, the successful young attorney! James Bowman, the broker, gently taking the burden of business from his father's ageing shoulders, and, of course, the coterie of young and old medical men and women. And because they all love him and wish him well, Dr. Alonzo Hitchcock tells them of his plan of life. He confesses to being tremendously interested in Psychology and Psychiatry, which deal with the normal and abnormal manifestations of the mind. But that interest would have to wait. A man makes a better specialist after several years of experience in general practice. After the crucible of general practice, he planned to go to some famous Psychiatric institution in the United States or abroad to study his beloved specialty and then come back and establish himself in the city as a specialist. Glen Wright sat down his cup and seated himself nearer the young doctor. "'Lon,'" he said, "you are either a great fool, or a great hero. This applies not to you individually but to the medical fraternity as a whole. How long do you intend to stay in a country practice?" "At least five years," was the answer. "Then you plan to spend practically all you have saved during those years in order to study Psychiatry and to establish yourself in that specialty. You have already spent seven years at college, another year as an intern, five more in general practice. By the time you are ready to begin, James here and I and all the rest of us fellows, will be ready to retire. What, I ask, do you get out of all this? Why do you do it?"

Dr. "Lon" smiled at his friend and glanced at his wife—a glance humorous, deprecating, rueful. Hers met his squarely. She moved a little closer and slipped her hand into that of her young husband. A woman with college training, the gold medalist of her class, she looked at life calmly, intelligenty, fearlessly. Her father had been a physician. She knew of the busy days, the disturbed nights, the jangling telephone. She realized absolutely that as Dr. Hitchcock's wife, she would not be the wife of a rich man, the comforts, the luxuries of living were not to be theirs. But to her fine young courage all these difficulties, irritations, even hardships, were as naught compared to the happiness of working side by side with this kindly, understanding, honorable young physician. "Lon, dear," she said, "Despite his apparent devotion to the practicalities of living, Glen is, I think, sufficiently a humanist, sufficiently an artist at living to appreciate our point of view. In the interests of our friendship I think we should share with him our ideals and hopes. Please, dearest, overcome for a moment your aversion to speaking of self and tell him what you plan to 'get out of it,' as Glen puts it."

Lon Hitcock thus urged spoke thoughtfully and gravely. "Glen," he said, "Do you remember Tommy, our neighbor's baby boy? You loved playing with him. Do you remember the yellow curls, the beautiful blue eyes, the little face glowing like a lovely flower? Tommy died a few days ago with diphtheria." A shadow passed over the faces of the listeners. The baby had been tenderly loved. "Glen," he addressed himself to his questioner, while including the others in the group, "Do you know that while medical research is feverishly searching for solution of unsolved medical problems, diphtheria has been thoroughly worked out. We now know the cause of diphtheria. We can determine whether a person is susceptible to it. We can prevent it in susceptible persons. We have a treatment for patients who have permitted themselves to become ill with diphtheria. There is no excuse for that baby's dying of a diphtheritic infection. Do you know that at present we have a test called the Schick Test by which we can determine whether or not a person is susceptible to diphtheria? It takes a few minutes of time to make the test, and costs very little money for materials used. If the patient gives a negative reaction it is not likely that he will contract the infection even if exposed to it. If, on the other hand, the result of the Schick Test is positive, that patient is in danger of contracting diphtheria at any time. Since children are more commonly susceptible to diphtheria than adults, the Schick Test should be made for them. In certain enlightened communities and in certain schools all the children are given Schick Tests. If a person, adult or child, is found to be susceptible there is a medicine called Toxin Anti-Toxin which is given to prevent the disease.

"Tommy had been playing with the neighbor's little girl. This child had diphtheria. But so light an infection that she was hardly uncomfortable when put to bed. But Tommy was very ill. He had been ill four days before a physician was called. The mother had herself made a diagnosis of 'croup' and had been giving the poor little chap home remedies during all that time. Now, Glen, as I have said, for diphtheria we have a specific treatment, a medicine called anti-toxin. Anti-toxin acts against—that is, it counteracts the action of the poison elaborated by the diphtheria bacilli, as the germs are called, and prevents their action. Since the poison of the diphtheria bacilli besides attacking the throat attacks the muscles, including the heart, four days without treatment—think of it! Living, as we do in 'Doc-heart is seriously damaged. Time counts. Hours often make a difference in the patient's chances for recovery, and here was Tommy for four days without treatment—think of it! Living, a swe do in 'Doctors' Row,' were at least four or five doctors who would have gladly helped the little chap. Tommy's grandmother believes that they lost their baby because it is the will of God. But Tommy's mother now knows that had she been more watchful, more intelligent, less cocksure she could have had a Schick Test done to determine Tommy's susceptibility to diphtheria. Since he was susceptible, he should have been given toxin-anti-toxin to prevent the infection. If that were neglected and Tommy contracted diphtheria, she now knows that a microscopic diagnosis could have been made in a few hours, and given anti-toxin Tommy had a very good chance for recovery. All these things she now knows and has many sad hours of leisure to think over in the night when the image of the little fellow stands before her as an accusing angel.

"Now, I suppose you want to know what all this has to do with me. Well, I am hoping to be able to do something for the Tommies of the world and their mothers, too. Perhaps the mothers will learn to trust me and my kind sufficiently to realize that the years I have spent in study, which I do not begrudge them by the way, might be of benefit to them and give me and my colleagues in medicine a chance to help—not only by treating them, but by teaching them how to prevent disease. I am constantly keeping in touch with medical truths as they are discovered one by one. I can transmit this information to the mothers of the Tommies of today and the grandmothers of the Tommies of the future. So you see my years in general practice will be repaid. I expect to accumulate a large, a very large capital of understanding with my fellow man, of memories of work well done. Even though perhaps my stock of dollars will not be much larger than at present."

"Then, Lon, you plan to go out of general practice and go into a specialty—where you will lose all your accumulated capital of friendships and good works," suggested Glen. "You know well that the specialist is not in close touch with the family. He's entirely too remote." "That is true," Lon answered. "Perhaps the mothers, fathers, grandfathers and grandmothers, even the aunts and uncles of the Tommies of the world will by that time be willing to cooperate with us for Tommy's sake. I will, of course, continue to do all I can, but," and he looked stern and grave, "they must do their share, for the direct responsibility for the welfare of our Tommies rests on their shoulders. They must learn to understand us, to trust us and to come to us for help when body and mind need repair. With the progress and development of medicine it is impossible for one human being to keep up with all that is new. The development of the specialist is inevitable, and the people must help to make the necessary adjustment in the transition from the family physician to the specialist. Ways and means must be developed by which humanity may benefit by the growth of scientific medicine. If the Tommies of the world are to be permitted to die through neglect, ignorance, apathy of the people who have them in their care, then of course my life would be utterly useless. But I firmly believe that people can be made to understand and to know medical truths. I want to help with curative medicine, with preventative medicine and with medical education, so that people may know how to use scientific medicine as an instrument for better and happier living."

Lon ceased speaking, our group sat silent. The gentle simmering of the samovar was the only sound heard. Somehow one forgot the think of the dollars Doctor "Lon" would never accumulate. His life seemed suddenly fabulously enriched.

AMONG THE JACK PINES

By THERESA HOMET PATTERSON

IT HAD been an anxious day for the big police dog. He had watched every box packed and every bag, and when they and all the family were aboard, his wagging tail became almost paralyzed with fear. He did not have to be told to express joy, when his master said, "Thor, get in." There were the usual questions, who locked the pantry window and did anyone put in the new fishhooks, and, "Oh, my tennis shoes," but when the auto door slammed, it was with the feeling that we were all set. The engine waited only for the word, and went out of the drive like a humming bird.

Much as Philadelphians go around the world without having seen Liberty bell, I had never seen Big Bear Lake, and was no less pleased than Thor to be included in this party. He was tall enough so that with his feet properly on the floor he could sit on the edge of the seat between the boys and he did, although we told him we were crowded. Turning east with the long shadows, we passed through the big oaks of Baldwin Ranch, over the gray wash of San Gabriel with its trail of blue sky in a narrow stream, through glossy green orchards and brown hills still lighted by a few of our Lord's candles. The mountain dipped from San Dimas canyon where a dam is in process to conserve more of the waste water. Ontario's double boulevard, cool with lacey peppers and grevillea and palms reaches to the foot of Mt. Baldy. The car could not resist this canopied way and turned north to Highland Avenue, then thirty-seven miles without a turn, but with many roller-coaster dips answering the purpose of thank-you-mams of carriage days. The largest vineyard in the world (we have to tell the truth) stretches far as eye can see. The road slips through many green tunnels of eucalyptus, walnuts and cypress. They are wind breaks. How nice when utility walks hand in hand with beauty and how often they are needlessly separated. A pink cloud covered half the sky with one edge badly ravelled. It might have squeezed through Cajon Pass from the desert where color is made, and been torn by the mountain peaks.

All cars going to Big Bear stop at the foot of the mountain for breath, or air, gas, oil and water, then into second. With us it was a dash into the mystery of mountains at night. The car swung to the right and to the left on hairpin turns. The evening star seemed to be leading us up, dodging behind the evergreens, resting upon their pointed tops, appearing suddenly from behind some mountain. Down cars sent their light streaming ahead to warn us. For a time we could discern the depth of the canyon along which we traveled, but soon the little mountains had cuddled close to the big ones and night threw her black mantle over them and us. How cheerful the little lighted corners were that would have been a scar by daylight with their signs and bottles. At one of these a dog bounced out. How he did step on the gas as he made the curves with us, barking at every bound. His speed came by spurts so that he would be back of us and then appear in the path of our headlights. He must have been laid up after the Fourth when there were ten thousand cars at Big Bear.

Our sense of height came from looking down upon the cities in the valley, which looked like star clusters. Thor was a better sport than the boys, who became seasick. The star was ever in the lead and when it had brought us to the cabin, it rested in the lake. The key turned, the lights were snapped on, a lamp with a smoky chimney stood on the mantle as a contrast to the luxury of electricity. The doors and windows were thrown open, but there was no musty odor which is the besetting sin of cabins. Wood was brought in, the fire lighted, and Thor enjoyed sandwiches and marshmallows with the rest of us. The beds were made up and, with a prayer in my heart, I watched the stars in the pine tops until I fell asleep.

FIR AND PINE IN THE NATIONAL GAME PRESERVE, CALIFORNIA.

With what a happy chatter of quail the morning wakened. Then a chipmunk tic-tocked as though he were the mountain clock to time the wakening of all the birds. A pair of Audobons flitted before my window like butterflies. The Juncos talked quietly on the ground where they were breakfasting, but the young Jays screamed so that all who slept would sleep no longer, and they were right for once! The morning took its keynote from the cheery Chick-a-dees. After valley heat, a mountain side of evergreens is a refreshing picture to look at on awakening. The smell of bacon snatched me from this woodland revelry, only to be lost again when I looked down upon the lake. How was a boat riding in mid-sphere! There was no evidence of water except to hold the reflection of sky and mountains, jack-pines, and boats riding at anchor. A cloud curled up smoke-like from the opposite mountain peak. On one of the four rocky points projecting into the lake foreground is a Japanese house with lantern and torii Miyagima-like.

HIDDEN LAKE IN THE NATIONAL PRESERVE, SAN JACINTO MOUNTAINS.

After breakfast we drove around the lake by cabin and camp, through fields of purple lupin, yarrow everlasting and wild buckwheat. All the rocky roadsides were touched up with the scarlet of Indian paint brush and scarlet bugler. There were patches of white satiny primrose. Every prospect was pleasing, so we included Baldwin Lake, making it twenty-nine miles instead of seventeen. Johnson grade, is it eight thousand? Anyway it makes the head light and we couldn't be sure whether we saw a vision or a desert through a dip in the mountains. The black hills in that desert might be islands in a lake or again they might be clouds, and the desert be sky. To the west black clouds were being ripped with lightning, and the rain fell in sheets over the lake. The home run was through the rain. The patter, the perfume, the joy of a summer shower were ours. There were grain fields planted no doubt to draw the duck and wild game. There were flocks of birds on the lake, too distant to be identified; waders looking like Upland Plover; Peet Weets just skimming the surface, and Blue Birds flying from post to post. Water cress grew by the streams, fat cattle chewed their cuds in the meadows. The eaves were dripping at the cabin. The sun came out of a June sky and lit up all the little white clouds that were peeping up along the horizon to see if the black storm clouds had gone.

By afternoon the lake was purring with motor boats. A red canoe traveling by motor sent the spray flying and left a perfect marcel in her wake. Taking a boat ride we passed a fisherman. He wore a large straw hat and was reading as he half reclined on a pillow, one foot overboard. He told us he was a busy man, but added that they were not biting much and that a west wind was needed to clear the water of bloom. Incidentally, we had a four pound salmon trout for dinner. There have been two dams since the original which was built by the Indians. The present one consists of a series of cylinders on which a bridge rests. Everyone was concerned over the low water. The boys were on the lake or in it except at meal time and Thor never let the boat go out without him, and would come in so happy that he had to lick every one's hand.

Interesting as the lake was with its racing, sailing, aqua-planing, my joy in the microscopic chattering on the mountain-side—warblers hunting in the rain-tipped pine plumes conversing in silvery tones, Nuthatches, and Woodpeckers on the bark, those which snapped their game from the air, the Pileolated warblers playing catch, some golden ones without a black cap in the low bushes, a Vireo feeding her baby, and one lone Robin calling at the top of the mountain, where I had climbed over the slippery needles, seeing myself at every step shooting into the lake. I wonder that no one has thought of summer skiing there where neither ice nor snow are necessary.

SHADOW LAKE, SIERRA NEVADA MOUNTAINS. MT. BANNER, MT. RITTER MINERETS NEAR TIOGA PASS TO YOSEMITE VALLEY

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

ROUGH JUSTICE

By C. E. MONTAGUE, Doubleday, Page and Company

This is the type of fiction, wherein, the author's personality and viewpoint pervades all pages from start to finish. It is a book full of ideas and ideals, rather too fine for this prosaic world, but notwithstanding, most electrifying to read about, especially for those who prefer life offered to them on a higher plane, than what it really occupies. We surmise that Mr. Montague wrote it to air his pet aversions in the make-up of mankind, by no means few, for he constantly reveals the most ardent distaste for about every unlovely tendency in human nature. Especially he detests such failings as cant, self-righteousness, and insincerity and still more grievously he loathes that calloused insensibility to spiritual and aesthetic values, that inability to react to beautiful sensations, that lack of nobility and courage, and that kind of vision which is limited by the commonplace horizon of a materialistic world—all such attributes of human character are very unpopular with the author of "Rough Justice."

On the other hand, there are qualities he adores, and he has endowed his hero with them all. This epitome of human excellence, whom we may view progressing from his birth in the early nineties, to manhood at the time of the great war, is the achievement of the author's brain and the darling of his heart, and ours as well, although we are well aware that the perspective drawn for him is a bit askew. Barring a matching heroine, and an altruistic sire, most of the other characters in this novel exist as foils for this engaging youth, and vary in the degree by which they fall below the standard of his perfection; like Victor, for example, whose moral obliquity perhaps is slight, but still is enough to make him fail in the terrible test of mental, moral and physical stamina, which was the war. These other characters which typify Mr. Montague's abominations, furnish him with convenient human targets, at which to aim unerringly his caustic verbal arrows.

In its essence, it is a very simple tale Mr. Montague relates about these young people growing up in England, and then on the threshold of their careers, having to turn aside to grapple with a dragon, breathing fire and destruction upon the land, when not one of them had so much as ever thought of dragons. But despite its apparent simplicity, "Rough Justice" is full of deep significant matter, made more distinctive yet by an almost uncanny faculty for interpreting inarticulate moods, peculiar to minds finely tuned to the universe, and in addition by a wealth of bracing detail hatched in the mind of a man, who uses a vast storehouse of knowledge and experience for understanding many phases of human nature. Readers in search of vital books, will do well not to overlook "Rough Justice," for it has an abundance of merit in the way of stimulating and refreshing quality, only it demands close attention, if one would discover its jewelled thoughts.

COURTESY OF MRS. FARLEY D. McLOUTH. A ZURBARAN (1598-1662), RECENTLY HUNG IN THE ROTUNDA OF THE LOS ANGELES MUSEUM, AT EXPOSITION PARK.

This painter "brushed in contours with the precision of a Heifetz and burnished all his surfaces to a beautiful glaze, which sparkles in one place and is dull in another." From "Why We Look at Pictures."

THE LAND OF MIST

By A. CONAN DOYLE. George H. Doran Company

It seems to be universally characteristic of the human race, that whenever an individual makes his mind up regarding a creed, he at once most ardently desires to make up the mind of everybody else as well. Once upon a time the accomplishment of this purpose was a comparatively easy job; for boiling oil, the stake, and hangman's noose, among other gently persuasive methods, could work wonders with people's minds. But those happy days have vanished, and the reformer more generally uses some subtle kind of propaganda, for inducing the rest of the world to adopt the tenets of his own belief.

Conan Doyle having become an enthusiastic and zealous convert to the doctrine of spiritualism, simply can not rest until he has made other converts beside himself. His most effective working tool for propaganda, happens to be a certain kind of fiction, and although the tale he has elected to tell is a pretty thin disguise, he is still no piker when it comes to inventing shivery situations, like those so familiar to us all in the adventures of his famous character Sherlock Holmes. Consequently this fact, and his gift for pungent and forceful writing puts him far ahead of the average reformer, in the matter of obtaining and holding an audience.

In "The Land of Mist," he has manipulated his characters, and scenes, and sequence of events, so very artfully, that he has managed to deal with about every phase of the psychical movement in Great Britain. The non-believer, and the uninitiated person, may therefore learn the working theory, so to speak, as well as the fundamental A B C of this belief. The effect produced will depend entirely upon the reader's temperament, but it may occur to everyone, shuddering a little over these spooky incidents, that even were they truthful descriptions of actual events, still they would be no more wonderful, than the fact that the world exists, and human beings live upon it.

WHY WE LOOK AT PICTURES

By CARL H. P. THURSTON, Dodd, Mead and Company

Most people know beyond a doubt, when they like a picture. That extremely buoyant and pleasing sensation, so overpowering to the senses, which happens at the sight of certain pictures, or on the reading of certain poems, reveals unmistakably, how deeply they affect us. Such happy moments are likely to send us floating off into a region resembling a grown-up mental fairyland, a most enchanting place, having nothing whatsoever to do with earthly affairs or common sense, and generally unintelligible even to those, who reach the limit in enjoyment of the experience. In fact this feeling is so satisfying, as to render the average person wholly indifferent to the reason for it, and then along comes some art critic, to jolt one out of this attitude of comfortable complacency, by insisting that this pleasure will be all the greater, if accompanied by some intellectual understanding of its source. One of these enthusiasts, Mr. Thurston, is so strongly of that way of thinking, that he has written a most comprehensive volume on the subject, called "Why We Look at Pictures," based on the concept that "it is the task of aesthetics to investigate all factors which affect our pleasure in a work of art, and all the relationships which develop between them."

This "we" in the title is rather flattering to many readers, who can not qualify, but nevertheless it is distinctly a privilege to contemplate the manner of the "how" and "why" of Mr. Thurston's looking. It is not at all surprising, that a man with his capacity for reading paint on canvas, should look long and hard, and tell to others what he sees. Plenty of opportunity for cultivating this remarkable interpretative talent seems to have been granted him, until he has come to possess a mental gallery containing the masterpieces of the various schools of painting, since the days of the Italian primitives. For him these pictures have all the elements of sensitive human personalities, baffling moods, conflicting strains of temperament, and differing attitudes toward life, all of which they seek commonly to conceal, but have revealed to this gentleman's x-ray eye, mainly because they could not help themselves. This extensive gallery is here displayed for the benefit of all interested persons, who may follow or at least make a brave attempt at it, while its owner contrasts, compares, analyzes, points out weaknesses here, and valuations there until onlookers become fairly giddy with amazement in the presence of so much intuition.

On the whole this book is deeply psychological and a subjective work, but by no means one of absolute perfection. Artists may, and probably will find fault with statements concerning technical points, literary critics will mention the negligible style, while purists can easily detect flaws in diction. In no instance, however do any of these diminish the reader's interest in the subject matter, for here is a propagandist, who has a felicity in choosing words, and a flexibility in using them, so adroit as to enable him constantly to express the most abstract and esoteric ideas in very striking concrete form. Naturally, those individuals, likewise equipped with mental galleries will extract the most from these pages, but any reader with an average fondness for art is bound to profit in an increased understanding of what paintings may mean to their devotees. Above everything however, the keynote of it all is the developmnt of the author's conviction, that the aesthetic element in life contributes as much, if not more than any other, toward making a fine art out of living, which is actually what every human being is out for, consciously or otherwise, but mostly otherwise.

MAPE—THE WORLD OF ILLUSION

By ANDRE MAUROIS, D. Appleton & Company

"Mape contains a sketch, relating how Goethe came to write the "Sorrows of Werther"; an account of a young Frenchman, who attempted to pattern his life after a Balzacian hero; and the heart affairs of Mrs. Siddons' lovely daughters. These tales are very simple, but notable for an exquisite clarity and beauty of diction.

WITHIN GARDEN GATES

ERVANNA BOWEN BISSELL, EDITOR, GARDEN PAGES

DO you remember that morning when your garden looked so lovely that you said:

"I certainly must give a garden party. It is a shame not to have somebody see these flowers!"?

You hurried into the house to write notes and telephone invitations, urging everyone to come early. You ordered delectable things to eat, brought out extra silver and glass; counted chairs; changed from hot drinks to cold, then decided on both; asked people you had forgotten on your first list; made more sandwiches, and attended to innumerable last details. Then, tired, but happy, you sat waiting beside the tables under the trees.

The afternoon waned. A few guests strolled in. At five o'clock everybody arrived at the same time, so busy seeing each other that they scarcely glanced at the garden. They ignored your specimen plants and stood with their backs turned to your choicest view comparing notes—on bridge and golf! Some one asked "Don't you find it a lot of work to keep up a garden?" And one of your close friends exclaimed as she was leaving: "But, my dear, what have you done to your rose garden! It's not half so lovely as last year."

That night in the privacy of your room, you vowed with emphasis, "Never again! It's not worth the effort!" And you read a detective story to keep from thinking.

But there has come a change in garden parties. Have you heard about the new kind, all joy and no trouble? So easy to give that you have nothing to do but open your gates. People ASK to come and stand, note book in hand, before your pet planting. You do not have to welcome these guests in person, but if you do, their appreciation of your garden will make your heart glad. If you wish to become a happy hostess to garden seekers, send your name to the Garden Tours committee and let them do the rest.

But you ask "What are Garden Tours? I never heard of them." They are only one more effort of the Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara to make that city a pleasant place to visit, or to live in. Under the able chairmanship of Miss Pearl Chase; gardens are listed, visiting days arranged, tags, entrance signs and programs printed. guides, also, are provided. A small fee is charged to cover these expenses.

CUESTA LINDA, THE "BEAUTIFUL HILLSIDE" GARDEN OF MRS. E. PALMER GAVIT, WHERE RARE EXOTICS GROW IN A SOIL AND CLIMATE PECULIARLY ADAPTED TO THEIR NEEDS. IT IS THE HAUNT OF BOTANISTS. MONTECITO, CALIFORNIA.

The prospective visitor applies at headquarters, Recreation Center, buys his tag, gets the garden list and goes, either by himself, or with the party which starts at a stated hour accompanied by a guide to give information about plant material.

If you are a new resident, or a sojourner in the city, can you imagine anything nicer in the way of a garden party, than to go where you want to go, see what you want to see, and be told all about it?

A stranger, speaking of Santa Barbara, said, "I find that S. B. always stands for Something Beautiful."

At least this idea of sharing beauty by Garden Tours is big enough to interest garden clubs, horticultural societies and any association devoted to gardening. It you don't know how to start a Tour, write for information, or better still, come yourself, to find how it is done.

We shall take you first to Mrs. Jefferson's garden, Miraflores. You need no Spanish name to bid you "Behold the flowers." You cannot help looking at them. They are everywhere. Blossoming shrubs and trees are massed along the stately driveway, and are the background in the forecourt and the formal garden. Two large oil jars overflow with reddish Bougainvillea, and its color blends perfectly with the pottery and the pale pink stucco of the house. Flowers hang over the balustrade, or drip from the roof in colorful sprays against the walls of the inner court. They lean across the pool's edge where MacMonnies' Bacchante dances in the sun, keeping time to the rhythmic beat of the waves on the shore a little way below.

In the rose garden there is a clamor of voices calling your attention. You walk up and down the paths to admire individual blooms, then better to enjoy the whole, rest in the pergola's shade on one of the carved Italian seats. These are charmed seats which transport you to that Venetian garden where they once stood until Miraflores' mistress charmed them away from their owner.

These are wishing seats, too, for you whisper "Oh, I wish I knew more about gardening"; and you resolve to begin at once to make your wish come true.

Cuesta Linda is the "Beautiful hillside" garden of Mrs. Gavit. It is an excellent place to begin to study plant material, but you need a wise teacher. The novice is bewildered by the rare exotics that flourish in a soil and situation spcially adapted to them. The land slopes toward the distant sea, forming hollows apparently made to hold water. From a carved well-head, water rushes down a stone ramp filling a pond so wide that you push off in a punt to gather its lotus blossoms by the armful. Another informal basin is made by the overflow from the central swimming pool. The water spreads on either side of an irregular outline with clumps of lily buds peeping from their pads on its surface. Around the margin rushes grow, aloes, aralias and many other tropical plants.

From the house terrace stretches a green lawn shaded by an old Monterey cypress. Opening from the patio is a Spanish garden with plants in gaily colored pots. Bright tiles form edgings and little fountains, which are fed from a runnel of water cased in by the bricks of the long walk that leads to still other gardens. Over the clipped hedge a grove of ancient olive trees casts peaceful shade upon the grass.

In Montecito, the finest gardens have a landscape view for background. Mrs. Oakleigh Thorne's house—which takes its name from the old roof tiles, Las Tejas—has the mountains towering behind it and a long stretch of sea in the foreground. Lying upon a rather steep slope of land, the garden is a succession of terraces, each one bound around by hedges or else enclosed in walls. In each there are special flowers and water is used whether in fountain, pool, fish pond or cascades. There is a wall fountain and a central pool in the Spanish walled garden where camellias flourish in soft shades of rose. From the villa's loggia you look down upon the terrace with its standard roses, climbing Reve d'Or intertwined with heliotrope, and the fountain with its graceful figures in the center. Across the balustrade you see the rose gardens, the rows of ornamental orange trees, the long pool with another loggia at the garden's end. Looking through the arches the whole lovely setting is mirrored in the water at your feet.

You have wandered through three gardens equally fascinating yet wholly different. It is the mark of individuality, this subtle gift of personality that make some gardens—like some people—so full of charm. And it is this hidden quality that makes the name, Garden Tour, suggest old romance. The romance which beckoned our grandmothers when they "made the Grand Tour." There are people yet to whom a garden tour is like a trip to foreign shores. And here springs the living allure, the perennial delight in a garden pilgrimage; one never knows beyond what gate, behind what wall lies the land of enchantment.

PLANT WILD FLOWERS

THE fact that so many of our indigenous flowering plants are annual adapted, through long centuries of survival, to germinate from seed and mature within the short span of our rainy season, makes their culture quite simple.

So far as it is possible to do, it is the intent of this note to encourage the planting of wild flowers in their naturalistic settings.

Some flowers love the sunshine, others the shade; some demand moisture or rich soil, while others will endure extremes of drought or soil sterility. The problem is to make selection of varieties to fit the site they shall adorn.

In planting the seeds of these flower friends, care and preparation should be given the soil. The ground should always be cultivated before sowing, and the seed lightly raked into the pulverized surface soil. It is wasted effort to attempt the growing of wild flowers on land badly infested with weeds, likewise it is impossible to establish many of the flower kinds in areas naturally seeded to native grasses and other lush growth, although certain sorts are adapted to such situations. In such cases as this must knowledge and judgement enter into the planning of th wildflower garden.

The autumn months are the ideal time for sowing seed, just as the winter rains begin; but the caprice of the seasons plays much part in determining the length of the period over which planting may be done. During years of late rains, it has been possible to obtain splendid effects from wild flowers sown as late as March, although this is probably the exception to the rule.

RALPH D. CORNELL.

LAS TEJAS, THE WINTER HOME OF MRS. OAKLEIGH THORNE IN MONTECITO. A GARDEN WHERE BEAUTY IS SO DOMINANT THAT EVEN THE POOLS REFLECT ITS CHARM.

THE ROSE GARDEN AT MIRAFLORES, THE MONTECITO HOME OF MRS. JOHN PERCIVAL JEFFERSON. WHERE ARE THE DARK EYED LOVERS WHO ONCE SAT ON THESE MARBLE SEATS IN THE OLD VENETIAN GARDEN BESIDE THE GRAND CANAL?

SOUTHLAND

Politics

HOW shall we find substitute for the American town meeting now that the daily newspapers have failed to fill the bill?

Thousands of women with the ten year old ballot in their hands sit pondering today, knowing not how to mark this thing of power for good or for evil. Thousands of men, no more fitted to govern than are their wives and daughters, bandy the ballot about and trade it for whatever they can get for it.

Sound enough at heart is this nation to want to do the right when the majority acts, but twisted and turned about by every windy politician, how shall we decide how to vote?

If our boasted public school system has taught us to think straight and we obey the scriptural injunction "Then shall ye know if ye follow on to know" we may arrive at a conclusion before election day.

Club work and colleges have taught the new proletariat of women to think, but how are they to obtain facts? The desire to do the right thing is strong within them, cultivated by ages of care for the race. Time to think straight to the mark is given them by their quiet occupations of sewing the long white seam, nursing the child, caring for the home with its actual but simple problems.

Confronted by the bubble of man's ambition called "politics" a woman punctures it with some old fashioned hat pin saved for such purposes, and gives scant time to its vapid contents.

Quietly she gathers her facts as she has been taught to do in club or college; quietly she puts two and two together as she has learned to do when the children come in with excited stories; quietly she does her duty at the polls.

If it is the water supply of our growing cities which needs attention, she gains her information from government reports on the waters of the high Sierras and also on the years of work we as a nation have done surveying the Colorado River. She asks her friends in the great corporations why they have not filed on the Boulder Creek dam-site. Then with set lips and the patience of a Hoover, she votes for the man whom she thinks will best work, in her own state, for the combined interests of seven states in a free but united nation.

The Southwest Museum

Continued from July and August Issues

PASSING from means to method, this programme of concentration can be best carried out by a careful correlation of our educational enterprises with the institutions that luckily surround us. Our Board of Trustees, responding to the wise insight of their President, Dr. Milbank Johnson, have already actively associated with themselves the presiding officers of four of the institutions of higher learning in Los Angeles County, together with the superintendents of the public schools of Los Angeles and Pasadena. Should we render a distinct educational service that is not rendered elsewhere here in this setting, and then share the fruits of our labor with our neighbors, we may confidently expect reciprocal assistance. It goes without saying that this policy of correlation and cooperation should apply especially to our sister museum in Exposition Park.

If we are to carry out successfully this two-fold educational programme—popular education on the one hand, scientific research on the other—we should look forward to the time when our exhibits will be made easily accessible to the largest possible public. Once more the wise provision of the Board of Trustees points toward a happy consummation. To what more appropriate use could the home of our Founder Emeritus, Dr. Charles F. Lummis, be ultimately dedicated than to such a noble purpose as this? Destined as the Lummis grounds are to be enclosed in a beautiful park, spacious buildings should grow up on them whose free halls of learning will be thronged by thousands of holiday-makers, who already frequent Sycamore Grove, and whose numbers will be greatly increased as that park expands under the fostering care of the city. "Our temple on the hill" should then become, in turn, a school of research dedicated to the service of man, akin in spirit to that Oxford college that has been beautifully characterized by a poet as

* * * a house

Wherein by spirit-subtle alchemy
Men may transform the well-wrought thoughts of old
To new and golden deeds. Majestic walls
Wherein the fertile human brain shall breed
New thoughts that on the throbbing air shall fly
To wake the slumbering darkness of the world;
Sky-soaring towers whose every stone shall be
The mother of fair offspring far away.
The scholar's taper from his room on high
Shall be a star to pierce the utmost dark.
Strong hearts and noble minds shall make this place
An altar sacred with their sacrifice.
This is our dream—

God send it to come true!

No subject could be more comprehensive and vital than the subject chosen by the Southwest Museum as its own. In the energetic hands of British and American scholars, "anthropology" has in recent years expanded and also become thoroughly vitalized; although continental Europe may still confine the connotation of the word to physical anthropology alone. The latest American book on the subject opens with the bold declaration: "Anthropology is the Science of Man." And an English writer expands this bold declaration as follows:

> Anthropology studies man body and soul together—as a bodily organism, subject to conditions operating in time and space, which bodily organism is in intimate relation with a soul-life, also subject to those same conditions. Once people take up anthropology, they may be trusted not to drop it again. It is like learning to sleep with your window open. What could be more stupefying than to shut yourself up in a closet and swallow your own gas? But is it any less stupefying to shut yourself up within the last few thousand years of the history of your own corner of the world, and suck in the stale atmosphere of its own self-generated prejudices? Or, to vary the metaphor, anthropology is like travel. Everyone starts by thinking that there is nothing so perfect as his own parish. But let a man go aboard ship to visit foreign parts, and, when he returns home, he will cause that parish to wake up. We anthropologists say: Let any and every portion of human history be studied in the light of the whole history of mankind, and against the background of the history of living things in general, all the forms of life in the world are related together.

"The proper study of mankind is man" we therefore adopt as our watchword, and we shall study him especially as revealed in his art, since therein his deepest intuitions are imbedded. Our fundamental method will be research expeditions in the Southwest and its closely related areas, under the best obtainable leadership, as soon as we can find the necessary means. We shall not undertake any expedition or other scientific enterprise until we are able to do it well; "One thing at a time, and that done well," being another homely watchword to which we intend to give heed. This programme of concentration we shall carry out in correlation with other educational institutions, and the fruits of our efforts we shall present freely to the people, whom we serve. Our sole object is the quest and dissemination of truth, for we believe profoundly that if we know the truth, it shall make us free. We shall try especially to maintain abundant contacts with youth, quite as much for our own sakes as for theirs. And we hearten ourselves with a pledge of renewed faith in the beautiful promise whereon this "temple on the hill" was originally founded.

"Tomorrow shall be the flower of our yesterdays."

JAMES A. B. SCHERER.

OPINION

Bushido in America

A SLIM, frail, unfashionable Quaker lady stepped timidly and bravely out of the roaring subway into rushing, self-centered New York. She hurried intensely to a noisy little old hotel. She called twenty people on the telephone, some at their Wall Street offices, some on Park Avenue, some in the country. They all pleasantly but reluctantly said she might see them for a few minutes. She left each one at the end of her interview gasping with surprise at what he or she had promised to give or do. She asked them to help rebuild Tsuda College for Women in Tokyo, which had been destroyed by the great earthquake.

The quiet, little person who had stormed New York was Miss Anna Hartshorne, teacher. Thirty years ago her flame of consecration to the service of those who needed her led her to join Miss Ume Tsuda in Japan to help her found the "School of English Learning" for Girls in Tokyo. It was largely through her work and faith in the eternal generosity of Christian America that the little school of fifteen girls grew to four hundred, and grew into the big, odd, half Victorian-American, half Oriental buildings which blazed into impalpable ashes after the earthquake. Miss Hartshorn's was the heart and hand behind Miss Tsuda's brilliant and creative brain.

Last month, a frail, old Japanese gentleman committed suicide in New York with as high a sense of consecration to service as Miss Hartshorne's, and, strangely enough, to help Tsuda College. His selflessness, his desire to give his life to serve a high end was lighted in his youth at Bushido, the chivalry of Japan. It flamed up at the end, kindled with a spark from Miss Hartshorne's torch. She never saw him. She never heard of him until after his death.

A year ago Mr. Benjamin Franklin Ichishima wrote me a letter. He said that he appreciated the work of the American committees who were working to serve his far-off countrywomen, and that he would like to leave his property to use for the College. He asked us to send someone to see him about the matter. The bustling young lawyer, with his American speed, was too modern to understand the exquisite leisure of the Orient. A year later another letter came, making his offer again; this time asking me to suggest a lawyer to draw his will and asking specific suggestions as to trustees. I suggested a woman lawyer with the human qualities necessary to deal with a sensitive and modest soul, and fond of the Japanese. She drew his will and became his executrix. He brought the deeds for his Long Island real estate to her. The next day she received a letter from him. It began: "Dear Miss Read: When you receive this letter I will be died." Such tragic simplicity! He went on to say that his illness made him a burden to society, and that life was worth little to him, and that he was dying by his own hand in order to relieve the world of his care and to serve a high purpose by leaving his property to the College.

In 1898 Benjamin Franklin Ichishima enlisted in the American army to fight for the freedom of Cuba. His courage, devotion and intelligence won him a Distinguished Service medal. At the end of the war by a special act of Congress he was made a citizen of the United States. He died in a little cigar-stand bungalow on the fringe of New York. He was accorded a military funeral by the Hamilton Fish Post of Veterans of the Spanish War. His bequest to Tsuda College may prove to be worth fifty thousand dollars.

Sometimes we Americans in our pride of race will do well to consider exactly how well we represent our high civilization in our treatment of humble unassuming foreign born people who may be living among us, distinguished souls in disguise. A few years ago Mr. Ichishima bought the land he left to us for fifteen hundred dollars. Three new boulevards were put through by the city, meeting at his corner. The former owner began immediately to try to get it back. He pressed the matter hard. Mr. Ichishima lived alone in the peculiar isolation some of our foreign born neighbors suffer under. He ate his meals in a lunch wagon belonging to a close friend of the old owner of the land. Suddenly and inexplicably he became very ill and for a year struggled with death. He survived, suffering from a strange and atypical paralysis agitans. Gradually he became worse, and wrote me seeking, not help, but "honest people to leave his property with." Just before his death Miss Read discovered that the old owner had visited the tax record office and changed the ownership record from Mr. Ichishima's name to his own!

Figure to yourselves the baffled, lonely, generous spirit of this broken man hemmed in, as he felt himself to be, by selfseeking and ruthless men. Picture his relief to find distinterested women working for his native country. Think of this soul so refined of all selfishness that he could by his own hand remove his cumbering body from the grudging care it was receiving, and transform what he thought a burden into a gift to society.

Such high courage, such self-abnegation, such generosity as Benjamin Ichishima's are deeply implanted characteristics of the Japanese people. Their self-imposed chivalry has penetrated all classes of society. Their practice of self-immolation on the altar of friendship is worthy of the Great Teacher who said: "Greater love hath no man than this: that he give up his life for his friend."

To understand more fully such a nation and to cultivate their friendship is one of the objects of the Tsuda College Committee. The other is to raise the two hundred and fifty thousand dollars still needed to rebuild the college, insuring to this country of ours a steady crop of devoted, influential and well educated friends—its graduates.

San Pedro, California.

NARCISSA COX VANDERLIP.

Songs of The Spirit—IV

Aeolian

When down the Monte Bello canyons
The little hill-top breezes rove
With starlit songs for their companions
Astray from out a redwood grove,
My lute and lip are strangely stirred
By immemorial note or word.
The one key that unlocks
The alabaster box
That holds . . . ah, if I knew
Adown what avenue.
Go breeze and song when leaving hills behind
A trysting place to find
In some far land's end or some faint sea hollow
Where dreams are born, how gladly would I follow!

When up ravines of Monte Bello
The little dawn-wet breezes roam,
Locked-armed with songs grown richly mellow;
Astray from vine-clad valley home,
My lip and lute are fain to quote
The untranslated word or note,
The fardels that enfold
The bits of fairy gold
With which . . . ah, if we might
With song and breeze take flight
Along the paths that link the mountain crest
With zenith bowers of rest
Where dreams are born . . . with such a wondrous winging,
Think, lute and lip, how blest would be our singing!

Saratoga, California. —Clarence Urmy, 1858-1923

SPORTS AFIELD AND AFLOAT

NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL

A WARM DAY IN THE VALLEY HUNT CLUB PLUNGE, PASADENA, BUT SUGGESTING THE PROBABLE APPEARANCE OF THE ENGLISH CHANNEL IN THE WEEKS FOLLOWING THE ACHIEVEMENT OF GERTRUDE EDERLE, WHO MADE THE SWIM FROM CAPE GRIS NEX, FRANCE TO DOVER IN FOURTEEN HOURS AND THIRTY-ONE MINUTES, TO BE FOLLOWED LATER IN THE MONTH BY MRS. CLEMINGTON CARSON, WHO COVERED THE SAME DISTANCE IN FIFTEEN HOURS AND THIRTY-ONE MINUTES, BOTH SWIMMERS MAKING RECORDS UNSURPASSED AND UNTOUCHED BY VARIOUS MEN WHO HAVE ATTEMPTED THE FEAT.

MISS CAMILLA BREWER AND MR. GEORGE BAER, MRS. W. S. WITMER AND MR. HEWITT REYNOLDS IN A MIXED FOURSOME AT MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB DURING THE SANTA BARBARA SUMMER GOLF TOURNAMENT AT MONTECITO AND LA CUMBRE COUNTRY CLUBS IN JULY. THE SOCIAL SIDE OF THE INVITATIONAL OPENED WITH A CALCUTTA DINNER, FOLLOWED BY OTHER DIGRESSIONS INCLUDING DINNER DANCES, BEACH PARTIES AND BUFFET LUNCHEONS THROUGHOUT THE WEEK. W. W. BECKWITH, OF RANCHO, PAIRED WITH MRS. HARRY PRESSLER OF THE HACIENDA CLUB, FINISHED WITH A 79 AND LOW GROSS TROPHIES IN THE MIXED FOURSOME.

Mrs. Ted Haas, of Wilshire Club, winner of low gross, 18 holes, in the Women's Tournament, La Cumbre Golf and Country Club, at the Invitational Tournament at Santa Barbara in July.

Photograph by P. H. Greene

With Country Clubs growing up on every hand, mountain side, valley, and even the desert dotted with them,—some like weeds and equally obnoxious, it is exceedingly gratifying to find that Country Clubs in the true sense of the word do still exist and offer to the lucky members just the comfort and entertainment most dear to the human soul, a place to meet friends on a common basis with no hampering obligations of guest and host. A quiet spot for a chat may always be found at the Flintridge Riding Club and both dinner and luncheon may be enjoyed when the culinary arrangements at home are disorganized during the vacation, or any other period

JUST BEFORE TEA-TIME AT THE FLINTRIDGE RIDING CLUB'S DELIGHTFUL LITTLE CLUB HOUSE

ELMER BOESEKE, OF SANTA BARBARA, ON THE RIGHT, ONE OF THE LOCAL POLOISTS WHO WAS MISSED AT THE EASTERN TOURNAMENTS LAST MONTH AND THIS. POLO HAS BEEN STEADILY GROWING IN POPULARITY ON THIS COAST, DUE TO THE BRILLIANT PLAYING OF THE FAMOUS MIDWICK FOUR, AND THE SANTA BARBARA, SAN MATEO AND DEL MONTE TEAMS.

Eric Pedley, one of the Midwick polo team, who also is gaining distinction in the field of golf. Through the efforts of the Big Four of Midwick, Carleton Burke, Ted Miller, Arthur Perkins and Eric Pedley, the game has become enormously popular on this Coast

Much tennis history has been made since Ray Casey, William Johnston, Neil Brown and Jim Daires were entered in the tournament on the Hotel Huntington courts last winter. Many titles have been won and lost. Mrs. Molla B. Mallory, seven times former champion, regained the national women's tennis title at Forest Hills in a hard fought battle with Elizabeth Ryan, for the crown, laid aside by Helen Wills, who retired for the season on the advice of her physicians. With the French champion, Suzanne Lenglen, turning professional, tennis enters another phase, and it will be interesting to note what effect this will have on the general public and on the usual devotees of the game. Many conflicting rumors are abroad as to the probable opponents of Mlle. Lenglen on her professional tour, which opens in New York, October eighth Commodore B. Rey Schauer, of the Southern California Yachting Association, accompanied by W. Hubbard of the Newport fleet and Harry Fisher of the San Diego fleet, went East for the annual international Star boat Regatta on Long Island Sound.

The Regatta of the Pacific Coast Yachting Association at San Francisco last month was full of interest, and decided the Coast R Class Championship, the honor going to the Machree, with a total of twenty points.

The Regatta at Newport closed with an on-rush of the pirates!

THE MASKS USED IN "THE GREAT GOD BROWN," THE PLAY IN WHICH EUGENE O'NEILL SAYS HE TRIED TO BRING MAN AS A WHOLE BEFORE US BY USING TWO MEN TO TYPIFY THE STRUGGLES BY WHICH ONE IS TORN AND UNDER WHICH HE DISINTEGRATES—A STRUGGLE FOUGHT BY AN ESTHETIC SOUL, CRAVING THE BEAUTIFUL, AND CLEFT WITH A DESIRE TO CREATE BUT FAILING AND ALWAYS HAMPERED BY REPRESSION AND THE DOMINANCE OF A TRACE OF PURITANISM. THE MASK FIRST ASSUMED BY DION ANTHONY AS PLAYED BY IRVING PICHEL, AT THE COMMUNITY PLAYHOUSE, PASADENA, SHOWS A MISCHIEVOUS BOY, THE FACE OF A PAN, BUT GRADUALLY TAKES ON THE LINES OF DISSIPATION, CYNICISM AND DESPAIR. IN THE MORE GROTESQUE MASKS THE SENSUALITY AND CRUELTY IS MORE APPARENT THAN PERHAPS THE LINES OF THE PLAY DEMAND, BUT WERE MADE TO TRY THE EXPERIMENT OF VARYING FROM A MORE OR LESS TYPICAL MASK. PHOTOGRAPH BY ALBERT HILLER

AS O'NEILL SEES MAN: AS SHAW SEES CAESAR

In "Caesar and Cleopatra" we find George Bernard Shaw's conception of the great warrior and the fair but dusky Queen differs widely from any version conceived of their lives by the historians or other dramatists, but is entirely Shavian and very pleasing to a sophisticate, and to a world which has come to believe that all characters of other days are grossly exaggerated to the side of virtue, especially charming ladies. Caesar, however, must be a rare favorite with Shaw as he presents him in a much nobler guise than falls to the lot of most of his men. Given at the Community Playhouse, Pasadena, Irving Piehel, Guest Director.

HAMLET AT THE FOREST THEATRE, CARMEL

FOR the first time in the seventeen years of its history the Forest Theater at Carmel-by-the-Sea selected a Shakespearean tragedy as the chief event of its Summer Festival. According to the many noted scholars and lovers of the Bard, who came specially from many different parts of California to attend the performance, the Forest Theater reached the high peak of its achievements.

Not one of the sixty-five plays previously presented has received such a long and careful preparation. John Parker, the chief director and leading spirit in the production, started work on the plans many months ago. Having recently returned from a world-wide study of the drama, Parker undertook to show some of the modern tendencies and desire to liberate the stage from time worn conventions. Avoiding archeology he designed simple "practical" scenery on the unit plan, which also very successfully sustained the movement of the play in the arrangement of symbolical driving forces of line and mass.

A recently improved lighting system permitted the speeding up of the action as intermissions were almost eliminated. For scenes the middle stage the lights were concentrated solely on that particular area. The ghost appeared most weirdly in a pale green moonlight high on the top of a fantastic tower, surrounded by tall pines that overlooked the ramparts.

A drawbridge thrown over the orchestra pit, turned temporarily into a mote was another highly successful innovation introduced by Carmel's new director, John Parker. This interesting piece of stagecraft not only added atmosphere to the play but provided another valuable entrance and exit to the wide Fortinbras, Prince of Norway, played by George O'Neil, aided in the intelligent interpretation by a well trained cast.

THE SCENERY FOR HAMLET PRODUCED IN THE FOREST THEATER, CARMEL, WAS DESIGNED SOMEWHAT ALONG MODERN LINES BY JOHN PARKER, WHO WAS ALSO THE CHIEF DIRECTOR such as the march of the army of Fortinbras through the adjoining woods on one side of the main set, the effective graveyard episode on the other side, and for all minor scenes on forestage. In this respect as in so many others an intelligent appreciation was shown of the exceptional facilities and beauties of the Forest Theater.

MABEL R. JONES.

AN EUROPEAN TRIP DE LUXE

By CHARLES BEDELL HERVEY

Right—The Biltmore, New York. A gang plank into the Banquet Hall.

Hotel Green, Pasadena, The Maryland San Diego California

WHEN the French Liner "France" sailed from New York April third she bore 277 members of the American Hotel Association en route to Paris to attend the great Convention of the International Hotel Alliance. Thirty Seven States were represented, the largest number 47, from New York, and 37 from California. The party toured England, France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Austria, Switzerland and Italy with a day at Monte Carlo. Among the outstanding features of the pilgrimage were receptions tendered the party by the Presidents of France, Germany, Austria and Switzerland, the Kings of Belgium and Italy, an audience by the Pope and a garden party by Premier Mussolini. The Hotel Associations of the various countries visited gave great banquets and wonderful entertainments augmented by the unusually splendid receptions by the municipalities, including the costume luncheon given by the Governor of Rome in the Domus Aurea, Nero's old home. Our party found nothing but expressions indicative of sincere friendship for the United States of America in all the countries visited. The party sailed home on the Italian Steamship "Biancomana" and, on arrival in New York, were banqueted by the Waldorf Astoria.

The many experiences gained in entertaining others, coupled with the joyous feeling of an untrammeled vacation, made the masquerade of hotel men aboard ship one unrivaled in novel effects and full of mystifications.

BON VOYAGE DINNER TENDERED THE AMERICAN HOTEL ASSOCIATION BY JOHN McENTEE BOWMAN AT THE BILTMORE, NEW YORK.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A. MONTHLY BULLETIN

OFFICERS
DAVID J. WITMER, PRESIDENT
C. E. NOERENBERG, VICE PRESIDENT
EDGAR H. CLINE, SECRETARY
WINCHTON L. RISLEY, TREASURER

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH,
Editor

DIRECTORS
H. C. CHAMBERS
DONALD PARKINSON
ALFRED W. REA

PLAGIARISM AS A FINE ART

The second and concluding installment of an address given before a recent convention of the American Institute of Architects. Five speakers, architects of national reputation, discussed different phases of the above subject. The following address was given by Ralph Adams Cram, formerly of the distinguished firm of architects, Cram, Goodhue, and Ferguson. Mr. Cram has been classed as one championing the Gothicist's or Mediaevalists point of view.

The Value of Precedent in the Practice of Architecture
Address of Ralph Adams Cram

LET me take three examples. The first is the human family. It is as old as the Garden of Eden—or just after it; it is not a new thing needing a new form of expression. I grant you that if trial marriages and eugenics and the divorce courts and "the need of self-realization" have their way this statement will be no longer true—but in that case it will not matter, for society will come to an end, and with it, architecture. In the meantime, and in spite of the newspapers, the real home still exists, and it is finding its perfect expression in our domestic architecture. I do not know when there was any that was better than what is now being done around Philadelphia, and in southern California, and by groups of architects in New York, Boston and the Middle West. Did they fall back on precedent? Yes they did, because it was their business as good and faithful architects to do so. Did they plagiarize? No! they took over the old motives, Colonial, Spanish or what not (frequently the latter) and transmitted them into something more than adequate by feeling the push of the inspiring force of the decent home and then by adding just enough of their own fine and varied personality to keep their work from becoming standardized like a schoolhouse, a bank or a Carnegie library.

The second example I would choose is that category of building that is associated with real learning. The sort of efficiency expert, predigested learning engendered by H. G. Wells and hypothecated by a myriad other compilers of "Outlines" of this, that and the other, has rather of late overshadowed the real thing, but still it exists, though hiddenly. When this comes into play and again the architect has something to express except his own sacred personality. Does the demand for originality, for the striking out of some new style come here into play. I think not. If I am working at an old university, where the scheme of education, the scholar spirit, the cultural tradition reach back without a break through the Colonial college to Oxford and Cambridge and the Mediaeval centers of learning in Europe (as they do, all of them) I know that my business is to subordinate my own fads and fancies to this dominating influence, to pick up the old tradition of college architecture that belongs to our race and then adapt those forms, so recovered, to whatever new conditions may have come into being and are not in themselves inconsistent with the central idea of higher education. Where should I go then for inspiration (I do not say precedent) but to the great old work of our own blood-ancestors in Oxford and Cambridge, or to the allied but racially alien art of Salamanca, Heidelberg or any other great college of the great days? Nor does this mean just Gothic; there is good Georgian building in the English universities, and good Renaissance in Spain, if, as sometimes happens, the Gothic mode is unfitted for a particular temper or place. To precedent architects have returned at Princeton, Yale, Harvard and scores of other colleges, and there is no more vital modern work anywhere than they have done along this line—and without plagiarizing, rather by an intelligent and sensitive adaptation that has made Gothic and Georgian and Colonial living styles again. "Out of key with Modernism?" Yes, thank God, but right in the key of the greater and lasting forces that are here cherished and preserved.

ADOBE FLORES. CARLETON WINSLOW, ARCHITECT OF RESTORATION

And the same is true, though in a less degree, of libraries. They have been popularized to the point of saturation with "best-seller," newspapers, "success" and "go-getters" magazines, "outlines" of every known thing on earth and predigested literature generally, but still the old, that goes back to Alexandria, still lingers, and occasionally something is done that is supreme; the Indianapolis Library for example, to quote only one, but a salient, instance. Study this building if you want to see the value of precedent used intelligently and with a creative spirit.

And my third instance is church building. Here, even more than in the other two cases, is a dynamic, persisting spirit and tradition. There are many styles, but there is one motive, and I submit that here at least not only must inventiveness be held in restraint, the individuality of the architect submerged, but that there is no other course to follow but to preserve continuity, suggest unbroken history, stimulate by the emotional appeal to inherited elder memory through suggestions of ancient and unparalleled monuments. In other words, go back to the great architecture of the great days, and start there, going on, of course, but only by modest stages and in restrained ways, never, under any circumstances whatever intruding individual personality into a thing immeasurably greater than any individual. Is there any better architecture today than church building in America? I do not think so, and it is good just because it starts from the old work, frankly and reverently. What happens in church building when the start is made from nowhere, except quite clearly demonstrated in France where modern churches are a scandal to religion and a shame to architecture, though the most offensive example is to be found in Barcelona where a megalomaniacal moron has started a nameless horror sacrilegiously dedicated to La Sagrada Familia.

So I rest on this: that there is no longer a vital, inspiring, directing energy in the world that achieves its outward showing in great art through its sensitive agents, the architects and other artists, and that since this is so, it is a great mistake for us to think that we are big enough in ourselves to contribute what the zeitgeist withholds. If you want plain speech, we are not big enough men to do it. We are not great in the sense in which the masterbuilders of Athens and Constantinople and Venice and Burgundy and Spain and the Ile de France and England and Flanders were great. We know more than they, infinitely more—except as to what things are worth knowing. It isn't our fault, we work as hard as they and with equal devotion and sometimes equal prayers. The trouble is—"the hungry sheep look up and are not fed." We would give our lives, and perhaps even our souls, if only we could breathe in the same divine inspiration that filled the air of Athens, Paris, Sienna, Salamanca, Oxford, instead of the effluvia of glutted cities, the smoke of the black country, the crash and war of factories, the bad air of politicians, the dirty propaganda of newspapers.

But, and here is the saving fact; the real spirit, the inspiring breath, still holds in places and here, if we will, we can find the breath of inspiration we need. Not to invent some new thing like a carburetor or a religion or a philosophy or a new architectural style, but to recover the truths of old arts from their forms and the spiritual radiance that emanates from them and modestly, humbly, to try to recreate these forms, not as final ends in themselves, but as recovered truths after long night, facts to hold to, foundations to build upon, landmarks in the great adventure wherein we, even we, may play our part in recovering right values for the world and bringing it about that in the end they shall prevail.

THE CLOISTER OF THE UNIVERSITY CLUB, LOS ANGELES. ALLISON AND ALLISON, ARCHITECTS

THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

MONTHLY BULLETIN

OFFICERS

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH, PRESIDENT
CLIFFORD A. TRUESDELL, VICE PRESIDENT
C. R. JOHNSON, SECRETARY
PAUL R. WILLIAMS, TREASURER

DIRECTORS

JULIAN GARNSEY, DIRECTOR
J. E. STANTON, DIRECTOR
H. C. CHAMBERS, DIRECTOR

ARCHITECTURAL EDUCATION

All Club members as draftsmen will be interested in the following excerpt from the report of the Committee on Education submitted to the last Convention of the American Institute of Architects.

"The architectural schools of the country have made such great progress in their development that they have become the best schools in the world for the training of American students who intend to practice architecture. Relatively few Americans now go to the Ecole de Beaux Arts of Paris for their architectural education as compared with a few years ago. Nearly all of the American students now go to the twenty-two accredited schools of architecture in this country."

"A most significant thing has happened recently to reveal the importance and high regard in which the architectural schools and our recent architecture are held by the authorities of France. There is now under consideration a plan by which scholarships or other means may be provided by which French students and architects may travel and study the architecture of our country. This is under consideration as a result of a sincere desire on the part of the French authorities to give their people the benefit of what we have accomplished in architecture."

". . . . it appears that the greatest need at this time is not so much our efforts to improve the education of the architect, as for the education of the public in matters pertaining to architecture and its allied arts. It is apparent that no matter how much the education of the architect may be improved and perfected, it cannot result in a corresponding improvement in our architecture unless public education is carried along with it. The standard of excellence of the architecture of a nation is always determined to a large extent by the standard of taste of its people."

THE HISTORY OF ART

The history of art is nothing more than the history of the things that men love, and love well enough to put all their soul and spirit, all that is divine in their manhood into. That is the history of art and the things that have not contained that have not lived. The art that is living is the work of men who by that love put some of their immortality into their work. Their art, as we see and feel it today, is the immortality of the artists who created it.

We talk of educating the public. We talk of it in the commercial terms of advertising, if you please in all sincerity, in a desire to make the public know and want great architecture. But after all, the thing that counts is the thing itself, the thing we do, the architecture, the art of the world. The written word, the attempt to state what art is, is not what " advertises" the art of the Orient or of Greece or of Rome or of Western Europe. The art of these countries lives today because of itself, because of its inherent quality, because the artists who made it put themselves into it. This is equally true today. Only a short time ago we were saddened by the death of Henry Bacon, but Henry Bacon has not died. The Lincoln Memorial in Washington is evidence of the immortality of that man we knew, just

DETAIL, DR. J. MORRIS SLEMON'S HOUSE.
WITMER AND WATSON, ARCHITECTS

as much so as are the lovely paintings of the Chinese and the works of Greece and Rome and of Western Europe. The great cathedrals speak on for the men who created them. At sunrise and at sunset across a placid pool, serene, dignified, majestic, from that temple, Henry Bacon is going to speak to countless thousands of Americans as long as this great country shall last. MILTON B. MEDARY, JR.

FALL PLANS

It is a good sign when Club members begin to call up the officers and ask when in tunket the Club is going to meet again and to row because they didn't get a notice of the last meeting. There was a time when a lot of the gang didn't give a whoop if we ever had a meeting again. Some of them don't yet but they haven't waked up. Don't disturb their slumbers. There will be more room for the rest of us. September is upon us and activities must begin in earnest. The August meeting will be a thing of history by the time this bulletin comes off the press but the Executive Committee has been working hard to lay out a program of meetings for the next five or six months. What to do for the next meeting is always a topic of conversation with officers of any organization. Your Committee want to have time to start something else than monthly meetings so they have laid out a program of meetings from now until January. If the final arrangements were completed on the last two of them we would lay out the whole program in this bulletin right here and now as we intend to do next month.

The August meeting we know is going to be a success for it is being sponsored by John and Donald Parkinson's office under the able leadership of George Hales. George is one of these birds who do things "quick." We ate lunch with him down at Coffee Dan's the other noon to tell him what he would need to do to get ready for the meeting and found that he had already done everything the week before. We had to warn him not to have the meeting ahead of time. He promised that everything would be carried off in the "regular" fashion. Those of you who went to the meeting will know when you read this whether George kept his promise or not.

WANTED: MALE HELP

Both the Atelier and the Club are interested in securing the services of a life class instructor. Mr. Hamilton Wolf who was so successful with the class last season is teaching at the University of Berkeley and will not be with us again. Can some Club member suggest a man to take his place?

A RESIDENCE BY WITMER AND WATSON

ELSEWHERE in this number of Southland Mr. Reginald Johnson calls attention to a problem which is to be most significant in the development of a style of architecture indigenous to southern California. It is the problem of reconciling two seemingly diometric ideas; namely to create from the livableness of the English house and the simplicity and adaptability of the Latin, a style appropriate to the climate and customs of this region.

Among the architects who have been most successful in attempting the solution of this

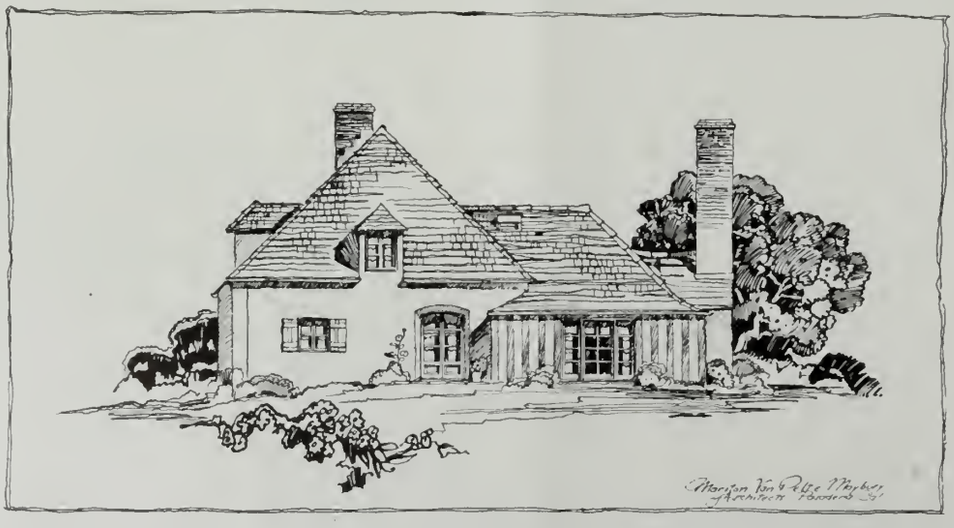
Hispano-Moresque Tile
Colorful, Decorative, Interesting
made entirely by hand
Mexican, Spanish and
Tunisian Designs
Showroom
Harry C. Hicks 4283 Beverly Blvd.
GR. 4013
Los Angeles Calif.

problem, is the firm of Witmer and Watson. They have done that for which Ralph Adams Cram is pleading in his admirable address which is concluded in this issue of Southland on the American Institute of Architects page. They have taken the best of both styles and with the instincts of true artists have allowed their own personalities to play upon them, always controlled by their thorough training in design. Out of this ideal process of attack is beginning to emerge a type of domestic architecture which is neither Latin nor English but is the natural outgrowth of a necessity. This is truly the Gothic ideal and is as free and untramelled by tradition as was that great style and is as free to grow and develop as the Gothic is even today. We may expect the highest in all the branches of art where such ideals obtain. A respect for and thorough grounding in precedent coupled with independence of thought and the consistent aim to solve the problem of plan and design on its own merits rather than on the basis of what has been done before, is marking the work of Witmer and Watson. Its merit is already being recognized by those who are looking to southern California architects for the birth of a new style. It will be a style whose vigor and simplicity will satisfy all the demands of precedent and of modern life.

(See also the house on Columbia Street, Pasadena, between Orange Grove and Arroyo.)

INTERIOR, THE SLEMON'S HOUSE, WITMER AND WATSON, ARCHITECTS

A DISTINCTIVELY CALIFORNIAN HOME BUILT FOR DR. J. MORRIS SLEMONS BY WITMER AND WATSON, ARCHITECTS. THIS HOUSE MAY BE FOUND AT 345 SO. WESTMORELAND, LOS ANGELES



THE COTTAGE PLAN AT THE HUNTINGTON HOTEL

A HOME in California within the grounds of a California hotel! That is what this winter's guests at the Huntington are coming out to find ready for them. Many will be happy in the pleasant rooms of the handsome main building which dominates Oak Knoll on the southern edge of Pasadena. Beautifully situated above the San Gabriel Valley, with every one of its many windows commanding a fine view of the surrounding hills and eities, this ideal hotel offers more this year than ever before.

A fine swimming pool is being built by the architects, Marston, Van Pelt and Maybury. It fits into the little canyon at the head of the Japanese gardens and can be viewed from the long bridge which leads from the hotel corridors to the circle of guest cottages in the western part of the grounds.

Busy days this summer have sent the work of building additional cottages well on its way. On the edge of the little plateau rise three homey looking houses in the architectural firm's best style. They are fine types of what California ean do in adapting the English cottage type to her own elimate and landscape, and establish this style permanently.

The illustration here presented is a pen and ink sketch made by the firm of Marston, Van Pelt and Maybury especial for this journal. It will be carried to completion at once and will be occupied by Sir Montague Allan and Lady Allan, and their daughter, Miss Martha Allan, who for several years have come from Montreal to Pasadena for the winter. Other guests are building also.

THE COTTAGE BEING BUILT AT THE HUNTINGTON FOR SIR MONTAGUE ALLAN AND LADY ALLAN.

This marks the character of the Huntington Hotel better than any description of its advantages in words could do. There seems to be an air of privacy about the quiet corridors and the lovely gardens of this tourist hotel which makes it a fine elimax to the history of the Linnard hotels in southern California. All the experience gained in making visitors to the state happy and contented to live here the year 'round is stored up in the present management of the Huntington. And just as the hotels of past fame have made this part of the state what it is as a tourist resort, so the Huntington is now leading in the establishing of beautiful homes in a cooperative form that sets forth a new and up-to-date home life in ideal surroundings.

"Shall I not take mine ease at mine Inn," said the old English sign above a great fireplace. Surely the Huntington Hotel has provided a way by which this motto is realized.

The change which has come over the tourist hotels, making them into comfortable abiding places for long months of summer, or the short season of winter, is in tune with the new note of delight in the discovery of California as an all-the-year state. Skillfully these expert hosts of the whole Coast have adapted their hostleries to the longing for home life which comes to the most ardent traveller; wisely have they widened the scope of their hotels.

Santa Maria Inn

SANTA MARIA, CALIF.

A HOME-LIKE INN, upkept with home-like neatness for the convenience of wayfarers.
Every room with bath. Halfway between Los Angeles and San Francisco on the Coast Highway.
Write or telegraph for reservations.

Unique in its Atmosphere

Each morning a refreshing shower. A joy at forty miles an hour.

Golden State Limited East

The luxurious and congenial environment of an ocean liner translated to railroad travel.

Rock Island — Southern Pacific Lines

Leave Los Angeles 12:01 p.m. [via Southern Pacific]; San Diego 10:45 a. m. [via S. D. & A.]; arrive Chicago 10:00 a. m. third day [via Rock Island].
Thru Pullman daily from Santa Barbara 8:00 a. m. [via Southern Pacific].

For tickets, reservations personal service, call on
Southern Pacific City Ticket Office, 937 State St., Santa Barbara, Calif., Phone 243; or address B. F. Coons, General Agent, Rock Island Lines, 609 Van Nuys Bldg., Los Angeles, Calif.

A "comfy" lounge for women planned. A kind of traveling "no man's land."

SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

SAN YSIDRO RANCH

California's Famed Foothill Resort Unharmed by Earthquake.

Nestled in the foothills among the Orange Groves, overlooking Valley and Sea. Elevation 600 feet. Furnished Bungalows, 2 to 7 rooms. Central Dining Room. Electricity, hot and cold water. Surf-bathing, Tennis, Horseback Riding. Six miles from Historic Santa Barbara, two miles from ocean and country club. Moderate rates. For Folder, address San Ysidro Ranch, Santa Barbara, California.

Coulter's for Perrin Gloves

FOR over a quarter of a century Coulter's have sold Perrin gloves, and our stocks are constantly maintained in as complete array as can be.

The novelty types, in suede and glace, trimmed with attractive combinations—also hand-sewn and pique pull-ons—are new for Fall, and fastidious women will want to make selection very soon.

(Main Floor—Coulter's)

Coulter Dry Goods Co.
FOUNDED IN 1878

Seventh Street at Olive

"UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST"

The CALIFORNIAN HOTEL

MANAGEMENT H. WINGATE LAKE
FRESNO, CALIFORNIA

A modern, model Hotel devoted to sincere hospitality and dedicated to California's Guests.

THE LOGICAL STOPPING PLACE IN THE SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY FOR ALL POINTS, WHETHER YOU TRAVEL FOR BUSINESS OR PLEASURE.

EUROPEAN PLAN
250 ROOMS - 250 BATHS
$2.50 PER DAY AND UP
ALL OUTSIDE ROOMS

CALIFORNIA STATE AUTOMOBILE ASSOCIATION

★ ★ ★

ENCOURAGING THE BUILDING OF BETTER HOMES

By PEARL CHASE, Editor

(Miss Chase was chairman of the 1925 Campaign, when Santa Barbara shared first prize with Atlanta, Georgia; and associate chairman, 1926. She is now chairman for 1927.)

FOR the past four years Better Homes in America, Inc., has enrolled urban and rural communities in its campaign to put knowledge of high standards in house building, house furnishing and equipment, and home life within the reach of all citizens.

Under the presidency of Mr. Herbert Hoover a program has been worked out, which has the endorsement and active support of the Departments of the Interior, Agriculture and Labor, and of some thirty great national organizations which are represented on the Advisory Council*

This year there were twenty-nine hundred and sixty-four (2964) local committees throughout the country which reported their participation in the Campaign and as several hundred were county wide in their scope, it is safe to say that more than four thousand (4000) communities participated in Better Homes Week.

California led all other states in the number of cities whose demonstrations were considered worthy of special notice. Santa Barbara won first Prize of $500.00, Stockton was given Special Mention, and Honorable Mention was given to Alhambra, Corona, Culver City, Fullerton, Glendale, Sacramento, and Yorba Linda.

The summary report says that practically all the committees held extensive lecture and discussion programs on Small Home Architecture, Gardening, Financing, Furniture and Equipment. Public Libraries cooperated in providing selections of books to form the nucleus of home libraries. Recreation specialists provided demonstrations of home play, schools helped exhibits, in the furnishing of demonstration homes, and through the writing of essays by school children on home problems. Churches cooperated with special services devoted to the spiritual significance of the home, and character building in the home. Contests for home improvement, kitchen improvement and best home gardens, were conducted by local committees in every state.

The demonstrations were particularly arranged to reach families with limited incomes. Hundreds of houses were built, remodelled or borrowed, then completely furnished by the committee and thrown open, for inspection and discussion, to the public. As $10,000 was the upper limit for cost of house and lot, it is interesting to note that the cost of the demonstration houses averaged about $3500.

The Santa Barbara Campaign covered practically all of the ground described and contained several original features. There were three hundred and sixty-seven (367) committee men and women representing dozens of organizations who were interested to work and who made its success possible.

In announcing to Mrs. J. O. Knighten, the chairman, that first prize had been awarded to the Santa Barbara Committee, the Director said, "The Judges were particularly impressed with the excellence of the architecture of the demonstration houses, and with the exceptional skill and good taste desplayed in the selection of the furnishings. The small house and garden competitions, which your committee inaugurated, were such a valuable contribution to the national campaign that we called them to the attention of our committees throughout the country, and in scores of other communities similar competitions were held. Next year we shall plan to feature competitions of this sort. The educational value of the Santa Barbara campaign will thus extend beyond your city and will exercise a deep influence upon the housing and home life of families throughout America."

As a result of winning the first prize, stories and pictures of Santa Barbara's small homes have been used in many ways. A number of photographs were sent to the International Housing Conference at Vienna, Australia, with the Better Homes in America exhibit.

A brief description of Santa Barbara's three community-wide competitions which have claimed special attention may prove interesting.

The competitions for Small Gardens from 5,000 to 25,000 square feet, and for Small Houses less than two years old and four, five or six rooms in size, were sponsored by the Better Homes Committee; the one for Small Houses and Gardens less than five years old, and on lots not exceeding 10,000 square feet in size, was arranged by the Plans and Planting Committee of the Community Arts Association. A few of the four-room houses which received a prize are illustrated. It should be remembered that all of them were less than two years old, and several just finished, with gardens in embryonic state when photographed.

Joint announcements with nomination blanks attached were widely distributed, any person might suggest a property which he thought deserving of a prize.

Nearly two hundred entries complied with the conditions. These were carefully inspected and scored by the judges. Great interest was shown in their decisions and their comments on architectural and landscape design. Several of the houses receiving an award were later used as Demonstration Houses during Better Homes Week.

In California where small houses are being erected very rapidly it seems especially worth while publicly to commend the owners and builders of attractive and suitable small houses, and at one and the same time, help to direct the public taste in home architecture.

It is hoped that many competitions for Small Homes and Gardens will be held within the year. Large cash prizes are not necessary, but parchment certificates of award are advisable. There should be active promotion committees for each competition and the judges should be both intelligent and painstaking if the best results are to be obtained.

Information and literature concerning Better Homes in America may be secured from Mr. James Ford, Executive Director, 1653 Pennsylvania Ave., Washington, D. C.*

FIRST PRIZE, SMALL HOUSE COMPETITION, FOUR-ROOM CLASS. K. D. CHURCH, OWNER AND ARCHITECT. A SIMPLE AND ATTRACTIVE DESIGN IN BOARD AND BATTEN, THE PLAN EQUALLY SUITABLE TO OTHER EXTERIOR TREATMENT

SECOND PRIZE, SMALL HOUSE COMPETITION, FOUR-ROOM CLASS. THE PLAN WON SECOND PRIZE FOR "HOUSES UNDER $5000" IN 1924 COMMUNITY ARTS NATIONAL COMPETITION. IT WAS USED AS A DEMONSTRATION HOUSE IN 1925. IT IS OF ADOBE CONSTRUCTION

THIRD PRIZE, SMALL HOUSE COMPETITION, FIVE-ROOM CLASS. REVISED FROM PLAN 52, BOOK OF DISTINCTIVE HOMES

THIRD PRIZE, SMALL HOUSE COMPETITION, FOUR-ROOM CLASS. EXTERIOR DESIGNED IN COMMUNITY DRAFTING ROOM. USED AS AN UNFURNISHED DEMONSTRATION HOUSE IN 1926 BETTER HOMES WEEK

SANTA BARBARA

El Paseo Patio

Lunch Out of Doors or Dine
at
"EL PASEO"
23 E. de la Guerra St.
Santa Barbara

Miss Chloë Kubert
DANSEUSE
Lessons by appointment
101 de la Guerra Studios

OLD BOOKS PRINTS

TECOLOTE BOOK SHOP
New and Standard Books
25 DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS
SANTA BARBARA

The Biltmore Salon
Los Angeles Biltmore

PAINTINGS
ETCHINGS
BRONZES

DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS
EL PASEO DE LA GUERRA
THE "STREET IN SPAIN"

Community Arts Association
SANTA BARBARA
SCHOOL OF THE ARTS
FRANK MORLEY FLETCHER, DIRECTOR
GRAPHIC, DECORATIVE AND PLASTIC ARTS — DRAMA, MUSIC, DANCING
Semester October-May. Summer School six weeks July-August
Address 916 Santa Barbara Street, Santa Barbara, Calif.

FIRST PRIZE IN HOUSE AND GARDEN COMPETITION. MRS. JOHN D. VHAY, DESIGNER. PART OF THE BETTER HOMES ARTICLE ON PAGE 26

The supplement to CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND which was announced last month as on the press has been broken up and the engravings in the Better Homes series sent to Santa Barbara to be used in the pamphlet, called "New Santa Barbara," which unknown to the publishers of SOUTHLAND, was in press at the same time. This comprehensive statement of the new work of the Plans and Planting Committee of the Community Arts Association is the first careful publication of new Estado and other building. Send for it instead of for ours.

Hand Made Mexican Chairs
of Pine
With Rush Seats
Priced from $4.00 to $10.00
Are exceedingly well adapted to California
Also
Hand Woven Wool Druggets
from India
Priced from $3.00 to $75.00
Sizes 2 ft. x 3 ft. to 9 ft. x 18 ft.
Write for Booklets on Druggets or Chairs
ROBERT L. LEWIS
Studio 5 at 11 E. de la Guerra, Santa Barbara

EL ENCINO
On Coast Highway, Montecito, Calif.
Luncheon Supper
Afternoon Tea
Dinner Served on Order
Limited Number of Over Night Guests Accommodated

Sun Kissed
Ocean Washed
Mountain Girded
Island Guarded
SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA
Furnished houses for rent of all sizes and prices in Santa Barbara and Montecito. Properties of all kinds for sale. Literature and maps free. Live in "The Home Paradise of the World." Communicate with
H. G. CHASE, Santa Barbara, Calif.

AUTHORS & AUTHORS'
agents are invited to submit book-length material to
The Guild Santa Barbara
HISTORY BIOGRAPHY FICTION
TRAVEL SCIENCE ART
Acceptable material will be published on the usual royalty basis without expense to the author
129 EL PASEO DE LA GUERRA
SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA
Translations from the Spanish are particularly welcome

The Mansfield Studios
Interiors designed and executed—Embroideries—Textiles
Los Angeles
Telephone WAshington 3473
Altadena Office Under Direction of Mrs. Samuel Lee Bierbauer
Colo. 2015

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

OFFICERS:

MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President

MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President

MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, Sec. Vice-Pres.

MRS. ISAAC HAMPSHUR JONES, 3rd Vice-Pres.

MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Vice-Pres.

MRS. JAMES REED, Secretary

MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treas.

MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

COMMUNITY HOUSE AND DAY NURSERY

"All for Service—And Service for All"

MONTHLY BULLETIN

5604 De Longpre Avenue, Los Angeles

CALENDAR

Sept. 3, 6:15 P. M.—Dinner for Mr. Herman.

Sept. 7, 10:30 A. M.—Meeting of the Board of Directors.

Sept. 7, 12:45 A. M.—Round Table Luncheon.

Sept. 9, 10:30 A. M.—Meeting of the Good Samaritan Committee.

Sept. 14, 9:30 A. M.—Meeting of the Day Nursery Committee.

Sept. 14, 10:30 A. M.—Meeting of the Executive Committee.

Sept. 21, 10:30 A. M.—Meeting of the Executive Committee.

Sept. 23, 10:30 A. M.—Meeting of the Good Samaritan Committee.

Sept. 28, 10:30 A. M.—Meeting of the Executive Committee.

TO HONOR MR. HERMAN

A DINNER will be given in the Tearoom of the Community House on Friday, September 3rd, to honor Mr. Raphael Herman, and to express to him appreciation for his wonderful gift. The $25,000 which Mr. Herman pledged for our new Day Nursery has been placed in escrow, available for building purposes as soon as we deposit an equal amount. Fortunately, we are confident of being able to do this before long, for "Baby Bonds" in excess of this amount have been pledged. Payments on pledges sufficient to reach the goal are due in the near future.

The Building Committee under the direction of Mrs. Ada Laughlin, chairman, is already at work studying plans, visiting nearby nurseries and working out preliminary details. A report by the Chairman will be published later.

THE SUMMER CAMP

TO be able to provide a two weeks' holiday for one hundred children who otherwise would have no outing, has been one of the most satisfactory pieces of work of the good Samaritan Department. Bus load after bus load of happy children left for camp to return browner and healthier, with wonderful tales of the hikes and horseback rides. In a few instances, when the need was great, longer stays have been arranged with splendid results.

Willing little hands will rake the leaves at the Community House this fall to pay for the shoes and clothing and other articles that were provided for the trip. Mothers grateful not only for the benefit to the chiildren, but also for the much needed rest it gave them have offered to help as they can to show their appreciation.

We are forced to the conclusion that timely recreation oftentimes precludes the need for relief.

A LETTER

To the Board of Diirectors of the Assistance League:

It was my pleasure recently to pay my first visit to your Community House in Hollywood, and I was so favorably impressed with the scope of your work and the way in which it is carried on that I am complying with the request of one of your officers, to tell the readers of your Bulletin, how an outsider was converted from a casual visitor to an enthusiastic admirer.

IN THE GARDEN OF THE DAY NURSERY, DE LONGPRE AND ST. ANDREWS STS., HOLLYWOOD

The shops with their array of colors, Chinese bric-a-brac, engravings, water-colors, silk brocades, hand-wrought silver, dainty lingerie and hand work of many kinds, held my attention first. To me the articles were doubly valuable when I learned their sale helped to make a livelihood for some busy mother in her home, some industrious shut-in, or some struggling devotee of arts and crafts.

My curiosity led me to follow a badly crippled woman who went to the office in the rear of the house. I found there also a man and a young boy. May I congratulate you on the type of case work you are doing under trained social workers. I learned that the crippled woman was being provided with a brace which enabled her to fill the position of social hostess at a local hotel; that the man, father of a family, had been assisted with the expense of too long delayed dental care; that later a permanent position had been secured for him and that his errand that day was to repay from his earnings some of the money advanced to him. The young boy, from a respectable family in the middle west, had, with some new-made friends, landed in jail. It was his first offense and through the kind offices of the League, probation had been secured and he was being returned to his home —even as your boy or mine.

With sincere appreciation I grasped the subtle fact that while everyone's story is heard, more particularly attention is given and service rendered to those who have seen better days and who are too super-senitive to seek charity through regular channels.

The Day Nursery has its appeal to all. Tiny tots are given wholesome food and loving care while mothers earn money for food, shelter and clothing. The splendid work there merits the new building, which I understand that you are soon to build.

I have been invited to return to visit the other departments. May I in the meantime assure you that I am convinced that the Assistance League fills a very useful place in the community and should receive its generous support.

A VISITOR.

LOYALTY

Loyalty is that quality which prompts a person to be true to the thing he undertakes. It means definite direction, fixity of purpose, steadfastness. Loyalty supplies power, poise, purpose, ballast, and works for health and success. Nature helps the loyal man. If you are careless, slipshod, indifferent, Nature assumes that you wish to be a nobody and grants your desire. Success hinges on loyalty. Be true to your art, your business, your employer, your "house." Loyalty is for the one who is loyal. It is a quality woven through the very fabric of one's being, and never a thing apart. Loyalty makes the thing to which you are loyal yours. Disloyalty removes it from you. Whether any one knows of our disloyalty is really of little moment, either one way or the other. The real point is, how does it affect ourselves. Work is for the worker. Love is for the lover. Art is for the artist. The menial is the man who is disloyal to his work. All useful service is raised to the plane of art when love for the task—Loyalty—is fused with effort.

—THE FRA.

Is Your Bag for the

THRIFT SHOP

Ready?

Telephone HE. 5133

A member of the motor corps will call for it

Suits, Dresses, Shoes, Underwear, Children's Clothing—

Anything You Can Spare

The Westlake
School for Girls
333 South Westmoreland Avenue
Residence and Day School
Lower School, College Preparatory, Junior College
Fully Accredited
Departments of Art, Music, Home Economics
FALL TERM BEGINS SEPTEMBER 29TH
JESSICA SMITH VANCE FREDERICA DE LAGUNA
Telephone DRexel 0052

An Ideal School for Young Women
Cumnock School
COLLEGE WORK IN THE FOLLOWING COURSES:
Vocal Interpretation of Literature
Literary Appreciation — Voice and Diction — Short-Story
Public Speaking — French — Dancing
Dramatics — Story Telling — Psychology
Journalism
Art and Art Appreciation
An accredited High School in Class A preparing for Western and Eastern Colleges and Universities.
HELEN A. BROOKS, Director
5353 West Third Street — Los Angeles
WHitney 3427 —TELEPHONES— WHitney 7311

PACIFIC MILITARY ACADEMY
(Absolutely Fireproof)
Grammar and High School Departments
For Catalogue write
Commandant, P. O. Box No. 308, Culver City, Calif.
Telephones: Los Angeles—EMpire 6022
Culver City 3294

Norma Gould School of the Dance
announces
SUMMER COURSES FOR TEACHERS, PROFESSIONALS AND CHILDREN
Authentic Dances — Pantomime — Eurythmics
Special Feature—Fundamentals of Toe, Waltz Clog and Ballroom Dancing
July 5-August 13, 1926
Scholarship Awarded
460 N. Western Ave. Send for Catalog
HEmpstead 3530

THE WILLIAMS SCHOOL
for Handicapped Children
449 North Madison Avenue, Pasadena, California
For the benefit of exceptional children who vary from the average type to a moderate degree; for those who are practically normal, except in time and variance of their development.
To each pupil is offered the educational essentials for his utmost development and the further stimulus arising from competitive and associate companionship. Admission may be obtained at any time for both day and boarding pupils. For full particulars address
BEATRICE MICHAU WILLIAMS, Director

SCULPTOR OF SILVER
FOR THE TABLE OF THE BRIDE
PORTER BLANCHARD
BURBANK :: :: :: CALIFORNIA

Marlborough School for Girls
Established, 1889
Boarding and Day School Accredited to Eastern and Western Colleges
5029 West Third Street
36TH YEAR
ADA S. BLAKE, (A. B. Radcliffe College) Principal

MISS HARKER'S SCHOOL
FOR GIRLS
Palo Alto -:- -:- -:- California
"The Home of Stanford University"
Outdoor life all the year round. One hour from San Francisco. College Preparatory and Special Courses. Separate residence for girls from 5 to 14 years. Catalog on request.

KENWOOD HALL
Resident and Day School for Girls. Sub-Primary through High School.
Open throughout the year. Fall Term begins Sept. 20.
DIRECTOR: RUBY MILDRED KING
New Location: 6367 Wilshire Blvd., Opposite Carthay Center
Tel. ORegon 5303

The Girls' Collegiate School 34th Year
NEWLY LOCATED IN THE COUNTRY
Boarding and Day School. Accredited East and West. Out-Door Life a Reality. 50-acre estate. All sports. Saddle Horses. New Buildings. Italian type. L. A. Office, "Ask Mr. Foster" Information Service in Robinson's Dept. Store at Seventh Street and Grand Ave., Tel. BR 4701.
Glendora, Calif. Miss Parsons and Miss Dennen, Principals

Westridge
A COLLEGE PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS. ACCREDITED.
Primary, Intermediate and Academic Departments.
MARY L. RANNEY, AMIE C. RUMNEY, Principals.
324 Madeline Drive, Pasadena, California Telephone Wakefield 5276

The Elliott School for Girls
Residence and Day School.
Ideal Home Life Character Building
Superior Educational Advantages. Sub-Primary through Eleventh Grade.
Martha Collins Weaver, M. A., Principal. Pico Blvd. at Grammercy Place.
Fall Term Opens Sept. 20, 1926 EMpire 5347

Urban Military Academy
23rd YEAR
The Great Outdoor School
New 3-story brick and steel building. Cadets' private rooms with bath attached. Complete equipment. Strong faculty. Primary through high school. Beautiful tile swimming pool.
Wilcox at Melrose Tel. HEmpstead 7602

FINE PAINTINGS
STENDAHL ART GALLERIES
AMBASSADOR HOTEL LOS ANGELES

GREENWOOD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
5928 Franklin Avenue, Hollywood
Select Resident and Day School
Lawns, Tennis Courts, Outdoor Swimming Pool. Special advantages in music, under Mrs. Elsa Spencer.
Principals:
Mrs. M. Greenwood, Newnham College, Cambridge
H. F. Greenwood, A. B., Corpus Christi College, Cambridge
Telephone HOlly 2886

IN THE INTEREST OF THE LANDSCAPE ALONE

A COURSE IN CALIFORNIA DOMESTIC ARCHITECTURE

INSTEAD of one page on the domestic Architecture of California, this issue contains throughout its pages many suggestions for builders; and those interested are requested to read first the short article on "the history of art by Milton B. Medary on page twenty-three. Then, with this thought in mind we may look at the little sketches on this page and grasp their tremendous import.

The young architect who did them, "to help out" this journal in its efforts to place good design in the hands of all the people, lay then on a bed of pain while he did them. Fighting a brave fight against great odds he was never the less true to his Godgiven talents and never let the necessities of his difficult existence divert him for one moment from devotion to his ideals of what architecture should be.

The reason why the work of Wilmer Hershey will live forever is because, as Mr. Medary says, "he loves his art well enough to put all his soul and spirit, all that is divine in his manhood into it." Such devotion and loyalty to the highest makes man's work a part of the Infinite, and these little sketches contain the beauty and essence of home life which are the ideals of all who build a home.

So, too is the sketch of a small shop made for the same Company at Lompoc, a leader in the way toward better architecture in the market place.

These sketches are the first to be supplied to builders who have drafting rooms wherein the working drawings can be made. They were drawn to scale on the measures of the plans furnished by the builder.

M. U. S.

THREE SKETCHES OF A COTTAGE TO BE BUILT FOR ONE OF THE FAMILIES OF THE CELITE COMPANY AT LOMPOC. THE COMPANY IS GETTING OUT THESE PLANS IN ITS OWN DRAFTING ROOM AND WILL HELP TO MAKE LOMPOC A BEAUTIFUL TOWN.

T. W. Mather Co. Inc.
PASADENA, CAL.

Dry Goods

Women's & Children's

Wearing Apparel

Colorado Street at Marengo

Landscape

Designing and Planting

The beautiful gardens of Southern California which we have created are evidence of our ability to design and plant your own grounds properly.

A reliable firm of thirty-eight years' experience in Southern California.

EDWARD H. RUST
NURSERYMAN

1625 Bank St. Colo. 997
So. Pasadena ELliot 2639

Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes
TROY LAUNDRY
In Business for Twenty Years
Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146 Alhambra 243-J

LAUNDERERS DRY CLEANERS
ROYAL LAUNDRY CO.
461 South Raymond Colorado 67
Pasadena, California

HILLER'S STUDIO
OFFICIAL PHOTOGRAPHER FOR
CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
49 EAST COLORADO STREET
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
ALBERT HILLER Phone, Fair Oaks 155

THE SOUKS OF TUNIS
announce
the opening of a new branch
at 29 Paseo de la Guerra
Santa Barbara

WE offer for investment of Personal or Trust Funds sound Securities returning highest rates consistent with safety.

WILLIAM R. STAATS COMPANY
Established 1887
Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds
311 East Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIF.
Los Angeles San Diego San Francisco

The Assembly Tea Room
The In and Out-of-Town House of Los Angeles serves
LUNCHEON, TEA AND DINNER
INCIDENTALLY
The Very Choicest Food
Special Sunday Dinner 5 to 8
644 South Flower St., Los Angeles
Phone VAndike 7177

Decorating and Finishing Exclusive Furniture
W. G. Pesenecker
Interior and Exterior Painting
34 North Broadway
Phone Col. 5656 Pasadena, Calif.

Schaffer
GOWNS for LARGE WOMEN
566 E. Colorado Opposite Presbyterian Church Pasadena

SMALL HOUSE DESIGNS
Published by the
Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara, California.
Price $1.50 Postpaid

San Francisco ·· Los Angeles ·· New Orleans ·· New York

Sunset Route
by Rail and Sea to New York

Southern Pacific service through to New York City. Rail lines from San Francisco, Santa Barbara, Los Angeles, San Diego and El Paso to New Orleans; thence "100 Golden Hours at Sea" on board Southern Pacific steamship to New York (meals and berth on the steamer included in fare); or from New Orleans to New York by train.

Through the colorful southwest and romantic Old South. The route of the Sunset Limited, "Famed Round the World." Southern Pacific dining service, featuring dishes distinctive of the West and South; club and buffet car, observation car, shower baths for men and women, ladies' maid, barber, valet.

Southern Pacific
Tickets and steamer reservations to foreign lands
C. L. McFAUL, Asst. Pass. Traffic Mgr., Los Angeles

Dance!
at the
Ambassador
Cocoanut Grove
to the Entrancing Music of
COCOANUT GROVE ORCHESTRA
Under the Leadership of Ray West
SPECIAL NIGHTS Every Tuesday
COLLEGE NIGHTS
With Dancing Contest every Friday.
Tea Dances
every Saturday at 4:00 in the
Fiesta Room, Tea Service $1.00

THE GOLF CLUB HOUSE AT PALOS VERDES (Ladies' Sun Parlor inset)—one of the best equipped in California—the exclusive privilege of the people of this delightful seaside community.

Palos Verdes Estates

JAY LAWYER
General Manager

BANK OF AMERICA
Trustee

Lane Mortgage Building, Eighth and Spring Sts.
LOS ANGELES

Telephone VAndike 2481

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

The Fishing Fleet — Gloucester, 1926

From a Painting by Thomas L. Hunt, Beverly Hills, California

UP THE STATE HIGHWAY IN QUEST OF WATER
OUR HERITAGE FROM SPAIN AT SANTA BARBARA
ART FOR THE PUBLIC: SCHOOLS AND THE CLUBS

No. 82 October, 1926 25 Cents

CALIFORNIA'S HOME AND GARDEN MAGAZINE

AN IDEA as old as is human effort! It is the very law of nature and the instinct of mankind to unite in working for a common cause. If the cause is good, if the desire is sincere and the effort is well directed, society will be benefited and the effort justified.

THIS principle of collaboration is the fundamental concept of the Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles, founded two years ago for the definite purpose of advancing the art of Architecture. To this end its members are contributing their individual abilities to the Association for collective service in the design and execution of public buildings.

TO BETTER architectural training and practice, the Association is striving to encourage the study of Art and Architecture, to afford more adequate library facilities and to bring to public attention the value of the Profession to the community.

"UP THE VALLEY AND DOWN THE COAST"

The CALIFORNIAN HOTEL

MANAGEMENT H. WINGATE LAKE

FRESNO, CALIFORNIA

A modern, model hotel devoted to sincere hospitality and dedicated to California's Guests

THE LOGICAL STOPPING PLACE IN THE SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY FOR ALL POINTS, WHETHER YOU TRAVEL FOR BUSINESS OR PLEASURE.

EUROPEAN PLAN
250 ROOMS-250 BATHS
$2.50 PER DAY AND UP
ALL OUTSIDE ROOMS

FAMED AROUND THE WORLD

"... in America we take the

Sunset Limited"

In Algiers and the farthest corners of the globe Sunset Limited is well known. Experienced travelers speak of it with friendly familiarity. They tell of the varied interest of its route across the United States.

No transcontinental journey offers so much in scenic and historical interest. For Sunset Limited skirts the nation's southern border. Side trips into picturesque Old Mexico if you wish. At no additional fare, glimpses of life in five of the nation's most colorful southwestern and southern states.

Sunset Limited operates daily between San Francisco and Los Angeles and New Orleans. From New Orleans, continue by train or by Southern Pacific steamship to New York (meals and berth on the ship included in your fare).

Shower-baths, comfortable lounge rooms in club and observation cars, new type, roomy Pullmans and the personal service of ladies' maid, barber and valet. And Southern Pacific dining car service specializing in viands typical of the regions through which you travel.

Southern Pacific

C. L. McFAUL, Asst. Passenger Traffic Manager, Los Angeles, Calif.

Santa Maria Inn

SANTA MARIA, CALIF.

A HOME-LIKE INN, upkept with home-like neatness for the convenience of wayfarers.
Every room with bath. Halfway between Los Angeles and San Francisco on the Coast Highway.
Write or telegraph for reservations.

The Assembly Tea Room

The In and Out-of-Town House of Los Angeles serves
LUNCHEON, TEA AND DINNER
INCIDENTALLY
The Very Choicest Food
Special Sunday Dinner 5 to 8
644 South Flower St., Los Angeles
Phone VAndike 7177

WE offer for investment of Personal or Trust Funds sound Securities returning highest rates consistent with safety.

WILLIAM R. STAATS COMPANY
Established 1887
Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds
311 East Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIF.
Los Angeles San Diego San Francisco

Beautiful Garden Pieces
in
Sculptured Terra Cotta
Italian Terra Cotta Co.
W. H. Robison
1149 MISSION ROAD
Opposite County Hospital
Phone Lincoln 1057 Los Angeles

NO. 121—TALMAGE VASE

NIPPON MURA, AN INN AND AN OPPORTUNITY

CATERING only to the highest class patronage there has grown up in the center of Santa Clara County's fruit-blossom district a modern and delightful little hotel which, because its founders were leaders in America-Japan mercantile affairs, is built in the Japanese style. Nippon Mura means, in Japanese, a collection of houses, just as Nippon Maru marks the steamship line to Japan.

Fifty-two miles south of San Francisco, ten miles from San Jose, two miles from Los Gatos, on the state highway along which runs also the Peninsula electric railroad and the San Francisco motor buses, this comfortable inn and convenient vacation place has built up an enviable reputation throughout the northern part of the state and is now presented to motorists and vacationists from the southland who are not yet familiar with the smaller, select hotels of this beautiful portion of our state.

THE ENTRANCE TO NIPPON MURA ON THE STATE HIGHWAY AND ALONG THE TROLLY LINE OF THE PENINSULAR "BLOSSOM WAY"

Here poets and musicians have rested, in chosen cottage have written verse and composed music. Here famous singers and actors have sojourned incognito.

Much like the McDowell Mura in New England, this charming village of thirty acres has interesting chapters of the past and may be secured by some one who has experience and congenial ideas for a continuation of its popular good will, or for an enterprise similar to that of the McDowell Group.

For further particulars address the owner, Mrs. Theodore J. Morris, Los Gatos, California.

Motorists touring the state find Nippon Mura easily on the Los Gatos-San Francisco road just before they reach the highway into Big Basin Redwood grove. For a night's lodging or a family dinner there is no better place en route.

THE COTTAGES ARE BUILT IN THE PICTURESQUE JAPANESE ARCHITECTURE BUT INSIDE THEY OFFER THAT COMFORT WHICH THE AMERICAN VACATIONIST DEMANDS. THE CUISINE IS EXCELLENT THOUGH SIMPLE, AS CALIFORNIA FAMILIES WHO HAVE STOPPED AT NIPPON MURA WILL TESTIFY

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertainments, etc., for the calendar pages are free of charge and should be received in the office of CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, Pasadena, at least two weeks previous to date of issue, the 10th. No correction can be guaranteed if they are received later than that date CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, California. One dollar and twenty-five cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be changed as many times as desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the change is made.

Entered as second class matter, July 28, 1919, at the Post Office at Pasadena, California, under act of March 3, 1879.

Clubs

VALLEY HUNT CLUB, PASADENA:
The formal season at the Valley Hunt Club closed with May, after which time no programs are arranged. The tennis court and swimming pool offer the outdoor attractions during the summer, and individual parties, both afternoon and evening, are arranged as desired.

ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB, PASADENA:
The afternoon bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been discontinued for the season, but tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged, followed by tea.
Table d'hote dinner served in dining room every Sunday from 12 to 3 p. m.

LOS ANGELES COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.
Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 .p m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month. Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturday during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.

MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday In each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Dancing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday.
Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.

LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week, Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal. Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL COUNTRY CLUB:
A dinner dance is arranged for the third Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a. m., and not before two p. m.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB, SANTA BARBARA:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A recent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a special luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served.

Bullock's
Broadway—Hill and—Seventh
"One o'Clock Saturdays"

Where the Treasures of a Collector May Be Purchased as Gifts

A. Schmidt & Son
For Fifty-six Years
IMPORTERS OF ANTIQUE AND MODERN SILVER AND
Sheffield Plate, Fine China and Glass
2320 W. Seventh St., Los Angeles
391 E. Colorado St., Pasadena
Boston New York Washington

PALOS VERDES GOLF CLUB: Offers an eighteen hole, all grass, seaside course, delightful for all the year play, open to residents and their guests. Lunch and dinner served every day. Tea and informal bridge may be enjoyed every afternoon.

ENCINO COUNTRY CLUB, VAN NUYS:
Buffet dinner dances every Wednesday evening.
Ladies Golf Thursday mornings.
Thursday a special luncheon is served, followed by bridge. Afternoon Tea 4:30.
Luncheon and dinner served every day.
Special luncheons, dinners, teas and bridge parties may be arranged for as desired.

NEWPORT HARBOR YACHT CLUB:
Saturday, October 9, Winners' ball, banquet, 6:30 p. m., presentation of trophies, 8:15 p. m., winners' ball, 9 p. m.
Saturday, October 30, Halloween party, banquet, 6:30 p. m., costume ball (everyone in costume, please) 8:30 p.m.
Saturday, December 4, Annual meeting of the membership. Election of officers and directors.
Saturday, January 15, 1927, Inaugural ball. Banquet, 6:30 p. m., presentation of officers, 8 p. m., dance, 8:30 p.m.

Art

LOS ANGELES MUSEUM OF HISTORY, SCIENCE AND ART, Exposition Park, announces the following exhibitions for the month:
Annual Exhibition, California Art Club;
Annual Exhibition, California Water Color Society;
Exhibition by "The Blue Four"; Feininger (American),
Jawlensky (Russian), Kadinsky (Russian), Klee (German).
Exhibition VII Century Peruvian Furniture.
In connection with "The Blue Four" exhibition there will be lectures by Mme. Scheyer.

THE BILTMORE SALON announces a Memorial Exhibition of paintings hy Thomas Moran, N. A., opening September 27th and continuing through October 17th, at the Los Angeles Biltmore.

THOMAS MORAN, who died at his home in Santa Barbara in August at the age of ninety years, was made a member of the National Academy in 1884. Mr. Moran was born at Bolton, Lancashire, England, in 1837, and came to the United States in 1844.

STENDAHL ART GALLERIES, Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, are exhibiting a collection of paintings, water colors and drawings by Haldane Douglas through October 15th. The galleries are open in the evenings and on Sunday.

ARTHUR HILL GILBERT, who had a very comprehensive exhibit at the Stendahl Galleries in Los Angeles last month, is preparing for his first New York exhibit at the invitation of the Macbeth Galleries.

THE SOUTHBY SALON, in the Plaza Hotel, Hollywood, is showing paintings by western artists.

MAURICE BRAUN held a select exhibit at the Kanst Galleries, Mulholland Drive, Hollywoodland, last month. The canvases shown included New England landscapes as well as California.

HOWARD RUSSELL BUTLER'S paintings of the scenic wonders of Utah are on exhibition in the Galleria Real of the Biltmore Hotel, Los Angeles.

THE LAGUNA BEACH ART ASSOCIATION awarded the following prizes and honorable mentions in the August exhibition:
"The Visit" by Clarence Hinkle, first prize; "Moonlight Shadows" by Thomas Hunt, second prize; "The Pottery Vendor" by Elizabeth Wheelan, third prize; Honorable mentions in the following order of rank were awarded to "Innocence" by Ruth Peabody; "Old Adobe" by Haldane Douglas; "Inner Harbor" by Myron Oliver.

FRANZ GERITZ, whose work in woodblock printing is well known, has opened a class in this art at his studio, 701-B North Belmont Street, Los Angeles.

THE M. A. NEWHOUSE COMPANY of Chicago, Detroit and St. Louis have opened a small branch gallery at 2614 1-4 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles.

LAGUNA BEACH ART ASSOCIATION announces through the president, William A. Griffith, that the new Laguna Art Gallery will soon be under construction. The Association owns the site for the gallery which commands a wonderful and far reaching view.

WILLIAM PRESTON HARRISON of the Los Angeles Museum, with Mrs. Harrison, is spending most of October in Holland enjoying the collection of paintings in that country.

ORRIN WHITE held one of his best and most popular exhibitions at the Ainslie Galleries, Barker Bros., Los Angeles, last month.

LOREN BARTON will show etchings and sketches in the Print Room of the Cannell and Chaffin galleries, opening October 15th.

THE BILTMORE SALON, Los Angeles Biltmore, from October 18 through November 8 will hold a one man show by Jean Mannheim.

WILLIAM WENDT AND AARON KILPATRICK, after a short term in the valley, are again on the heights, sketching in the High Sierras.

KATHERINE LEIGHTON is now at home after a delightful summer in Glacier National Park, where she painted the Blackfeet Indians.

CLYDE FORSYTHE, with Mrs. Forsyth, is in New York, having driven across the country.

THOMAS L. HUNT, and Mrs. Hunt, spent the greater part of last month in and around Carmel.

THE AINSLIE GALLERIES, Second floor, Barker Bros., Los Angeles, are holding interesting exhibitions during the month: The Orrin White show will continue through the 15; Also through the 15, shows by Louis H. Sharp and John Christopher Smith will be held; And from the 16th to the 30th the work of Thaddeus Welsh will be shown. One of the interesting paintings to be seen in these galleries is a portrait of "Nell Gwynn" by Sir Peter Lelys, from the Bulwer Lytton collection.

LA CRESCENTA ART AND BOOK NOOK announces the Second Annual Exhibition of Works of Art, Friday, October Eighth to Wednesday, October Thirteenth, 350 East Michigan Avenue, La Crescenta, California. Works by the following artists will be exhibited. Paintings, representing California Hills and Homes and Home Gardens by Carlotta V. Phillipps; Pottery, Ceramics and Textiles, by Leta Horlocker; Miniatures by Clare Shepard Shisler.

THE WILSHIRE GALLERIES, Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles, are showing paintings and color prints, with an occasional etching.

STONE INTERNATIONAL GALLERIES, Monrovia, is continuing the special summer exhibition of contemporary art, including oils, water colors and etchings.

KANST'S ART GALLERY on Mulholland Drive, Hollywood, is showing a collection of paintings by California artists, as well as by Eastern and European painters.

CANNELL and CHAFFIN, Inc., 720 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles, announce an exhibition in the galleries, opening September 27, of Southern California artists, including William Wendt, Aaron Kilpatrick, the Wachtels, Carl Oscar Borg, Orrin White, Arthur Hill Gilbert, Douglas Gleason and Paul Lauritz.

Music

THE PHILHARMONIC SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, W. A. Clark, Jr., founder, Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor, Mrs. Caroline Smith, business manager, opens the winter season of symphony concerts, October 21 and 22. As in past seasons the regular symphony pair of concerts will occur every other week, alternating with the Sunday afternoon popular concerts, the first of which will be given October 31. All of these concerts will be given in the Philharmonic Auditorium, Fifth and Olive Streets, Los Angeles.

LOS ANGELES GRAND OPERA SEASON, under the Smith-Armitage management, opens October 4, at the Shrine Auditorium, with "Samson and Delilah," Louis Homer and Charles Marshall singing the title roles. The succeeding programs and artists are as follows:

Oct. 6, "Tosca" (with Rosa Raisa in title role, Cortis and Baklanoff); Oct. 7, "Martha" (Schipa, Rimini, Macbeth, Elinor Marlo); Oct. 9, matinee, "Rigoletto" (Rimini, Schipa, Melius); Oct. 9, "Trovatore" (Raisa, Rimini, Homer, Aroldo Lindi); Oct. 11, "Traviata" (Muzia, Robazza, Richard Bonelli, Nano Carter, Cortis); Oct. 12, "Barber of Seville" (Schipa, Rimini, Trevisan, Lazzari Melius, Marlo, Martinelli); Oct. 14, "Butterfly" (Raisa, Meisle, Althouse, Bonelli); Oct. 16, matinee, "Faust" (Althouse, Lazzari, Bonelli, Melius, Marlo, Ruthellen Miller); Oct. 16, "Aida" (Raisa, Meisle, Lindi, Baklanoff, Cotreuil, Lazzari); Oct. 18, "Die Walkure" (Baklanoff, Meisle, Cotreuil, Althouse, Elsa Alsen, Florence Russell, Lenore Ivey, Clemence Gifford, Hazel Rhodes, Marguerite Sigond, Patricia Robazza, Elizabeth Happ).

SAN DIEGO CIVIC OPERA ASSOCIATION opens a season of five operas, with Verdi's "Rigoletti," October 2, followed by "Carmen" the 4th, "Traviata" the 7th, "Trovatore" the 9th, and "Gioconda" the 11th. The operas will be given at the new Russ High School Auditorium.

L. E. BEHYMER opens the season in his Philharmonic Courses, October 1, with Lawrence Tibbett, followed by Louis Graveure, November 2. The concerts will be given at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Fifth and Olive, Los Angeles.

THE PHILHARMONIC ARTISTS' SERIES, George Leslie Smith, manager, will open November 1, with Louis Homer, contralto. As in past seasons the concerts will be given at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Fifth and Olive, Los Angeles.

THE BATCHELDER TILES

BATCHELDER-WILSON COMPANY

We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

2633 Artesian Street

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

LAKE ARROWHEAD LODGE

E. K. HOAK, Managing Director.

Mile High—American Plan—Open All Year

Reservations made at 319 Van Nuys Bldg. Tel. VA. 0959, or direct to Lodge. Call Lake Arrowhead Main 1. Rates, $7.00 a day and up, including meals and room.

Dinner Dance Every Saturday Night.

J·LOWRY·FISCHER

PARCHMENT LAMP SHADES of distinctive design and workmanship
ORIGINAL DESIGNS in pen-and-ink and oil
DELIGHTFUL OLD PRINTS appropriately mounted
SPECIAL DESIGNS MADE to harmonize with any interior
ASSOCIATED WITH The PLYMOUTH FORGE

4054 W. 6TH St.-LOS ANGELES, CAL.-DUnkirk 1753

Eleanor and . . . .

Hollingsworth Beach

French and Italian Arts

630 East Colorado Street

Pasadena,

California

THE LOS ANGELES TRIO, May McDonald, piano; David Crocov, violin; Ilya Bronson, 'cello, will open the series of concerts at the Biltmore Music Salon, October 27. This is the eleventh season in the life of this popular organization. David Crocov, who takes th place of Sylvain Noack this season, is concert master of Tandler's Little Symphony Orchestra and first violin in the Philharmonic Orchestra as well.

THE WOMAN'S LYRIC CLUB, J. B. Poulin, director, is planning unusually attractive programs for the winter. The recently elected officers for the year are Isabelle Isgrig, president; Letitia Williams and Mrs. Laird Stabler, vice presidenest; Mrs. C. A. Schweissinger, Clara Robbins and Helen Pierce, secretaries; Mrs. Paul E. Fergusson, treasurer; Mrs. Homer Jones, Mary Teitsworth, Josephine Graham and Cornelia Glover, directors.

THE SMALLMAN A. CAPPELLA CHOIR closed a successful season with the Pilgrimage Play last month, and will appear in a concert of entirely new numbers at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Los Angeles, Friday evening, November 5.

THE LOS ANGELES ORATORIO SOCIETY, John Smallman, conductor, has been incorporated. Mrs. J. T. Anderson is the new president, and W. E. Mouser is business manager. The concerts of this season will be given in the new Shrine Auditorium.

RICHARD BONELLI, baritone, will open the Pomona College Concert Series on October 15. The second event will be the Pomona College Choir in "Elijah," October 15 and 16.

OPERA READING CLUB OF HOLLYWOOD, Mrs. W. O. Nickell, president, will hold the first meeting October 4, with successive meetings the first Monday morning of each month, at the El Capitan theater. The opera of the first meeting will be "Herodiade," Dr. Frank Nagel directing.

ALICE COLEMAN BATCHELDER, pianist, presents the first of the series of eight Coleman Chamber Concerts, October 24, at four o'clock, at the Community Playhouse, Pasadena. The artists are the Persinger String Quartet, formerly the San Francisco Chamber Music Society.

SYLVAIN NOACK, concertmaster of the Philharmonic Orchestra of Los Angeles since the organization in 1919, has accepted the post of concertmaster of the Saint Louis Symphony Orchestra, Rudolf Ganz, conducter. Mr. Noack will continue to make his home in Los Angeles and will return to southern California in April to fill the many club and recital engagements, and to resume his violin teaching and ensemble playing. Alfred Megerlin of the New York Philharmonic succeeds Mr. Noack as concertmaster.

GLENDALE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Modest Altschuler, director, opens the concert season, Monday, October 25.

THE HOLLYWOOD COMMUNITY CHORUS, Hugo Kirchhofer, director, opened the tenth season of concert work last month, presenting the program in the Memorial Auditorium. Maude D. Lee Skeen, chairman of the music committee, has announced the appearance of a number of well-known artists at the weekly programs to be given during the season.

Announcements

PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYERS announce their programs for October: "Dulcy" by George Kaufman and Marc Connelly, October 7-16; "The Farmer's Wife" by Eben Philpots, October 21-30. Following the policy of other years a play by American authors opens the Fall season of work at the Community Playhouse, and for this reason the presentation of "The New Poor" was postponed until a later date.

THE DRAMA BRANCH of the Community Arts Association, Santa Barbara, announces a program of celebrated plays for the season of 1926-27. "Caesar and Cleopatra," by George Bernard Shaw, will open the season on October 1st. This will be followed by "Hay Fever," by Noel Coward, on October 22nd, and the following plays will be given thereafter at intervals of approximately three weeks each: "The Show-Off," "Peter Pan," "To The Ladies," "Twelfth Night" or "Much Ado About Nothing," "Right You Are," and a play by Eugene O'Neill. In the event of the Drama Branch securing the right to produce one or more very recent New York Successes, there may be a slight change in the schedule of plays.

Mr. Irving Pichel, formerly of Berkerly, and one of the foremost Directors of Community Playhouses in America, will be the Director of the productions, and he will have the services of Mr. Ian Wolfe as Associate Director. Each play will be presented three times; on Friday Night, Saturday Matinee and Saturday evening.

HOLLYWOOD PLAY HOUSE, to be completed in December, is an intimate theatre with a seating capacity of twelve hundred. It conforms to the Spanish style of architecture and introduces various unusual features including a library and music room back stage. The main foyer, 80x20 feet, is to be furnished as a lounge and from it ascends the grand staircase which supports the balcony and leads to the promenade in the mezzanine patio. Gogerty and Weyl, the architects, have worked out many novel ideas suggested by Edward W. Rowland, the managing director of the theatre. A group of founder members composed of men and women of the artistic and learned professions will co-operate with the management. New plays as well as those that have attained fame will be produced with strictly professional casts. Business men identified with other important projects in Hollywood are back of the enterprise. A. Z. Taft, Jr., is president of the company; Frederick G. Leonard, vice president; Charles R. Stuart, vice president; G. R. Dexter, treasurer; and Robert M. Jones, secretary. Mr. Jones is business manager.

THE HISTORICAL EXHIBITION to be assembled by the Los Angeles Museum of History, Science and Art during the months of November and December will be of exceptional interest. From private individuals, societies, dealers and every possible source, it is planned to bring together a loan exhibition of Colonial and Early American antiques of every order and description, as well as relics of Pioneer California, which will be shown in the galleries of the Museum in conjunction with the historical collections which the Museum itself possesses.

The unquestioned value of this project cannot fail to arouse the enthusiastic interest of the community. To secure its success the Museum will need not only the approbation of its friends and patrons but their active assistance. If you yourself possess any articles, large or small, which would be of interest in such an exhibition, or if you know of any collector or individual who possesses such articles and would be willing to loan them for the above purpose, the Museum will be glad to hear from you either in person or by letter or telephone with detailed information at once. Telephone HUmbolt 0694.

It is believed that not only in the larger collections of the city, but hidden away in the attics, the trunks, the boxes and the chests of Los Angeles and this vicinity there lies a surprising amount of material which would prove of the greatest interest in this exhibition. Among the articles which will be shown may be listed old furniture (cottage, household and farmhouse), old china, glass, pewter, brass, silver, copper, old paintings, pictures and prints, old laces, needlework, and fabrics, miniatures, jewelry and trinkets, pottery and earthenware, old clocks and watches, books, newspapers, letters and autographs, household curios, domestic and agricultural implements, and other old personalia of every imaginable use. We therefore make this appeal to all friends of the Museum to assist us in the discovery and collection of this material.

Articles antedating the Civil War from any section of the United States will be considered for exhibition, and we especially desire to make the early California and Southwest sections of particular significance.

While the Museum will call for and return articles accepted for the exhibition without expense to the owners, it will greatly appreciate the cooperation of its friends in personally bringing objects for the exhibition to the Museum at their convenience, prior to October twenty-fifth. Each exhibitor is requested to number and prepare a list of the objects to be loaned in advance of delivery, giving all available data for labels, etc.

All objects loaned to the Museum will receive the same care for their safety and preservation as that given to specimens regularly deposited in the Museum.

Your assistance in the manner above indicated will be appreciated. Kindly communicate with Miss Marion Parks, in charge of Historical Loan Exhibition, at the Museum at once, either in person or by letter or telephone.

THE SOUTHWEST MUSEUM is dedicated to the Science of Man (Anthropology), especially as revealed in the buried habitations of the Southwest. Field expeditions bring to the Museum rich materials for laboratory investigation, and some of the most significant of these are exhibited, especially in the two great halls at the head of the stairway, on the left.

The lobby, being unsuitable for scientific display, is mainly occupied by isolated loan collections, which at least emphasize the dominant purpose of the Museum, as do even the pictures of the Southwest on the walls. Other pictures are used throughout the building for decorative purposes. Guests specifically interested in Occidental art should visit the famous Huntington and Clarke collections, or the William Preston Harrison gallery in the Los Angeles Museum at Exposition Park.

At Exposition Park may be found also an amazing exhibit in paleontology, dug from the tar-pits at La Brea. "The proper study of mankind is man" is the keynote of The Southwest Museum and man in the great Pacific Area, as distinct from the European stock from which we ourselves have descended.

Anthropologists now generally agree that America was originally populated from Asia, so the room at the base of our Caracol Tower exhibits some of the finished arts of the Orient—by way of sheer contrast to the primitive arts of the early Asiatic immigrants to America. A like room in the second story of the Tower affords a similar contrast for Europe. It should oe remembered that both these displays represent a state of development vastly later and therefore far more advanced than the primitive arts of the Southwest, to which this Museum is devoted. Just because these arts are so primitive, they promise to increase to an extraordinary degree our knowledge of human history in its earlier and least known stages.

At the summit of the Caracol Tower the Comstock collection of butterflies, together with the birds of the Lorquin Club, may be seen by special arrangement. These collections, like those of the shells and minerals, are exceedingly valuable and interesting, although not closely related to the Science of Man.

The Museum is especially fortunate in its distinctively Southwestern library. The Munk Library is perhaps the finest collection of Arizoniana in the world, while the Jackson Library provides an excellent nucleus of rare California books. These collections, together with the Hector Alliot Library of Archaeology, are available to research students, who should apply to the Librarian.

Copies of "The Southwest Bulletin," with full accounts of the Museum's new plans and policies, may be obtained at a nominal cost from the Custodian. A catalogue is in course of preparation.

MR. CHEESEWRIGHT has just returned from Europe where he found many old models suitable for reproduction in our California homes. These will help furnish the inspiration for new and interesting pieces of furniture to be made in the Studio workshops.

Old carvings from the 16th and 17th Century will supply authoritative models for furniture to be made in the near future. In this way an opportunity is offered those who are interested in having faithful copies of these rare old pieces made for their homes.

The Cheesewright Studios
INC.

Decorators and Furnishers
Pasadena California

A Home on the Arroyo Bank Above Brookside Park

PASADENA

—a city of homes and flowers

Detailed information may be had at the

Pasadena Chamber of Commerce and Civic Association

1000 South Raymond Avenue

COLLEGE NOTES

MUSIC will have a more prominent place upon the Occidental College calendar this year since the establishment of a department of music with Walter Earle Hartley as head. Faculty recitals are planned for the fall season on the Eagle Rock campus. A chorus choir will be organized from the student body with Mr. Hartley as director, and will contribute to college events during the year.

The October events at the college begin with the junior-freshman party the evening of October 8; the Faculty Woman's Club will entertain freshmen and junior women in Orr Hall gardens October 15; and sophomores will present a public program of Hallowe'en stunts followed by refreshments served in the upper quadrangle, in Alumni Hall, October 28. Mrs. Joseph Pipal is directing the events.

AT THE UNIVERSITY OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA the artists, sculptors architects and craftsmen will find a suitable location for the display of their work in the addition of an exhibition room to the School of Architecture. A new modeling room and a new drafting room are being added to the architectural department.

THE ANNUAL SHAKESPEREAN PLAY to be presented at Mills College this autumn has been announced. "As You Like It" chosen by the Drama Association last year will be presented on the campus October 15 and 16. There will be two evening performances Friday and Saturday, and also a matinee Saturday afternoon. The play is being coached by Mrs. Marian Stebbins, a member of the Mills staff, who for a number of years has coached Mills students in their student productions.

POMONA COLLEGE CALENDAR

POMONA COLLEGE opened its semester of winter work on September 13. Over 900 are included in all classifications of the undergraduate and graduate student body. In this number are 340 new students representing 140 cities in California and other states.

President James A. Blaisdell returned in time for the opening of college after a year in Europe. With his return the first joint meeting of the Claremont Colleges, Pomona College and Scripps College boards of trustees was held and the first steps were taken to place the federated colleges plan into effect. Following the meeting announcement was made that Scripps College would open for the admission of fifty women of high scholarship qualities in the fall of 1928.

The Pomona College athletic season opens October 2d with San Diego State Teacher's College at Pomona; October 9th, La Verne College journeys to Pomona; October 16, California Institute of Technology at Pomona; October 24, Pomona versus Southern Branch at Los Angeles; and October 30, Redlands meets Pomona at Claremont.

"To the Ladies," a play by Kaufman and Connelley will be presented as the first Masquers' Dramatic Society production in Holmes Hall at 8 p. m., on the nights of October 8th and 9th.

The Frank P. Brackett Observatory of Pomona College will be open to visitors for the first time this year on Thursday evening October 7.

Several lectures have been announced for the month including a series of three public lectures on "The Contributions of the Greeks and Romans to Modern Civilization" to be given by Dr. Homer E. Robbins, professor of classical history and languages. All three lectures will be held in Holmes Hall. He will speak on "Reconstructing the Past" on October 14; "Our Debt to Greece," October 21; and on "Our Debt to Rome" on October 28. Geoffrey Morgan will give a lecture under the auspices of the Claremont Women's Club in the women's club building on October 15 at 8 o'clock, speaking on "The Problems of Leisure Time."

Richard Bonelli, haritone, will present the first number on the Pomona College music and drama course in Bridges Hall at 8:15, on the night of October 22.

SANTA BARBARA

El Paseo Patio

Lunch Out of Doors or Dine

at

"EL PASEO"

23 E. de la Guerra St.

Santa Barbara

Sun Kissed
Ocean Washed
Mountain Girded
Island Guarded

SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

Furnished houses for rent of all sizes and prices in Santa Barbara and Montecito. Properties of all kinds for sale. Literature and maps free. Live in "The Home Paradise of the World." Communicate with
H. G. CHASE, Santa Barbara, Calif.

EL ENCINO

On Coast Highway, Montecito, Calif.

Luncheon Supper

Afternoon Tea

Dinner Served on Order

Limited Number of Over Night Guests Accommodated

SANTA BARBARA NUMBERS

SO insistent is the demand from all over the State, so satisfying is the answer which Santa Barbara gives, that no other place is mentioned where, in the rapid return to indigeneous design, one looks for help in commercial or town architecture. Santa Barbara's splendid effort to stem the tide of mediocre design has succeeded, in so far as the builders of the moment are concerned. But so meager is the information available, and so dense the ignorance of the fundamentals of design, that constant renewal of effort is necessary if the fine work done by the Plans and Planting Committee of the Santa Barbara Community Arts Association is to become effective as an advance guard in California.

Only those who are already educated in art and architecture seem to appreciate what Santa Barbara has done. Even that city's own builders and town authorities have failed to rally intelligently to the standard set. All over the new portions of the city—the value of whose building sites has more than doubled in the last three years—there are now appearing here and there a new cottage or store that shames the whole community by its attempt at something its builder was too ignorant to succeed in alone.

When the architects of Santa Barbara and those from outside who helped them were placed in a position of authority by the action of the Earthquake Relief Committee and were backed by the Community Arts Association, a building code was written which startled the whole profession of architecture. That it worked until small town politics threw it out of the City Hall, shows that when the people become well educated to appreciate their own experts in any line, democracy will be proven a success.

Education is, therefore, the big job that lies before those who have done so much already to save the face of the earth from ruin by the hand of man.

Slowly the pictures of Santa Barbara's architecture, and small house designs are being carried all over the State and beyond it. Slowly the good design inaugurated by Santa Barbara is being used by other Californian towns. Soon Santa Barbara will be outdistanced by her pupils if she does not stop building in ignorance and take to herself the lesson she has so nobly written in California's history.

DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS

Entrance to El Paseo

Salud y Pesetas y Tiempo para Gastarlos

EL PASEO DE LA GUERRA

THE "STREET IN SPAIN"

SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

SAN YSIDRO RANCH

California's Famed Foothill Resort Unharmed by Earthquake.

Nestled in the foothills among the Orange Groves, overlooking Valley and Sea. Elevation 600 feet. Furnished Bungalows, 2 to 7 rooms. Central Dining Room. Electricity, hot and cold water. Surf-bathing, Tennis, Horseback Riding. Six miles from Historic Santa Barbara, two miles from ocean and country club. Moderate rates. For Folder, address San Ysidro Ranch, Santa Barbara, California.

OLD BOOKS PRINTS

TECOLOTE BOOK SHOP

New and Standard Books

25 DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS

SANTA BARBARA

AUTHORS & AUTHORS'

agents are invited to submit book-length material to

The Guild Santa Barbara

HISTORY BIOGRAPHY FICTION

TRAVEL SCIENCE ART

Acceptable material will be published on the usual royalty basis without expense to the author

129 EL PASEO DE LA GUERRA

SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

Translations from the Spanish are particularly welcome

IN order to do its bit to help builders' exchanges and woman's clubs throughout the state in the effort for good design, CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND presents the following issues which have featured Santa Barbara.

They are on file at tbis office and can be ordered by number at 20 cents apiece.

No. 7, Nov., 1919. Subjects:
Santa Barbara Mission.
Spanish Architecture in Mexico. Oscar Maurer's Photographs.
Sources of Spanish-Californian History
The Use of Mission Architecture, illustrated by Gould House, Reginald Johnson, Architect.

No. 8, Dec., 1919. Subjects:
Chosing the Architecture for a Town. By R. A. Marsden, Fullerton, California.
The Righteousness of Beauty, illustrated by Tudor House, Cheesewright Studios, Pasadena.
The Use of Mission Architecture.
Restored Adobe by Carleton M. Winslow and Carmel Mission, Monterey.

No. 9, 1920. Subjects:
The Old Adobes of California, illustrated by Author, Eva S. Fenyes, Pasadena.
Mexico, the Mother of California. By C. E. Chapman, Prof. Hist., U.C.

No. 12, Sept., 1920. Subjects:
Photograph of San Juan Capistrano—Detail of Doorway.
Ramona's Marriage Place.
San Diego Mission Ruins.
Flintridge Country Club—a model of good "Mission" architecture, Myron Hunt, Architect.
Restoring the Ruined Missions.
Santa Fe Architecture, Howell Brown.
Good Architecture by H. H. Whitely and P. R. Williams.

No. 14., Dec., 1920. Subjects:
Building Today in Adobe.
Los Angeles Pressed Brick Competition
One Story Hollow Tile Houses.

No. 15, Jan., 1920. Subjects:
San Antonio Mission and the Mission Play House.
L. A. Pressed Brick Houses. J. F. Murphy, Santa Barbara, architect.

No. 16, Feb., 1921. Subjects.
Mexico, California's Opportunity, by Paul Perigord.
Details of The Mission Inn, Riverside.
L. A. Pressed Brick Co. Competition.
D. R. Wilkinson, architect.

No. 17, Mar.-April, 1921. Subjects:
The Wilshire Country Club, Hunt & Burns, architects.
L. A. Pressed Brick Houses. J. F. Estep, architect.

No. 18, May, 1921. Subjects:
The First Plateresque in California, Myron Hunt, architect.
Plateresque Residence, Betram Goodhue, architect.
The Cloister of Flintridge Club, Myron Hunt, architect, Cheesewright Studios.
L. A. Pressed Brick Company. E. I. Freese.

No. 19, June, 1921. Subjects:
A House of Adobe, A. Dwight Gibbs, architect.

No. 20, July, 1921. Subjects:
The Old Plaza, Los Angeles.
San Juan Capistrano, by Alson Clark.
The Work of Carleton M. Winslow.
Bliss House, Santa Barbara. The Radium Institute, L. A. (To Be Continued)

Mt. LOWE

"Earth has no finer view to show"

Mt. LOWE TAVERN and Cottages
Enlarged and Improved

at the terminus of this World-Famous Trip afford a most delightful retreat for a long or short sojourn at reasonable rates

5 Trains Daily at convenient hours - from Main St. Station Los Angeles

$2.50 Round Trip Rate

For information and Reservations apply

Pacific Electric Ry

Information Bureau Phone ME 7400-TR 3661

HOTEL GREEN

A well ordered Residential and Tourist Hotel of peculiar excellence. Open all year. Moderate rates. Apartments by the month.

CHARLES B. HERVEY, Proprietor

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Italian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

KIEVITS GALLERIES
Vista del Arroyo Hotel, Pasadena
European and American Paintings

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - - Editor and Publisher
ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - - Associate Editor

NO. 82 OCTOBER, 1926 Vol. VIII

CONTENTS

	PAGE
"THE GLOUCESTER FISHING FLEET"..... Cover Design By Thomas L. Hunt.
OLD SPANISH DAYS IN SANTA BARBARA..... Ellen Leech	9
SOME IMPRESSIONS OF THE HOLLYWOOD BOWL.. Jessica K. Seneca	11
WITHIN GARDEN GATES..... Ervanna Bowen Bissell	12-13
TRAILING THE FIVE MS..... Theresa Homet Patterson	14
CALIFORNIA LAKES ALONG THE HIGHWAY..... M. Urmy Seares	15
RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS..... Louise Morgrage	16
THE INCURABLE OPTIMIST..... Vera Sadicoff-Goldman, M. D.	17
SOUTHLAND OPINION.....	18-19
SPORTS AFLOAT AND AFIELD.....	20-21
TRAVELLING IN OTHER LANDS.....	22
AN INN AT CARMEL HIGHLANDS.....	23
THE LOS ANGELES CHAPTER, A. I. A..... Harold O. Sexsmith	24
THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB BULLETIN.....	25
THE WALKER ART GALLERY IN MINNEAPOLIS.....	27
THE BULLETIN OF THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE.....	30

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.

Copyrighted, 1926, by M. Urmy Seares

Subscription price $2.50 per year, $1.25 one half year
R. B. URMY, JR., Business Manager
MAIL ADDRESS: CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
Advertisers desiring information concerning space or rates may call Fair Oaks 7034 for Publisher's Office
During Press Week, 24th to 30th, call TRinity 1501

The Los Angeles

Elizabeth Arden Salon

with

J. W. ROBINSON CO.

LOS ANGELES

UNDER the direct management of Miss Arden and her New York staff, and offering the same specialized treatments which have made Miss Arden's other salons internationally known.

Seventh Floor

Round the World Cruises
$1250.00 and up
Mediterranean Cruises
$600 and up

Agency for all tours and cruises. Here for your convenience. Let us arrange your reservations.

C. J. JONES STEAMSHIP AGENCY
372 East Colorado St., Pasadena
Phone Terrace 8026

PORTRAITS
BY
PHOTOGRAPHY

Charles S. Seabolt

26 No. Los Robles Avenue, Pasadena, California

Opposite Maryland Hotel
Terrace 6712

La Solana

A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue.
Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day.

Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St. Pasadena

Antiques
JOHN W. CONDIT

Dealer in rare old pieces selected from private homes. Specialist in the proper restoration of heirlooms.

199 S. Fair Oaks Ave., Pasadena
Telephone Terrace 0315-W

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

OLD SPANISH DAYS IN FLOWER IN SANTA BARBARA

By MIRIAM H. WANZER

EVERYBODY WANTED TO DANCE, IT WAS IN THE AIR, BUT THOSE WHO COULDN'T THOROUGHLY ENJOYED THESE WHO COULD, IN A PART OF THE CABARET GIVEN EACH EVENING PRECEEDING THE PLAY, "THE ROMANTIC YOUNG LADY," AT THE LOBERO THEATER. Green

DAME Nature sent her showiest and best beloved children to Santa Barbara during the re-living of "Old Spanish Days," and they behaved perfectly. The sun danced in golden streams, cooled by little brother breezes, and these same light winds picked up the perfume of the flowers and the shrubs on the mountain side and brought them to add to the beauty of the days. The almost full moon enriched the nights and enticed the dancers.

The world is coming, fortunately, more and more to realize that certain locations more nearly hold and give out reproductions of their past than others and it is to these places that we make pilgrimages and renew our half forgotten memories of other days. To no other community in the West has it been vouchsafed to retain traditions, memories, customs and delightful conventions of the early Spanish days in the sense that it has been given Santa Barbara, and she has received and held the trust sacredly.

Living for years in this atmosphere the citizens were hardly aware of how delightful it all was. But two years ago Santa Barbara held a fiesta, which she called Old Spanish Days, and which presented, as no other community in this country could, the utterly delightful hospitality, the joyousness of living which characterized the bygone times. Having given this pleasure once Santa Barbara realized she could not be niggardly with her gorgeous gifts but must, once a year at least, show the world a bit of her historic past. A past filled with the soft, sweet romance of Spain, the virile, rugged adventure of the pioneer, and the serene, far reaching influence of the Padres, through all of which flowed unceasingly that spirit which manifests itself in an entertainment not only of friends but of all human kind and which we rank under the all encompassing title of hospitality.

Again this year, through historical pageantry, the out-standing events in the life of Santa Barbara were presented, impressive with tradition, and authentic

THE SENORITAS IN THE ENTICING MANTILLAS, THE DONS IN VELVET, WITH GOLD AND SILVER LACE, AND THE RICHLY CAPARISONED HORSES MADE UP A PICTURE IMPOSSIBLE TO FORGET. Green

THE OLD CARRITA, WITH WOODEN WHEELS.
J. W. Collinge

as to history, covering the exploration, from the landing of Don Juan Rodriguez Cabrillo in 1542, through the colonization and settlement.

THE FLOWER, VEGETABLE AND FRUIT MARKET OF THE FERIA DE LOS PASEOS THE STREET FAIR OF THE COMMUNITY ARTS OF SANTA BARBARA, AND A MOST INTERESTING PART OF OLD SPANISH DAYS. Photograph by J. W. Collinge

This pageant in its procession down the length of Estado, gave the stranger the keynote to the Fiesta, and furnished a perfect background for three days of play.

In appearance Santa Barbara is even more Spanish than two years ago, the new buildings, lovely in their lines, the white walls gleaming in the sun, glowing with many-colored tile, while here and there a rug or an old Spanish shawl flung its daring color from a balcony, all brought the past more nearly into the present. Our hosts and hostesses appeared in the rich, vivid costumes of an earlier time and as if to prove the fiesta spirit a bandit, a gypsy and a Don might be found exchanging gossip over the same luncheon table, while nearby a group of Senoras explained the proper draping of the mantilla to an eager Senorita.

THE OPEN CARRIAGE OF SPANISH COLONIAL DAYS. J. W. Collinge

This particular fiesta has too many angles to dismiss it with a grand gesture of approval, it means so much to its own community and to all the world, or at any rate the half of it which holds a love for all history and worthwhile tradition. It must be encouraged to continue with the years and grow mellow with time but, unfortunately, we outsiders are not giving the help we should. A fiesta is not kept alive by mere spectators, don't try to just see a fiesta,—be one! Know that you had rather be than see one, and right then the flower blooms in your soul.

Santa Barbara did her part, we, as guests, failed her. We very properly spoke when spoken to but there were not the spontaneous greetings exchanged because of a bright flower in glossy black hair or the swing of a freely flying cape. There was so much of joy, the gay tinkle of guitars, voices lifted in the lovely, haunting tunes of long ago moonlit nights,—why is is that a pleasure loving country like Spain should mother music of such tender pathos? Through all this we stood or wandered complacently around and waited to be amused, watched the dancing, listened to the songs, and even applauded but always a spectator, never an integral part of the whole. Several times the visitors were asked to wear a Fiesta badge, a totally unnecessary equipment materially, as a smile, a real one, encompassing the world, is the only badge any Fiesta needs.

Santa Barbara provided it all, the red rose was in her hair, the perfume prodigal in its bounty. So another year let us go as to a costume party, each following his own taste as to the impersonation but fitting in to the scene. There is such a wide field of choice as one may be a great lady, or a peasant from one of the many provinces of Spain, a Don, a strolling musician, or even a fierce bandit.

REMINISCENT OF THE DAYS OF '49.
J. W. Collinge

Even if your stored trunks, or possible attic, does not disclose the desired silken gown, perhaps it may be found at a neighbor's, who had more discriminating forbears. But even if not available as a whole, it is easy to put together the semblance of a costume by carefully selecting the gay colors. However, if a costume seems out of the question the addition of a gay scarf, a flaunting ribbon, and always a smile will help to make the Santa Barbara fiesta one of the loveliest carnivals of the world.

It was this spirit which breathed undying glory into the revels of the old Mardi Gras at New Orleans. Let us emulate it.

The "de la Guerra bridal party" added beauty and interest to both the parade and the pageant in Santa Barbara's lovely Fiesta. A delightful innovation was the pageant given each evening in Peabody Stadium when we were shown the many phases hospitality assumed in other days in the large ranch homes, and again the many festivities which always accompanied a wedding.

Photograph by Greene

SOME IMPRESSIONS OF THE BOWL

By JESSICA KATE SENECA

EUGENE GOOSSENS, WHO CONDUCTED IN THE HOLLYWOOD BOWL, AUGUST 10-12-13-14.

ALFRED HERTZ, OF THE SAN FRANCISCO SYMPHONY, WHO CONDUCTED THE FINAL CONCERTS OF THE SEASON.

WILLEM VAN HOOGSTRATEN, GUEST CONDUCTOR, HOLLYWOOD BOWL, AUGUST 3-5-6.

BLACK mountain shapes, brooding and immense. Far below, no bigger than a fallen jewel from their dark breast, or night moth dancing to its death in the bright flames of the beauty it adores, a tiny figure, wrapped in sapphire light, a frail and quivering form, bowed down to earth in hopeless grief and anguish. The music abandons itself to lamentation. The great black shapes seem to exult dimly as music and dancer agonise together. This elemental sorrow soothes their spirit—unbeneficient, troubled by the activities of these beings who have taken from them their domain. Dumb, passive, helpless, these formidable shapes upreared against the night sky. That tiny glancing form at their feet, how full of inexplicable and splendid power!

* * *

Wagner with his deep earthliness absorbed that brooding nature and with it the human crowd. One was suddenly enfolded in all the richness and warmth of humanity, unfretted for the time by the petty discords of the crowd. Whispers and murmurings that spread ruin and disaster to the beauty-gathering ear; the rank smell of strong tobacco, hanging thickly in the windless air, somewhat obliterative of the more delicate emotions; sudden sharp peals of laughter, ugly as a satyr's, that struck across the music from straying revellers upon the heights, their unimportant forms outlined romantically against the sky; the soft sensual insolent laughing voice of a young movie girl replying to an unheard protest; the thin wail of small weary children; all that troubled and distracted, in the deep floods of that music were absorbed, condoned. The cruder elements of the populace that came for Royalty, and the dancer, Maud Allan, were apparently absent. It seemed indeed an admirable and typical gathering. How friendly, considerate, generously responsive these people, full of a real community spirit, and very loyal, one gathered, to that absent one who had loved much and given much and gone away wounded in spirit, and whose memory left a little haunting sorrow there.

On the night of the British composers, a fog softly and bafflingly enveloped the proceedings, and was referred to by someone as an appropriate real London fog. But it lacked the hue and taste that add character to the simple emanations from old Father Thames. It was more reminiscent of the mists of the English countryside, that in low-lying fields will shroud the sleeping flock, whose dimmed and rounded forms, and all the flowery, fairy-haunted green the moon touches with glimmering silver.

A scene most innocent and tender. While at the field's boundary, the fitful wandering mist will lift, where in the deep ditch, richly festooned and canopied in the full summer's green of leaves, the tramp, a terror to the timorous, lies soundly sleeping, aware that nothing worse than himself is abroad upon the roads, his bright red, round, beery face upturned to all the purity of the moon.

One regrets that it should have been a visitor from London who received that shock of disillusionment on the night when some local club's jovial and inartistic festivities were most incongruously mingled with the Bowl concert. Because from that grey, thronged, earnest city how glorious a hall of music this must seem! When he recalls these bountiful spaces and soft-breathing airs from the stuffiness of his own well-behaved Queen's Hall, (where perhaps still hang above his head those three great crimson light shades that seemed to symbolize the glowing and rich-colored hours spent therein) —one hopes that Sir Henry Wood will think forgivingly, not of the the things done, which were inexcusable:—but of the spirit, genial and generous enough, but somewhat immature and uncomprehending, that prompted and allowed them.

SIR HENRY J. WOOD, OF LONDON, ENGLAND, GUEST CONDUCTOR, HOLLYWOOD BOWL, JULY 20-31.

Willem van Hoogstraten must have found the Bowl delightful after his New York Stadium, of whose physical aspect and surroundings one retains few pleasing impressions.

Van Hoogstraten distressed one with fatigued, pathetic eyes. Eugene Goossens had a most vital and buoyant glance. Alfred Hertz looked like the good German to whom we could trust absolutely the fate of the music. His very limp and cane somehow made one like him better.

How lovely were the evening-long chantings of the frogs! Nothing daunted those confident musicians. With no rehearsings, or conductor's baton, they found their place in every composition. Sweetest, perhaps, with Mischa's violin, and the "Siegfried Idyll."

Over the brow of the hill the moon! "The Bowl Moon!" up-gazing eyes seem to say possessively. The low horizon lands may have looked upon a passionate and flaming moonrise, but to this upper world she comes clear and calm, in a white langour. Unconcerned, remote, her gaze on half a world, with motion inperceptible and exquisite, she passes mutely. The stars too are somewhat evasive and indifferent. We somehow forget to regard them in these "Symphonies under the Stars." Our gaze is fixed intently upon the lighted orange shell, harmonious in its cave-like form, but with brilliant decorations that seem irrelevant in a place dedicated to nature, night, the spirit of sweet sound. We stare helplessly at an assemblage of gliding arms and curving wrists and puffing cheeks and ugly black and white

(Please Turn to Page 26)

MAUD ALLAN, INTERPRETATIVE DANCER, WHO BROUGHT ADDITIONAL BEAUTY TO THE SYMPHONY

WITHIN GARDEN GATES

ERVANNA BOWEN BISSELL, EDITOR, GARDEN PAGES

THE uplands and valleys have been ablaze with yellow. Now, under an autumn sun, the tarweed's gold is tarnished. The foothills and fields are robed in russet. The green of wayside grasses has bleached to tan and the leaves of the live oak are powdered with dust. Color has faded from the landscape. Is it strange that Garden Tours are sought more eagerly than ever? People long to go behind those hedges where man, rising early, has watered his thirsty land.

To find flowers in bloom, to walk on green grass, to see water shining in pools or trickling from a fountain is doubly prized at this season of the year. Many visitors join the tours because they crave color and are weary of a brown world. But others go knowing that this is the time to study gardens, to note their design and salient features, for the framework of the garden is no longer concealed by luxuriant growth. It is the month to take inventory and to plan the coming year's work.

It may be that sometimes a garden owner overhears adverse comments of her color scheme, the variety of plants or the composition as a whole. One cannot grow even a garden on praise only. Criticism is necessary and ought to be fruitful. It either shows us our mistakes, or, after due consideration, confirms us in our present practice and justifies our future action.

Different viewpoints are helpful. Strangers are always quick to see the relation between the houses and their gardens. Some obviously belong together, while others show strained relations, and a few seem scarcely on speaking terms. The ideal garden should be an extension of the house, an expression of the people who live in it. Alas, there is often an incongruity which is painful. A bungalow surrounded by rare exotics stamps the owner as a plant collector but lacking in discrimination. This lack of suitability was one point emphasized by some of the visitors at the annual meeting of the Garden Club of America last spring.

THE PATIO OF MONTE ARROYO. WHERE TALL PALMS GROW BESIDE THE LILY POOL AND PURPLE HELIOTROPE CLIMBS TO THE UPPER BALCONY, FILLING THE AIR WITH PERFUME. Photographs by J. Walter Collinge, Santa Barbara

It is curious that women who are quick to feel the inappropriateness of costume to occasion will permit planting and decoration quite out of keeping with the house and garden itself.

Most of us, as yet, are undisciplined gardeners among abundant and bewildering plant material. Like children we want all that our arms, or our gardens, can hold. If we can learn better ways, why should comparison of gardens be odious? The making of the perfect garden is largely a question of vision. So few of us have it. Sometimes by seeing the mistakes of others we are taught our own. We might adopt a motto for the lathhouse and nail it above the door: "Come, grow wise along with the seedlings." Then we might give, and get, from the Garden Tours and the comments of the visitors.

Monte Arroyo, the Montecito home of Mr. and Mrs. George E. Coleman is set on the edge of a wooded ravine, and faces the Coast Range mountains. The house is of the Spanish Colonial type and its entrance gates bespeak cordial welcome. The visitor passes through an arched cloister open on both sides, one to the driveway, the other to the patio, vine draped and surrounded by exotic shrubs. There is a foreign touch in the door's wrought iron grill made by that Venetian artist, Bellotto, and in the wall-fountain pouring its thin stream beneath a wreath of Della Robbia fruits and flowers.

THE VINE-DRAPED ENTRANCE TO THE SPANISH COLONIAL HOUSE OF MR. AND MRS. GEORGE E. COLEMAN MONTECITO, CALIFORNIA. MONTE ARROYO FACES THE COAST RANGE MOUNTAINS AND OVERLOOKS A WOODED RAVINE.

Dracenas and cocos plumosa palms grow beside the oblong pool set in the pavement. A tall Fatsia Japonica spreads its broad leaves over the rim where white lilies float on the water's surface. Purple heliotrope climbs to the second story windows and ampelopsis veitchii clings to arches and walls. Potted plants are grouped about the patio or stand singly to emphasize graceful form or vivid color. There is art in the use of potted plants. Sometimes their stiff rows seem like a horticultural show where one instinctively looks for labels. Once, potted plants suggested the atmosphere of the greenhouse. In our former garden existence we never used them. But life in southern California is a transmigration. Old things are not forgotten but seemingly all things are new in gardening experience. A cold-climate gardener might think the chance to garden twelve months in the year was a paradise, yet find that it often proved to be a purgatory. At least it would be a place of horticultural torment if there were no potted shrubs and flowers to use. Even here we cannot make two plants grow in the same hole at the same time. Neither can we wait after one plant fades while another one grows in its place. A garden tour may be coming our way or visitors arriving from the east the next day. California's reputation is at stake so we have established the divine right of succession in our flower kingdom. The flower is dead. Long Live the Flower! In garden, or in patio, the next in line—on the lathhouse shelf—comes forth to inherit the earth. We hope that someone will invent a square flower pot, then, without loss of space, the ugly red clay can be hidden in long cement boxes, or ornamental jars, and massed planting of artistic form and color can be achieved with little trouble IF one plans ahead. Think of hybrid freesias and blue nemesias, or blue Chinese delphiniums and primroses yellow and lavender, growing in movable beds, instead of standing around in brick red petticoats. There was a garden-room, once, where such boxes were kept filled with blossoming bulbs—blue hyacinths and yellow daffodils — untouched by the snow outside upon the window sills. A succession of spring bloom reigned during winter's lifetime.

BEYOND THE FOUNTAIN'S RIM THE SENTINEL CYPRESSES STAND WATCH LEST THE MOUNTAINS CAST THEIR SHADOWS ON THE GARDEN. THE HOUSE FINCH NESTS IN THE GREEN WALL SURROUNDING THIS FORECOURT AND FILLS THE AIR WITH SONG.

The patio of Monte Arroyo is a changing garden. One finds color there; color in the flower borders and beside the pools. But it is the use of green for background that most impresses the visitor. A stately blue gum, one of the earliest and largest Eucalypts in Montecito, shades the lawn. Across the forecourt and beyond its circular pool, sentinel cypresses stand watch, seemingly on guard lest the mountains throw their shadows on the water.

But it is when you stand on the house terrace looking down into the arroyo that you feel the charm of varying shades of green. There is the bronze-green of the spreading live oaks, gnarled of limb yet curved like groined arches. The straight trunks of the sycamores with their mottled gray-green bark rise like pillars while their pale green leaves make patterns against the blue sky. And underneath them are colonies of Australian tree-ferns waving their long, yellow-green fronds in the breeze. From somewhere hidden in the ravine's depth, comes the sound of running water.

Every garden should have its special feature, something which makes it indubitably one's own. At Monte Arroyo this spacious outer-room, roofed by boughs and carpeted by dappled sunshine upon fallen leaves, is never forgotten by the visitor who sees it en tour, or sits at tea there, refreshed by more than food.

ANCIENT OAKS AND GIANT SYCAMORES SHADE THIS OPEN-AIR ROOM DECORATED BY TALL AUSTRALIAN TREE-FERNS. Photo by Collinge, Santa Barbara

TRAILING THE FIVE M'S

By THERESA HOMET PATTERSON

ANY traveller who has come upon a cool spring bubbling up by the way-side on a hot day, knows how refreshing Minnesota is after sage and desert in August. The meadows were green, the buckwheat fields in full bloom and as white as snow with honey fragrance, but the bees were not busier there than in the acres of red clover. The corn ribbons rustled and glistened in the sun. Some wheat was in the shock, the golden stubble was greening or turning black under the plow and sending out such a good earthy smell. Crabapple trees loaded with the glossiest and reddest apples lent color to every homestead. The wild thorn tried to do as much for the roadsides.

Minnesota is the land of ten thousand lakes and of streams of all sizes from the brooks where willows meet over-head, to the big river which swallows them all. I trailed the Mississippi from the Twin Cities where it flows under twenty-four bridges for one hundred and fifty miles to the south. It divides around islands with luxuriant vegetation, curtains its banks with wild cucumber, and gilds its marshy margins with sun flowers and golden-rod. Joe-pye weed, blue vervain and purple tree-like thistles add masses of color. Groups of cattle make many a picture of peace and contentment by stream and hillside. The butter used in the White House comes from Minnesota's green pastures.

Mr. Hoover in a recent speech was enthusiastic over the possibilities of the river as an outlet for the grain, and a solution of the shipping problem. Wing dams are thrown out from shore to help keep the channel open and buoys placed to mark it. Lights shining from shore give direction and there are big iron rings where boats can tie up. Henry Ford is building a fleet of boats to come up to his plant at Minneapolis, but the river does not put on much of a commercial aspect above La Crosse, where there is a ship canal and draw-bridge. There is an island there, given the city on condition that it be kept a natural park. There isn't room on the telephone wires for the self-appointed swallows which patrol it over, through and around! The cardinal flower moved in with some chance for its life. Father, mother and little turtles were sunning on a bog, which reminded one of our party of hearing a Loon cry on a Minnesota lake. A snapping turtle had caught its foot. The bird was able to rise a short distance but the weight of the turtle dragged it under. There was a dinner party for the turtles that night with no regard for the hunting season.

The city gets its name, not from the game of La-Crosse played by the Indians, but from the cross erected on the spot by the French missionaries. The bluffs rise to a height of 1,172 feet at Grandad Mountain. One branch of the Mormons settled just back of this point in Coolie Valley, and close by is Bostwick Valley, remembered as a settlement of Free Thinkers. We looked down upon a rainbow of colors in a florist's field, and a circus train crawling through the golf links like some gay serpent where a real one had recently struck a death blow. The city was almost hidden by its beautiful trees. The great rubber plant stood out where they make 35,000 pairs of tennis shoes a day.

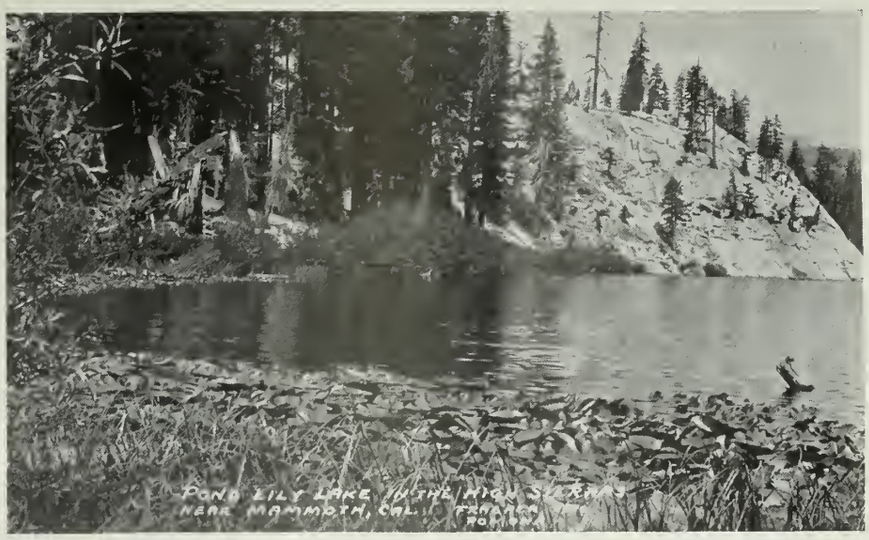
Crossing back to Rochester, patients seemed about as numerous as tennis shoes had been. Through the clinic where the multitudes waited we went, prayerfully thankful not to be of that anxious throng. An average of half a thousand register every day, and the building is to be doubled in size. There is a fine painting of the two brothers whose names are known around the world. It was my good fortune to see Dr. Will Mayo, who is tall, erect and commanding. It might be said of the Kahler Hotel, as it is of Pasadena, that one only has to wait there to see, eventually, all of his friends.

The La Crosse friends had been entertained by a pair of robins building on their window-sill. They both worked on the nest, but in the morning only, beginning early. The manner of building, selecting and discarding, the conversation and feeding of the young, had been fascinating, and it brought regret when all four babies were rowed up on the nest edge for the breaking of home ties.

I am waiting to see if Minnesota can be as beautiful in colors as it is in summer green. September 1st the wind was rustling the leaves along the curb and autumn had laid her hand upon an elm tree. There was no mistaking the season with that touch of gold. A thunder-storm in the night had marked the dividing line. September sixteenth the hunting season opened. Wood-duck is protected and the season is closed by the Governor for wild partridge. Thousands of the latter are killed by autos which might be an added reason for opposing road building through the Superior Forest. In California, roads are thought necessary to save the forests from fire; here they are opposed on the same ground. Fire hazard is increased by the influx of motorists. Minnesota will be a national benefactor if she can preserve this natural wilderness, where travel by canoe can never be replaced by motor on land or water and where some fur and feathers may have

AS THE AUTHOR DID NOT SEND ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE LAKES AND RIVERS HERE DESCRIBED BUT ONLY A PICTURE OF THE NEW ART GALLERY (SEE PAGE 26) THE EDITOR OF CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND HAS USED PICTURES OF LAKES NEARER AT HAND.

A PACKAGE OF POSTALS FROM PHOTOGRAPHS BY FRASHER OF POMONA GIVE THESE GLIMPSES OF CALIFORNIA'S HIGH SIERRAS, THEIR LAKES AND GUSHING STREAMS.



Photographs by—
Frasher-Pomona

CALIFORNIA HOLDS HER LOVELIEST LAKES IN THE HEART OF HER MIGHTIEST MOUNTAINS. THAT SHE TALKS LITTLE ABOUT THEM ONLY PROVES HOW MUCH SHE CHERISHES THEIR PEACE AND SOLITUDE.

protection. One of the slogans reads: "Out-Door Minnesota is our Greatest Heritage. Let us pass it on Unspoiled." The day before the season opened, I saw a Mallard sleeping near shore alone. I roused him only to have him yawn and stretch, swim three strokes and tuck his bill under his wing again. He kept opening his eye but the lid would roll up, his weariness exceeding his fear. Had he flown a great distance to reach the safety of these city lakes, or had he been wounded and unable to keep with his kind?

It is hard to disassociate Minneapolis from our daily bread, but it has a greater claim to fame in its beauty. There are ten lakes in the city limits and one can hardly go to a neighbor's house without driving through a park. Swans sail in the business section; the finest homes encircle a lake and her Falls of Minnehaha live in the poet's song. Paths by the water encourage walking and horse-back riding. Lake-of-the-Isles is particularly beautiful with its wooded islands and irregular outline. Kildeer calls, the King-fisher shuttles across, a gull sails over. The Mountain Ash is red hot with berries and one cold morning a whole company of robins were perched in a tree as if to warm their feet. They were making inward application as well. There are wild plums so rosy and sweet by the path. I found shaggy-mane and inky mushrooms, an old turtle, heard the farewell song of the warbling Vireo, met gentlemen exercisingtheir dogs, mothers with rosy children and boys skipping stones. Canoes lend their gay reflections to the water. See page 26.

AT AN ELEVATION OF ABOUT 8000 FEET THE LAKES AROUND MAMMOTH MOUNTAIN ARE ACCESSIBILE TO CAMPERS IN THE CITY OF LOS ANGELES RECREATION CAMP, INYO NATIONAL FOREST.

UP THE MIDLAND TRAIL IN QUEST OF WATER

By M. U. S.

WATER, especially in the form of lakes and rivers, has many uses other than for irrigation or domestic purposes. Secretly and silently the lovers of the wild—where game is plentiful, where trout jump in the streams, where quiet reigns and all the noises of the populated places are forgot—secretly and often alone, the knowing ones have slipped away and become lost to the world in the silences of the Sierras, the deep canyons and rocky mesas of our desert heritage.

Going up the old pioneer trail by which the founders of the present state of California entered for colonization of the southeastern part of California, the pioneers of modern Los Angeles found the water for irrigation and for a great city centered in the valleys fertilized. But now, with the years multiplying population until the landscape is obliterated in the South, those who came for health and out-door life, as well as native Californians whose heritage it is, must travel on.

Where shall they go if not to that great land east of the High Sierras reaching back into Nevada, Arizona and New Meixco.

All California is intensely interested in the highways which have opened up new country and made accessible the desert and mountain fastnesses. Thrilling, indeed, to one who has always looked at the Sierra Nevadas from the wide valley of the San Joaquin, is the sensation of entering the Yosemite, the high Sierra meadows, the emerald sources of this same Joaquin River from behind the high Sierras themselves.

THE PICTURESQUE TOWN OF BISHOP, INYO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA.

Seeking for water, for recreation, for respite from continual grind of building a great metropolis the men who were threatened with breakdown of health if they did not stop continuous work, have followed the call of the wild up the Midland Trail. Disappearing into the majestic landscape they have left no trace of their whereabouts. But as the casual tourist slips up a luring canyon road at the touring map's hint of a group of mountain lakes, or an interesting substation on Rush Creek, he catches glimpses here and there of a lone fisherman in a boat or near a deep, dark pool of the stream. Seldom is the silence broken by a greeting. Sometimes, in answer to a sympathetic look, the string is lifted and the speckled beauties shown. A glance of mutual pleasure, and the silence of Sierra quiet is unbroken as the autoist glides by, too grateful for his own release from civilization to intrude.

A line drawn from Lake Tahoe south continuing the state's boundary on a meridian would divide our territory into what might properly be called Western and Eastern California. Lake Tahoe and the Yosemite National Park belong to both.

Before the far-sighted hotel men of Touristland saw the great possibilities that lie in lakes and high Sierra roads, the people of the farwest about the Bay had slipped for fifty years away in summer to Lake Tahoe and to Truckee snows for recreation as a regular family affair. Now North meet the mounting South at Tahoe Tavern for the Christmas sports and railroad companies have made of snowsheds a tourist's drawing card.

Motoring down from summer Tahoe, which in winter must be reached by train, one enters many a beauty spot by choosing to leave the state highway for dirt roads.

Over the Tioga Pass he goes from Mono Lodge and enters the Yosemite National Park, but not the Valley. At the entrance is this inscription on a bronze tablet fastened to a granite boulder: "This tablet commemorates the successful labors of Stephen T. Mather, Director of the National Park Service, in securing for the people the Tioga Pass Road. Dedicated to the enduring memory of a faithful Public Servant by the members of The Brooklyn Daily Eagle, National Park Development Tour, July 20, 1924"

Glad are all who understand, for this recognition given to Stephen T. Mather, and Tuolumne Meadows seem a little more precious; the Yosemite, ours in trust for all time and all people, as we think on what the brains of the National Park Service have done.

"Do not pick the wild flowers. Others would like to see them," reads one of the signs on the Ranger Station hereabouts. That we need such signs in our own Sierras piques us. Yet Uncle Sam knows his own children, be they Easterners or Westerners, and we leave the training of those raised in rainy summers to the wardens of our dry summer forests in the great National Parks. May their limits never grow less but greater until our California is protected every mile from the careless who throw out the burning match upon our wayside grasses and deprive the herds of sheep and cattle of their yearly food upon a thousand hills.

Hidden lakes on terraces above each other; rushing streams harnessed to substations yet bounding on down the pine tree canyons to give the fisherman and campers water for their varying needs! We must leave their many charms for future holidays and take the road that follows the aqueduct home. Before we find the source of Owens River on the east of the state highway, Mammoth Lodge lures to the west again. Here auto-club signs begin to guide us more familiarly and as we flash by we read: "Los Angeles"—. "City limits?" says the driver anxiously. "No, 'Los Angeles High Sierra'"—and the rest is lost as we fly by.

Minnesota may have her ten thousand lakes, Los Angeles has become possessed of her own high Sierra! Near by is Mt. Whitney, the highest mountain on the continent, and east, Death Valley, the lowest valley in the world!

Tell the Minnetonka tourists we have opened up new roads, new landscapes, new world wonders for their delectation. Like the old war song of the sixties they are singing: "We are coming, California, three hundred thousand strong." Good roads "are our chief business now; and travelling populations of the country may be sure of welcome if they promise to obey the signs and 'Help prevent fires'."

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

HISTORY OF FRANCE

By JACQUES BAINVILLE, D. Appleton & Co.

THE modern writer of history must do his own thinking, nor can he be influenced by the viewpoints of those preceding him, otherwise he will not reach the eye of a public, which knows the facts already. In France, recently, a considerable portion of the public eye, has gazed upon a history of that country, written in one volume, by Jacques Bainville, which went through 125 editions. It is now available in a translation for English speaking people, who will find it not so much a chronological account of events in France during the course of twenty centuries, as a philosophical and analytical discussion of the national characteristics of that country, the policies of its leaders, and its relationship to other European nations, engaged in a similar development during the same period.

A writer able to deal thus with historical subjects, could find no better material to work with, than the French. Certain peculiar national traits have made France a nation of striking individuality. The French have never done anything by halves, but have conducted their affairs with a magnificent aplomb, which somehow resulted in making their mistakes always a gorgeous spectacle, extremely interesting to outsiders doubtless, no better at heart, but more prudent in foreseeing consequences. It is due to these eccentric qualities, that the nation has occupied at regularly occurring intervals, peaks of prosperity, and depths of disorganization, depending on the ascendancy of wise rulers—a king, we feel is Bainville's choice—or selfish interests—meaning democracy.

To a certain extent the reader must depend on his own perceptions in determining the author's creed, for Bainville is in no way unduly assertive, nor actively aggressive. However, he presents with a very favorable aspect, the policies of certain kings and statesmen, hitherto regarded with much disfavor by the layman, owing doubtless to the opinions of writers chosen as authoritative. Bainville writes like a man devoted heart and soul to the monarchic principle, so that we feel confident that in stating the aims of Louis XVI, he is giving out his own theory of good government. "The public welfare, compassed through a monarchy acting as a paternal authority and respecting the old rights, liberties, franchises, and guarantees, the three orders and the great political bodies; in short a return to the old constitution of the monarchy, as it had been conceived—that was the idea of Louis XVI."

This remarkable book is solely a political history of a nation, and yet manages to be an absorbing narrative, told in the liveliest fashion. It demands some knowledge on the part of a reader, however, and many such will claim that its trend gives a false impression. Be that as it may, it does make clearer the European viewpoint, on world affairs, which should be a matter of moment to us, just at this critical stage of relations between Europe and America.

THE GREAT GOD BROWN

By EUGENE O'NEILL, Boni & Liveright

Enthusiastic admirers of the work of Eugene O'Neill need no introduction to it, for they look upon each successive play, emerging from his busy brain, as a literary event, and read it at once with pleasure and approbation. Most of them doubtless agree with the majority of dramatic critics, that he is our greatest living American playwright. Yet there are probably many very intelligent people who would appreciate and enjoy this feast of artistic achievement, did they but realize the scope of O'Neill's ability, and such might do themselves a favor by taking a glance at "The Great God Brown," his last and most significant drama. Still others, sure to benefit by a consideration of the text are those acquainted with it, only through its production on the stage, where however admirably presented, it is more than likely to leave behind an aftermath of bewildered minds.

Reading the play not only clears up this hazy condition of mind, but also sharply emphasizes the reasons for the author's reputation as a man with something to say and a distinctive manner of saying it. The trappings commonly used by dramatists to achieve glamour and poetic atmosphere are in no way essential to his genius, for he gains these effects with the most commonplace materials, such as the vernacular of the man in the street, and characters patterned after the average type of human beings. Yet such as these with their parts in the doings of prosaic and contemporary life are the elements of a powerful dramatization of the human soul.

Photo by Nickolas Muray. Courtesy of Boni & Liveright
EUGENE O'NEILL, AUTHOR OF "THE GREAT GOD BROWN," AND OTHER PLAYS

This comes about concretely by the aid of masks, worn occasionally by the characters, and abstractly by a subtlety of treatment of such a nature, as to flick constantly on the raw, our consciousness of the complex and baffling questions continually tormenting mortals who seek to penetrate the dark recesses of an unseen world.

The dual nature of man, even multiple nature, in the case of those, born like Dion Anthony, with ghosts in their eyes, is the theme of the play, and is of course perfectly well known to everyone who thinks. However ONeill's bold and distinctive treatment of this conception brings home with throbbing intensity, not only a sense of the heartbreaking tragedies human moods and temperament may cause, but still more forcibly the fact that such tragedies are permeated with an element of beauty, a will-o-the-wisp like a dancing flame, elusive, inviting and so utterly desirable, as to make almost any experiment endurable which can aid in its capture for even a few fleeting moments.

Certain superb passages in this play, rich in poetic flavor, show quite plainly that O'Neill is one of those artists whom the fairy godmother of mankind is using to benefit humanity. The visions which true artists have and transfer to paper, canvas, and musical scores or any material objects, are her messages intended to persuade men to spend some part of their earthly existence, as it were, perched aloft upon an imaginary cloud, viewing the universe magnificently, instead of grubbing everlastingly in the soil of earth, and seeing nothing. Artists actually accomplish this transformation in the human outlook, but how, they most certainly do not know themselves, nor should they try to tell. In the past they never thought of doing so, but this is a somewhat coldly calculating intellectual age, and poets sometimes lose their bearings. May O'Neill however, be warned in time, and cease attempting to interpret his visions for others beside himself.

THE GOLDEN DANCER

By CYRIL HUME

CHILD OF THE NORTH

By RIDGWELL CULLUM

THE RED LEDGER

By FRANK L. PACKARD

George H. Doran Company

Mr. Hume is a young writer, with few books so far accomplished, but already he has achieved a style and substance, highly approved by literary critics, with whom anyone will enthusiastically agree, who reads his latest volume "The Golden Dancer". This is a delightful fantasy, a blend of worldly wisdom, delicious nonsense, and lyrical interludes that are their own excuse for being. There is a story running through it, of a factory lad, who having read of a nut brown maiden called "Daphenny", chucked his job, and started out to find her. Wherein he showed uncommon sense, for what person in his right mind would attend to chattering machinery, when he could be watching nymphs and dryads, dancing in sun-dappled glades. Of course he found her, but alas, nut brown maidens must have food, so he had a practical adventure, of a kind most satisfactory to all whose aim in life is successful enterprise.

Now capable but unimaginative people are very likely to detest their fellows, who happen to have simple minds and poetic souls, and yet succeed; so trouble came from these, with an extra blow or two dealt by stupid fate. It often happens that these two agents of disaster will combine in a case like this. However, an incorrigible romanticist was on the spot, who knew what the world owes a embryonic poet, so rehabilitation followed, and we pass quite logically from factories and soda fountains to wooded glens, and gently crooning brooklets, where mortals may bathe by moonlight in water the color of aqua-marines, while wise old owls overhead meditate on human foolishness.

Mr. Hume does this sort of writing with exquisite gracefulness. His style is cool and limpid, and rippling like his woodland brooks. If the thought of nymphs and dryads and pagan wood deities frisking about in forested aisles, is a pleasant one, then reading "The Golden Dancer", will set the pulses leaping, for in these pages, they appear incarnate. Sensible and very literal people should avoid it; all others should not miss it.

"The Child of the North," on the other hand, is writing of a different sort. It can hardly be called literature, for it is the ordinary type of fiction, but it happens to be a good example of well ordered plot and arrangement from a technical point of view. It is, as it were, a machine made story, moving smoothly, with no interruptions from start to finish. It treats the far north in Canada, and the crimes men will commit for gold and what happens to them, when they do so. There are at least two surprises absolutely unforeseen by the reader, but otherwise the outcome of events is forecast continually in his mind. And yet, as narratives go, it is a good one.

A grade or two lower, from a literary standpoint, is this series of detective episodes, called "The Red Ledger.' Again we find a somewhat novel plan and arrangement, with an average style of development. There is considerable amateur detective work in these pages, which is directed toward finding persons for purposes of reward, as well as seeking out others who are guilty of a crime. It will serve as pastime for those who must have their detective tales.

BELLARION

By RAFAEL SABATINI. Houghton Mifflin Co.

MAJOR DANE'S GARDEN

By M. F. PERHAM. Houghton Mifflin Co.

As a rule Mr. Sabatini lands his heroes safely on the last pages of his historical romances, by means of an exercise of surpassing ingenuity in inventing situations, perilous to life and honor. In the case of "Bellarion," his latest work this adroit ingenuity is displayed in a series of Machiavellian tactics, that is remarkably entertaining. Sabatini invariably writes best when he places his scenes in his native land, and in "Bellarion," he is particularly worth while, having selected Italy's most picturesque period for a background.

"Major Dane's Garden," is a tale of the present in British Somaliland. While it belongs to the average type of fiction, it has some distinctive features such as a delightful presentation of the atmosphere of the country and the introduction into the story of piquant questions relating to colonial policy. It deals with army life and the intrigue which goes on in the "far flung" possessions of the British.

THE INCURABLE OPTIMIST

By VERA SADICOFF-GOLDMAN, M. D.

IT was a Sunday morning. Armed with hoe, spade and trowel, Dr. Norman White was busied in his garden. Beside him on a eucalyptus stump, which served her as a garden seat, sat Ellen, his wife. Huge shafts of sunlight bathed the garden and its occupants. The air was balmy, an elusive haze gently swathed the earth and was wafted upward to the serene skies. Dr. Norman straightened in estatic contemplation of the day. He was as one with all the beauties about him, so tall was he, so fine, so upright in body and in spirit. Like a young god he stood there, with head magnificently poised on broad shoulders, a mouth tenderly smiling and eyes reminiscent of a Christ. In his gaze was more than a love of form and color, more than mere delight in beauty. Something was there of dedication, of service to mankind, something infinitely kindly and very human. He deeply enjoyed this moment of peace and contentment. In the busy life of a physician, such moments were few and to be treasured.

He had created this garden by his own labor; slowly and laboriously he had removed rocks and boulders from a barren and neglected hillside. He had brought loam there from a nearby grove, and then lovingly and carefully had planted it. And now this hillside had become to him the most cherished spot on earth. His wife was the only being to whom he had confided the secret of his garden. His friends, accustomed to well-kept lawns, lovely terraces, shrubs and plants carefully set out under the eye of landscape experts, thought his garden lacked artistry, architectural nicety, beauty. But to Norman and to Ellen it was a God-given spot, their Eden, set aside for the purposes of their love. Norman had always found it impossible to explain his garden. Sensitive in the extreme, he was given to peculiar reticences. It was as if he guarded his heart from those injuries so frequently inflicted by the careless, roughened hands of life. "A curious, a most curious fellow," thought his collegues and acquaintances. "Quiet Norman" he was called by his friends, while his relatives labeled certain aspects of thought, and circumstance, which he persistently refused to discuss with them, "Norman's silences."

Suddenly the gate clicked, and like the proverbial serpent obtruding herself into their Paradise, came Elise. She was distantly related to Norman. Elise was of a fashionable slenderness; strenuous dieting had eliminated any excess weight and made her a bundle of jumpy nerves. She dropped down beside Ellen and burst into an account of symptoms from which she was, at the moment, suffering. Since Norman was a physician, she felt privileged at any moment to direct his mind from any work upon which he might be engaged, toward herself.

"Just a moment, Elise," he said, "I will go into the house and bring you a little medicine which will relieve you.

"No, thanks," she answered, "I don't believe in drugs. I prefer to let time and nature help me." Something indignant flamed in Dr. Norman. Like a knight of old, he rushed to the defense of his profession, a profession which had victoriously withstood the onslaught of enemies for centuries, a profession which numbered heroes in its ranks, the profession to which he had dedicated his life.

"You do not believe in drugs, you want nature to help you," he repeated slowly. "Where, I ask you, do you think drugs come from, outside nature? Why, an old woman brewing herbs to help a sick neighbor five hundred years ago, would not have said anything so unintelligent. Look at my garden here. You have always had some curiosity concerning it. It is a medicinal garden; each plant and shrub can be used by man, if used wisely and in moderation. Look at those poppies flowering in the corner. They are beautiful; they are quite 'natural'. And what can be more normal than that man should use this glorious plant when in need. We occasionally misuse the gifts with which the earth is strewn, but that does not make them any the less precious."

The poppy from which opium is derived, is indigenous in Western Asia, and cultivated in Egypt, Persia, Asia Minor and the Plains of India. It has cost me some effort to get it to grow here. The medicinal poppy is called Papaver Somniferum. By incising the unripe capsules of this poppy we obtain a concrete milky exudation, which, when dried, is called opium. This opium contains many active ingredients, called alkaloids, the most important of which is morphine. It is one of nature's most useful gifts to man and has given him relief from pain, quiet for tortured nerves, even the greatest blessing of all—sleep. There is no question of belief or unbelief where this drug is concerned. Given ten million persons, all of whom have taken morphine, and they will all react in practically the same way, although it will be necessary to give varying doses, as some people are more susceptible than others."

(Continued on Page 28)

MATILIJA POPPIES, ONE OF THE MOST ATTRACTIVE WILD FLOWERS OF THE SOUTHERN PART OF CALIFORNIA, NOW ALMOST EXTINCT ALONG OUR BOULEVARDS. STRANGERS TO OUR EFFORTS TO PRESERVE IT IN VENTURA COUNTY ARE REQUESTED NOT TO PICK IT UNTIL 1929.

SOUTHLAND

Part of An Inaugural Address

THE thing I see as our next development is not easily expressed in a word. One of our Presidents has referred to it as the "Soul of Los Angeles," which I take to mean actuating spirit of this community, its intellectual and spiritual essence as distinguished from the material,—our attitude toward life, as a city,—and right there lies our ultimate success or failure—our destiny.

If anyone would remind me that this is a Chamber of Commerce, I would say yes, it is, but since business has taken the lead of all agencies as an influence on human destiny, it must meet the challenge of that leadership and say where it is taking us. It must see itself not as an end, but as a means and it will maintain its leadership only as it has the right answer to that challenge.

We are asking now for a new census. We have been thinking mostly of a bigger and ever bigger city, but size no longer gives distinction in America. Cities are now taking stock of themselves and developing new ideas of values. From quantity we are turning to quality. Los Angeles has leaped in a quarter century to a position unique in the history of cities. But the things we are distinguished for, all over the world, are after all, our climate, our prosperity and our astounding growth, and these we may as well say are accomplished and behind us. Now, are we going to utilize them to make life itself finer, more effective, better worthwhile, ministering to the personal welfare and happiness of each citizen. That is the thought that even as a Chamber of Commerce I would have you consider. We have built here a splendid house and invited the world to come and live in it. How are we furnishing it?

Recently an Eastern friend said to me, "Los Angeles is a wonderful city, a constant marvel to me. I love to visit there and some day I'm coming to stay, but not quite yet. You see our young folks are not yet grown and we must stay a little longer where they can have the best things." Of course I came back at once with an inventory of our "best things" and our many steps toward culture, nevertheless the indictment sank deep in my heart.

Life here should find its most beautiful expressions, even as nature does. Is our city really beautiful as a whole? Did you know that here in this blessed out-of-door land we are about at the bottom of the list of cities in the matter of open spaces for the people? Take away our one great Park and what have we left?

Does Art find here its most congenial atmosphere? Certainly it should. Do we recognize the influence of a fine picture upon the life within the home? Great artists are in our midst. How much in our community do we encourage them? Sculptors of international fame are quietly working here, almost unknown to us. Let us show our pride in their genius and somehow say to the world "Made in Los Angeles."

Does Music, which once was the very language of this Southern air, still express the life of the people? True, we are winning some recognition as a musical community, but it is due to the tireless devotion of just a handful of people.

Here where a refined and distinctive environment suggests distinctive homes and has attracted to us many brilliant architects, are we thoroughly in love with simple, sincere and lofty architecture for our modest homes, built upon harmony with that environment? In an Eastern city I was recently one of a throng that for half a day passed before the beautiful wrought iron gates and doors of a great business firm which had spent over a hundred thousand dollars to have them made by a French iron worker.

These things have a distinct economic value. We know that France leads the world in dress goods, yet both Germany and England make these cottons cheaply and in vast quantities. But France took and holds her leadership because she fostered the art of design and made them beautiful.

Again, think of the richly glowing history which lies back of this beloved Southland, with its romance and color and warm humanity. All of this we should guard as a precious heritage from the past and an asset of high value. This soil is sown with memories for many of us in which this great new population cannot share except as we preserve for them its landmarks and monuments.

Following our early, generous days came the driving force of a harder materialism which has made us a mighty city. But now the longing for real culture is springing here, for finer homes, and music and pictures and churches and colleges and little theatres, for Eisteddfods and Botanic Gardens and Mission Plays and Hollywood Bowls, and beaches for the people, for art galleries and parks and playgrounds and alluring streets.

The greatest Auto Club in the world has signposted the western half of the land in order that the ceaseless stream of travellers may unfailingly find us. We promise them climate and jobs and fruitful soil and wholesome conditions for the labors of life. Now let us give them also a genial city, a city with a happy face, and all those things into which, if life is to be good, its labors must flower.

ARTHUR BENT,
President, Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce.

Our Unknown Southwest

A CITY set upon a hill cannot be hid." Perhaps the builders of the Southwest Museum had this in mind when they placed it in its commanding position upon the hilltop far above the restless tide of traffic, a landmark visible for miles around. To many of the thousands of motorists rushing daily along the black ribbon of Pasadena Avenue, which winds below Museum Hill, or to the crowds of picnickers in Sycamore Grove, directly opposite, the building above them is known only by name. They think of it as a place where the curious spend idle hours looking at collections of shells, butterflies, unfamiliar objects from other lands and times, crude specimens of man's early attempts at art, or of his primitive housekeeping, agriculture, and warfare. That the Museum has an important place in the Southwest as an educational institution, that the work done there and under its direction is of vital interest in the unravelling of the mysteries surrounding man's early history, has perhaps not occurred to them. Can the Southwest Museum show good cause for its existence and prove that it is not duplicating the work of other, older institutions?

The Southwest Museum was founded primarily for the study of anthropology, for research work in this important subject in the Southwest part of North America, and for making available to students in the schools and colleges, as well as to more advanced workers, the results obtained by expeditions sent out for this purpose. Field work is most essential in the Museum's program. Through the findings of these expeditions light is thrown on man's development through the long ages, as his whole life-story may be revealed in the traces left behind in his early habitations. A broken bit of pottery may be the key to the origin and antiquity of a prehistoric culture.

The Southwest is a virgin field, awaiting development; one of the richest in the world, going back to a stage in man's history quite as primitive as can be traced anywhere else in the world. It is the definite purpose of the Southwest Museum to show the actual steps in the early progress of man. This purpose is not in conflict with the work of the Museum of History, Science and Art at Exposition Park, where the findings in the tar-pits at La Brea form a marvellous exhibit in paleontology. The Southwest Museum's position in southern California may be likened to that of the Peabody Museum at Harvard, whose specialties are entomology and archæology. "Specialization" is the slogan of the age, and specialized museums with a clearly defined purpose are taking the place of the old curiosity shop.

JAMES A. B. SCHERER.

OPINION

A Memorial Tribute to Clarence Thomas Urmy, California's Troubadour

ON Sunday evening, September 12, Vesper services at Trinity Church, San Jose, California took the form of a service commemorative of Clarence Thomas Urmy, poet, musician and writer, who served that Church as organist and choir director from 1883 to 1916. At that service was dedicated a very handsome processional cross to fulfil a wish expressed by him.

The new rector, the Reverend Mark Rifenbark had arranged a most dignified and beautiful service with memorial folders containing three of Mr. Urmy's poems suitable to the occasion. He read letters from Judge Richards and Archdeacon Noel Porter, showing the high appreciation in which they held the work of one now generally acknowledged as California's first native poet.

Dean Gresham gave the address, full of sweet and endearing affection, and hallowed by all the authority and beautiful art of churchly vestments and ceremonial which the poet loved so well and held so high. He spoke of the great obligation which Trinity Church has in their hallowed memories, and of that group of friends of Mr. Urmy who called themselves "the Elegant Eight." Three are no longer here to carry their standard of fine manners and clean living, but the five who remain:—Austin Sperry, Harold Marshman, Newton Barry, De Lancey Lewis and Garton Keystone have pledged themselves to the Stanford Scholarship Memorial and are working to make it also a vital and lasting influence on the youth of Mr. Urmy's native state.

Dean Gresham divided his survey of Mr. Urmy's poetic work into three parts, (1) as lover of nature, (2) as finished technician, (3) as a poet of spiritual things. The series called "Songs of the Spirit" now being published on this page are illustrative of the last phase of Mr. Urmy's work in California literature.

The first part of Dean Gresham's address is here given, and it is hoped that the beloved rector of Trinity whose friendship the poet prized above all, will gather together his entire address and place it in permanent form.

Dear Friends of Trinity Parish and Friends of San Jose:

We have met at this Vesper hour, and in this place of countless memories, not to utter words of praise, but to enact a deed of love.

A processional Cross, the gift of many friends, is to be unveiled in your presence, and dedicated to the memory of Clarence Thomas Urmy.

This Cross will be held aloft by reverent hands, and borne before the vested procession of choir and clergy of Trinity Church, and placed in this Sanctuary at each service for all time to come.

It is altogether fitting that this should be done. For three and thirty long patient years, in this hallowed spot and amid these familiar surroundings, Clarence Urmy rendered high and unselfish service to Trinity Parish and through Trinity Parish to this community.

His work and ministry, for it was a ministry as truly consecrated as that of any priest of the Church, should be perpetuated. And I can think of no outward and visible token of your affection and gratitude that he himself would prize more dearly than the Cross, the eternal symbol of our Christian faith.

But the enactment of this deed of love without some spoken word would be incomplete. To speak that word is not an easy task. The Psalmist declares that from the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. But such is not always the case. Sometimes when the memories of the heart are deep and tender there are thoughts that lie too deep for words.

On that account I shall not try to lift the veil of personal recollection with words of reminiscence. Rather I shall bid you view with me the wider correlations of his life and the broader vision of his ministry of song and service to the world and to mankind. Or, to use his own words, to help you see the line of beauty that he sought to trace. That was his wish.

So, when the angel-shadow falls on me,
And from Life's landscape I am blotted out,
Ne'er to return to my accustomed place,
In Memory's haze let my shortcomings be Concealed, forgotten, but may no one doubt
That I the line of beauty sought to trace.

We read of the Lord Christ that He spake to the people in parables, or pictures, and "without a parable spake He not unto them." As I think of Clarence Urmy tonight there rises before me a picture. It is the picture of a great naturalist and scientist. One lovely summer day, years ago, this naturalist went out in the highlands of Scotland with his microscope to study the heather-bell in all of its native glory. In order that he might see it in its perfection, he got down on his knees. Without plucking the flower he adjusted his instrument, and was soon revelling in its color, its delicacy, its beauty.

How long he stayed there he did not know. But suddenly there was a shadow on him and his instrument. He waited for a time, thinking it might be a passing cloud. But it stayed there. And presently he looked up over his shoulder, and there was an old Highland shepherd watching him. Without saying a word, he plucked the little heather-bell. Then he handed it, with the microscope, to the shepherd, that he, too, might see what he was beholding.

The old shepherd put the instrument to his eyes, got the heather-bell in place; then he gazed at it until the tears ran down his face like bubbles on a mountain stream. Then, tenderly handing back the little heather-bell, he said, "Ay, mon, I wish ye had never shown me that. I wish I had never seen it." "Why?" asked the scientist. "Because," he said, "these rough feet have trodden on so many of them."

Clarence Urmy is that lover of nature upon his knees. Like the Highland shepherd, for a long, long time we mutely watched him, and all unconscious threw a shadow on his musing contemplation. Then he placed his wondrous lens, his Rosary of Rhyme and his Vintage of Verse, and all the rich legacy of his priceless work into our rude hands. Then we saw something of what God had given him to see, "the earth and every common sight apparelled in celestial light, the glory and the freshness of a dream. The golden rod fringing the dusty road with harmless gold, the meanest flower that blows giving thoughts that lie too deep for tears, and every common bush aflame with God."

Songs of the Spirit—V

The Poet and His Lute

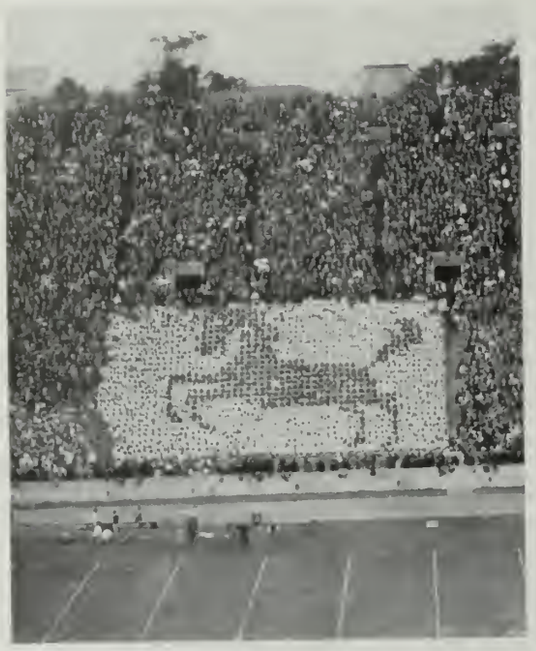
By CLARENCE URMY

The Poet's lute, placed in his hands at birth,
Is tuned to overtones unknown to Earth,
Tunes that take wing from deftly fingered frets
As perfume steals from bed of violets.

The Poet draws from wire spun in a star
The music of a mighty avatar,
Like song of humming birds—throb, tiny throats!—
Too high for human ear, supernal notes.

He wakes with magic touch his instrument
To heavenly harmonies, rapt, eloquent—
Dream-haunted strings that bear from far-off spheres
Strange chords too glad for smiles, too sad for tears.

He echoes airs that seraph tongues rehearse,
And strives to blend them with his blissful verse—
Elysian lyrics born of Flame and Dew,
The faultless, ever-older, ever new.



Thus round the Poet's lute fond Fancies throng
Awaiting dulcet trysting-time with Song,
Till smiling Death at his worn portal stands
To sever strings, seal lips, and still his hands.

SPORTS AFIELD AND AFLOAT

The State Amateur golf championship tournament at Del Monte last month featured more than one record breaking play, and resulted in returning Miss Kathleen Wright of Pasadena as champion for the second time in two successive years.

H. Chandler Eagan, twice National Champion, was another victor. George Von Elm was missed but was heartily applauded for his skill in winning the National golf title from Bobby Jones in the tourney in New Jersey.

A horse in the Grandstand might tie for popularity the historic bull in a chinashop but when the steed is the Trojan horse that has carried the galloping herd of U. S. C. to victory innumerable times, that is a horse of another color.
Eyre Powell Press Service.

Misses Jane and Martha Woodin, with their admiring father, Guy Woodin, of Beverly Hills, whose horses are always in the ribbons in the winter horse shows, as well as in those which form so interesting a part of the State fairs. The hunter is "Little Billy," a prize winner and the coach dog is also a champion.
Photograph by Chateau Arts Studio.

The Los Angeles Coliseum will be the center of interest for the college sports world for several months to come. As everybody knows the football season opened in mid-September when the Pacific Coast Conference and the Southern California Conference entered a season of strenuous struggle to determine the championship. The University of Southern California ranks high with the critics,

Washington and Stanford, second, California, third, Oregon and Washington about even, with Idaho and Montana as the least likely contenders. These gentlemen in conference are Charles Cooke, Grantland Rice, Zaek J. Farmer, manager of the Coliseum, Bob Weaver, and Ralph Chick, Superintendent. Mr. Rice, well known sports writer, said on this occasion that there might be better athletic plants but he had never seen one.
Eyre Powell Press Service.

Del Monte, Monterey, Pebble Beach, and Carmel, together form a delightful neighborhood, which is rapidly being populated by residents from the Southland.

Golf is not the only sport at Del Monte, the horses form a valued asset to every summer's day, and during these long days it is easy to mistake one's location as the summer colony grows larger with every season, and Pasadena families are buying homes, and even farms, in the Monterey neighborhood where the children delight in riding far afield.

The California Yacht Club sponsored the Fall series of R-boat races for the championship, opening September 11-12, and sailed over the twelve mile triangle, Terminal Island, Long Beach to Pt. Fermin buoy to home. Six class R sloops were entered: Syl. Spaulding's Debra; Pierpont Davis' Patricia; Charles D. Wiman's Alert III; Lyman Farwell's California; Tommy Lee's Pirate; and Owen Churchill's Galliano III.

After the first two races three sloops were found tied for first place, with seven points apiece. In the fourth race the California sailed to a spectacular victory, setting a new record for the triangle course of two hours, eight minutes and ten seconds.

The Ukulele Lady is apparently indigenous to both land and sea, and may be composing a sea chanty that will outlive even those dealing with bottles of rum and dead men's chests—maybe! When not musically inclined Miss Polly Espe is a valued member of the crew of the "Walgar."

Miss Margaret Walsh, daughter of Captain Matt Walsh of the "Walgar," is every inch a skipper, which accounts in a measure for the serious expression. You can't have the fate of a ship on your shoulders and not feel the responsibility. Eyre Powell Press Service.

OVER THE WIDE GLOBE WITH CALIFORNIANS

MRS. ROY BAYLY, MISS SEELEY, AND NANCY BELL BAYLY WANDERED DOWN INTO EGYPT, TRYING THERE A DIFFERENT MODE OF TRANSPORTATION, BUT THEY ARE FIRM IN THEIR DECLARATIONS THAT SLEDS, SKIIS OR SHIPS OF THE DESERT, DO NOT COMPARE FAVORABLY WITH THEIR OWN FAVORITE HORSES AS MOUNTS.

MRS. ROY BAYLY, MISS MABEL SEELEY AND MISS ELIZABETH BRANT OF PASADENA, AT ST. MORITZ ENJOYING THE WINTER SPORTS FOR WHICH THE ALPINE SECTION IS ALMOST AS WELL KNOWN AS FOR ITS SHEER BEAUTY. THE PARTY WENT ABROAD EARLY LAST SPRING.

RIGHT:
MISS RUTH REDMAN, THE DAUGHTER OF MR. AND MRS. A. W. REDMAN OF LOS ANGELES, IS MAKING A LEISURELY AND DIVERSIFIED TOUR OF THE CONTINENT, SATISFYING HER LOVE OF BEAUTY, AND HERE IN VENICE THE PERFECTION OF THE DETAIL OF THE COLUMNS OF ST. MARKS HOLD HER ATTENTION.

THE HIGHLANDS

PERCHED high above the rocky shore of the Pacific at Monterey, the Inn of Carmel Highlands looks out over views unsurpassed for beauty. So picturesque is this particular part of the California Coast that artists of all temperaments and trades have been drawn to it for decades. Starting as the loved possession of an artistic and intelligently interested people, the little settlement at Carmel-by-the-Sea—as this place is always called by its lovers—has fitted in what houses and public buildings a town has to build, so that the beauty of nature is there still though man has made himself an abiding place from which to view it.

Builders at Monterey rival each other in an attempt to camouflage the fact that they have placed human hands upon their beloved landscape.

Most successful in this attempt is the hotel at Carmel Highlands. The site is the only one on which a hotel is possible. The architect, the artist, the owner and the builder, were one in their efforts to make a comfortable inn accessible to motorists and yet an element of the native beauty of this choice situation. They succeeded because they subordinated themselves to nature. A great room

HIGH ON THE CLIFF STANDS THE INN

with a great fireplace and great windows opening out upon unobstructed views were in their minds when they planned the hotel on the spot where it was built. No architectural scheme was foremost in the minds of any one. The great room was stepped off on the only place large enough for it and placed in the position which the site demanded. Then, the rest of the necessary rooms, an approach and a wing for the dining room were constructed substantially on the native rocks.

FROM THE TERRACE OF THE INN AT CARMEL HIGHLANDS ONE LOOKS OUT THROUGH THE PINES TO THE PICTURESQUE SHORE BELOW

INN AT CARMEL

Set among the pines that rise in stately manner all over the Highlands, are little cottages for guests; some nearby, tucked under the main building; some farther away, for those who wish to be alone or quietly the guests of nature rather than of man.

Gratitude is the foremost feeling that possesses the guests who stop for any length of time at Carmel Highlands. Gratitude to the founders of the Inn for contriving to set every comfort and every known modern method for making life easy on such a point of vantage for vacation.

Bringing drinking water alone was a feat; and all the appointments of an up-to-date hotel are doubly appreciated when one stops to consider the work and thought which made them possible, yet hidden on a height at one time inaccessible to human beings.

From the British Isles and the Continent of Europe, from the Atlantic and Middle West, from Canada and the great Northwest come guests and sojourners to Carmel Highlands Inn. They drink in the beauty of the place and then write charming letters to the management, expressing the gratitude that all feel but seldom take the time to express in life's hurried tale of auto tours and travel.

THE COVER AND THE SCHOOLS OF CALIFORNIAN ART

THOMAS L. HUNT, whose painting of The Fishing Fleet at Gloucester is reproduced on our cover this month, is a Canadian who has come to California recently. His work shows the charm of spontaneity and introduces a new note of color into local galleries. Several paintings now hang in the galleria real of the Biltmore Hotel, Los Angeles.

Mr. and Mrs. Hunt are at Monterey where the artist has already done several new and pleasing canvases of the sea and shore.

The Monterey School of California painters may be said to be foremost in presenting broad, rich masses of deep color. Although there is a great deal of sea fog at Carmel-by-the-Sea, it seems to intensify the color seen when the sunshine breaks through the mist. Subjects here are exceedingly colorful intrinsically. The cypress heads are a deep dark green, the sea is intensely blue and the broken crags are strong in outline and shadows.

THE WIND-BLOWN CYPRESS TREES OF MONTEREY FORM ONE OF THE PICTURESQUE ELEMENTS OF BEAUTY IN THAT SKETCHING GROUND

Masses of the high Sierras as they rise to a height of ten thousand feet above our eastern deserts dominate our southern desert school. Color, changeable, intangible, is to be found here. It seems to belong to the water it hides in or to the hills and rocks themselves. And yet, as the sun's rays slant through the calm atmosphere subtle changes take place in the light reflected from these great simple surfaces and the delight of the artist becomes intense as he finds power to record what he sees for the love of preserving it and for the delectation of those who take joy in California's pulsing, picturesque great out-of-doors.

At Taos is another sort of desert. Artists from the central states have long painted Indian subjects there. But California chooses to develop first her varied schools of landscape and marine.

THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

MONTHLY BULLETIN

OFFICERS

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH, PRESIDENT
CLIFFORD A. TRUESDELL, VICE PRESIDENT
C. R. JOHNSON, SECRETARY
PAUL R. WILLIAMS, TREASURER

DIRECTORS

JULIAN GARNSEY, DIRECTOR
J. E. STANTON, DIRECTOR
H. C. CHAMBERS, DIRECTOR

THE HOME STRETCH

The first meeting of the fall will be history when this comes to the hands of Club members. October, November and December remain before the present Club officers pass on the burden to other hands. Something has been accomplished thus far but it remains for the next three months to bring to fruition the hard work done to draw in more draftsmen and to widen our circle of usefulness. The meetings for these last three months have been definitely arranged for and their sponsors named. If the pace set by John and Donald Parkinson's office is maintained, the Club is going to have a whale of a good time this fall. We can't speak for the September meeting, as this goes to press before arrangements are quite complete, but let us remark that the office of Curlett and Beelman are to be our hosts at the Elks Club. That ought to be a combination that would even pry Cliff Truesdell away from his home and fireside for one night. Walker and Eisen are on our list as hosts for the next meeting. Jess Stanton says he is arranging a beautiful display of sewer pipe for our edification on the roof of the new Pacific Finance building for either the November or December meeting. The third meeting of the year is to be an out-of-town trip with special train and brass band. Keep your eye open for further announcement.

ATELIER LIFE CLASS

The Atelier men have completed arrangements for the second season of their life class. It is expected that Mr. Radwanuski, a former student of the Beaux Art, Paris, and the Art Students League, New York, will be instructor. The class was a real success last year under Mr. Wolf. It is expected that the class membership list will soon be filled after the opening date which is to be announced at the next Atelier dinner. The fee for the life class will be the same as last year and no draftsman who feels the need of further training in free hand drawing can afford to stay away.

EMPLOYMENT

The Club President is in touch with a good out-of-town situation for some draftsman who is willing to go out of the State to take a head draftsman's position. There are several fellows who have dropped in to enquire about jobs. If any one knows of a place open for some good man, he will do a service by informing the president of the Club.

THE SKETCH AT THE TOP OF THE PAGE

Mr. Virgil Westbrook who came to California recently from Puget Sound has been working with the Architectural Advisory Committee in Santa Barbara since the quake. Mr. Westbrook is an aviator of some parts and incidentally no mean draftsman. He made the sketch at the top of this page one day as he flew by the old chateau whose gate tower is here shown. In this tower the son of Mohamet II. was imprisoned in 1487, not that that makes it a better sketch.

A PENCIL SKETCH FROM OVERSEAS, PAUDY, 1919
BY VIRGIL WESTBROOK

LIFE CLASS INSTRUCTOR

As his name indicates, Mr. Radwanouski is a Russian. He was driven out of Petrograd after the Revolution. It seems that most of Russia's sane men left at the same time to the enrichment of the rest of the world. He found himself in Paris where he studied for many months and then came to New York. There he kept body and soul in one piece by making sketches on Saturdays and Sundays and peddling them in groceries and drug stores. How he lived and studied and learned the language, a lonely stranger in a strange land, would make an interesting story if we could get him to tell it some time. He is still a very young man to have passed through so much, but his experiences haven't taken the fire out of his eyes, rather, they have put it there. His work should be stronger and more virile for his having lived so intensely in these past few years.

ELEVENTH HOUR BULLETIN

Word has just come in that it will be necessary to postpone the September meeting until almost the fifteenth of October. This was made necessary because no date sooner than this could be secured by Mr. Claude Beelman, whose office is sponsoring the meeting. Notices will be out almost as soon as this bulletin reaches club members. There is to be a return postal on it, so for Pete's sake don't fail to respond or our kind host will never forgive us.

ANOTHER PILGRIMAGE IN PROSPECT

Our old friend Lee Fuller, who is now in practice for himself, is doing a stunning English house out Beverly way. The sign says "Leland Fuller, Designer," when everyone (but the State Board) knows he is an architect. We are going to ask Lee to let the gang tramp through some Saturday afternoon when the house is nearer completion. Let's hope he consents. This reminds us, too, that the Executive Committee would like some suggestions as to buildings either in Los Angeles or Pasadena which are nearing completion and would be interesting to visit.

THOUGHTS ABOUT ART

"Among the many complexities that have transpired in the evolution of the present social order is the changing nature of artistic criteria and the more limited nature of aesthetic service. At one time art was the direct outcome of the needs of man for interrelationship with forces governing his conditions, and, indicative of strongly felt social emotions directed to functional service, found the special channels for expression which handed, down the ages, the traditional form of dance, ritual, drama, architecture—the national heritage of mankind. But the relative values in life are changed. We are less simple and direct; language has become a dictionary of faded metaphors, art a process of ornament added to decay; symbols have lost their original significance and the fundamental basis of tradition is obscured . . . The language of the emotions expressed in arbitrary and unintelligible symbolism bewilders public and critic alike who are at a loss for some 'aesthetic plumb-line' and the distance between the artist and the public perceptibly widens, for every picture cannot tell its story in terms of ideas associated with objects, although the general determination is it should."

—Grace Rogers, in "Artwork."
(From the Journal of the A.I.A.)

Hispano-Moresque Tile
Colorful, Decorative, Interesting
made entirely by hand
Mexican, Spanish and
Tunisian Designs
Showroom
Harry C. Hicks 4283 Beverly Blvd.
GR. 4013
Los Angeles Calif.

Landscape
Designing and Planting
The beautiful gardens of Southern California which we have created are evidence of our ability to design and plant your own grounds properly.
A reliable firm of thirty-eight years' experience in Southern California.
EDWARD H. RUST
NURSERYMAN
1625 Bank St. Colo. 997
So. Pasadena ELliot 2639

Prepare Your Estimates from Reliable Figures
Send for 14th Edition
New Building Estimates Hand Book
By ARTHUR.
SCIENTIFIC BOOK CORPORATION
15 East 26th St., New York

PORTABLE
TYPEWRITERS
WITH STANDARD KEYBOARD
Also All Makes Sold, Rented, Repaired, Exchanged
Parker Typewriter Co.
25 Years Experience
25 N. Marengo Pasadena

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A. MONTHLY BULLETIN

OFFICERS
DAVID J. WITMER, PRESIDENT
C. E. NOERENBERG, VICE PRESIDENT
EDGAR H. CLINE, SECRETARY
WINCHTON L. RISLEY, TREASURER

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH,
Editor

DIRECTORS
H. C. CHAMBERS
DONALD PARKINSON
ALFRED W. REA

PLAGARISM AS A FINE ART

The following address was given by Mr. William L. Steele of Chicago before a recent Convention of The American Institute of Architects. Five addresses were given by noted architects who represented divergent schools of thought in architectural design. Each address dealt with some phase of the use of "precedent" in design. Mr. Steele's point of view is that of the great Louis Sullivan, whose recent book "The Autobiography of an Idea" is considered one of the great biographies of this decade.

THE USE OF PRECEDENT IN ARCHITECTURAL DESIGN

The use of precedent in architectural design has always existed in some form. The historic "styles" were the product of the "common mind" of men who believed in the same gods. They become established through a natural process of development. They were followed because they were the logical result of the interplay of the thought and emotion of the time. Precedents were established and used, not because the solution of architectural problems seemed to inevitably follow a flow of dynamic force that would not be denied. Given the terms of the problem with its modifying conditions, given the designer with his background of faith, tradition and training, and his equipment of imagination, emotion and skill; the result had to be just what it was. Though he did not originate the "style" in which he worked, he usually enriched it by some contribution of his own. He used his own creative faculty. He did not borrow in a plagaristic sense, though he freely had recourse to the treasure chest of the "common mind" of his age. This use of precedent I think we may call subjective, as distinguished from mere objective copying.

Doubtless always there were imitative followers, pupils of a great master, mere imitators, who did their work in a servile and imitative way. It was the genuflection of the ape-like mind before superior genius. Such imitative work has always been a natural accompaniment or "obligato" to the brilliant performance of the freer minded. We note the same phenomena in the other forms of art expression. Every great master whether of painting, sculpture, music or literature has had his pupils, admiring disciples, envious rivals. Great schools of thought or cults have arisen through pure force of genius. They have attracted similarly minded students and workers, have established themselves as dominating forces in their own particular fields of expression. Later we have seen them become arid, or overwrought, stiff or spineless, forced or anaemic, in a word, decadent; and they have passed and yielded place to more virile and spontaneous movements. The merely imitative use of precedent we may call its objective use, for it consists essentially of taking the externalized thought of someone else and substituting it, in whole or in part, for one's own. I think it may be demonstrated that the predominant use of precedent in any age which produced an architectural language of its own was what we have defined as its subjective use.

Since the time when the brilliant revival of classic thought and form which we call the Renaissance began to lose its lustre we have had new architectural language or "vernacular." The use of precedent has enormously increased. It is urged and taught, not always explicitly and formally, but quite deliberately and with no little skill. The result is that the point of view of almost the entire architectural profession is now an attitude of deprecating any attempt toward free art expression in our own field. We sense a belief in the minds of our teachers that the best possible has been already done. As students we are first required to copy. A little farther along the way we are expected to begin to "design," but when our work is reviewed by the instructor we soon find out that the closer we stick to precedent the higher he will grade us. When we get into an architect's office we find the "library," with its thoroughly indexed "plates" in constant demand by the designing "force." We note the "designers" are mostly skillful cribbers and adapters. We feel that they are really plagarizing most of the time. They are using precedent-objective, and I submit that the custom is wrong in theory, bad in practice and utterly demoralizing in its tendencies.

CASA DE MANANA, LA JOLLA

In our occasional moments of humility and absence of professional pose some of us admit that we are traveling a road that leads nowhere so far as art is concerned. I vividly remember a conversation which I heard in the drafting room of a firm of architects who were prominent twenty-five years ago. A client had gone away dissatisfied after a rather heated interview with the two partners. He wanted more windows and had been definitely informed that no more could be had. It would 'spoil the design." As the door closed on his indignant old figure the senior partner said to his junior: "Well, that's what you get for trying to make a modern museum out of an old Italian palace." Nothing was done about it so far as I am informed. There was no dispute in the office about the principle involved. It was understood by the firm and their draftsmen that they were working in a particular "style" which had rules that could not be broken unless we could find a "plate" in the library which would establish a precedent for the desired infraction. We were laboriously contriving a modern building out of modern materials which we first had to translate into sixteenth century forms. We were being scholarly and erudite. We were setting up something according to rules which regiments of students could later on recognize bit by bit in terms of Scholastic analysis. It was cold blooded and inhuman. There was no thought of doing something that might arouse enthusiasm, joy, delight. And whence the blight? The preconceived idea, the basic error in muddling the problem by referring it to a dead past, the objective use of precedent was what did all the mischief. That particular building was built, and among all the devotees of precedent, for whom it was built, there has not been one that I know of to praise it or rejoice over it. As for people generally, they think it is big and cost a lot of money, and they would be surprised if anyone seemed disappointed in their lack of interest or enthusiasm over its architectural fidelity to long dead Guelphs or Ghibellines.

Just two little points were raised by the client (and he did not know how to fight successfully for them), utility and convenience. Utility and Convenience are humble servitors in the court of Beauty but they may not be safely ignored, for they belong there. The theory of architectural design which does not adequately provide for them is a defective theory to say the least.

When corporations, such as Banks and Insurance Companies, wax rich they usually get themselves housed in a building expressive of their opulence. The typical instance is that one where the whole idea of architectural design seems to have been a lavish display of a classic "order" in cut stone. Precedent has had its way with these also. Few of them excite the beholder. It would not be severe to say that most of them are merely dull and conventional affairs. But they all cost a lot of money. Isn't it a fact that it is in this type of building that the architects' sway is least disputed? Have we ever thought a selfish little thought of regret that by this kind of work we have taught our rich clients to believe that architects are extravagant and architecture expensive? May not such buildings be the chief reason why engineers are so often employed to design the merely ulitarian structures? Have we really done anything to correct the erroneous impression that an architect merely adorns the engineer's fabric? Have we tried to demonstrate that it is ours to put a soul into the dry bones designed by the engineer, and, if so, did we find that our slavery to precedent helped or hindered?

We know also that many buildings exist where the exterior treatment has none but a vague and general relation with the interior and with its plan. The use of precedent had so prejudiced the thought of the architect that before he began to draw he knew how the building would be obliged to look. If it were a bank, it would have to be a Greek or a Roman temple. If it were a library, it would have to be a French or an Italian Palace. If it were a building for governmental purpose it would have to have a great colonade with flanking solids and perhaps a dome. The formula would vary according to the school and habit of mind of the Architect, and the necessary reaction of those who would pay the bill. But there was always a formula, and because the terms of the equation were not complete, the solution was always a makeshift and an evasion. The use of precedent in types such as we have briefly considered has completely overshadowed all the other elements of architectural design. The personality of the Architect has practically vanished and in his work there is nothing that speaks of the spirit of a people or of a locality save as reminiscent of a pessimistic and ghostly way. At best the original beauty that dwelt in the buildings from which these are stolen is here only in the same unsatisfactory sense that it exists in any copy of a work of art. At worst the original beauty is gone and all that is left is a sense of the unintelligent use of forms alien to the purpose in hand.

From the lowest of motives, selfishness, can we afford to let architecture be so misunderstood? We have taken away her torch and have arrayed her in a masquerade costume and ornamented her with the trophies of our scholastic research. Can we wonder that "the public" is not interested in such performance? When architectural design shall have definitely ceased to be anything more than skillful adaptation, then shall architects, by their own admission, cease to be artists, and architecture as an art-expression shall terminate. But I suspect that when the day comes, and perhaps it is nearer at hand than we think, the primitive impulse to create and to build will somehow produce new servants. They may not call themselves architects but their work will unite them to that fellowship with the poets which we shall have forfeited.

SOME IMPRESSIONS OF THE BOWL

(Continued from Page 11)

clothes—the mechanism, most interesting—but dulling one's receptivity to the actual music. One would have liked a less visible orchestra, and more darkness in places: where flashed those unseemly lights that ruin all the beautiful dark gravity of the higher hill; where the fierce glare of the white cross mercilessly stabbed the sight; where gleamed and glistened the dragonous eyes of stabled cars.*

Often it seemed the music was sweeter, deeper, more august than under any closed and lighted roof. There were even moments—rare and fleeting—when the sense of the divine in nature and in man expressed in music were one to the sense. In those surroundings, still keeping much of their nobility, one was less tolerant of the cheap and trivial, the ignoble, and these, with all underlying meanings, seemed more instantly perceived. Scheherazade with its sensuality and cruelty expressed in beautiful movement, was somehow repellent as it would not have been ordinarily perhaps.

But the music's influence was elusive. A thing delicate and exquisite sandwiched between the thick and heavy layers of the crowd.

The waves of human beings roll upward and upward, breathless and buoyant. They stream downward again in an endless flow. The eye and mind are fascinated and enthralled by these vast descending streams. Cheerful, complacent, pleased with the out of doors, mildly pleased with the music, satisfied to have done the right thing culturally; to have contributed to the 'uplift' of the community and to the something that will make their city "bigger and better," they pass and pass a noticeably well regulated crowd . . . . And if, to the less robust temperament, under their trampling feet, and amiable voices, and trivial unfeeling comment, the tender gifts and delicate bestowals of the spirit of music wither and shrink; and the multitude, unconscious of its power, magnificent and devastating, over art and over nature seems to triumph, yet this is a mere personal and partial impress. One sees the nobility of an achieved ideal; a great and generous human enterprise; with pride and affection, something that is of the best in American life and character.

If a promised prominent notice and acknowledgment in the program were ineffectual in inducing the realty people to quench those jumping lights on Bowl evenings, even a bribe seems worth while! For the cross one would suggest mauve of varying depths. Probably there is not room for the planting of quick growing trees to hide the cars. And why could not all the lighting of the Bowl be green like the pleasing lanterns?*

QUALITY SERVICE
THE ELITE
DRY CLEANERS AND DYERS
Plant: 797 So. Fair Oaks Ave.
Colo. 1349 Pasadena, California

THE T. B. WALKER ART GALLERY

(Continued from Page 14)

Lake Minnetonka, twenty-five miles out, is another Lake Geneva for fine homes. When winter comes many migrate to our Southland. With the love for the country growing, many are giving up their city homes and using these for year-round residences. We were turned loose in one of the gardens where flowers grow in such tangles and masses as only wild ones are supposed to do.

The Memorial Drive, four miles in length, is set with double rows of elm trees bearing the names of soldiers of the World War. This long avenue of lawn and trees leads up to the flag with its glorious colors. Beyond lies the Columbia Field House and golf links. The building is the equal of fine country clubs and is furnished with old-fashioned furniture and hooked rugs. Minneapolis has so many playgrounds it must be confusing. That which will give the greatest pleasure of a different kind to great numbers is about to be opened to the public.

The suspense is over. The art treasures of the T. B. Walker collection are to remain in Minneapolis. It is a priceless possession and the art world will beat a path to the door of the new gallery which is to house it. The building which is an adaptation of the Venetian and Byzantine has a beautiful setting in green lawns with many old trees for a background, the Armory garden of acres of flowers across the street on one side and Mr. Walker's own residence on the other. It faces Loring Park and with all is right down town. Stepping into the lobby, one is delighted not only with the light, but lightness.

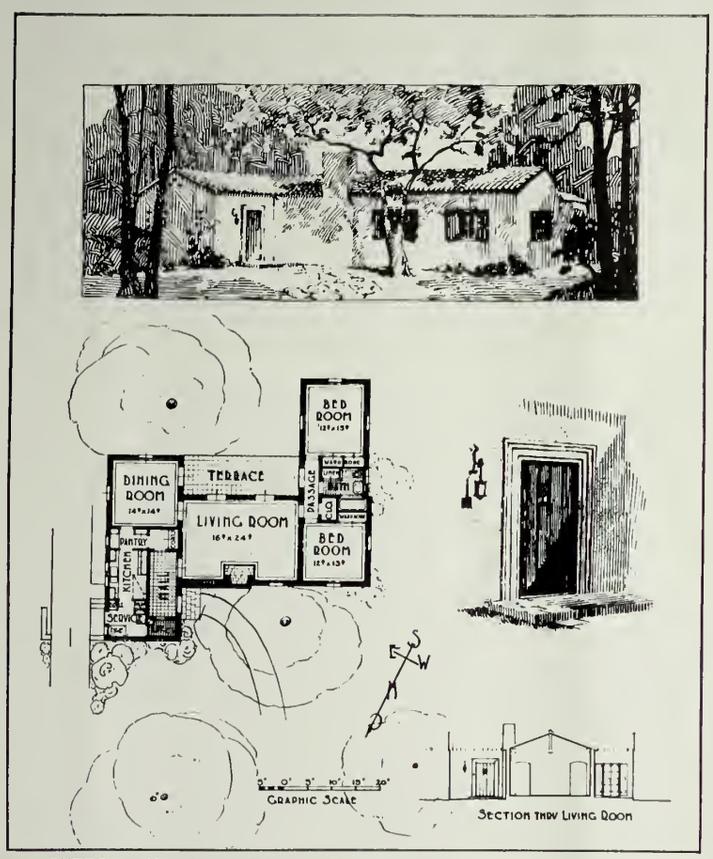
The architect, Mr. Thorshov, and Mr. Walker took us through. "Now, come along, there is not time to study individual pictures," said Mr. Walker, and we were off. At that rate I thought our visit would be over in fifteen minutes, but we kept the pace for two hours, except now and then when he would give a little chuckle and stop to relate some incident. "I had a great old time with this piece;" or, "Mrs. Lowry used to come and stand before this portrait. I had half a mind to give it to her, but I couldn't deny other ladies the pleasure of seeing it.' That lead us to thinking what a benefaction it is to have such works of art placed where all may enjoy them. The Gentleman in Blue by the same artist as Blue Boy caused a sigh of regret over one picture that got away. Mr. Walker paused before Corot's Dance of the Nymphs, that poem in painting, and he tapped on the glass of a Sir Thomas Lawrence, saying, "He beats all the world in portraits of children." Passing one of Sir Peter Lely's and the Princess Victoria by Richard Westall, he declared he could hardly get the librarian past those.

It is appalling that one individual could collect so many masterpieces, Rubens, Rembrandt, Van Dyck—is there any old master missing?—masterpieces not only of painting, but pottery, porcelain, glass, jade, everything—one ancient necklace bore portraits of Roman ladies on the beads. I asked Mr. Walker how he ever got all these things. He smiled as he recalled how his mother used to say: "I hope, Thomas, that you get them honestly!"

STATEMENT OF THE OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, CIRCULATION, ETC., REQUIRED BY THE ACT OF CONGRESS OF AUGUST 24, 1912, OF CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, PUBLISHED BY M. URMY SEARES, AT PASADENA, CALIFORNIA, FOR OCTOBER, 1926.

State of California, County of Los Angeles.

Before me, a Notary Public in and for the State and County aforesaid, personally appeared M. Urmy Seares, who, having been duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that she is the editor and manager of California Southland, and that the following is a true statement of the ownership, management, circulation, etc., of the aforesaid publication, for the date shown in the above caption: that the name and address of the publisher and editor is M. Urmy Seares, Pasadena; that the business manager is R. B. Urmy, Jr., Pasadena; that the owner of said publication is M. Urmy Seares; that there are no mortgages, bondholders, or other security holders, owning or holding one per cent of the bonds, mortgages or other securities of California Southland. Sworn to and Subscribed before me this first day of October, 1926.



JOHN R. BRAGDON, Notary Public.
My commission expires November 7, 1929.

T. W. Mather Co. Inc.
PASADENA, CAL.
Dry Goods
Women's & Children's
Wearing Apparel
Colorado Street at Marengo

Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes
TROY LAUNDRY
In Business for Twenty Years
Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146 Alhambra 243-J

CALIFORNIA'S CONTRIBUTION TO BETTER HOMES

ACCORDING to our announcement in previous issues, CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND will publish in each number small houses or details of larger houses by California's leading architects; and will also offer designs and sketches by young men who are selling plans and designs for small homes. Thus the best architecture will be made available to all who apply to this journal for specific designs.

SKETCH AND PLAN FOR A FIVE-ROOM CONCRETE BUNGALOW
HORACE MANN, DESIGNER

A SMALL HOUSE IN CALIFORNIA STUCCO STYLE DESIGNED IN A GROUP BY REGINALD D. JOHNSON, ARCHITECT, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

ANOTHER STUCCO HOUSE OF MODERATE DIMENSIONS DESIGNED FOR THE SAME GROUP, JOHNSON, KAUFMANN AND COATE, ARCHITECTS

UNEXCELLED

Royal Laundry Company

Pasadena, California

COLORADO 4311 RAYMOND AT BELLEVUE

In Our New Location Now

624 E. Colorado St.
Pasadena, Cal.

Particularizing—
In Larger Sizes—
38 to 56½
And Small Sizes—
—the short stout, the narrow shoulder, the little person

Schaffer Gray Shop

GOWNS for WOMEN
Large and Small

624 E. COLORADO STREET

Ohrmund Brothers Unit System of Gas Heating, Electrically Controlled and Equipped with Electric FLASH Pilot.

The new electric Flasher takes the place of the old-time gas pilot, eliminating gas waste, and reducing cost to the minimum. Let us show you.

PASADENA GAS APPLIANCE COMPANY, INC.
901 East Colorado St. WAkefield 4126

Decorating and Finishing Exclusive Furniture

W. G. Pesenecker

Interior and Exterior Painting
34 North Broadway
Phone Col. 5656 Pasadena, Calif.

Tile for Everlasting Beauty

Genuine importations of Spanish, Italian, African, and Mexican tiles always in stock, as well as a complete line of American made tile, also foreign and domestic marble.

Mantels and sections of floors, walls for baths and other rooms in white and colors are kept on display. We also make tile fountains for gardens.

Z. B. GALLOWAY
95 S. Wilson Ave., Pasadena Terrace 5516

The Westlake
School for Girls
333 South Westmoreland Avenue

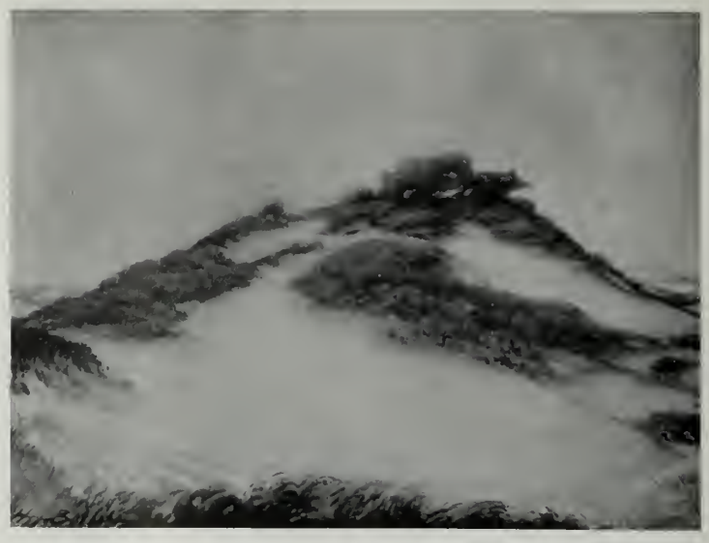
Residence and Day School
Lower School, College Preparatory, Junior College
Fully Accredited
Departments of Art, Music, Home Economics

JESSICA SMITH VANCE FREDERICA DE LAGUNA
Telephone DRexel 0052

An Ideal School for Young Women
Cumnock School
COLLEGE WORK IN THE FOLLOWING COURSES:
Vocal Interpretation of Literature

Literary Appreciation	Voice and Diction	Story Writing
Public Speaking	French	Dancing
Dramatics	Story Telling	Psychology

Art and Art Appreciation
An accredited High School in Class A preparing for Western and Eastern Colleges and Universities.
HELEN A. BROOKS, Director
5353 West Third Street Los Angeles
WH itney 3427 —TELEPHONES— WH itney 7311



PACIFIC MILITARY ACADEMY
(Absolutely Fireproof)
Grammar and High School Departments
For Catalogue write
Commandant, P. O. Box No. 308, Culver City, Calif.
Telephones: Los Angeles—EMpire 6022
Culver City 3294

Norma Gould School of the Dance
announces
WINTER COURSES FOR TEACHERS,
PROFESSIONALS AND CHILDREN
Authentic Dances — Pantomime — Eurythmics
Special Feature—Fundamentals of Toe, Waltz Clog and Ballroom Dancing
Scholarship Awarded
460 N. Western Ave. Send for Catalog
HEmpstead 3530

THE WILLIAMS SCHOOL
for Handicapped Children
449 North Madison Avenue, Pasadena, California
For the benefit of exceptional children who vary from the average type to a moderate degree; for those who are practically normal, except in time and variance of their development.
To each pupil is offered the educational essentials for his utmost development and the further stimulus arising from competitive and associate companionship. Admission may be obtained at any time for both day and boarding pupils. For full particulars address
BEATRICE MICHAU WILLIAMS, Director

SCULPTOR OF SILVER
FOR THE TABLE OF THE BRIDE
PORTER BLANCHARD
BURBANK :: :: :: CALIFORNIA

THE WHITE SAND DUNES OF CARMEL FROM A PAINTING BY HENRY BREUER, CALIFORNIA

THE INCURABLE OPTIMIST

(Continued from Page 17)

He pointed to a perennial plant about five feet high, bearing dark purple, bellshaped flowers and shining purplish black berries of the size of a cherry. "We call this deadly nightshade, or 'Atropa Belladonna'," he said. From the dried leaves of this plant we obtain Belladonna with its principal alkaloid, atropine. Belladonna was used cosmetically by the ladies of Spain to enhance the beauty of the eye by dilating the pupil; hence the name 'Bella Donna', meaning 'Beautiful Lady'; and it is still used for that purpose. Given one million or ten million persons using belladonna, or atropine, in the eye, or taking it by mouth or by hypodermic injection in sufficient dosage, the pupils of all these people will be dilated, whether they believe in drugs or do not believe in them. In certain diseases of the eye it is very important that the pupil be dilated and atropine is then a very valuable drug. It is also used to relax involuntary, or unstriped muscle fibers, and is, for that reason, useful in asthma where there is a contraction of the bronchioles, and in constipation caused by spasm of the involuntary muscle of the intestine. The use of atropine can be unintelligent, even dangerous, when employed by ignorant persons."

"Look," he pointed to a group of foxgloves in the garden. "Look at them," he said, "are they not beautiful and friendly, and are they not quite natural? They, too, are nature's gift to man. From the leaves of the second year's growth, at the commencement of flowering, we obtain a drug called digitalis. For the weary and broken heart—physically broken, I mean—there is no remedy more remarkable, if given in the proper dosage. It rests the heart by slowing it. I have seen patients suffering from heart defects of various kinds, most dramatically relieved and improved by the use of this drug."

He walked a short distance, taking Elise with him. "This pomogranate tree, called Punica Granatum, which is very small in this garden, but grows to a height of about twenty feet in Southwestern Asia from North India to Palestine, where it is indigenous, yields from the bark of the stem and the root, a drug which is useful in the treatment for tapeworm. The male fern, called Aspidium, yields an oleoresin which is most reliable when used against the numerous varieties of tapeworm which are parasitic in man. This drug must be very carefully used also, as it may cause unpleasant and even dangerous symptoms in the hands of an inexperienced layman. From the ripe seeds of the common pumpkin, botanically known as Cucurbita pepo, we also obtain a remedy for the destruction of tapeworm."

"From the dry rhysome of this geranium, known as Geranium Maculatum, a fluid extract is made which is extremely serviceable as an astringent gargle in sore throat, as a mouth wash, and in various relaxed conditions of mucous membrane. A decoction is also prepared from this plant, which is serviceable in infantile diarrhea."

"Even the blackberry, growing against the garden wall, may be made useful when carefully prepared and administered in the form of a fluid extract. It may then be administered in the summer diarrhea of children. When, on the contrary, blackberries are fed to the child by grandmother, in the form of blackberry preserves they are highly irritating because of the seeds present in them.

"Were every pharmaceutical house and drug store in this city destroyed, from this garden patch alone, many human beings could be given relief from suffering. Walk down to the beach and the sea kelp, apparently a useless hindrance to bathing, yields iodine for man's use. Iodine, as you should know, is a splendid antiseptic, useful in the prevention of goiter, and in certain combinations, as in the form of potassium iodide, is used very effectively to treat most serious infections of the human body. The now widespread use of iodine by the laity, without the supervision of a physician is dangerous and should be discouraged, for certain types of goiter are aggravated and made much worse by the ingestion of iodine.

"There is a story told that in a village in Peru, a tree fell into a stream and rendered the water very bitter, so that the natives found it necessary to get water elsewhere. A man in the village, being ill with fever and parched with thirst, in his suffering drank of the bitter water and was healed. This tree is called Red Cinchona, or Cinchona succirubra Pavon, or Peruvian Bark, from which quinine is obtained. The name Cinchona was given it in honor of the Countess of Chinchon, cured of malaria by the use of this drug as early as the seventeenth century. About the middle of the seventeenth century, a large quantity of the bark of the Cinchona tree received from America, reawakened discussion and, finally, a council of Jesuits held at Rome, approved a distribution of the drug, called therefrom "Jesuits' Bark." Still the opposition to its use was pronounced and it was only when an English quack doctor succeeded in effecting a cure among persons of rank, by the employment of the drug, that its services became general in malaria and typhoid fever, as well as in various other diseases. Quinine was used empirically, that is, its precise action was unknown until the cause of malaria was discovered to be a micro-organism called plasmodium malariae. Quinine destroys the plasmodium."

"Not only our gardens and woods lend themselves to man's needs, but our mines, the seas, air, even the sunlight has been imprisoned by the intelligence of man and is utilized in making life more healthful, more joyous, more worth while for man. Nature is profligate of life, man is slowly learning to conserve it, and he does it by utilizing the resources he finds in nature. Long ago, the old women in the villages, and the medicine men among the savages, knew of the curative value of nature's gifts. They gathered flowers, leaves and roots and then used them to help their sick. At the present time pharmaceutical chemists prepare these drugs so that they are always clean, the dosage is standardized so that we know the exact quantity of the drug which the patient is taking. It might be a little more direct, and you might say more natural, to chew a few leaves of foxglove in case of 'heart protest', where the wearied organ is sending up signals of distress, when the heart has been abused or mistreated by the exigencies and strain of modern living. You might let nature take its course and let the poor, abused heart struggle along as best it may, without any help. If attacked by malaria, it is possible not to take quinine and let the tiny micro-organism destroy a human being, but I think it is wiser to take quinine in a tiny, clean tablet, if it can be obtained, and overcome the infection. In the League of Nations Report, 1925, it is stated that in the United States there were 100,000 malaria patients during one year, while in Russia there were approximately five million persons suffering from this condition. The mortality from malaria in the United States was one per cent, while in Russia, where drugs were difficult to obtain, mortality was ten per cent. In this instance, in Russia, nature took her course, while in the United States nature was harnessed, a willing beast of burden, to man's need. We are told by historians that the Fall of Rome may have been due to the prevalence of malaria in the swamp districts, which undermined the health of the people, as much as to socio-economic causes."

The reverberation of a gong, struck somewhere within the house, penetrated into the garden, and announced luncheon. Dr. Norman glanced at his wife, "See, Ellen, I have done it again, forgotten my duty to Elise as her host, and inflicted a lecture upon her, on this beautiful morning."

Ellen gravely looked first at Norman and then at Elise. "No, I think nothing could have been better for Elise than to have heard you this morning. I have often felt that it was a pity the members of the medical profession have so little time to devote to the teaching of the laity. Elise probably has never thought of drugs as having been grown on trees or mined from the bowels of the earth, or brought in boats from the sea. To her, they were probably strange, unpleasant, ill-tasting concoctions which mysteriously grew on drug store shelves. This lack of understanding brings to my mind small, city-bred Ruth, who came to me after her first visit to a farm house, and seeing the farmer milk the cow, said, "Oh! He is squeezing the little fingers on the cow and getting milk from them.' She had always thought of milk as a liquid mysteriously growing in bottles at one's doorstep. This is not directed, personally, to you, Elise, but to all people who have so little knowledge of medicine as an art and a science, and who, in their ignorance, disregard an agent of inestimable value."

THE GOLDEN YARROW OF CALIFORNIA'S FIELDS.

Marlborough School for Girls
Established, 1889
Boarding and Day School Accredited to Eastern and Western Colleges
5029 West Third Street
ADA S. BLAKE, (A. B. Radcliffe College) Principal

MISS HARKER'S SCHOOL
FOR GIRLS
Palo Alto -:- -:- -:- California
"The Home of Stanford University"
Outdoor life all the year round One hour from San Francisco. College Preparatory and Special Courses. Separate residence for girls from 5 to 14 years. Catalog on request.

KENWOOD HALL
Resident and Day School for Girls. Sub-Primary through High School.
Open throughout the year
DIRECTOR: RUBY MILDRED KING
New Location: 6367 Wilshire Blvd., Opposite Carthay Center
Tel. ORegon 5303

The Girls' Collegiate School 34th Year
NEWLY LOCATED IN THE COUNTRY
Boarding and Day School. Accredited East and West. Out-Door Life a Reality. 50-acre estate. All sports. Saddle Horses. New Buildings. Italian type. L. A. Office, "Ask Mr. Foster" Information Service in Robinson's Dept. Store at Seventh Street and Grand Ave., Tel. BR 4701.
Glendora, Calif. Miss Parsons and Miss Dennen, Principals

Westridge
A COLLEGE PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS. ACCREDITED.
Primary, Intermediate and Academic Departments.
MARY L. RANNEY, AMIE C. RUMNEY, Principals.
324 Madeline Drive, Pasadena, California Telephone Wakefield 5276

The Elliott School for Girls
Residence and Day School.
Ideal Home Life Character Building
Superior Educational Advantages. Sub-Primary through Eleventh Grade.
Martha Collins Weaver, M. A., Principal. Pico Blvd. at Grammercy Place.
EMpire 5347

ARE YOU TIRED OF ALL YOUR OLD VASES?
In our new shipment of Nabeul Pottery you will find many shapes you have never seen before, all decorated with soft, pleasing patterns that are easy to live with.
THE SOUKS OF TUNIS
Pasadena: In the patio of the Community Playhouse
Beverly Hills: In the Arcade, 450 Beverly Drive
Santa Barbara: In the Street of Spain, 29 de la Guerra Studios

FINE PAINTINGS
STENDAHL ART GALLERIES
AMBASSADOR HOTEL LOS ANGELES

GREENWOOD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
5928 Franklin Avenue, Hollywood
Select Resident and Day School
Lawns, Tennis Courts, Outdoor Swimming Pool. Special advantages in music, under Mrs. Elsa Spencer.
Principals:
Mrs. M. Greenwood, Newnham College, Cambridge
H. F. Greenwood, A. B., Corpus Christi College, Cambridge
Telephone HOlly 2886

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

OFFICERS:

MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President

MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President

MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, Sec. Vice-Pres.

MRS. ISAAC HAMPSHUR JONES, 3rd Vice-Pres.

MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Vice-Pres.

MRS. JAMES REED, Secretary

MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treas.

MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

COMMUNITY HOUSE AND DAY NURSERY

"All for Service—And Service for All"

MONTHLY BULLETIN

WHAT THE LEAGUE DOES

In response to several requests from California Southland readers as to just what the Assistance League does, the following summary is being submitted:

The Assistance League is engaged in caring for the children of working mothers in its Day Nursery and in the rehabilitation, through its several self-help departments, of men and women who find themselves temporarily in distress or permanently incapacitated.

The maintenance needs, above the funds raised in its revenue-producing departments, are supplied by the Community Chest. The work is administered by interlocking departments, all of which are strict in adherence to the fundamental principle that the best help that can be given the needy is an opportunity to help themselves. The departments and their work are:

The Day Nursery: The Day Nursery cares for the children of mothers who are working or looking for work. Charges for this care are based on the parents' ability to pay. If they are unable to pay, the children are cared for free of charge. Few of our children's mothers have been able to pay more than 10c per day for a child's care, including its hot noon-day meal and milk in the afternoon. Last year eight thousand days care were given at a cost of eighty-nine cents per child per day. Fees received from mothers amounted to about one-fifth of the expense.

The Day Nursery is located in a small wooden building belonging to the League, and located at 5612 DeLongpre Avenue. Here about thirty-five children, ranging in age from one to ten years are cared for daily. Mothers who must work bring their children to the nursery in the morning and call for them in the evening when the day's work is done, knowing that they have been tenderly cared for and kept happy all day. At noon the children are given a hot meal of good wholesome food and in the afternoon each child has his milk.

Good Samaritan Committee: The principal aim of the Good Samaritan Department is to keep themselves in readiness to respond to the call for assistance from those who have known better days, to whom adversity is a new experience and who shrink from asking charity. No matter how many public relief agencies there are, there will always be those whose problems are as critical, whose suffering is even more acute, who cannot bring themselves to stand in line with the more or less chronic poor to ask for aid. To serve these few supersensitive people is not easy; they find it difficult to allow others to plan for them; they seldom state their cases fully. These call upon a worker for infinite patience and understanding, yet to help them seems so worth while.

With the employment of a trained social worker in January, 1925, the Good Samaritan Committee, which had been organized to answer the call of those in need, was placed on a footing with the recognized casework agencies. The work of this department is not confined to any district, it is called upon to take cases in all sections of Los Angeles from Owensmouth to Huntington Park, from Belvedere to Culver City. The work developed so rapidly that at the present time there is a full time social worker who does most of the outside work and a part time casework supervisor.

During the first year a total of 451 cases were handled affecting approximately 1000 individuals, 360 of which were children.

This department does all the investigating for family relief and for the Day Nursery, in addition to its regular case work.

No one who comes to the Assistance League is turned away, many are referred to agencies better suited to meet their particular problems, but all have a hearing and the story of everyone is kept confidential.

CALENDAR

Oct. 5, 12:45 P. M.—Round Table Luncheon

Oct. 5, 10:30 A. M.—Meeting of the Board of Directors.

Oct. 7, 10:30 A. M.—Meeting of the Good Samaritan Committee.

Oct. 12, 10:30 A. M.—Meeting of the Executive Committee.

Oct. 12, 9:30 A. M.—Meeting of the Day Nursery Committee.

Oct. 19, 10:30 A. M.—Meeting of the Executive Committee.

Oct. 21, 10:30 A. M.—Meeting of the Good Samaritan Committee.

Oct. 26, 10:30 A. M.—Meeting of the Executive Committee.

Employment: Unemployment is the principal problem; the father of the family out of work for months and too proud to ask for assistance until all funds have been exhausted, the deserted or widowed mother trying to hold her little family together, or the convalescent unable to do heavy or confining work. This year, up to October 1st employment was secured for 165, representing for the most part, work for professional or trained people—many excellent, permanent positions.

The Wilmington Branch: A branch of the Assistance League is located in Wilmington with a trained worker in charge. There a Thrift Shop branch is maintained and a regular program of family relief and welfare activities is carried on. In Wilmington, a waterfront town, the work is chiefly among foreigners and the very poor.

The Thrift Shop: The purpose of the Thrift Shop is to assist those of meagre means to purchase clothes and materials at a nominal sum. The appeal is made to the public to give to the Thrift Shop any clothing, household articles, bric-a-brac, in fact anything and everything is wanted. These are cleaned, put into shape and sold at a very low price. In the shop are beautiful things as well as worn clothes, giving an opportunity for people of many classes to buy. The mother with a small income and a large family to provide for, comes to the shop, buys a dress or out of date suit of clothes and creates from that a dress for the small daughter or a suit of clothes for the little son, at a cost far under the price at which she might purchase them ready made. Motion picture extras are regular customers at the shop and often find there articles of costume which enable them to secure work.

In case of dire need children are outfitted with clothing from the Thrift Shop free of charge. Whole families when in distress are supplied without charge with household necessities from the Thrift Shop.

Thousands of garments were sent to Santa Barbara after the earthquake.

Shut-in Department: The Shut-in Department helps invalids and other shut-ins to dispose of various articles that they make. A special show case in the Woman's Exchange displays for sale the various handiwork of the shut-ins. Invalids who may be moved are taken for automobile rides and a measure of happiness is carried to as many as possible through visits and gifts.

Tiny Tim: The Tiny Tim Endowment Fund is endowing children's beds in local hospitals. The revenues for this come from floral memorial funds given in lieu of sending flowers at time of death, and from other sources.

Floral Memorial Funds: The Assistance League acts as an intermediary through which checks may be sent to designated charities in lieu of sending flowers at time of death, the League informing those concerned of the remembrance.

The Woman's Exchange: The Woman's Exchange is located in the Community House at 5604 DeLongpre avenue, with a branch at 833 S. Flower street. The aim of the department is to help men and women help themselves. All kinds of handicraft may be consigned to this department where it is sold for the owners. Articles of beauty, and usefulness are on sale at the exchange. Self-respecting people who find themselves out of funds entirely, bring to our exchange some of their prize possessions, placing them on sale at the League instead of taking them to the pawn shop. In many instances through the sale of some handicraft women have been put in touch with places where they could secure work.

During the year 1925 the Woman's Exchange in its Community House Shop and the branch shop at 839 S. Flower St., disposed of $8,128.04 worth of merchandise. A small commission was charged for handling these goods; the net profit to the League, after expenses were paid, was $1,525.47, all of which was expended in charitable activities of the League.

Film Location Bureau: The Motion Picture Industry, one of the two largest industries in southern California, has a constant need for private properties in the filming of pictures.

Taking advantage of this need, the Assistance League established the Film Location Bureau. This bureau functions on a purely business basis as a clearing house between the property owners and the motion picture companies. The owners list their properties exclusively with the bureau, authorizing the bureau to handle them for filming purposes with all companies. The bureau is operated by an experienced director and a committee from the League. A protection to the property is assured both by contract and by personal supervision at the time of filming. A fee is charged the motion picture company for the use of the property; one-third of which goes to the League, and the remaining two-thirds is turned over to any public charity which the owner of the property may designate. The whole amount may be assigned to the League if the owner so desires. This allows personal property to earn money for charity, and influences many people to list their properties with the bureau who otherwise would not consent to their being used by the motion picture companies.

Tea Room: On the second floor of the Community House the League operates a tea shop for the convenience of its patrons, the profits of which go into the various charitable works of the League. The tea room is patronized by motion picture actors and directors. Every noon there is a colorful gathering of men and women in costume and make-up. The tea shop is a valuable asset to the League in that it attracts visitors whose attention is also called to the other departments in the Community House. A monthly Round Table luncheon is held in the tea room to which the public is invited. Some well-known speaker always addresses this group on a topic of current issue.

Dance!

at the

Ambassador

Cocoanut Grove

to the Entrancing Music of

COCOANUT GROVE ORCHESTRA

Under the Leadership of Ray West

SPECIAL NIGHTS Every Tuesday

COLLEGE NIGHTS

With Dancing Contest every Friday.

Tea Dances

every Saturday at 4:00 in the Fiesta Room, Tea Service $1.00

Fall Draperies Lend Warmth

RICHLY covered draperies—reds and blues against a black background will add much to the coziness of your living and dining rooms during the Fall and Winter. There are many interesting new fabrics and many new ways of hanging them. Come in and let us help you plan and make your plain curtains free!

(Second Floor—Coulter's)

Coulter Dry Goods Co.

FOUNDED in 1876

Seventh Street at Olive

FLORNINA

95 South Los Robles Ave.
Pasadena, California

Dear Madam:

We have made the most marvelous selection of Gowns—both formal and informal, Dresses for street, and Frocks for sports from exclusive couturiers at home and abroad for the Fall and Winter season.

They are now on display in our salon for your approval, and your early visit is anticipated.

Cordially yours,

Louise Brown Hollister

P. S.—Be sure to see the exquisite hand-made underwear—the work of the nuns in Belgium.—L. B. H.

Unique in its Atmosphere

Each morning a refreshing shower. A joy at forty miles an hour.

Golden State Limited East

The luxurious and congenial environment of an ocean liner translated to railroad travel.

Rock Island

Southern Pacific Lines

A "comfy" lounge for women planned. A kind of traveling "no man's land."

Leave Los Angeles 12:01 p.m. [via Southern Pacific]; San Diego 10:45 a.m. [via S.D.&A.]; arrive Chicago 10:00 a.m. third day [via Rock Island].

Thru Pullman daily from Santa Barbara 8:00 a.m. [via Southern Pacific].

For tickets, reservations personal service, call on

Southern Pacific City Ticket Office, 937 State St., Santa Barbara, Calif., Phone 243; or address B.F. Coons, General Agent, Rock Island Lines, 609 Van Nuys Bldg., Los Angeles, Calif.

Mediterranean style fireplace, in a corner of the cosy Lounge at the Golf Club House—Palos Verdes Estates.

Palos Verdes~A Beautiful Suburb!

YOU might search the entire length and breadth of wonderful California and not find a place so fortunate in either its beauty of location and climate, or its completeness as a residential community.

To begin with, Nature herself endowed Palos Verdes with some of California's finest ocean views—of silver beaches stretching for miles into the purple distance. Here also are mountain vistas extending, range on range, from Santa Monica to the snow-tipped Sierras. Busy valley cities are spreading over the flat lands at your feet, while all around you on the sloping hillsides of this romantic domain, are numberless canyons, mesas, knolls—each with its "private view"—ideal spots for the homes of those who love the blue ocean and the warm grey tints of the mountains.

Master builders, indeed, are the builders of Palos Verdes! Every foot of development, every individual dwelling, every piece of construction has been made to conform to surrounding beauty. Nothing that Nature gave has been lost. Nothing unsightly or undesirable will ever have a place in Palos Verdes. It is in very truth The City Beautiful.

WE ARE ANXIOUS FOR YOU TO SEE PALOS VERDES—See it today!—it will tell you its own story!

PALOS VERDES

4½ miles of California's finest shore line

5TH FLOOR LANE MORTGAGE BUILDING, 8TH AND SPRING STREETS, LOS ANGELES

JAY LAWYER, Gen. Mgr. BANK OF AMERICA, Trustee

C.S.10-26

PACIFIC GARDENS .·. CONSERVATION AT HOME

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

"Evening Light at Twenty-nine Palms" From a Painting by Katherine J. Hunley

This Painting of the California Desert is now hung in The Stendahl Galleries, Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles.

No. 83 NOVEMBER, 1926 25 Cents

AN IDEA as old as is human effort! It is the very law of nature and the instinct of mankind to unite in working for a common cause. If the cause is good, if the desire is sincere and the effort is well directed, society will be benefited and the effort justified.

THIS principle of collaboration is the fundamental concept of the Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles, founded five years ago for the definite purpose of advancing the art of Architecture. To this end its members are contributing their individual abilities to the Association for collective service in the design and execution of public buildings.

TO BETTER architectural training and practice, the Association is striving to encourage the study of Art and Architecture, to afford more adequate library facilities and to bring to public attention the value of the Profession to the community.

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

Makes A Distinctive Christmas Present from California

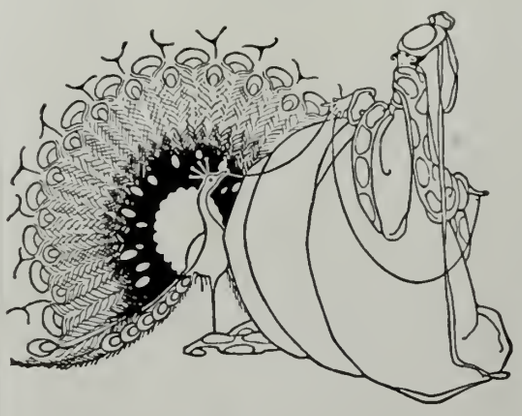
SOME of our subscriber-friends send as many as ten to twenty new names in at this time of the year. We attend to all details—sending the Christmas number, and a card announcing you as the giver, and then SOUTHLAND every month for a year.

The next twelve numbers promise to be even more interesting, more Californian, and with more good looking pictures than any of the past. They take the place of those letters you have never found time to write—"back home."

PLEASE WRITE THE ADDRESSES PLAINLY; WE DO EVERYTHING ELSE.

Make Checks to

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
Pasadena, California



THE PASADENA POST OFFICE WILL SEE THAT WE RECEIVE THEM.

SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT,
CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

Royal Laundry Company

Pasadena, California

COLORADO 4311 RAYMOND AT BELLEVUE

Lenz HAT Studio

643-645 East Colorado St.
Pasadena, Cal.
Near the New Community Playhouse
Phone Fair Oaks 573

THE BATCHELDER TILES

BATCHELDER-WILSON COMPANY

We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

2633 Artesian Street

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Santa Maria Inn

SANTA MARIA, CALIF.

A HOME-LIKE INN, upkept with home-like neatness for the convenience of wayfarers.
Every room with bath. Halfway between Los Angeles and San Francisco on the Coast Highway.
Write or telegraph for reservations.

FINE PAINTINGS

STENDAHL ART GALLERIES

AMBASSADOR HOTEL LOS ANGELES

California Is Discovering the Other Side of the Mediterranean at

THE SOUKS OF TUNIS

Pasadena: In the Patio of the Community Playhouse.
Beverly Hills: In the Arcade, 450 Beverly Drive.
Santa Barbara: "In the Street in Spain," 29 de la Guerra Studios

Announcing The Chief

New Santa Fe train de-luxe
Los Angeles to Chicago
extra fast
extra fine
extra fare

STARTING NOVEMBER 14th

SIXTY-THREE HOUR schedule only two business days enroute.

Santa Fe Ticket Offices & Travel Bureaux

221 South Broadway, LOS ANGELES
Santa Fe Station, PASADENA
915 State Street, SANTA BARBARA
300 Broadway, SAN DIEGO

Dance! at the Ambassador Cocoanut Grove

to the Entrancing Music of

COCOANUT GROVE ORCHESTRA

Under the Leadership of Ray West

SPECIAL NIGHTS Every Tuesday

COLLEGE NIGHTS

With Dancing Contest every Friday.

Tea Dances

every Saturday at 4:00 in the Fiesta Room, Tea Service $1.00

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertainments, etc., for the calendar pages are free of charge and should be mailed to Ellen Leech, Associate Editor, 544 South El Molino Avenue, Pasadena, at least two weeks previous to date of issue, the fifth. No correction can be guaranteed if they are received later than that date. CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, California. One dollar and twenty-five cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be changed as many times as desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the change is made.

Entered as second class matter, July 28, 1919, at the Post Office at Pasadena, California, under act of March 3, 1879.

Clubs

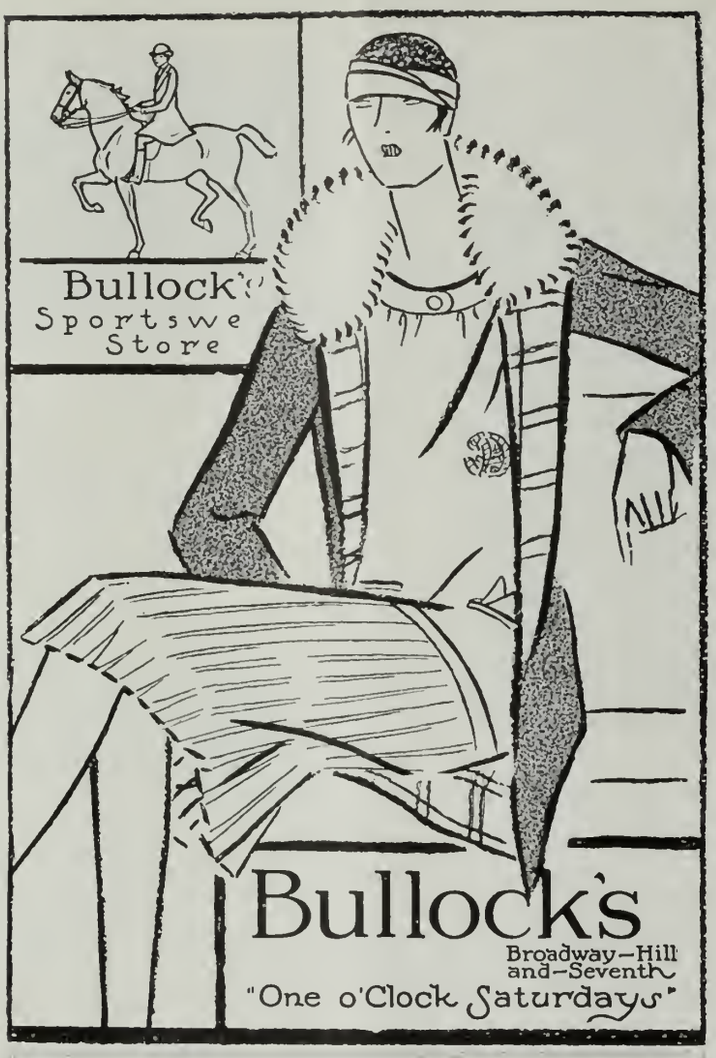
VALLEY HUNT CLUB, PASADENA:
The formal season opens with November and the following announcements cover the programs of the month:
November 1st 1:00 o'clock. Bridge luncheon. Hostesses: Mrs. Everett P. Babcock, Mrs. Horace Donnell.
November 8th—2:30 o'clock. Bridge and Mah Jongg Tea. Hostesses: Mrs. Paul Loveland, Mrs. Benjamin O Williams.
November 15th—2:30 o'clock. Bridge and Mah Jongg Tea. Hostesses. Mrs. J. Dawson Thompson, Mrs. John O. Seibert.
November 22nd—2:30 o'clock. Bridge and Mah Jongg Tea. Hostesses: Mrs. James Burton, Mrs. Laurence Macomber.
November 29th—2:30 o'clock. Bridge and Mah Jongg Tea. Hostesses: Mrs. Stanley Brooks, Mrs. H. H. Beckwith.

ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB, PASADENA:
The afternoon bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been discontinued for the season, but tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged, followed by tea.
Table d'hote dinner served in dining room every Sunday from 12 to 3 p. m.

LOS ANGELES COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.
Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 .p m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month.
Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturday during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.



MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday in each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Dancing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday.
Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.

LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week, Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal. Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL COUNTRY CLUB:
A dinner dance is arranged for the tbird Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a. m., and not before two p. m.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB, SANTA BARBARA:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A recent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

Where the Treasures of a Collector May Be Purchased as Gifts

A. Schmidt & Son

For Fifty-six Years

IMPORTERS OF ANTIQUE AND MODERN SILVER AND Sheffield Plate, Fine China and Glass

2320 W. Seventh St., Los Angeles

391 E. Colorado St., Pasadena

Boston New York Washington

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a special luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served.

PALOS VERDES GOLF CLUB: Offers an eighteen hole, all grass, seaside course, delightful for all the year play, open to residents and their guests. Lunch and dinner served every day. Tea and informal bridge may be enjoyed every afternoon.

ENCINO COUNTRY CLUB, VAN NUYS:
Buffet dinner dances every Wednesday evening.
Ladies Golf Thursday mornings.
Thursday a special luncheon is served, followed by bridge. Afternoon Tea 4:30. Luncheon and dinner served every day. Special luncheons, dinners, teas and bridge parties may be arranged for as desired.

PASADENA GOLF CLUB:
Wednesday is Ladies' Day, with cards and mahjongg from two to four-thirty, when tea is served.
Dinner is served on Sunday from five-thirty to seven-thirty. The usual luncheon and dinner service prevails throughout the week.

Art

LOS ANGELES MUSEUM OF HISTORY, SCIENCE AND ART, Exposition Park, announces the following exhibitions for November: Colonial Exhibition(antiques—furniture, etc.); etchings, block prints and water colors by Blanding Sloan; fictile ivories; etchings and drawings by Fred Monhoff; water colors by American Indian School children; collection, Matisse prints. Saturday Afternoon Lectures: auspices of Museum Patrons' Association, three o'clock.
November 6th Open date.
November 13th Mrs. I. M. Spaulding, "Early American Furniture Manufacturers."
November 20th One act play and lecture by Mrs. A. M. Goldsmith—"Lights and High Lights."
November 27th "Jedediah Strong Smith, Pathfinder of the "Sierras" by Dr. Owen C. Coy.

AINSLEE GALLERIES, Barker Bros., Los Angeles, announce for the month an interesting exhibition of the work of William Keith; also November 1 to 15, paintings by Leland Curtis; and November 16 to 30, paintings by Donna Schuster. A group of bronze pieces by Carl Eldh will add beauty and interest to the galleries, and the usual exhibition of the work of California painters will be found in the large display room.

THE BILTMORE SALON, in the Los Angeles Biltmore, will continue the Jean Mannheim show through November 7th. This is a delightfully varied selection of California landscapes. Hanson Puthuff will show a collection of Arizona and California subjects, Nov. 8-29.

KEIVITS GALLERY, Vista del Arroyo Hotel, Pasadena, will show during the month the work of Eastern artists, including Murphy, Blakelock, Daingerfield, and Chase, also the work of Western men. The European paintings to be shown are by Jozef Israels, Willem Maris, Evert Pieters, William Van Nieuwenhoven, Favai, Blomme, and others of equal interest. The gallery is open in the evenings.

THE WEST COAST ARTS INCORPORATED held the sixth annual exhibition of paintings last month at the Southby Salon, 424 North Larchmont Blvd. A jury made up of Arthur Hill Gilbert, Paul Lauritz and Fitch Fulton awarded the following prizes and medals: The Minnie Tingle Memorial Prize of $125 went to Donna Schuster for "In My Garden." The Minnie Tingle Memorial Prize of $75 for landscape went to Lillian Prest Ferguson. The West Coast Arts Gold Medals were awarded to Ruth Peabody for the best figure painting. Ella Hotelling Tanberg for the best flower painting and Bessie Ella Hazen for the best water color.

MAURICE BRAUN exhibited interesting canvases at the Hollywood Woman's Club last month.

THE ARTS AND CRAFTS SOCIETY OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA held the initial dinner of the winter season at the Woman's Club of Hollywood, October 8th. The programs of the year will be of universal interest, including five lectures on Art by S. Macdonald Wright. Three of these lectures were given last month and the remaining two are to be given, November 5th, "Modern Art," and November 12th, "Color," at the Lytell Studio, 546 South New Hampshire street, Los Angeles.

CALIFORNIA ART CLUB held the annual show last month at the Los Angeles Museum, Exposition Park. The Minnie Tingle Memorial Prize for the best landscape in the exhibition was awarded to Ruth Bennet for "The Valley." Honorable mentions were given to Edouard Vysekal for "Young Woman in a Garden," to Mable Alvarez for "The Sisters," and to Roscoe Shrader for "A Wreck." Among the sculptors honorable mention was awarded to Ella Buchanan for "A Mask."

The jury of awards for this show and also for the exhibition of the California Water Color Society consisted of Antony Anderson, Alson Clark and Clarence Hinkle.

PASADENA ART INSTITUTE, Carmelita Gardens, Pasadena, announces the following exhibitions: Room 1, as usual, will show the work of the members of the Pasadena Society of Artists; Room 2, Oils by Colin Campbell Cooper; Room 3, Paintings by Jean Mannheim; Room 4, Oils and Miniatures by Clare Force; Room 5, Block Prints by Frances Gearhart; and Rooms 6 and 7, the West Coast Arts Incorporated.

THE CALIFORNIA WATER COLOR SOCIETY held the seventh annual exhibition at the Los Angeles Museum during October. Donna Schuster was awarded the prize for "The Concert." Honorable mention was awarded Franz A. Brasz for his group of three water colors.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY FAIR, in the Art Department, awarded the following prizes: First prize, in oils, $100, to Benjamin C. Brown, "Sunlight and Shadows," High Sierras. Second prize, $25, to Roscoe E. Schrader, "The Angler." Second prize, $25, to Anni Baldaugh, "King of Hearts." Honorable mentions were awarded, first to Arthur Hill Gilbert, "In Bernardino Wash"; second to Walter Cheever, "Portrait"; third, Millard O. Sheets, "Stone Workers"; and fourth to Ruth Bennett, "One Autumn Day." In water colors, pastels, the first prize, $100, to John Cotton; second prize, $25, to C. Von Schneidau. Second prize, $25, to Henri DeKruif. Honorable mentions were awarded as follows; first, Eduard A. Vysekal, "Reclining Figure"; second, Michi Hashimoto, "The Night and the Morning"; third, Charles A. Smith, "The Golden Pasture"; fourth, Marjorie C. Murphy, "The Turkish Scarf." In sculptures, first prize, $100, to F. Tolles Chamberlin, "Child with Shell"; second, $25 to Burt Johnson, "High Note"; second, $25 to Katherine B. Stetson, "Dancer Making Horns." Honorable mentions were given to, first, Frank C. Wamsley, "Garden Figure"; second, George Stanley, "Head of Young Woman"; third, Andrew Bjurman, "Rest After Toil"; fourth, Stephanie Oliver, "Madonna"; Special Honorable Mention for group, Mrs. Annetta Saint Gaudens.

THE PLAZA HOTEL, Hollywood, under the auspices of the Southby Art Salon, hung during the first half of last month the work of Western artists, and the last half, canvases by Frank Tenney Johnson.

THE ART LEAGUE OF SANTA BARBARA announces two shows for the month: Jack Wilkinson Smith, and Charles M. Russell. The galleries of the Art League are a part of the De la Guerra studios.

CANNELL AND CHAFIN, Inc., 720 West Seventh Street, Los Angeles, will show in their galleries, November 1 to 13, portraits by Ordayne Neale, and from the 15th to the 30th, paintings of flowers by Mrs. Grace Vollmer.

MAX WIECZOREK exhibited in the galleries of the Art League of Santa Barbara last month.

LAGUNA BEACH ART ASSOCIATION sponsored the first art exhibit at the Southern California Fair at Riverside; prizes amounting to $350 were awarded as follows: First prize in oil, to Anni Baldaugh; second to Clarence Hinkle; third to Thelma Hope. Honorable mentions in oil went to Tokio Veyama; to Haldane Douglas; and to Paul S. Sample. In water colors and pastels the first prize was awarded to William A. Griffith; second prize to Michi Hashimoto; and third to Emma Siboni. Virginia Sterrett received honorable mention for modern water color illustration.

DAVID ANTHONY TAUSZKY has taken the studio at 517 Garfield, South Pasadena, just beyond the Adobe Flores, and is preparing for a one-man show at the Ebell Club, Los Angeles, during December. Mr. Tauszky will show a few paintings this month at the Henry Foes Studio, Pasadena Community Theater Building.

E. GRAYSON SAYRE will hold an exhibition at the Wilshire Art Galleries during the month; all of the paintings depicting desert scenes.

PACIFIC COAST ARTISTS will hold the first exhibition, December 3 to January 29, under the auspices of Artland, at the downtown quarters of the Artland Club, Fine Arts Buillding, Seventh and Flower streets, Los Angeles. Work received, November 15 to 20, and must be delivered to Fine Arts Building.

MISS RUTH B. MORAN has gone East with the intention of arranging a memorial exhibition of the work of her father, Thomas Moran. N. A.

THOMAS L. HUNT is sketching and painting at Laguna Beach.

KATHERINE LEIHGTON has sold the twenty portraits of the various chiefs among the Blackfoot Indians, painted this summer, to the Great Northern Railroad for a permanent exhibition.

DANA BARTLETT is exhibiting with the American Artists at the Chicago Art Institute, this being the fourth time his paintings have been shown at the Institute. Mr. Bartlett is exhibiting locally at the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce, and is assembling a group of paintings to forward to interested sections of the country.

CHARLES M. RUSSELL, known internationally as a painter of the West, particularly of horses, cowboys, Indians, and wild animals, died at his home in Great Falls, Mont., October 24th.

Chickering
AMPICO

This Beautiful Florentine Chickering-AMPICO is reminiscent of the Italian Renaissance

America's First—America's Finest Piano

Southern California
MUSIC COMPANY
806 and 808 So. Broadway

LAKE ARROWHEAD LODGE
E. K. HDAK, Managing Director.
Mile High—American Plan—Open All Year
Reservations made at 319 Van Nuys Bldg. Tel. VA. 0959, or direct to Lodge. Call Lake Arrowhead Main 1. Rates, $7.00 a day and up, including meals and room.
Dinner Dance Every Saturday Night.

WE offer for investment of Personal or Trust Funds sound Securities returning highest rates consistent with safety.

WILLIAM R. STAATS COMPANY
Established 1887
Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds
311 East Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIF.
Los Angeles San Diego San Francisco

Eleanor and . . . .
Hollingsworth Beach
French and Italian Arts
New shipments have just arrived from France and Italy,—complete Pottery Table Sets,—Antique and Modern Furniture,—French Novelties suitable for Christmas.
630 East Colorado Street Pasadena, California

Music

THE PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA OF LOS ANGELES, W. A. Clark, Jr., founder, Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor, Mrs. Caroline Smith, business manager, will present the usual symphony concerts throughout the month: Thursday evening, the 4th, and Friday afternoon, the 5th, Sunday afternoons, the 14th and 28th, and Thursday evening, the 18th, and Friday afternoon, the 19th. All of these concerts are given in the Philharmonic Auditorium, Fifth and Olive streets, Los Angeles.

PASADENA MUSIC AND ART ASSOCIATION, in the 1926-1927 Artist Series, announces the appearance of the following artists: Galli-Curci, Soprano, Saturday evening, November 27; Russian Symphonic Choir, Wednesday evening, December 8; Maier and Pattison, Duo Pianists, Thursday evening, January 27; Cecilia Hansen, Violinist, Tuesday evening, February 8; Rosa Ponselle, Soprano, Thursday evening, March 10; and Tito Schipa, Tenor, Monday evening, April 11. These concerts will be held in the Pasadena High School Auditorium.

ALICE COLEMAN BATCHELDER, pianist, presents the second of the series of eight Coleman Chamber concerts, Sunday afternoon, November 21, at four o'clock, at the Community Playhouse, Pasadena. The artists are The Mischa Elman String Quartet.

L. E. BEHYMER presents the second concert of the Tuesday evening section of his Philharmonic Courses, November 2. Louis Graveure is the artist.

AMELITA GALLI CURCI will open the Thursday evening course of the Behymer series of concerts, November 11, and will also sing Tuesday, the 16th, at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Fifth and Olive, Los Angeles. The Thursday course will also include the Elman Quartet, November 25, with Mischa Elman at the first violin stand.

REDLANDS COMMUNITY MUSIC ASSOCIATION announces that Hugo Kirchhofer has been reengaged as community sing director. The Redlands Bowl offered very attractive programs throughout the summer: Maude Allan, dancer; Vera Barstow, violinist; Raymonf McFeeters, pianist; and Margaret Messer Morris, soprano, appeared during the season.

THE LOS ANGELES TRIO gave the initial concert of the season in the Biltmore Music Room, October 27. In each concert of the series the Trio will present works never before heard in Los Angeles. The personnel of the trio includes May McDonald Hope, founder and pianist; David Crocov, violinist, and Ilya Bronson, 'cellist.

THE OPERA READING CLUB OF LONG BEACH, Dr. Frank Nagel, director, Mrs. George H. Galbraith, president, opened the season last month with Gounod's "Faust." On November 4th the opera will be "Cavalleria Rusticana."

SAN DIEGO OPERA ASSOCIATION, under the direction of Buron Shyrock, will present "Carmen," November 4th, followed by "Rigoletto," December 2nd. The operas are given in the Russ Auditorium.

PASADENA'S CONCERTS, given by the Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra of Los Angeles, will be given this season in the Main Auditorium of the Pasadena Community Playhouse. Monday evenings at 8:30. The first concert is announced for November 15. There will be six concerts and three soloists.

GLENDALE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Modest Altschuler, director, gave the first of a series of five concerts, last month at Tuesday Afternoon Clubhouse, in Glendale. Leonida Coroni, baritone, was the soloist, giving the Volga Boatman's Song.

THURLOW LIEURANCE, composer and pianist, and who is an authority on Indian tribal music, will appear in concert, under the auspices of the Pasadena Teachers' Association, November 15, in the Pasadena High School Auditorium. Mrs. Edna Wooley Lieurance, wife of the composer, will assist in the entertainment, appearing in different tribal costumes.

THE WOMAN'S LYRIC CLUB, under the direction of J. B. Poulin, will present a program early in the month at the Biltmore, in connection with the opening of the Community Chest Drive. The first concert by the club, of the winter season, will be given at the Philharmonic Auditorium, December 3rd.

THE LONG BEACH SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Leonard J. Walker, director, opened the season at the Municipal Auditorium last month.

THE LOS ANGELES ORATORIO SOCIETY, John Smallman, conductor, will present the three scheduled concerts at the Shrine Auditorium, Los Angeles. This Society was organized fourteen years ago and is recognized as one of the best choral organizations in the country. The first concert will be "The Messiah," December 19, with Riccardo Martin, Fred Patton, Julia Claussen and Blythe Taylor as soloists.

KURT MUELLER piano recital is scheduled for November 10 at the Biltmore.

THE ELLIS CLUB will appear in concert at the Philharmonie Auditorium, Los Angeles, November 3rd.

A CAPPELLA CHOIR, John Smallman, founder and direetor, will give the first concert of the season, November 19th, at the Philharmonie Auditorium, Los Angeles, with Vera Barstow, violinist, as assisting artist.

Announcements

PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYERS announee the plays for the month, and an unusually interesting schedule for the year. November 4 to 13, "In a Garden" by Phillip Barry.

A new production will open every other Thursday evening and will run for nine nights, (8:15) and two matinees (2:30). Matinees on Saturdays.

"The Workshop Productions" open Saturday, November 6th, and will be given every Saturday night thereafter at 8:15 in the Recital Hall of the Playhouse.

WHITTIER COMMUNITY PLAYERS chose "To the Ladies" as the premier performance of the season. Five plays are to be presented during the winter, the remaining four being, "In the Next Room," "You and I," "Capt. Apple Sauce," and "Rosmers Holm." Mrs. Clyde F. Baldwin is the director, and has been since the organization was founded five years ago.

GERTRUDE C. MAYNARD, Junior Past President of the Soroptimist Club, will present the program at the next meeting to be held at the Musie Room, the Biltmore Hotel, Tuesday, November 2nd, 12:00 o'elock sharp. This is to be an informal program on various topies, such as Why Books, Gertrude C. Maynard; Childrens' Book Week, Esther Reynolds; Girl Scouts and Community Serviee, Gertrude C. Maynard; A Permanent Headquarters for Los Angeles Distriet, Federation of Women's Clubs, Mrs. A. H. Montgomery. Flowers and Attendance prize will also be furnished by Mrs. Maynard.

CANNELL AND CHAFFIN, Ine., 720 West Seventh street, will open a speeial Book Room in one of the galleries, in conjunction with the present upstairs library, on or about November 1st. Its purpose is to satisfy the constantly growing demand for books to serve as appropriate gifts, interesting new additions to the home library, choice items for the connoisseur. Recent publications of merit, standard authors in bindings of eharaeter, rare and first editions, illuminated volumes and manuscripts will be included. Mr. Harry V. Horton, who is in charge of this braneh of the shop, has spent several months in New York in eareful selection of interesting items eovering a variety of subjects appealing to the trend of present day thought. A eordial invitation is extended by the eompany to visit the new Book Room and inspect its treasures.

ALINE BARRETT GREENWOOD will give a eourse of her charming eurrent reviews at the Shakespeare Clubhouse, Pasadena, the third Wednesday of each month, opening November 17, through Apirl 20.

PASADENA PUBLIC LIBRARY invites you to five Book Talks, to be given by Helen E. Haines, November, 1926, to March, 1927. Friday evening, November 5, the subject is Personalities and Experienees, Glimpsed in Current Biography.

THE JUNIOR LEAGUE OF Los Angeles is opening a shop on Monday, November 8th, at 641 Caronddet, just off Wilshire Blvd. It will be run entirely by the members of the League, who are cutting and sewing beautiful handmade underwear, negligees and baby things. Besides these there will be many of the new novelties from shops in the East, also jams and jellies. A circulating library will be operated in connection with the shop. The proceeds from the shop and the Horse Show, held once a year at Flintridge, go to support the Home for Convalescent Children, at Lucas and Ingraham streets, Los Angeles. The League hopes to be able to build a new home in which more children can be helped toward normal good health.

The committees for the shop are: Chairmen of Entire Shop: Mrs. Charles Thomas, Mrs. I. Clark Smith. Sewing: Mrs. John O'Melveney. Interior Decoration of Shop: Mrs. E. L. Doheny, Jr. Business, Mrs. William Joyee, Jr.; Operating Supplies, Miss Margerite Schneider; Appraising, Mrs. William Flint; Schedules, Mrs. Van Buren Jarvis; Circulating Library, Miss Mary Milbank.

College Notes

THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA OF LOS ANGELES, dedicated the new site at Westwood, October 25, with impressive ceremonies. The program included addresses by Gov. Richardson, President Campbell of the University of California, Maynard McFie, member of the Committee of Seventeen, which made the original investigation of the Westwood site; William Henry Crocker, Chairman of the Board of Regents; Dr. Ernest Carroll Moore, director of the Southern Branch; and Ned Marr, president of the Associated Students of the State University. The program opened with musie by the university band, followed by an address of welcome hy Dr. Moore. The invocation was then given by Rev. Wilsie Martin. Eaeh speaker emphasized the future of California in edueational and artistic lines and the corresponding need for a greater university on this Western coast.

OCCIDENTAL COLLEGE women will act as hostesses November 12 and 13 to one hundred representatives of the twenty-five Southern California college women's organizations who gather for their annual session in Eagle Rock. Mrs. John W. Urquhart, former state president of the Federation of Women's Clubs, will address the women on the first afternoon of their meetings upon "Open Vistas," a subject dealing with "Women in Relation to Life," the subject of the conferenee. Conferences and discussions will claim the time of the women exeept during social affairs, which inelude a tea to be given by Mrs. Remsen D. Bird, Friday afternoon; a campus dinner and program at Orr Hall gardens the first evening; a luncheon at the Elite in Los Angeles Saturday noon, the Arizona-Oecidental football game in the afternoon, dinner at the Oakmont Country Club and a dance at the campus in the evening.

Other campus events during November aside from regular chapel and lecture meetings, held each week, include rallies before games, the home coming and dance, November 20, following the game with Pomona College; a student volunteer reception in the Y.W.C.A. room for friends in the college and elsewhere and the sophomore-senior party.

Juniors are working upon the play they have chosen for presentation in December, Ibsen's "The Doll's House."

GEORGE S. HUNT

FINE HANDMADE FURNITURE

171 EAST CALIFORNIA STREET

PASADENA

Antique Reproductions
Carved Mantels
Special Doors
Paneled Rooms

FAMED ROUND THE WORLD

". . . in America we take the

Sunset Limited"

In Paris and wherever world travelers gather the Sunset Limited is well known. It is recognized as offering the most in transcontinental travel in the United States.

World travelers know the Sunset Limited's colorful route of historic and romantic interest—daily from San Francisco and Los Angeles, through the picturesque Southwest and Old South to New Orleans; then by train or by Southern Pacific steamship to New York (meals and berth included in the fare).

Known also to experienced travelers are Sunset Limited's refinements of service—it's handsome observation and club cars, comfortable lounge rooms and shower-baths; its ladies' maid, barber, valet; and its dining cars that specialize in typical southern and western dishes.

Southern Pacific

C. L. McFAUL, Asst. Pass. Traffic Mgr., Los Angeles

Pomona College

THE largest number of musie, drama and lecture events in reeent months will be held on the Pomona College campus during November. Beginning November 1 the unique exhibit of prints by Phillips, Bartlett and Urushibara will be displayed in Remhrandt Hall of Art during the entire month. The exhibit is open to the public each afternoon with the exeeption of Saturdays and Sundays.

The Frank P. Brackett astronomical observatory will be open to visitors Thursday evening, November 4 at 7:15. Professor Frank P. Brackett will welcome visitors at this time.

Program of musieal recitals planned for the month opens on Monday evening, Novemher first in Bridges Hall at 7:15 when Joseph W. Clokey, associate professor of organ at Pomona College and nationally known composer, formerly of Oxford College, will present his opening reeital on the Pomona campus. Mr. Clokey will offer a program of unusual character and variety. On Monday evening, November 8 at 7:15 a song recital will be given by Miss Hope Tabor Ford, instruetor in voice, recently added to the musie faculty.

The Claremont Women's Club offers the second number on its music and lecture eourse, a song recital by Martilla Clark, soprano, at the Women's Club house Friday, November 19 at 8 p.m. The first Chamber Music Society of Claremont, will he held in Bridges Hall of Musie at 7:15 on the evening of Monday, November 29.

"Be Yourself" will be offered as the annual Associated Women Students' show at 8 o'clock on the night of November 12 in Holmes Hall auditorium.

Three lectures have been announced for the month. The third of a series of lectures will be given by Dr. Homer E. Robbins, professor of classical languages, on the subject "Our Debt to Rome," Thursday evening, November 4 in Holmes Hall at 7:15. The lecture is open to the public. The outstanding lecture on the program will be offered by Captain Noel of the Mt. Everest expedition on November 15 at 7:30 p.m. at Holmes Hall. Captain Noel's lecture will be illustrated with the remarkable photographs made on the expedition. Dr. William F. Bade of the Paeifie Schoo! of Religion at Berkeley will present an illustrated lecture in Holmes Hall auditorium at 7:15, November 18.

Three important eonferenees will be held on the eampus, beginning with the November meeting of the Southern California seetion of the American Mathematical Association which will luneh at the Claremont Inn at noon on Saturday, November 6 and will hold its regular meeting in the afternoon in Rembrandt Hall. On Wednesday, November 10 the annual presidents' eouneil of the Los Angeles district federation of women's clubs will meet in Pomona under the auspiees of the Ebell Club. Following the session the 1500 delegates of Los Angeles, Ventura, Santa Barbara, San Luis Ohispo and Inyo Counties will be entertained by Pomona College in Bridges Hall of Music with a short organ recital to be followed by a tour of the campus buildings.

The annual Friends of the Mexican conference opens its sessions on Saturday morning November 13. More than 300 men and women in the Southwest, interested in Mexiean problems will be present.

Thanksgiving recess begins at 4:15 p.m., November 24 and ends on Monday, November 29 at 7:30 a.m.

The usual college-community motion picture program will be held each Tuesday and Wednesday evenings.

OLD BOOKS PRINTS

TECOLOTE BOOK SHOP

New and Standard Books

25 DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS
SANTA BARBARA

AUTHORS & AUTHORS'
agents are invited to submit book-length material to

The Guild Santa Barbara

HISTORY BIOGRAPHY FICTION
TRAVEL SCIENCE ART

Acceptable material will be published on the usual royalty basis without expense to the author

129 EL PASEO DE LA GUERRA
SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

Translations from the Spanish are particularly welcome

EL ENCINO
On Coast Highway, Montecito, Calif.
Luncheon Supper
Afternoon Tea
Dinner Served on Order
Limited Number of Over Night Guests Accommodated

Southland Numbers

(Continued from No. 82)

IN order to do its bit to help builders' exchanges and woman's clubs throughout the state in the effort for good design, California Southland presents the following issues which have featured Santa Barbara architecture and the work of our best architects in other cities.

They are on file at this office and can be ordered by number at 20 cents apiece.

No. 21, Sept., 1921. Subjects:
California Architecture, Prentice Duell.
A House by Reginald Johnson.
Wallace Neff's First House.

No. 22, Oct., 1921. Subjects:
A gabled house, H. F. Withey, Arch.
From Spanish Mission to Spanish Modern, Elmer Grey, Arch.
A stucco House by H. H. Whiteley, Arch.
Hotels by Myron Hunt.
A Gabled House, Brockway, Arch.

No. 23, Dec., 1921, Subjects:
Flat roofed house by Harwood Hewitt, Interiors, Cannell and Chaffin.
A House by E. T. Freeze, Arch.

No. 25, Jan., 1922. Subjects:
Pictures of Casa Adobe.
Flintridge Country Club, Myron Hunt,
The Work of Marston and Van Pelt,
A House by Soule, Murphy & Hastings, Arch., Santa Barbara.
A Pergola by Myron Hunt.

No. 26, Feb., 1922. Subjects:
Arches of San Juan Capistrano, Alson Clark, Painter.
A Residence by Elmer Grey.
Ramona's Marriage House, San Diego.
A Wee House of Plaster, Witmer & Watson, Arch.

No. 27, March, 1922. Subjects:
Public Buildings by Wm. Lee Woollett,
California Junior Republic, Myron Hunt,
An English Cottage by Fredk. Kennedy,
A Country Estate by W. L. Woollett,

No. 28, April, 1922, Subjects:
Adobe Flores. Restored by Carleton M. Winslow, Arch.
Bellevedere by Kaufman, Arch.
Some English Cottage Designs by Kenneth Gordon.

No. 29, May, 1922. Subjects:
A picture of Casa Adobe Window Shutters.
Woman's Club Houses, Hunt and Burns, Arch.
A Wee House of Wood, Witmer and Watson, Arch.
The Huntington Library, Myron Hunt,
A First Spanish House by Reginald Johnson, Arch.
Twelve Typical Inexpensive Cottages in Pasadena.

No. 31, July, 1922. Subjects:
Sketch of a flat roofed house in New Mexico, Howell Brown.
A Handsome House for the City, Mott M. Marston, Arch.

No. 32, Aug., 1922. Subjects:
Picture of Camulos Rancho Hacienda House. Virginia Calhoun, Authority on Spanish California.
The University Club, Allison and Allison,
A House by Wallace Neff, Arch.

No. 33, Sept., 1922. Subjects:
The Work of James Osborne Craig,

No. 24, Oct., 1922. Subjects:
Sandyland Cottages by James O. Craig,
A Town Residence by Winsor Soule,
The Work of the Plans and Planning Commission, Sta. B. Com. Arts Assn.
A Villa in the Hills, Julia Morgan, Arch
Suggestions for Small Houses, J. W. Chard.

No. 35, Nov., 1922. Subjects:
The Kitchen of the Model Casa Adobe.
A Ranch House, H. C. Chambers, Arch.
The Subdivision of the Hillside, C. P. Day, C. E.

No. 36, Dec., 1922. Subjects:
The University Club, Allison and Allison,
European Roof Lines, France, Spain.
A Farm Cottage at Chino Junior Republic.
A Convenient Four-room plan, Washington State College Competition.

No. 37, Jan., 1923. Subjects:
A Brick Cottage, Arthur Kelly, Arch.

No. 38, Feb., 1923. Subjects:
San Fernando Mission Park.
Studio Homes Along the Arroyo.
A Good Small House, Sumner Spaulding,

No. 39, Mar., 1923. Subjects:
The State Capitol at Sacramento.
Ojai and Orange, beautiful small town plans, Small House Service L.A.A.C., Clifford Truesdell, Pres.
Architectural Models by Elizabeth Stines.

No. 40, April, 1923. Subjects:
A Fine Old Adobe on the Cumulus Rancho, Ventura County.
The Architect and the Crafts, by Wm. Woollett, Arch.
A California City House, Hunt and Burns, Arch.
City Plans of Pasadena, San Francisco and Los Angeles.
A Hillside House by Webber, Staunton and Spaulding. (To Be Continued)

SANTA BARBARA

DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS

Entrance to El Paseo

Salud y Pesetas y Tiempo para Gastarlos

EL PASEO DE LA GUERRA
THE "STREET IN SPAIN"
HISTORIC DE LA GUERRA HOUSE
SHOPS OF DISTINCTION
and
"EL PASEO"

Where One May
Lunch Out of Doors or Dine

Colorful Flower Pots
in Plain Glazes and Decorated designs using Blues, Yellows and Greens.

Triana Puebla Treviso
Prices and Sizes on Hand
From Triana, Spain—Decorated

5 inch	$2.00	8 inch	$6.00
6 "	3.00	9 "	9.00
		10½ inch	$12.00

From Puebla, Mexico Decorated		From Treviso, Italy Plain Glazes
6 inch	$ 3.50	5 inch	$1.00
10 "	7.50	6 "	1.25
12 "	15.00	7 "	1.75

Just the thing for Patios, Stairways, Balconies, and Gardens. Mail orders filled, prepaid.

ROBERT L. LEWIS
Studio 5, El Paseo
Santa Barbara, California

Sun Kissed
Ocean Washed
Mountain Girded
Island Guarded
SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA
Furnished houses for rent of all sizes and prices in Santa Barbara and Montecito. Properties of all kinds for sale. Literature and maps free. Live in "The Home Paradise of the World." Communicate with
H. G. CHASE, Santa Barbara, Calif.

Alice Coleman Batchelder, Pianist, Presents the 1926-1927 Series of Eight
Coleman Chamber Concerts
In the Main Auditorium of The Pasadena Community Playhouse
Second Concert
Sunday Afternoon
Nov. 21, at Four o'Clock

Mt. LOWE
"Earth has no finer view to show."

Mt. LOWE TAVERN and Cottages
Enlarged and Improved

at the terminus of this World-Famous Trip afford a most delightful retreat for a long or short sojourn at reasonable rates

5 Trains Daily at convenient hours - from Main St. Station Los Angeles

$2.50 Round Trip Rate

For information and Reservations apply
Pacific Electric Ry.
Information Bureau Phone MEtual 4100 - TRinity 3661

HOTEL GREEN

A well ordered Residential and Tourist Hotel of peculiar excellence. Open all year. Moderate rates. Apartments by the month.

The Green Teapot is Open

CHARLES B. HERVEY, Proprietor

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Italian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

KIEVITS GALLERIES
Vista del Arroyo Hotel, Pasadena
European and American Paintings

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - - Editor and Publisher
ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - - Associate Editor

NO. 83 NOVEMBER, 1926 Vol. VIII

CONTENTS

	PAGE
EVENING LIGHT AT TWENTY-NINE PALMS.....Cover Design From a painting in oil by Katherine J. Hanley
SOUTHLAND CALENDAR	4, 5, 6
BEAUTY LURES TOURISTS TO SPAIN.....Sumner M. Spaulding	9
CONSERVING THE BEAUTY OF LOS ANGELES' OLD PLAZA	11
PACIFIC COAST GARDENS.....Ervanna B. Bissell	12
JOHN MCCORMACK: HIS HUMAN VALUE.....Jessica K. Seneca	13
PAINTINGS BY KATHRYN W. LEIGHTON.....M. Urmy Seares	14
THE INCURABLE OPTIMIST.....Vera Sadicoff-Goldman, M. D.	15
RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS.....Louise Morgrage	16
THE RESIDENCE OF F. C. FAIRBANKS, ORLANDO ROAD, PASADENA	17
SOUTHLAND OPINION	18-19
SPORTS OLD AND NEW.....Ellen Leech	20-21
BIRDS ACROSS THE CONTINENT.....C. H. Benjamin	22
SANTA MARIA INN, CALIFORNIA	23
THE BULLETIN OF THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB	24
THE LOS ANGELES CHAPTER, A. I. A.	25
A COURSE IN ARCHITECTURE	26-27
SHAKESPEARE AND A DANCER IN LOS ANGELES	28
WINTER SPORTS AT TAHOE TAVERN, CALIFORNIA	29
ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA	30
THE WESTLAKE PARK SHOPPING DISTRICT	33

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.
Copyrighted, 1926, by M. Urmy Seares
Subscription price $2.50 per year, $1.25 one half year
R. B. URMY, JR., Business Manager
MAIL ADDRESS: CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
Advertisers desiring information concerning space or rates may call Fair Oaks 7034 for Publisher's Office
During Press Week, 24th to 30th, call TRinity 1501

Elizabeth Arden's Los Angeles Salon

ELIZABETH ARDEN'S Los Angeles Salon is located on the Seventh Floor of J. W. Robinson Co. Being under the direct supervision of Miss Arden's personal representative one may be assured of the same skill and thoroughness which characterizes the treatments given in Miss Arden's New York and and Paris Salons, and which have made the name of Elizabeth Arden internationally known.

Round the World Cruises
$1250.00 and up
Mediterranean Cruises
$600 and up

Agency for all tours and cruises. Here for your convenience. Let us arrange your reservations.

C. J. JONES STEAMSHIP AGENCY
372 East Colorado St., Pasadena
Phone Terrace 8026

PORTRAITS
BY
PHOTOGRAPHY

Charles S. Seabolt

26 No. Los Robles Avenue,
Pasadena, California

Opposite Maryland Hotel
Terrace 6712

Books

FRED De Vilbiss COMPANY

Twenty-three South Euclid
Pasadena, California

Antiques
JOHN W. CONDIT

Dealer in rare old pieces selected from private homes. Specialist in the proper restoration of heirlooms.

199 S. Fair Oaks Ave., Pasadena
Telephone Terrace 0315-W

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

BEAUTY LURES TOURISTS TO SPAIN

By SUMNER M. SPAULDING, A. I. A.
Photographs by the Author

THE development of natural resources in the United States during the last decade is astounding, particularly in the Southwest, where agriculture has been encouraged, mines developed, oil fields exploited, and ports enlarged. Our local publications have continually presented columns of statistics to show the magnitude of this commercial growth.

Following in the wake of these great strides in the business world are many men who have amassed great fortunes. Wealth often stimulates an interest in the fine arts, and creates the desire to be surrounded by the finer things of life; and if these surroundings are not available in one locality the individual searches until a place is found which approaches his ideal.

The opportunity of creating an ideal community is confined to locations having mountains, sea, and mild climate, all three of which are available in California. Common sense therefore suggests that we design our towns and cities in such a manner as to make living conditions as attractive as possible. By so doing and at the same time preserving the natural charm of our country we can expect to retain our most desirable citizens and attract those from other parts. In our struggle for commercial development we have neglected this preservation of the natural charm, with the result that while we have basked in the sunshine of self-satisfaction, our hills have been marred by ugly excavations, our trees have been ruthlessly cut down and our main traffic arteries enlarged at the cost of all beauty. The very goose which has been laying our golden eggs is being deliberately killed.

The exodus of Americans to foreign countries is astoundingly increasing. These people are largely people of wealth and culture, who appreciate the best life has to offer and take an active interest in cultural problems. An increasing number of them are purchasing large estates in Europe. The popularity of the Mediterranean coast is growing each year, and that this cote-d'azure is taking great wealth from the Pacific Coast is no idle fancy.

ENTRANCE TO THE COURT SHOWN ON PAGE NINE IN SEVILLE THE TENEMENTS ARE MORE BEAUTIFUL THAN OUR MODERN STREETS

The city of Florence in Italy with its growing American colony is an example which we find repeated in hundreds of European cities. Practically all of the fine villas of Tuscany are owned by highly respected American citizens, who are restoring the buildings, rebuilding the gardens, and at the same time aiding in maintaining the cultural life of the city. When the hurried traveler leaves Florence he waves a fond farewell and vows to return as soon as he can to join the many Americans who call it home. To close our eyes to the reason for this is stupidity. California is naturally as beautiful as Italy. Our mountains, valleys, and seacoast can compare with any. The reason so many Americans are living on foreign shores is obviously because our cities are not attractive. We have advertised our beautiful country to the world, and in our mad rush have not noticed that its beauty is fast becoming a myth. While our great business organizations have been developing our commerce and industry, the thoughtless and misinformed have been permitted to destroy the very features that have made the Southwest famous.

FOUR OF A SERIES OF PHOTOGRAPHS TAKEN BY SUMNER SPAULDING ON A RECENT TRIP THROUGH SPAIN AND ITALY. A STREET IN SEVILLE

Up to the present time our public point of view has considered beauty of only secondary importance, desirable but not necessary to successful civic development. The public must be made to realize the folly of this attitude before we can hope to create cities sufficiently beautiful to draw to Californa the enormous wealth which is now pouring into Europe.

DETAIL OF FOUNTAIN IN THE COURT OF AN OLD PALACE NOW A TENEMENT DISTRICT OF SEVILLE

THE ROUND POINT OF THE PLAZA TO BE SURROUNDED

AMONG the many interesting suggestions made to this journal through his inaugural address and subsequent interview, Mr. Arthur Bent, Engineer, and this year's President of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, gave none which opened more beautiful vistas and bypaths than the plans for a typical Latin-American city in the district near the old plaza of the pueblo de Nuestra Senora la Reina de los Angeles.

Suggested to him by Mrs. Hough, the plan immediately seemed a feasible solution of many problems which have arisen in connection with this part of the city and our guests from the Latin-American countries: and before he left this month for his vacation in Hawaii, the ball was set rolling by his appointment of a committee to investigate the most feasible ways by which this desirable addition to the city might be accomplished. Heading this committee is Mr. John Austin, whose position assures an articulation with the work now going forward in the plans for a new administrative center for Los Angeles. Mr. Austin has been for some time much interested in the idea which, now that it is made public seems the sensible and logical thing.

Certainly it is time that the wise and educated, the students of art and the trained architects of this community bestirred themselves and took as active a part in the building up of the city as do the uneducated and ignorant, the untrained pioneer and the shrewd money-maker.

To give our readers Mrs. Hough's idea we publish her letter, written in response to a request from this journal,

"Editor, California Southland:

"The following are a few of the outstanding advantages Los Angeles would gain by creating at the Plaza a Spanish-Mexican city:

The romance of California is Spanish romance; our city is of Spanish origin—bearing a Spanish name; we advertise our city in Spanish terms and by Spanish illustrations.

Our citizens build themselves Spanish homes, and yet in the face of all this we allow the originators of all this picturesqueness to be represented in our city by a section which is hideously American.

Below: the interior court, model adobe, Southwest Museum, Los Angeles.

Los Angeles has romance and sentiment enough to wish to preserve the old Church and Plaza, but this is not enough. We must preserve it by respecting its tradition and romance and surrounding it with a setting which is dignified and worthy of it.

By creating at the Plaza a typical Mexican-Spanish city, Los Angeles pays the gracious little compliment to the Latin American people of building them a little city of their own, where they can find conditions as they like them.

First of all a place of this kind would be an international trade center or clearing house for all business between United States, Mexico, Central and South America. It would do a great good towards cementing cordial trade and social relations between these countries. It would furnish Los Angeles with the greatest tourist attraction this city ever had or could have.

That little old Church and Plaza, if properly handled, is one of the greatest assets Los Angeles has. Mexico is a rich, wonderful country and the Mexican people are charming people—desirable neighbors and good friends.

Los Angeles has the largest Mexican population of any city next to Mexico herself.

By building the proper business quarters at the Plaza for the Mexican and South American, we also furnish a place for the American to place on display his goods which are seeking distribution in Mexico, Central and South America.

By reconstructing the Plaza into a gay little Mexican-Spanish city, this one spot would be changed from an ugly weed into the flower of all Los Angeles.

THE OLD PLAZA, AND BELOW, THE CHURCH YARD; TAKEN FOR SOUTHLAND BY OSCAR MAUER IN 1922

Music would play every afternoon in the plaza. The bright colored little market places would offer for sale all the things so attractive to the tourist and ourselves. We could have all the "fiestas" as they have them in Spain and Mexico. We need a fine Spanish hotel and theatre so as to elevate the entire section.

In addition to this little business center or "pueblo", we should have a village of small attractive homes for the Mexican workingman. This also would furnish us with another attraction. The location was selected near Elysian Park.

This project has the approval and endorsement of the Chamber of Commerce, the Pan-American Union at Washington, Mayor Cryer, Mr. Gordon Whitnall (city planning commission), D. W. Pontius (vice-president Pacific Electric Railway Company), R. B. Ball (chief engineer of the Santa Fe), Harry Chandler (The Los Angeles Times), and many other prominent business men and various civic organizations.

I have been working for nine months on it, and first presented the project to Mr. Clarence Matson of the Foreign and Domestic Trade Extension Department of the Chamber of Commerce, and again more recently to Mr. Arthur Bent, its president.

In closing I will quote from the very fine letter which I received from Mayor Cryer:

> If you and your associates with the Chamber of Commerce can bring to a realization the beautiful plan that you have set forth, I am sure that you will have done something worth while for modern Los Angeles and for the generations that are to come.
>
> An historic setting already exists for the plan, and I assure you that the present administration will do whatever may be possible to bring to a realization the plan of a reconstruction of the Spanish-Mexican setting which originally surrounded the beginning of our beautiful city.
>
> Signed GEORGE E. CRYER,
> Mayor.

Thanking CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND for its interest and support in the matter, I am,

Always sincerely,

CHRISTINE HOUGH."

910 N. Serrano Ave., Los Angeles, California. Oct. 17th.

THROUGH GARDEN GATES

ERVANNA BOWEN BISSELL, EDITOR, GARDEN PAGES

THIS GATE, INVITINGLY OPEN, IS SYMBOLIC OF SEATTLE'S HOSPITALITY

HOW softly that title—Pacific Coast Gardens—sounds upon the ear. What pictures it paints before the mind's eye. Pictures, deft of brush, by Memory's fingers; pictures sketched by the printed word's swift strokes, or richly floated on by one who uses words as pigment:

"Poet, that means painter too,
For words are colors rightly laid."

Pacific Gardens suggest California's thousand miles of coastline along which man and Nature has set the land abloom. Think of those cities around San Francisco Bay, how charmingly their gardens climb the hills and look down upon the sea. Northward our thoughts follow the trail between the redwoods and the ocean; by Columbia's River Highway to Portland where the very sidewalks blossom with the rose. Still the Pacific leads us beside towns and villages and into Puget Sound where Seattle sits atop our map growing many plants prized in the Southland. Seattle has views and climate too, with stately trees and fresh water for good measure. No Seattle gardener looks upon the ocean mourning because it is salt. She dips her sprinkling-pot in some inland lake or better still, taps the spring that bubbles in a corner of her city lot.

Seattle gardens are doubly dear because we were guided through them by Mrs. Alexander Baillie. Her pride in their beauty kept pace with our enthusiasm. We shall never forget the day she took us to Tacoma's gardens, each one bordering on a lake and all with Mount Rainier, white-turbaned and cloud-wrapped, standing serenely aloof behind them. Lest we miss the crowning achievement of the Seattle garden club, she ended our day with a sunset drive between the young elms of the Memorial Highway. That day has become a memorial of a garden friendship; "and here's 'Rosemary,' that's for remembrance."

This page's title picture is symbolic of an hospitality we hope to see repeated from Seattle to San Diego. Every gate an open welcome to our Pacific Coast gardens. And why not? Much is said in business about the "glad hand." Why not offer, instead, a garden at hand?

Last month the Bankers' convention came to California—not on a gold rush. The New York delegation traveled by way of Seattle down the coast. We don't know what the men were interested in, probably hazards and the green tee. But we are sure that the wives wanted to see gardens. A telegram came to us saying, "What gardens do you think we may see?"

What joy to reply "Tomorrow, Mr. George O. Knapp lets you walk in Aready!" Could any host do more?

Way down south in Alabama, news travels from door to door (the back door) by grapevine telegraph. How thrilling to have our greetings from this Southland go up the coast by rose-vine messengers, every petal sweetly breathing, "Howdy, howdy; Come again!"

If you had left winter in Bangor, Maine, think of your pleasure in arriving at Piedmont in April. Imagine finding Mrs. Moffatt's border filled with mauve violas, Iris Pallida, Dalmatica and canary-bird gladiolus. What would you do?

If you lived in, Oh, perhaps Santa Barbara, you'd go straight home to copy it.

Piedmont sets us thinking. Mrs. Noble's house hangs like an eyelid upon the face of the hill and its lashes are vines drooping from wall and terrace. We open our eyes as we look. This is the Noble way of training climbing roses. Can you suggest a better one, Portland? Or Pasadena, how do you prune your roses back?

Our typewriter fairly stutters, so eager is it to share this thought of sharing gardens.

We are not so arrogant as to thank the Lord we are not as other men are, although at times we are grateful we are not where they are. This is the month according to the calendar that we are supposed to be thankful. We can't wait until the last Thursday to offer gratitude. It came bubbling up this morning when we found a white hyacinth in bloom.

Under the trees at Stone Acres, we had a tea party in honor of New England guests in this newer part of our country, we thought it a subtle tribute to use old homespun and great-grandmother's pewter service with her Chelsea china. Its lavendar decorations matched perfectly the blossoms of "blue spirea" in the bowl of rose and cream zinnias. But the fruits, even from oranges down to melons, were grown in Stone Acres garden which only six years ago was wild land covered with sagebrush. California's luscious fruits, ripely furnishing forth New England's tea table, make us grateful for the past and thankful for the present.

MRS. JAMES K. MOFFETT'S PIEDMONT GARDEN WITH MAUVE VIOLAS, LAVENDER IRIS AND YELLOW GLADIOLUS FILLING THE BORDERS

MRS. MARK NOBLE'S HOUSE WHERE PINK ROSES RUN RIOT AND BLUE AND LAVENDER FLOWERS HANG OVER THE TERRACES. PIEDMONT, CALIFORNIA

When Roses Are in Bloom

By FRANCESCA FALK MILLER

These verses won the prize in the Tournament of Roses contest and will be set to music by Carrie Jacobs Bond

There's a Rambler on the trellis
And a wild rose in the hedge,
With a gay and golden Mareehal Neil
Upon the arbor's edge.
There's a Sweetheart bud a-tapping
At the window of my room,
And my heart is singing . . . singing . . .
For the roses are in bloom!

Oh, the crimson of each sunset
And the glowing pink at dawn,
Royal colors of the roses
Holding court upon the lawn.
Oh, the joy, the smiles, the fragranee,
Of a land that knows no gloom;
Just a peaceful, sun-kissed haven
Where the roses are in bloom!

UNDER THE TREES AT STONE ACRES, SANTA BARBARA WHERE CALIFORNIA'S LUSCIOUS FRUITS FURNISH FORTH A NEW ENGLAND TEA TABLE

JOHN McCORMACK: HIS HUMAN VALUE

By JESSICA KATE SENECA

ONE wished, on that evening, that a curtain of soft blue, or grey, might protect the soloists at the Shrine auditorium from their immediate surroundings. The three little black figures, the piano and Mr. Schneider and John McCormack, armed only in their blackness, had a defenseless unprotected look on that stage, what with enormous camels clambering over them at the sides, and large menacing things in the back drop scene. The more distant scenery looked harmless enough, but those tall, foreground pillars had a formidably hostile aspect, and seemed to thrust themselves forward in antagonism to the three performers and their proceedings.

Other features of the great hall had a satisfying and reviving beauty that in a way prepared one for the glowing human values of the evening. A joyous munificence of space and color. Roofed in that entrancing blue from which the revelling eye passed to the lowered lights of the great chandelier, like clustered dewdrops filled with sun. Many little golden arches, little blinded golden windows, which looked on nothing, and from which nothing looked. An unessential gorgeousness; splendors unrooted; allied to no tradition, or ancient ceremonies; supporting no popular illusions of state and grandeur; but boldly snatched from the life of alien lands. Part of the desirable bravery of the world, and here expression of the vitality of a people, desiring life at its surface best.

Though the stimulating emotional effect of the surroundings was hardly in harmony with the classic beauty of Bach's "Let Us but Rest" and Scarlatti's "Caldo Sangue," as the recital progressed and other levels of emotion were touched, things gathered themselves together and pressed upon one's consciousness with an irresistible joyousness and warmth.

Bent over us that deep impassioned blue that at once soothed and urged the spirit. Soft glimmerings of faintly tinted lights playing deliciously upon the sense. From the many little peaked gold arches—perhaps—fair veiled mysterious watchers, delicately still . . . Soul-sweetness of a voice, with its gentleness transforming life. . . An audience how alive! how good to be with! What dramatic beauty in the swift and sudden hush following upon turbulent sound! Clamorous ardor of desire. A beautiful yielding and response. . . Life became all at once real, adorable!

The applause had a sharply metallic sound; clashing of cymbals, re-sounding clangours. The rich tumult of it rises, swells,—then at its wild height drops into utter silence.

And, like a little golden boat with silver sails all set and driven by the wind of its own loveliness, upon that wide stilled sea the voice of John comes gliding.

O blessed voice! true missionary to the heathen heart! Bringing back into our midst faith and love, and tenderness and tears. Where dark pride and scorn? Where bitterness? When from this poor reviled humanity the mask of its vaunted cruelties, hatreds, and greed it seems is lifted, to show beneath the reality of its deep and loving heart. Is not this to be among the true saviours of men?

JOHN McCORMACK, AMERICAN TENOR Peyton, 1922

Sweetest reconciling voice, in which simple humanity seemed glorified. Here the secret of war's ending. Here understanding and the kinship of men. Beneath gifts and learning, achievement and renown, and all the braveries of the soul, here the simple final need, the last deep pleading and reply.

One thought of John as a little boy at school in Ireland being stood upon a table to sing to the visiting Bishop, "Shades of evening, close not o'er us." When he next gave thanks to God one thinks the Bishop must have remembered the young child singing in his prayer. One thought of John four years ago in his New York home, for two days and nights close to death;—this something indescribably precious to men, of which John McCormack himself is but the vehicle, almost withdrawn from the world; heard no more that voice deepening in ways of beauty loving-kindness among men.

. . . . . .

Of the songs of that evening how fantastically exquisite Granville Bantock's "Desolation" inspired by an ancient Chinese poet. Remoteness; a high melancholy; pauses in it of loveliest significance. One heard—tinkling of ruined fountains in some long abandoned and forsaken garden; a solitary bird's cry over darkening waters; sounds borne from afar upon the twilight winds; the silences of the high snows; wastes beneath lofty mountain summits where only the avalanche moves, falling in low thunder.

With what poignant loveliness of tone, with what poignancy of meaning was that last question with its dread reply uttered in "The Trumpeter"—"What are you sounding now, Trumpeter?" The tones had an almost unearthly beauty, so that even to recall them disquiets the heart.

. . . . . .

Two figures come hurriedly down the aisle to the side door leading to the back of the stage, which is guarded by a tall youth. They appear unsupported by that genial democratic assurance that all great artists, no matter how generously they may have given of themselves on the platform, and no matter how fatiguing their evening's work, are ready and delighted to receive a crowd of handshakers immediately afterwards. These are conscious beggars for a privilege.

"Can't we go in?" asks a soft, eager voice, a little breathlessly. "He—they—told us that if we went round to the back he would speak to us!" The upturned face is pale, gentle. So many good and gentle faces in that audience.

"It was a friend of his!" says the soft voice, still more eagerly. The doorman looks faintly sceptical.

"They did!" asserts the voice again imploringly. There is a remote suggestion in the tone that recourse may ultimately be had to tears. The door is opened narrowly, and the two figures dart in and disappear.

"Such stuff they will make up to get inside!" comments the door's guardian with a genial smile.

IN ALL THE GLORY OF THEIR SIGNIFICANT REGALIA THE BLACKFOOT INDIANS SAT FOR KATHRYN WOODMAN LEIGHTON, ARTIST
THIS GROUP OF TWENTY PAINTINGS BELONGS TO THE GREAT NORTHERN.

"THE LAST STAR," A YOUNGER MEMBER OF THE TRIBE, EDUCATED AT CARLISLE, WAS PERSUADED BY THE ARTIST TO POSE AS PREPARING FOR THE OLD TIME SUN DANCE. HIS BODY IS PAINTED WITH THE SACRED ORANGE-COLORED CLAY. THIS PAINTING IS GORGEOUS

KATHRYN LEIGHTON'S PAINTINGS OF THE BLACKFOOT TRIBE

By M. URMY SEARES

CONSERVATION demands the preservation of what is God-given in every tribe and every race represented in this Union of tribes and nations. If a race has worshipped the one true God, He has revealed himself to that race no matter what the forms of worship.

We must, therefore, see to it that we do not lay sacriligious hands on the vital belief of any tribe, nor allow ignorant government officials who may have no deep religious convictions of their own, to interfere with the very beautiful religion of the tribes who first occupied this land we boast as a land of religious liberty. The God of Love whom we worship is also a God of Justice and will not accept our peculiar forms of worship as a substitute for the heartfelt worship of the tribes, even though our government may take away from the Indian his forms and impose our own educational ideas upon him. The life of the soul is a delicate thing. Cultivated through generations, it leads a race to high places; dissipated and neglected, it seems to vanish and leave a whole nation seeking vainly for pleasure among the flesh pots of earth.

Thoughts such as these crowd in upon one when listening to Kathryn Leighton's account of her summer's painting of the Blackfoot tribe of Indians. Asked to paint a series of pictures for the Great Northern Railroad, she was given every facility for performing a great piece of work that not only places her among our foremost painters of the American Indian, but puts on record in an inspiring and most delightful way, the beauty of color, the dignity of tradition and the fundamental beliefs of this particular American tribe.

MRS. WHITE-DOG AND MRS. BIRD-RATTLE MAKING PEMICAN. MRS. WHITE-DOG HAD HER FINGERS BITTEN OFF BY A WOLF IN THE TEPEE WHEN A BABY. MRS. BIRD-RATTLE WAS OFTEN SEEN LIGHTING HER PIPE AT A NEIGHBOR'S FIRE.—THREE PAINTINGS BY KATHRYN LEIGHTON.

Instructed through their interpreters to dress and pose for Mrs. Leighton in their traditional costumes and daily attitudes, the whole tribe entered into the spirit of the thing and stood ready to aid the artist.

They must have found her genuinely interested in something more fundamental than the play of color on feather and beadwork, for they gave her of their best and found in her a sympathy and an understanding that impelled them to give her an Indian name and adopt her into their tribe.

Thus Mrs. Leighton has been enabled to put on record something more than costume, something deeper than racial characteristics. Superb as these paint-

(Continued Pg. 31)

BIRD-RATTLE, THE SIGN TALKER. "LISTEN," HE SEEMS TO SAY, BUT IN SIGN LANGUAGE. TWO OF THE PAINTINGS BY KATHRYN LEIGHTON

TWO-GUNS-WHITE-CALF, THE MODEL FOR THE INDIAN ON THE BUFFALO NICKLE. HE IS THE STATESMAN AND THE ORATOR OF THE TRIBE.

THE INCURABLE OPTIMIST

By VERA SADICOFF-GOLDMAN, M. D.

DOCTOR NORMAN WHITE and Ellen, his wife, stood in the long, low-ceilinged drawing-room of their home, receiving guests. The firelight played upon the soft radiance of the gowns of the women and the contrasting black and white of the conventional dinner clothes of the men. It was to be a rather small dinner party and Doctor Norman and Ellen had given much thought to the assembling of their guests. The dinner was given in honor of friends just returned from abroad. The travelers had been away many years, nevertheless, they were welcomed as if it had been but a day.

Doctors Virginia and Richard Cox were a medical pair, who had been abroad studying health conditions on the European continent, in Turkey and in the Orient. They had now returned to take up their work in their own city, and this was their first contact with old friends and acquaintances. It was good to be home again amidst familiar scenes, familiar faces; to feel the warm handclasp, to see the welcoming smile, and to hear the well-remembered bantering and word play of their little group.

As Doctor Norman led Virginia into the dining room, she said to him gaily, "Norman, I'm so glad we are to have our first dinner in your house, not only because we love you and Ellen, but also because you have such good things to eat. That would, no doubt, be considered a vulgar admission, but we have been traveling so long, and have been eating food of so many kinds, in so many different places, that it is good to get back and eat a real, home-cooked dinner again."

Doctor Norman laughed. "We will try to give you something good to eat, if that is what you think you want. Ellen, I hope, has seen to that. As for my part, I thought mental and spiritual food would be a more vital necessity to such a group as we are here, tonight."

Then as they sat down, Richard, from the opposite end of the table, voiced his wife's feeling by saying, "It is certainly good to eat the food of God's Country again, and to eat it in a real American home."

Ellen glanced at her guest of honor and said, "I don't believe you realize, Richard that you are eating a combination of your favorite foods. We remembered all your little culinary favorites and that is the reason you are finding this such a good dinner."

"No, Ellen, that isn't exactly the reason, there is something about the food one gets, traveling from hotel to 'pension,' something about eating in restaurants, which is dreadfully monotonous."

Janet, who had had great difficulty in conducting a household with a constantly shifting servant personnel, and who had contemplated moving into a hotel, interposed, "Don't you think, Richard, that that is all imagination? Certainly the food in an excellent hotel or restaurant is better, more invitingly served, more carefully prepared by competent, well-trained chefs, than the food one gets in the present day home, where the housewife, who is also, frequently, a wage earner, prepares it hastily and serves it with the minimum of effort, or in the household where the cooking is done frequently by a poorly trained maid. Surely we have gotten into a habit of thought in regard to home-cooked food and that provided by a restaurateur. I think the latter is much preferable to the former."

Dr. Norman turned to Janet. "I think, Janet, there is some basis for the popular prejudice in favor of the home kitchen. It is not a mere habit of thought. During my college years I ate all my meals in various parts of the city, sometimes in very excellent hotels and restaurants, often in most ordinary, inexpensive lunch-rooms. The food became frightfully tedious. I kept my weight pretty well, but I seemed always to be on the lookout for something good to eat. I wasn't happy, gastronomically. Now, Ellen, here, has been feeding me for some years and she doesn't always give me things I like; she makes me eat my spinach,—and other things," he ended lamely, on a look from Ellen. "Nevertheless, I would not exchange my present home meals for the finest hotel menu."

"There has been some research in connection with this problem. Only last week I read an article in an American medical magazine, which was abstracted from a German medical weekly. In this article the German physician, interested in research, told us that he found, in his own personal experience, it was necessary to take his meal sometimes at noon, sometimes two or three hours later. The well-known feeling of disgust against restaurant food occurred regularly on the days when he took his meal late. The portions in the late meals were just as large, often larger, than the portions in the early meals, yet he became hungry very soon after the meal. On investigating the kitchen, he found the only difference in the food eaten later in the day from the meal eaten earlier, was that the former had been cooked longer, all the food having been cooked at the same time, and then kept hot for a long period. The caloric value of the food, that is, the actual heat energy in the food was the same, but some indefinable change had taken place in the food during the prolonged heating, so that it was no longer as useful to the body.

"Very much mystified, the physician began a series of experiments upon animals, using rats, feeding part of them food from this same restaurant at the noon hour, and others with food obtained later in the day. Rats fed with food which was obtained earlier and consequently cooked less, thrived and gained in weight much more than rats fed with larger quantities of food which had been cooked longer."

"This is an argument against putting food in a fireless cooker earlier in the morning and leaving it there all day until the evening meal. A very excellent housekeeper, a good friend of ours, uses her fireless just as she does a cook stove; it saves her watching pots, saves the expenditure of fuel for cooking and is much cleaner, but she leaves the food in the fireless only as long as it would be necessary to leave it on a gas stove, not longer. The lower food value of long cooked dishes is not disproved by the fact that both animals and man prefer and eat spontaneously, more cooked than uncooked foods. The appetite in this case is due to the fact that cooked foods are more palatable than uncooked foods. Nevertheless, we find that in children, adults and in animals, there is an instinctive need for, and desire for a certain amount of raw food. Hence, Janet, permit me to pass you the celery, and perhaps Virginia will not refuse these blushing red radishes!"

The dessert of strawberries, luscious and appetizing, was hailed with delight and gales of laughter by the assembled group. But with coffee served before the glowing embers in the drawing room, food was forgotten, for the mind does not dwell upon a satisfied appetite, and talk was of music and art, travel and politics, and the thousands and one interests and delights of Doctor Norman and his friends.

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

TREES AND SHRUBS OF CALIFORNIA GARDENS

By CHARLES FRANCIS SAUNDERS
Robert McBride & Company

Books containing light and genial gossip about celebrities invariably offer a welcome diversion, even to readers otherwise most sedate. And when as in this case the celebrities happen to be shrubs and trees treated in a similarly engaging fashion the subject matter proves no less attractive. Indeed no chatting about great personages could possibly be more intriguing than this eurious and instructive lore about these botanical inhabitants of our state. Mr. Saunders has written all this in a very pleasing manner sure to appeal to popular taste, with a running accompaniment of pertinent allusions which are the result of wide reading and acquaintance with many branches of human interest; yet it all rests on a foundation of scientific knowledge which makes the volume of value to garden makers and those who are landscaping on a greater scale.

Readers who have given this matter little thought learn with surprise that the majority of these shrubs and trees are alien stock. Of course we all know that people come here from every quarter of the globe and sooner or later merge into the social fabric like threads into a tapestry. In similar fashion it appears these botanical objects have been brought here from about every country in the world and when placed in California's hospitable soil, proceed to flourish mightily, in time becoming an undistinguishable part of the local landscape. As Mr. Saunders presents the matter, it is most interesting to learn the details of their introduction and all the facts about where they thrive the best now that they are here.

CHARLES FRANCIS SAUNDERS IN HIS HOME IN ALTADENA. HE IS THE AUTHOR OF "TREES AND SHRUBS IN CALIFORNIA", AND OTHER BOOKS ON CALIFORNIA.

DOCTOR DOLITTLE'S CARAVAN

By HUGH LOFTING, Frederick A. Stokes Co.

Doctor Dolittle was a remarkable man, beyond any reasonable doubt. We are not exactly certain as to just when he lived, since we have not read the books which Mr. Lofting has written previously about him, but we intend to look into them right away and find out something definite about his history.

He was remarkable because he was the only man in the world (and there probably never will be another like him) able to converse with beasts and birds in their own language from canaries to elephants. That is how he came to put on a bird opera in London with a little green canary hen as prima donna singing mezzo contralto. The song she sang about her deep affection for her second husband, he who casually brought home one day an affinity to complete the triangle of his menage, would bring tears from an ostrich and actually did upset the emotions of a pig; anyone not believing this statement is invited to inspect a drawing by Mr. Lofting showing this animal with his soul in his eyes looking precisely like some human beings at the opera.

Mr. Lofting has been most kind and painstaking and meticulously truthful in recording exactly what these birds and beasts said to Doctor Dolittle. Children from eight to eighty will appreciate this marvellous opportunity to learn just what goes on in the minds of creatures hitherto considered dumb. These really are quite sensible and keen judges of human kind, and especially clever in this line was the little green canary, but then she was a hybrid, for one of her ancestors had made a misalliance. Her adventures and outlook on life and all the rest will bring delighted chuckles from readers capable of understanding. Unfortunately there may be some human beings who will see no sense in this at all.

THE OUTLOOK FOR AMERICAN PROSE

By JOSEPH WARREN BEACH
The University of Chicago Press

Nationally speaking we Americans want what we want right away when we want it. Having decided to want culture we have very little patience with the getting of it, and as a consequence have adopted any means whatsoever which hold a promise of procuring it in the quickest possible way. On the whole we are quite well satisfied with our progress toward this ideal and are inclined to look rather condescendingly upon the slower and more out-of-date methods of our predecessors and rivals across the water. At that however we do not fail to keep a wary eye on our fellow companions in arms so to speak and whenever one of them seems to be outstripping the rest of us, we promptly abandon our own tactics and take part in a merry game of follow the leader.

Now these national characteristics which loom so large in the matter of attaining culture somehow get themselves reflected in our contemporary American prose. Unmistakable evidence to that effect engulfs the reader of this very stimulating and utterly unconventional book of literary criticism, directed for the most part at American writing, by Joseph Warren Beach. This gentleman's manner of criticizing is alert, nervously brilliant, pointed with a minute and constructive analysis that somehow quaintly suggests his possession of much pedagogical poise. He is never dull and he is never vague, for he constantly exhibits the amusing sparkle of the reformer who knows exactly what he wants to say and says it with zest and inspiration.

Due to such qualifications his methods of dealing with his subject result in some very entertaining as well as thoughtful matter. He has a way of verifying his criticisms by selecting illustrative examples from our most eminent writers, whom he himself esteems highly for their creative powers and lofty talents; yet owing to lack of intellectual discipline and careful preparation for their craft, he shows how they have allowed themselves to play all sorts of naughty tricks with the elementary principles of their calling, with a result that the standard of American prose is far below that of the English classics and even inferior to the work of British writers of the present day.

Very possibly many have read some of these papers before as several of them have been published previously in various periodicals. The intending purchaser is advised to look carefully at a foreword which gives exact information regarding this matter; but if he finds that he is unacquainted with the subject matter, he will do well to obtain the book by hook or crook, and investigate for himself its very lively and refreshing contents.

AN OUTLINE HISTORY OF CHINA

By HERBERT H. GOWEN and JOSEF WASHINGTON HALL, D. Appleton and Company

Hitherto China's appeal has been mostly to art connoisseurs, missionaries and world travelers in search of exotic atmosphere. Her present state however is fast and furiously approaching a point where those who take pleasure in being au courant with world affairs feel they must pay her some attention, but one obstacle to any adequate understanding of her distracted present is a general lack of acquaintance with her mysterious past so baffling that most people have no idea where to begin on it, nor where to go for help. Hence this brief and comprehensive history of China comes at a very opportune time for those who want some information without expending too much fatiguing study in the process of acquiring it.

For such reasons then the most valuable feature of the volume under consideration would seem to be its continuity. In a manner eminently satisfactory to the average reader, China's past is sketched rapidly but succinctly from remote antiquity up to the fall of the Manchus in 1912, covering a period of approximately five thousand years. It has to be an outline naturally, but sufficient emphasis is put upon just the salient points to aid the reader in gaining more insight into the inscrutable oriental mind and its striking contrast to our own mentality. This portion of the book is the work of Mr. Gowen, Professor of Oriental Languages and Literature at the University of Washington, who also wrote the preface for the history.

The latter half of this volume was written by Mr. Hall, lecturer in the same university on affairs in Pacific Asia. It explains in much more detailed fashion what has happened in China since the establishment nominally speaking of the republic and demands a concentration on the part of the reader, that is rewarded by a clearer insight into the present chaotic situation.

Courtesy of Frederick A. Stokes Co.
HUGH LOFTING, WHO HAS CAREFULLY CHRONICLED WHAT DUMB CREATURES SAID TO DOCTOR DOLITTLE IN A SERIES OF VOLUMES OF WHICH "DOCTOR DOLITTLE'S CARAVAN" IS THE LATEST.

EAST WIND

By AMY LOWELL, Houghton Mifflin Company

These tales depict New England life and temperament, presented with an unadorned simplicity that achieves a remarkable degree of strength. This is the effect of a sure knowledge of dramatic values, and the artful economy in fitting together theme and manner with fortunate results.

THE LIBRARY OF THE F. C. FAIRBANKS RESIDENCE, OAK KNOLL, PASADENA.

THE FAIRBANKS RESIDENCE IN PASADENA

WALLACE NEFF, Architect

SO MANY of the handsome homes built by our architects and pictured in these pages have been designed by Mr. Wallace Neff, that this talented architect needs no encomiums in this article. And yet, the infinite variety of his genius intrigues the student of California's building program; and his careful attention to the client's ideas has not only insured to each of his houses its own individuality, but has attracted to his office new clients and friends.

It is the purpose of this article, however, to set forth the relation of the architect to the contractor and builders of the actual house after the architect has satisfied the client as to plans and specifications.

In this handsome and reserved composition of masses, line and fenestration designed for Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Fairbanks of Oak Knoll, one may study an example of Mr. Neff's ma-

HALLWAY LOOKING THROUGH INTO THE CORRIDOR

turer work, and emulate his wise selection of the general contractor, artisans and craftsmen, and his methods of construction.

W. J. Jean, general contractor, is a fine representative of an important business which has developed here in the southland of California, where the great demand for good, substantial homes has made it a necessity.

MAIN ENTRANCE, ORLANDO ROAD.

A trip with Mr. W. J. Jean, general contractor for the Fairbanks house, to Beverly Terrace where he is building other fine villas in difficult situations on the hills, gave opportunity for studying the best methods at first hand, as well as the man himself.

Mr. Jean left his home school in Maine very early in life. Instructed by his New England father to study a trade "because what one masters as a trade he never loses," young Jean learned the building trade conscientiously and thoroughly in principle, while he was very young. Not satisfied to be ignorant of anything that would help him to be a better builder, he took the correspondence course in mechanical drawing and also in many of the courses which architects alone are supposed to choose. Such diligence has carried him far.

But, mark you! he did not immediately set up an office as one who could supply designs to lumber yards. He did not for one moment have the idea that to wear a white shirt and try to sell "architecture" to a gullible public was a more honorable position than that of a good carpenter, an up-to-date contractor, or a well trained mechanic in any trade. Inadvertantly and unconsciously this lucky son of a wise father casually mentioned the fact that he studied architectural drawing that he might be "better fitted to understand the architect's plans!" No wonder Wallace Neff entrusts his carefully designed plans to W. J. Jean.

Since the Guilds are no longer active and the schools have more than they can do to train the intelligence and drill the mind it is only in such establishments as the Meyberg Company's store and plant on South Grand Avenue that one interested in metal work can learn thoroughly the trade.

W. J. JEAN, General Contractor

We find in this interesting place, which is the source of the lighting fixtures chosen for the Fairbanks residence, beautiful designs from all the great art centers of the world. The craft of metal workers rose to a great height in European cities and examples of their beautiful designs and expert handicraft enter into the making of many of the show room fixtures now on exhibition in the store. Surrounded by these beautiful details and the varied effects to be produced in metal, the salesmen themselves become deeply interested in the choice which customers may make for certain rooms and their minds are rich storehouses of suggestions and ideas.

THE STAIRWAY IN THE MAIN HALLWAY.

This makes for higher education of the whole community in beauty of design and appreciation of European craftsmanship. Most of the workmen in these arts one finds to be foreigners by birth today: but tomorrow our own artists will begin to be interested in applied arts and our young people are already being trained to cooperate in our polytechnic schools. (Please Turn to Page 27.)

SOUTHLAND

How Have We Voted?

IGNORING the fact that a monthly journal is published once a month, there have come to us during the last thirty days a storm of pamphlets, leaflets and pages, "to be released" on certain days in this journal.

We welcome these as a sign that the influence of this monthly is desired; and while the election will be over before this issue sees the light, what light we have on the subject is at the service of our readers. Moral issues remain the same from election to election; and time is not a factor in the character of the vote.

An editorial on the Wright Act when it was made a part of California's good name, stated in no uncertain terms how this journal stands on that issue. Offers of advertising that would assist in hoodwinking some voters to vote for a repeal of that measure have come—too late to be used—but they were declined because no journal can afford to say one thing in its advertising and another in its editorials. Advertising is the life blood of a magazine and must be kept a pure stream or the whole is vitiated.

To go a little deeper into this subject, we have read William McAdoo's clear, logical analysis of the matter, presented before the Women's Christian Temperance Union and published broadcast by them. It probes deep, and displays our position if we say by our votes that we will no longer even pretend to be true to our word. The free air of the West sometimes goes to our heads and we think it a virtue to be openly honest about our feelings. Therefore in a moral issue we must probe deeper still and ask ourselves honestly why we want liquor. An "honest to goodness" answer will astound anyone who genuinely makes it, and each man who does really want it must remember that he has to live with himself the rest of his life. As to those others who have to live with him, his weakness of character is to them, doubtless, a source of deeper sorrow, and chagrin. Idols have fallen in the best regulated families; and now women have the vote.

Looked at from the standard of law, we Americans avoid as we would the plague any attempt at paternal government on the part of "The Majority." And yet, until the millenium comes and all men are good and unselfish the law will have to keep men from imposing on each other, and regulate their manner of getting their food and shelter.

As life goes on in the world, standards of rightness seem to be raised, and what was considered fair in business a generation ago is no longer tolerated. Stealing by means of clever play upon a man's desire for pleasure may be profitable and may pass unnoticed by the duped; but it is not an honest trade.

Grand Opera

THE riff-raff of the world has been attracted to Los Angeles because of the manufacture here of that side-product of all the arts—the moving picture film. With these individuals have come the arts of each race represented, and yet so esoteric, so extreme, so erratic are some individuals who have ventured thus so far from home, that Hollywood, besides being the Mecca of the Great, now harbors the longhaired, the "modernist," the freak in art more generously than the genuine genius or the soundly trained.

If we Californians, isolated as we are from the art centers whose "refusees" have collected here, should take the wild talk of the wanderers from Europe as something up-to-date and genuine, we should, to say the least, be misled. A million of the people who now live in this community may never see Europe and may be somewhat gullible about its art, but another million, travelers and tourists as we are, may easily have been both there and here and are laughing in their sleeve at Hollywood's pretentions to leadership.

In Grand Opera, on the other hand, there comes to us the mature work of all those European races which have had time to formulate a national character and to express it in music. This art is a possession of the whole world. And while the film is invading the wilds of Africa and amusing the simple natives, grand opera is being enjoyed by those communities which have reached a higher degree of appreciation and have the time to indulge it.

Cosmopolitan as we are, we need opportunity to analyze and enjoy spontaneously the art of all great nations.

That we do so was shown by the varied expressions of appreciation by the daily and weekly press of the intricate operas presented to Los Angeles last month.

The conquered states of Germany which produced nothing of interest under Prussia's domineering rule, had before subjection given to the world most of its finest music. And while to Americans the sound of the German language is still obnoxious, the operas, sung by artists trained in the Italian method, were acceptable for the inner beauty of their music alone.

To the young people, the only real Californians in Los Angeles, this was the first opera season. The value which their elders place upon this consummate world art was shown by the respect of a "first night" attendance and in the compliment paid the guest artists by the formality of dress.

That Los Angeles has in it so many thousands who independently go to the opera because they crave good music was apparent to all who, looking back across that sea of faces in the huge auditorium, caught the look of determination to enjoy.

To those, who worked day and night to bring us the best and to see that it was worthily supported, Los Angeles owes a debt of gratitude, and we cannot be too proud of the fact that grand opera is assured to us for next year.

Of such things as this is the true reputation of a city built. The finest art of all nations must be assimilated before we can go beyond it; and the blasé of other lands must not be allowed to cheat our native Californian youth out of great art which like the pearls of the parable has been trodden under foot in degenerate lands.

A Series of Business Studies

JAMES H. COLLINS, an internationally known investigator and writer on business subjects, is making a series of reports on industrial conditions in southern California and the Pacific-Southwest for the First National-Pacific-Southwest Banking Group, the Central offices of which are in Los Angeles. Mr. Collins' findings will constitute reports, not by the banking group, but to the banks by the ablest expert obtainable. While the banking group may or may not agree with the reports, it is certain that the public will find them instructive and interesting. Collins' writings have the characteristic of giving the reader a clear insight into affairs that have always seemed as mysterious as a closed book.

The Business of Living

By JAMES H. COLLINS

"Are you in the movies, sir?" asked the Hollywood barber, politely, and we talked about California, and its climate, and about New York, from which he had come eight months back, with a sick wife.

"There is a variety to New York weather that many people enjoy," I suggested.

"It has nothing new for me!" said the barber. "I've seen everything. This climate cured my wife, and from now on we call it home. But it was hard finding work. I tried the movies, having stage experience, but they are a bread line! My references were of no help, but I remembered this old trade, taught by my father, and there's a demand for it. So I'm doing very well, sir."

* * * *

As far back as anybody remembers, work has been hard to find in southern California. At the same time, this is a land of opportunity for the fellow who will adapt himself. He can often find better jobs than he had elsewhere, and many get into business for themselves.

OPINION

Apparently nobody has surveyed the "labor" surplus here. It is said that a survey would cost more than it would be worth, and be out-of-date before it was done. But southern California is like no other section of the country when it comes to finding employment.

Its demand for workers has been decidedly seasonal. The tourist activity tends to make more work in winter than summer, and the agricultural work creates a surplus of common and semi-skilled labor in winter, which scatters to the four winds in spring and summer. Agriculture, mining, lumbering and fishing have been the main activities of the Pacific Coast. They are all seasonal and southern California adds the seasonal business of the tourist, and an influx of workers when bad weather arrives in other sections of the United States.

Many of the tourists like southern California, and want to stay, and earn a living. Sick folks come here, and relatives with them, and the latter seek work. Many of the invalids get well and join the job hunters. People with means come here to retire, but grow dissatisfied with idleness, and hunt jobs. Movie aspirants compromise on other work, and there are newcomers who combine wage-earning with a small place in the country.

Most important of all, though generally mentioned last, are the boys and girls born in California, coming out of the schools each year, and seeking a beginning in life.

* * * *

So, there is a "reservoir" of workers here all the time, a surplus that includes everybody, from the pick-and-shovel man to the skilled specialist.

It is creditable to California that sentiment is all against exploitation of this surplus. How easy to broadcast the suggestion, "Come where there is an abundance of cheap labor!" Meaning folks who must work at any price.

The new manufacturing industries of southern California provide thousands of new jobs for wage and salary earners, thus aiding in the solution of a problem inherent in the region. They offset to a great extent the seasonal handicaps of other industries. Even more happy, they offer a great variety of employment to young people leaving school, and to city dwellers from other sections who have no experience in agriculture or similar western occupations. Factories employ everybody, from the pick-and-shovel man to the skilled operative, the professional man, the executive, the school and college graduate, and have a flexibility in opportunity that is not found in any other field open in the West.

The illusions of "cheap labor" have been pretty thoroughly dispelled in this country since the war. The nation as a whole has been through an experience with the "cheap labor" of Europe the past twenty years, discovering that it is far from cheap, and expressing its newly acquired opinion in revised immigration laws.

If there were actually a "last frontier" in labor, a final reservoir of cheap workers here in southern California, it would be protected against the exploiting employer by the regulations of the California Industrial Welfare Commission ,and by the spirit of fair play that has grown up in California, between workers and employers, as the result of past errors and friction. The hours, wages and general welfare of women and minor factory workers are fixed at decent standards, and injustice and exploitation are prevented by vigilant business organizations.

* * * *

Work has always been to seek in California, but in the seeking, men and women grow. They have come here to live in new ways. Abandoning old ideas of employment is part of the transformaton. The fact that a job must be actively sought calls out reserves of ingenuity and adaptability, and when the job is finally found, industry and loyalty enter into holding it. The fellow who has a job develops a willingness to pioneer with the boss, instead of merely looking for so many dollars in the envelope every Saturday. In many cases he will himself become an employer. Neighborliness enters into it all, because the biggest industry in California is the business of living.

Immortality

MEN see the infinite worth that personality can have and out of that worth comes the conviction of deathlessness. Such is the process of this spiritual logic.

Many a man has found the faith in immortality coming as a by-product of life's purposes. Despairing of establishing a serene and buoyant confidence in immortality, he has set about the task of placing this present life on a high plane. He has laid hold of present certainties. The worth of honesty, the value of veracity, the unanswerable arguments of the significance of the present life in a moral universe have had a compelling power over his purposes. He has resolutely filled his life with the finest and best that this world affords. He has made a devout religion out of the deep things of the spirit which are present experiences. Deliberately he has taken his eyes off the haunting problem of immortality.

After a time he is taken by surprise; he discovers that incidentally the faith in immortality has taken possession of his soul. He had not seen its approach, and did not detect its footsteps as it crossed the threshold of his mind. When it came or whence he does not know till he interrogates it. In the household of his thoughts it has taken up its abode. When he asks the question he learns that out of the sense of the worth of the higher life has come the conviction of life eternal. He had thought that he had left the question permanently unanswered. And the answer has come of its own accord. He had turned from a region which seemed full of shadows of uncertainty; and the clear light of quiet conviction came when it was not expected.

This is the subtle and profound experience of many men. It is indeed the reward of the wholesome purpose of many a man's life that the door of the immortal hope opens to him before life's ending. This present life speaks to men with a stern voice of duty. Life has its exactions of service. The responsibilities which are put upon one's shoulders are often burdensome. Yet out of life's duty comes the opportunity for putting these high qualities of fidelity and integrity into the personality. And out of these qualities flowers the immortal hope, the sense of moral worth.

Thus immortality lies very close to the dust of daily tasks. Eternal life is always present in this life. Duty, then personality, then immortality—the links are few and indissoluble. It is the simple direct relationship of these great realities that links the whole range of life with the brightest inspirations of religion.

From an Editorial for the Class in Personal Religion.

Songs of the Spirit—VI

Wings

He ne'er is crowned
With immortality who fears to follow
Where airy voices lead.
John Keats.

A night in June. Fair Cynthia supplied
Large pinions for my shoulders. Forth I fared
To heights to which my spirit had not dared
Ascend. With bated breath and wonder-eyed,
Across the far, cerulean fields, through wide
And glowing portals swiftly I repaired
To distant orbs whose beacons flared
A welcome. Voices called: "Abide! Abide!"

To earth I came. But since that night in June
The wings are mine! By right of accolade
I carry keys to yonder bright abodes!
Within my heart I hold the words and tune
Saint Michael chanted to his lifted blade.
I sing them to rough seas and rougher roads.

Saratoga, California, June, 1922 CLARENCE URMY

SPORTS OF SPEED: SPREADING SAILS, FLYING HEELS AND RECORD SWIMS

In the yachting world the ships and skippers are generally content to rest on the laurels gained during the season, including this clean sailing star boat on the waters of Glorietta Bay, off the Coronado shore, but the energetic R boats continued the second half of the fall championship program: The Debra, sailed by Tommy Weston, won the titular honors, with thirty points. The Patricia and Alert III, each twenty-two points; the California twenty-one, and the Pirate nineteen.

The new water sport, known as "Catalina Ball" provides every variation of catch as catch can, and only by victory may the head be kept above water. Eyre Powell Press Service.

The two large outdoor plunges in Brookside Park, Pasadena, offer recreational advantages and an opportunity to train for any and all channel swims. This park in its seven hundred acres has many other holiday possibilities, including tennis courts, a municipal golf course, a hillside outdoor theater, and the Rose Bowl or stadium, where the annual football classic, between the East and West is fought on New Year's Day, following the Rose Tournament parade. Photograph by Albert Hiller.

ONE OF THE OLDEST AND MOST POPULAR SPORTS KNOWN TO THE WORLD IS HORSE RACING. AND FOR THIS PLEASURE WE ARE NOW PRINCIPALLY INDEBTED TO THE COUNTY FAIRS OF THE STATE. STOCKTON, VENTURA, RIVERSIDE AND POMONA OFFERING RUNNING AS WELL AS TROTTING RACES

SPORTS OF OTHER DAYS LIVE AGAIN

Whippets are the race horses of dogland, bred first in England about a hundred years ago, a combination of greyhound and terrier, they are reputed to be the fastest things on four legs, covering the course, an eighth of a mile, in twelve seconds. They are trained from puppyhood to follow a handkerchief or waving cloth, as a hunting dog does the live quarry, and they gain their maximum speed almost as soon as the body is in action. The upper group shows the preliminaries of a whippet race, just before the dogs are "slipt." In the center Mrs. Robert Neustadt, Arthur Rankin, and Robert Neustadt of Santa Barbara are discussing the merits of their racers. Eyre Powell Press Service.

The age old sport of bowling which originated on the Mediterranean crossing from Turkey into Italy, and thence to France, Germany, and finally through Holland into England and Scotland, was introduced into the United States by the Dutch settlers in New York, and is given an opportunity here in Pasadena's Central Park to live again in its outdoor aspect, a bowling green being one of the attractive features. Facilities are provided for other novel and interesting games, making Central Park one of the most popular of the ten parks of the city. Eyre Powell Press Service.

BIRDS FROM MAINE TO CALIFORNIA

By C. H. BENJAMIN

AS a boy, living on the edge of a vast forest in northern Maine, my only interest in birds centered in their availability for shot gun practice. The forest stretched without a break from the head waters of the Penobscot to the valley of the St. Lawrence and contained not only birds but bear, moose, caribou, deer, lynx and foxes. Ruffed grouse or partridges were abundant and so tame as to be shot "sitting", of which as a boy I took advantage. In the season pigeons were numbered by thousands, while the inland lakes harbored vast quantities of geese and ducks. The owls and chicken hawks hovered over every barnyard and the crows and blackbirds made merry with the sprouting grain. Robins and cedar wax-wings inhabited the cherry trees in summer, while the snowdrifts of winter were enlivened by the crossbills and snow buntings.

I fear that my attitude toward the feathered tribes was much like that of a student in the agricultural college of a Mid-Western university whom we entertained at dinner many years later. As it was late spring, we had our dinner on a porch which looked out on the garden and the bird bath. The next day our guest confided his impressions of the meal to a fraternity brother and the latter found them too naive to remain untold.

"Do you know" said the rural student, "after the game last night I went to the dean's to supper. Oh, yes, pleasant place to go and they treated me fine. But say, they are funny; they ate supper on the porch and they had opera glasses on the table and all through the meal they looked at the d——d birds."

At the early age of nine years I was possessed of a shot gun and one of my duties was to keep the birds from the cherry trees. Our limited knowledge of bird life is instanced by the fact that the male robin was classed as a robin and immune, while the female was a "cherry bird" and, like the waxwing, was shot on sight. For birds as birds I cared not at all and it was not till many years later, at our camp in Canada, that I came to be interested in bird study. Our two girls, educated in the public schools and at an Eastern university, undoubtedly got their bird knowledge from the schools and they passed it on to us. On the eastern shore of Lake Huron we were near the northern limit of migration, as we are now near the southern for some birds. Located on a wooded, rocky island in Georgian Bay, we had a mixture of land and water birds. Gulls and terns were numerous and tame; the big blue heron flapped his way leisurely by our cabin and the hysterical laugh of the loon punctuated our slumbers. As our canoe silently glided by the rushes of a neighboring inlet, the upturned bill of the bittern separated itself from the sedge and its owner skurried hastily away. A pair of sheldrakes brought out their numerous progeny from the same inlet and at the sight of us, hurried across the water, half flying and half swimming and making a noise like a side-wheel steamer.

The land birds were less spectacular but more musical; the song sparrow gave his mating song every morning, perched on the very tip of a swaying cedar, and later one might hear the plaintive song of the white-throat calling for "Peabody." The red-eyed vireo sang cheerily from the top of the pine and the whippoorwill repeated his few notes from some invisible retreat. The woods were full of chickadees, wrens and phoebes which had their nests near by.

One summer in Virginia gave us our first sight of mockingbirds and their queer antics in the air, singing as they rose and fell. One humiliating experience of my own was the discovery of a flock of gray birds with bright blue tails, something not given in the field-book. Reference of this discovery to Professor Fuertes of Cornell, brought us the information, tactfully imparted, that there were such things as "immature bluebirds." A grotesque sight which lingers in my memory, was that of a row of buzzards sitting on a Virginia fence after a rain, with their wings spread out to dry. They looked even more bedraggled than the proverbial "wet hen."

Later, another summer vacation, this time in the Rocky Mountains, introduced us to many new varieties and proved the inadequacy of our Eastern field-book. We saw our first "Clark's Crow", as the natives call it (more correctly the Clark's Nutcracker), with its motley garb and its harsh cry.

More interesting were the magpies, with their striking plumage, graceful tails and their "insatiable curiosity." One summer afternoon, as I sat on the summit of a rocky spur, trying to reduce the wonderful colors of the canyon to terms of cobalt and rose madder, I was disturbed by a garrulous chatter behind me. Looking around, I saw a half dozen or more magpies perched on a small tree just back of where I was sitting, apparently criticising my work. As long as I staid there my noisy critics derided my efforts, in accents not to be mistaken.

Our studies of Eastern birds were most complete and satisfactory in the Middle West. Located in the valley of the Wabash river, we were in the line of fall and spring migration and saw more varieties of birds than in any other locality we have visited. We had a list of more than seventy birds and at least fifty of them we saw every year. The winters were mild and some of the birds staid with us; blue jays, cardinals, juncoes, titmice and downy woodpeckers made their appearance at intervals all winter.

About February 20 the robin made his first visit, followed shortly by the meadow lark and the bluebird. Our house was located near the center of a large lawn and surrounded by an abundance of evergreens and flowering shrubs. Just in the edge of the western shrubbery was a large concrete bird bath and near it an Audubon bird house with glass sides. On the south terrace a post supported an open front, revolving bird shelter, with broad vanes to face it away from the wind. This last had a wire cage for suet, a water dish and plenty of seeds and crumbs, and was a great favorite with the birds in stormy weather. A trolley feeding tray ran on pulleys suspended from a wire, which was stretched between one of the second story windows and a nearby tree. The tray could be pulled up the slope of the wire to the window by a cord, stocked with food and let back to its middle position. This particular feed house was the property during the winter of a downy woodpecker, who held it against all comers.

In the spring, as we ate breakfast or lunch on our garden porch, the bird bath was within easy view and we saw a steady succession of birds, sparrows, thrushes, grackles, jays and robins. A little later, when the big ones had gone, came the shyer birds and great was our joy when we saw an indigo bunting or a rose-breasted grosbeak drinking at the fountain. A black walnut tree near the house was always late in sending out its leaves, and occasionally on a May morning we would see among its bare branches flocks of migrants on their way North and would add perhaps a dozen names to our list of arrivals.

Coming to southern California some five years ago we again found ourselves at a loss, since not only were the birds strange to us but all their surroundings. Our first feathered acquaintances were naturally the house finches as they greedily absorbed the ripe fruit of a fig tree just outside our chamber window. Mockingbirds were equally numerous, but we had known them in the South.

As I began to follow the trails leading up the nearby canyons, I became aware of birds scurrying about in the underbrush which looked like catbirds whose suits needed to be sent to the cleaner. One day I asked a trail companion about them and he replied: "Oh those are the little brown birds." It was weeks before I learned that they were towhees and first cousins of my beloved chewinks of the East. Later, when I came to know the spurred towhee, I could see some resemblance.

The flicker was an old friend, although he had changed his trimmings from yellow to red, —but the jay was at first a disappointment as compared with the showy blue and white bandit of the Eastern country. As I come to know him better, I realize that his more quiet colors are in better taste, although his manners are quite as unsatisfactory as those of his Eastern relative.

Our eyes and minds are not so confused as formerly by a multitude of warblers and when in doubt, we can safely say that it is an Audubon, especially if its flight reveals the characteristic yellow spot. The general prevalence of warblers further East is indicated in the common Colorado saying: "If you see a strange bird it is probably a warbler, if a flower, it is undoubtedly a vetch, if a rock, presumably it is mica schist." My old friend, the robin, no longer perches on hoe handle as I work, in his eager quest for worms, but watches me from the overhanging boughs of a pepper tree. The blackbirds seem natural enough, save that the female is of a rusty drab instead of a gleaming black. We are glad to miss the English sparrow with his chatter and his general untidiness. The few that we see here are more respectable in appearance and behavior than those we used to know, perhaps because they are in a minority.

I think the highwater mark in my quest for birds was when I saw my first road-runner. Seen in silhouette as he flashed along the crest of the hill, he seemed like an animated skeleton with tail-feathers still attached. Now that we are better acquainted and that I have seen him in repose or gliding over the canyon below me, I can admit that he is a showy and rather attractive bird.

The humming-birds are more numerous and in greater variety than on the other side of the Rockies. They are also tamer, paying little attention to me as I pass, or occasionally deigning to sip from flowers in the bouquet I am holding.

As I think over the "here and there" of bird quests, I realize that one great difference is in the localizing and segregation of species. In Indiana one would see practically all the native and migrant birds in the home garden. Here one must look for them where they live. We can count but a mere dozen who have fed from our stand and but a few more who have entered our garden. But we know where we can find them.

On the other hand there are some interesting and beautiful birds here which are never seen in the cooler zones. The high spots in our memory of California birds are just now: the varied thrush, the phainopepla, the cerulean warbler and the Costa hummingbird, while the queerest vision of all (or did I dream it?) is of a field of tiny burrowing owls with its inhabitants sitting on the mounds of earth by their burrows, like so many prairie-dogs.

But there are more things to see and if this article were to be written a year hence, the conclusions might be different.

Altadena, October 4, 1926.

QUALITY SERVICE
THE ELITE
DRY CLEANERS AND DYERS
Plant: 797 So. Fair Oaks Ave.
Colo. 1349 Pasadena, California

T. W. Mather Co. Inc.
PASADENA, CAL.
Dry Goods
Women's & Children's
Wearing Apparel
Colorado Street at Marengo

Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes
TROY LAUNDRY
In Business for Twenty Years
Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146 Alhambra 243-J

THE SANTA MARIA INN, CALIFORNIA

THE FORE COURT OF SANTA MARIA INN

DETAIL OF INNER COURT WHERE FLOWERS BLOOM CONTINUALLY AND GUESTS MAY REST IN QUIET AND PEACE

THERE is something very attractive about the courtyard of Santa Maria Inn. Approaching it from the south or the north on the highway we find its semicircular driveway parked with good-looking touring cars and roadsters. Men like it for its convenience, half-way between San Francisco and Los Angeles; and the family all like it for its charm and interest. Concentrated within the grounds of this completely equipped hotel one finds every modern idea finely worked out, every want supplied.

The manager, H. S. McCoy delights in hospitality and has expressed it in the appointments of his hotel and the quiet service it gives its guests.

Built to accommodate the travellers passing through on the state's great highway, this delightful hostelry has become the resting place for many who have learned to love it for its many charms.

There is horseback riding and swimming down at the ocean beach not far away, but best of all there is the service moderns demand of a home or hotel as they travel gaily through this country of delights.

The Pictures

Above: A unique second story open air patio where a fountain plays softly and little Della Robbia figures guard the quietude.

The heart of the Inn is its inner court whose great tree has been the subject of etching and canvas.

Flowers in the court, flowers in the rooms and most of all flowers in the windows of the dining room. You will ask where they all come from and Mr. McCoy will show you his gardens on the city lots around.

Here is an opportunity for artists who can paint flowers in their natural setting. Sometimes the dining room is so full of great dahlias it looks like a flower show. And then in season come the other flowers in endless profusion

THE DINING ROOM IS ALWAYS FULL OF GREAT BOUQUETS AT THE WINDOWS. THEIR UNUSUAL BEAUTY IS WORTHY OF A SEPARATE ARTICLE

THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

MONTHLY BULLETIN

OFFICERS

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH, PRESIDENT
CLIFFORD A. TRUESDELL, VICE PRESIDENT
C. R. JOHNSON, SECRETARY
PAUL R. WILLIAMS, TREASURER

DIRECTORS

JULIAN GARNSEY, DIRECTOR
J. E. STANTON, DIRECTOR
H. C. CHAMBERS, DIRECTOR

THE PRICE OF BEAUTY

All works of quality must bear a price in proportion to the skill, time, expense and risk attending their invention and manufacture. Those things called dear are, when justly estimated, the cheapest; they are attended with much less profit to the artist than those which everybody calls cheap.

Beautiful forms and compositions are not made by chance, nor can they ever, in any material, be made at small expense.

A composition for cheapness, and not for excellence of workmanship, is the most frequent and certain cause of the rapid decay and entire destruction of arts and manufactures.—Ruskin.

THE ATELIER

The Atelier held its annual dinner and election of officers on September 22, 1926 at the Casa Felipe. The dinner was attended by a group of twenty-five of the cities most flourishing draftsmen. These men were all members of the Atelier and many whom were also members of the Architectural Club. All gathered about the festive board and did noble justice to an excellent dinner which put the boys in a more or less complacent frame of mind for the events that followed. After the cutting and filling operations were finished Mr. Walter Davis the guest of the evening was introduced to the meeting and said a few words of the Atelier and the retiring Massiers.

The meeting then came to order with Mr. Harvey Barton Smith ably assisted by Mr. Harold Abrams as master of the ceremonies. The elections that followed were conducted satisfactorily to all of those present.

The nominations to the post of Massier fell thick and fast, no less than three being nominated. Due to the fact that all of the contestants refused to withdraw, a ballot was necessary. After the smoke finally cleared away Mr. George Euless Masters was elected with an overwhelming majority. In the election of the Sous Massier it was again necessary to resort to the ballot for selection. Mr. J. Raymond Wyatt was selected to fill the chair of Sous Massier. We think that Mr. Wyatt's election was due to an excellent speech which he rendered in behalf of his nominee for Massier. Mr. Wyatt showed himself to be an able speaker and so framed his thoughts in such English that all came to the conclusion that he would develop into a first class Massier as the results of the election show. The choosing of the Secretary and a Librarian was done with less difficulty than the selection of former officers. This important position was given to Mr. Herbert C. Anset. This was done in recognition of the excellent work which was done by him in that capacity in and during the greater part of the past year. Mr. Anset is to take over officially the custodianship of our much hoped for and growing Library.

Foremost in the events of the evening was the vote of thanks that was given to our patron and critic, Mr. Fitch H. Haskell. Though

THE TOWER AT BALBOA PARK, SAN DIEGO, A GLORIOUS REMINDER OF THE FAIR, AND A LIVING MONUMENT TO THE ART OF BERTRAM MORGAN GOODHUE, ARCHITECT

Mr. Haskell was out of town on a well earned vacation we feel that he was with us in spirit. Mr. Haskell has been the greatest factor in maintaining the Atelier and in bringing about the success that it has had during the past years. It is through his efforts that the Atelier has been able to turn out men that have been able to take place with the best designers in the city and join in the general program for the betterment of the city's architecture. Mr. Haskell has the respect and admiration of the entire organization. It is always a pleasure to express the friendship and respect we feel for him as one who has worked for the betterment of the profession.

LIFE CLASS ANNOUNCEMENT

The Life Class under the instruction of Mr. Radwanowski is to be started at once. Club members or members of the Atelier who are interested should apply to Mr. Anset or Mr. Wyatt at the club quarters at the Gardner Payne Building, Seventh and Union Streets, any evening. The fee will be fifty cents per lesson. The class is only open to club or Atelier members at this low rate, but others can enroll at a higher fee. Last year under Mr. Wolf there were from twenty to twenty-five men in the class and some very credible work was done. Mr. Radwanowski is an artist of excellent training and his enthusiasm is of such a contagious variety that we know the class is to be a success.

WROT IRON AS SHE IS WROT

If building materials had emotions it could readily be forgiven wrought iron if it went into a corner and cried itself into a state of irreparable rust.

Without slighting the abilities of present day designers it can be said with an ample margin of safety that less is known about wrought iron ornament from both historical and practical standpoints than about the adornment of any other building material. When a design cannot be executed in stone because of expense, it may be turned into terra cotta by a note to the modeler not to "undercut", and, after a little attention to the models the result may come out a very creditable job. But to change from a cast to wrought design, or vice versa, is not such a metamorphosis. To illustrate: ever since the day when Vignola sent his treatise on architectural forms to the presses, the architectural profession has been composing cornices more or less according to formula. The given height is divided into four or five sections, which in turn are reduced to cyma-rectas or-reversas with fillets, facias, modillions, dentils and bed moulds tossed in according to the architectural Hoyle. When a problem presents itself in wrought iron, like a bank screen cornice, from force of habit it is designed from a stock series of forms. Whether these elements can be made on a forge is barely considered. The mere circumstances that the drawing is labeled "wrought iron" and that Vignola has been faithfully followed cannot be expected to make the cornice genuine wrought iron either in letter or in spirit.

GERALD K. GEERLINGS in "Pencil Points".

Hispano-Moresque Tile

Colorful, Decorative, Interesting
made entirely by hand

Mexican, Spanish and Tunisian Designs

Showroom
Harry C. Hicks 4283 Beverly Blvd.
GR. 4013
Los Angeles Calif.

Landscape
Designing and Planting

The beautiful gardens of Southern California which we have created are evidence of our ability to design and plant your own grounds properly.

A reliable firm of thirty-eight years' experience in Southern California.

EDWARD H. RUST
NURSERYMAN
1625 Bank St. Colo. 997
So. Pasadena ELliot 2639

Prepare Your Estimates from Reliable Figures

Send for 14th Edition
New Building Estimates Hand Book
By ARTHUR.

SCIENTIFIC BOOK CORPORATION
15 East 26th St., New York

PORTABLE TYPEWRITERS
WITH STANDARD KEYBOARD

Also All Makes Sold, Rented, Repaired, Exchanged

Parker Typewriter Co.
25 Years Experience
25 N. Marengo Pasadena

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A. MONTHLY BULLETIN

OFFICERS
DAVID J. WITMER, PRESIDENT
C. E. NOERENBERG, VICE PRESIDENT
EDGAR H. CLINE, SECRETARY
WINCHTON L. RISLEY, TREASURER

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH,
Editor

DIRECTORS
H. C. CHAMBERS
DONALD PARKINSON
ALFRED W. REA

TWO OF OUR TRAVELERS SPEAK

Eugene Weston and Sumner Spaulding have recently returned from "study trips" abroad. They have set down for us, in brief form, some of their impressions. In reading their comments one cannot help but feel that architects, at least here in southern California, are getting back to an appreciation of simplicity and directness in the use of materials. This will affect our architecture deeply and we will soon be conscious of a new charm in it akin to the charm which we know and admire in the domestic architecture of Europe. It is interesting too to note that we are finding our inspiration as much, or perhaps more, in the unconscious art of the peasant builder as we are in the studied designs of recognized masters.

IMPRESSIONS GLEANED ON A RECENT TRIP ABROAD

Occasionally it is necessary for an architect to voice his reactions towards the tendencies of our modern architectural expression.

My recent trip through Europe and the near East has brought to my attention several points that I feel will be of some value if they are given a little publicity.

It seems conditions that surround the architect here in the Southland are conducive to make-believe architecture which in so many cases has gone to extremes, and some of our best architects have fallen under the influence. My reference is particularly to the tendency towards intentional antiqueing; intentional imitation of good materials by cheap ones, of solid substantial construction by flimsy plaster covered wooden frames, and so on through all the tricks of a moving picture stage set.

In studying any great architectural movement or period when all the arts have combined to produce masterpieces, there is always an underlying spirit of honesty in regard to construction, material and color, and it seems a shame with all the glorious possibilities that architects do not insist upon doing their work a little better and keeping their clients from spending money on buildings that will be practically worthless in twenty years or less.

Due to the distance that this coast is separated from Europe, there has not been as much travel by the architects of this community for purposes of study as there should be, and it is evident upon one's return from a study trip that the amount of sham and make-believe that goes into our modern buildings here is really appalling. It is true however that the results in our residence work during the past ten years have been increasingly better and perhaps it is just a matter of time when all the apparent difficulties will arrange themselves when we are a richer and wiser community.

In all the countries I visited on this trip, I found in the domestic architecture few attempts toward the bizarre or desires for imitation of materials. No doubt the Azores and the Madeira Islands will always hold for me a delightful inspiration as to how much can be done in the correct and quiet designing of simple homes. The town of Funchal in the Madeira Islands is particularly instructive. The buildings are uniformly of masonry with a smooth well troweled stucco surface with practically no texture. The roofs are all tile and were always hipped with no open gable ends. The tile fields were irregularly laid, but the eaves were without exception laid to a clean smooth line in contrast to the desire here for over emphasizing the irregularity of the eave line. Doorways and window openings were very simple. The window was practically always shuttered, the shutter being hinged in the architraves, and when closed being perfectly flush with the surrounding wall. Doors were almost Colonial in their simplicity with carefully set and designed hardware and I observed no raised mouldings in any case. The color schemes of the houses were particularly delightful, and covered all the range of pastel shades in pale cream, yellow, orange, pink, green, mauve and grey. Where the architraves of the openings were not expressed by natural grey stone, they were always painted to harmonize with the body color of the house. The habit of painting dark bases on the buildings is prevalent as in so many other countries.

A COPPER SHOP IN ASISSI. PHOTOGRAPH BY EUGENE WESTON, JR.

It seems to me that by the use of quiet, cool colors, simple design and solid earth-quake, fireproof, cold and heat-proof houses, we will go a long way towards reaching our ideal, and although I had not intended mentioning it, I know of no one who is more closely tending toward that ideal than Mr. Gordon Kaufmann who has recently completed so many fine homes in this community. My brother Joseph has always insisted that Mr. Kaufmann knows the use of color better than any one else locally, and it would perhaps be worth while to those who are interested in such things to study his work.—Eugene Weston, Jr.

Below: A Photograph by Cook and Hali

BEVERLY KEIM

The tragic death of Beverly Keim has stirred us all deeply. Its suddenness and unexpectedness have added to our feeling of sadness for the loss of this quiet gentlemanly friend. He was so retiring in his nature that very few of us grew to know him well but those who did found a choice spirit and a real man. When men of our own professional group are swept off in a second of time we cannot but pause in the mad rush of this careening old world, and ponder whither we are bound and where it is all going to end. The Great God in heaven has a plan for us all but we are such fallible creatures of his that we seldom find the road he would have us travel.

IMPRESSIONS OF RURAL SPAIN

The mountains which follow the Southern coast of Spain drop abruptly over five thousand feet to the sea, while between the various spurs of these mountains are found more gentle slopes which terminate in fertile lowlands. The city of Malaga, one of the last strongholds of the Moors, and located on one of these plains, is a seaport of some importance and reminds one in a small way of Barcelona or Marseilles. Rich in historical background, it holds little architectural interest today, for the modern buildings are mediocre and the older ones are of little importance.

In contrast with the character of the city, there are many beautiful haciendas tucked away among the hills in the surrounding country. Following the road along the coast to the East of the port, one sees some of the most interesting of these, and a ride along this highway is not unlike a stroll through a series of Spanish gardens; for the mountains, like garden walls, come down to the sea and divide these slopes into cultivated areas. As a garden is planted and decorated with seats and fountains, so each small valley seems to be thoughtfully beautified by small groups of buildings. As a gate in a wall invites one to explore further into a garden so do the mountain passes tempt one to investigate the valley beyond.

Studying any of these farm groups from a distance one is impressed by the whitewashed walls and the manner in which the planes of the red tile roofs parallel the slopes of the hills. These small buildings nestling away among their orchards bespeak a snugness and friendliness which is usually associated with the cottages of England. Approaching any of these groups by a small winding road the natural good taste in the exterior details is noticeable, especially in the execution of the terraces, low retaining walls and garden accessories. Along the terraces are planted green hedges and brightly colored flowers. Red pots line the walls, and niches in the masonry are left to hold a few flowers. The wrought iron grilles at the windows give a sense of security and a touch of richness to the otherwise severe facades.

Entering one of these houses we find stone or tile floors, whitewashed walls and open beamed or vaulted ceilings. The furniture is simple and whether antique or modern it has the semblance of the Spanish traditions. Chairs, benches and chests are lined against the walls, there being no attempt to create a feeling of shoddy luxury. Pictures of landscapes or religious subjects, porcelain plates of brilliant colors, polished pots and pans are hung on the wall with iron pegs, all of which produce a feeling of homliness and comfort.

Every house has at least one small court or patio which is used for circulation from one room to another. Some are only a few feet square but they allow light and air to penetrate into the center of the structure, and with the potted flowers and a simple tile fountain make a delightful outdoor work room. In fact the scheme of the general plan shows a feeling for outdoor life, for not knowing the rigors of cold climates no provision is made for winter conditions in their houses. They have never tried to solve the complicated problems with which we are confronted today and for that reason the utter simplicity of their plans is refreshing.

This simplicity of plan combined with an understanding of the possibilities of a warmer climate, a judicious use of whitewashed walls, tile roofs and natural planting are perhaps the greatest lessons we can learn from these peasant people of Southern Spain.

SUMNER MAURICE SPAULDING.

A SUPPLEMENT TO CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

GOOD ARCHITECTURE

ISSUED SEMI-MONTHLY NUMBER ONE

This name is filed at the State Library

SANTA BARBARA ARCHITECTURE

THIS leaflet is printed in SOUTHLAND, in order that our subscribers who have asked for news of good work in various parts of the state may receive it as a part of their monthly magazine. It is reprinted in leaflet form that it may be available for use by institutions, societies, women's clubs or individuals who wish to distribute it among builders and home makers or in towns and cities which are endeavoring to improve their corporate appearance.

If enough demand is apparent the leaflet will appear more often than the magazine, but the monthly issue will contain all the leaflets.

IN the picture at the top of this page the contrast between different types of commercial building is curiously apparent. Taken before the earthquake of last year, the picture shows two State Street buildings now dismantled. The large windows and the architectural detail of the building at the left mark it as a good example of the best design of the French Renaissance so prevalent a generation or two ago. Next to it is the old adobe, the de la Guerra House where Dana was entertained nearly a hundred years ago. It is still preserved and occupies a commanding position on the north side of Santa Barbara's old city plaza, now become her civic center by virtue of the new city hall which stands on the northeast corner of de la Guerra Street and the square, across from the de la Guerra group.

Rising in beauty beside the old adobe is the southern end of the de la Guerra Studios which have grown until they fill the center of the block which they surround as a court.

Designed by James Osbourn Craig as a part of a beautiful plan for Santa Barbara's central plaza, this group of buildings forms the beginning and ultimate end of Santa Barbara's new architecture.

SANTA BARBARA HAD THESE SIX DIFFERENT KINDS OF COMMERCIAL ARCHITECTURE BEFORE THE EARTHQUAKE IN JUNE, 1925

WHEN the people of an entire town are interested in the building which is going on there, we may be sure there will result something worth investigating and reporting.

Builders and promoters will, if they be wise, stop, look and listen before they begin to build; individuals will know what the town thinks of them; fakers of false fronts will hesitate before they try to put something over on that town.

It is just this which the Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara has accomplished for that California town through its unusual "Plans Committee,' with whom arrangements have been made to publish in this leaflet photographs of work done.

THE RESULTS OF BETTER HOMES WEEK

SANTA BARBARA has twice received the prize offered by the Better Homes in America Association of Washington, D. C. The committee, through the kindness of Miss Pearl Chase, has prepared pictures and information which have appeared intermittently in Southland, but which will now become a regular feature of this page.

A SIX ROOM STUCCO HOUSE LISTED FOR OBSERVATION DURING BETTER HOMES WEEK. 1925. CARLETON M. WINSLOW, ARCHITECT

DE la Guerra street as shown in the photograph at the left is not very different now from what it was before the earthquake when this picture was taken.

The old adobe of the de la Guerra family was cracked in places but has been restored. The de la Guerra Studios built for and under the personal supervision of an engineer and a Californian were made earthquake proof by girdle of concrete at each floor. Placed right in the heart of Santa Barbara, these buildings are making for righteous building every day. For so subtle is their beauty, so excellent their proportions, their construction, their handling, that no amount of good work on the new Estado, the Esplanada, or in the surrounding country can make them "out of style" or place them in the background.

Rather will their beauty become more and more apparent as the other parts of the down town district grow in grace, and knowledge of what is good architecture becomes universal in Santa Barbara.

Beyond the two story part of El Paseo are two old buildings of different periods; and across Santa Barbara Street still stands an example of "Mission architecture" built in a period when the missions themselves were copied in commercial as well as in domestic building for neither of which they were planned by the padres and for which they are never appropriately used.

In the foreground on the right stood a typical pioneer store building — just "front" and nothing more. It is the prevalence of these monotonous "store fronts" that make the main street of most towns so ugly.

Fame awaits the architect who can invent, compose or design a feasible substitute. Glass for show windows, supports for the roof and awnings, a door and a cornice. Who can make a thing of beauty out of such elements as these?

A TRUE ARCHITECT WHO LEFT HIS IMPRESS ON CALIFORNIA

HIDDEN away in a little known section of Pasadena is a group of houses called Norwic Village. So delightful, as a work of art is each of the units which make up this court that it has become one of the show places of Pasadena, where one who knows it is sure to send his friends. Like pictures hung on the wall of a little room in a choice exhibition, each cottage attracts and satisfies the eye and one turns with regret to leave the court for the ordinary street so crowded with ordinary houses manufactured wholesale and forced upon the community by unscrupulous promoters who peddle "architecture" as a commodity. Art is a subtle and elusive thing, as he who follows it has always found; and architecture is not a collection of styles, a bargain counter display from which one chooses what he likes!

How many great painters has southern California? How many poets? How many composers of note? How many real architects?

Precious indeed was the life of that talented young architect who put himself utterly into his few beautiful works and then left us for "that house not made with hands."

The little cottage shown on this page is but an example from which one draws a glimpse of the artist's ideals. The sketch which the architect made was always but the beginning. Careful working drawings must be made for the carpenter to follow, careful details must be wrought out and executed, color must be supervised, surfaces controlled, texture and line softened to meet the demands of the creator's vision made manifest.

A COTTAGE IN NORWIC VILLAGE, ALTADENA. J. W. HERSHEY, ARCHITECT.

One is reminded of Shelley, the poet, of Giorgione, the painter and of Mendelssohn's songs without words, when studying the attitude towards his art which this true architect showed.

To be sure that his house is the embodiment of his sketch, the architect must go himself to the building and often with his own hands mix the color or surface the walls.

This our young architect did and the houses he finished before his untimely taking off are as completely works of art as the peachblow vase or a statue by a born sculptor.

Before he left us Mr. Hershey had made the sketches for the clubhouse at San Clemente, the school house, and the bellevedere and swimming pool. As he sat up on his bed with drawing board and pencil, hope ever winged his thoughts and he visualized a Spanish village for Mr. Hanson, its builder and founder. Hidden in little streets the architect saw objects of interest, charming vistas, little shrines and statues one might come upon alone.

Mourning still for his inspiration, Mr. Hanson was heard to exclaim but recently: "Oh, how I wish that boy hadn't died!" Looked upon thus the carrying on of these plans by his co-laborers becomes a work of love and the town itself should become a monument to the artist, Wilmer Hershey, a true architect who left his impress on California.

THE FAIRBANKS RESIDENCE, OAK KNOLL, PASADENA

WALLACE NEFF,
Architect

(Continued from Page 17)

THE METAL WORKERS

The particular lighting fixtures used by Mr. Neff, the architect, and the Cheesewright Studios, in this residence, were made up of iron pierced work and hammered brass leaves selected because of the appropriateness to the rooms in which they were to be used. Trained craftsmen, expert in these particular crafts, are there in the Meyberg shop which occupies the floors above the store. One must see it to realize the size and scope of this fine establishment and plant. It warms the heart of a lover of our southland to know that the demand for good, well designed fixtures is so universal that the largest plant for this purpose on the Coast is right here in Los Angeles, giving employment to artisans and artists, iron workers and brass workers and teaching by its exhibition rooms the famous craftsmanship of the old world.

Since our citizens and especially our school children must be taught to recognize what is good in the art of the past before they can go forward in any art, we feel a sense of gratitude toward a firm which contributes so beautiful an exhibit of models in its show rooms and which, by bringing the best craftsmen from Europe, has set metal work and craftsmanship on a pedestal before all the people. May it start many a lad and lassie on the way toward original design and skilled execution that Los Angeles may become famous for wrought iron and hammered brass as were the guild cities of old.

W. J. JEAN,
General Contractor

And so all the way down the line of work that has to be done before an architect can see his vision of a house expressed in wood or stone, terracotta or iron work, marble or concrete, each in its proper place. The men who are today able to understand instructions, and are skilled in their own part of the work, but not pigheaded about it, are getting the remunerative job of building our beautiful cities and homes of our country side.

So well must they build that floods cannot undercut their foundations and earthquakes cannot shatter their walls. The cold and frost of an eastern winter is not a circumstance compared with the effect of intense sunshine, dust storms, cloud bursts and earthquakes in this land we love—both "wisely and too well" to lie about it. Rather are we doubly careful to call an architect and a contractor whose work and word are as good as his bond.

Our first houses had no furnaces, but those houses are now being wrecked and carted away. Experts have devised Californian methods of heating by a "unit system" the rooms where heat is needed at different times of the day. This system is installed in the Fairbanks house and in a great many of the other modern houses by The Pasadena Gas and Appliance Company and their expert staff.

THE NATIVE CALIFORNIA LIVE OAKS FORM A CHARMING FEATURE OF THE GARDENS OF OAK KNOLL. THE GARDEN FACADE OF THE FAIRBANKS RESIDENCE. WALLACE NEFF, ARCHITECT. W. J. JEAN, GENERAL CONTRACTOR.

SHAKESPEARE—AND A DANCER

By J. K. Seneca

THE LOS ANGELES Shakespeare Club's production some weeks ago, of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" at Occidental Bowl, inspired gratitude. Several of the players one remembers with pleasure. The production failed artistically from want of aesthetic unity—the presentation of one mood, rigid exclusion of the extraneous, and from the lack of any certain belief that Shakespeare in himself sufficed; yet in no elaborate stage production we have seen did the beauty of the poetry so emerge as when spoken in those large, shadowy spaces, under that dark and tranquil sky. The starry wonder of the speech, the glory of words at times would fill the listening night, mastering the sense as though a young god sweetly spoke.

After the mind's immortal beauty, the mortal beauty of the body—momentary and poignant revelation of the perishing grace and loveliness of earth. . . The dancer's form emerging softly from the shadow, as yet unyielded to the music's mood and passion; held in its own quiet; possessed still of its own lovely purposes. Pale slenderness of curves upon the formless dark; against its stillness, movement the loveliest and lightest. . .

Dances in between the acts of a Shakespeare play being a thing wholly impermissible, a happier separation was achieved the second night of the production, when, in a last dark romantic corner of this far-flung city, Fate in some minor mishap, held captive the dancer's accompanying trio, keeping them unsuccoured and away until the play drew near its close. After six dances, standing with bare feet on a dew-soaked carpet, most airily clad in the sharp chill of the night, Maud Allan generously chose to herself explain to the audience the plight of the Trio, lest we should have unjust thoughts of them.

Her voice, swift, light and sure, as a dancer's should be, has some quality akin to that of flutes and harps; most present, not in its softer emotional uses, as in speech precise and passionless; in delicate severities of tone, containing the clear note of will, of intelligence nimbly moving. Enwrapped in that sustained silveriness, one fancies rebukes, prideful defiances of a warrior spirit upon the lover of delicate sound falling not unameliorated.

Occasional severities in intercourse, moods guarded, wholly unintent to charm, counteract other else subtly unsteadying influences. Studiously unobserving, one yet feels like music—soft chords, falling notes of melodies—the movement, simple and infrequent, that for an instant breaks a finely controlled stillness; fingers that vision for one wind-swung flowers, birds wings and butterflies, moving; harmonies of line that seem part of some ideal pattern of life.

In this country of the smiling countenance, she is, in quieter moments, rather restfully, unsmiling. One speculates as to the mental evolution, the maturing and deepening perceptions of life involved in her development from the "Vision of Salome" at the beginning of her career; the girl dancer who charmed and shocked a London more prudish than today. From that "Vision" to the profoundly tragic and spiritual depths of the Tschaikovsky Pathetic Symphony, her greatest interpretative achievement, her artist spirit, through storms and conflicts, has somehow found its way.

Now that she goes to gloomier climes, one keeps in memory a last-seen image of her here. . . A little beyond, but to the picturing eye enclosed with her in the scene, scarlet and crimson geranium blossoms clustered to break the circling of bright brown hair about her face; those franker shapes opposing her eyes' blue narrowed ovals; against a keenly rippled and unresting line of the hills' purple. her wide-browed head, bent and still; her feet most lightly set upon the violet greys of ancient wood; and about her the real gold of the Californian earth unurged to alien greens;—a memoried brightness to emerge upon the murk of London's winter.

Ohrmund Brothers Unit System of Gas Heating,
Electrically Controlled and Equipped with Electric FLASH Pilot, and Plasterflush Registers.

The new electric Flasher takes the place of the old-time gas pilot, eliminating gas waste, and reducing cost to the minimum. Let us show you.

Pasadena Gas Appliance Co., Inc.
901 E. Colorado Street
Pasadena Wakefield 4126

Beautiful Garden Pieces
in
Sculptured Terra Cotta

Italian Terra Cotta Co.
W. H. Robison
1149 MISSION ROAD
Opposite County Hospital
Phone Lincoln 1057 Los Angeles

NO. 121—TALMAGE VASE

DINING ROOM IN THE RESIDENCE OF MR. AND MRS. FRED C. FAIRBANKS, ORLANDO ROAD, PASADENA —Wallace Neff, Architect.

The Cheesewright Studios
Incorporated
Decorators and Furnishers
PASADENA CALIFORNIA

GARDEN ENTRANCE TO EL CUARTEL

El Cuartel
122 East Canon Perdido
Santa Barbara

Gifts, Objects of Art, Furniture, Garden Pottery, Fountains, Etc.

WINTER SPORTS

THE stage is set for winter sports at Tahoe Tavern which opens in December. For generations the people of San Francisco Bay district and of the San Joaquin and Sacramento valleys have satisfied their longing for snowballs and sleds by running up to Truckee on the overland trains. Now the southlanders will share the fun and at the same time stop at one of their own comfortable hotels under the direction of that prince of southern hotelmen, D. M. Linnard.

TAHOE TAVERN IN WINTER. W. A. BLISS, ARCH.

The Southern Pacific was asked to broad-

SNOW PLOWS WILL KEEP THE TRACK OPEN

guage its short line from Truckee to the lake and Tavern, and agreed to do so if Linnard would take the Tavern. So in this happy circle all joined hands, and the sports are on.

Snowplows will keep all roads open in the

TAHOE TAVERN

THE FREIGHT STATION AT THE HEAD OF THE GREAT LAKE

Sierras and one may now take a through car to Tahoe Tavern from any place on the map.

The guides, lumbermen and trappers who have spent their lives in the mountains promise plenty of snow. And Mr. Jack Matthews, manager, Miss Marjorie Day, hostess, with a staff of competent Tavernites have put this fine hostelry with its new wing in perfect order and planned an old-fashioned Christmas, whose mere prospectus warms the hearts of Eastern groups and Californian parties alike. For Lake Tahoe is one of the loveliest of California's treasures in robes of summer green and blue or with its mantle of Sierra snows.

LAKE TAHOE IN WINTER WILL BE THE SCENE OF WINTER SPORTS FOR HOME SICK EASTERNERS AND OLD CALIFORNIANS ALIKE. TAVERN STUDIOS

THERE ARE MANY BEAUTIFUL LAKES IN THIS REGION OF THE HIGH SIERRAS, DELIGHTFUL FOR ARTIST OR TRAVELER. HEATHER LAKE

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

OFFICERS:

MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President

MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President

MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, Sec. Vice-Pres.

MRS. ISAAC HAMPSHUR JONES, 3rd Vice-Pres.

MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Vice-Pres.

MRS. JAMES REED, Secretary

MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treas.

MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

COMMUNITY HOUSE AND DAY NURSERY

"All for Service—And Service for All"

MONTHLY BULLETIN

CALENDAR

Nov. 9 to 23—Community Chest Campaign.

Nov. 2, 10:30 a.m.—Meeting of Board of Directors.

Nov. 2, 12:45 p.m.—Round Table Luncheon.

Nov. 9, 9:30 a.m.—Meeting of Day Nursery Committee.

Nov. 9, 10:30 a.m.—Meeting of Executive Committee.

Nov. 11, 10:30 a.m.—Meeting of Good Samaritan Committee.

Nov. 16, 10:30 a.m.—Meeting of Executive Committee.

Nov. 23, 10:30 a.m.—Meeting of Executive Committee.

Nov. 25, 10:30 a.m.—Meeting of Good Samaritan Committee.

Nov. 29 and 30—Christmas Sale at 839 South Flower.

THE COMMUNITY CHEST CAMPAIGN

IF every officer and member of the 154 organizations receiving maintenance from the Community Chest of Los Angeles did his or her bit in the coming campaign—November 9th to 23rd—success would be assured. The Assistance League is proud of the work its members have done on the two preceding campaigns. This record can only be repeated if every member who has not already signed up will notify the office—HEmpstead 5133—that she will work on Division 33, which has been assigned to the Wilshire District.

Mrs. E. Avery McCarthy, our Fourth Vice-President, is Colonel of Division 33. Mrs. Isaac-Hampshur Jones is Lieutenant Colonel. Mrs. James Reed, Miss Katherine Mellus, Mrs. T. H. Dudley, Mr. Arthur Burgess and Mr. H. R. Williams, are Majors of this Division. The following are Captains: Mrs. Palmer H. Cook, Mrs. Aubrey Allen, Mrs. W. C. Irwin, Mrs. Robert P. Newton, Mrs. J. E. Maurer, Mrs. Walsh Nebeker, Mrs. Wayland Morrison, Mrs. Ruth Hauser, Mrs. Bradner Lee, Jr., Miss Louise G. Burke, Mrs. Neal Swasey, Mrs. Van Buren Jarvis, Mrs. E. H. Seaver, Miss Houston Jones, Miss Inez Whatley, Mr. E. Avery McCarthy, Miss Florence Williams, Mrs. Henry Brown, Mr. Thomas Donahue, Dr. T. M. Savage, Mr. A. H. Strasburgher, Miss Maude Huddleson, Mr. Alfred Bolson, Mrs. B. Hirson, and Mrs. Maude Coffee.

PHILIPPE DE LACEY, THE TALENTED BELGIUM WAR ORPHAN WHO IS PLAYING IN THE FOX FILMS PRODUCTION, "MOTHER MACHREE," ENTERTAINED THE KIDDIES AT THE DAY NURSERY.

The success of the Community Chest means much to the Assistance League, just as the success of the Assistance League means much to the Community Chest. At this time when the League is about to build a new and larger Nursery to extend to many more needy mothers this special type of service, it has been brought home very forcibly that the Chest plan of providing the day to day maintenance needs of our Welfare Departments enables the Board of Directors to give more time to the development of our charitable work.

Ten days—once a year—assures relief to thousands.

THE CHRISTMAS SALE

Mrs. John E. Maurer, chairman of the Christmas Sale, announces that it will be held on Monday and Tuesday, November 29th and 30th, in the Down Town Shop, 839 South Flower Street.

The range of gifts will be larger this year than last—from Christmas cards to choice antiques; running the gamut of dainty handmade articles which represent the time and skill of the many anxious to earn enough for their own Christmas. Presents for all members of the family.

May we have the pleasure of answering your gift problems, sharing with you the pleasure of helping others in this way.

PHILIPPE AND EVA JUNE.

THE LATEST FROM PARIS

MISS EMELINE TERRILL, who is spending the winter in Paris, writes that everyone is wearing large flowers on both coats and dresses. She is sending a large assortment of the very latest ones from the Galleries Lafayette, for the sale. In gift boxes these will make delightful presents. There will also be the popular wool boutoniere in many colors.

AN unusually choice selection of fine handkerchiefs, at reasonable prices, as well as the more elaborate painted silk ones.

Strands of pearls from the Orient.

Parchment shades painted to order.

Czecho-Slovakian shawls in gorgeous colorings.

Cotton, wool and silk hooked rugs in floral and conventional design.

Embroidered linen bridge sets.

Hand-wrought copper bowls in many sizes.

Layettes for the most fastidious Christmas baby.

Dolls—from the tiny pickaninies in long baby clothes to the charming debutantes in silks and satins.

The saucy dog and cat mascots, made by one of our disabled veterans.

A SLIDE FULL OF HAPPY YOUNGSTERS.

HOLIDAY BON-BONS

ATTRACTIVELY packed California figs, stuffed with budded walnuts.

Delicious candied and preserved grapefruit peel.

Home made fruit cake in gift boxes.

Fads and Fancies too numerous to mention.

Remember the dates, November 29th and 30th.

Bring your friends.

THE THRIFT SHOP

makes another urgent appeal for your cast-offs. Shoes, gloves, warm coats, used toys for the Christmas stockings—discarded Christmas tree ornaments—children's books. Many things which have served you will still make others happy.

INDIAN PAINTINGS BY KATHRYN LEIGHTON

(Continued from Page 14)

ings are from a pictorial, colorful point of view they hold something more valuable in their delineation of character, and the spiritual content of the sitter's life.

Some of the paintings have been hung for a short time in the Biltmore Salon, at Exposition park, and in Cannell and Chaffin's galleries. Others were seen at Mrs. Leighton's studio. All have now been bought by the Great Northern Railway company and will be sent on a travelling exhibition tour, with a lecturer who understands their import.

Thus, in time, there may come back to us from the Atlantic Coast or from Canada this collection of sound and consistent paintings contributed to the world of art by one of our own artists. Others will then explain to us why these paintings are notable and who Kathryn Woodman Leighton is in the field of art! The pleasure which these paintings give to the connoisseur comes largely from viewing them all together. Repetition of the type with variations of costume and character is one element of beauty and the climax of color in headdress and blanket, heavy coats of skin, and the tepee's decorated background is overwhelming when the twenty portraits are placed together and the meaning of symbol and sign explained. Wise indeed were these generous patrons of art to keep the collection together in their own possession and Los Angeles may even place one eaglet's feather in her cap as the home of the painter of this notable series of the Blackfoot tribe.

"GOOD ARCHITECTURE"

Choose your own architect from the representative styles shown in "California Homes" by California Architects. Price $1.00.

Address: ELLEN LEECH,
544 So. El Molino Ave Pasadena, Calif.

THE COVER PLATES

WOMEN as painters have this month combined to absorb the interest of our art pages. Katherine J. Hunley has long been active in Redlands in the cause of art appreciation and has herself been a faithful student and follower of the fascinating goddess.

The lure of the desert calls many of our painters out onto its boundless stretches or into the colorful mountains which tower above it. Color, that most desired of all the painter's attainments, haunts the desert always and is there the artist's fascination and reward. No printer's ink can convey an adequate representation of the subtle tones of the desert, so startling in their beauty, so vivid at times, so elusive at others that they melt into drab in an hour. Ink is indeed poor substitute for the rich, oil pigments which have been made by great painters of the past, and manufactured by experts under the artist's direction. Each color instead of being mixed with a brush before being applied, must, on the great presses used in printing, be applied to the paper in one color at a time. All the spots which are to be yellow must be printed when the press says "yellow", all the red goes on at one time, all the blue at another.

It is always guess work on the part of the printer whether or not he can produce the effect desired.

When the work of any artist is used for cover plates, we are always glad to direct the lovers of art to the original. This month Mrs. Hunley's "Evening Light at Twenty-nine Palms" is on view at the Stendahl Galleries, Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles. Or, "Twenty-nine Palms" may be reached by leaving the Ocean to Ocean Highway at White Water and crossing the desert for forty miles.

The High Note—
. . . Black Satin

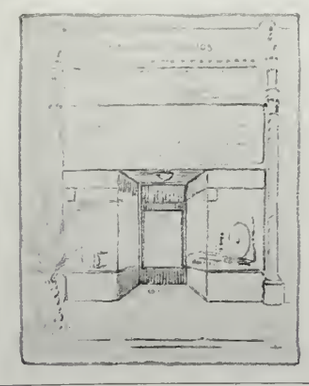
AFTERNOON AND EVENING
DRESSES OF SATIN

Never have we received any Fall season Dresses that expressed such charm as these for Dinner and Afternoon occasions. Not only in the black satin, whose richness is unequalled, but also the lovely lighter colors, fashioned to bring out that most necessary thing in costuming—individuality.

Particularizing in larger and smaller sizes

Competent dressmakers will make your gown to order, if desired

Schaffer's
GRAY SHOP
GOWNS for WOMEN
Large & Small
624 East Colorado
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA



THE LATIN INFLUENCE

in modern home furnishings is more insistent than ever. Especially beautiful pieces are being shown this season at moderate prices.

BARKER BROS.
Complete Furnishers of Successful Homes
SEVENTH Street, Flower & Figueroa

LA SOLANA
A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue
Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day
Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St.
Pasadena

The Assembly Tea Room
The In and Out-of-Town House of Los Angeles serves
LUNCHEON, TEA AND DINNER
INCIDENTALLY
The Very Choicest Food
Special Sunday Dinner 5 to 8
644 South Flower St., Los Angeles
Phone VAndike 7177

Ladies'
Sports
Coats

and other attractive things are woven by hand in individual designs on Hewson Looms.

Handwrought Silverware and Pewter

Hewson Handcraft Studios
2508½ W. 7th Los Angeles
602 E. Colorado St. Pasadena

Superfine

Not "Purveyor to Her Majesty, the Queen," as in Victorian England, but Conveyor for Her Majesty, the American Woman. Full half the train devoted to her comfort. Fast now. Faster after November 14—leaves Los Angeles—Southern Pacific Lines—5:00 p. m. daily; arrives Chicago—Rock Island Lines—10:00 a. m.; returning leaves Chicago 8:30 p. m., arrives Los Angeles 9:30 a. m.—only two days and three nights en route. Extra fare, $10. Other high-class fast trains on convenient schedules to Kansas City, Chicago, St. Louis, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Memphis. No extra fare.

GOLDEN STATE
LIMITED

"Saves a Business Day"

For tickets, reservations and information, apply
Southern Pacific City Ticket Office
937 State St., Santa Barbara, Calif., Phone 243
or address B. F. Coons, General Agent, Rock Island Lines
809 Van Nuys Bldg., Los Angeles, Calif.

Rock Island — Southern Pacific Lines

TO QUALITY ADVERTISERS

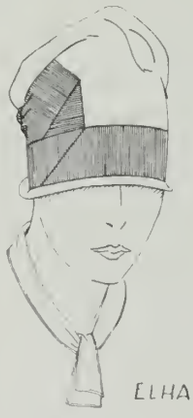
CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND declines to compete with the hundreds of house organs, street organs, and mouth organs which solicit advertising in this community.

Useful as they may be to their owners, they have no other function in the field of journalism.

What are their arguments? Are they really a vital part of the life of this city? Are they read by the substantial, monied citizens whose trade you want? The tripper and the tourist seldom buy enroute: they come well supplied. Established houses need permanent customers.

On the basis of circulation alone, a monthly magazine printed on book paper, illustrated with the best of photo-engraving plates and made up of carefully selected articles by experts in every field covered, does not compete with the daily newspapers which carry the news of the day and the bargains of tomorrow and vanish to make room for more news and new bargains the next day.

The dailies and the weekly newspapers must of necessity print everything, not discriminating against any trade. In fact, they reach the masses. But, for this very reason, it is difficult for new citizens to find the quality stores and specialty shops in safety.



Discriminating advertisers must therefore establish their position in any community by using, in addition, some other first class medium of communication between the quality customer and themselves. It is the substantial, monied people who live in the best hotels and who buy homes here to whom your advertising is best directed.

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND offers you a peculiar service. It studies your business, or your product, or your profession of service and through its selective processes it presents the worthiest of these things to its subscribers who will appreciate them and want to buy them.

In other words, CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND knows its own readers intimately; and it never sells space to any advertiser unless he has something to offer those who read and believe every word in the monthly issues of the magazine.

Its own reputation with its subscribers is therefore the criterion on which new advertising is admitted to its pages; and its constant effort is to keep those pages clean and to serve both the advertiser and the reader by bringing them together pleasantly.

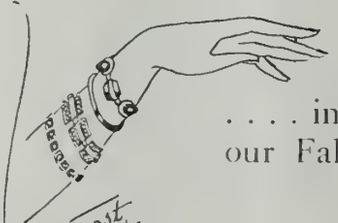
Trust CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, the only independent, general, quality magazine in the Southwest, to find for you—quality customers.

Crofut-Knapp Hats at Coulter's

"Correctly-fitting men's head-sizes"—in hats for women.

The Elham — exclusively Coulter's—is only one of many smart models from these master-makers, in new Autumn shades.

$16.50 to $22.50



Coulter Dry Goods Co.
FOUNDED in 1870

Seventh Street at Olive

FLORNINA

95 South Los Robles Ave.
Pasadena, California

Santa Barbara El Paseo Sport Shop, 21 E. De La Guerra

Bracelets the season's most necessary adjunct to the costume

. . . . included in our Fall Display of

Gowns, Coats
Sport Frocks

Pearls? Yes,— but the tricky fastenings, the idea of placing, is so different

SOME FINE SHOPS AT WESTLAKE PARK

THE heart of Los Angeles is to be found at Westlake Park. For half a century her youth and maidens have trysted there, and there today are lover's nooks and little rowboats on the lake.

Around this park and lake have begun to cluster the specialty shops which seek position near the homes of the west side. Makers of fine furs and costumes, the purveyers of silver plate to the queens of modern homes. Such shops as are really quality shops have prospered here, for here begins the boulevard to Santa Monica-by-the-Sea and here are centered other streets running east and north and south. Conveniently the children may be entertained within the handsome park; conveniently the madame shops or tries on her new gown. That these new shops are needed here in addition to the great department stores in the downtown shopping district is but a matter of the logical growth of a city and nothing to arouse jealousy or the realtor's apprehensive ire. Los Angeles has overnight become a great city and must be organized. There is room for all who genuinely serve good merchandise.

THE FIRM OF WILLARD H. GEORGE

FURS IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

IN this land of sunshine, it is difficult for an easterner to understand that there are almost as many furs sold and worn in southern California as in one's own home city, back east. Strange as it may seem, such is the case. The cool nights of southern California, the dictates of fashion and the many beautiful clubs, theatres, where the well dressed women gather, all require their particular type of fur wrap.

Conspicuous in the business supplying this need of the modern woman is The Atelier of Willard H. George located at 2126 West Seventh Street, opposite Westlake Park. Here amid beautiful surroundings, in a day light store, facing the Park, which it is estimated more than one million tourists visit annually; one may view some of the finest creations of the furrier's art to be found anywhere in the world. Internationally known, the fur creations that are developed and produced by this concern bring prominent people well-known in the artistic and social world as customers.

Frequently the statement is made by local customers who are visitors to Europe, that even in Paris and other European style centers, one does not see more beautiful fur wraps than are created in this Atelier.

One thinks of furs today in the same class as beautiful jewels and many people have the impression that a purchase of a fur is a matter requiring considerable investment, particularly when dealing at The Atelier. While it is true that one can make a good investment in the choicest pelts of the animal kingdom such as silver foxes, Russian sables, chinchilla, and other royal furs, it is also true that the less expensive furs are here worked into creations of beauty. To create fur wraps, coats and scarfs, fitting to the individuality of the wearer and to the occasion, is the aim of The Atelier. With a workroom, operated the year round, and with expert craftsmen, it is possible here to make the desired garment for a sum within the allowance which any well-dressed woman must set aside for her furs.

THE FIRM OF A. SCHMIDT AND SON

NEW YORK

Importers of Fine Silver and Table Ware

LOS ANGELES may be described as that part of California which is nearest the Atlantic Coast. So closely associated with eastern and middle western cities are her inhabitants, and so accustomed to dealing with the merchants of the Atlantic states, that they have brought with them their favorities and the best of New York stores will be found conveniently located at Westlake Park Square.

Importers of old and modern silver, Sheffield Plate, old and modern glass garnitures and fine China, for New Yorkers since 1869, at 81 East 48th street, the firm of A. Schmidt and Son have quietly established themselves in this central Los Angeles shopping district and in one of the pergola shops in Pasadena at the Maryland Hotel.

A visit to their Westlake rooms is as interesting as a trip through the Louvre or the Petit Palais in Paris. Here is an old amber glass set dated 1790. Goblets, champaign and claret glasses and finger bowls express the art of the past. A five-piece table set of center piece and four sweetmeat dishes, made in London by Parker and Wakelin, show handcut Waterford glass lines.

But most interesting to the housekeeper of today, as well as to the collector of fine China and plate, are the fascinating silver table service, and the old designs of masters in the art of silver-smith. A coffee pot by Frances Cramp, made in London in 1770, is unusually large, and will grace the table of some connoisseur. An old French silver tree, a rarity in silver, will be picked up by some shopper who knows a good thing and can indulge her good taste.

Handsomest of all are the massive gravy boats which are there today, but will easily be gone tomorrow. They are beautifully carved. Made by William Bennett, London, 1817, they represent the sort of thing that museums show to everybody, but which some lucky man or woman carries of to enjoy with knowing and congenial friends.

A Photograph of Westlake Park by Margaret Craig.

MISS HARKER'S SCHOOL
FOR GIRLS

Palo Alto -:- -:- -:- California
"The Home of Stanford University"

Outdoor life all the year round. One hour from San Francisco. College Preparatory and Special Courses. Separate residence for girls from 5 to 14 years. Catalog on request.

KENWOOD HALL

Resident and Day School for Girls. Sub-Primary through High School.
Open throughout the year.

DIRECTOR: RUBY MILDRED KING

New Location: 6367 Wilshire Blvd., Opposite Carthay Center
Tel. ORegon 5303

The Girls' Collegiate School 34th Year

NEWLY LOCATED IN THE COUNTRY

Boarding and Day School. Accredited East and West. Out-Door Life a Reality. 50-acre estate. All sports. Saddle Horses. New Buildings. Italian type. L. A. Office, "Ask Mr. Foster" Information Service in Robinson's Dept. Store at Seventh Street and Grand Ave., Tel. BR 4701.

Glendora, Calif. Miss Parsons and Miss Dennen, Principals

Westridge

A COLLEGE PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS. ACCREDITED.
Primary, Intermediate and Academic Departments.

MARY L. RANNEY, AMIE C. RUMNEY, Principals.

324 Madeline Drive, Pasadena, California Telephone Wakefield 5276

The Elliott School for Girls

Residence and Day School.

Ideal Home Life Character Building

Superior Educational Advantages. Sub-Primary through Eleventh Grade.
Martha Collins Weaver, M. A., Principal. Pico Blvd. at Grammercy Place.
EMpire 5347

Marlborough School for Girls

Established, 1889

Boarding and Day School Accredited to Eastern and Western Colleges
5029 West Third Street

ADA S. BLAKE, (A. B. Radcliffe College) Principal

THE WILLIAMS SCHOOL
for Handicapped Children

449 North Madison Avenue, Pasadena, California

For the benefit of exceptional children who vary from the average type to a moderate degree; for those who are practically normal, except in time and variance of their development.
To each pupil is offered the educational essentials for his utmost development and the further stimulus arising from competitive and associate companionship. Admission may be obtained at any time for both day and boarding pupils. For full particulars address

BEATRICE MICHAU WILLIAMS, Director

GREENWOOD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

5928 Franklin Avenue, Hollywood

Select Resident and Day School

Lawns, Tennis Courts, Outdoor Swimming Pool. Special advantages in music, under Mrs. Elsa Spencer.

Principals:
Mrs. M. Greenwood, Newnham College, Cambridge
H. F. Greenwood, A. B., Corpus Christi College, Cambridge
Telephone HOlly 2886

An Ideal School for Young Women
Cumnock School

COLLEGE WORK IN THE FOLLOWING COURSES:
Vocal Interpretation of Literature

Literary Appreciation	Voice and Diction	Story Writing
Public Speaking	French	Dancing
Dramatics	Story Telling	Psychology

Art and Art Appreciation

An accredited High School in Class A preparing for Western and Eastern Colleges and Universities.

HELEN A. BROOKS, Director

5353 West Third Street Los Angeles
WHitney 3427 —TELEPHONES— WHitney 7311

PACIFIC MILITARY ACADEMY

(Absolutely Fireproof)
Grammar and High School Departments
For Catalogue write
Commandant, P. O. Box No. 308, Culver City, Calif.
Telephones: Los Angeles—EMpire 6022
Culver City 3294

The Westlake
School for Girls

333 South Westmoreland Avenue

Residence and Day School
Lower School, College Preparatory, Junior College
Fully Accredited
Departments of Art, Music, Home Economics

JESSICA SMITH VANCE FREDERICA DE LAGUNA
Telephone DRexel 0052

PORTER BLANCHARD'S
GENUINE HAND-WROUGHT SILVER

May be had here in the Southwest at
THE HEWSON STUDIOS
602 East Colorado Street, Pasadena
2508½ West 7th St., Los Angeles Assistance League, Hollywood

SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

SAN YSIDRO RANCH

California's Famed Foothill Resort Unharmed by Earthquake.

Nestled in the foothills among the Orange Groves, overlooking Valley and Sea. Elevation 600 feet. Furnished Bungalows, 2 to 7 rooms. Central Dining Room. Electricity, hot and cold water. Surf-bathing, Tennis, Horseback Riding. Six miles from Historic Santa Barbara, two miles from ocean and country club. Moderate rates. For Folder, address San Ysidro Ranch, Santa Barbara, California.

THE CITY OF PASADENA

CONSERVATION THE BASIS OF MANAGEMENT

THE MUNICIPAL DAM AT DEVIL'S GATE NARROWS IN THE ARROYO SECO CANYON, ON THE PROPERTY OF THE CITY OF PASADENA, LOS ANGELES COUNTY, CALIFORNIA. BEHIND IT IS THE WATERSHED WHICH SUPPLIES THE CITY. LIKE OTHER "DRY RIVERS" OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA, THIS MOUNTAIN STREAM HAS FILLED ITS BED WITH DISINTEGRATED GRANITE STONES AND FLOWS TO THE SEA UNDERGROUND UNLESS CONSERVED BY SUCH A DAM WHICH GOES DOWN TO BEDROCK FAR BELOW THE SURFACE OF THE RIVER BED. IT SERVES ALSO IN FLOOD CONTROL

MODERN city management in a community such as Pasadena has become the work of experts–engineers, business men. Water and light, clean streets and parks, shade trees and civic buildings must be supplied to the citizens and be kept in order, guarded and renewed.

PASADENA, by reason of her standard of American citizenship, as well as her youth, is a model in management. Her guests are well cared for, and become citizens; her citizens enjoy many advantages of service and surroundings unknown to many other communities.

The Frederick Law Olmsted place—situated on a steep bluff overlooking the Pacific at Palos Verdes

Palos Verdes Estates

California's most distinctive seaside Community offers boundless opportunities for the creation of elegant homes such as the one pictured above.

Every modern city convenience in one of the Southland's best scenic locations—

JAY LAWYER
Gen. Mgr.

BANK OF AMERICA
Trustee

LANE MORTGAGE BUILDING, EIGHTH AND SPRING STS.
LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

PACIFIC GARDENS, FROM SEATTLE DOWN THE COAST

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

Painting by C. P. Townsley

No. 84 DECEMBER, 1926 25 Cents

CALIFORNIA'S HOME AND GARDEN MAGAZINE

AN IDEA as old as is human effort! It is the very law of nature and the instinct of mankind to unite in working for a common cause. If the cause is good, if the desire is sincere and the effort is well directed, society will be benefited and the effort justified.

THIS principle of collaboration is the fundamental concept of the Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles, founded five years ago for the definite purpose of advancing the art of Architecture. To this end its members are contributing their individual abilities to the Association for collective service in the design and execution of public buildings.

TO BETTER architectural training and practice, the Association is striving to encourage the study of Art and Architecture, to afford more adequate library facilities and to bring to public attention the value of the Profession to the community.

THE BATCHELDER TILES

BATCHELDER-WILSON COMPANY

We produce Tile for Fireplaces, Fountains, Pavements, Garden Pots---anything that is appropriately made from clay. :: :: :: :: ::

2633 Artesian Street

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

The Cheesewright Studios, Inc.

Decorators and Furnishers

PASADENA CALIFORNIA

GEORGE S. HUNT

Fine Hand Made Furniture

Antique Reproductions

171 EAST CALIFORNIA STREET
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

ANNOUNCING THE OPENING OF ADDITIONAL WORKSHOPS WHERE OLD-WORLD CONSTRUCTION AND DESIGN IN FINE FURNITURE ARE PARTICULARLY STRESSED

YOU ARE MOST WELCOME TO INSPECT THE ENTIRE SHOP AND TO SEE FURNITURE IN THE PROCESS OF MANUFACTURE.

SOUTHLAND CALENDAR

Announcements of exhibitions, fetes, concerts, club entertainments, etc., for the calendar pages are free of charge and should be mailed to Ellen Leech, Associate Editor, 344 South El Molino Avenue, Pasadena, at least two weeks previous to date of issue, the fifth. No correction can be guaranteed if they are received later than that date. CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, California. One dollar and twenty-five cents for six issues, two fifty per year. Addresses will be changed as many times as desired if notice is given before the first of the month for which the change is made.

Entered as second class matter, July 28, 1919, at the Post Office at Pasadena, California, under act of March 3, 1879.

Clubs

VALLEY HUNT CLUB:
Officers, Directors and Committees, 1926-1927:
Gen. Charles MeC. Reeve - - - - - - - - - President
George H. Bent - Vice-President
J. Gamble Reighard - Secretary
Robert C. Wente - - Treasurer
J. Curtis Sloane - - - Director
House Committee—Mrs. Philip Schuyler Doane, chairman; Entertainment committee, Mr. George H. Bent, chairman; Sunday Eve., Mrs. Joseph M. Goss, chairman; Monday Afternoon Bridge, Mrs. Richard C. Kumler, chairman; Evening Bridge, Mrs. J. Gamble Reighard, chairman; Dance Committee, Mrs. Laurence Macomber, chairman; Mrs. Harry F. Markolf, co-chairman; Sports Committee, Mr. Walter Hopkins, chairman.

ANNANDALE GOLF CLUB, PASADENA:
The afternoon bridge, Mah Jongg and tea parties have been discontinued for the season, but tea will be served as requested and tables for cards are always available.

FLINTRIDGE COUNTRY CLUB:
Tuesday is Ladies' Day and a special luncheon is served. In the afternoons informal bridge parties may be arranged, followed by tea.
Table d'hote dinner served in dining room every Sunday from 12 to 3 p. m.

LOS ANGELES COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, second Monday of each month.
Music during dinner, followed by dancing, every Saturday evening during the month.
Luncheon served from 11:30 to 2 .p m. on Saturdays.
Sunday night concerts during month.
Tea served as requested and tables for cards always available.

WILSHIRE COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, third Monday of each month.
Dancing every second and fourth Saturday during the month.
A musical is arranged for each Sunday night in the month.

MIDWICK COUNTRY CLUB:
Ladies' Days, fourth Monday in each month.
Tea and informal bridge every afternoon.
Polo, Wednesday and Saturday of each week.
Dancing every Saturday night.
Buffet luncheon served every Sunday.
Match polo games every Sunday, preceded by luncheon parties, followed by teas, during season.

LOS ANGELES ATHLETIC CLUB:
Dinner dances, Tuesday and Friday nights of every week, Tuesday night informal; Friday night semi-formal.
Plunge open to the ladies Tuesday and Friday of every week.

SAN GABRIEL COUNTRY CLUB:
A dinner dance is arranged for the third Thursday of each month.
On Friday of each week a special luncheon is served, with bridge in the afternoons.
Ladies play every day starting after ten a. m., and not before two p. m.

MONTECITO COUNTRY CLUB:
Provides an 18 hole golf course, two concrete and two dirt courts for tennis, bowls and croquet.
Tea is served and informal bridge parties arranged as desired.
A buffet supper is served every Sunday night.

LA CUMBRE GOLF AND COUNTRY CLUB, SANTA BARBARA:
Offers a course of eighteen holes, rivaling any in hazard and beauty. A reeent purchase of additional acreage will provide an extended and even more interesting course.
Luncheon is served every day, and tea may be arranged as desired.

Where the Treasures of a Collector May Be Purchased as Gifts

A. Schmidt & Son

For Fifty-six Years

IMPORTERS OF ANTIQUE AND MODERN SILVER AND Sheffield Plate, Fine China and Glass

2320 W. Seventh St., Los Angeles
391 E. Colorado St., Pasadena

Boston New York Washington

REDLANDS COUNTRY CLUB:
Golf tournament for men is held every Saturday. Monday the course is reserved for the women and a speeial luncheon served. Those who do not play golf or who have had a round in the morning, devote the afternoon to bridge or mah jongg. Every Saturday afternoon tea is served.

PALOS VERDES GOLF CLUB: Offers an eighteen hole, all grass, seaside course, delightful for all the year play, open to residents and their guests. Lunch and dinner served every day. Tea and informal bridge may be enjoyed every afternoon.

ENCINO COUNTRY CLUB, VAN NUYS:
Buffet dinner dances every Wednesday evening.
Ladies Golf Thursday mornings.
Thursday a special luncheon is served, followed by bridge. Afternoon Tea 4:30.
Luncheon and dinner served every day.
Special luncheons, dinners, teas and bridge parties may be arranged for as desired.

PASADENA GOLF CLUB:
Wednesday is Ladies' Day, with eards and mahjongg from two to four-thirty, when tea is served.
Dinner is served on Sunday from five-thirty to seven-thirty. The usual luncheon and dinner service prevails throughout the week.

NEWPORT HARBOR YACHT CLUB:
Saturday, December 4, Annual meeting of the membership. Eleetion of offieers and direetors.
Saturday, January 15, 1927, Inaugural ball. Banquet, 6:30 p. m., presentation of officers, 8 p. m., danee, 8:30 p.m.

Art

LOS ANGELES MUSEUM OF HISTORY, SCIENCE AND ART, Exposition Park, will continue the Historical Exhibition of early American and Early California Crafts, Implements, etc., to the period of the Civil War.
Gallery C, Alcove, Fictile Ivories.
Gallery G, Second Floor: Children's Exhibition of Primitive Playthings, Foreign Toys, etc. Decorative Portraits by Leo Katz.
Print Rooms, Pictorial Photography by Clarenee White; Paisley Shawls; Block Prints by Archipenko, Franz Marc, and other Europeans. Thursday afternoon, December 2nd: Early American Fashion Show. Miss Marion Parks, who is in charge of the Historical Exhibition, will lecture on eostume in early America. Her talk will be illustrated by living models. Some of the costumes used will be genuine relics of the periods which they represent. Thursday afternoon, December 9th: Arts and Crafts in Early California by Miss Marion Parks. This lecture will be illustrated by authentic examples of the crafts taught in the missions and implements in use under the Spanish and Mexican regimes. Thursday afternoon, December 30th: Pioneer Day. All members of pioneer families of Southern California are to be guests of honor and reminiscences will be in order.

PASADENA ART INSTITUTE, Carmelita Gardens, Pasadena, announces the following exhibitions: Room 1, as usual, will show the work of the members of the Pasadena Society of Artists; Room 2, water colors by Marian Kavanaugh Wachtel; Room 3, paintings by Elmer Wachtel; Room 4, prints and water colors by John Cotton; Room 5, etchings and prints by Loren Barton; Room 6, etchings and water colors by Arthur Mellier.

THE BILTMORE SALON, in the Los Angeles Biltmore, will hold a one man show by John Hubbard Rich, November 29 to December 25. Opening Deeember 27 and continuing through January 22 the Painters of the West will hold the Fifth Exhibition, using the Galleria and the display rooms, there will be about thirty members exhibiting.

AINSLEE GALLERIES, Barker Bros., Los Angeles, announce for the month a one man show by Charles L. A. Smith. A general exhibition will fill the remainder of the rooms, and as usual canvases by California artists will be shown in the first large gallery.

CANNELL AND CHAFFIN, Inc., 720 Seventh Street, Los Angeles, will show in their galleries, December 6 to 18, the work of Alexander Flyn, consisting prineipally of Spanish portraits.

THE FIFTH ANNUAL WESTERN SALON OF PICTORIAL PHOTOGRAPHY will be open through December 15 in the exhibition gallery of the Public Library, Los Angeles, and from December 15 to 30 at the Southwest Museum, Marmion Way and Avenue 46, Los Angeles. Eighty-three exhibitors show two hundred and thirty-five photographs, all showing the high quality and the originality of the work being done on this Coast.

JOHN CLARK, the deaf and dumb Indian wood sculptor, of the Blaekfoot tribe, is exhibiting a group of his earven animals at the Biltmore Salon. Clark has his studio at Many Glaciers in Glacier National Park where he earves from solid ehunks of cottonwood bears and deer. The bears predominate and are shown in many moods.

PACIFIC COAST ARTISTS are holding the first annual exhibition, December 3 to January 29, under the auspices of the Artland Club, at the down-town galleries of the club in the Fine Arts building, Seventh and Flower streets, Los Angeles. The jury of selection was composed of the following artists: Painting: Barse Miller, Edgar Payne, Bessie Hazen, Anna Hills, Paul Lauritz, Leland Curtis, Edouard Vysekal; (Alternatives), Dana Bartlett, Arthur Hill Gilbert, Henri De Kruif. Sculpture: Peter David Edstrom, Finn Frolich, Laura Woodhead Stere, Harry Winebrenner, Roger Noble Burnham. The jury of awards will consist of the entire membership of the Artland Club. Each member will have the privilege of casting one vote, by secret ballot, for the painting or piece of sculpture of his choice. The Artland Club offers a purchase prize of five hundred dollars for the best work of art in painting or sculpture.

THE GLENDALE ART ASSOCIATION is holding their first prize show with thirty paintings hung by members. The exhibit opened November 1, at Van Groves galleries and will close in January. Two prizes are offered and awards will be made by popular vote of the public. The pictures are named but the artist signature covered, not to be revealed until awards are made. Nell Walker Warner, president, is directing it and plans to make the prize show an annual event in the club.

MRS. ROY A. (BLANCHE BALLAGH) BALLAGH, the mother and founder of the Glendale Art Association and president of that organization for four years, and who is credited with making it a vital factor in the community life of the city, is continuing her educational work by giving lectures and opening classes in many different phases of Art and Science; the two inseparables. She is taking up the subject of Practical and Color Psychology before the women's clubs in a series of lectures, concentrating on color and its effect on humanity as being of the highest importance. The Tuesday Afternoon Club of Glendale has secured Mrs. Ballagh for a series of seven lectures on the exoteric and esoteric values of the seven rays of color; and she spoke before a large audience recently at a meeting of the district federation of Women's Clubs, on "The Value of Art to the Federation."

KIEVITS GALLERY, Vista Del Arroyo Hotel, Pasadena, is showing a collection of Dutch, Italian, and other paintings and etchings. The gallery is open in the evenings.

THE ARTS AND CRAFTS SOCIETY will hold their monthly meetings in the rooms of the Artland Club, Fine Arts Bldg., Seventh and Flower streets, Los Angeles, by invitation, and this invitation includes the use of the Artland Galleries for the duration of one month during the year. The Society, by the invitation of the Friday Morning Club, will participate in a bazaar the afternoon and evening of December 8th.

GRACE NICHOLSON, Pasadena, announces she will show in her six new galleries during December the following collections: Seventy-five Tibetan banner paintings, sixteenth to eighteenth century; selected collection of genuine old maps, color prints and etchings; the Goldenthal Palestine collection of fabrics, pottery, jewelry and rugs; complete collection of latest work in silver by the great Danish craftsman, Georg Jensen, also fine examples of American art in oils.

THE TWELFTH ANNUAL ARIZONA ART EXHIBITION, at the State Fair in Phoenix in November, awarded prizes and honorable mentions in two departments, one open to all artists, the other for Arizona artists only. The committee purchases each year one work for its permanent collection; a still life, "Flowers," by Loren Barton, of Los Angeles, was chosen this year. The awards in the open competition were as follows: Oil painting, First, Oscar E. Breninghous, "The Cottonwoods of the Pueblo;" second, Howe Williams, "Whispering Silence;" honorable mention, Loren Barton, "Lily;" Hanson Puthuff, "Uplifting Hills." Water color, first, J. Cestmir Svoboda, "Taos Indian Woman;" second, Bertha Baxter, "Interior;" honorable mention, Gertrude M. Young, "The Sunlit Porch." Still life, first, Katherine Kavanaugh Cahill, "Still Life;" honorable mention, Laura Barton Adams Armer, "Orientale;" Loren Barton, "Flowers." Black and white, first, Marylka Modjeska Pattison, "Church in Poland;" second, Svoboda, "Lithograph."

TEN CANVASES, the remaining available paintings by the late Guy Rose, were shown last month at the Ebell Club.

THE WOMAN'S CLUB OF HOLLYWOOD conducts each year before Christmas an exhibition of small paintings, from which source acceptable gifts may be selected.

A MEMORIAL EXHIBITION for Charles M. Russell is now being arranged by Mrs. Russell for January at the Biltmore Salon.

STENDAHL GALLERIES, Ambassador Hotel, are showing paintings by Charles Rollo Peters, and Sidney Lawrence of Alaska.

There is NO SUBSTITUTE for a

MUSICAL GIFT!

Southern California MUSIC COMPANY
806 and 808 So. Broadway

"Home of EVERYTHING That's Musical"

Eleanor and . . . . Hollingsworth Beach

French and Italian Arts

630 East Colorado Street Pasadena, California

ARTHUR MILLIER, etcher and author of "Arts and Artists" in the Los Angeles Times, will make his home at the Stone International Galleries at Monrovia, using the available studio, which will give him the opportunity to create some of the things now existing only in his mind.

WALTER L. CHEEVER is showing a fine portrait in oils in the prize exhibit now on at Glendale.

JOHN W. COTTON will exhibit prints and water colors during the month of December at the Pasadena Art gallery in Carmelita Gardens.

NELL WALKER WARNER, president of the Glendale Art Association has an exhibit of twenty paintings in oil at the Sunset Canyon Country Club to be shown during December.

GOEFFREY HOLT is doing a most attractive series of paintings of the fruit and vegetables, as well as the flower stands in the neighborhood of Los Angeles.

ETHEL ROSE, (Mrs. Guy Rose), after spending the summer and Fall in New England and New York has gone to France for the winter, Paris, Riviera, Biaritz, and possibly into Italy, returning in the late spring.

JACK WILKINSON SMITH closed a successful exhibition at the Art League of Santa Barbara, in the De la Guerra studios, last month, and also brought home a number of interesting sketches.

WILLIAM WENDT and AARON KILPATRICK are back from their sketching trip into the Lone Pine region.

THE ART LEAGUE OF SANTA BARBARA announce a Memorial Exhibition of the work of Charles M. Russell, January 3 to 17.

DAVID ANTHONY TAUSZKY is holding a one-man show at the Ebell Club, Los Angeles, during the month. Mr. Tauszky is now occupying the studio at 517 Garfield, South Pasadena, near the Adobe Flores.

POWER O'MALLEY held his second Los Angeles exhibition at the Stendahl galleries, Ambassador Hotel, last month. The first exhibition was held last year at the Biltmore Salon and consisted of a group of Irish pictures, landscapes and figure work, to these he has now added paintings of the California coast, near Carmel, and Texas landscapes.

F. GRAYSON SAYRE held an exhibition of his recent desert paintings at the Wilshire Art Galleries, 3309 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles, last month. The desert is presented in every aspect, as seen from the studio home of the artist in Coachella Valley.

KAMESUKE HIRAGA, a Japanese artist who paints European subjects, held an interesting exhibit last month at 232 East first Street, Los Angeles. Hiraga has studied largely on this Coast, first in the Mark Hopkins Institute of San Francisco, then in Los Angeles and later in Paris, where he hopes to work in the Spring.

Music

THE PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA OF LOS ANGELES, W. A. Clark, Jr., founder, Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor, Mrs. Caroline Smith, business manager, will present the usual symphony concerts throughout the month: Thursday evenings, the 2nd, 16th and 30th, Friday afternoons, the 3rd, 17th and 31st. The popular Sunday afternoon concerts are on the 12th and 26th. The orchestra, during the season, will give a total of twenty-five concerts in Pasadena, San Diego, Santa Barbara, Santa Monica and Riverside. All the Los Angeles concerts are given at the Philharmonic Auditorium.

PASADENA MUSIC AND ART ASSOCIATION, in the 1926-1927 Artist Series, will present the Russian Symphonic Choir, December 8th, at the Pasadena High School Auditorium.

ALICE COLEMAN BATCHELDER, pianist, presents the third of the series of eight Coleman Chamber concerts, Sunday afternoon, December 19, at four o'clock, at the Community Playhouse, Pasadena. The artists are the Luboviski String Quartet.

WOMAN'S LYRIC CLUB, J. B. Poulin, director, Isabelle Isgnig, president, gives the first concert of the winter season, December 3, at the Philharmonic Auditorium, Fifth and Olive, Los Angeles.

AUDITORIUM ARTIST SERIES, George Leslie Smith, manager, will present eleven artist attractions during this, the fourth season. The Ukranian National Chorus, with forty voices and three soloists, will appear December 27th. Lucrezia Bori, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will sing January 3rd.

THE LOS ANGELES ORATORIO SOCIETY, John Smallman, conductor, will present the three scheduled concerts at the Shrine Auditorium, Los Angeles. This Society was organized fourteen years ago and is recognized as one of the best choral organizations in the country. The first concert will be "The Messiah," December 19, with Riccardo Martin, Fred Patton, Julia Claussen and Blythe Taylor as soloists.

THE LOS ANGELES TRIO will be heard in concert at the Biltmore Music Room, December 10, presenting, as in other concerts of the series, new works to Los Angeles. The personnel of the trio includes May McDonald Hope, founder and pianist; David Cravoc, violinist, and Ilya Bronson, 'cellist.

THE ZOELLNER QUARTET will present the annual series of chamber music concerts in the music room of the Biltmore Hotel. The first concert was given last month and the next is scheduled for January 4.

SEATTLE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, recently organized under the direction of Karl Krueger, gave the initial concert early in November. The orchestra is to give six Monday evening subscription concerts, five Sunday afternoon concerts and four Saturday morning concerts for young people.

BEHYMER PHILHARMONIC COURSES make December musically brilliant: Impresario Behymer is closing the first half of the winter season by bringing four great organizations and two stars in December. Thus from December 6-10 the Denishawn Company will be enjoyed in a series of new programs at Philharmonic Auditorium. Ruth St. Denis and Ted Shawn have just danced their way around the globe, and in doing so gathered a fascinating variety of brilliant material. In Asia, Africa and Europe they have not only studied customs and folklore, but gone to great expense in buying beautiful costumes and stage properties which will make their series an even greater success than that of two winters ago. Julia Claussen, the great Dutch contralto, and Paul Kochanski, internationally celebrated Polish violinist, return December 9 and 14, both being foremost favorites among patrons of the Behymer Philharmonic Courses. They will be preceded by that great Slavic choral body, the Russian Symphonic Choir, which is to be heard for the first time December 7, opening the next afternoon the Behymer Matinee Philharmonic Course, revived in response to many requests. Opening December 28 the Manhattan Opera Company, with Tamaki Miura, Japanese prima donna, and Pavley-Oukrainsky Ballet will present joint programs; Tuesday evening, December 28, "Namiko San" (Japanese opera in English); Wednesday matinee, December 29, "Pagliacci" and Oriental Ballet; Wednesday evening, December 29, "Mme. Butterfly"; Friday evening, December 31, "Pagliacci" and Ballet; Saturday matinee, January 1, "Namiko San" and Ballet; Saturday evening, January 1, "Rigoletto." For the second half of each opera evening the Pavley-Oukrainsky Ballet, headed by Mr. Andreas Pavley personally, will appear. Ballets are in truth ocular operas when presented by these distinguished Russians, with their vivid dancing, unparalleled magnificence of costuming, colorful splendor of production.

PORTLAND SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, William Van Hoogstraten, director, opened the season the first of last month. The concerts are given at the Civic Auditorium. To the regular bi-weekly symphony programs are added a series of Saturday concerts for school children.

THE AMPHION CLUB, San Diego, opened its resident artists' course, which includes Russell Keeney, violin; Edythe Rowe, 'cello, and Florence Gray, piano, in a chamber music concert in November, assisted by Marion Dozier, soprano, and announces the Cadman Club (male chorus), Wallace Moody, director, and Madeline Childs, violinist, in January; Dolce Grossmayer, pianist, Mrs. L. L. Rowan and Harold Hodge, singers, in February; Alberta Jones, pianist, and Ronald Faulkner, flutist, in March, and students' music contest program in April.

BAY CITIES MUSICAL ASSOCIATION, Mrs. Joseph Zuckerman, president, is presenting a series of eight Children's Friday afternoon concerts at the Santa Monica Municipal Auditorium. The December artist is Paul Kochanski, appearing the 17th.

THE PHILHARMONIC SERIES: the Pasadena concerts of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra are held in the main auditorium of the Pasadena Community Playhouse, Monday evenings, at 8:30. The December concert is the 13th. There will be a total of six concerts, with three soloists.

THE MUSIC TEACHERS' NATIONAL ASSOCIATION meets in Rochester, December 28-29-30. Arthur M. See, secretary-manager of the Eastman School of Music, is the convention chairman.

THE DANCE FESTIVAL SERIES, presented by L. E. Behymer during December and January, also includes Mikhail Mordkin, who is returning at the head of his own company of forty-five members and a symphony orchestra. The dates are the evenings of January 5-7-8. Among the ballets to be presented will be "Aziade," scenario improvised by Mordkin from a tale of the "Arabian Nights," music by Giudel; "Carnival," with music derived from Liszt, Glazounoff and others. In this ballet Mr. Mordkin exhibits his truly remarkable gifts for character work in the role of Pierrot. A third ballet will be "Love in the Ranks," a comic dance with music by Amsheimer. In addition to the principal ballets, there will be over twenty divertisements, many new to America, with favorites including the famous Mordkin "Bow and Arrow," "Bacchanale," etc. Vladimir Bakalienikoff, one of the brilliant musicians of present day Russia, will conduct the orchestra.

THE PACIFIC COAST MUSICIAN has issued the Year Book of 1926-27, which is not only of value to all musicians and teachers, but in printing, photography and engraving is well conceived and executed. It is in every sense representative of the musical activities of southern California, and presents much information of value to all interested in the musical life of the State.

Save a Business Day to Chicago

Golden State Limited

Eastbound
Lv. Los Angeles . 5:00 p.m.
Ar. Chicago . . . 10:00 a.m.

Westbound
Lv. Chicago . . . 8:30 p.m.
Ar. Los Angeles . 9:30 a.m.

Please reserve space as far in advance as possible

Southern Pacific
212 W. Seventh St. 1147 S. Broadway
Main Floor Pacific Electric Building
Subway Terminal Building
STATION: Fifth and Central
Phone MEtropolitan 2000

Rock Island
809 Van Nuys Building
Phone TRinity 4574

A finer, faster Golden State Limited. Daily to the east over the direct Golden State route. Evening departure from Los Angeles saves a business day.

Swift, colorful, luxuriously appointed. Only 2 business days en route.

$10 extra fare to Chicago; $8 to Kansas City; $5 to El Paso. Two other trains, Apache and Californian—no extra fare. Pullmans to Memphis, Minneapolis, Kansas City, St. Louis.

GEORGE JENSEN
of Copenhagen

IS ACCLAIMED THE GREATEST CRAFTSMAN IN SILVER IN THE WORLD TODAY—AWARDED ALL THE CRAFT PRIZES AND WITH SPECIMENS OF HIS WORK IN ALL THE GREAT EUROPEAN AND AMERICAN MUSEUMS.

IF YOU ARE THINKING OF SILVER FOR A GIFT THIS SEASON YOU WILL FIND A COMPLETE EXHIBIT AT

GRACE NICHOLSON'S
FAMOUS PASADENA SHOP
46 NORTH LOS ROBLES AVE.

Beautiful Garden Pieces
in
Sculptured Terra Cotta

Italian Terra Cotta Co.
W. H. Robison
1149 MISSION ROAD
Opposite County Hospital
Phone Lincoln 1057 Los Angeles

NO. 121—TALMAGE VASE

Announcements

PASADENA COMMUNITY PLAYERS will offer the following programs during the month: "Amber," a drama of Anglo-Indian love, by Dudley S. Corlett, December 2-11. A first production.
A new production will open every other Thursday evening and will run for nine nights, (8:15) and two matinees (2:30). Matinees on Saturdays.
"The Workshop Productions" opened Saturday, November 6th, and will be given every Saturday night hereafter at 8:15 in the Recital Hall of the Playhouse.

THE KEGG and GOLDSMITH MARIONETTES in CINDERELLA will give two matinees in the Pasadena Community Playhouse, December 30 and 31, at 2:30.

THE BROWNING SOCIETY OF PASADENA, organized January 8, 1910, meets the second and fourth Thursdays at 2:30 p.m., at the Recital Hall, Community Playhouse, Pasadena. The program and course of study is arranged by Bertha Lovewell Dickinson, Ph.D. The general subject for the year is The Mysticism of Robert Browning.

THE PASADENA PUBLIC LIBRARY issues a general invitation to five Book Talks to be given by Helen E. Haines. The Subject and date for the current month is Thursday evening, December 9: "What Books Would You Like for Christmas?"

ALINE BARRETT GREENWOOD gives her current reviews at the Shakespeare Clubhouse, Pasadena, the third Wednesday at 11 a.m., December 15.

THE PASADENA LECTURE COURSE on Current Topics given for the past seven seasons will be contiued during that of 1926-27. The lectures will be held at the California Institute of Technology in Culbertson Hall, corner of Wilson Avenue and California Street, on Mondays at 4:15 p.m. The object of the lectures will remain the same, to encourage the intelligent discussion of public affairs.
Arrangements, which are necessarily subject to change, have been made as follows:
December 6—Chester Stock, California Institute of Technology, "Rancho La Brea, a Significant Chapter in the History of Life in America."
January 10—Henry M. Robinson, Member of the Dawes Commission: "Some Thoughts on the European Financial Situation."
January 17—Max Farrand, formerly publisher of "The International Interpreter": "The Great Economic Transition."
January 31—Ralph W. Chaney, Carnegie Institution of Washington: "The Redwood in Time and Space." (Illustrated)
February 7—Robert A. Millikan, California Institute of Technology: "Evolution in Science and in Religion."
February 14—Hugh Walpole, novelist and literary Critic: "The Victorian and Modern Novel Contrasted."
February 21—Sir George Paish, financial expert: "Can America Maintain Her Position as World Banker and Trader?"
March 7—Louis K. Anspacher, dramatist and lecturer: "The Mob and the Movies."
March 14—William Allen White, editor of the "Emporia Gazette": (Subject to be Announced).
March 21—Yamato Ichihashi, Stanford University: "Recent Developments in American-Japanese Relations."
March 28—Upton Close, orientalist: "The End of the White Man's World."
April 4—Philip Guedalla, author of "The Second Empire": "The Present Industrial Situation in England."
Note that the lectures will be held this season on Monday, instead of Tuesday as in preceding years.

ELIZABETH B. TURNEY announces a series of opera readings: Lohengrin (Wagner), December 10; Manon (Massenet), January 14; Madame Butterfly (Puccini), February 11; Samson and Delilah (Saint-Saens), Pagliacci (Leoncavallo), March 11 interpreted by Elizabeth B. Turney, soprano, Helen A. Graf, pianist, and assisting artists at Recital Hall, Community Playhouse, Pasadena, Friday morning at eleven o'clock.

MARION CRAIG WENTWORTH will give a series of seven "Mornings with the Poets" in the Directors' Room of the Community Playhouse, Pasadena on Wednesday mornings, December 1, December 8, December 15, January 5, January 12, January 19, January 26 at 10:45 o'clock.

THE GREEN TEA POT, as the cafe of the Hotel Green, Pasadena, was known, has been enlarged to double its capacity and redecorated, and will henceforth be known as the Colonial Cafe of the Green. Chafing dish luncheons and Saturday evening dinner dances are a feature of the winter season.

POMONA COLLEGE CALENDAR

A FULL PROGRAM of Christmas and mid-winter events will be held in Claremont during December. An exhibit of paintings by Ana Hills will open in Rembrandt Hall on December 1st and Dec. 2, the Frank P. Brackett Observatory of astronomy will be open to visitors.

The annual football banquet of the Pomona College student body and alumni will be held in the Pomona College gymnasium, Dec. 3; the Claremont Men's Union will present its minstrel show, Dec. 3 and 4.

Initiation of new members into the Pomona College chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, Rembrandt Hall, 4:30 to 5:30 Saturday afternoon, Dec. 4, followed by a banquet of the Society.

Miss Betty McClure, junior will present her student recital in Bridges Hall at 7:15 p.m., Dec. 6. All student recitals are open to the public.

Pomona College Masquers Society will present a one act play "Sham" in connection with the Claremont motion picture program in Holmes Hall on Dec. 7-8.

The first lecture of the month, Mason Hall of Chemistry Dec. 9, 7:30 p.m., by Dr. R. R. Tileston, who will present his experimental demonstration lecture the "Electron Theory of Matter." The lecture will be by invitation only.

Under the auspices of the Claremont Women's Club a concert by the Riverside Choir will be held in Holmes Hall, Dec. 13 at 8 o'clock.

The crowning event of the Christmas season at Pomona College and in the region east of Los Angeles is the annual Christmas oratorio presented by the Pomona College College Choir of 167 voices under the direction of Prof. Ralph Lyman. This year the Choir will offer the "Elijah" as an event on the music and drama course in Bridges Hall at 3:30 p.m., Dec. 15, and 8 p.m., Dec. 16. Notable soloists will feature the rendition of the oratorio, including Fred Patton of New York, one of the best oratorio soloists in the United States, Miss Hope Taber Ford, soprano, formerly of the Wooster Choral Society and now on the faculty of the Pomona College department of music; Clemence Gifford, contralto, soloist of the Second Church of Christ, Scientist at Los Angeles and Harold Proctor of Los Angeles, tenor.

Raymond Robins will present a lecture at Bridges Hall, 8 p.m., Dec. 15.

Pomona College Christmas recess begins Friday, Dec. 17 at 4:15 p.m. and ends Monday, January 3, at 7:30 a.m.

Buy Christmas Seals to aid the fight against tuberculosis.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CONFERENCE ON MODERN PARENTHOOD

Los Angeles, December 15-16-17-18, Pacific Mutual Auditorium, 523 West Sixth Street.

Program

I. December 15th
MORNING SESSION, 9:45 A. M.
Chairman: Mrs. Susan M. Dorsey, Superintendent Los Angeles City Schools.
Theme: "The Importance of the Early Years of Childhood."
1. "The Emotions and Mental Life of Little Children."
MRS. ARNOLD GESSELL
2. "The Parent, the School and the Runabout Child."
DR. J. D. DUNSHEE,
Director of Nutrition,
American Red Cross, Los Angeles
3. "Habit Formation in Babyhood."
DR. JESSIE C. FENTON,
Arizona Normal College,
Author of "A Practical Psychology of Babyhood."
LUNCHEON
Under the auspices of the Parent-Teacher Association
BILTMORE HOTEL—12:30
"Parent Education in School and University."
DR. BIRD T. BALDWIN
Director of Bureau of Child Study, University of Iowa.

II. December 15th
AFTERNOON SESSION, 2:30 P. M.
Chairman: Mrs. F. O. McColloch, State President California P.-T. A.
Theme: "Education for Parenthood."
1. "Parent Study Groups in America."
MRS. HOWARD GANS
President Child Study Association of America.
2. "California's Projects in Parent Education."
DR. HERBERT STOLZ
Assistant State Superintendent
3. "The Drifting Home."
DR. ERNEST GROVES,
Dept. of Sociology, Boston University,
Author of "Wholesome Childhood," "The Drifting Home."

III. December 15th
EVENING SESSION, 8:00 P. M.
Chairman: Dr. Rufus B. Von KleinSmid, President Univ. Southern California.
Theme: "The Home in a Changing World."
1. "From the Point of View of the Individual and the Family."
DR. FRANKWOOD E. WILLIAMS,
Medical Director, National Committee for Mental Hygiene.
2. "From the Point of View of the Community."
(Speaker to be announced later)

IV. December 16th
MORNING SESSION, 10:00 A. M.
Chairman: Mrs. Norman Macbeth.
Theme: "The Child, the Parent, and the School."
1. "Triple Alliance: Parent, Teacher and Child."
DR. FREDERIC P. WOOLLNER,
Associate Professor of Education, Univ. of Calif., S. B.
2. "The Parent and the Nursery School."
ELIZABETH L. WOODS,
Director, Dept. of Psychology and Educational Research, Los Angeles City Schools.
3. Discussion:
BARBARA GREENWOOD,
University of California, Southern Branch

V. December 16th
AFTERNOON SESSION, 2:30 P. M.
Chairman: Father Robert E. Lucey.
Theme: "Education for Spiritual Growth."
1. "The Child and Religious Experience."
2. "Art in the Life of the Child."
FLORENCE KANE, Art Director, Walden School, New York.
3. "Creative Education."
DR. EDWARD YOEMANS,
Author of "Shackled Youth."

VI. December 16th
EVENING SESSION, 8:00 P. M.
Chairman: (To be announced later).
1. "Keeping the Child Well."
DR. HENRY DIETRICH.
2. "The Pre-School Child: A Challenge to the Pediatricians."
DR. PALMER LUCAS,
Professor of Pediatrics, University of California.
3. "Is It Heredity and Environment or Capacity and Training?"
DR. BIRD T. BALDWIN

VII. December 17th
MORNING SESSION, 10:00 A. M.
Chairman: Dr. E. C. Moore, Director University of California, Los Angeles.
1. "New Ideals for Teachers."
SIR JOHN ADAMS,
University of London; Exchange Professor U. of Calif., S. B.
2. "Adolescence and the Changing Social Order."
DR. WILLIAM KIRK,
Professor of Sociology, Pomona College.
3. "The Family in Search of a Goal."
DR. MIRIAM VAN WATERS,
Referee of the Juvenile Court, Los Angeles.

VIII. December 17th
AFTERNOON SESSION, 2:30 P. M.
Chairman: Mrs. William F. Dummer, Chicago.
Theme: "Changing Views of Family Relationships."
1. "The Evolution of the Importance of the Child."
DR. FREDERICK ROMAN
Prof. of Economics and Education, New York University.
2. "Revising Our Attitudes Toward Sex."
DR. E. VAN NORMAN EMERY,
Director of Child Guidance Clinic, Los Angeles.
3. "Inside Tips to Fathers."
DR ERNEST GROVES

IX. December 17th
EVENING SESSION—DINNER,
Biltmore Hotel—7:30 P. M.
($3.50 a Plate. Make Reservations at headquarters.)
Chairman: (To be announced).
Toastmaster: Dr. Miriam Van Waters.
1. "New Truths for Old."
DR. ROBERT A. MILLIKAN,
President California School of Technology, Pasadena
2. "The New Freedom."
DR. FRANKWOOD WILLIAMS.

X. December 18th
MORNING SESSION, 9:30 A. M.
"Objectives of Parent Education."
WILL C. WOOD,
State Supt. of Schools.
Round Table Discussions.
1. "Research on Family Relationships."
A. "The Adolescent as a Leader in Constructive and Destructive Social Activities."
SYBIL CLEMENT BROWN
NELL HENDRIK.
B. "Unsatisfactory Child Parent Relationships."
DOROTHY CROWLEY FROST
2. "Newer Methods in Education."
MRS. ADELIA ADAMS SAMUELS,
Principal Cucamonga School.
ETHEL DUMMER METZNER,
Principal Frances Parker School, San Diego.

O'HARA, LIVERMORE
AND ARTHUR BAKEN

Interior Decoration

Antique and Modern Furniture
Wall Fabrics and Draperies

LAMPS SHADES PILLOWS

Christmas Gifts

522 Sutter Street, San Francisco
644 East Colorado Street, Pasadena
Telephone Terrace 2175

WE offer for investment of Personal or Trust Funds sound Securities returning highest rates consistent with safety.

WILLIAM R. STAATS COMPANY
Established 1887
Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds

311 East Colorado St.
PASADENA, CALIF.
Los Angeles San Diego San Francisco

"GOOD ARCHITECTURE"

Choose your own architect from the representative styles shown in "California Homes" by California Architects. Price $1.00.

Address: ELLEN LEECH,
544 So. El Molino Ave Pasadena, Calif.

Mt. LOWE

"Earth has no finer view to show."

Mt. LOWE TAVERN and Cottages
Enlarged and Improved

at the terminus of this World-Famous Trip afford a most delightful retreat for a long or short sojourn at reasonable rates

5 Trains Daily at convenient hours - from Main St. Station Los Angeles

$2.50 Round Trip Rate

For information and Reservations apply

Pacific Electric Ry.

Information Bureau Phone MEtaio-TRinity 3661

Books

FRED De Vilbiss COMPANY

Twenty-three South Euclid
Pasadena, California

JAMES CINI & COMPANY
of Italy
Antique and Foreign Jewelry
Italian and French Novelties
390 E. Walnut St. Pasadena, Calif.
Fair Oaks 5583

KIEVITS GALLERIES
Vista del Arroyo Hotel, Pasadena
European and American Paintings

California Southland

M. URMY SEARES - - - - - Editor and Publisher
ELLEN LEECH - - - - - - - Associate Editor
R. B. URMY, JR. - - - - - Associate Publisher

NO. 84 DECEMBER, 1926 Vol VIII

CONTENTS

	PAGE
THE CHERRY GERANIUM.....Cover Design From a painting by Channel P. Townsley
SOUTHLAND CALENDAR.....Ellen Leech	4, 5, 6, 7
CHRISTMAS IN CALIFORNIA GARDENS....Erranna Bowen Bissell	9
A CALIFORNIA HOUSE—ROLAND COATE, ARCHITECT.....	11
THE BUILDING OF A BEACH CLUB.....M. U. Seares	12
RECENT BOOKS, REVIEWS.....Louise Morgrage	14
WHERE ARE THEY GOING?.....Theresa Homet Patterson	15
SOUTHLAND OPINION ..... The Jefferson Davis Highway—Jessie Calhoun Anderson Pro Musica—Blanche Rogers Scott	16-17
SPORTS ALL OF THE YEAR.....	18-19
THE CRAFT OF WROUGHT IRON.....	20-21
THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER, A. I. A.....	22
THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB.....	23
THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE BULLETIN.....	24
OVER THE TOP.....Vera Sadicoff-Goldman, M. D.	26
THE COLOR PLATES.....C. P. Townsley, Artist	27
BETTER HOMES IN AMERICA.....	28
ARCHITECTURAL INDEX OF NUMBERS.....	29
NATURE STUDY—TREES	30

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND is published monthly at Pasadena, Cal.

Copyrighted, 1926, by M. Urmy Seares

Subscription price $2.50 per year, $1.25 one half year
MAIL ADDRESS: CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
During Press Week, 24th to 30th, call TRinity 1501

Elizabeth Arden's Los Angeles Salon

ELIZABETH ARDEN'S Los Angeles Salon is located on the Seventh Floor of J. W. Robinson Co. Being under the direct supervision of Miss Arden's personal representative one may be assured of the same skill and thoroughness which characterizes the treatments given in Miss Arden's New York and and Paris Salons, and which have made the name of Elizabeth Arden internationally known.

HOTEL GREEN

A well ordered Residential and Tourist Hotel of peculiar excellence. Open all year. Moderate rates. Apartments by the month.

AN INNOVATION

THE COLONIAL CAFE
Formerly the Green Teapot

Now seats two hundred and fifty

Luncheons, Teas, Dinners

Women Cooks from Samarkand
A Cuisine of Peculiar Excellence

CHARLES B. HERVEY, Proprietor

La Solana

A quiet, well-appointed small hotel on the West Side near Orange Grove Avenue.
Each menu is carefully planned and prepared every day.

Grand Ave. and Lockhaven St.
Pasadena

HILLER'S STUDIO

OFFICIAL PHOTOGRAPHER FOR CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

49 EAST COLORADO STREET
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

ALBERT HILLER Fair Oaks 155

Antiques
JOHN W. CONDIT

Dealer in rare old pieces selected from private homes. Specialist in the proper restoration of heirlooms.

199 S. Fair Oaks Ave., Pasadena
Telephone Terrace 0315-W

CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND
AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF NATIONAL INTEREST

CHRISTMAS IN CALIFORNIA'S COAST GARDENS

ERVANNA BOWEN BISSELL, EDITOR, GARDEN PAGES

SOMETIMES a word is a curtain-raiser swiftly lifting the dark screen between past and present.

To many of us the word Christmas rings up a scene white with snow. Snow drifting in the roads, snow covering the roofs and door-steps, snow burying the garden and bending trees and shrubs under its weight. We see Christmas eve with its lighted candles shining out upon the snow. We see stars twinkling, a silver moon behind the pines, and—standing in the snow — carolers who sing—

"It came upon the midnight clear, that glorious song of Old."

A back-drop lifts on Christmas morning with the sun sparkling on the snow. Holly wreaths swing red berries above snowy sills. Little red mittens toss red balls, clasp red apples, drag red sleds through banks of snow.

This is the Christmas we know along the snow-line, the Great Lakes and north Atlantic shore.

But out where the Pacific shelters the California Coast, Christmas loses her pallor. She no longer drapes herself in snow, but goes clad in green with rosy garlands. Her balls are white, not red, and fly before the stroke of racket and golf-club. She hangs wreaths of island cherry and toyon berry. Her stars are many and bright, and the same moon shines on Christmas eve. Birds sing her carols, and her trees are decked

"Orange bright, like golden lamps in a green night."

CHRISTMAS DAY IN MIRAFLORES, CALIFORNIA, WHERE ONE MAY SIT IN SUNNY DECEMBER WITHIN THE PATIO SURROUNDED BY FLOWERS. THE MONTECITO HOME OF MR. AND MRS. JOHN PERCIVAL JEFFERSON.

The Christmas sleds and skates and snow typifies childhood's joy, but age welcomes a winter of sunshine through green trees. Age wants drifts of white flowers, syringa, spirea and diosma's "breath of heaven." Age gives up the former roaring fire, the Christmas pudding for a picnic on the seashore. Best of all, Christmas is a Garden Day in California. Snapdragon and stocks, violets and roses are better than snow drops from the sky.

Yet Youth may climb the mountains and find the snow even in California. Youth may revel even here in winter sports. Skiing and sleds, snowballing and skating will be enjoyed where the snow lies thick in canyon and high meadow awaiting the time when the rivers will bring their bounty to water the gardens below for those who love flowers more than the snow.

But in the pansy's bloom we find thoughts that bind youth and age in a common bond. Across the "snows of yesteryear" our hearts respond to the voice of Tiny Tim:

"Merry Christmas, God bless us, every one!"

WITHIN GARDEN GATES

AT CUESTA LINDA, INSTEAD OF PLUNGING INTO SNOW-DRIFTS ON CHRISTMAS MORNING, ONE MAY GO FOR A DIP IN THE SWIMMING-POOL. ITS OVERFLOW FORMS THE LILY PONDS ON EITHER SIDE THE CENTRAL BASIN IN THE GARDEN OF MR. AND MRS. E. PALMER GAVIT, MONTECITO, CALIFORNIA.

THE ARDENT GARDENER FINDS THIS "LITTLE HEAVEN" AN ESCAPE FROM THE POET'S ICE-BOUND PURGATORY, WHERE MAN'S CHOICEST PLANTS PERISHED IN THE FROST. THE MONTECITO GARDEN OF MR. AND MRS. DEWITT PARSHALL, CALIFORNIA.

ON CHRISTMAS DAY TO WALK DOWN THIS SHADY PATH IN EL CIELITO UNDER THE PALMS AND OLIVES MAKES ONE FORGET THE DISTANT ELM TREES "RIDGED INCH DEEP WITH PEARL"

TO FIND, ON A SUNNY HILLTOP, A SPREADING LIVE-OAK, TO PLANT FLOWERS UNDER IT, AND TO BUILD ONE'S HOUSE AROUND THE WHOLE, MAKES A PATIO THE MOST PERSONAL, PRIVATE GARDEN OF ALL. YULETIDE IN THE PATIO AT SOLANA, THE HOME OF MR. AND MRS. FREDERICK FORREST PEABODY, SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA.

THE CALIFORNIAN HOUSE ON MONTEREY ROAD, SOUTH PASADENA, ROLAND COATE, ARCHITECT.

A HOUSE ON MONTEREY ROAD, CALIFORNIA

By GRACE CHARPLY MILLER

THERE is an old house on Monterey Road in South Pasadena. I call it old, which is absurd, as the house is very new, but the impression it makes upon one of age, of permanency, of belonging on the land long before paved roads were built, is so strong that one must use "old" in describing it.

The style is early Californian, which fits into our landscape perfectly. The house is set upon a slight hill, with a small canyon sloping gradually away at the back. The garden is old-fashioned and filled with flowers, shrubs, and trees, a New England garden surrounded by a white picket fence. One of the delightful things about a house of the early California type is that it is suited to such a garden.

THE SIMPLY FURNISHED DINING-ROOM IS AS SATISFYING AS THE EXTERIOR.

Our ancestors who came to Monterey in the early days and founded this type built Colonial houses with California materials and labor. They brought their furniture around the Horn or overland in covered wagons. They papered their walls, and in all combined the most delightful characteristics of the east and west. Roof lines were lowered and done in tile, balconies added, but the main lines were still Colonial. And just as the old houses of New England during the days of the clipper ships and trade with the Orient were furnished with exotic things from China and Japan, these houses are adapted to borrowing from the Orient and Spain.

The rooms are made interesting through their departure from rectangular lines. The ceilings of the bedrooms are dormered, as in an old-fashioned farmhouse. The proportions are so true and pleasing that moderate sized rooms seem large, yet have all the intimacy and charm of small ones.

The floors are broad oak, stained a dull brown. Downstairs the doors are of natural redwood treated with lye, a method used in the early missions of California. Elsewhere in the house the woodwork is painted with carefully chosen combinations of color. The blinds are dull green, the sashes burnt orange, a pleasing combination taken from the leaves and blossoms of a native cactus. In the dining room the woodwork is antique yellow and pale green.

The furniture represents the joyful adventures of a connoisseur in Spain, Italy, England and eighteenth century America, rich in carving, simple in line, and old in feeling. Color is added to the white walls by Persian rugs, bits of old brocade, and sunlit fabrics at the windows.

ARCHED DOORWAYS, WROUGHT IRON GRILL, AND LANTERN CARRY OUT THE RESERVED AND BEAUTIFUL DESIGN AND MAKE IT LIVABLE.

BUT THE FLOWER GARDEN WITHIN THE GARDEN GATE AND THE PICKET FENCE ARE THE MOST CALIFORNIAN OF ALL.

THE ESPLANADE OF THE GABLES BEACH CLUB WAS BUILT LAST SPRING AND CONTAINS AT PRESENT A LOUNGE AND LOCKERS, DRESSING ROOMS AND A MEN'S GRILL. ON ITS OCEAN FRONT IS THE WIDE, COMMODIOUS TERRACE AND THE DINING ROOM FOR BATHERS, WHO ALL HAVE THEIR INDIVIDUAL LOCKER ROOMS ON THE WATER FRONT WEST OF THE HIGHWAY. BACK OF THIS BUILDING IS SEEN "MONTANA HOLE," THE CLUB SITE.

CHOOSING A BEACH CLUB — THE GABLES

LIFE in the Southland of California is beginning to concentrate at the beaches. Instead of thinking of the shore of the Pacific as a whole, we think of it in sections, by the names of the beach towns which have grown up there, or, as it becomes more and more congested, by the names of the clubs which own it.

The shore is, to be sure, the logical place to play. California's fame as a watering place has been made by her climate—in itself a direct result of the warm currents which flow along the Coast.

The new community which has poured into Los Angeles during the last fifty years has been so busy building its homes and business centers that it has not yet had time to learn to live by the sea.

It is necessary, therefore, that those who do know how should control and patrol the edge of the sea and, guarding the children, for whose sake we go to the shore, make the present crowded beach a pleasant place in which to rest and recreate.

For years the orchardists and town dwellers of the old settlements made by pioneers in Redlands and Riverside have looked to the seaside town of Santa Monica to the west for cool breezes. Following their underground rivers to the ocean in the warm summer days, they have established themselves by the sea.

Pasadenans have built their seaside cottages on the Palisades and along the Santa Monica canyon, but now that the town of Santa Monica is built up solidly along the higher portions of the shore, the beach alone is accessible to newcomers and their children.

All dressed up in their bathing suits, these inland cities have no place to go; and the city of Los Angeles, having found what the beach is for, fills it to overflowing every vacation day and every Sunday.

Beach clubs, therefore, planned by those who know how to organize and manage them to the best advantage of all concerned, have sprung up like magic along the western and southern beaches and south along the coast.

A section of the ocean to keep free from kelp and to guard with lifeboat and buoy, floats and rope and raft and expert swimmers to use them in emergency. A section of the sandy beach to keep clean each day and filled with tin pails for the little ones, secluded nooks for the weary, umbrellas and gay tents for the smart set. A section of the beach boulevard and its border to keep free from hot-dog stands and the rabble who follow the people to the beach, not for their own enjoyment, but to profit by the pleasure of others.

THE GABLES BEACH CLUB

These have been the main objects of those far-sighted ones who have formed themselves into beach clubs or have organized such clubs.

Santa Monica is quite the handsomest of all the beach cities at present. The towns of Palos Verdes Estates are more retired and bid fair to lead in surroundings and architecture, but Santa Monica and Venice are "the beaches"; and the palisades of Santa Monica are preserved for all time and its beaches, including the stretch called Ocean Beach adjoining that of Venice on the south form the accepted watering-place for Los Angeles. Along the high ocean bluffs in Santa Monica stretches one continuous park, which edges the shore line for blocks. Senator John P. Jones and Colonel Robert S. Baker deeded to the city that portion of the land adjoining Ocean avenue north to Montana street in 1890. Eighteen years ago the Santa Monica Land Company interests gave similar property on the north beach to the city of Santa Monica, running south to Montana street, or as it was then called "Montana Hole."

With the characteristic energy of the citizens of the Southland this strip of park-land was accepted and made into a simple but beautiful upper terrace from which to view the sunset over the vast Pacific.

The Palisades are in perpetuity Santa Monica's chief beauty and a joy forever to the whole Southland populace

At the end of Montana street, however, "Montana Hole" cut into the park edge and remained private property, running from the State highway along the beach level up to Ocean avenue on the heights. It was indeed a great hole, but excavations are always made when great buildings are planned to fill them; and here is one almost ready without the contractor's steam shovel.

At work today on lining up this great excavation for the walls of the club house of The Gables are all the appliances and paraphernalia of the expert contractors, Scofield Engineering Company, who are to build after the designs by Curlett and Beelman, the architects.

Soundly financed and true to its purpose, the club is going on with its program of building while members are using the concourse and esplanade.

The main building, shown in miniature on the opposite page, is being fitted into its place in the palisades as though it had grown there.

For many Pasadena members this comfortable clubhouse by the sea means much in week-end visits to the shore. A partial list of Pasadena members of this club is here given. To residents of inland cities a well managed beach club is almost a necessity.

Elliott Bandini, Dr. John Willis Baer, Arthur Brisbane, Ernest L. Rogers, J. F. Robbins, C. E. Turney, O. L. Goerz, J. S. Benedict, Harry H. Godber, Samuel S. Hinds, Captain John Mel, G. N. Jennison, Garrettson Dulin, T. Hamilton McCoy, Charles Lee Matthews, Dr. Rosa Engelmann, A. Leon Littlejohn, John C. Bentz, J. K. Dotten, Mrs. Edwin L. Harmon, D. E. McDoneld, Harold W. Herliby, B. G. Morriss, F. H. Bush, F. V. Kayser, Jas. C. Hallsted, Fred H. Gates, Erwin W. Widney, B. A. Baxter, Frank Frerichs, Godfrey Rueger, Chas. H. Williamson, Richard C. Kumler, Harry F. Hopper, Arthur J. Baum, William S. Kellogg, Chas. F. Claudon, Jack Maltman, John C. La Spada, D. W. Coolidge, George Curtis, L. C. Torrance, Jr., Dr. Vernon R. Swan, Henry W. Dakin, Mrs. Harriett Donelson, Ward Rubendall, Laurence Macomber, John R. Van Houten, W. J. MacDonald, Dr. C. C. Snyder, G. Carroll Stribling, Harold E. Wolcott, Emil Kayser, George Hume, Effie Palmer Ritchie, Wm. P. Herbert, Charles G. Lathrop, Clark McLain, Donald S. Bailey, C. J. Fox, Jr., Geo. L. Stiles, Norman T. Kirk, W. H. Hubbard, Raymond T. Vent, C. J. Hall, Eva Neill, J. K. Baillie, Wilhelmina E. Wotkyns, John R. Lee, Eleanor U. Andrews, F. C. Nash, E. J. Blacker, Paul J. Pitner, Mrs. C. H. Baker, C. O. Andrews, Andrew W. Stewart, Walter G. Driver, L. A. Keller, Cornelius N. Ray, C. W. Gates, Robert Hunter, Mrs. Arthur A. Bennett, Elias K. Davis, John Perrin, Fred A. Henderson, Roger Wilson, Wm. J. Hanna, Dr. Richard A. Schaub, Fred S. Kenfield, Miss Carrie Wisner, Elizabeth A. Frost, Nicholas N. Harrison, Chas. Blanchard Neely, Collis Huntington Holloday, Clarence E. Cook, W. R. H. Weldon, Royal Miller, F. S. Roddie, Chas. O. Perrin, Dr. Angus D. Cameron, Dr. Chas. D. Finley, Geo. E. Dudley, Elizabeth M. Berry, Dr. T. W. Snipes, Albert M. Kaiser, John B. Lord, L. G. Benziger, Chester R. Pyle Co., Mrs. E. F. Jackson, John Murray Marshall, Arthur L. Todd, Ellen Leech, Mrs. E. M. Austin, Mrs. T. E. Macauley, Lucellia I. Hunt, Wm. O. Lindley, S. G. McClure, Dr. Oscar F. Hills, R. H. Updegraff, H. S. Robbins, John M. Brooks, Mabelle K. Bevans, A. L. Funk, Ruth Kinnamon, W. L. Brown, Harvey Bates Perrin, John Thomas Batts, Donald R. Skillen, Dr. Frank Williams, Mrs. Mary Maude Earle, R. B. Urmy, Jr., Fred A. Newby, Julia L. Whitney.

THE CHILDREN'S PLAYGROUND IS AT THE NORTH END OF THE PROTECTED PROPERTY LINE, WHERE IT IS NEAR THE PALISADES PARK.

Every appointment of a well-ordered hotel or strictly up-to-date private clubhouse has been embodied in this latest inspiration of architects who are experts in this especial field. The manager is Mr. M. S. Tyler who, with his family has come from a leading hotel in Chicago to live on the Coast.

Mr. A. J. S. Moore, the Pasadena manager of The Gables Club, has his office in the Pacific Southwest Bank building on Colorado and Marengo, and officers of this bank are members of the Club.

Investigation of the most critical character has found no flaw in the practical plans for this Beach Club. Rather are its organizers to be found unusually capable of handling the tremendous affairs incident upon such an enterprise.

The atmosphere of hospitable quiet greets one at the doors of the concourse which since its opening day last June has been a continual source of pleasure to its members.

Its unostentatious character and its winning personality as a club are apparent to all who are privileged to visit there.

Warm salt water pools de luxe will give to those who cannot enjoy the surf-bathing the stimulating effect of salt water and salt air, and any one who can think of anything obtainable which this club hasn't provided, has today opportunity to introduce the idea. A prospectus of the architect's main building announces the use of the different floors and the one hundred and forty bedrooms floors and the one hundred and forty bedrooms, in suites for families, or single members, are not the least attractive feature of this

THE TERRACE OF THE GABLES, WHICH STRETCHES ALONG 300 FEET OF BEACH AND INCLUDES THE PRESENT DINING ROOM AT ITS SOUTHERN END. IT IS GLASSED AND FROM IT WIND-BREAKS EXTEND ACROSS THE CLEAN STRETCH OF SAND TO THE WATER'S EDGE.

RECENT BOOKS—REVIEWS

By LOUISE MORGRAGE

SUTTER'S GOLD By BLAISE CENDRAS
Harper & Brothers

Johann August Sutter was an extremely influential factor in the winning of California as a State for the Union; yet few even of its oldest inhabitants know anything definite about him. When questioned, these are very much inclined to mutter vague generalities about his having something to do with the discovery of gold. It would seem as though the preemptory destiny who manages men's affairs after their death had decided in this case upon complete oblivion for Sutter's memory, a decree, however, somewhat nullified by a gifted young Frenchman, who has found in the forgotten history of the adventurous pioneer, material for kindling a most inflammable imagination.

The young Frenchman in question is Blaise Cendras, no insignificant figure of a man himself if the reports concerning him are true. In "Sutter's Gold" he has written a superbly dramatic tale based upon the fortunes of Sutter, whom he presents as a grandiloquent personage resembling one of the patriarchs in the Old Testament, while the account of his experiences in California reads like an excerpt from the book of Job. Or better still the characterization calls to mind one of those old Greek heroes engaged in an unequal struggle of wills with the gods, who were wont first to make their victims mad, and then lash them on to destruction, uttering all the while peals of mocking laughter.

Thoughts of these old Greek legends must have haunted Cendras continually while he was fashioning this virile and stirring narrative. For this is precisely the aspect he gives of a mortal helpless in the grip of unseen forces more powerful than himself. In the field of biographical interpretation this is a notable achievement, and all the more so since it was written in French by a Frenchman living in Paris, who picked up his facts in Panama. Who says California cannot furnish strikingly dramatic themes for blase Europeans who have ransacked in vain Europe's rich storehouse of romance?

LANTERNS, JUNKS AND JADE
By SAMUEL MORRILL
Frederick A. Stokes Company

Travel books may vary in their modes of tackling the subject in hand, but they are all alike in one respect; they are more than likely to be flavorless as to any literary quality, simply because people who wish to write about their experiences and observations when away from home seldom have any special faculty for doing it. Morover, handicapped as he is with this ineptitude, the author must frequently resort to description, which is just about the most difficult form of the writer's art, so that it is small wonder that there are very few travel classics in literature. "Lanterns Junks and Jade" surely is not destined to become one and yet as books go on foreign lands it is very good indeed. It is clear and simple and utterly unaffected, displaying an impersonal trend rarely found in books of travel, which often seem to be printed merely to acquaint the public with details concerning the author's idiosyncrasies.

A PHOTOGRAPH OF A CHINESE BUDDHA OF THE CH'IEN LUNG (1736-1795) DYNASTY. IN "LANTERNS JUNKS AND JADE," MR. MORRILL COMMENTS VERY DEIGHTFULLY ON MATTELS RELATING TO CHINESE OBJETS D'ART. COURTESY OF JOHN C. BENTZ.

For these reasons this book of sketches describing the lighter phases of Chinese manners and customs makes entertaining reading for those who prefer traveling from the depth of an easy chair through the medium of print. Although the author, as a former member of the diplomatic corps at Pekin, had unusual opportunities for observing much as a rule carefully concealed from alien eyes, he has tactfully avoided the deeper philosophical and political aspects of his subject, touching instead upon a variety of topics of interest to those charming and cultivated people who in general find the surface of life a most pleasing prospect. Some slight acquaintance with China's past, or at least a good historical work near at hand for reference will increase the reader's understanding of allusions to famous events, and so add to the enjoyment. On the whole, this is a book which does its own brave bit toward untying a knot or two for the reader in that complex tangle of affairs which seems to be all there is to the Chinese republic.

SUTTER'S MILLS. FROM "CALIFORNIA ILLUSTRATED," PUBLISHED IN 1852. THE PICTURE SHOWS ONE OF THE MANY ENTERPRISES INSTITUTED BY THE ENERGETIC SUTTER IN CALIFORNIA COURTESY OF MISS DRAKE OF THE PASADENA PUBLIC LIBRARY.

THE STORY OF MEXICO
By HELEN WARD BANKS
Frederick A. Stokes Company

Stern critics may carp as much as they please at the quality of our American prose, but the most captious among them must concede that our famous historians wrote surpassing well. Indeed their work was so good that attempts to alter it are more than likely to offend the literary susceptibilities of many people. On the other hand some persons approve of methods of reducing the classics to terms deemed more intelligible to youthful readers, and such will doubtless find most satisfactory this rendering by Helen Ward Banks of the story of Cortez as conquerer, which she has condensed from the famous "Conquest of Mexco."

This narrative of hers which was formerly published by itself under the title of "The Boys' Prescott" is only a portion of this volume. Continuing after the death of Cortez, she has brought the history of Mexico, told in the form of a simple tale, up to the present time, including the conflict between Calles and the Church now taking place. Much of it is mere outline but from the time about a century ago, when things began to happen, the author has treated certain episodes in greater detail, always confining herself to a straightforward statement of facts. Histories of our turbulent neighbor are not so easy to come upon as to make it sensible to ignore even an unpretentious one, when it comes our way, providing it be authoritative.

GALAHAD
By JOHN ERSKINE
Bobbs Merrill Company

Dr. Erskine's "Helen of Troy" was deliriously naughty, but so divertingly nice, that no one except a Llewelyn Powys could take exception to it. We mention that gentleman because he did just that in four long vigorously protesting columns of the "Saturday Review." Brushing aside his protests, as inspired by a jaundiced vision, we maintain that "Helen of Troy" was a masterpiece of its kind and better than "Galahad," Dr. Erskine's latest essay in humanizing and modernizing legendary characters, this time connected with the Round Table and the Holy Grail.

Comparisons aside, "Galahad" is a corking tale, especially entertaining to all hitherto unacquainted with this author's suave fashion of treating personages of the fabled past. It can be nothing but disappointing, however, to the readers of that insidiously clever piece of irony, "Helen of Troy." Helen's code was recognizably deleterious, but via Dr. Erskine, most becoming to the lady, while Elaine's probably no more devastating to ladylike decorum proves displeasing simply because that marvelous touch, when applied to her affairs, is not quite so delicate. And Guinevere's penchant for reform is not the line to hold men bound with silken cords; and there is a lot of quibbling over right and wrong that never gets anybody anywhere, which upon reflection is just the way it goes in life, so that perhaps after all we must admit that "Galahad" is pretty good while still insisting it is not the equal of its predecessor, "Helen of Troy."

THE BLUE BOOK OF COOKERY.
By ISABEL COTTON SMITH
Funk and Wagnalls Company

Women wishing to further the welfare of their families recognize the importance of the culinary department in their homemaking, and hence will welcome so comprehensive a work as this glorified cook book turns out to be. It is a ponderous tome because a cook book of ordinary scope is merely one of its many valuable features. There is practically another book contained within its covers devoted entirely to menus suited to the needs of various occasions and many types of people. Additional advice tends to help toward the ideal of attaining the maximum of effect with the minimum of effort.

WHERE ARE THEY GOING?

By THERESA HOMET PATTERSON

WHEN San Francisco had an earthquake in the night recently, the wild ducks of Lake Merritt were not the only people who got up, but they were the only ones who made a fuss about it. They told everyone around the lake in screaming tones what they thought of being rocked and roused before daylight. They registered their disapproval of earthquakes and will have a chance to make good their declaration to tell the world for many of the hundreds now splashing and quacking will be off to parts unknown. However Oakland knows they will not tell for birds are not gossips but emblems of peace, happiness and good will. And it is to answer the question of "where are they going" that the government has established two banding stations on this coast. One at Portland and one at Lake Merritt, where 243 ducks were banded last year. Fifteen of these are known to have returned this year. It is no more than fair that ducks should get the big headlines part of the time and it was reported in that way that one of Oakland's ducks had been shot in Brazil.

Mr. E. W. Ehman, appointed by the government, meets officially more foreign guests than pass through Golden Gate. As host to the ducks he will give one thousand of them his card, as it were, this year, with the hope that he may hear from them along their routes of travel and meet them again in Oakland. He will see if they like California well enough to come back again, or for what country they would leave this.

It must be a star blazed trail that the teal, the smallest of the ducks follows from Arctic to Equator. Banding is going to mark the terminals as well as the routes and quite definitely decide whether the same birds return, whether they shuttle over the same air trail spring and fall. A European Wigeon visited Lake Merritt and an Ohio Mallard—that is, one banded there—was killed in California. We drove over on Sunday to visit the ducks. The cars were double parked near the fountain and banding stations. An illiterate pigeon was reclining upon a sign which read "This space reserved for the ducks." There were Mallards, Baldpates, Pintails, Black ducks, Scaups, Canvasbacks, Spoon bills, Ruddy ducks, Coots, Geese, both Canada and Cackling, Black Swans and white ones, all swimming about peacefully together, excepting one Coot who was so mad that his feathers wouldn't lie down. Some children, and many grown up children were feeding the birds. The gulls, unable to pick up grain on account of the upper mandible being hooked over the lower, do not mean to miss any sandwiches, popcorn or what have you in your lunch to share, and their screaming is deafening and rather detracts from ones enjoyment of the ducks.

There is diving and swimming and bathing and much preening of feathers. There is a happy squaking and quacking, squeaking and cackling. The coot does a deal of splashing when a gull attempts to hold him up for some morsel, the gull has no scruples,—it's food by fair means or foul and they literally take the bread and fish out of the mouths of other birds, which may have accounted for the angry coot.

Some ten years ago some oil got on the lake, some ducks got into the oil and were made prisoners because they could not fly. Oakland began feeding them, and finding the interest of the people so great, is keeping it up. Six hundred dollars is the cost of the grain, but in what other way has that amount been invested to bring such dividends in pleasure to the people? Twice a day the old colored man blows his whistle and they are fed barley. Grain is scattered in the trap so the birds are accustomed to going in and out. After the four o'clock feeding they preen some more, the swans polish their feathers and gradually they sort themselves out in groups, Mallards with Mallards, then somebody says something and all are off to the island for night, gulls flying high, coots low and ducks in between. Canvasbacks and Bluebills are there in great numbers, but they are shy and few of them come to the table which Oakland spreads for them with the other birds, and at evening they go to the marshes to feed. One of the residents near the lake had five mallards that would swim down in line at her call to be fed every day. The males were so gallant they allowed the ladies to eat first! Now just think of such conspicuous gallantry as that in these days of equal rights. During a rain, the lawns in front of Wild Duck Inn will be covered with the birds, all facing the wind.

A WESTLAKE FASHION PLATE

Strange how little sport it is to get a bird's markings in a museum! All the ducks are there in the museum in Golden Gate park, all the birds in the world are there! from the Condor to branches abloom with humming birds, before whose colors diamond dyes would pale. The taxidermist's art has made the pose natural and the eye sparkling, but it isn't just form and feathers that make a bird a bird. From this bewildering muchness, we went to visit the simple Japanese tea garden where seats and tables are cross sections of trees with the bark left on and such ornaments and carvings as nature has provided. Growing bamboo made green walls and trees held their sunshades over us. A quaint little lady with proper obi tended the singing kettle and made the tea. Two silken grey squirrels took turns in sliding down the trunk of a large tree, hesitating with waving plume and advancing until they reached the offered wafers whether on the table or on our knees. True to Japanese prints there were the sparrows in the bamboo—White-crowns which sing, "oh dear, I'm glad to be alive," hopping out to snatch our crumbs. How many cups of tea as an excuse to stay in this harmonious corner! We strolled over to the lake, also a part of the garden.

The Wood duck is the most beautiful of all our ducks and he is the one which should have been sailing on the little gem of a lake, being so near of kin to the Mandarin which graces the parks in the land of the Mikado, but there was a green winged teal, just one. It gave me a wonderful thrill when, with no hesitation and moving as quietly as a sail boat, he steered his course straight for me. I had saved some of my tea wafers for just such an occasion, but was he clairvoyant and able to see in my pocket? I stood enchanted and called him everything that was endearing in my effort to express my admiration for this little wild thing eating from my hand. He would swim out and turn, framing himself in a circle of ripples, then present himself for another wafer. How exquisite he was, every feather glistening and laid with care. The Japanese do not leave their pictures cold, they touch them with emotion. I love an apple tree, but I love it much more because the robin loves it and builds his nest there. Color delights us and form, but it is that unknown thing we call life that gives the real thrill of joy. I had said goodbye and was out of sight when I called to a Coot, little Teal heard my voice and hurried in to port where he anchored at my feet and took my last wafer. I knew then that one live bird was more to me than a museum full of dead ones.

Stow Lake in Golden Gate park is second only to Merritt in the interest shown in the ducks. They are fed here also, twice a day. The gulls cannot pick up grain and the people are not allowed to feed them so there are comparatively few, just enough to be decorative without being noisy. People driving in the afternoon stop for feeding hour, but any hour is full of interest. The Swan takes food from your hand then thrusts his bill into the water to swallow it. He has to do it that way. Mallards come ashore and trot around after the children, and amuse them very much also by standing on their heads in the water.

That there is no accounting for taste is evident in the amusing friendship in Westlake Park of a wood duck for a black goose of a mongrel sort that might have been made from the discard when other geese and ducks were amaking. Wherever that old goose waddles the handsome little duck waddles too, having to double-step to keep up.

Who can say the fish the White Pelican eats belong to man,—and therefore shoot him!

The friendship which is developing in our parks between birds and man is going to spoil the taste for gunning; and the great mystery of migration deepens our reverence for the Infinite whose loving ways are past finding out.

Many of the ducks will remain all winter but when spring comes practically all will hear and answer the call of the north, except the Mallards and those with the broken wing, and those with the broken wing may hear the call! Where are they going? When banding will have answered this question there will still be the unanswered Why.

WEST LAKE, WHERE WITH COMMUNITY SPIRIT, TOURISTS AND RESIDENTS PUT ON A CONTINUOUS PERFORMANCE OF AQUATIC SPORTS FOR AN EVER-CHANGING AUDIENCE

SOUTHLAND

Christmas on Pacific Shores

A CHRISTMAS without Christ! How can the giver of gracious gifts to friend and family, dependents and acquaintances, ignore entirely that greatest of gifts to the world, the Founder of the civilization which surrounds us? And yet, a sermon preached on this subject a quarter of a century ago on the Atlantic Coast, comes to mind with great force today as we realize its application here.

Is not this the time in all the year when we should scrutinize with intelligent diligence our own relation to the day we celebrate? If it has become commercialized by the merchants whose sales increase as Christmas draws near, then added efforts to make prominent the reason for Christmas as a holy day are demanded and some means of making The Nativity the main idea be devised. Even though the United States of America is a democracy and tolerates all sects and cults and religions, or lack of religion, we can not forget that we are living in full enjoyment of the Christian era. Analyzing the main motives of the religions of the world today, all of which seem to have originated in the Orient, we find their main precepts apply to the daily life of the individual. In each Christian nation Christian precepts have been embodied, to a greater or less extent, in the law of the land, and, as the world is won to the banner of Christianity these laws become more widely obeyed and individuals fall in line without opposition.

FOR HUNDREDS OF YEARS THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH HAS ENCOURAGED THE ART OF PAINTING. THE NATIVITY—COURTESY OF THE SAN DIEGO MUSEUM OF ART.

It remains for the nations themselves as individual members of one age or era to obey the laws which have made it possible for brothers to dwell together in unity as nations. What individual members of European races can do as citizens in the United States, can certainly be accomplished by the states in Europe.

The whole of Christianity is summed up—not in the discussion of fundamentalism or modernism, but in the words of Christ: "A new commandment give I unto you—That ye love one another."

Understanding the Orient

JAMES A. B. SCHERER has just published a book which he entitled "The Romance of Japan."

Putting into readable and attractive form the underlying characteristics of the Japanese people, and delving deeper still into their fascinating past, this book will go far to make peace between two world powers that need beyond all others to understand each other.

We talk lightly of the fact that here in California the West meets the East, but we have made little provision for that meeting; nor have we as a people prepared ourselves for either commercial or social relations with the Orient.

Dr. Scherer's book will be read by everyone who finds it. It is not a volume to be laid down and forgotten. With his knowledge of his own country and its mass psychology, gained during his great series of speeches made from Maine to California in 1917 and 1918, he is able to present the Japanese to America in a way that will be understood.

That his knowledge of the Japanese is far wider and deeper than that of any other writer who has attempted to interpret that country to America is the convincing conclusion of those who read his absorbing descriptions. We owe it to the nation whose western representatives we are to make ourselves trained diplomats to the Orient to the limit of our ability. Each and every one of us in California and all along the Pacific comes in contact with this race so foreign to our mode of thought, so superficial in their understanding of our motives. We owe it to ourselves to open our minds to this older civilization and endeavor to know their traditions, their inner motives and their probable future in our midst if we expect to dwell in peace.

The Nativity

WHAT change did the Birth of Christ make in the known world of the year one? That world worshiped idols in the north where Goths and Vandals flourished, and made war upon each other. Nobody knows what was going on in America, as it had not been discovered by history or science.

In the East, "the far East" alone, were wise men, men who had begun to study spiritual things, religion — man's relation to God. For hundreds of years they had cultivated their spirits and evolved a code for the life of the body. From the eastern end of the Mediterranean Sea to the isles of the Pacific, across Asia, the cult of spiritual things had spread.

Out of this turning toward God came The Answer. Christ was born in Bethlehem of Judea; angels heralded it to those who could see and hear them. Three wise men (representing, perhaps, the ancient spiritual cults), came to worship at His lowly bed; and the conquest of the world for spiritual things was begun. Glory to God in the Highest. On earth, Peace to men who are willing, ("of good will").

Uniting the Nation

IN the Plaza of San Diego there was dedicated on May 12, 1926, the Jefferson Davis National Highway, and at the ceremony Mrs. William Henry Anderson (Jessie Calhoun) made the dedicatory address, part of which is here given. There were present to represent officially the United Daughters of the Confederacy, besides Mrs. Anderson, Mrs. Chester A. Garfield, California Division President, who is also a General Director of the National Executive Board of the Jefferson Davis National Highway; Mrs. C. C. Clay, Honorary Vice-President-General for California; Miss Margaret C. Tate, of San Diego, President of the Stonewall Jackson Chapter, and, acting for that chapter, Col. W. Jefferson Davis, of San Diego, distinguished for air service in the World War, for which he has received many medals, both United States and foreign, and upon whom the order felt it a privilege to bestow their honor Cross of Service; honorary members of the Dedication Committee, Mrs. Spencer Roan Thorpe, one of the three founders and first President of the Robert E. Lee Chapter; Mrs. Erwin P. Werner, of Hollywood, founder and President of William Gibbs McAdoo Chapter, and the Woman California Chairman of the National Educational Association; Mrs. Hobart Johnson Whitley, of Hollywood, whose recent pledge of continued beneficence to the Mrs. Herman V. Randolph Fund for needy Confederate women is a noble monument to her noble heart, and Mrs. Thomas Jefferson Douglass, ex-President of the California Division and founder of the Dixie Chapter of Pasadena and the Woodrow Wilson Chapter.

OPINION

OFFICIALS of this beautiful, glorious San Diego: Mayor, Hon John L. Bacon; Lieut. Commander John L. Fox, of the Chamber of Commerce; Col. E. N. Jones, of the Park Board; Mr. Winfield Barkley, of the Dixie Highway Association, and, Major Albert Roche, of the Southern California Automobile Club,

We greet you: We have come here to show all honor possible in acknowledgement of your courtesy and your friendship, and to thank you publicly, as well as to celebrate the marking of the first Pacific Terminal of the Jefferson Davis National Highway.

The monument is of gray granite, rough hewn, as you can see, and was designed by Mrs. Chester A. Garfield. It differs slightly from the standard model of the General Committee, to harmonize better with another monument already in the Plaza.

It is marked with three tablets of bronze, also designed by Mrs. Garfield—a large one on the bevelled top, inscriped:

"First Pacific Terminal, Jefferson Davis Highway,
Presented to the City of San Diego, Dedicated May 12th, 1926,
by California Division, U. D. C."; a smaller one on the front side with an inscription gratefully acknowledging for the United Daughters of Confederacy and the citizens of San Diego, the splendid public service of Col. W. Jefferson Davis, in sponsoring Transcontinental Highways and Airways; and, another tablet inscribed to the Dixie Highway.

It was Mrs. Garfield's idea to have the marker in San Diego. She obtained consent from the J. D. H. General Board, and permission from the Mayor and other officials here.

We thank Col. W. Jefferson Davis for his loyal help and his generosity, to which we owe the materialization of the monument and "seeing through" our plans. Mrs. Garfield undertook entire charge of the work at the request of Mrs. Victor Montgomery, California Chairman, on account of her continued ill health.

It was thirteen years ago that Miss Decca Lamar West enthused the United Daughters of the Confederacy with patriotic zeal to undertake the project of the Jefferson Davis National Highway. She made a complete plan and directed it for years, until her health forced her to turn it over to others who have continued it, unchanged.

Our order is patriotic, benevolent and historical, and therefore could not build roads. But the plan is to link up parts of State Highways, have them designated "The Jefferson Davis National Highway," then mark and beautify their route.

It was to start at Washington, D. C., then go down through Virginia and the other Southern States, through their capitals, and on out to the Pacific Coast. The success so far, in spite of difficulties sometimes, has been great, owing to the tireless effort of Chairmen, the courtesy of State Highway Departments, and the interest of our Chapters in road building.

The monument that marks the beginning of the Highway was erected in Washington, D. C., a number of years ago, and here, today, we are dedicating the one that marks its first Pacific Terminal.

It is especially apropos for a great road to the Pacific Coast to be named for Jefferson Davis, for he was the first American Statesman to propose such a road, which he did while Secretary of War under President Pierce.

Beginning 1843-54 and on, he sent engineers to survey, study the topography of the country and report a practical plan for both a transcontinental highway and railroad to the Pacific Coast. This he submitted to the government and during both his terms in the Cabinet, labored and argued earnestly to have the roads built, not only upon the ground of safety for the Western settlers, but for, as his report reads: "the need of safe and rapid communication with the Pacific Slope, to secure its continuance as a part of the Union." He recommended San Diego as a terminal as well as the Northern Bay, "as," to quote again from his report, "a seaport lying so directly upon the ocean."

It is appropriate also that this highway should become a true memorial in fact as well as name, to the character of a great American, whose love was intense for his country, exemplified in service as well as words, whose zeal was for keeping it united, who, when he saw disruption threatening it, gave his energies, unstinted, for years, trying to forestall it.

His war record is that he was conspicuously brave, resourceful, and diplomatic as a young officer in the Indian and Mexican Wars, and efficient in construction works. Later in life he built the stone aqueduct which brings the water supply to Washington, D. C., the Cabin-John Bridge there being part of the construction.

Pages of glory for this country are his records as soldier, congressman, senator, Secretary of War, as well as later, when through suffering that staggers the mind even to think of his pain-tortured body grew pitifully emaciated still his mind and spirit lost not an iota of their power, vigor, nobility and sweetness. He was always kind in his estimate of others, never having been heard to speak even of the cruel and malicious except in pity and forgiveness.

He was born in 1808 and died in 1889. When the end came, from over the whole nation, from the rightly informed, expressions of grief were mingled with highest encomiums. Naturally in the South both love and sorrow were greatest. But I shall quote from two Northern comments.

The New York "World" said, "A great soul has passed away."

James Ridpath, an Abolitionist, and life-long political opponent, but personally well acquainted with him and the whole history of his life, said:

"A statesman with clean hands and pure heart, who served his people faithfully from budding manhood to hoary age, without thought of self, with unbending integrity to the best of his great ability. He was a man of whom all his countrymen who knew him personally, without distinction or creed political, are proud, and proud that he was their countryman."

PRESENTATION

Hon. John L. Bacon,
Mr. Mayor:

Remembering that it was the Americans from Jefferson Davis's section of the country, who first blazed a trail to California, and sanctified it with untold hardships and many an unmarked grave along the way, and that I am the daughter of her, then a little girl, Laura Butler Davis, afterwards Mrs. Noble E. Ewing Calhoun, who came in one of these covered wagons, there is a special thrill for me, in having the honor to present to you, on behalf of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, and for the City of San Diego, this monument which marks the first Pacific Terminal of the Jefferson Davis National Highway.

JESSIE CALHOUN ANDERSON.

California Will Carry On

WHEN the West set out to conquer the world it took the Bible, Old Testament and New Testament, with it. All that the East had developed in the deep questions relating to man's life, his future, his relation to God and to man, was embodied in the Bible; and the West revered it and preserved it through the Dark Ages; and with Bible in hand conquered the rest of the world.

California is one hundred and eighty degrees from the point where this study of spiritual things first started. The knowledge traveled in both directions around the world. The Pacific lies between.

Science and civilization it creates are equal on both sides of the Pacific. The Orient weaves cloth more beautifully than we; we know mechanics better and the Orient has learned. The globe is circled by knowledge. California can carry on only by going out into her deserts to pray.

NEW TOWER OF ST. JAMES, BERTRAM GOODHUE, AND CARLETON M. WINSLOW, ARCHITECTS

To the women who, without publicity or emolument, carry on the work of the Church, this little picture is dedicated in the person of one who lately passed, Mrs. J. H. Dwight of St. James, California, who gave of herself and her substance to the Church of God.

WINTER SPORTS AND SUMMER SPORTS COMBINE TO MAKE A Merry Christmas

The trail to Baldy leads across Manker's Flats, and the upper San Antonio canyon, to the Sierra Club cabin, where the fortunate guests may have an old-time Christmas, even including an impromptu toboggan and give a semaphore representation on the home stretch.

Eyre Powell Press Service.

Skiing, tobogganing, and skating are all included in popular California sports just now. The neighborhood of Arrowhead, Big Bear and Baldy all offer these attractions; while in Yosemite and up at Tahoe the hotels are kept open that these sports may be enjoyed de luxe.

Football leads all the sports in public interest in the early winter months. Reck not whether you know one pass from another, get the contagion of the crowd, and yell with one side or another —or both. You may not understand that "the offense is the best defense,' but go on being one of the nerve-racked followers and learn. The end of a well night perfect football season will come with the East versus West game which follows

Eyre Powell Press Service.

Eyre Powell Press Service.

the Tournament of Roses in Pasadena, on New Year's Day and is held in the Rose Bowl. Last year Alabama came from the East to conquer Washington, and this year is scheduled to come to meet Stanford. The Southerners were entertained at Hotel Huntington and are here shown on the lawn after an outdoor breakfast. The line-up will be practically the same, with the exception of the popular Pooley Hubert, who left the team on his graduation.

It is only a question of taste. Will you spend your holidays in the snows of the mountain tops, or under the palms amid the flowers of the valley. The fragrance of pines or the soft perfume of flowers, may be your Christmas incense. The Sierras offer the snows; the patio of Hotel del Coronado the palms and flowers.

It may seem to the uninitiated that Santa Claus avoids the Ocean but the children of Claude Putnam, owner and skipper of the yacht "Mildura,' of the Newport Harbor Yacht Club, will tell you the good saint of Christmas cheer is a fine sailor and fills their stockings and visits their tree on board ship as generously as in their inland home. The Mildura is equipped to provide for every need, as the family was en residence there all summer, and offers every facility for holiday entertaining.

Dr. Paul M. Hunter, of Pasadena, Southern Champion, is an entrant in the Monterey Tournament on December 8, 9, 10 and 11. Pebble Beach.

The golf tournaments of December and January offer more than the usual interest and trophies. December 8, 9, 10, 11 are the dates for the $5,000 Monterey Peninsula Open Championship over the beautiful Pebble Beach course. In this George Von Elm, the conqueror of Bobby Jones, is an entrant. This is followed by the Long Beach Open tournament for $2500, December 31-January 1-2, Virginia Country Club. Later in January will come the $10,000 Los Angeles Open tournament, in which over two hundred local and visiting entrants will battle for prestige and petty lucre.

Chateau Arts Studio.

A crowning sport of the year is showing a pet pony at the Horse Shows, and collecting the Blue Ribbons won thereby. Proved by little Miss Lansborough of San Francisco.

PRO MUSICA

The following invitation is being sent to friends of Music, in its universal sense, by organizers of a local chapter of Pro Musica.

Knowing of your interest in the sincerest musical development of your city, we are asking you to join the Los Angeles Chapter of Pro Musica,—local center of the American unit of the international organization devoted to musical reciprocity.

Pro Musica fulfills two great functions. By a system of careful surveys, the programmatic needs of chapter-cities are determined. Similarily, in the fifteen countries interested in the movement, national boards representing creative tendencies, from the conservative to the ultra-modern, select the most significant composers and works for presentation in other countries.

A national board, then, through this international advice and cooperation, is able to meet the special needs of any chapter-city by providing the best examples of modern works or neglected classics as interpreted by their best exponents. As an instance, last year American Pro-Musica was able to present Prokolieff and Casella, and this season offers the Pro Arte Quartette and Milhaud. In turn the American board espouses the cause of American music abroad.

In music, as in other arts, the very vital nature of the message, be it profoundly classic or the vision of new music, may not recommend itself to music bureaus necessarily conducted for financial gain.

Here, then, Pro Musica functions as a non-profit-bearing concert agency. It affords its members a unique opportunity of hearing and meeting the musical ambassadors from other countries. Moreover, Pro Musica of Los Angeles will be a link in a cross-country chain of music idealists. Its active existence will benefit this community and the country generally, as the artists sponsored find additional engagements. Eventually, their commercial value may thus be established with the commercial managers. In Pro Musica, moreover, there is no possible chance for personal exploitation.

The four annual events will be open to members only—Membership will probably be limited, and will become a rare privilege. The annual dues—$5.00 only—admit you to these events, bring you the excellent musical quarterly of the national association, and offer guest privileges in Pro Musica Chapter meetings in other American cities and abroad. We shall be happy to enroll you as a member, but unless we have the pleasure of an immediate reply we must pass this option to the next person on our list. Kindly indicate which membership you care to choose, and mail the enclosed application with your check to the address below.

Sincerely yours,
For International Music Reciprocity.
LOS ANGELES CHAPTER
"PRO MUSICA."

By Blanche Rogers Lott,
Chairman Membership Committee.

SURVEYING THE HEALTH OF A TOWN

By DWIGHT S. ANDERSON

There are millions of people in the world who haven't the slightest idea how much hard work is done every day to save their lives from being taken by unnecessary diseases. The public health man diagnoses a city's ailment by what he calls a "survey." A survey gathers all the facts about a city that may have even the remotest bearing on its health. To show how thoroughly this is done, let us examine only three of the many general subjects investigated.

The locality. Valley or plain; character of subsoil; geology; vegetable life surrounding the city; what railroads or waterways serve it; the nature of the park system; what proportion of houses have gas or electricity; character of hotel accommodations.

The climate. Temperature, humidity, rainfall; whether there are pronounced wet or dry periods; amount of snow; amount of fog; prevailing winds; wind velocity; sunshine.

"CASTELLANO" BY ECHAQUE, MADRID
A FINE PRINT FROM THE COLLECTION OF THE CAMERA PICTORIALISTS OF LOS ANGELES, NOW ON EXHIBITION IN THE GALLERY OF THE PUBLIC LIBRARY, LOS ANGELES.

The people. Density of population; age group, number of men and women; number of men, women and number of children employed in different industries; nationalities and races; religious sects; education and illiteracy; number of newspapers; existing system of government; prevailing industries and occupations; hours of employment; extent of pauperism; number of families owning own homes or renting.

This sort of exhaustive inquiry, it will be agreed, is likely to gather all the facts. But of what use is all this work? Certainly, the answering of thousands of such questions must involve the collection of many useless facts. But they must all be collected, for nobody knows which facts are useless until they have all been gathered and compared. Fact No. 62 may be of no significance until coupled with fact No. 976. Then it may prove to be the cause of all the trouble.

For example: The fact that a city consumes an unusual amount of raw or bulk milk may mean nothing until we discover the fact that there is also a high rate of tuberculosis of the bones among children. These two facts are significant when considered in connection with another—that bulk milk contains more tuberculosis germs than pasteurized.

So, with a degree of particularity equal to that just shown, the fact-gatherer goes into hundreds of questions about water supply, drainage, refuse, milk supply, inspection of restaurants, lunch rooms and food stores, housing, school sanitation and hygiene, the health department, hospital facilities, vital statistics, and tuberculosis.

Often such surveys are made with special reference to tuberculosis. Their purpose is to discover whether money raised by Christmas seals is being spent in the best possible way—whether anything has been overlooked. This is how carefully is guarded the trust fund the people contribute to the organized fight against the disease. And it is interesting to note that more money each year is raised by Christmas seals, and each year the death rate drops a little. Twenty years ago more than 200 people died of tuberculosis out of 100,000, today only 90.

Health has its price—no city need be sick.

Particularizing in larger and smaller sizes —a remodeling department for your convenience.

Gowns
Coats
Street Dresses Party Frocks
for the Gentlewoman

Schaffer's
GRAY SHOP
GOWNS for WOMEN
Large & Small
624 East Colorado
PASADENA, CALIFORNIA

T. W. Mather Co. Inc.
PASADENA, CAL.

Dry Goods
Women's & Children's
Wearing Apparel

Colorado Street at Marengo
Pasadena

QUALITY SERVICE
THE ELITE
DRY CLEANERS AND DYERS
Plant: 797 So. Fair Oaks Ave.
Colo. 1349 Pasadena, California

Permutit Soft Water Saves Clothes
TROY LAUNDRY
In Business for Twenty Years
Pasadena, Cal. Phone C. 146 Alhambra 243-J

HEWSON Handcraft STUDIOS

Headquarters for Arts and Crafts

Hand Made
Silver
Pewter
Drapes
Sports Coats
Pottery, etc.

Christmas Things of Beauty—

2508½ W. 7th, Los Angeles
602 E. Colorado, Pasadena

PASADENA CORSET SHOP
HELEN B. FORD
A Complete Line of Robes, Negligees, Bed Jackets, Lingerie, Handkerchiefs, Bags and Novelty Jewelry
308 E. COLORADO STREET FAIR OAKS 3388

Superfine

Not "Purveyor to Her Majesty, the Queen," as in Victorian England, but Conveyor for Her Majesty, the American Woman. Full half the train devoted to her comfort. Fast now. Faster after November 14—leaves Los Angeles—Southern Pacific Lines—5:00 p. m. daily; arrives Chicago—Rock Island Lines—10:00 a. m.; returning leaves Chicago 8:30 p. m., arrives Los Angeles 9:30 a. m.—only two days and three nights en route. Extra fare, $10.

Other high-class fast trains on convenient schedules to Kansas City, Chicago, St. Louis, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Memphis. No extra fare.

GOLDEN STATE
LIMITED

"Saves a Business Day"

For tickets, reservations and information, apply
Southern Pacific City Ticket Office
937 State St., Santa Barbara, Calif., Phone 243
or address B. F. Coons, General Agent, Rock Island Lines
809 Van Nuys Bldg., Los Angeles, Calif.

Rock Island — SOUTHERN PACIFIC LINES

FLORNINA
95 South Los Robles Ave.
Pasadena, California

The Distinctive Christmas Gift

Mules Slippers
Satchets
Match Boxes
Memo Pads of Leather
Purses — Bags

Charming Pillow for the Boudoir

Garters
Negligees
Underwear
Vanities
Telephone Pads
Bed Jackets

Costume Jewelry— Distinctively Different

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHAPTER A. I. A. MONTHLY BULLETIN

OFFICERS
DAVID J. WITMER, PRESIDENT
C. E. NOERENBERG, VICE PRESIDENT
EDGAR H. CLINE, SECRETARY
WINCHTON L. RISLEY, TREASURER

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH,
Editor

DIRECTORS
H. C. CHAMBERS
DONALD PARKINSON
ALFRED W. REA

The following article describing the work of restoration was written by Ross G. Montgomery, A.I.A., and tells in a fascinating manner of the many problems of reconstruction. It is due to his skill and fine discrimination that most of the success in this difficult undertaking is due.

THE RESTORATION OF SANTA BARBARA MISSION

By ROSS G. MONTGOMERY, A.I.A.

The old Mission of Santa Barbara, among the twenty-one Franciscan mission establishments north of the Mexican line identified with the Spanish occupation of Alta California, is unquestionably the most interesting of them all for several reasons. First, because the Friars have never abandoned the site, even at the time of the general secularization in 1848, and secondly, because from an architectural standpoint it attracts wider attention than any of the others, owing chiefly to the magnificent facade of the church.

Many of the Missions were built of adobe or other ephemeral materials, but Santa Barbara to a great extent was of durable stone construction, and has, therefore, resisted the ravages of time and vandalism of man, thus permitting a lasting restoration even in the face of the serious damage done by the earthquake of 1925. Unlike Europe, we have very few buildings either in the West or on the Atlantic seaboard that can lay claim to more than a passing interest historically. The early Puritan churches of New England; various dwellings and buildings identified with the American Revolution; a possible Spanish church or two in Florida, and the missionary churches of the Southwest founded by the Dominicans, Jesuits and Franciscan orders have been bequeathed to us and constitute our sole architectural heritage of past centuries.

But among these, many are doomed to rapid decay because of their frame construction, and today are only preserved by sympathetic care. Santa Barbara Mission, like Independence Hall of Philadelphia, is built of more lasting materials, and thus lends itself to permanent restoration. Certain historic buildings such as the Old Ship Church at Salem, or Mt. Vernon on the Potomac were built of white pine and cannot endure throughout the centuries. It is indeed fitting that we should restore this Southland Mission then; a record of our own past in California.

The daring of early Spanish voyagers, the pageantry of intrepid explorers under the banner of Spain, the zeal of brown-robed Franciscans and the colorful life of the rancheros are closely interwoven in the historic bell towers and cloisters of Santa Barbara—"Queen of the Missions'—a lasting symbol of California's golden days.

Unless one is acquainted with the history surrounding this historic edifice, the work of restoration now being accomplished would mean comparatively little, so perhaps a brief resume would not be out of place.

The Spaniards were the first people to intervene in California's history and endeavored for two centuries to occupy it, succeeding at the time the Missions were founded. Once here, they indelibly marked the history of the state with a romance that will always remain its fondest tradition. The first navigator who sailed through the waters of Santa Barbara Channel was Juan Rodriguez Cabrillo in 1542 and the next voyager, Captain Sebastian Cermeno, sailed south three years later from San Francisco to Mexico. Cermeno crossed the Pacific from Manila in the galleon San Augustin. His ship was wrecked on the California coast and the survivors built a small craft from the planks of the wrecked vessel. It was on this unseaworthy boat that Cermeno passed by Santa Barbara.

Sebastian Vizcaino, in command of three ships, sailed from Mexico in 1602, in order to explore the west coast of North America. Thus an expedition sailed through the Santa Barbara Channel for the third time. Spanish galleons coming from the Philippines to Mexico never followed this water-course, for the channel islands gave the impression of the mainland from far out at sea, and as one Franciscan historian explained, "They sailed away from them."

It was not until 1769 that the Viceroy of New Spain determined upon the colonization of Alta California, and Gaspar de Portola was made Governor of the Province and commander of the colonization expedition. Arrangements were made for two expeditions by land and two by sea; all to assemble at San Diego. Arriving at this destination, de Portola, accompanied by two Franciscan Friars and some soldiers, explored the coast region of California, and marched north to the Bay of Monterey, where it was decided to establish the capital of the province.

On August 14, 1769, de Portola, while on this journey to Monterey, arrived at the present site of Santa Barbara. Father Junipero Serra, Presidente of the Franciscan missionaries in California, visited the region in and around the present town of Santa Barbara about three years later. Eventually Missions were created, but between the Mission of San Luis Obispo and San Gabriel there was a wide gap, which Father Serra proposed to close by establishing three missions on the Santa Barbara Channel. Owing to certain occurrences, the Presidio at Santa Barbara was established before the Mission, but in 1786, Father Louis Lasuen, the successor of Father Serra, reported the founding of the Mission, and a few months later construction was begun.

The chapel proving inadequate, another church was erected and later, in 1793, still another was built, making the third since the founding of the Mission. In 1812, an earthquake damaged the church to such an extent as to render it unsafe for further use. Permission for the erection of a new group of Mission buildings was obtained from the Governor by the Franciscans, and construction work was started in 1815, taking five years to complete, and making the fourth church to stand on the same site.

Part of the walls and some of the foundations of the church destroyed in 1812 were embodied in the new building of 1815, so that the present beautiful edifice represents three epochs in its history; the first, prior to the earthquake of 1812, the second, from that time until 1925, and the third, the present period.

After the first frantic inquiries as to the loss of life in the recent Santa Barbara earthquake, the next question in the public mind was the condition of the famous Mission itself. An engineer's inspection of the building revealed that the damage was more serious than was at first supposed. The monastery was made uninhabitable, the walls, floors and roofing were in such a precarious state that walking along the corridors or entering the rooms was a dangerous proceeding. One of the towers was so badly injured that it had to be immediately buttressed and timbered to prevent a total collapse. The other was in a state of partial collapse including a stone stairway contained in it. The roof timbers of the church were stressed to a point of imminent danger, and the stone buttresses in many instances had separated from the walls of the church.

To a casual observer viewing the edifice from the exterior, the damage done was apparently confined to the towers and the pediment of the church. However, to anyone versed in a knowledge of building construction, it was obvious that the old Mission "suffered internal injuries" requiring immediate attention and drastic measures for anchoring and shoring. Practically all of the walls were out of alignment, timbers were shorn from their anchorage and other serious damage was done, to the extent that the Friars at the Mission were forced to spend thousands of dollars in temporary scaffolding and timber supports, pending the contemplated restoration.

Before proceeding with actual reconstruction drawings and the preparation of specifications for the restoration of the monastery and church, it was necessary to take complete measurements of the structures as they existed in their ruined condition. This involved a month's time on the part of the architect in charge, assisted by several men, who helped not only by procuring tape measurements, but also in boring holes through walls to obtain the correct dimensions, and in digging test pits for proposed foundations and piers. Where it was found necessary, special scaffolding was erected to enable the architect to scale vertical surfaces. In addition to measurements obtained, over two hundred grade dimensions were collected by use of a transit. This collected data enabled the architect to prepare accurate and complete plans of the old Mission as it formerly existed prior to the earthquake.

It proved something of a task to plan the rehabilitation of the Mission, as the new work, to a great extent, had to conform to the old. Levels and transits were unknown in the building of the Mission originally and the floors and walls throughout in no case were in either perpendicular or horizontal planes. The new materials now conform exactly to the outlines of the old walls, floors and roofs that were left standing, so it is quite impossible to tell where the old portions terminate and the new work begins. Still more important, the old Mission has now been rendered practically earthquake-proof.

No materials were removed except parts that the catastrophe had made dangerous, or that would be subject to speedy decomposi-

(Continued on Next Page, Column 3)

SANTA BARBARA MISSION AFTER THE EARTHQUAKE, JUNE 29, 1925, NOW BEING RESTORED

THE ARCHITECTURAL CLUB OF LOS ANGELES

MONTHLY BULLETIN

OFFICERS

HAROLD O. SEXSMITH, PRESIDENT
CLIFFORD A. TRUESDELL, VICE PRESIDENT
C. R. JOHNSON, SECRETARY
PAUL R. WILLIAMS, TREASURER

DIRECTORS

JULIAN GARNSEY, DIRECTOR
J. E. STANTON, DIRECTOR
H. C. CHAMBERS, DIRECTOR

NOVEMBER MEETING

As the Bulletin goes to press, arrangements have been completed for what should be one of the most interesting meetings the Club has had. The event will be a matter of history when this reaches the hands of the members, but we can't refrain from doing a little prophecying. The meeting is being sponsored by the office of Walker and Eisen and is to be held in the dining room of the new California Lutheran Hospital at 14th and Hope Streets. Now some of the members may think that there is something back of a meeting held in such a place as a hospital. Well, there is. The officers of the Club hope that the meeting will have a reviving effect upon a lot of the fellows and get some of these out who haven't been seen for some time.

Dinner is to be served in the dining room, where certain, at present undivulged, features of entertainment will be set forth for the edification of the gang. There will be a talk on the special features of the hospital design. This talk is to be given by the Superintendent of the Hospital, Dr. G. W. Olsen, who is a man of wide experience in the problems of hospital administration. Following the meeting there will be an inspection trip of the building. We are not just clear as to whether the nurses will be on duty or not, but suffice to say that a good turn out of club members is expected.

Walker and Eisen have been very kind in making this instructive meeting possible and it is greatly appreciated by the Club. Will someone please make a motion that a vote of thanks be sent to them by the secretary. The motion is carried. Thank you.

THE OCTOBER MEETING—WHAT IT WAS AND WHERE IT WENT

Commenting upon the above description of the meeting we would like to say that it was to be held at the Elks' Club and was to be sponsored by a noted firm of architects. Something happened. We don't know just what it was. At any rate, arrangements fell through when it was too late to arrange another meeting. All former entertainment committees will understand perfectly without further explanation. We are reminded of a certain famous Southern California football team who were last year dubbed the "Piggly Wiggleys." They had the goods, but they didn't deliver.

Let us hope that the December meeting doesn't hit the skids before it materializes, for it should be a humdinger if present arrangements go through. It is rumored that Jess Stanton will have something to do with it. Jess is selling so many beautful salt glazed sewer pipe these days and feeding so many half-starved architects their noon day lunches recently that it may be that we can't pry him loose from the top floor of the Pacific Finance Building long enough to come and play with us, but we will see what we can do.

INSPECTION VISIT SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 27

Those who turned out for the inspection trip to the Roman Gardens, 2000 No. Highland Avenue, all thanked the committee for arranging the trip. Walter and Pierpont Davis have certainly out-Davised themselves in these unique apartments. Those who failed to make the trip should go around and take a look. It must have been refreshing to have a client who would "come through" in the way this one apparently did.

ANOTHER SAILOR BOY

Genial Julian has steamed away to Honolulu, where, between visits to the famous beach, he proposes to decorate a bank ceiling for the Goodhue Associates, of New York. The ceiling is a modern concrete one, but Garnsey says he is to do it "in the primitive Hawaiian ornament as shown in the old tapas as a motif." Boy! please page Mr. Tapas. Julian will be back at the old stand by the first of the year, so get in your order for murals early. He closes his letter with a soul-stirring appeal for more and better hulas. All who believe his story say amen.

SCHLOSS ELTZ, ON THE MOSELLE.—M. U. S.

C. R. JOHNSON RETURNS

Yes, our honorable secretary is back again from his European trip and dropped in the other day with a couple of sketch books full of charming studies he had picked up in Italy, France and England. He says he had a fine time except when the Fascisti mistook him for a Bolshevist.

COMPETITION

ALL WOOD HOUSE DESIGN

A prize of $2500 is offered by C. W. Stimson, Seattle lumberman, for an all wood home design which will best present the possibilities of woods native to the Pacific Northwest. Stimson offers the prize through the West Coast Lumber Trade Extension Bureau of Seattle. It is to be awarded in a nation-wide contest that will begin in January and close July 1, 1927. Other prizes in proportion, the bureau officials state, will be awarded. Write to the West Coast Lumbermen's Association, Seattle, for information and program.

INFORMATION WANTED

A request has come from an Eastern architect for the whereabouts of Mr. George E. McDonald (sometimes MacDonald), an architect or architectural draftsman. He is described as being sixty-four years old and formerly resided or received mail at the Hotel Cadillac. An elder brother is anxious to get in touch with him. Any information concerning him should be given to the president of the Club. The request seems urgent.

SANTA BARBARA MISSION

(Continued from Page 23)

tion. Almost all the first story walls, floors and ceilings in the monastery portion were kept intact, but the second floor was practically a complete ruin. It was found expedient to plan a reinforced concrete floor slab over the existing ceilings of the first floor. This slab is now supported on columns and girders of the same material. The columns were recessed into the old first floor walls and carried to the required foundation depths below grade. The concrete work referred to carries the stone, adobe and concrete walls forming the new second story of the monastery portion. All of these walls are plastered, and create an appearance identical with the old walls which they have replaced. Similar door and window openings with ancient mission details and contours create the impression of the original second story.

No part of the new work is being built with levels or straight-edge, but conforms to the original irregularities of the Mission. Even some of the old materials have been utilized when found expedient. The plan of the second floor of the monastery in its essentials, is exactly as arranged by the Franciscans many years ago. The only radical departure necessary, was in the use of more durable materials, so as to leave to posterity at least one complete historical and archaeological record of the early romantic Spanish regime in California. It may be of interest to note that the second story of the monastery was originally built of a more ephemeral material than was used for the first story construction. Most of the walls comprising the first story are of stone which withstood the earthquake shocks with a fair degree of success, while all of the walls above the second floor were of adobe held together by timbers, which were injured to the extent of making rehabilitation an impossibility.

In both the monastery and the church portions, many large fissures and cracks were filled in with concrete and cement, and the walls in which these fissures occurred had to be brought back into proper alignment by the use of bolts and anchors. Many of the old tile and stone floors throughout were in such a damaged state that they likewise had to be reconditioned. The church roof in part and monastery roof complete were rebuilt, and the remaining portions of the church roof reconditioned. There are a thousand and one details, such as moulds, both stone and wood, beams, frames, adz timbers, sash, doors, tile floors, etc., that became part of the rehabilitation program. As many of the walls are from three to seven feet in thickness the cost of labor and material proved to be enormous.

The architect in charge was authorized by the Mission Fathers to discuss all phases of the new work with the official Architectural Committee before proceeding with the various plans and details. This committee was composed of several eminent architects and engineers and in addition, one or two artists who have made a study of the Missions from a standpoint of color and tradition.

If this restoration now under way represented only a utilitarian rebuilding for the use of the Fathers at the Mission, the public at large would not have been solicited for financial assistance. In fact only about one-third of the funds asked for would have been necessary for this purpose. But general sentiment favored a historical reconditioning of the buildings and the public was asked to participate in the work of restoring to California one of her proudest monuments of the Past.

In spite of the generous contributions at the time of the financial drive, as frequently occurs, public enthusiasm waned too quickly, and unless further help is forthcoming, this worthy work will still be left uncompleted.

It is perhaps not generally known that Santa Barbara is the only Mission in which the altar light has been burning perpetually since its founding, and today is the one Mission which links its present history with the Spanish occupation in California. Is it not imperative then, that the high resolve of those first generous-spirited days after the earthquake be carried to a splendid fulfillment, permitting Santa Barbara Mission to stand once more as of old, truly—"Queen of the Missions"?

Hispano-Moresque Tile

Colorful, Decorative, Interesting;
made entirely by hand

Mexican, Spanish and Tunisian Designs

Showroom

Harry C. Hicks

4283 Beverly Blvd. GR 4013
Los Angeles, California

ASSISTANCE LEAGUE OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

MONTHLY BULLETIN

"All for Service — And Service for All"

1504 de Longpre Avenue

OFFICERS:

MRS. HANCOCK BANNING, President
MRS. EDWARDS LAUGHLIN, First Vice President
MRS. WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, Sec. Vice-Pres.
MRS. ISAAC HAMPSHUR JONES, 3rd Vice-Pres.
MRS. E. AVERY MCCARTHY, Fourth Vice-Pres.
MRS. JAMES REED, Secretary
MRS. J. WARREN TATUM, Treas.
MR. D. C. MACWATTERS, Auditor

CHRISTMAS GIFTS

The time is almost here when that frantic what-shall-I-give feeling comes upon us.

Do you know that the Gift and Exchange Shop is here to help you out? The gifts are carefully chosen. With a few exceptions they are all made by those who are helping to support themselves—disabled veterans, widows with dependent children, a little seventy-five year-old lady who lost her money in real estate speculation and makes such delightful lunch sets—many others.

The regular women's exchange charges these craftsmen, for that is what they are, thirty-three and a third per cent commission —we charge only twenty per cent; the bare cost of handling them.

Some of the directors have chosen things of which they want particularly to tell you.

Mrs. Banning writes:

"I want to recommend the spiced grape fruit conserve. I find it delicious,—and it makes a delightful gift or favor in its novel and gay wrappings.

"And please remember that you, in buying, are helping women to help themselves. The makers of the objects in the Exchange Shop come in often to see us, so eager are they that we sell their things."

It was with a distinct feeling of surprise that a new League member, who knows lovely shops throughout the country, on going through the Gift and Exchange Shop the other day found so many choice gifts,—unusual, beautiful, and suitable.

We asked her to give us her mental list as she looked about. Here it is in her own words.

"Because they are so gay and foreign and Christmacy, I would send one of your Czchecko-Slovakian shawls to my nineteen year-old sister.

"A Batik tie would go to a friend who winds gay silk around her lovely bobbed hair.

"To a newly married couple, both of whom are very busy, I'd send a big box of those delicious home preserves,—Tomato conserve (it looks as good as the recipe I found in a little Boston antique store), sweet pickled plums, spiced figs, India Relish, those gay and clear jellies.

"I'm always wanting to give presents to a gracious Colonial house transplanted out here —one of your beautiful hand-woven bedspreads would be sent there,—and a hooked rug.

"My brother away at college would chortle at the fruit cake and homemade preserved fruits. They look almost, but not quite, too pretty to open, with their gay wrapping and bunches of fruit upon them.

"That beautiful brooch, which you tell me is sent by a French family to a daughter here, should go to an appreciative person.

"A red-haired friend of mine who adores chinoiserie must have that carved turquoise matrix pendant. It's very rare.

"I want my own little three-year-old to have that adorable chintz-covered doll's furniture. And also, that fairy-like set of knitted doll's outing clothes. They are too adorable!

"What woud I choose for mysef? Oh, I'd go back to the heavenly silverware you have here. I have loved Porter Blanchard's work ever since I first saw it on exhibition at the Little Gallery in New York. I do hope you appreciate it out here,—you ought to be justly proud of having one of the first artists of his day here to make lasting, unique, and exquisitely simple ware for your brides."

AN ALUMNI LUNCHEON IN THE TEA ROOM

Mrs. R. D. Shepherd is very much interested in the work of the disabled veterans of the California Hut. These men have been taught, through the Vocational Guidance work, to be partially self-supporting and they are pathetically eager to sell the toys, shawls, rugs, etc., the making of which has helped them to health.

Mrs. John Newton Russell sends us a copy of a letter to a friend:

"Dearest Jane:

"Eureka! I've found the prettiest and cutest baby clothes in town. Drop in at the Assistance League shop and you will find them all laid out in view. They are really clever and most interesting. You'll get a thrill. Even the very inexpensive ones are delightful.

"Notice the irresistible dolls and their complete outfits,—all too perfect for words! You'll want to begin dressing a doll right away for Christmas. And don't forget to see the unique doll-house furniture, all done in cretonnes.

"I hope this helps your shopping problems as it has mine.

"Fondly,
"Berdella Russell."

Another one says:

"It is the handkerchiefs and the nose-gays of shaded tiny wool flowers that intrigue me. I would like to send one of those dainty little squares and a boutonniere to every one of the pretty girls I know.

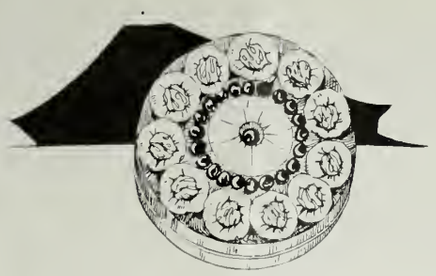
Then there are the Haori and Mandarin coats which we handle on commission from an aged Chinese importer who has been in two terrible automobile accidents and needs our help. There is an especially lovely kimona —pale lavender, lined with robin's-egg blue.

There is lovely handmade silk lingerie. And you may have trousseau and linen worked by expert needlewomen whose work is as lovely as that of the convents abroad.

And don't forget the Downtown Shop! Mr. Giannini, of the Bank of Italy has given the League a whole shop in the ground floor of the Women's Athletic Club Building, right on Flower Street—839 South. The same stock is there as at the Community House. It is at the Downtown Shop that the Christmas sale proper is now going on.

ELEANOR STRATTON DEWEY

ROUND TABLE LUNCHEON
IN THE TEA ROOM, DEC. 7, 12-2
LAL CHAND MEHRA, U. C., '23



Lecturer on the Staff of U. C. Extension Division

Mr. Mehra will talk on the Life and Customs of India. Authentic costumes of this country will be described and its customs explained.

Reservations should be made in advance.

HAND-WROUGHT SILVERWARE DESIGNED AND EXECUTED BY PORTER BLANCHARD, IS HERE AT THE ASSISTANCE LEAGUE FOR SALE ON COMMISSION.

IT IS difficult to conceive of a more thoughtful or pleasant remembrance to any one than a box of Fruit or Nuts or Candy—particularly when it is a reminder to the recipient of tempting California products.

Any selection will be shipped, all charges prepaid, to any point in the United States.

Coulter Dry Goods Co
FOUNDED in 1876

Seventh Street at Olive

GIFTS of STYLE and WIT

FOR those who have a flair for the trends of tomorrow and those who delight in the old, old-fashioned things—decorative gifts, substantial gifts, hospitality gifts—every sort of gift that has a place in any sort of home—for your fancy's choosing—at Barker Bros.

BARKER BROS.
Complete Furnishers of Successful Homes
SEVENTH STREET, Flower & Figueroa

The Carpet of Allah—the Desert in Bloom.

A beautiful illustrated booklet of Palm Springs will be sent upon request

The luxurious Desert Inn, renowned throughout all America, is open and reservations should be made early to insure accomodations.

For information, 'phone or write

HUGH EVANS & COMPANY, Inc.
Suite 514 California Bank Building, Los Angeles, Calif.
Phone MEtropolitan 3148

or

CREE & CHAFFEY, Exclusive Agents
Palm Springs, California

THE LURE OF THE DESERT

HAVE you ever stood at evening on the edge of the desert and "watched the big husky sun wallow in crimson and gold, and grow dim"? Have you seen the soft, pastel shades at eventide as they slowly creep over the sand dunes and stretch on and on into seeming infinite space?

If you have, then you know some of the alluring charm of Palm Springs, "the Algiers of America."

Nowhere in America, except at Palm Springs, can you find the poignant beauty, the dry, healthful climate and the desert lure of such famous winter playgrounds as Algiers and Morocco. Here, away from the crowds and noise, you can enjoy the all-pervading peace and beauty of the desert vastness and with all the comforts of city life.

More and more people of wealth and culture are building winter homes in Palm Springs, where the highly desirable Merito Vista and Las Palmas Estates afford them an ideal homesite. These two estates are of limited acreage and comprise the choicest of the Palm Springs residential properties.

A SUPPLEMENT TO CALIFORNIA SOUTHLAND

GOOD ARCHITECTURE

ISSUED SEMI-MONTHLY NUMBER TWO

(This name is copyrighted)

BETTER HOMES IN AMERICA has issued a preliminary guide for chairmen who wish to organize a Better Homes Week, which takes place on April 24-May 1, 1927, all over the country. It gives the following information:

BETTER HOMES IN AMERICA is a national organization which through local committees aims to help American families to a knowledge of the ways in which housing conditions can be improved, and wholesome home life may be made available to all.

The chairmen of these local committees are men or women who are leaders in civic work in their communities. They are appointed by the National Headquarters of Better Homes in America in Washington. They select the other members of their committees from men's and women's clubs, Parent-Teachers Associations, improvement associations, Chambers of Commerce, school teachers, and others who have a deep interest in the improvement of home life.

In every community in the country, large or small, a campaign for Better Homes is worth while—though the form which the program will take depends upon the type of the community and its special needs or problems.

Practically every city, town or village needs to be shown how old houses can be remodeled so that they will be attractive and comfortable. Many need demonstrations of the best types of new houses which can be designed for families with modest incomes. Most families in city or country can profit by being shown how to plant shrubs or trees or home gardens; how to select and arrange furnishings and labor-saving equipment; how to select books, music, or pictures for the home; how to build character in growing children.

Some or all of these problems should be selected and studied by the Better Homes committee. A program of lectures, contests, discussions, and demonstrations can be framed which will help the people of the community to solve the problems of their own home life.

AN OIL STATION ON THE STATE HIGHWAY IN MONTECITO, WHERE EVERYBODY CARES HOW THE HIGHWAY LOOKS. WM. A. EDWARDS, ARCHITECT, SANTA BARBARA

A BUNGALOW COURT BEAUTIFUL

WHAT A BUNGALOW COURT MAY BE. HOUSE AND COURT ON ANACAPA STREET, SANTA BARBARA. SIMPLE IN DESIGN, ATTRACTIVELY GROUPED, AND EFFECTIVELY LANDSCAPED. SOULE, MURPHY AND HASTINGS, ARCHITECTS, SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA.

A GROUP OF HOUSES BY FREDERICK MURPHY, ARCHITECT, OF SOULE, MURPHY AND HASTINGS, SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA.

WHEREVER possible, the committee will build a modest home from carefully selected plans (such as those in the Plan Book issued by Better Homes in America, a copy of which will be sent). Such a house, if it costs between $1,500 and $5,000, would be within the reach of families with limited incomes. A well-to-do local citizen or perhaps the Chamber of Commerce may be induced by your committee to pay for the cost of building a house—which can be sold after Better Homes Week so that the lender may be reimbursed for his loan. Or a property holder may be willing to remodel one or more of his houses, following suggestions for remodeling made by the Better Homes Committee. Such a remodeled home demonstrated to the public during Better Homes Week will greatly help owners of old homes to a knowledge of inexpensive ways in which they can make their own houses more sanitary and attractive.

In many communities it is now possible to interest the school board to build or rent a cottage (sometimes called School Practice House or Home Economics Cottage) near the school grounds, which can be used to train school girls in household management and in home making. If this cannot be paid for out of the annual school fund some individual or society may, with the consent of the school board, be willing to make a gift of such a house to the town or village. Such a house can be demonstrated by the Better Homes Committee and the home economics classes to the public during Better Homes Week.

If a demonstration house cannot be secured in any other way, the best available low-priced house may be borrowed from some local building contractor, realtor or owner. The house demonstrated should be a better home, and a valuable object lesson in small house design and construction.

The National Headquarters address is Better Homes in America, 1653 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.

HOW SHALL AN ARCHITECT'S IDEAS BE SHOWN

THE art of presenting a design which exists first in the architect's mind has been brought to perfection in the three dimensional sketch or plaster model. The coming generation will employ architects in order to secure original designs; and the device of copying another man's plan just because it pleases a possible client will pass, as the knowledge of good architecture and sound ethics takes the place of ignorance and greed.

Architects who have the skill, or can employ it, are therefore using advanced methods to supplement their graphic renderings in putting before their clients a visualization of their ideas in miniature before starting to build.

The steep lot on which this charming California house is to be built was first studied by the one who was to make this model. By means of a contour slope made of heavy cardboard, the actual hillside was built up in miniature before the model was attempted.

From the plan the different masses were calculated and the model constructed on the miniature hill. Plaster of paris walls were cast in cardboard forms and terra-cotta colored plasticene was put on for tile roofs and tooled to scale.

For the balcony and garage doors wood was carved and glued. The window sash is of celluloid and thin cardboard. Trees and shrubs were made of sponge dipped in green ink, and shredded string modeled in glue was cleverly shaped into trees.

MODEL MADE BY RICHARD URMY SEARES FROM A SKETCH BY J. WILMER HERSHEY AND CHARLES A. HILL. A HOUSE NOW BEING CARRIED TO COMPLETION BY CHAS. A. HILL FOR MR. TED COOK, BEVERLY HILLS. GERANIUMS IN FOREGROUND GIVE THE SCALE. THE BACKGROUND WAS WASHED IN ON THE PHOTOGRAPH BY THE ENGRAVERS, BRYAN AND BRANDENBURG, TO REPRESENT THE HILL AS IT ACTUALLY APPEARS

OLD BOOKS PRINTS

TECOLOTE BOOK SHOP

New and Standard Books

25 DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS
SANTA BARBARA

AUTHORS & AUTHORS' agents are invited to submit book-length material to

The Guild Santa Barbara

HISTORY BIOGRAPHY FICTION
TRAVEL SCIENCE ART

Acceptable material will be published on the usual royalty basis without expense to the author

129 EL PASEO DE LA GUERRA
SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

Translations from the Spanish are particularly welcome

EL ENCINO
On Coast Highway, Montecito, Calif.
Luncheon Supper
Afternoon Tea
Dinner Served on Order
Limited Number of Over Night Guests Accommodated

Southland Numbers

The price of these has been changed to 10c

(Continued from No. 83)

No. 41, May, '23. Subjects:
Cover—Karnak, by Allied Architects Association.
Plans of the City of Pasadena, and an administrative center for Los Angeles—Cook and Hall.
The Hillside Garden, Myron Hunt, Arch.
A Hill Garden by Green & Green.
Planning a Mission City, R. V. Black.
Small House Plan by Small House Service.
A Hillside House by Webber, Staunton & Spaulding. (wrongly listed under No. 40 last month.)
A Hospital, by Myron Hunt, Arch.

No. 42, June, '23. Subejcts:
Small House from the Plan Shop, Sixth Floor Metropolitan Bldg. Theodore A. Koetzli, Secretary.
A Studio Building, by Webber, Staunton & Spaulding.

No. 43, July, '23. Subjects:
The State Teachers College at San Jose. State Architect. An English Cottage by Radcliffe, Arch. Berkeley. Small House from Small House Plan Shop, Metropolitan Bldg., T. A. Koetzli, Sec't.
A Two-Family Cottage by Francis Reid, San Jose. The new hospital at San Jose.

No. 44, Aug., '23. Subject:
Houses adapted to So. Cal., H. C. Deckbar, Arch.

No. 45, Sept., '23. Subjects.
Cover, The Parthenon, A.A.A., Stand Fast Californians, by Chas. Lummis.
Proposed Restoration of Mission San Fernando Rey de Espana. Allied Architects Association of Los Angeles, drawn by Carleton M. Winslow, Architect. Facade of San Xavier, Arizona.
Two homes in San Diego. W. S. Hebbard, Arch. Cook and Hall Landscape Architects.
The Normal School, San Diego, W. S. Hebbard, Arch.
The Octagon House, Washington.
The Biltmore, Schultz and Weaver, Architects.
Two houses from the Small House Plan Service of Theodore Koetzli.

No. 46, Oct., '23. Subjects:
Cover, a Home by Johnson, Kaufman and Coate, Architects.
Mural Decoration in Relation to Architecture, by Edwin Bergstrom, A.I.A.
A Hillside House by Paul Williams, Arch.
A Stucco Home from Plan Bureau Metropolitan Bldg., L. A.

SANTA BARBARA

DE LA GUERRA STUDIOS

THE "STREET IN SPAIN"
HISTORIC DE LA GUERRA HOUSE
SHOPS AND STUDIOS
"EL PASEO"

Lunch Out of Doors or Dine

Salud y Pesetas y Tiempo para Gastarlos

SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

SAN YSIDRO RANCH

California's Famed Foothill Resort

Nestled in the foothills among the Orange Groves, overlooking Valley and Sea. Elevation 600 feet. Furnished Bungalows, 2 to 7 rooms. Central Dining Room. Electricity, hot and cold water. Surf-bathing, Tennis, Horseback Riding. Six miles from Historic Santa Barbara two miles from ocean and country club. Moderate rates. For Folder, address San Ysidro Ranch, Santa Barbara, California.

Colorful Flower Pots
in Plain Glazes and Decorated designs using Blues, Yellows and Greens.

Triana Puebla Treviso
Prices and Sizes on Hand

From Triana, Spain—Decorated

5 inch...$2.00 8 inch...$6.00
6 " ... 3.00 9 " ... 9.00
10½ inch...$12.00

From Puebla, Mexico Decorated

6 inch..$ 3.50
10 " .. 7.50
12 " .. 15.00

From Treviso, Italy Plain Glazes

5 inch....$1.00
6 " 1.25
7 " 1.75

Just the thing for Patios, Stairways, Balconies, and Gardens. Mail orders filled, prepaid.

ROBERT L. LEWIS
Studio 5, El Paseo
Santa Barbara, California

Sun Kissed
Ocean Washed
Mountain Girded
Island Guarded

SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

Furnished houses for rent of all sizes and prices in Santa Barbara and Montecito. Properties of all kinds for sale. Literature and maps free. Live in "The Home Paradise of the World." Communicate with
H. G. CHASE, Santa Barbara, Calif.

No. 47, Subjects:
Cover, Doges Palace. A.A.A. Photograph of San Juan Capistrano by Bronson De Cou. Sketch for a hotel, Pierpont & Walter Davis, Arch. The owner and the Architect, John Browne. Sketch for a gabled stucco house, H. O. Sexsmith, Arch.

No. 48, Dec., '23. Cover, The Loggia, Holtzclaw. Subjects:
A Home Remodeled, Myron Hunt, Arch. H. O. Clark, Gen. Contractor.
Churches, San Diego, by Carleton M. Winslow, W. S. Hebbard, Associate.
All Saints, Pasadena by Johnson, Kaufmann and Coate.
Universalist, Pasadena, Fred Kennedy, Arch.
St. Columbkille's Parish Group, Truesdell, Puritan and Newton, Arch.
The Congregational Church at Riverside, Myron Hunt, designer and Architect.
A Country Church design by C. A. Truesdell, Architect.
Amanda Chapel at Carthay Center.
Interiors by Holtzclaw Studios.
A hill side house by J. L. Egasse.
A hospital at Whittier, the gift of Simon J. Murphy.

No. 49, Jan., '24. A.A.A. Cover, Portola at Lhasa, Thibet. Subjects:
The Band Stand at Golden Gate Park.
Small house plans by R. D. Johnson.
A Santa Barbara house by Carleton M. Winslow.
The Barlow Sanitarium, L. A.
The City Hall of Eagle Rock, Wm. Lee Woollett, Arch.

No. 50, Feb., '24. Subjects:
The Temple of Queen Hatshepsut, Thebes.
A town at Palos Verdes—Plan by Webber, Staunton & Spaulding.

No. 51, Mar., '24. A.A.A. Cover, The Taj Mahel. Subjects:
The Madelaine, Paris.
The Pantheon from rue Soufflot.
A war memorial, San Francisco.
Portsmouth Square, S. F.
The Ojai Country Club, Wallace Neff Architect
Vestibule for an Art Club, designed by Warren Hoak.
Plan for Los Angeles Civic Center by Wm. Lee Woollett, Arch.
Some residences by Clifford Tuesdell and H. C. Newton, Archs.
Design for a hillside farm house by Clifford Truesdell.

No. 52, April 24. Subjects:
Building de la Guerra Plaza and Paseo, James O. Craig, Arch.
The Waterfront of San Francisco.
A small house, by Brea Freeman.

No. 53, May, '24. A.A.A. Cover, "The Vine." Subjects:
The Alhambra and citadel.
A house from the City of Grenada, Cannell and Chaffin, Importers.
The San Francisco Civic Auditorium, John Galen Howard, Arch.
In Old Lubec, photo in collection of Paul Penland, Arch.
Old South Park, S. F.

No. 54, June, '24, Subjects:
Easle Pictures.
The Seven Lamps of Architecture, H. O. Sexsmith.

(To Be Continued)

"If I had only discovered the Souks before I began my Christmas shopping."

THE SOUKS OF TUNIS

Pasadena: In the Patio of the Community Playhouse.
Beverly Hills: In the Arcade, 450 Beverly Drive.
Santa Barbara: "In the Street in Spain," 29 de la Guerra Studios

An Ideal School for Young Women

Cumnock School

COLLEGE WORK IN THE FOLLOWING COURSES:
Vocal Interpretation of Literature

Literary Appreciation	Voice and Diction	Story Writing
Public Speaking	French	Dancing
Dramatics	Story Telling	Psychology

Art and Art Appreciation

An accredited High School in Class A preparing for Western and Eastern Colleges and Universities.

MRS. EDNA W. BROOKS, Acting Director
5353 West Third Street Los Angeles
WHitney 3427 —TELEPHONES— WHitney 7311

PACIFIC MILITARY ACADEMY

(Absolutely Fireproof)
Grammar and High School Departments
For Catalogue write
Commandant, P. O. Box No. 308, Culver City, Calif.
Telephones: Los Angeles—EMpire 6022
Culver City 3294

GREENWOOD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

5928 Franklin Avenue, Hollywood

Select Resident and Day School

Lawns, Tennis Courts, Outdoor Swimming Pool. Special advantages in music, under Mrs. Elsa Spencer.

Principals:
Mrs. M. Greenwood, Newnham College, Cambridge
H. F. Greenwood, A. B., Corpus Christi College, Cambridge
Telephone HOlly 2886

THE WILLIAMS SCHOOL
for Handicapped Children

449 North Madison Avenue, Pasadena, California

For the benefit of exceptional children who vary from the average type to a moderate degree; for those who are practically normal, except in time and variance of their development.
To each pupil is offered the educational essentials for his utmost development and the further stimulus arising from competitive and associate companionship. Admission may be obtained at any time for both day and boarding pupils. For full particulars address

BEATRICE MICHAU WILLIAMS, Director

PORTER BLANCHARD'S
GENUINE HAND-WROUGHT SILVER
May be had here in the Southwest at
THE HEWSON STUDIOS
602 East Colorado Street, Pasadena
2508½ West 7th St., Los Angeles Assistance League, Hollywood

CARLE T. BLENNER, AMERICAN PORTRAIT PAINTER, HAS SUCCESSFULLY PAINTED FLOWER PORTRAITS. HIS WORK MAY BE FOUND AT THE CANNELL & CHAFFIN GALLERIES, LOS ANGELES

OVER THE TOP

By VERA SADICOFF-GOLDMAN, M.D.

ON a dreary afternoon, with the rain pouring down from a gray sky upon a gray bay, Dr. Norman White with Ellen, his wife, rang the bell at the front door, walked around to the side door, knocked, and stood huddled in the doorway awaiting their hostess to answer their summons. Dr. White with some difficulty lighted a cigarette and had smoked it almost to the end when she finally appeared.

Dr. Alma Nevius stood in her doorway in a state of most astonishing dishevelment, with hair tumbling about her forehead, a smudge of soot across one cheek and a huge untidy surgical gown to complete the picture.

"In the name of all that is holy, what worthy enterprise have you been engaged in to put you into such a state," Dr. White asked. Dr. Nevius glanced at herself in the mirror and joined her guests in a hearty laugh.

"Come in out of the rain and I will tell you about it," she said. her eyes sparkling, her mouth wreathed in a joyous smile. She radiated satisfaction with a good, well-ordered world. "I think a kind Providence has sent you at this moment. I was so in need of some one to talk with, and to no one else in this world can I talk as I can to you dear people." As she spoke she led her guests into her room. A little fire burning in the grate showed charred remnants of papers, books and manuscripts. "You see, I got home from the office and decided to embark upon the most stimulating of feminine diversions—that of cleaning out cupboards, shelves and closets of the accumulated rubbish of several weeks. I had these gathered and was burning them when I ran across a review in one of our Medical Journals telling of a report made by the United States Army Medical Department Research Board in Manila. I had somehow overlooked it in my previous reading.

"The report states in almost cryptic terminology that sixty-four men had 'proffered their services voluntarily' for experimentation relating to the transmission of dengue, or break-bone fever by mosquitos.

It says, "Dengue is, by many people, confounded with yellow fever. The existence of dengue was first observed in Spain in 1764. Accurate history of epidemics has frequently been recorded. It spreads throughout the world approximately every twenty years. In that respect it is very similar in its history to influenza, which became pandemic in 1918. Noteworthy among these epidemics is that which occured in 1780. At that time an epidemic of dengue became pandemic, spreading through India, Spain, and the United States. In 1828-1848 the disease became epidemic in the southern states. In 1870 it spread in all of India, in 1871 in Arabia, thence by lines of travel to East Africa, back to India and in 1873 reached the Gulf States. In the city of New Orleans 40,000 persons contracted the disease at that time. Many other epidemics of this disease are recorded, and the United States Government found it necessary, in order to protect its people from a recurrence of the disease in this country, to study its cause and method of transmission.

"The experiment in which the men permitted themselves to be bitten by the mosquitos, or injected with suspected blood, resulted in fifty men out of the sixty-four contracting the disease. The editorial comment is that in the governmental report there is no mention of the suffering involved, the initial fevers, the persistent pains, the mental depression and the extreme weakness. In offering themselves, these men did not expect, and did not receive any personal reward. They were not cited as heroes; they were not awarded medals for distinguished service, nor did their heroism find its way into the front pages of many newspapers. They went 'over the top' without in any way dramatizing their act.

"The results of these experiments demonstrated that dengue is transmitted by Aedes Egypti, a mosquito. The mosquito bites an infected patient, from the patient's blood takes the virus, or poison, into its own body and is able, after a certain time, to transmit it to any well person by biting him. It was found that the patient is infective to mosquitoes during the first three days of the disease, but that on the third day of an attack a mosquito will frequently fail to pick up the virus. It was demonstrated further, that patients are infective to the Aedes six to eighteen hours prior to the actual manifestations, or occurrence of symptoms of the disease. The experimental evidence obtained, warrants the statement that once the Aedes Egypti becomes capable of transmitting the virus to human beings, this characteristic is retained throughout the remainder of the mosquito's life.

"Experimental dengue was produced in three volunteers with mosquitoes that had been infected sixty-two, sixty-six and seventy-five days previously. It takes from four to six days, after the patient has been bitten, before the symptoms of the disease appear. While dengue usually terminates in recovery, it frequently causes serious injury to health.

"Such is the contribution of our soldiers to scientific progress. Much was learned in this investigation. But even if nothing new were learned, if nothing were added to the sum total of our knowledge, the beauty of the heroism of these men would remain to us."

I was reading of this as you came in, dear friends. I was deeply touched. These men in this one act seemed to express, to epitomize the beauty and greatness of love. Not the individual love of friend for friend, but of man for humanity. Does not such love express the most beautiful thing that life holds? Somehow the reading of this brought a lump to my throat, tears to my eyes.

Dr. White, touched by the recital, got up and walked to the end of the room. A box of zenias in the south window seemed to dispell the grayness of the day. Their velvet softness invited a loving glance, a caressing hand. They appeared to hold up their radiant color to the gentle touch of the raindrops upon their little heads.

Alma glanced at Norman standing in quiet contemplation of the flowers. Their eyes met in comradely sympathy and understanding. "Yes, of course, you love them, these my fairies of the window box," she said. "God was good to me when he gave me you and Ellen as friends, Norman dear. In our years of friendship you two have never failed me, in feeling with me, in suffering with me the pain of beauty suddenly, grippingly and arrestingly flashed upon our hearts. And so you love my zenia, of course. And because you are you, and the gods love you well, and have given you the gift of knowing beauty's face, whether she wear robes of gray or flame, whether she appear in the guise of a bird's song, or wear the aspect of my little flowers, it has been happiness to me to share with you this beauty of more imposing majesty and god-like greatness which we call heroism."

THE COLOR PLATES

C. P. TOWNSLEY endeared himself to Los Angeles and Pasadena by his self-sacrifice and devotion to the art students of this community. He founded the Stickney Memorial Art School in Pasadena and was called from that city to organize the Otis Art Institute.

When art education has to be given wholesale to hundreds of people who do not know its first principles by instinct, it is well, perhaps, for the state and county and the city to undertake the job. But for a sensitive artist the task proved almost impossible. Mr. Townsley organized the school, and established it on correct foundation, but he gave his life in exchange.

Trained in the school of William Chase, the Kansas City artist had spent time he wished for study in organizing the Chase Schools abroad and at Carmel-by-the-Sea. Then he went to London and organized the Frank Brangwyn school there. Until he came to Pasadena he had never had a one man show, and his work, during the years he spent in California, reached its maturity. The little still life on our cover was loaned to California Southland for reproduction six years ago and is reprinted today in memory of a fine artistic spirit and a loyal friend.

PEONIES. ONE OF MR. CARLE T. BLENNER'S FLOWER PIECES. SEVERAL OF THEM ARE IN THE GALLERIES OF LOS ANGELES

Marlborough School for Girls
Established, 1889
Boarding and Day School Accredited to Eastern and Western Colleges
5029 West Third Street
ADA S. BLAKE, (A. B. Radcliffe College) Principal

The Westlake School for Girls
333 South Westmoreland Avenue
Residence and Day School
Lower School, College Preparatory, Junior College
Fully Accredited
Departments of Art, Music, Home Economics
JESSICA SMITH VANCE FREDERICA DE LAGUNA
Telephone DRexel 0052

The Girls' Collegiate School 34th Year
NEWLY LOCATED IN THE COUNTRY
Boarding and Day School. Accredited East and West. Out-Door Life a Reality. 50-acre estate. All sports. Saddle Horses. New Buildings. Italian type. L. A. Office, "Ask Mr. Foster" Information Service in Robinson's Dept. Store at Seventh Street and Grand Ave., Tel. BR 4701.
Glendora, Calif. Miss Parsons and Miss Dennen, Principals

Westridge
A COLLEGE PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS. ACCREDITED.
Primary, Intermediate and Academic Departments.
MARY L. RANNEY, AMIE C. RUMNEY, Principals.
324 Madeline Drive, Pasadena, California Telephone Wakefield 5276

The Elliott School for Girls
Residence and Day School.
Ideal Home Life Character Building
Superior Educational Advantages. Sub-Primary through Eleventh Grade.
Martha Collins Weaver, M. A., Principal. Pico Blvd. at Grammercy Place.
EMpire 5347

KENWOOD HALL
Resident and Day School for Girls. Sub-Primary through High School.
Open throughout the year
DIRECTOR: RUBY MILDRED KING
New Location: 6367 Wilshire Blvd., Opposite Carthay Center
Tel. ORegon 5303

LAKE ARROWHEAD LODGE
E. K. HOAK, Managing Director.
Mile High—American Plan—Open All Year
Reservations made at 319 Van Nuys Bldg. Tel. VA. 0959, or direct to Lodge. Call Lake Arrowhead Main 1. Rates, $7.00 a day and up, including meals and room.
Dinner Dance Every Saturday Night.

FINE PAINTINGS
STENDAHL ART GALLERIES
AMBASSADOR HOTEL LOS ANGELES

The Assembly Tea Room
The In and Out-of-Town House of Los Angeles serves
LUNCHEON, TEA AND DINNER
INCIDENTALLY
The Very Choicest Food
Special Sunday Dinner 5 to 8
644 South Flower St., Los Angeles
Phone VAndike 7177

ORNAMENTAL IRON IN CALIFORNIA ARCHITECTURE

THERE are coming to California—because of our architecture in its latest development, workers in clay and iron who see in the future an opportunity for work in congenial trades.

The demand which our architects make upon the expert in hand-wrought iron grills, doors, railings and newels is at present very exacting; and a man must know iron in all its forms and be trained in the processes of building it into a house if he is to be of any use to the architect. Such a man is A. J. Terrill, who without any display of elaborate buildings has set up his place and established the shop seen in the picture here presented with his staff of workmen making the iron doors of the Pasadena Public Library for Myron Hunt and H. C. Chambers, architects. These doors are for the vestibule of the new library, in the civic center.

MAKING THE DOORS FOR THE NEW LIBRARY AT THE DEPOT IRON WORKS OF A. J. TERRILL, 32 SOUTH ROSE AVENUE, LAMANDA PARK. PHOTOGRAPH BY ALBERT HILLER, ARCHITECT'S PHOTOGRAPHER.

The hard training which a man must go through before he is considered fit to undertake this exacting work is almost unknown to our youth in America. Mr. Terrill is a Scotsman trained in the apprentice system of Great Britain and one who loves his work because he understands it and respects it. After the High School, which he left at 15 years of age with Euclid as well as Latin drilled into him, he had six years as an apprentice. Beginning with the work of striking the iron while it was hot he rose through the ranks of workers always drilled by the man just above him, until he was turned out a finished engineer and workman able to draft designs or execute them at the age of twenty-one.

In this system, which our own boys are deprived of in America, there is no loafing over lessons or mere listening to daily lectures. The apprentice is hardened by hard work from early morning until dark and if he is ill he makes up the time lost, after he is twenty-one. What added lecture work he takes is received in the night school after a hard day's work. Of such stern stuff are the British workmen made—no wonder Britannia rules the seas!

Whether or not we can establish enough thoroughgoing shops in California to supply the demand when everybody decides to have a Spanish home, is up to our architects who must not only emphasize a demand for good workmanship in iron but must so standardize the California stucco house of good design, that that style will never "go out," but, diversified as it may be, will build up for California a restoration of her beauty in town and country landscape. Pasadena is especially fortunate in having this outdoor enterprise in its industrial district. For the A. J. Terrill shop is not only a source of all sorts of fine ornamental iron work, lighting fixtures, grills, church work in iron and delicate tracery—but will have an influence on the character of all our crafts.

TRAVELLED TREES

MARY CORNELL BRISTOL has sent us from San Diego a series of articles on the trees which have travelled to California from other lands and seem to be touring the State. We can present but two of the pictures this month, hoping to give more space to the subject, and to our native forest trees, in next year's issues.

Of the two trees here given, the author says:

DEODAR CEDAR (FOUNTAIN TREE).

Of pyramidal form are two far-distant travellers—the Atlas Cedar (Cedrus Atlantica) from the Atlas Mountains of Algeria, and Deodar Cedar, or Fountain tree from Western Himalayas where it is regarded as the Sacred Cedar. It's drooping tips suggest the fountain-form.

The Atlas Cedar resembles the American Larch or Tamarack in form and arrangement of short needle-like leaves bunched closely to the twigs. Both trees have a bluish gray cast on young foliage.

ATLAS CEDAR (CEDRUS ATLANTICA).

THE NEW GREEN STREET AND ITS COLONIAL CAFÉ

A portrait of Mr. Charles A. Hervey, painted by David Anthony Tauszky

Mr. Hervey should be given credit for the cooperation which will make Green street Pasadena's most beautiful shopping street and plaisance.

PASADENA is not a mission town. Yet her interests are so varied and her reputation for beautiful streets so far reaching that one of her streets, at least, must show the Californian revival of the Spanish occupation of our land.

From the High school on the East to Orange Grove Avenue on the West, Green street is being widened as a boulevard. The most enterprising property owners are going to make it a beautiful street in spite of drawbacks or "moss backs" that may have taken root on this old Pasadena cul de sac.

The present writer who in 1909 lived on that portion of Green street which lay back of Cabrillo Place remembers with delight, hearing the neighbors discuss domestic affairs out of the second story windows of their homes.

"What'ya goin' to wear?" "My blue suit, what else have I got?"

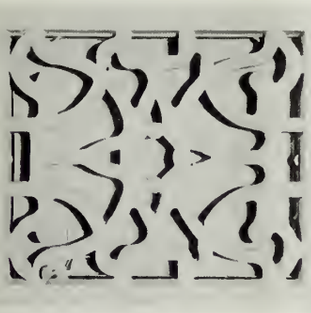
Today this discussion eternally goes on, but inside closed doors. Dressing for the play at the Community Play House near Green street on El Molino Avenue; dressing for dinner at the Club on Green and Los Robles; and most of all discussion rages over what shall I wear or leave off—to go to the Cafe Dansant at the Colonial Cafe of that latest sensation and center of gay life the new dining room of Hotel Green, which Charles A. Hervey now manages himself.

The...
RAYMOND

PASADENA, CALIFORNIA
December to May

WALTER RAYMOND
Proprietor

ARTHUR E. SAFFORD
Manager



Golf course on its own grounds.

Decorating and Finishing Exclusive Furniture

W. G. Pesenecker

Interior and Exterior Painting
34 North Broadway
Phone Col. 5656 Pasadena, Calif.

Ohrmund Brothers Unit System of Gas Heating, Electrically Controlled and Equipped with Electric FLASH Pilot, and Plasterflush Registers.

The new electric Flasher takes the place of the old-time gas pilot, eliminating gas waste, and reducing cost to the minimum. Let us show you.

Pasadena Gas Appliance Co., Inc.
901 E. Colorado Street
Pasadena Wakefield 4126

Royal Laundry Company

Pasadena, California

COLORADO 4311 RAYMOND AT BELLEVUE

Santa Maria Inn

SANTA MARIA, CALIF.

A HOME-LIKE INN, upkept with home-like neatness for the convenience of wayfarers.
Every room with bath. Halfway between Los Angeles and San Francisco on the Coast Highway.
Write or telegraph for reservations.

GARDEN ENTRANCE TO EL CUARTEL

El Cuartel

122 EAST CANON PERDIDO

SANTA BARBARA

Gifts, Objects of Art, Furniture, Garden Pottery, Fountains, Etc.

The Chief
New Santa Fe train de-luxe
Los Angeles to Chicago
extra fast
extra fine
extra fare

SIXTY-THREE HOUR schedule only two business days enroute.

Santa Fe Ticket Offices & Travel Bureaux

221 South Broadway
LOS ANGELES

Santa Fe Station
PASADENA

915 State Street
SANTA BARBARA

300 Broadway
SAN DIEGO

Palos Verdes Estates—"Where your Home is your Playground"

Palos Verdes Estates

LANE MORTGAGE BUILDING, EIGHTH AND SPRING STS.
LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

JAY LAWYER
Gen. Mgr.

BANK OF AMERICA
Trustee

Four and a half miles of the fairest shore line in California is dedicated in perpetuity to the use of the people of Palos Verdes Estates—protected against either business encroachment or private ownership.

Every modern city convenience in one of the Southland's best scenic locations—